MEAGRE, lean, thin, poor, scanty. (F., — L.) M. E. meagre, P. Plowman, B. v. 128; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1198. (Not in earlier use; and not from the supposed A. S. mæger, an unauthorised form in Lye.) — F. maigre, thin. — Lat. maerum, acc. of macer, thin, lean; whence also Icel. magr, Dan., Swed., and G. mager, thin, lean, were borrowed at an early period (which will also account for A. S. mæger, if it be a true word); see Fick, iii. 228. β. The Lat. macer is prob. cognate with Gk. μικρός, small; see Microcosm.

Der. meagre-ly, -ness. From the same source, e-mac-i-ate.

MEAL (1), ground grain. (E.) M. E. mele, Chaucer, C. T. 3993. — A. S. melu, melo, gen. meleweles, Matt. xiii. 33. + Du. meel. + Icel. mjöl, later form mél. + Dan. meel. + Swed. mjöl. + G. mehl. β. All from the Teut. base MAL, to grind, appearing in Icel. mala, Goth. malan, O. H. G. malan, to grind, which are cognate with W. malu, Lat. molere, to grind. — ✓ MAR, to grind; see Mill, Mar. Der. meal-y, meal-i-ness, meal-y-mouth-ed.

MEAL (2), a repast, share or time of food. (E.) M. E. mele, Chaucer, C. T. 4886. — A. S. mæl (1), a time, portion of time, stated time, Grein, ii. 221. Hence the orig. sense was 'time for food'; cf. mod. E. 'regular meals.' It has reference to the common meal at a stated time, not to the hastily snatched repast of a wayfaring man. + Du. maal, (1) time, (2) a meal. + Icel. mál, (1) a measure, (2) time, nick of time, (3) a meal. + Dan. maal, measure, dimension; maaltid, a meal (lit. meal-time). + Swed. mål, measure, due size, meal. + Goth. mel, time, season. + G. mahl, a meal; mal, a time. β. All from the Teut. base MÁLA, a measured or stated time. — ✓ MA, to measure; cf. Skt. má, to measure; see Mete. (Fick, iii. 223.) Der. meal-time, meal-tide.

MEAN (1), to have in the mind, intend, signify. (E.) M. E. menen, Chaucer, C. T. 2065. — A. S. mēnan, to intend; Grein, ii. 222. + Du. meen, to think, believe, fancy, mean. + Dan. mene, to mean, think. + Swed. mena, to mean, think. + G. meinen, O. H. G. meinjan, to think upon, mean, signify. β. These are all causal or secondary verbs, as shown by the O. H. G. form, and derived from the sb. which appears as M. H. G. meine, O. H. G. meina, thought, intent, signification. A still more orig. form appears in Icel. minni, O. H. G. minni, remembrance, memory, mind, which are closely related to E. Mind, q. v. — ✓ MAN, to think. Der. mean-ing, M. E. mening, Chaucer, C. T. 10465 (cognate with G. meinung); mean-ing-less. See moan.

MEAN (2), common, vile, base, sordid. (E.) M. E. meane; 'þe meane and þe riche;' P. Plowman, B. prol. 18. — A. S. mæne, wicked, Grein, ii. 222, closely related to A. S. mán, iniquity, id. 207. (Perhaps further related to A. S. gemæne, common, general; but this is by no means so certain as might at first appear.) + Du. gemeen, common, vulgar, bad, low, mean (but the relationship is uncertain). + Icel. meinn, mean, base, hurtful; cf. mein, a hurt, harm. Cf. Dan. meen, Swed. men, hurt, injury. + M. H. G. mein, false; mein, a falsehood; cf. G. meineid, perjury. And cf. Goth. ganiains, common, β. Root uncertain; but I think the word may perhaps be referred to ✓MI, to diminish, hence, to injure; see Minish. γ. It might then be best to refer A.S. gemēne, common, general, and Du. gemeen (at any rate in the senses of 'common' and 'vulgar') to the same root as Lithuan. mainas, harter, mainly, to barter. δ. The oft-suggested connection between A.S. gemēne and Lat. communis is very doubtful; I would rather reject it. Der. mean-ly, L. L. v. 2. 328; mean-ness (not in early use).

Tit. i. 4; unclean, Mk. vii. 2.

MEAN (3), coming between, intermediate, moderate. (F., -L.) M. E. mene. 'And a mene [i.e. an intermediate one, a mediator] bitwene þe kyng and þe comune' [commons]; P. Plowman, B. i. 158. 'In þe mene while'; Will. of Palerne, 1148. - O. F. meien (Burguy), mod. F. moyen, mean, intermediate. - Lat. medianus, extended form from medius, middle; see Mediate. Der. mean, sb., Rom. of the Rose, 6529; mean-s, M. E. menes, Chaucer, C. T. 11195.

MEANDER, a winding course. (L., -Gk.) 'Through forthrights and meanders'; Temp. iii. 3. 3. - Lat. Mæander. - Gk. Μαίανδρος, the name of a river, remarkable for its circuitous course; Pliny, b. v. c. 29. Der. meander, vb., meander-ing.

MEASLES, a contagious fever accompanied by small red spots on the skin. (Du.) The remarks in Trench, Select Glossary, are founded on a misconception. The word is quite distinct from M. E. mesel, a leper, which will be explained below. 'The maysilles, variolæ,' Levins, 125. 15. 'Rougeolle, the measles'; Cot. In Shak. Cor. iii. 1. 78, the sense is 'measles,' not 'leprosy,' as explained in Schmidt. The use of the term was quite definite. 'The maisils, a disease with many reddish spotted or speckles in the face and bodie, much like freckles in colour'; Baret. M. E. meseles, to translate O. F. rugeroles (14th cent.), in Wright's Voc. i. 161, l. 23. Borrowed from Dutch. - Du. maselen. 'De maselen, ofte [or] masel-siechte, the measels, or sick of the measels. De masel-sucht, the measel-sickness'; Hexham. The same word as O. Du. masselen. 'Masselen ofte masseren, black spots or blemishes of burning upon one's body or legs'; Hexham. He also gives: 'Maesche, masche, maschel, a spot, a blemish, or a blott.' β. It is obvious that the word simply means 'spots,' or rather 'little spots'; the form masel or maschel being a dimin. of an older form mase or masche. Of these older forms, Hexham actually gives the latter, whilst the former is cognate with (and vouched for by) the M. H. G. māse, O. H. G. māsa, a spot, the mark of a wound; whence G. māser [= masel], a spot, speckle, and masern, pl. measles. Cf. O. H. G. masala, a bloody tumour on the knuckles. γ. Precisely the same form mase, 'a spot,' is the source whence is derived the E. Mazer, q. v. ¶ It thus appears that measle means 'a little spot.' It is therefore wholly unconnected with M. E. mesel, which invariably means 'a leper' (see Stratmann); whence meselrie, i.e. leprosy. Both mesel and meselrie occur in Chaucer, Pers. Tale, De Ira. The spelling with the simple vowel e (instead of ai or ea) makes all the difference. This word is borrowed from O. F. mesel, which is from Lat. misellus, wretched, unfortunate, dimin. of miser, wretched; see Miser. The confusion between the words is probably quite modern; when, e.g., Cotgrave explains O. F. mesel, messeau, by 'a meselled, scurvy, leporous, Lazarous person,' he clearly uses meselled as equivalent to leporous; whilst he reserves the spelling meazles to translate rougeolle. Der. measle-ed, measle-y.

MEASURE, extent, proportion, degree, moderation, metre. (F., -L.) M. E. mesure, P. Plowman, B. i. 35; Ancren Riwle, p. 372, l. 1; O. Eng. Homilies, 2nd Ser. p. 55, l. 8. - O. F. mesure. - Lat. mensura, measure. - Lat. mensura, fem. of mensurus, fut. part. of metiri, to measure. - ✓MA, to measure; see Mete. Der. measure, vb., M. E. mesuren, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 2, l. 1782; measur-able, M. E. mesurable, P. Plowman, B. i. 19; measur-ably, measur-ed, measur-less, measur-ment.

MEAT, food, flesh of animals used as food. (E.) M. E. mete, Chaucer, C. T. 1615. - A. S. mete, John, iv. 32, 34. + Du. met, flesh for sausages. + Icel. matr, food. + Dan. mad, victuals, food. + Swed. mat, victuals. + Goth. mats, food (whence matjan, to use as food, eat). + O. H. G. maz, food. β. Prob. from ✓MAD, to chew, appearing in Lat. mandere; see Mandible. Der. meat-offering.

MECHANIC, pertaining to machines. (F., -L., -Gk.) First used as a sb., with the sense 'mechanic art.' M. E. mechanike. 'Whos arte is cleped mechanike'=whose art is called mechanic; Gower, C. A. iii. 142. - O. F. mechanique, mechanique, 'mechanical'; Cot. - Lat. mechanica, mechanic; also used as sb., the science of mechanics. - Gk. μηχανική, sb., the science of mechanics; fem. of adj. μηχανικός, relating to machines. - Gk. μηχανή, a machine; see Machine. Der. mechanic-al (see Trench, Select Glossary); mechanical-ly; mechanic-s, mechanic-i-an; also mechan-ist, mechan-ism.

MEDAL, a piece of metal in the form of a coin. (F., -Ital., - Low Lat., -L.) Shak. has medal to signify 'a piece of metal stamped with a figure'; Wint. Ta. i. 2. 307. - O. F. medaille, 'a medall, an ancient and flat jewel,' &c.; Cot. (Mod. F. medaille). - Ital. medaglia, a medal, coin; equiv. to O. F. meaille, whence mod. F. maille, a small coin. - Low Lat. medalia, a small coin; 'obolus, quod est medalia,' in a Lat. glossary cited by Brachet; we also find Low Lat. medalla, a small coin; Ducange. These are corrupted forms due to Lat. metallum, metal. See Metal. Der. medal-ist or medall-ist; medall-i-on, in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, from O. F. medaillon (F. médailon), 'a little medall,' Cot., which is from the Ital. medaglione, formed from medaglia.

MEDDLE, to mix or interfere with. (F., -L.) To meddle with is to mix with. The M. E. verb medlen simply means 'to mix.' 'Medled togideres'=mixed together, P. Plowman, B. ix. 3. Also frequently spelt mellen; thus, for 'immedled togidres,' another reading is ymelled, in Trevisa, iii. 469, l. 4. - O. F. mesler, medler, meller, to mix, interfere or meddle with (Burguy). Cotgrave has: 'mesler, to mingle, mix, . . . jumble; se mesler de, to meddle, intermeddle, deal with, have a hand in.' Mod. F. mêler. Cf. Span. mezclar, Port. mesclar, Ital. mischiare [put for miscare, by usual change of c to ch], to mix. - Low Lat. misculare, to mix; cf. Lat. miscellus, mixed. - Lat. miscere, to mix; for which see Mix. β. The orig. O. F. form was mesler, of which medler was a curious corruption, and meller a simplification. An intrusive d occurs, similarly, in medlar, q. v. Der. meddl-er, meddle-some (with E. suffix), meddl-ing. Also medley, q. v.

MEDIATE, middle, acting by or as a means. (L.) Rare as an adj., and not very common in the adv. form mediate-ly. 'Either immediately or mediately'; Fryth's Works, p. 18. - Lat. mediatus, pp. of mediare, to be in the middle. - Lat. medius, middle; cognate with A. S. midda, middle; see Mid. Der. mediate, verb (rare in old books); Rich. quotes: 'employed to mediate A present marriage, to be had between Him and the sister of the young French queen'; Daniel, Civil Wars, b. viii. Also mediat-ion, q. v., mediat-or, q. v. Also im-mediate. Also medial, from Lat. medi-alis.

MEDIATION, intercession, entreaty for another. (F., -L.) M. E. mediation, mediacioun, Chaucer, C. T. 4654. - O. F. mediation, 'mediation'; Cot. Formed as if from a Lat. acc. *mediationem, from a nom. *mediatio. - Lat. mediatus, pp. of mediare, to be in the middle, be between; see Mediate.

MEDIATOR, an intercessor. (F., -L.) Now conformed to the Lat. spelling. M. E. mediatour, Wyclif, 1 Tim. ii. 5. - O. F. mediat-eur. - Lat. mediatorem, acc. of mediator, one who comes between, a mediator. - Lat. mediatus, pp. of mediare; see Mediate. Der. mediator-i-al, mediator-i-al-ly.

MEDIC, a kind of clover. (L., -Gk.) Botanical. Lit. 'Median.' Phillips, ed. 1706, has both medick and the Lat. form medica. - Gk. Μηδική, put for Μηδική πόα, Median grass; fem. of Μηδικός, Median. From Media, the name of a country in Asia; Pliny, b. xviii. c. 16.

MEDICAL, relating to the art of healing diseases. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Low Lat. medicālis, medical. - Lat. medicus, a physician. - Lat. mederi, to heal. See Medicine. Der. medical-ly.

MEDICATE, to impregnate with anything medicinal. (L.) Rich. quotes 'his medicated posie at his nose' from Bp. Hall, A Sermon of Thanksgiving. - Lat. medicatus, pp. of medicari, to heal. - Lat. medicus, a physician. See Medicine. Der. medicat-ed, medicat-ion, medicat-ive. Also medica-ble, Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, from Lat. medicabilis; medicament, from O. F. medicament, 'a medicament, salve' (Cot.), which from Lat. medicamentum.

MEDICINE, something given as a remedy for disease. (F., -L.) In early use. M. E. medicine, in O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 187, l. 4 from bottom. - O. F. medecine (put for medicene). - Lat. medicina, medicine. - Lat. medicus, a physician. - Lat. mederi, to heal. β. Closely allied to Gk. base μαθ-, in μαθήσκειν, to learn; with reference to the science of healing. Fick (i. 714) compares also Zend madh, to treat medically, madha, medical science. From a base MADH, to learn, heal; which from ✓MA, shorter form of MAN, to think. See Meditate, Man. Der. medicine, vb., Oth. iii. 3. 332; medicin-al, Wint. Ta. ii. 3. 37; medicin-al-ly; medicin-able, Much Ado, ii. 2. 5. And see medical, medicate.

MEDIEVAL, relating to the middle ages. (L.) Also written medieval. Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. Coined from Lat. medi- put for medio, crude form of medius, middle; and Lat. æu-um, an age; with suffix -al. See Mediate and Age.

MEDIOCRE, middling, moderate. (F., -L.) 'A very mediocre poet, one Drayton'; Pope, To Dr. Warburton, Nov. 27, 1742 (R.). - F. médiocre, middling. - Lat. mediocris, acc. of mediocris, middling; extended from medius, middle. (Cf. ferox from ferus.) See Mid. Der. mediocri-ty, F. médiocrité, from Lat. acc. mediocritatem.

MEDITATE, to think, ponder, purpose. (L.) In Shak. Rich.

III, iii. 7. 75. [The ab. meditation is in much earlier use, spelt meditacium in the Ancrén Riwe, p. 44. l. 4.]—Lat. meditatus, pp. of meditari, to ponder. β. A frequentative verb, from the base med- (= Gk. μαθ-) appearing in Lat. med-eri, to heal, Gk. μαθάνειν, to learn; from the base MADH, due to ✓MA (also MAN), to think. See Medicine, Man. Der. meditation, from O. F. meditation = Lat. acc. meditationem; meditat-ed, meditat-ive, meditat-ive-ly, meditation-ness.

MEDITERRANEAN, inland. (L.) In Shak. Temp. i. 2. 234; and in Cotgrave, who translates O. F. Mediterrané by 'the mediterranean or mid-earth sea.'—Lat. mediterrane-us, situate in the middle of the land; with suffix -an (= F. -an, Lat. -anus).—Lat. medi-, for medio, crude form of medius, middle; and terra, land; with suffix -an-e. See Mid and Terrace. ¶ Chiefly applied to the Mediterranean Sea, which appeared to the ancients as nearly in the middle of the old world; but the word was sometimes used more generally; see Trench, Select Glossary.

MEDIUM, the middle place, means, or instrument. (L.) In Dryden, Art of Poetry, c. iv. l. 888.—Lat. medium, the midst, a means; neut. of medius, middle; see Mid.

MEDLAR, a small tree with a fruit somewhat like an apple or pear. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) Properly, medlar is the name of the tree; the fruit should be called a medle, but the word is obsolete; the medlar is so called because it bears medles. M. E. medler, a medlar-tree; Rom. of the Rose, 1375. Also called medle-tre, Sir Beves of Hamp-ton, ed. Turnbull, 52 (Stratmann).—O. F. meslier, 'a medlar-tree'; Cot.—O. F. mesle, 'a medlar (a Picard word)'; Cot.—Lat. mespilum, a medlar; cf. mespilus, a medlar-tree; Pliny, b. xv. c. 20.—Gk. μέσπιλον, a medlar. ¶ The introduction of d before l in this word is curious; but the same phenomenon occurs also in meddle and medley; it appears to be due to the O. F. s.

MEDLEY, a confused mass, confusion, mixture. (F.,—L.) M. E. medle, medlee. 'Medle, mixtura.' Prompt. Parv. p. 331. Also spelt melle (disyllabic), which occurs in Barbour's Bruce in the sense of 'mixture,' b. v. l. 404, and over and over again in the sense of 'fray,' 'contest,' exactly corresponding to the mod. F. mêlée, which is in fact the same word. See Trench, Select Glossary. Chaucer has medlee in the sense of 'mixed in colour,' as in: 'He rood but hoonly in a medlee cote,' Prol. to C. T. 330.—O. F. medle, mesle, melle (fem. forms medlee, meslee, mellee), pp. of medler, mesler, or meller (mod. F. mêler), to mix. See further under Meddle. ¶ The verb to meddle is sometimes contracted to mell, All's Well, iv. 3. 257; and see Nares. The M. E. melle, easily shortened to mell, is obviously the original of the slang word mill, a contest; for the change of vowel from e to i, see Mill. [†]

MEDULLAR, MEDULLARY, belonging to the marrow. (L.) Medullar is in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Kersey, ed. 1715, has both forms.—Lat. medullaris, belonging to the marrow.—Lat. medulla, the marrow. β. The orig. sense was prob. 'inmost;' from Lat. med-ius, middle; see Mid.

MEED, reward, wages, hire, reward of merit. (E.) M. E. mede, P. Plowman, B. ii. 20, 27, 34, 36, 39, &c.—A. S. mēd, Matt. vi. 1; older form meord (with r for older s), John, iv. 36, Rushworth MS. + G. miethe, hire; M. H. G. miere, O. H. G. mieta. + Goth. mizdo, reward. + Russ. mzda, remuneration. + Gk. μισθός, pay. β. Origin doubtful; an ingenious suggestion is that cited in Vaniček, that the orig. form was mad-dha, that which is set or put by measure; from MAD, an extension of ✓MA, to measure, and ✓DHA, to put, place. Observe that meed stands for mizd.

MEEK, mild, gentle. (Scand.) M. E. meke, Chaucer, C. T. 69; Havelok, 945; spelt meoc, Ormulum, 667.—Icel. mjúkr, soft, agile, meek, mild. + Swed. mjuk, soft, pliable, supple. + Dan. myg, pliant, soft. + Du. muik, soft. + Goth. *muks, only in comp. muks-modei, gentleness. Perhaps allied to Lith. minksztas, soft, minkyti, to knead; from ✓MAK, to knead; see Mass (1). Der. meek-ly, meek-ness.

MEERSCHAUM, a substance used for making tobacco-pipes. (G.) Modern.—G. meerschäum, lit. sea-foam.—G. meer, sea, cognate with E. mere; and schaum, foam, cognate with E. scum.

MEET (1), fitting, according to measure, suitable. (E.) M. E. mete, Chaucer, C. T. 2293. We also find M. E. mete with the sense of moderate, small, scanty; P. Plowman's Crede, l. 428. This is a closely related word, from the notion of fitting tightly.—A. S. gemet, meet, fit, Grein, i. 429. (The prefix go-, readily dropped, makes no difference.) Cf. A. S. mete, small, scanty, lit. tight-fitting; whence unmēde, immense, immeasurable; Grein, ii. 227, 624.—A. S. metan, to mete; see Mete. Cf. G. mässig, moderate, frugal; from massen, to measure. Der. meet-ly, meet-ness.

MEET (2), to encounter, find, assemble. (E.) M. E. meten, Chaucer, C. T. 1526.—A. S. mētan, to find, meet; Grein, ii. 234. (Formed with the usual vowel-change from o to e, that is, long ō.)—A. S. mōt, gemōt, a meeting; see Moot. + O. Sax. mōtian (the exact equivalent of A. S. mētan); from mōt, + Du. *moeten, only in comp. ontmoeten, to meet; from gemoot, a meeting. + Icel. mæta, mæta, to meet; from mót, a meeting. + Swed. möta, to meet; from mot, preserved only in the prep. mot, against, towards. + Dan. møde, to meet; cf. mod, against. + Goth. gamotjan, to meet. Der. meet-ing, A. S. gemeting, Grein, i. 429; meet-ing-house.

MEGALOSAURUS, a fossil animal. (Gk.) Lit. 'great lizard.'—Gk. μεγάλο-, crude form extended from μέγα-, base of μέγας, great, cognate with E. Much, q. v.; and σαῦρος, a lizard.

MEGATHERIUM, a fossil quadruped. (Gk.) Lit. 'great wild beast.'—Gk. μέγα-, base of μέγας, great, cognate with E. Much, q. v.; and θηρίον, put for Gk. θηρίον, dimin. of θήρ, a wild beast, cognate with Lat. fera, a wild beast; see Deer.

MEGRIM, a pain affecting one side of the head. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) M. E. migrim, migreim, migrene. 'Mygreyme, migrym, mygrene, sekenesse, Emigrañea.' Prompt. Parv. Here migrim is a corruption, by change of n to m, of the older form migreine.—F. migraine, 'the megrim, head-ach'; Cot.—Low Lat. hemigranea, megrim, Ducange; cf. emigranea in Prompt. Parv., just cited.—Lat. hemigranium, a pain on one side of the face.—Gk. ἡμικράνιον, half the skull.—Gk. ἡμι-, half (see Hemi-); and κράνιον, the cranium, skull (see Cranium).

MELANCHOLY, depression or dejection of spirits, sadness. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) Supposed to be caused by an excess of black bile; whence the name. M. E. melancolie, Gower, C. A. i. 39; cf. 'engendered of humours melancholike,' Chaucer, C. T. 1377.—O. F. melancholie, 'melancholy, black choler'; Cot.—Lat. melancholia.—Gk. μελαγχολία, melancholy.—Gk. μελάγχολος, jaundiced, filled with black bile.—Gk. μέλαν-, stem of μέλας, black, dark, gloomy (allied to Skt. mala, dirty, malina, black); and χολή, bile, cognate with E. Gall, q. v. Der. melanchol-ic, O. F. melancholique, 'melancholick' (Cot.), from Lat. melancholicus.

MELILOT, the name of a plant. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) In Levins and Cotgrave.—O. F. melilot, 'melilot'; Cot.—Lat. melilotos.—Gk. μελίλωτος, μελίλωτος, a kind of clover; so called from the honey it contained.—Gk. μέλι, honey; and λωτός, lotus, clover. See Mellifluous and Lotus.

MELIORATE, to make better, improve. (L.) Bacon has meliorate and melioration, Nat. Hist. §§ 232, 433 (R.).—Lat. melioratus, pp. of meliorare, to make better (White).—Lat. melior, better. β. Cognate with Gk. μᾶλλον, rather, compar. of μάλα, adv., very much, exceedingly. Root unknown. Der. meliorat-ion, a-meliorate.

MELLIFLUOUS, flowing sweetly, sweet. (L.) In Milton, P. L. v. 429; P. R. iv. 277. And in Shak. Tw. Nt. ii. 3. 54.—Lat. mellifluus, flowing like honey (by change of -us to -ous, as in numerous other instances).—Lat. melli-, crude form of mel, honey; and suffix -fluus, flowing, formed from fluere, to flow. β. Lat. mel is cognate with Gk. μέλι, Goth. milith, honey; the root is uncertain. For Lat. fluere, see Fluent. Der. So also melli-fluent, from melli- (as above) and fluent-, stem of pres. pt. of fluere. So also melli-ferous, i. e. honey-bearing, from Lat. ferre, to bear. And see marmalade.

MELLOW, fully ripe. (E.) 'Melwe, melowe, or rype, Maturus.' Prompt. Parv. The true sense is 'soft' or 'pulpy,' like very ripe fruit. By the frequent substitution of l for r, it stands for (or is a mere variant of) A. S. nearu, soft, tender, Grein, ii. 239. Closely allied words are Marrow, Meal (1), which see. + Du. maru, soft, tender; cf. mollig, soft, malsch, soft, tender. + M. H. G. mar, O. H. G. maro, soft, tender. Cf. also Lat. mollis, soft, Gk. μαλακός, soft; Goth. gamalwiths, contrite (Luke, iv. 18), from gemalwjan, to grind down, extension of malan, to grind. β. All from the common ✓MAR, MAL, to grind, crush, pound; see Mar, Melt, Mild. Der. mellow-ness.

MELODRAMA, MELODRAME, a theatrical performance, with songs. (F.,—Gk.) Given in Todd's Johnson only in the form melodrame, noted by Todd as a modern word lately borrowed from French. It is now always written melodrama.—F. mélodrame, properly, acting with songs. A coined word.—Gk. μέλο-, crude form of μέλος, a song (see Melody); and δράμα, an action, drama (see Drama). Der. melodramat-ic, melodramat-ist, from the stem δράμα-.

MELODY, an air or tune, music. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) M. E. melodie, melodeye, Chaucer, C. T. 9; Legend of St. Christopher, l. 18.—O. F. melodie.—Lat. melodia.—Gk. μελωδία, a singing.—Gk. μελωδός, adj., singing, musical.—Gk. μελ-, for μέλο-, crude form of μέλος, a song, music; and ὄδῃ, a song, ode (see Ode). Perhaps μέλος is allied to μαλακός; see Mellow. Der. melodi-ous, -ly, -ness.

MELON, a kind of fruit. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) 'Of melons;' see Sir T. Elyot, Castell of Helth, b. ii. c. 7.—O. F. melon, 'a melon'; Cot.—Lat. melonem, acc. of melo, an apple-shaped melon.—Gk. μήλον, (1) an apple, (2) fruit of various kinds. Cf. Lat. mālum, an apple (possibly borrowed from Gk.). Der. mar-mal-ade, q. v.

MELT, to make liquid, dissolve. (E.) M. E. melten; pt. t. malte, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 1017; pp. molten, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 82. — A. S. melan, pt. t. medit, Grein, ii. 230. β. It seems best to connect this word with Skt. mr̥idu (base mar-), soft, and the O. Slavonic mladu, soft (cited by Max Müller, Lect. on Language, 8th edit., ii. 363). — ✓ MAKD, to rub down, crush, overcome; an extended form of ✓ MAR, to grind, pound. Cf. Marrow, Mellow, from the same root. ¶ The connection with smelt is by no means so sure as might at first appear. The words may be independent of each other. Der. mett-ing, mett-ing-ly. Also malt, q. v., milt, q. v.

MEMBER, a limb, a clause, one of a community. (F., — L.) M. E. membre, Rob. of Glouc. p. 511, l. 12. — F. membre, a member. — Lat. membrum, a member. Cf. Skt. marman, a member, a joint. Root uncertain. Der. member-ship, with E. suffix. Also membr-ane, q. v.

MEMBRANE, a thin skin or film. (F., — L.) 'The skin is a membrane of all the rest the most large and thick;' P. Fletcher, Purple Island, c. 2, note 13 (R.). — F. membrane, 'a membrane;' Cot. — Lat. membrana, a skin covering a member of the body, a membrane. — Lat. membr-um, a member; see Member. Der. membranous, membran-ac-e-ous.

MEMENTO, a memorial or token whereby to remember another. (L.) A Lat. word, adopted into E., but it is not easy to say at what date. The phrase memento mori (remember you must die) is in Shak. 1 Hen. IV, iii. 3. 35; but this is used in a different connection. 'That memento would do well for you too, sirrah;' Dryden, Kind Keeper, A. iv. sc. 1. We find 'for memento sake' as early as in P. Plowman, B. v. 476, where there is a special allusion to the text 'Remember me,' Luke, xxiii. 42. — Lat. memento (see Luke, xxiii. 42, Vulgate); imperative of memini, I remember; see Mention, Mind.

MEMOIR, a record, short biographical sketch, collection of recollections. (F., — L.) Commonly in the pl. memoirs, spelt memoires in Phillips' Dict., ed. 1706. — O. F. memoires, 'notes of [read or] writings for remembrance, . . . records;' Cot. Pl. of memoire, memory. — Lat. memoria, memory; also, a historical account, record, memoir. See Memory.

MEMORY, remembrance, recollection. (F., — L.) M. E. memorie, Chaucer, C. T. 10118; King Alisaunder, 4790. — O. F. memoire, memory (of which an older form was probably memorie). — Lat. memoria, memory. — Lat. memor, mindful. β. The Lat. me-mor appears to be a reduplicated form (like me-min-i, I remember); cf. Gk. μῆρ-μῆρος, anxious, μῆρ-μῆρσις, to be anxious, to ponder earnestly (with which the notion of memory is closely associated); the simpler form in Gk. appears in μῆρῶνα, care, thought.

γ. Thus the base appears as MAR, a later form of ✓ SMAR, to remember, as seen in Skt. smṛti, to remember; whence also E. Martyr, q. v. See Benfey, Skt. Dict., p. 1091. Der. memori-al, Gower, C. A. ii. 19, from O. F. memorial, 'a memorial' (Cot.), from Lat. memorialis; memori-al-ist, memori-al-ise. Also memor-able, Hen. V, ii. 4. 53, from O. F. memorable, 'memorable' (Cot.) = Lat. memoria-bilis, from memorare, which from memor. Hence memor-abl-y. Also memorandum, pl. memorandums, 1 Hen. IV, iii. 3. 179, from Lat. memorandum, neut. of fut. pass. part. of memorare, to record. Also com-memor-ate, im-memor-ial, re-mem-ber. Doublet, memoir.

MENACE, a threat. (F., — L.) M. E. menace, manace; spelt manas, King Alisaunder, l. 843. 'Now cometh manace, that is an open folie; for he that ofte manaceth,' &c.; Chaucer, Pers. Tale, De Ira, near end. — O. F. menace, menache, manache (Burguy), menace (Cot.), a threat. — Lat. minacia, a threat, of which the pl. minacie is used by Plautus. — Lat. minaci, crude form of minax, full of threats; also, projecting. — Lat. minax, pl., things projecting, hence (from the idea of threatening to fall) threats, menaces. — Lat. minere, to jut out, project. Der. menace, verb, as above; menac-ing, menac-ing-ly. From the same source, com-min-ut-ion, de-mean; also e-min-ent, prominent.

MENAGERIE, a place for keeping wild animals. (F., — Low Lat., — L.) 'The menagerie in the tower;' Burke, On a Regicide Peace, let. 1 (R.). — F. ménagerie, 'properly a place where the animals of a household are kept, then by extension a place in which are kept rare and foreign animals;' Brachet. (So also Scheler.) — F. ménager, to keep house. — F. ménage, a household, housekeeping; O. F. mesnage, 'household stuffe, businessse, or people, a household, family, or meyney;' Cot. See further under Menial, Mansion.

MEND, to remove a fault, repair. (F., — L.) M. E. menden, Will. of Palerne, 647. The sb. mending is in King Alisaunder, 5206. Mend is a mere corruption of amend, by the loss of the initial vowel. See Amend. Der. mend-er, mend-ing.

MENDACITY, falsehood, lying. (L.) 'The mendacity of Greece;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. i. c. 6. § 9. Formed, by analogy with F. words in -ly, from Lat. acc. mendacitatem, from nom. mendacitas, falsehood. — Lat. mendaci-, crude form of mendan, false, lying. Allied to mentiri, to lie.

β. The orig. meaning of Lat. mentiri was 'to think out, invent, devise;' cf. commentum, a device, a falsehood, comminisci, to devise. γ. Hence the base man-ti is plainly an extension from the common ✓ MAN, to think. See Mention, Mentor, Man. Der. mendaci-ous, formed with suffix -ous from the crude form mendaci-above; mendaci-ous-ly, -ness.

MENDICANT, a beggar. (L.) Properly an adj., as 'the mendicant (or begging) friars.' The word came in with these friars, and must have been well known, as a Latin word at least, in the 14th century. Chaucer has the F. form mendiant, C. T. 7488. But it does not appear very early as an E. word; it occurs in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. mendicant-, stem. of pres. part. of mendicare, to beg. — Lat. mendicus, beggarly, poor; of uncertain origin. Der. mendicant-y. Also mendic-it-y, M. E. mendicite, Rom. of the Rose, 6427, 6436, from O. F. mendicite, 'mendicity,' Cot.

MENIAL, one of a household, servile. (F., — Low Lat., — L.) Properly an adj., but also used as sb. 'His servautes menyall;' Skelton, Why Come Ye Nat to Courte, 592. M. E. meineal, meyneal. 'Grete 3e wel her meyneal chirche,' i. e. the church of their household, Wyclif, Rom. xvi. 5. This adj. is formed, by help of the common suffix -al (= F. -al, Lat. -alis) from the M. E. sb. meine, meinee, maine, mainee, a household, now obsolete, but once in common use; see Rob. of Glouc., pp. 167, 202; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 15; Will. of Palerne, 184, 416; Havelok, 827; Wyclif, Matt. x. 25, Luke, ii. 4; Chaucer, C. T. 7627, 7738, 14348, 17177.

β. Note that this word is entirely unconnected with E. many, with which Richardson confuses it. In Spenser, prob. owing to such confusion, the word is badly spelt many or manie, F. Q. v. 11. 3. — O. F. maisnee, maisnie, meisnee, meisnie (Burguy); cf. 'Mesnie, a meyny, family;' Cot. The same word as Ital. masnada, a family, troop, company of men. — Low Lat. *mansionata, for which Ducange gives the forms mansnada, mainada, a family, household; whence the derivative mansionaticum, expenses of a household, as explained in Brachet, s. v. ménage. γ. Formed, with fem. part. suffix -ata, from mansion-, stem of Lat. mansio, a dwelling. See Mansion.

MENIVER, MINEVER, MINIVER, a kind of fur. (F., — L.) M. E. meniuier (with u for v); spelt menyuere, P. Plowman, B. xx. 137. — O. F. menu vier; 'menu vier, on verk, the furre minever, also, the beast that bears it;' Cot. Also spelt menu vair, 'minever, the furre of ermine mixed or spotted with the furre of the weasel called gris;' Cot. — O. F. menu, 'little, small,' Cot.; and vair, 'a rich fur of ermines powdered thick with blue hairs;' Cot. β. The F. menu is from Lat. minutus, small; see Minute. The F. vair is from Lat. varius, variegated, spotted; see Vair, Various. Thus the sense is 'little spotted' fur or animal. [†]

MENSES, the monthly discharge from the womb. (L.) A Lat. medical phrase. In Phillips, ed. 1706. — Lat. menses, with the same sense; pl. of mensis, a month; from the same root as E. Month, q. v. Der. menstruous, q. v.

MENSTRUOUS, having or belonging to menses. (L.) In Isaiah, xxx. 22 (A. V.) = Lat. menstruus, monthly. — Lat. mensis, a month. See Month. Der. menstru-ate, from menstruare. Also menstruum, a solvent, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 1. § 11; so called, says Richardson, 'because its action was, as we are told, assisted by a moderate fire during a month;' or, says Wedgwood, 'from the notion that chemical solvents could only be duly prepared in dependence on the changes of the moon.'

MENSURATION, measuring, measurement. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Formed, by analogy with F. words in -tion, from Lat. mensurationem, acc. of mensuratio, a measuring. — Lat. mensuratus, pp. of mensurare, to measure. — Lat. mensura, measure; see Measure.

-MENT, a common suffix. (F., — L.) F. -ment, from Lat. -mentum, crude form -men-to-, an extension of -men- = Aryan -man-; see Schleicher, Compend. § 219.

MENTAL, pertaining to the mind. (F., — L.) In Shak. Timon, i. 1. 31. — F. mental, 'mentall;' Cot. — Low Lat. mentalis, mental. — Lat. ment-, stem of mens, the mind; see Mind. Der. mental-ly.

MENTION, a notice, remark, hint. (F., — L.) M. E. mention, Chaucer, C. T. 895. — F. mention, 'mention.' — Lat. mentionem, acc. of mentio, a mention. Closely related to mens (crude form menti-), the mind, and to me-min-i, I remember. See Mind. Der. mention, vb., Wint. Tale, iv. 1. 22; mention-able.

MENTOR, an adviser, monitor. (Gk.) Not in Todd's Johnson. Simply adopted from the story in Homer, where Athens takes the form of Mentor with a view to give advice to Ulysses. See Pope's Homer, Od. b. ii. — Gk. Mévrap, proper name; it means 'adviser,' and is equivalent to Lat. monitor. Doublet, monitor, q. v.

MEPHITIS, a pestilential exhalation. (L.) In Phillips, World of Words, ed. 1706. The adj. mephitick is in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. mephitis, a pestilential exhalation; Æn. vii. 84. Der. mephit-ic.

MERCANTILE, commercial. (F., —L.) 'That I may use the mercantile term;' Howell, Familiar Letters, vol. i. let. 29; A. D. 1621. — F. mercantil, 'merchantly;' Cot. — Low Lat. mercantilis, mercantile. — Lat. mercant-, stem of pres. part. of mercari, to trade. See Merchant.

MERCENARY, hired for money, greedy of gain. (F., —L.) M. E. mercenarie, Chaucer, C. T. 516. — F. mercenaire, 'mercenary;' Cot. — Lat. mercennarius, older form mercennarius, a hireling; put for merced-narius. — Lat. merced-, stem of merces, a reward. See Mercy.

MERCER, a dealer in silks and woollen cloths. (F., —L.) The sense is simply 'a trader.' In early use. M. E. mercer; Ancren Riwle, p. 66, l. 18. — F. mercier. — Low Lat. mercarius, a mercer, trader. — Lat. merc-, stem of merx, merchandise; with suffix -arius = arius, denoting the agent. See Merchant. Der. mercer-y.

MERCHANDISE, a merchant's goods, wares. (F., —L.) M. E. merchandise, P. Plowman, B. prol. 63. — F. merchandise, 'merchandise;' Cot. — F. marchand; see Merchant.

MERCHANT, a trader. (F., —L.) M. E. marchant, Chaucer, C. T. 272; Floriz and Blanchefleur, ed. Lumby, 42. — O. F. marchant (Burguy), F. marchand, a merchant. — Lat. mercant-, stem of pres. pt. of mercari, to barter. — Lat. merc-, stem of merx, merchandise. — Lat. merere, to gain, buy, purchase; see Merit. Der. merchant-man, Matt. xiii. 45; merchand-ise, q. v. And see com-merce.

MERCURY, the messenger of the gods; quicksilver. (F., —L.) M. E. mercurie, with the sense of quicksilver, Chaucer, C. T. 16240, 16242; as the name of the god, id. 1387. — Norman F. mercurie, Livre des Creatures, by Philippe de Thaurin, l. 264 (in Wright, Popular Treatises on Science); F. mercure. — Lat. Mercurium, acc. of Mercurius, Mercury, the god of traffic. — Lat. merc-, stem of merx, merchandise; see Merchant. Der. mercurial, Cymb. iv. 2. 310; mercurial-ise.

MERCY, favour, clemency. (F., —L.) In early use. M. E. merci, Old Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 43; Ancren Riwle, p. 30. — F. merci; oldest form mercit. — Lat. mercedem, acc. of merces, reward, pay; which in Low Lat. had the sense of mercy or pity. — Lat. merc-, stem of merx, merchandise, traffic. — Lat. merere, to gain, buy, purchase; see Merit. Der. merci-ful, spelt merci-ful, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 188; merci-ful-ly, merci-ful-ness; merci-less, merci-less-ly, merci-less-ness; mercy-seat, Exod. xxv. 17.

MERE (1), a lake, pool. (E.) M. E. mere, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 158. — A. S. mere, a mere; Grein, ii. 232. + Du. meer. + Icel. marr, the sea. + G. meer, O. H. G. marī, sea. + Goth. marei, sea. + Russ. moré, sea. + Lithuan. maris, sea (Schleicher). + W. môr. + Gael. and Irish muir. + Lat. mare. β. The orig. sense is 'that which is dead,' hence a desert, waste, a pool of stagnant water or the waste of ocean; cf. Skt. maru, a desert, derived from mri, to die. See Mortal. Der. mar-sh, q. v.; mar-ish, q. v. ¶ Probably not allied to moor (1).

MERE (2), pure, simple, absolute. (L.) Very common in Shak.; see Meas. for Meas. iii. 1. 30, &c. See Trench, Select Glossary. — Lat. merus, pure, unmixed; esp. used of wine. β. The orig. sense is 'bright;' cf. Skt. marichi, a ray of light. — ✓ MAR, to gleam; whence Gk. μαρμαίρειν, to glitter; see Marble. Der. mer-ly.

MERETRICKIOUS, alluring by false show. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. Formed, by the common change of -us to -ous, from Lat. meretricius, pertaining to a courtesan. — Lat. meretrici-, crude form of meretrix, a courtesan. Formed with fem. suffix -tr-ix (signifying an agent) from mere-re, to gain. See Merit. Der. meretricious-ly, -ness.

MERGE, to sink, plunge under water. (L.) It occurs in Prynne's Breviate of the Prelates, ed. 1637, p. 64; Todd's Johnson. The sb. mercion is in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. mergere, to dip. + Skt. majj, to dive, bathe, sink. Der. merg-er; mers-ion, from mercionem, acc. of mersio, a dipping, from mersus, pp. of mergere. Also e-merge, im-merge.

MERIDIAN, pertaining to mid-day. (F., —L.) M. E. meridian; 'the altitude meridian;' Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, prol. l. 56. Also used as sb. — O. F. meridiem, 'meridian, south; also as sb., the meridian;' Cot. — Lat. meridianus, belonging to mid-day. — Lat. meridies, mid-day; corrupted from medidies. — Lat. medi-, for medius, middle; and dies, a day. See Mediate and Diurnal. Der. meridian-al, Chaucer, C. T. 10577, from O. F. meridional, Lat. meridionalis; meridion-al-ly.

MERINO, a variety of sheep. (Span., —L.) Not in Todd's Johnson. — Span. merino, roving from pasture to pasture; a name given to a certain kind of sheep. — Span. merino, an inspector of pastures and sheep-walks. — Low Lat. majorinus, a major-domo, steward of a household; cf. Low Lat. majoralis, a head-shepherd. See Ducange. Formed from Lat. maior, greater; see Major.

MERIT, excellence, worth, desert. (F., —L.) M. E. merite, Gower, C. A. iii. 187. — O. F. merite, 'merit;' Cot. — Lat. meritum, lit. a thing deserved; orig. neut. of meritus, pp. of merere, to deserve. β. The orig. sense of merere was 'to receive as a share;' and it is allied to Gk. μέρομαι, I obtain a portion, μέρος, a portion, share. Root uncertain; see Curtius, i. 413. Der. merit-or-i-ous, Tyndall's Works, p. 171, col. 1, Englished from Lat. meritorius, deserving; meritor-i-ous-ly, -ness. And see mercantile, mercenary, mercer, merchant, Mercury, mercy, meretricious.

MERLE, a blackbird. (F., —L.) In Henrysoun's Complaint of Creseide, l. 24. — O. F. merle, 'a mearle, owsell, blackbird;' Cot. — Lat. merula, a blackbird. Root uncertain. Der. merl-in.

MERLIN, a kind of hawk. (F., —L.?) M. E. merlion, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, 339. — O. F. emerillon, esmerillon, 'the hawk termed a marlin;' Cot. Cf. Ital. smerlo, a kind of hawk, whence smertilione, a merlin; Span. esmerlejon, a merlin. β. Diez supposes these words to have been formed from Lat. merula, a blackbird; the initial s being unoriginal. See Merle.

MERMAID, a fabled marine animal. (E.) M. E. mermaid, Chaucer, C. T. 15276; also mermaidens, Rom. of the Rose, 682. — A. S. mere, a lake, mere; and magd, a maid; cf. A. S. mere-wif, a mere-woman, Grein, ii. 233. See Mere and Maid. ¶ The sense of mere was easily exchanged for that of sea under the influence of F. mer, the cognate word. Der. mer-man, similarly formed.

MERRY, sportive, cheerful. (C.) M. E. merie, mirie, murie (with one). Chaucer, C. T. 235, 1388. — A. S. merg, merry, Grein, ii. 233. β. Not a Teutonic word, but borrowed from Celtic. — Irish and Gael. meur, merry, mirthful, playful, wanton. The root appears in Gael. mir, to sport, play, flirt, whence also Gael. mire, play, pastime, mirth, transport, fury, mireagach, merry, playful, Irish mire, play, levity, madness. Perhaps allied to Mild, q. v. Der. merri-ly, merri-ness, L. L. L. i. 1. 202; also merri-ment (a hybrid word, with F. suffix, which has almost displaced merriness), Spenser, F. Q. ii. 6. 3. Also merry-andrew, where Andrew is a personal name, asserted by Heame (Benedict. Abbas, ed. 1735, tom. i. pref. p. 50) to have been given to jesters in remembrance of the once famous Andrew Boorde, Doctor of Physic in the reign of Henry VIII; several jest-books were ascribed to him, perhaps wrongly; see Mr. Furnivall's preface to his edition of Andrew Boorde's Introduction of Knowledge, and see the passage from Heame cited at length in Todd's Johnson. Also merry-thought; Cot. translates F. lunette by 'the merry-thought, the forked craw-bone of a bird, which we use in sport to put on our noses.' And see mirth.

MESENTERY, a membrane in the middle of the intestines. (L., —Gk.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. Englished from Lat. mesenterium. — Gk. μεσεντέριον, also μεσέντερον, the membrane by which all the intestines are connected. — Gk. μεσ-, for μέσος, middle, cognate with Lat. medius (see Mid); and έντερον, a piece of the entrails (see Entrails). Der. mesenter-ic.

MESH, the opening between the threads of a net. (E.) Sometimes mask. Surrey has mask as a verb. 'How small a net may take and mask a hart of gentle kinde;' Description of the Fickle Affections, l. 44; in Tottel's Misc., ed. Arber, p. 7. M. E. maske; 'maske of nette, macula;' Prompt. Parv. — A. S. max, a net (equivalent to mase, by the frequent interchange of z and s, as in ask = A. S. axian, acxian). We find 'max mine,' glossed by retia mea; Ælfric's Colloquy, in Thorpe's Analecta, p. 23, l. 5 (or in Wright's Vocab. i. 5, l. 18). The very rare dimin. mascre, a mesh, is glossed by Lat. macula in a gloss (Bosworth). + Du. mass, a mesh, net. + Icel. möskvi, a mesh. + Dan. maske. + Swed. maska. + G. masche. + W. masg, a mesh, net-work; masgl, a mesh. β. The orig. sense seems to have been 'a knot,' from the use of knots in netting; this sense appears in Lithuanian mazgas, a knot, magzias, a knitting-needle, allied to the verb megsti (pres. t. mezgu), to knot, to weave nets; forms cited by Fick, iii. 236; Nesselmann, p. 387. Der. mesh, vb., as above.

MESMERISE, to induce an extraordinary state of the nervous system, in which the operator controls the action of the patient. (G. proper name.) Formed with verbal suffix -ise (= F. -iser), from Mesmer, the name of a German physician, of Mersburg, who first published his doctrines in 1766. See Haydn, Dict. of Dates. Der. mesmer-ist, mesmer-ism, mesmer-ic.

MESS (1), a dish of meat, portion of food. (F., —L.) 'A mease of meat, ferculum;' Levins, 204. 36. 'A meesse, or dish of meate borne to the table, ferculum;' Baret, Alvearie. And see Gen. xliii. 34. M. E. messe; 'Messe of mete, ferculum;' Prompt. Parv. [Cf. M. E. entremesse, a side dish, on which see my note to Barbour's Bruce, b. xvi. l. 457.] — O. F. mes, a dish, course at table (the invariable form, Burguy). Cotgrave has: 'més, a messe, or service of meat, a course of dishes at table.' Mod. F. mets (which also appears in Cotgrave), is a misspelt form due to a wish to point out more distinctly its connection with the verb mettre, of which the old pp. was mes; see Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, col. 11, l. 43. Cf. Ital. messo, a course of dishes at table; also, a messenger (the former = Lat. missum, the latter = Lat. missus). — O. F. mes (= Low Lat. missum), that which is set or placed, viz. on the table; pp. of mettre, to place. — Low Lat. mittere, to place; Lat. mittere, to send. See Message.

¶ Not to be derived from A. S. myse, a table, nor from Lat. mensa, nor from O. H. G. maz, meat; all of which have been (absurdly) suggested. Der. mess, sb., a number of persons who eat together, the orig. number being four; see Levins, and Trench, Select Glossary; also L. L. L. iv. 3. 207. Also mess, vb., to eat of a mess, associate at table; whence mess-mate.

MESS (2), a mixture, disorder. (E., or Scand.) 'As pure a mess almost as it came in;' Pope, Epilogue to Satires, Dial. ii. 166. A corruption of mesh, which is another form of mask; as pointed out by Wedgwood. 'Mescolare, to mixe, to mingle, . . . to intermeddle, to mask, to mesh, to mell;' Florio. 'Mescolanza, . . . a medlie, a mesh, . . . a mixture;' id. It is, accordingly, a mere variant of Mash, q. v.

MESSAGE, a communication sent to another, an errand. (F., — L.) In early use. In Rob. of Glouc. p. 359, l. 24. — F. message, 'a message;' Cot. — Low Lat. missaticum, message. Extended from Lat. missus, pp. of mittere, to send; see Mission. Der. messenger, q. v. And see mess (1), mass (2).

MESENGER, the bearer of a message. (F., — L.) The n is excrescent, as in scavenger for scavager, passenger for passager; so also messenger is for messenger. M. E. messenger, Chaucer, C. T. 5163, 5191, 5205, 5226; Ancren Riwe, p. 190, l. 20. Formed from message with suffix -er of the agent; see Message. ¶ We also find M. E. message in the sense of 'messenger,' as in Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 454. This form answers to Low Lat. missaticus. [†]

MESSIAH, the anointed one. (Heb.) In Dan. ix. 25. — Heb. māshīach, anointed; from māshach, to anoint.

MESSUAGE, a dwelling-house with offices, &c. (F., — L.) 'Messuage (messuagium), a dwelling-house; but by that name may also pass a curtilage, a garden, an orchard, a dove-house, a shop, a mill, a cottage, a toft, as parcel of a messuage,' &c.; Blount, Nomolexicon, ed. 1691. M. E. mesuage, Chaucer, C. T. 3977. — O. F. mesuage, a manor-house (Roquefort); cf. Low Lat. mesuagium, messuagium, a manor-house (Ducange), closely allied to Low Lat. massagium, mansuagium, a farm-house.

β. Closely allied to (if not the same word as) O. F. masage, massaige (given by Roquefort s. v. mas), maisage, massaige (Burguy), a tenement. All these words are derivatives from O. F. mas (also mes, mez, mex, meiz, metz), answering to E. manse. Cotgrave has: 'mas de terre, an ox-gang, plow-land, or hide of land, containing about 20 acres, and having a house belonging to it.' Also: 'metz, a mesuage, tenement, or plowland, a Walloon word.' — Low Lat. masa, massa, mansa, a small farm with a house, a manse. — Lat. mansa, fem. of mansus, pp. of manere, to remain, dwell. See Manse, Mansion. Thus mesuage = mans-age.

META-, prefix. (Gk.) From Gk. meta, prep., among, with, after; frequently used as a prefix, when it commonly implies 'change.' Cognate with Goth. mith, A. S. mid, G. mit, with. Der. met-al, meta-morphosis, meta-phor, meta-phrase, meta-physics, meta-thesis, metempsychosis, met-eor, meth-od, met-onymy.

METAL, a name given to certain solid opaque substances, as gold. (F., — L., — Gk.) M. E. metal, Rob. of Glouc. p. 28, l. 16; also metel, id. p. 6, l. 20. — O. F. metal, 'mettal, mettle;' Cot. — Lat. metallum, a mine, metal. — Gk. μέταλλον, a pit, cave, mine, mineral, metal. Cf. μεταλλάω, I search after, search carefully, explore; also μετέρχομαι, I come among, follow, go after, seek for. β. The prefix is certainly Gk. μετ-, short for μετά, among, with, cognate with Goth. mith, A. S. mid, G. mit, with. γ. The base ἀλ- in ἀλλ-άω is supposed to be from the same root as ἐρ- in ἐρ-χομαι, viz. ✓AR, to go; cf. Skt. ri, to go, meet, attain, whence richchha, archchha, to go (corresponding to Gk. ἐρχομαι). See Curtius. Thus the orig. sense would seem to be 'a place for going about among,' a mine; later, a mineral. Der. metall-ic, Milton, P. L. i. 673, immediately from Lat. metallicus; metalli-fer-ous, from metalli = metallo, crude form of metallum, and -fer, producing, from ferre, to bear; also metalloid, i. e. metal-like, from Gk. μέταλλο-, crude form of μέταλλον, and εἶδος, form; also metallurgy, q. v. Doublet, mettle.

METALLURGY, a working in metals. (F., — L., — Gk.) In Phillips, World of Words, ed. 1706. — O. F. metallurgie, 'a search for metal in the bowels of the earth,' Cot. [But this would appear to be but a partial explanation.] — Low Lat. *metallurgia, not recorded, but such a form must have existed as a transcription from the Gk. — Gk. μεταλλουργός, adj., working in metals, mining; μεταλλουργεῖν, to smelt ore or work metals. — Gk. μέταλλο-, crude form of μέταλλον, a metal; and ἐργον, work, cognate with E. work. See Metal and Work. ¶ The vowel u = Gk. ou, resulting from o and e. Der. metallurg-ic-al, metallurg-ist.

METAMORPHOSIS, change of form, transformation. (L., — Gk.) Chaucer has Metamorphoseos, short for Metamorphoseos liber, book of metamorphosis, C. T. 4513. He alludes to the celebrated Metamorphoseon Libri, books of metamorphoses, by Ovid; and there is no doubt that the word became widely familiar because Ovid used it. — Lat. metamorphosis (gen. sing. metamorphosis or metamorphoseos, the latter being the Gk. form; gen. pl. metamorphoseon), a transformation. — Gk. μεταμόρφωσις, a transformation. — Gk. μεταμορφόμαι, I am transformed. — Gk. μετά, which in comp. has the sense of 'change'; and μορφή, I form, from μορφή, form. β. The etymology of μορφή is uncertain; but it is probably to be connected with μάρπτειν, to grasp, and with Skt. mr̥iḥ, to touch, to stroke; the orig. sense being 'a moulded shape.' See Curtius. Der. metamorphose, Two Gent. i. 1. 66, ii. 1. 32, a verb coined from the sb. above; also used by Gascoigne, Complaint of Philomene, l. 18 from end. Also metamorph-ic, a geological term, likewise a coined word.

METAPHOR, a transference in the meaning of words. (F., — L., — Gk.) 'And make therof a metaphore;' Gascoigne, Complaint of Philomene (near the end); ed. Arber, p. 116. — F. metaphore, 'a metaphor;' Cot. — Lat. metaphora. — Gk. μεταφορά, a transferring of a word from its proper signification to another. — Gk. μεταφέρειν, to transfer. — Gk. μετά, which in comp. often gives the sense of 'change'; and φέρειν, to bear, carry, cognate with E. bear. See Meta- and Bear. Der. metaphor-ic, metaphor-ic-al, metaphor-ic-ly.

METAPHRASE, METAPHRASIS, a literal translation. (Gk.) 'Metaphrasis, a bare translation out of one language into another;' Phillips, World of Words, ed. 1706. — Gk. μετάφρασις, a paraphrasing. — Gk. μεταφράζειν, to paraphrase, translate, lit. to change the style of phrase. — Gk. μετά, signifying 'change'; and φράζειν, to speak. See Meta- and Phrase. Der. metaphrast = Gk. μεταφράστης, a translator; metaphrast-ic.

METAPHYSICS, the science of mind. (L., — Gk.) Formerly called metaphysic; thus Tyndall speaks of 'textes of logike, . . . of metaphysike;' Works, p. 104, l. 1. — Lat. metaphysicus, metaphysical; whence metaphysica, sb. pl., metaphysics. — Gk. μετά τὰ φυσικά, after physics; because the study was supposed fitly to follow the study of physics or natural science. The name is due to editors of Aristotle. See Physica. Der. metaphysic-al, Levins; metaphysic-al-ly, metaphysic-i-an.

METATHESIS, transposition of the letters of a word. (L., — Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. metathesis. — Gk. μετάθεσις, transposition. — Gk. μετά, signifying 'change'; and θέσις, a setting, place. See Meta- and Thesis.

METE, to measure. (E.) M. E. meten, P. Plowman, B. i. 175. — A. S. metan, gemetan, to measure; Grein, ii. 234. + Du. meten. + Icel. meta, to tax, value. + Swed. måta, to measure. + Goth. mitan. + G. messen. Cf. Gk. μέδω, to rule; Lat. modus, measure, moderation. β. All from Teut. base MAT, an extension from ✓MA, to measure; cf. Skt. mā, to measure, Gk. μέτρον, a measure; Lat. me-tiri, to measure. Der. mete-yard, Levit. xix. 35, from A. S. met-geard, a measuring-rod, Wright's Vocab. p. 38, l. 5 (see Yard). From the same root are meet (1), measure, mensuration, mature, manual, material, moral, modé, modest, month, moon, metre, &c. Also baro-meter, thermo-meter, &c.; im-mense, fir-man.

METEMPSYCHOSIS, the transmigration of souls. (Gk.) 'Metempsychosis, a passing of the soul from one body to another;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Spelt metempsychosis in Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 53. — Gk. μετεμψύχωσις, a transferring of the soul. — Gk. μετεμψύχω, I make the soul pass from one body to another. — Gk. μετ-, for μετά, denoting 'change'; εμ-, put for έν, in, into, before the ψ following; ψυχή, for ψυχή, the soul; with causal suffix -οσι. See Psychology.

METEOR, an apparition in the sky. (F., — Gk.) Frequent in Shak.; see Rich. II, ii. 4. 9, &c. — O. F. meteore, 'a meteor;' Cot. — Gk. μετέωρος, adj., raised up above the earth, soaring in air; hence μετέωρον, a meteor. — Gk. μετ-, for μετά, among; and έωρα, collateral form of αίωρα, anything suspended, from δέιπειν, to lift, raise up. β. 'Μετέωρος (Ionic μετ-έωρος) points to δείπω, stem δέφω, which has prob. arisen from δ-σφω with a prothetic δ, whilst its various ramifications may all be well developed from the idea of swinging or making to swing (δορ, δορφή, αίωρα, ἀπράω, ἀπράνη);' Curtius, i. 442. That is, δείπειν is from ✓SWAR, to swing, hover, appearing in Lithuan. averiti, to balance, svartis, the beam of a balance (Nesselmann). Der. meteor-ic; meteoro-logy, from λόγος, a discourse, λέγειν, to speak; meteoro-logi-c-al, meteoro-log-ist.

METHEGLIN, mead. (W.) In Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 22; L. L. L. v. 2. 233. — W. meddyglyn, mead; lit. mead-liquor. — W. medd, mead; and llyn, liquor (Spurrell, p. 189). See Mead.

METHINKS, it seems to me. (E.) M. E. me thinkes, Will. of Palerne, 430; also me thinketh, id. 839. — A. S. me þynced, it seems to me, Grein, ii. 613. Here me is the dat. case of the 1st pers. pronoun; and þynced is from the impersonal verb þyncan, to seem, quite distinct from þencan, to think (Grein, ii. 579).

β. Cognate with A. S. þyncan are O. Sax. thuncean, Icel. þykkja (= þynkja), Goth. thugkjan (= thunkjan), G. dünken, O. H. G. dunchan, to seem. These answer to a Teut. base THONKYA (Fick, iii. 128), which is a secondary verb formed from the base THANK, to think; see Think.

METHOD, arrangement, system, orderly procedure, way. (F., — L., — Gk.) In Shak. Meas. for Meas. iii. 2. 52. — O. F. methode, 'a method, a short, ready, and orderly course for the teaching, learning, or doing of a thing'; Cot. — Lat. methodus, methodos. — Gk. μέθοδος, an enquiry into, method, system. — Gk. μεθ-, for μετά, after; and ὁδός, a way; the lit. sense being 'a way after,' or 'a following after.' β. The Gk. ὁδός is from ✓ SAD, to go; cf. Skt. sādya (with ā), to approach (Benfey, p. 999); Russ. choditi, to go, walk, march, chod', a going, course. Der. methodic-al, methodic, method-ist (Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, and see Trench, Select Glossary), method-ise, Method-ism.

METONYMY, a rhetorical figure. (L., — Gk.) 'I understand your metonymy;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3. l. 588. 'Metonymy, a putting one name for another; a figure, when the cause is put for the effect, or contrarily;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. metonymia. — Gk. μεταonymia, a change of names, the use of one word for another. — Gk. μετά, implying 'change'; and ὄνομα, a name, cognate with E. name; see Name. The vowel o results from the coalescence of a and o. Der. metonymic-al, metonymic-al-ly.

METRE, METER, poetical arrangement of syllables, rhythm, verse. (F., — L., — Gk.) M. E. metre, Chaucer, C. T. 13987. — O. F. metre, 'meter'; Cot. — Lat. metrum. — Gk. μέτρον, that by which anything is measured, a rule, metre. β. From base με-, with suffix -τρον answering to Aryan -tar, signifying the agent; see Schleicher, Compendium, § 225. — ✓ MA, to measure; cf. Skt. mā, to measure. See Mete.

¶ The word meter occurs in A. S. (see Bosworth), from Lat. metrum; but Chaucer took it from the French. Der. metric-al (Skelton, A Replacacion, 338), metric-al-ly; dia-meter. Also metro-nome, a musical time-measurer, from μέτρον, for μέτρον, and νόμος, distribution, from νέμειν, to distribute.

METROPOLIS, a mother city. (L., — Gk.) Properly applied to the chief cathedral city; thus Canterbury is the metropolis of England, but London is not, except in modern popular usage. In K. John. v. 2. 72; and Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. The adj. metropolitan (= Lat. metropolitanus) was in much earlier use, having a purely ecclesiastical sense. 'Byshoppes metropolitanes' = metropolitan bishops; Sir T. More, Works, p. 1091 h. (Here Sir T. More uses the word as a F. adj., with added s, and following its sb.) — Lat. metropolis. — Gk. μητροπολις, a mother-state; ecclesiastically, the city of a primate. — Gk. μήτρον, used as crude form from μήτηρ, a mother, cognate with E. Mother; and πόλις, a city, for which see Police. Der. metropolitan, from Lat. metropolitanus (cf. Gk. πολιτ-ης, a citizen). [†]

METTLE, spirit, ardour. (F., — L., — Gk.) Absolutely the same word as metal, though the difference in sense is now indicated by a difference in the spelling. Common in Shak.; see K. John, ii. 401, Jul. Cæsar, i. 1. 66, i. 2. 313, ii. 1. 134, iv. 2. 24, &c. 'No distinction is made in old editions between the two words, either in spelling or in use;' Schmidt. The allusion is to the temper of the metal of a sword-blade. See Metal. Der. mettle-ed; mettle-some (with E. suffix).

MEW (1), to cry as a cat. (E.) In Shak. Macb. iv. 1. 1; Hamlet, v. 1. 315; 'cry mew!' 1 Hen. IV, iii. 1. 129. M. E. mawen. 'Tybert [the cat] coude not goo awaye, but he mawed and galped so loude,' i. e. mewed and yelped so loudly; Caxton, tr. of Reynard the Fox, ed. Arber, p. 22. Of imitative origin, like Mew (2), q. v. So also Pers. maw, the mewing of a cat; Arab. mau, a mewing; Rich. Dict. p. 1517. Der. mew-l, As You Like It, ii. 7. 144; this is a F. form, from O. F. micauler, 'to mewl or mew like a cat,' Cot.

MEW (2), a sea-fowl, gull. (E.) M. E. mawe. 'Hec fuliga, semawe [sea-mew]; Wright's Vocab. i. 189, col. 1. l. 6. — A. S. mæw; 'Alcedo, vel alcion, mæw;' id. p. 29, col. 1. + Du. mæuw; + Icel. már. + Dan. maage. + Swed. måke. + G. möwe. β. All words of imitative origin; from the mew or cry of the bird. See Mew (1).

MEW (3), a cage for hawks, &c. (F., — L.) In English, the sense of 'cage' is the oldest, whence the verb mew, to enclose. At a later date, the verb mew also meant 'to moult,' which is the orig. sense in French. M. E. meuwe, meuwe, mu. 'And by hire beddes heed she made a meuwe;' Chaucer, C. T. 10957. 'In meuues;' Will. of Palerne, 3336. 'In mu;' Knight de la Tour Landry, ed. Wright, p. 85, l. 3 from bottom. — O. F. mu, 'a change, or changing; any casting of the coat or skin, as the mewing of a hawke; . . . also, a hawks mu; and a mu, or coope wherein fowle is fattened;' Cot.

— F. muer, 'to change, to mew, to cast the head, coat, or skin;' Cot. — Lat. mūtare, to change. β. Put for mūtare, frequent form of mouere, to move; see Move. Der. mew-s, s. pl., a range of stabling, orig. a place for falcons; the reason for the change of name is given in Stow's Survey of London, ed. 1842, p. 167. 'Then is the Mewe, so called of the king's falcons there kept by the royal falconer, which of old time was an office of great account, as appeareth by a record of Rich. II, in the 1st year of his reign . . . After which time [A. D. 1534] the fore-named house called the Mewe, by Charing-cross, was new built, and prepared for stabling of the king's horses, in the reign of Edw. VI and Queen Mary, and so remaineth to that use.' Also mew, vb., to cage up, confine, of which the pp. mued occurs in The Knight de La Tour Landry, p. 85, l. 29. Also mew, vb., to moult, cast the coat; 'But I have mew'd that coat,' Beaum. and Fletcher, Little French Lawyer, iii. 2. See Moult.

MEZZOTINTO, a mode of engraving. (Ital., — L.) See Evelyn's Diary, Mar. 13, 1661. — Ital. mezzo tinto, half tinted. — Ital. mezzo (Lat. medius); and tinto, pp. of tingere, to tinge. See Mediate and Tinge.

MIASMA, pollution, infectious matter. (Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. — Gk. μίασμα, pollution, stain. — Gk. μιαίνω, to stain.

MICA, a glittering mineral. (L.) 'Mica, a crum, or little quantity of anything that breaks off; also glimmer, or cat-silver, a metallick body like silver, which shines in marble and other stones, but cannot be separated from them;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Cf. mod. F. and Span. mica, mica. Apparently from Lat. mica, a crumb (see Microcosm); but it seems to have been applied to the mineral from a notion that this word was related to Lat. micare, to shine, glimmer; which is not the case. See Microscope. Der. micaceous, a coined adj.

MICH, to skulk, hide, play truant. (F.) M. E. michen, Prompt. Parv. Prov. E. mooch, mouch. The sb. micher occurs in the Rom. of the Rose, 6543 (or 6541); and, much earlier, spelt muchare, in Ancien Riwle, p. 150, last line. — O. F. mucer, mucier (Burguy), later musser, 'to hide, conceal, . . . lurke, skowke, or squat in a corner;' Cot. Origin unknown. Der. mick-er, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 450, and in Ancien Riwle (as above); mich-ing, Hamlet, iii. 2. 146; also cur-mudgeon, q. v.

MICHAELMAS, the feast of St. Michael. (Hybrid; F., — Heb. and L.) M. E. micelmesse, mychelmesse, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 240. 1. Michel is from F. Michel, the F. form of Heb. Mikhael, a proper name, signifying 'who is like unto God' from Heb. mā, who! ēl, like, El, God. 2. The suffix -mas, M. E. messe, A. S. mæsse, is from Lat. missa, a mass; see Mass (2).

MICKLE, great. (E.) M. E. mikel, mukel, michel, muchel, mochel; used as adv. in Chaucer, C. T. 260. And see Havelok, 1025; Ormulum, 788; &c. — A. S. mycel, micel; Grein, ii. 242. + Icel. mikill, mykill. + Goth. mikils. + M. H. G. michel, O. H. G. mihil. + Gk. μεγάλος, great. See Much. The suffix -le answers to Aryan -ra; Schleicher, Compend. § 220.

MICROCOSM, a little world. (F., — L., — Gk.) This term, meaning 'a little universe,' was applied in old times to man, who was regarded as a model or epitome of the universe. In Minsheu, ed. 1627. 'This word is sometimes applied to man, as being a compendium of all other creatures, his body being compared to the baser part of the world, and his soul to the blessed angels;' Blount, ed. 1674. Also in Shak. Cor. ii. 1. 68. — F. microcosme, 'a little world;' Cot. — Lat. microcosmus. — Gk. μικρόκοσμος, a little world. — Gk. μικρο-, crude form of μικρός, fuller form σμικρός, small, little; and κόσμος, a world (see Cosmetic).

MICROSCOPE, an instrument for viewing small objects. (Gk.) In Milton, P. R. iv. 57. Coined from Gk. μικρός, crude form of μικρός, small; and σκοπ-ειν, to behold, see. Cf. Gk. ἐπι-σκοπος, an overseer, bishop. See Microcosm and Scope. Der. microscopic, microscopic-al. (So also micro-meter, an instrument for measuring small distances; see Metre.)

MID, middle. (E.) M. E. mid, midde; only used in compounds and phrases; see Stratmann. — A. S. mid, midd, adj., middle; Grein, ii. 248. + Du. mid-, used in composition, as mid-dag, mid-day. + Icel. miðr, adj. + Swed. and Dan. mid-, in composition. + Goth. midja. + O. H. G. mitti, adj. + Lat. medius, adj. + Gk. μέσος, ἑσός (= μέσος). + Skt. mādhya, adj., middle.

β. All from an adjectival base MADHYA, middle; root unknown. The Teutonic form of the base is MEDYA; Fick, iii. 240. Der. amid, q. v., whence the use of mid (for 'mid') as a preposition, like Russ. mejdú, mej', amid; a-mid-s-t, q. v. Also mid-day, A. S. mid-dag, John, iv. 6; mid-land, 2 Macc. viii. 35 (A. V.); mid-night, A. S. mid-niht, Wright's Vocab. i. 53, l. 5; mid-rib, a modern botanical term, not in Todd's Johnson; mid-riff, q. v.; mid-ship, short for amid-ship, first appearing in the term midship-beam, Phillips, World of Words, ed. 1706; mid-ship-man; mid-summer, A. S. midsumor, A. S. Chron., an. 1131; mid- way, M. E. midwei, Ancrén Riwe, p. 412. Also mid-le, q. v.; mid-st, q. v. Also (from Lat. medi-us) medi-ate, med-ullar, &c.

MIDDLE, adj., intervening, intermediate. (E.) M. E. middel, adj. 'In the myddel place;' Mandeville's Travels, p. 2 (in Spec. of English, p. 165, l. 34). Also middel, sb. 'About the hire middel;' Gower, C. A. ii. 47, l. 12. — A. S. middel, sb., Grein, ii. 249. β. Formed with suffix -el (due to Teut. suffix -la, Aryan -ra, Schleicher, Comp. p. 220) from A. S. mid, adj.; see Mid. (Compare mi-kle, M. E. muck-el, with E. muck). + Du. middel, adj., and sb. + G. mittel, sb., means; O. H. G. mittil, adj., middle. Cf. Icel. meðal, prep. among; milli (for mid-i), prep. between; Dan. mellem, Swed. mellan, prep., between. Der. middle-man, given in Phillips, ed. 1706, as a military term, signifying 'he that stands middlemost in a file;' middle-ing, used by L'Estrange and Dryden (Johnson), not an early word; middle-most, Ezek. xlii. 5 (in the Bible of 1551 and in the A. V.), an ill-coined superlative on the model of fore-most and after-most.

MIDGE, a small fly or gnat. (E.) M. E. migge, mygge. 'Hec sicoma, a myge' [better mygge]; Wright's Vocab. i. 223, note 4. — A. S. miege, Ælfric's Gloss., Nom. Insectorum; in Wright's Vocab. i. 24; see 'Culix, myge' [misprint for mycg]; id. i. 281, col. 1. Here miege is put for myge, where y is due to an earlier u, by the usual vowel-change. + Du. mug, a gnat. + Low. G. mugge; Bremen Wörterbuch. + Swed. mygg. + Dan. myg. + Icel. mý. + G. mücke, O. H. G. mucca, mugga. β. All from a Teutonic type MUGYA (Fick, iii. 241); perhaps the orig. sense was 'buzzer,' from the noise made by the insect's wings. Cf. Lat. mug-ire, Skt. muj, to sound, make a low sound, low, Gk. μύσσειν, to mutter, E. moo, mew. ¶ It cannot well be connected with Lat. musca, Russ. mukha, a fly, which (together with Gk. μύα) Curtius refers to Skt. makshas, a fly; for this word see Mosquito. Der. mug-wort, q. v.

MIDRIFF, the diaphragm, separating the heart from the stomach, &c. (E.) M. E. midrif, mydryf, Prompt. Parv. — A. S. midrif. 'Disseptum, midrif; Exta, midrif;' Wright's Vocab. i. 44, col. 2. (Here midrif stands for an older midrif). — A. S. mid, middle; and hrif, the belly, the womb, Grein, ii. 104. Cf. Du. rif, in the sense of 'carcase;' O. H. G. hreif, the body, O. Fries. rif, ref, the belly, midref, the midriff. ¶ Note also O. Fries. midrihere, midriff, allied to A. S. hreðer, the breast.

MIDST, the middle. (E.) 'In the midst;' Com. Errors, i. 1. 104; and 11 other times in Shakespeare. 'In middest of his race;' Spenser, F. Q. vi. 3. 25. In the midst is from this older phrase in middest. Moreover, the t is excrement, as in whils-t, amongst; and in middest answers to M. E. in midde, as in 'in midde the sea' = in the midst of the sea, Pricke of Conscience, l. 2938. A parallel phrase is amidde, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 82. β. Here the s gives the phrase an adverbial force, and is due to the habit of forming adverbs from the A. S. gen. case in -es. The older form is without the s, as in a midde, Layamon, 4836, also spelt a midde, id. 8154. Still earlier, we have on midde, Luke, xxii. 36, in the latest version of the A. S. Gospels, where the earlier version has on mydene. γ. The M. E. form midde answers to A. S. middan, dat. case of the sb. midde, formed from the adj. mid, middle. See Mid; and see Amidst.

MIDWIFE, a woman who assists another in childbirth. (E.) M. E. midwif, P. Plowman's Crede, l. 78; spelt mydwif, Myrc's Duties of Parish Priest, ed. Peacock, l. 98; mydwif, id. l. 87; mydwif, Wyclif, Gen. xxxviii. 27 (later version); medewife, id. (earlier version). The false spelling medewife (not common) is due to confusion with mede, i. e. meed, reward; this has misled Verstegan and others as to the etymology. β. The prefix mid- is certainly nothing but the once common A. S. and M. E. mid, prep., together with; it occurs again as a part of the M. E. midpolinge, compassion (lit. suffering with), Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 157. There are several such compounds in A. S.; as mid-wyrcean, to work with, Mk. xvi. 20, mid-wyrhta, a worker together with, co-adjutor, A. S. Chron. an. 945; see Bosworth. This A. S. mid is cognate with Du. mede, with (whence medebroeder, a companion, lit. mid-brother, medegenoot, a partner, medehelpen, to assist); also with G. mit (whence G. mitbruder, a comrade, mitheifer, a helper, mitmachen, to take a part in, &c.); also with Gk. μετά, with (whence μεταλαβέειν, to participate). The sense of mid in this compound is clearly 'helping with,' or 'assisting.' The Span. comadre, a midwife, lit. co-mother, expresses the same idea. γ. The M. E. wif means no more than 'woman;' see Wife, Woman. And see Meta-. Der. midwifery, spelt midwifry in Bp. Hall, Sat. i. 1. 25, a clumsy compound, with F. suffix -erie (= F. -erie).

MIEN, look, bearing, demeanour. (F., — Ital., — L.) Spelt meen in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. He has: 'Meen (F. mine), the countenance, figure, gesture, or posture of the face.' Perhaps meen in Spenser, F. Q. vi. 7. 39, is the same word. The spellings meen, meane, are remarkable, and indicate confusion with O. Ital. mena (see below). — F. mine, 'the countenance, look, cheer;' Cot. β. The F. word is not an old one in the language, not being found earlier than the 15th century. Borrowed from Ital. mina, with same sense, a word omitted in Meadows' Dict., but cited by Littré, Scheler, and Brachet. There is some doubt about the etymology, but the F. spellings meen, meane clearly point to the O. Ital. mena, 'behaviour, fashion, carriage of a man,' Florio; a word which the etymologists appear to have overlooked. It is clear that mena, mina, are dialectal variations of one and the same word. This appears still more clearly from the consideration that mena, conduct, is a sb. due to the Ital. menare, 'to lead, bring, conduct,' Florio; whilst mina is due to the equivalent Low Lat. minare, to lead (Ducange); whence F. mener, which is the verb to which F. mine really belongs. γ. From Lat. minare, to threaten; used in Low Lat. in the peculiar sense 'to drive flocks, conduct.' See Menace, Mine (2). Der. de-mean. [*] MIGHT (1), power, strength. (E.) M. E. might, migt; Chaucer, C. T. 5580. — A. S. mikt, mekt, mæht, meaht; Grein, ii. 235. + Du. magt. + Icel. máttir (for máhtir). + Dan. and Swed. magt. + Goth. mahts. + G. macht, O. H. G. maht. β. All from Teut. type MAHTI, might (Fick, iii. 227); from MAG, to be able; see May (1). Cf. Russ. moche, might, from moche, to be able. Der. might-y, A. S. migtig, meahtig, Grein, ii. 237; might-i-ly, might-i-ness.

MIGHT (2), was able. (E.) A. S. meakte, mikte, pt. t. of mugan, to be able; Grein, ii. 267. See May (1).

MIGNONETTE, an annual plant. (F., — G.) Modern. Added by Todd to Johnson. — F. mignonette, dimin. of mignon, a darling. See Minion.

MIGRATE, to remove from one country to another. (L.) The sb. migration is in Cotgrave, and in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. migratus, pp. of migrare, to wander; connected with meare, to go. Der. migration, from F. migration, 'a migration' (Cot.), from Lat. acc. migrationem. Also migrat-or-y, e-migrate, im-migrate.

MILCH, milk-giving. (Scand.) In Gen. xxii. 15. 'A hundred milk kine;' Tam. Shrew, ii. 1. 359. Merely a weakened form of Milk, q. v. 'Myliche, or mylke of a cowe, lac;' Prompt. Parv. p. 337. 'Mylich cowe, vacca mulsaria;' id. ¶ This use of milk as an adj. is Scandinavian. Cf. Icel. mjólk, milk; milkr, mjólkir, adj., milk-giving; milk ær, a milk ewe. So G. melk, adj., milk.

MILD, gentle, kind, soft. (E.) M. E. mild, milde; Rob. of Glouc. p. 72, l. 8. — A. S. milde, Grein, ii. 250. + Du. mild. + Icel. mildr. + Dan. and Swed. mild. + G. mild, O. H. G. milii. + Goth. milds, only in comp. un-milds, without natural affection, 2 Tim. iii. 3. β. All from a Teut. type MILDIA, mild; Fick, iii. 235. To be divided as mil-da; allied to Lithuan. melas, dear, myleti, to love (Schleicher); Russ. miluii, amiable, kind, miloste, kindness, miloserdii, gracious (= A. S. mild-heort, mild-hearted, pitiful). Also to Gk. μελά-χμος, mild, μελά-χμος, mild, soft. And further, to Skt. milāmi, I am gracious, I rejoice, milāham, grace, pity; the primitive form being MARL, to be mild; Curtius, i. 410. Der. mild-ly, mild-ness. And see merry.

MILDEW, a kind of blight. (E.) M. E. meldew, Wyclif, Gen. xli. 6. — A. S. meledew, honey-dew, Grein, ii. 230; mildeaw, Lye. Cf. O. H. G. milidow, mildew, cited by Grein. β. The sense is prob. 'honey-dew,' from the sticky honey-like appearance of some kinds of blight, as, e. g. on lime-trees. Cf. Goth. miluhs, honey; allied to Lat. mel, Gk. μέλι, honey; Irish mil, honey, milceog, mildew. See Mellifluous and Dew. ¶ The mod. G. word is mehlthau, i. e. meal-dew; but this is probably an altered form, as it does not agree with the O. H. G. milidow; the O. H. G. for 'meal' being melo. [†]

MILE, a measure of distance, 1760 yards. (L.) M. E. mile, pl. mile, Chaucer, C. T. 16023. — A. S. mil, a mile; fem. sb., with pl. mila, mile; Grein, ii. 250. Formed from Lat. pl. milīa, more commonly millia, used in the sense of a Roman mile; the proper sense is 'thousands.' The older name for the Roman mile was mille passus, or mille passuum, a thousand paces. γ. Hence also G. meile, O. H. G. mīla, a mile; Du. mijl, a mile; &c. ¶ The M. E. unchanged pl. mile explains such a phrase as 'a ten-mile stage.' Der. mile-age (with F. suffix); mile-stone. And see millenary, milfoil, million.

MILFOIL, the name of a plant. (F., — L.) In a Vocabulary of Plant-names, said to be of the thirteenth century, we find 'Millefolium, milfoil;' Wright's Vocab. i. 139. The sense is 'thousand-leaf,' from the minute and numerous sections into which the plant is divided. — F. mille, a thousand; and O. F. fuil, foil, mod. F. feuille, a leaf. — Lat. mille, a thousand; and folium, a leaf. See Foil. ¶ The true E. name is yarrow, q. v.

MILITATE, to contend, fight, be opposed to. (L.) Modern. Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. [But militant, chiefly used of 'the church militant,' occurs in Barnes, Works, p. 253, col. 2.] — Lat. milītatus, pp. of milītare, to serve as a soldier, fight. — Lat. milī- stem of miles, a soldier. Root uncertain. Der. militant, from Lat. militant-, stem of pres. pt. of militare. From Lat. milite we have also milit-ar-y, All's Well, i. 1. 132; milit-ar-ist, a coined word, All's Well, iv. 3. 161. Also milit-it-a, q. v.

MILITIA, a body of soldiers for home service. (L.) 'Except his militia of natives be of good and valiant soldiers;' Bacon, Essay 29, Of Greatness of Kingdoms. — Lat. militia, (1) warfare, (2) troops, army. — Lat. milite, base of miles, a soldier. See Militato. Der. militia-man.

MILK, a white fluid secreted by female mammals for feeding their young. (E.) M. E. milk, Chaucer, C. T. 360. — A. S. milc * (not found), parallel to meolc, sometimes meoluc; Grein, ii. 240. + Du. melk. + Icel. mjólk. + Dan. melk. + Swed. mjólk. + Goth. miluks, with inserted unoriginal u, as in A. S. meoluc. + G. milch. β. All from a Teut. type MELKI, Fick, iii. 236; derived from MALK, the base of the strong verb which is preserved only in the G. melken (pt. t. molk, pp. gemolken), O. H. G. melchan, to milk; orig. 'to stroke,' from the action employed in milking a cow. γ. This Teut. base MALK answers to European MALG, Aryan MARG, to stroke, milk, appearing in Lithuan. milsti, to stroke, milk (Nesselmann), Gk. ἀμύλω, to milk, Lat. mulgere, to milk. The older sense appears in Skt. māij, māij, to wipe, rub, stroke, sweep, answering to Aryan ✓ MARG, to rub, wipe. δ. This root is an extension of ✓ MAR, to grind, pound, rub; see Mar. Der. milk, vb., A. S. meolcan, Bede, ed. Wheelock, b. v. c. 22, p. 461, l. 13, shewing that the E. verb is derived from the sb., instead of the contrary, as in German; milk-er, milk-y; milk-maid, milk-pail, milk-tree; milk-sop, q. v.; milch, q. v.

MILKSOP, an effeminate man. (E.) 'Alas, quoth she, that euer I was yshape To wedde a milksoppe, or a coward ape;' Chaucer, C. T. 13916. The lit. sense is 'bread soaked in milk;' hence, a soft, effeminate man. From M. E. milk, milk; and soppe, a sop, bread soaked in milk. See Milk and Sop.

MILL, a machine for grinding corn, &c. (L.) M. E. melle (riming with telle); Chaucer, C. T. 3921. Also mulle, in comp. windmulle, a windmill, Rob. of Glouc. p. 547, l. 22. Mill is a corruption, for ease of pronunciation, of miln, still in use provincially; cf. the name Milner, equivalent to the commoner Miller. Similarly, M. E. mulle is for M. E. mulne, which occurs in Sir Gawain, ed. Morris, 2203. In P. Plowman, A. ii. 80, we have as various readings the forms mulnere, mylnere, myllere, mellere, a miller, corresponding respectively to mulne, mylne, mylle, melle, a mill. — A. S. myln, a mill; 'Molendenum, myln;' Wright's Vocab. i. 83, col. 1, l. 7. Also spelt mylen, Grein, ii. 270. Not an E. word, but borrowed from Lat. molina, a mill; whence also Icel. mylna, a mill. Extended from Lat. mola, a mill, lit. 'that which grinds;' cf. molere, to grind. — ✓ MAR, to grind, rub; whence also Lithuan. maliti, Goth. malan, G. mahlen, to grind. Der. mill-cog, mill-dam, mill-race, mill-stone, mill-wright, mill-wheel. Also mill-er, mill-er's-thumb (a fish).

MILLENNIUM, a thousand years. (L.) In Johnson's Dict. — Lat. millennium, a period of a thousand years. — Lat. milie, a thousand; and annus, a year; see Annual. The same change of vowel occurs in bi-ennial, tri-ennial, &c. Der. millenni-al. ☞ We also find millenary, Bp. Taylor, Sermons, vol. ii. ser. 2 (R.) This is from Lat. millenarius, belonging to a thousand, a derivative of pl. adj. milleni, extended from milie, a thousand.

MILLET, the name of a plant. (F., — L.) In Holland, tr. of Pliny, bk. xviii. c. 7. — F. millet, 'millet, mill;' Cot. Dimin. of F. mil, 'mill, millet;' Cot. — Lat. milium, millet; whence also A. S. mil, millet (Bosworth). + Gk. μῆλον, millet. Root uncertain. Der. mili-ar-y, directly from Lat. milium.

MILLINER, one who makes bonnets, &c. (Ital.) In Shak. Wint. Ta. iv. 4. 192. 'A millaner's wife;' Ben Jonson, Every Man (ed. Wheatley), i. 3. 120; see the note. A milliner or millanor was formerly of the male sex. Spelt millener in Phillips; millenier in Minshew. Origin somewhat uncertain; but probably a corruption of Milaner, a dealer in wares from Milan, in Italy. Milan steel was in good repute at an early period; we find 'And a Milaine knife fast by my knee' in the Percy Folio MS., ed. Hales and Furnivall, i. 68; where a note says: 'The dealers in miscellaneous articles were also called milliners, from their importing Milan goods for sale, such as brooches, aiglets, spurs, glasses, &c.; Saunders's Chaucer, p. 241.' We must also remember that the old sense of milliner was a haberdasher, or seller of small wares; see Minshew, ed. 1627, whose suggestion that milliner is derived from Lat. milie (a thousand) is, probably, to be rejected, though it shews that their wares were of a very miscellaneous character, and that they had 'a thousand small wares to sell.' ¶ We also have the term mantua-maker, as if from the Italian town of Mantua, but this appears to be a corruption of Ital. manto. Der. milliner-y. [†]

MILLION, a thousand thousand. (F., — L.) M. E. million; ☞

Chaucer, C. T. 7267. — F. million, 'a million;' Cot. — Low Lat. millionem, acc. of millio; Ducange. Evidently a coined word, extended from Lat. milie, a thousand. See Mile. Der. million-it; million-aire, from F. millionnaire.

MILT (1), the spleen. (E.) M. E. milte, O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 178, l. 171. — A. S. milte; 'Splen, milte;' Wright's Vocab. i. 45, col. 1. + Du. milte, the spleen. + Icel. milte, the spleen. + Dan. milte, the spleen. + Swed. mjälte, the spleen. + G. milz, milte. β. The Teut. type is MELTYA (Fick, iii. 236); from the verb to melt, in the sense 'to digest;' cf. Icel. melta, (1) to malt for brewing, (2) to digest; see Melt.

MILT (2), soft roe of fishes. (Scand.) In Walton's Angler; see Todd. In this sense, it must be regarded as a mere corruption of milk. This use of the word is Scandinavian. Cf. Swed. mjölke, milk; mjölke, milt of fishes; mjölksfisk, a milter, lit. milk-fish; Dan. fiske-milk, soft roe, lit. fish-milk. So also G. milch, (1) milk, (2) milt of fishes. Der. milt, vb., milt-er.

MIMIC, imitative, apt in imitating. (L., — Gk.) 'Mimic Fancy;' Milton, P. L. v. 110. The sb. mimick occurs in Milton, Samson, 1325; and once in Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 19, spelt mimmick in the folios. — Lat. mimicus, farcical. — Gk. μιμικός, imitative, belonging to or like a mime. — Gk. μῖμος, an imitator, actor, mime. β. The form μῖμος is a reduplicated one, from a repetition of ✓ MA, to measure; cf. the forms mimá, mimí, cited under Skt. má, to measure; Benfey, p. 694. The sense is one who measures or compares himself with another, an imitator. Der. mimic, sb., mimic, vb., mimic-ry. We sometimes find mime, directly from Gk. μῖμος; also mim-et-ic, from Gk. μιμητικός, imitative, from μιμητής, an imitator.

MINARET, a turret on a mosque. (Span., — Arab.) Added by Todd to Johnson; it occurs in Swinburne's Travels through Spain; letter 44. — Span. minarete, a high slender turret. — Arab. manárat, a candle-stick, lamp, light-house, a turret on a mosque; Rich. Dict. p. 1496. — Arab. manár, the same, id.; connected with nár, fire, p. 1548. + Heb. manórakh, a candle-stick; from nár, to shine.

MINCE, to chop small. (E. ?) M. E. mincen; the pp. mincid occurs in the Liber Cure Cocorum, ed. Morris, 18 (Stratmann). β. The word appears to be the same as F. mincer, 'to mince, to shred;' Cot. But the F. word was, probably, borrowed from a Teutonic source cognate with English, since Diez connects F. mince, small, with O. H. G. minst, minnist, smallest, least. γ. It is better to derive E. mince from A. S. minsian; the effect of added s is well seen in E. clean-se = to make clean. Cf. Swed. minska, Dan. minskede, to lessen. δ. The only difficulty is that the A. S. minsian (rather a rare word) appears only in an intransitive sense, viz. to become small, to fail. It only occurs twice: 'wérigra wlite minsode' = the comeliness of the accursed ones failed; Daniel, 268, ed. Grein; and again, 'swíðe ne minsade' = it did not greatly fail; Reimlied, 29 (in a very obscure passage). ε. But it may fairly be urged that to use minsian in an active sense, 'to make small,' would be quite proper; cf. A. S. wansian, to make small, diminish, cause to wane; A. S. Chronicle, an. 656, ed. Thorpe, p. 53, note, l. 9. So also clean-se, A. S. clensian, to make clean. ζ. Formed, with suffix -s, implying 'to make,' from the adj. min, small, Grein, ii. 252. Cf. Du. min, less; Lat. min-or, less; see Minish. Der. mince-ing = taking small steps, Isa. iii. 16; mince-pie, formerly minced-pie, Spectator, no. 629; mince-meat, formerly minced-meat.

MIND, the understanding, intellect, memory. (E.) M. E. mind, mynd, often in the sense of memory; Chaucer, C. T. 1908, 4972. — A. S. gemynd, memory, mind, thought (where the prefixed ge- makes no difference); Grein, ii. 432. Formed (with the usual vowel change of u to y) from A. S. munan, to think, gemunan, to remember; id. i. 431; ii. 268. + Icel. minni (for mindí), memory; from muna, to remember. + Dan. minde, memory. + Goth. gamunds, remembrance, gaminthi, remembrance; from gamunan, to remember. + Lat. mens (stem menti-), mind; connected with memini, I remember. + Lithuan. mintis in comp. isz-mintis, intelligence; from mineti, to think (Nesselmann, p. 381). + Russ. pa-miate, memory; po-miute, to remember. Cf. also Gk. μῆτις, wisdom, μῆνός, the mind; Skt. manas, the mind. β. All from ✓ MAN, to think; cf. Skt. man, to think, Lat. me-min-i, I remember. See Man. Der. mind, verb, A. S. gemyndgian, to remember, Grein, ii. 433; mind-ed, like-mind-ed; mind-ful, Shak. Lucrece, l. 1583; mind-ful-ly, mind-ful-ness; mind-less, Pricke of Conscience, 2288. From the same root, man, mental, mentor, mania, mandarin, money, mint (1), mendacious, com-ment, &c.

MINE (1), belonging to me. (E.) M. E. min, pl. mine, Chaucer, C. T. 1146; frequently shortened to my, as in id. 1145. — A. S. min, poss. pron. (declinable), Grein, ii. 252. — A. S. min (unchangeable), gen. case of the 1st pers. pronoun; see Me. + Goth. meins, poss. pron. (declinable), mine; from meina, gen. case of 1st personal pronoun. So in other Teut. tongues. Doublet, my.

MINE (2), to excavate, dig for metals. (F., — L.) In King

Alisaunder, l. 1216; cf. l. 1218. 'And therupon anon he bad His minours for to go and mine;' Gower, C. A. ii. 198.—F. miner, 'to mine, or undermine;' Cot. Cf. Ital. minare, Span. and Port. minar, to mine.—Low Lat. minare, to conduct; with the esp. sense of leading onwards along a vein of metal; so also E. lode, or vein of ore, is allied to the verb to lead. The sense of 'driving cattle' also belongs to minare, and connects it with Lat. minari, to threaten; see Menace. Der. mine, sb.; min-er, M. E. minour, as above; min-ing; min-er-al, q. v. Also counter-mine, under-mine. And see men.

MINERAL, what is dug out of mines. (F.,—L.) M. E. mineral. 'The thridde stone in special By name is cleped mineral Whiche the metalles of every mine Attempeth, till that they been fine;' Gower, C. A. ii. 87.—F. mineral, 'a mineral;' Cot. Formed as adj. to accompany the sb. miniére, 'a mine of metals or minerals,' Cot.—F. miner, to mine; see Mine (2). Cf. Span. minera, a mine. Der. mineral-ise, mineral-ist, mineral-logy (where the final l is dropped, owing to the l following), a coined word from Gk. λόγος, discourse, from λέγειν, to speak; minera-logi-cal, minera-log-ist.

MINEVER, MINIVER, the same as Meniver, q. v.

MINGLE, to mix, confuse. (E.) Common in Shak.; both trans. and intrans. K. Lear, i. 1. 242; Macb. iii. 4. 3. A frequentative form, lit. 'to mix often,' from the older verb ming, M. E. mengen, mingen. 'The busy bee, her honye now she minges;' Surrey, Desc. of Spring; see Spec. of Eng. ed. Skeat, p. 217 (C), l. 11. The M. E. verb occurs as myngen, Rob. of Glouc. p. 42, l. 13; it is more often mengen, and mostly used in the pp. meint (contracted form of menged), or meind, Gower, C. A. ii. 262.—A. S. mengan, to mix, also to become mixed; also spelt mencgan, mengan, Grein, ii. 231. β. The vowel-change (of a to e or i) shews that mengan is a causal verb, derived from the older form mang, a mixture, preserved in the forms ge-mang, ge-mong, a mixture, crowd, assembly (where the prefixed ge- makes no difference), Grein, i. 425. + Du. mengelen, to mingle; from mengen, and mostly used in the pp. meint (contracted form of menged), or meind, Gower, C. A. ii. 262.—A. S. mengan, to mix, also to become mixed; also spelt mencgan, mengan, Grein, ii. 231. β. The vowel-change (of a to e or i) shews that mengan is a causal verb, derived from the older form mang, a mixture, preserved in the forms ge-mang, ge-mong, a mixture, crowd, assembly (where the prefixed ge- makes no difference), Grein, i. 425. + Du. mengelen, to mingle; from mengen, and mostly used in the pp. meint (contracted form of menged), or meind, Gower, C. A. ii. 262.—A. S. mengan, to mix, also to become mixed; also spelt mencgan, mengan, Grein, ii. 231.

β. The vowel-change (of a to e or i) shews that mengan is a causal verb, derived from the older form mang, a mixture, preserved in the forms ge-mang, ge-mong, a mixture, crowd, assembly (where the prefixed ge- makes no difference), Grein, i. 425. + Du. mengelen, to mingle; from mengen, and mostly used in the pp. meint (contracted form of menged), or meind, Gower, C. A. ii. 262.—A. S. mengan, to mix, also to become mixed; also spelt mencgan, mengan, Grein, ii. 231.

γ. These forms are due to the sb. mang, a mixture, crowd, as above. It seems best to refer this to the Teut. type MANAGA, many; see Many. Cf. G. menge, a crowd, O. H. G. menigt, a crowd, clearly related to O. H. G. manac, G. manch, many. Similarly, Mr. Vigfusson rightly derives the Icel. menga, to mix, from Icel. mangr, a form not found, yet undoubtedly the orig. form from which Icel. margr, many, is corrupted. The root is probably ✓ MAG, to have power (see Many).

¶ Under the word Among I have, by a strange oversight, deduced the form mang from its derivative mengan, thus referring among to mingle. The derivation of course runs the other way. From the ✓ MAG, to have power, we have a nasalised mang, whence many, numerous, and A. S. mang, a great number, crowd, mixture; hence on-mang, in a crowd, E. among; also A. S. mengan, to mix, E. ming-le.

Observe that there is no connection with the verb to mix; the slight resemblance to Gk. μύγωμι, I mix, is purely accidental, and need not delude us. Der. mingl-ing; com-mingle, q. v. And see Monger, and Mongrel.

MINIATURE, a painting on a small scale. (Ital.,—L.) 'Miniature (from minium, i. e. red lead), the art of drawing pictures in little, being done with red lead. Miniatured, painted or inlaid, as we read of porcellane dishes miniatured with gold;' Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674.—Ital. miniatura, a miniature.—Ital. miniato, pp. of miniare, 'to die, to paint, to colour or limne with vermilion or sinople or red lead;' Florio.—Lat. minium, cinnabar, red lead. β. Said to be an Iberian word, the Romans getting their minium from Spain; see Pliny, b. xxxiii. c. 7.

MINIKIN, a little darling. (Du.) Florio (in 1598) translates Ital. mignone by 'a minion, a fauorit, a minikin, a darling.'—Du. minnekyn, a cupid; Sewel's Du. Dict.; 'Minne, Minneken, my love;' Hexham's Du. Dict. ed. 1658. Dimin. of Du. minne, love, cognate with O. H. G. minna, love, allied to E. mind. See Mind, Minion. Der. minikin, adj., i. e. dear little, K. Lear, iii. 6. 45.

MINIM, a note in music; 1/4th of a drachm. (F.,—L.) The minim was once the shortest note, a quarter of the breve, or short note. The modern semibreve is so long a note that the breve is out of use. Formerly also spelt minum; Romeo, ii. 4. 22, second quarto (Schmidt).—O. F. minime; 'minime blanche, a minime in musick [so called from its white centre]; minime noire, a crochet' [because wholly black]; Cot.—Lat. minima (sc. nota), fem. nom. of minimus, minumus, very small; a superlative form with Aryan suffix -ma (Schleicher, Compend. § 235) from a base min-, small. See Minor, Minish. Doublet, minimum, directly from Lat. neut. minimum, the smallest thing.

MINION, a favourite, flatterer. (F.,—O. H. G.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 98; see Trench, Select Glossary.—F. mignon, 'a minion, favorite;' Cot.—F. mignon, adj., 'minion, dainty, neat, spruce; also pleasing, gentle, kind;' Cot. [The use as a sb., with a sinister sense, was prob. borrowed from Ital. mignone, 'a minion, a favorite, a dilling, a minikin, a darling;' Florio.] β. The F. -on, Ital. -one, is a mere suffix; the base mign- is due to M. H. G. minne, O. H. G. minna, minni, memory, remembrance, love; well known by its derivative minnesinger = singer of love. γ. This O. H. G. minna, memory, is closely related to E. mind; see Mind.

MINISH, to make little, diminish. (F.,—L.) In Exod. v. 19; see Bible Word-book. M. E. menusen. 'Menused, or maad lesse;' Wyclif, John, iii. 30, earlier version. Chaucer has the comp. amenuse, Pers. Tale, Group I, 377 (Six-text).—F. minuier, 'to minish, extenuate;' Cot. Cf. Ital. minuzzare, to mince, cut small.—Low Lat. *minutiare, not found, a by-form of Low Lat. minutare, to reduce to fragments.—Lat. minutia, smallness.—Lat. minutus, small (whence F. menu); see Minute, Minor. Der. di-minish.

MINISTER, a servant. (F.,—L.) M. E. ministre, Chaucer, C. T. 1664; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 312, l. 13. [Afterwards altered to the Lat. form.]—F. ministre.—Lat. ministerium, acc. of minister, a servant. β. In min-is-ter (from base min, small) and in mag-is-ter, a master (from base mag, great), we have a double comparative suffix answering to Aryan -yans-tara; see Schleicher, Compend. § 233.

γ. The base min, small, appears in min-or, less, and min-imus, least; see Minor, Minim. Der. minister, vb., M. E. ministren, Rob. of Brunne, p. 80, from F. ministrer, Lat. ministrare; minister-i-al, minister-i-al-ly; ministr-ant, from the stem of pres. pt. of Lat. ministrare; ministr-at-ion, from Lat. acc. ministratorem, from ministratus, pp. of ministrare; ministr-at-ive; ministr-y. Also minstrel, q. v.

MINIVER, the same as Meniver, q. v.

MINNOW, the name of a very small fish. (E.) There are two similar names for the fish in early books; one corresponds to minnow, and is prob. a pure E. word; the other corresponds to O. F. menuse.

1. M. E. menow, spelt menawe in a Nominalde of the 15th cent., in Wright's Vocab. i. 222, col. 2; spelt menoun, pl. menouns, Barbour's Bruce, ii. 577. The suffix -ow cannot be traced to the earliest period; we find only A. S. myne. 'Capito, myne, vel élepute' [eel-pout]; Wright's Voc. i. 55, col. 2. We also find, in Ælfric's Colloquy (Wright's Voc. i. 6), the acc. pl. mynas and éleputas as a gloss to Low Lat. menas et capitones. This A. S. myne (= mine) may be derived from A. S. min, small, and thus prob. means 'small fish.' It does not seem to be a mere borrowing from Lat. mena. Cf. Irish min, small; miniasg, a small fish (iasg = fish).

2. The M. E. menuse occurs (spelt menuce) in the Prompt. Parv. p. 333; and (spelt menuse) in the Babees Book, ed. Furnivall, p. 168, l. 747. Cf. 'Hec menusa, a menys;' Wright's Vocab. i. 253, col. 2.—O. F. menuse, 'small fish of divers sorts, the small frie of fish;' Cot. Clearly connected with O. F. minuier, to minish; and therefore with Lat. minutia, smallness, also, a small particle; from Lat. minutus, minute; see Minute. If this be correct, the E. minnow and O. F. men-use are from the same base min, small; and merely differ in the suffix. Whatever be the exact history of the words, we are clear as to the ultimate base. ¶ The Low Lat. mena, Lat. mana, is not the same word, being borrowed from Gk. μαῖνη, a small sea-fish, often salted.

MINOR, less, inferior. (L.) Like major, it was a term familiar in logic. It occurs in Sir T. More, Works, p. 504 d.—Lat. minor, less; compar. from a base min, small, not found in Latin, but occurring in the very form min in A. S. and Irish. + Icel. minnr, less (no positive). + Goth. minniza, less (no positive). β. All from ✓ MI, to diminish; cf. Skt. má, mind, mini, Vedic mind, mini, to hurt; Fick, i. 724. Der. minor-i-ty, Rich. III. i. 3. 11, coined in imitation of major-ity.

MINOTAUR, a fabulous monster. (L.,—Gk.) M. E. Minotaure, Chaucer, C. T. 982.—Lat. Minotaurus.—Gk. Μινώταυρος, a monster, half man, half bull; born, according to the story, of Pasiphaë, daughter of Minos.—Gk. Μίνω-, for Μίνως, Minos, king of Crete; and ταῦρος, a bull.

MINSTER, a monastery. (L.,—Gk.) M. E. minster; in the name West-minster, of frequent occurrence; P. Plowman, B. iii. 12; &c.—A. S. mynster, Grein, ii. 271. Corrupted from Lat. monasterium, a monastery. See Monastery, which is a doublet.

MINSTREL, a musical performer. (F.,—L.) M. E. minstrel, minstral; spelt mynstral, P. Plowman, B. prol. 33; minstral, Chaucer, C. T. 10392; menestral, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 192. The pl. menestraws occurs in Ancrén Riwe, p. 83, l. 11.—O. F. menestrel, 'a minstrell;' Cot. Also menestral (whence pl. menestraws).—Low Lat. ministralis, ministerialis, an artisan, servant, retainer; hence applied to the lazy train of retainers who played instruments, acted as buffoons and jesters, and the like.—Lat. ministerium, an employment.—Lat. minister, a servant; see Minister. Der. minstrel-sy, Lydgate, London Lyckpeny, st. 12; see Spec. of English, ed. Skeat, p. 26; spelt minstralcie, Chaucer, C. T. 2673.

MINT (1), a place where money is coined. (L.) M. E. mint; spelt mynt, Myre's Instructions for Parish Priests, l. 1775; menet, Aynbite of Inwyrt, p. 241. — A. S. myne, mynt, latest text menet, a coin; Matt. xxii. 19. Not an A. S. word, but borrowed from Lat. moneta, (1) a mint, (2) money. β. Moneta was a surname of Juno, in whose temple at Rome money was coined. The lit. sense is 'the warning one,' from monere, to warn, admonish, lit. 'to cause to remember'; cf. Lat. me-min-i, I remember. — ✓ MAN, to think; see Mind, Man. Der. mint, vb., mint-er, mint-ags. Doublet, money.

MINT (2), the name of an aromatic plant. (L., — Gk.) M. E. mint, mynte, Wyclif, Matt. xxiii. 23. — A. S. mint, Matt. xxiii. 23; Wright's Vocab. i. 67, col. 2. Prob. not an E. word, but merely borrowed from Lat. menta, mentha, Matt. xxiii. 23 (Vulgate). — Gk. μίνθα, μίνθος, mint. β. The plant has flowers in whorls; hence the suggestion that the root may occur in Skt. manth, math, to churn.

¶ The G. münze answers to E. mint in both senses; this makes it almost certain that both the G. and E. words are borrowed.

MINUET, the name of a dance. (F., — L.) 'Menuet or Minuet, a sort of French dance, or the tune belonging to it;' Phillips, ed. 1706. So called from the short steps in it. — F. menuët, 'smallish, little, pretty;' Cot. Dimin. of F. menu, small. — Lat. minutus; see Minute.

MINUS, the sign of subtraction. (L.) Mathematical. — Lat. minus, less; neuter of minor, less; see Minor.

MINUTE, very small, slight. (L.) The accentuation on the last syllable is modern. 'With minute drops;' Milton, II Penseroso, l. 130. But the word first came into use as a sb., in which use it is much older. M. E. minute, meaning (1) a minute of an hour, (2) a minute of a degree in a circle. 'Four minutes, that is to seyn, minutes of an houre;' Chaucer, on the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 7. l. 8. 'A degree of a signe containith 60 mynutis;' id. pt. i. § 8. l. 10. — Lat. minutus, small (whence F. menu); Low Lat. minuta, fem., a small portion, a mite (of money). Pp. of minuere, to make small. — Lat. min-, small, only found in min-or, less, min-imus, least; but cognate with A. S. min, small. + Gk. μνν-θειν, to make small. — ✓ MI, to diminish; cf. Skt. mī, to hurt. See Minor, Minish. Der. minute-ly, minute-ness; and from the sb., minute-book, minute-glass, minute-gun, minute-hand.

MINX, a pert, wanton woman. (Du.?) In Shak. Tw. Nt. iii. 4. 133; Oth. iii. 3. 475. The final x is difficult to account for. The word is most likely a corruption of O. Du. minneken, used as a term of endearment, meaning 'my love;' see Minikin. β. Schmidt connects it with minion (F. mignon), but the base is, either way, the same; viz. Du. and G. minne, love. See Minion. [†]

MIOCENE, less recent, in geology. (Gk.) A coined word, signifying 'less recent.' — Gk. μειο-, for μειω, less; and καιν-ός, new, recent.

MIRACLE, a wonder, prodigy. (F., — L.) In very early use. M. E. miracle, Chaucer, C. T. 4897. The pl. miracles is in the A. S. Chron. an. 1137 (last line). — F. miracle. — Lat. miraculum, anything wonderful. Formed with suffixes -cu- and -lu- (= Aryan suffixes ka-, ra) from mira-ri, to wonder at. — Lat. mirus, wonderful (base smai-ro-, smi-ro-). — ✓ SMI, to smile, laugh, wonder at; see Smile. Cf. Skt. smi, to smile, whence smaya, wonder. Der. miracul-ous, Macb. iv. 3. 177, from F. miraculeux, 'miraculous' (Cot.), answering to a Lat. type *miracul-osus, not used; miracul-ous-ly, -ness. From Lat. mirari we have also mir-ags, mirr-or.

MIRAGE, an optical illusion. (F., — L.) Modern. — F. mirage, an optical illusion by which very distant objects appear close at hand; in use in 1809 (Littre). — F. mirer, to look at. — Low Lat. mirare, to behold. — Lat. mirari, to wonder at. See Miracle, Mirror.

MIRE, deep mud. (Scand.) M. E. mire, myre; Chaucer, C. T. 510; myre, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 70, l. 18; mire, Will. of Falerne, 3507. — Icel. mýrr, mod. mýri, a bog, swamp. + Swed. myra, a bog, marsh. + Dan. myr, myre, a marsh. + O. Du. moer, 'mire, dirt, or mudd;' Hexham. + O. H. G. mios, M. H. G. mies, moss, swamp.

β. Fick (iii. 241) refers Icel. mýrr and O. H. G. mios to a Teut. type MUSA, a swamp, a mossy place, a derivative from the type MUSA, whence E. moss; see Moss. Thus the sense is 'mossy ground,' bog, swamp, deep mud. ¶ There seems to be no reason for connecting it with mere; but see Moor (1). I cannot find any authority for an alleged A. S. mýre, mire. Der. mire, vb., Much Ado, iv. i. 135; mir-y, Tam. Shrew, iv. i. 77.

MIRROR, a looking-glass. (F., — L.) M. E. mirour, myroure (with one r); P. Plowman, B. xi. 8. — O. F. mirer, later miroir, 'a myrror;' Cot. This form Burguy equates to a Lat. type *miratorium, not found. Evidently from the Low Lat. mirare, to behold. — Lat. mirari, to wonder at. See Miracle.

MIRTH, merriment, pleasure, jolity. (C.) M. E. mirthe, Chaucer, C. T. 775. — A. S. myrgð, myrð, mirkð, mirigð, mirth, Grein, ii. 271. Allied to A. S. merg, merry. Not a true A. S. word, but of Celtic origin; cf. Gael. miréadh, play, frolic, mirth, miréadh, mirth; Irish miréog, Gael. miréag, a sporting, frolic. See Merry. Der. mirth-ful, mirth-ful-ly, -ness.

MIS- (1), prefix. (E. and Scand.) The A. S. prefix mis- occurs in mis-dæd, a misdeed, and in other compounds. It answers to Du., Dan., and Icel. mis-, Swed. miss-, G. miss-; Goth. missa- as in missaðs, a misdeed. Hence the verb to miss; see Miss (1). It is sometimes Scand., as in mis-take. And see Mis- (2).

MIS- (2), prefix. (F., — L.) Not to be confused with mis- (1). The proper old spelling is mes-, as in O. F. mes-chief, mischief. The comparison of this with Span. menos-cabo, diminution, Port. menos-cabo, contempt, &c. shews that this prefix undoubtedly arose from Lat. minus, less, used as a depreciatory prefix. At the same time, Scheler's observation is just, that the number of F. words beginning with mé- (O. F. mes-) was considerably increased by the influence of the G. prefix miss- (see above) with which it was easily confused. Clear examples of this F. prefix occur in mis-adventure, mis-alliance, mis-chance, mis-chief, mis-count, mis-creant.

MISADVENTURE, ill luck. (F., — L.) M. E. misaventure; spelt mesaventure, King Horn, ed. Lumby, l. 710. — O. F. mesaventure (Burguy). — O. F. mes-, prefix (— Lat. minus); and F. aventure, adventure. See Mis- (2) and Adventure.

MISALLIANCE, an improper alliance. (F., — L.) A late word; added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. — F. mésalliance. See Mis- (2) and Ally.

MISANTHROPE, a hater of mankind. (Gk.) 'I am misanthropos;' Timon, iv. 3. 53. — Gk. μισάνθρωπος, adj., hating mankind. — Gk. μίσ-ειν, to hate, from μῖσος, hatred; and ἄνθρωπος, a man. See Anthropology. Der. misanthrop-ic, misanthrop-ic-al, misanthrop-ist, misanthrop-y (Gk. μισανθρωπία).

MISAPPLY, to apply amiss. (Hybrid; F., — L.; with E. prefix.) In Shak. Romeo, ii. 3. 21. From Mis- (1) and Apply. Der. mis-applic-al-ion.

MISAPPREHEND, to apprehend amiss. (Hybrid; E. and L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. From Mis- (1) and Apprehend. Der. misapprehens-ion.

MISAPPROPRIATE, to appropriate amiss. (Hybrid; E. and L.) Late; not in Johnson. From Mis- (1) and Appropriate. Der. misappropriat-ion.

MISARRANGE, to arrange amiss. (Hybrid; E. and F.) From Mis- (1) and Arrange.

MISBECOME, not to suit. (E.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 778; and in Palsgrave. From Mis- (1) and Become.

MISBEHAVE, to behave amiss. (E.) In Shak. Romeo, iii. 3. 143; and in Palsgrave. From Mis- (1) and Behave. Der. mis-behav-iour, spelt mysbehaviour in Palsgrave; see Behaviour.

MISBELIEVE, to believe amiss. (E.) M. E. misbeleuen, Gower, C. A. ii. 152, l. 5. From Mis- (1) and Believe. Der. misbelief, spelt mysbylyefe, Pricke of Conscience, 5521; misbeleue, St. Katharine, 348.

MISCALL, to abuse, revile. (Hybrid; E. and Scand.) In Spenser, F. Q. iv. 8. 24. From Mis- (1) and Call.

MISCALCULATE, to calculate amiss. (Hybrid; E. and L.) Late. In Johnson. From Mis- (1) and Calculate. Der. miscalculat-ion.

MISCARRY, to be unsuccessful, to fail, to bring forth prematurely. (Hybrid; E. and F.) In Shak. Meas. for Meas. iii. i. 217. M. E. miscarien. 'Yet had I leuer dye than I sawe them myscarye to fore myn eyen;' Caxton, tr. of Reynard Fox, ed. Arber, p. 79, l. 10. From Mis- (1) and Carry. Der. miscarri-age.

MISCELLANEOUS, various, belonging to or treating of various subjects. (L.) 'An elegant and miscellaneous author;' Sir T. Browne, Works, b. i. c. 8. part 6. — Lat. miscellaneus, miscellaneous, varied (by change of -us to -ous, as in arduous, &c.). — Lat. miscellus, mixed. — Lat. miscere, to mix. See Mix. Der. miscellaneous-ly, -ness. Also miscellany, which appears to be due to Lat. neut. pl. miscellanea, various things. 'As a miscellany-woman, [I would] invent new tires;' Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, iv. 1 (Phantaste's long speech).

MISCHANCE, mishap, ill luck. (F., — L.) M. E. meschance, Rob. of Glouc. p. 137, l. 14. — O. F. meschance, 'a mischiefe, or mischance;' Cot. See Mis- (2) and Chance.

MISCHIEF, an ill result, misfortune, damage, injury, evil. (F., — L.) M. E. meschief; P. Plowman, B. prol. 67. Opposed in M. E. to bonchief, i. e. a good result. 'Good happes and bonchief, as wel as yuel happes and meschief;' Trevisa, i. 87, l. 19. — O. F. meschief, a bad result, misadventure, damage. Cf. Span. menos-cabo, diminution, loss; Port. menos-cabo, contempt; which are varied forms of the same word. From Mis- (2) and Chief. (The Lat. words in the compound are minus and caput.) Der. mischievous, a coined word, As You Like It, ii. 7. 64; mischievous-ly, -ness.

MISCONCEIVE, to conceive amiss. (Hybrid; E. and F., -L.) 'He which that misconceiveth oft misdemeeth;' Chaucer, C. T. 10284. A coined word. From Mis- (1) and Conceive. Der. misconception.

MISCONDUCT, ill conduct. (Hybrid; E. and L.) It occurs in the Spectator (Todd's Johnson, no reference). From Mis- (1) and Conduct. Der. misconduct, verb.

MISCONSTRUE, to interpret amiss. (Hybrid; E. and L.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. ii. 2. 197. From Mis- (1) and Construe. Der. misconstruct-ion.

MISCOUNT, to count wrongly. (F., -L.) M. E. miscounten, Gower, C. A. i. 147, l. 12. - O. F. mesconter, to miscount (Burguy). From Mis- (2) and Count.

MISCREANT, a vile fellow, wretch. (F., -L.) Orig. an unbeliever, infidel; see Trench, Select Glossary. Formerly also used as an adjective. 'Al miscreant [unbelieving] paynyms;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 774 a. 'This miscreant [unbeliever] now thus baptised;' Frith's Works, p. 91, col. 1. - O. F. mescreant, 'miscreant, misbelieving;' Cot. β. The prefix mes- answers to Lat. minus, less, used in a bad sense; see Mis- (2). By comparing O. F. mescreant with Ital. miscredente, incredulous, heathen, we at once see that F. creant is from Lat. credent-, stem of pres. part. of credere, to believe; see Creed. And see Recreant.

MISDATE, to date amiss. (Hybrid; E. and F., -L.) 'Oh! how misdated on their flattering tombs!' Young's Night Thoughts, Night v. l. 777. From Mis- (1) and Date.

MISDEED, a bad deed. (E.) M. E. misdede, Ancren Riwe, p. 124, l. 22. - A. S. misdedd, Grein, ii. 255. + Du. misdaad. + Goth. missadeds. + G. missethat, O. H. G. missitaat. From Mis- (1) and Deed.

MISDEEM, to judge amiss. (E.) M. E. misdemen, Chaucer, C. T. 10284. From Mis- (1) and Deem. (Icel. misdama.)

MISDEMEANOUR, ill conduct. (Hybrid; E. and F., -L.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. ii. 3. 106. From Mis- (1) and Demeanour. ¶ It is possible that the prefix is French; see Mis- (2). But I find no proof of it.

MISDIRECT, to direct amiss. (Hybrid; E. and L.) Added by Todd to Johnson. From Mis- (1) and Direct. Der. misdirection.

MISDO, to do amiss. (E.) M. E. misdon, misdo; P. Plowman, B. iii. 122. We find 'yfe vel mis doeb' as a gloss to 'male agit' in the O. Northumb. glosses of John, iii. 20. + Du. misdoen. + G. misstun. From Mis- (1) and Do. Der. misdo-er, M. E. misdoer, mysdoer, Wyclif, 1 Pet. ii. 12. And see misdeed.

MISEMPLY, to employ amiss. (Hybrid; E. and F., -L.) In Dryden, Absalom, l. 613. From Mis- (1) and Employ. Der. misemployment.

MISER, an avaricious man, niggard. (L.) It sometimes means merely 'a wretched creature;' Spenser, F. Q. ii. 1. 8. See Trench, Select Glossary. - Lat. miser, wretched. Cf. Ital. and Span. misero, (1) wretched, (2) avaricious. Prob. connected with Gk. μῖσος, hatred; Curtius, ii. 225. Der. miser-ly; miser-y, M. E. misérie, Chaucer, C. T. 14012, from O. F. miserie (Littre, mod. F. misère), which from Lat. miseria, wretchedness; also miser-able, q. v. [†]

MISERABLE, wretched. (F., -L.) Skelton has miserably and miserableness; Why Come Ye Nat to Court, 865, 1029. - F. miserable, 'miserable;' Cot. - Lat. miserabilis, pitiable. - Lat. miserari, to pity. - Lat. miser, wretched; see Miser. Der. miserabl-y, miserable-ness.

MISFORTUNE, ill fortune. (Hybrid; E. and F., -L.) In the Bible of 1551, Nehem. i. 3. From Mis- (1) and Fortune. ¶ Or the prefix may be French; but I find no proof of it.

MISGIVE, to fail, be filled with doubt. (E.) In Shak. Julius, iii. 1. 145. From Mis- (1) and Give. Der. misgiv-ing.

MISGOVERN, to govern amiss. (Hybrid; E. and F., -L.) In Shak. Rich. II, v. 2. 5; and in Palsgrave. From Mis- (1) and Govern. Der. misgovernment, Much Ado, iv. 1. 100.

MISGUIDE, to guide wrongly. (Hybrid; E. and F., -L.) M. E. misguide, Gower, C. A. iii. 373, l. 14; where it is contrasted with guide. Also misgyen, Chaucer, C. T. 14451. From Mis- (1) and Guide. ¶ The prefix does not seem to be French. Der. misguid-ance.

MISHAP, ill hap. (Hybrid; E. and Scand.) In Prompt. Parv. The verb misshappen, to mishap, fall out ill, occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 1646. From Mis- (1) and Hap.

MISINFORM, to inform amiss. (Hybrid; E. and F., -L.) M. E. misinformen, Gower, C. A. i. 178, l. 19. From Mis- (1) and Inform. Der. misinform-at-ion.

MISINTERPRET, to interpret amiss. (Hybrid; E. and F., -L.) In Shak. Rich. II, iii. 1. 18. From Mis- (1) and Interpret. Der. misinterpret-at-ion.

MISJUDGE, to judge amiss. (Hybrid; E. and F., -L.) 'And therefore no more mysse-judge any manne;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 952 h. From Mis- (1) and Judge. Der. mis-judg-ment.

MISLAY, to lay in a wrong place, lose. (E.) 'The mis-lai-er of a meere-stone [boundary-stone] is to blame;' Bacon, Essay lvi, Of Judicature. From Mis- (1) and Lay. (Icel. misleggja.)

MISLEAD, to lead astray. (E.) 'Misleader [misleader] of the papacie;' Gower, C. A. i. 261. - A. S. misledan, to mislead, seduce (Bosworth). From Mis- (1) and Lead, verb.

MISLIKE, to dislike. (E.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. ii. 1. 1. M. E. misliken, to displease (usually impersonal); Will. of Palerne, 2039. - A. S. mislican, to displease; Exod. xxi. 8. Der. mislike, sb., 3 Hen. VI, iv. 1. 24.

MISNAME, to name amiss. (E.) In Skelton, A Replycation, l. 59. From Mis- (1) and Name.

MISNOMER, a wrong name. (F., -L.) 'Misnomer, French Law-Term, the using of one name or term for another;' Phillips, ed. 1706. It properly means 'a misnaming.' Also in Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691, where the prefix is said to be the F. mes-, which is probably correct. The E. word prob. answers to an O. Law-French mesnommer. - O. F. mes- (= Lat. minus), badly; and nommer, to name, from Lat. nominare, to name. See Mis- (2) and Nominate.

MISPLACE, to place amiss. (Hybrid; E. and F., -L.) 'In As You Like It, i. 2. 37. From Mis- (1) and Place. Der. misplace-ment.

MISPRINT, to print wrongly. (Hybrid; E. and F., -L.) 'By misse-writing or by mysse-pryntynge;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 772 b. From Mis- (1) and Print. Der. misprint, sb.

MISPRISE, MISPRIZE, to slight, undervalue. (F., -L.) In As You Like It, i. 1. 177. Spenser has the sb. mesprise = contempt; F. Q. iii. 9. 9. - O. F. mespriser, 'to disesteem, contemn;' Cot. - O. F. mes- (= Lat. minus), badly; and Low Lat. pretiare, to prize, esteem, from Lat. pretium, a price. See Mis- (2) and Prize.

MISPRISION, a mistake, neglect. (F., -L.) See Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691. He says: 'misprision of clerks (Anno 8 Hen. VI. c. 15) is a neglect of clerks in writing or keeping records... Misprision also signifies a mistaking (Anno 14 Edw. III. stat. 1. cap. 6). - O. F. mesprison, 'misprision, error, offence, a thing done, or taken, amiss;' Cot. β. This O. F. mesprison has the same sense and source as mod. F. méprise, a mistake (Littre). It is written mispriso in Low Latin (Ducange); but this is only the O. F. word turned into Latin. γ. From O. F. mes- = Lat. minus, badly; and Low Lat. prensonem, acc. of prensis, a taking, contracted form of Lat. prehensio, a seizing. The latter is from Lat. prehensus, pp. of prehendere, to take. See Mis- (2) and Prison. ¶ 1. Misprision is, in fact, a bad form; it should be misprison. 2. It is tolerably certain that misprison was ignorantly confused with misprise, and wrongly used in the sense of contempt. Thus Blount, in the article already cited, says: 'misprison of treason is a neglect or light account made of treason;' and he derives the word from F. mespris, contempt. This easy error has probably resulted in false law.

MISPRONOUNCE, to pronounce amiss. (Hybrid; E. and F., -L.) 'They mis-pronounced, and I mislik'd;' Milton, Apology for Smectymnus (R.) From Mis- (1) and Pronounce. Der. mispronunci-at-ion.

MISQUOTE, to quote amiss, misinterpret. (Hybrid; E. and F., -L.) In Shak. 1 Hen. IV, v. 2. 13. From Mis- (1) and Quote. Der. misquot-at-ion.

MISREPRESENT, to represent amiss. (Hybrid; E. and F., -L.) In Milton, Samson, 124. From Mis- (1) and Represent. Der. misrepresent-at-ion.

MISRULE, want of rule, disorder. (Hybrid; E. and F., -L.) Gower has it as a verb. 'That any king himself misrule;' C. A. iii. 170, l. 5. Stow mentions 'the lord of misrule' under the date 1552 (R.); the name does not seem to be in very early use, nor to be a F. word. From Mis- (1) and Rule.

MISS (1), to fail to hit, omit, feel the want of. (E.) M. E. missen, Will. of Palerne, 1016. Rather a Scand. than an E. word, but the prefix mis-, which is closely connected with it, is sufficiently common in A. S. - A. S. missan or missian (rare). 'Py læs þe him missee,' lest aught escape his notice, or, go wrong with him; Canons under King Edgar, 32; in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, ii. 250. A weak verb, formed from an old sb. signifying 'change,' or 'error,' or 'failure,' or 'lack,' preserved in A. S. only as the prefix mis-, signifying amiss or wrongly. + Du. missen, to miss; from mis, sb., an error, mistake. Cf. mis, adv., amiss; mis-, as prefix, amiss. + Icel. missa, to miss, lose; mis, or á mis, adv., amiss; mis-, prefix. + Dan. miste (for missee), to lose; mis-, prefix. + Swed. mista (for missa), to lose; miste, adv., wrongly, amiss; missa-, prefix. + Goth. misso, adv., reciprocally, interchangeably; missa-, prefix, wrongly. + M. H. G. missen, O. H. G. missan, to miss; O. H. G. mis or missi, variously; O. H. G. missa, prefix; M. H. G. misse, an error. β. The general Teutonic types are MISSYA, verb, to miss, MISSA, adv., reciprocally; from MISSA, change, lack, failure, error (Fick, iii. 238). The last stands for mid-sa, by assimilation (answering to Aryan mit-sa), formed with the suffix -sa from the base MID (Aryan MIT). γ. This base appears in A. S. miðan, to conceal, avoid, dissimulate, escape notice (Grein, ii. 250); O. H. G. midan, G. meiden, to avoid (a strong verb). Allied to Skt. mith-as, reciprocally (= Goth. misso), mith-yá, falsely, untruly, wrongly, amiss; from the root MITH, which in Vedic Skt. means 'to rival' (Benfey), p. 706. See further in Fick, i. 722, 723. Der. miss, sb., M. E. misse, a fault; 'to mende my misse' = to repair my fault, Will. of Palerne, l. 532; this sb. is, theoretically, older than the verb, but does not appear in A. S. Also miss-ing.

MISS (2), a young woman, a girl. (F., -L.) Merely a contraction from Mistress, q. v. One of the earliest instances in dramatic writing occurs in the introduction of Miss Prue as a character in Congreve's Love for Love. The earliest example appears to be the following: 'she being taken to be the Earle of Oxford's misse, as at this time they began to call lewd women;' Evelyn's Diary, Jan. 9, 1662. Thus Shak. has: 'this is Mistress Anne Page,' where we should now say 'Miss Anne Page;' Merry Wives, i. 1. 197.

MISSAL, a mass-book. (L.) Not in early use; the old term was miss-book, M. E. messebok, Havelok, 186. In Minshew, ed. 1627. In Sherwood's Index to Cotgrave we find E. missal, given as equivalent to O. F. messel, missel; but Cotgrave himself explains the O. F. words as 'masse-book.' The E. word is rather taken directly from the familiar Latin term than borrowed from O. F. = Low Lat. missale, a missal. = Low Lat. missa, the mass. See further under Mass (2).

MISSEL-THRUSH, MISTLE-THRUSH, the name of a kind of thrush. (E.) So called because it feeds on the berries of the mistle-toe. The name is prob. old, though not early recorded. 'We meet in Aristotle with one kind of thrush [ἔτοβρος] called the miselthrush, or feeder upon miseltoe;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 6. § 21 (part 3). + G. mistel-drossel, a mistle-thrush; from mistel, mistletoe, and drossel, a thrush. See Mistletoe and Thrush.

MISSHAPE, to shape amiss. (E.) Chiefly in the pp. misshaped, 3 Hen. VI, iii. 2. 170; or misshapen, Temp. v. 268. M. E. misshapen, pp., spelt mysshape (with loss of final n), P. Plowman, B. vii. 95. From Mis- (1) and Shape. + O. Du. misscheppen, to misshape, used by Vondel; Oudemans. + G. misschafften, to misshape (rare).

MISSILE, that may be thrown; a missile weapon. (L.) Properly an adj., now chiefly used as a sb. Taken directly from Lat. rather than through the F. Cotgrave gives 'feu missile, a squib or other firework thrown,' but the word is not in Littré, and probably not common. 'His missile weapon was a lying tongue;' P. Fletcher, The Purple Island (R.) = Lat. missilis, adj., that can be thrown; the neut. missile is used to mean a missile weapon (telum being understood). = Lat. missus, pp. of mittere, to throw. β. The orig. sense is thought to be 'to whirl'; cf. Lithuan. mesti, to throw, to wind yarn, pres. t. metu, I throw; Russ. metate, to throw, cast, cast lots. = ✓MAT, to whirl, to throw; cf. Skt. math, to churn, to agitate. We may particularly note the O. Celtic word mataris or matara, a javelin, preserved in Livy, vii. 24; Caesar, Bell. Gall. i. 26. See Fick, iii. 710. Der. From Lat. mittere are also derived ad-mit, com-mit, e-mit, im-mit, inter-mit, manu-mit, o-mit, per-mit, re-mit, sub-mit, trans-mit, with their derivatives; from the pp. miss-us are also miss-ion, q. v., miss-ive, q. v., dis-miss, e-miss-ar-y, pro-miss-or-y; com-pro-mise, de-mise, pre-mise, pre-mises, pro-mise; &c.

MISSION, a sending, an embassy. (L.) In Shak. Troil. iii. 3. 189. [The O. F. mission merely means 'expence, disbursement;' Cot.] Formed, by analogy with F. words in -ion, from Lat. missionem, acc. of missio, a sending. = Lat. missus, pp. of mittere, to send. See Missile. Der. mission-er, a missionary, Dryden, Hind and Panther, ii. 565; later mission-ar-y, Tatler, no. 270, Dec. 30, 1710.

MISSIVE, a thing sent. (F., -L.) Used by Shak. to mean 'a messenger,' Macb. i. 5. 7. = O. F. missive, 'a letter missive, a letter sent;' Cot. Coined, with suffix -ive (= Lat. -ivus), from Lat. missus, pp. of mittere, to send; see Missile.

MISSPEND, to spend ill, to squander. (Hybrid; E. and L.) The pres. t. misspene (for misspende) occurs as early as in Layamon, l. 13483, later text. From A. S. mis-, prefix, wrongly, amiss; and A. S. spendan, occurring in the compounds dispendan, forspendan; see Sweet's A. S. Reader. But the A. S. spendan is not a true E. word; it is only borrowed from Lat. expendere. See Mis- (1) and Spend.

MIST, watery vapour, fine rain. (E.) M. E. mist, P. Plowman, A. prol. 88; B. prol. 214. = A. S. mist, gloom, darkness; Grein, ii. 256. + Icel. mistr, mist. + Swed. mist, foggy weather at sea. + Du. mist, fog. + G. mist, dung (certainly the same word, the difference in sense being explicable from the root). + Goth. maihstus, dung. β. The final -st is a noun-ending, as in bla-st from blow, and mist stands for mih-st or mig-st, from the base mig (Aryan migh, Skt. mih) which appears in Lithuan. mig-la, mist (Nesselmann), Russ. mgla (for mig-la), mist, vapour, Gk. δ-μίχ-λη, mist, fog, Skt. mih-ira, a cloud, megh-a, a cloud. γ. All from MIGH (Teutonic MIG), to sprinkle, to urine; appearing in Skt. mih (for migh), to sprinkle, Lat. ming-ere, meiere, Du. mijgen, Icel. miga, A. S. migan, all with the sense of Lat. mingere. See Fick, iii. 239. Der. mist-y, A. S. mist-ig (Grein); mist-i-ness; also mizzle, q. v. [+]

MISTAKE, to take amiss, err. (Scand.) M. E. mistaken, Rom. of the Rose, l. 1540. = Icel. mistaka, to take by mistake, to make a slip. = Icel. mis-, cognate with A. S. mis-, prefix; and taka, to take. See Mis- (1) and Take. Der. mistake, sb., mistak-en, mis-tak-en-ly.

MISTER, MR., a title of address to a man. (F., -L.) The contraction Mr. occurs on the title-page of the first folio edition of Shakespeare (1623); but it is probably to be read as Master. Cotgrave explains monsieur by 'sir, or master.' It is difficult to trace the first use of mister, but it does not appear to be at all of early use, and is certainly nothing but a corruption of master or maister, due to the influence of the corresponding title of mistress. See Master, Mistress. β. Richardson's supposition that it is connected with M. E. mister, a trade, is as absurd as it is needless; notwithstanding the oft-quoted 'what mister wight,' Spenser, F. Q. i. 9. 23. ¶ It may be remarked that M. E. mister is from O. F. mestier (F. métier), Lat. ministerium, and is therefore a doublet of ministry. Also that mistry, in the sense of trade or occupation, also answers to ministry, though usually misspelt mystery. See Mystery (2).

MISTERM, to term or name amiss. (Hybrid; E. and F., -L.) In Shak. Romeo, iii. 3. 21. From Mis- (2) and Term.

MISTIME, to time amiss. (E.) M. E. mistimen, to happen amiss, Ancren Riwle, p. 200, note e. = A. S. mistiman, to happen amiss, turn out ill (Lye). From Mis- (1) and Time.

MISTLETOE, a parasitic plant. (E.) In Shak. Titus, ii. 3. 95. Scarcely to be found in M. E., but it must have existed. = A. S. misteltán. 'Viscarago, misteltan' (sic); Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Herbarum; in Wright's Vocab. i. 31, col. 2. [The a is of course long; cf. E. stone with A. S. stán, &c.] This should have produced mistletoe, but the final n (ne) was dropped, probably because the M. E. tone (better toon) meant 'toes,' which gave a false impression that the final n was a plural-ending, and unnecessary. + Icel. mistel-teinn, the mistletoe. β. The final element is the easier to explain; it simply means 'twig.' Cf. A. S. tán, a twig (Grein), Icel. teinn, Du. teen, M. H. G. zain, Goth. tains, a twig, Dan. teen, Swed. ten, a spindle; all from a Teut. type TAINA, a twig, rod, which Fick (iii. 121) thinks may be connected with Tin, q. v. γ. The former element is A. S. mistel, which could be used alone to mean 'mistletoe,' though it was also called æc-mistel (oak-mistle), to distinguish it from eorð-mistel (earth-mistle), a name sometimes given to wild basil or calamint; see Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms. In Danish, the mistletoe is called either mistel or mistelteen. In Swed. and G. the mistletoe is simply mistel.

δ. The word mist-el is clearly a mere dimin. of mist, which in E. means 'vapour' or fog, in A. S. 'gloom,' but in G. has the sense of 'dung.' The reason for the name is not quite clear; it may be because the seed is deposited by birds that eat the berries, or it may rather refer to the slime or bird-lime in the berries; cf. 'mistel, glew' [glue], Hexham's Du. Dict.; O. Du. mistel, bird-lime. See further under Mist. ¶ Since mist-el may take also the sense of 'gloom,' we see why Balder, the sun-god, was fabled to have been slain by a twig of the mistletoe. The sun, at mid-winter, is obscured; and we still connect mistletoe with Christmas. This sense of the word originated the legend; we must not reverse the order by deriving the sense from the story to which it gave rise. Der. mistel-thrush, q. v.

MISTRESS, a lady at the head of a household. (F., -L.) Also written Mrs., and called Missis. In Shak. Macb. iii. 5. 6. M. E. maistrasse, Chaucer, C. T. 10691. = O. F. maistrasse, 'a mistress, dame;' Cot. (Mod. F. maîtresse.) Formed with F. suffix -esse (= Lat. -issa, Gk. -ισσα) from O. F. maistre, a master; see Master. Der. mistrust-ship, Titus, iv. 4. 40.

MISTRUST, to regard with suspicion. (Scand.) M. E. mistrust, Coventry Plays, ed. Halliwell, 126 (Stratmann); mistrust, Bruce, x. 327 (in Hart's edition, see the footnote); mistruste, Chaucer, C. T. 12303. Rather Scand. than E. See Mis- (1) and Trust. Der. mistrust, sb.; mistrust-ful, 3 Hen. VI, iv. 2. 8; mistrust-ful-ly, -ness.

MISUNDERSTAND, to understand amiss. (E.) M. E. misunderstanden, Rob. of Glouc. p. 42, l. 14. From Mis- (1) and Understand. Der. misunderstand-ing.

MISUSE, to use amiss. (Hybrid; E. and F., -L.) 'That misuseth the myght and the power that is yeven him;' Chaucer. C. T.

(Melibeus), Group B. 3040 (Six-text); Gower, C. A. ii. 279, l. 12. & From Mis- (1) and Use. Der. misuse, sb., 1 Hen. IV, i. 1. 43.

MITÉ (1), a very small insect. (E.) M. E. mite. Chaucer, C. T. 6142. — A. S. mite. 'Tomus, maða, mite;' Ælfric's Gloss., Nom. Insectorum, in Wright's Vocab. i. 24. + Low G. mite, a mite. + O. H. G. mīzā, a mite, midge, fly. β. The word means 'cutter' or 'biter,' from the Teut. root MIT, to cut small; whence Goth. maitan, to cut, Icel. meita, to cut, also Icel. meitill, G. meissel, a chisel, G. messer, a knife. This appears to be a secondary root from ✓MI, to diminish; Fick, iii. 239. See Minish. Der. mit-y.

MITÉ (2), a very small portion. (O. Du.) M. E. mite; 'not worth a mite'; Chaucer, C. T. 1558. 'A myte [small coin] that he offereþ;' P. Plowman, C. xiv. 97. — O. Du. mijt, a small coin, the sixth part of a doit; mite, myte, a small coin, worth a third of a penning, according to some, or a penning and a half, according to others; anything small; niet eener myte, not worth a mite (Oudemans). From the Teut. base MIT, to cut small; see Mite (1). ¶ Ultimately from the same root as minute. [†]

MITIGATE, to alleviate. (L.) 'Breake the ordinance or mitigat it;' Tyndall's Works, p. 316, col. 1. — Lat. mitigatus, pp. of mitigare, to make gentle. — Lat. mit-, stem of mitis, soft, gentle; with suffix -ig-, for agere, to make. Root uncertain. Der. mitigation, M. E. mitigacioun, P. Plowman, B. v. 477, from F. mitigation, 'mitigation,' Cot.; mitigat-or; mitigat-ive, from O. F. mitigatif, 'mitigative,' Cot.; also mitiga-ble, Lat. mitigabilis, from mitiga-re.

MITRE, a head-dress, esp. for a bishop. (F., — L., — Gk.) 'Thy mytrede bisshopes' = thy mitred bishops; P. Plowman, C. v. 193. 'On his mytere,' referring to a bishop; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 302, l. 2. — O. F. mitre, 'a bishop's miter;' Cot. — Lat. mītra, a cap. — Gk. μίτρα, a belt, girdle, head-band, fillet, turban. β. Perhaps allied to Gk. μῖτρος, a thread of the woof, from ✓MAT, to whirl; cf. Skt. math, to churn; see Fick, i. 710.

MITTEN, a covering for the hand. (F., — G.?) M. E. mitaine; spelt mitaine, Chaucer, C. T. 12307; myteyne, P. Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, l. 428. — O. F. mitaine; Cot. gives: 'mitaines, mittains, winter-gloves.' β. Of disputed origin; if the orig. sense be 'half-glove,' it may be connected with M. H. G. mittemo, mittamo, sb., the middle, orig. 'mid-most,' a superlative form from mitte, adj., mid, middle; see Mid, Middle. γ. On the other hand, it may have been of Celtic origin. We find Gael. miotag, Irish miotog, a mitten; Gael. and Irish mutan, a muff, a thick glove. Also Irish mutog, a stump, a hand or glove without fingers; Gael. mutach, short, thick, and blunt; which reminds us of Lat. mutulus.

MIX, to mingle, confuse. (E.) In Shak. 2 Hen. IV, v. 2. 46. Rich. cites 'mixed with faith' from the Bible of 1561, Heb. iv. 2. But in earlier books it is extremely rare; Stratmann cites the pp. mixid from Songs and Carols, ed. Wright, no. VI. Mix is a corruption of misk (just as ax is another form of ask); this appears in the A. S. miscan, to misk or mix, not a common word. 'And þonan miscap and metgaþ ælcum be his gewyrhtum' = and thence He [God] mixes and metres out to each according to his deserts; Ælfric, tr. of Boethius, cap. xxix. § 9, last line (lib. iv. pr. 6). Notwithstanding the close similarity to Lat. miscere, we may consider it as merely cognate with it, not borrowed, the word being very widely spread. (But the derived word mixture is of course of Lat. origin.) That the word is really E. is supported by the derivative mask; see Maash. + G. mischen, to mix; O. H. G. miskan. + W. mysgu, to mix; cymmysgu, to mix together. + Gael. measg, to mingle, mix, stir; Irish measgaim, I mix, mingle, stir, move. + Russ. mieshate, to mix. + Lithuan. maiszyti, to mix (Nesselmann). + Lat. miscere. + Gk. μίσγειν. Cf. Skt. mīgra, mixed. β. All from a base MIKSH, to mingle, which is obviously an extension (perhaps an inchoative form) of ✓MIK, to mingle, appearing in Gk. μύρωμι (for μίσρωμι), I mix. See Curtius, i. 417; Fick, i. 725. Der. mix-er, com-mix; also mixture, Romeo, iv. 3. 21, Sir T. More, Works, p. 83, a from Lat. mixtura, a mixing, mixture, formed like mixturus, fut. part. of miscere.

MIZEN, MIZZEN, the hindmost of the fore and aft sails, in a three-masted vessel. (F., — Ital., — L.) Spelt misen in Minshew, ed. 1627, and in Florio, ed. 1598. — O. F. misaine, which Cotgrave defines as 'the foresale of a ship.' — Ital. mezzana, 'a saile in a ship called the poope or misen-saile;' Florio, ed. 1598. Cf. mezzano, 'a meane or counterterour in singing, a meane man, between great and little;' id. β. Perhaps the sense was 'middling-sized,' with respect to the old make of it; or from its mid position between bowsprit and main-mast, for it was once a fore-sail. The reason for the name is uncertain, but the etymology is clear. — Low Lat. medianus, middle, of middle size; whence also F. moyen, and E. mean (3). Extended from Lat. medius, middle; see Mid. Doublet, mean (3). Der. mizen-mast or mizzen-mast. [†]

MIZZLE, to rain in fine drops. (E.) 'As the miseling vpon the herbes, and as the droppes vpon the grasse;' Deut. xxxii. 2, in the Bible of 1551. 'Immoysturid with mislyng;' Skelton, Garland of Laurell, 698. Here mis-le plainly stands for mist-le, the frequentative of mist; i. e. the sense is 'to form vapour constantly.' For the loss of t, cf. our pronunciation of listen, glisten, whistle, gristle, &c. [†]

MNEMONICS, the science of assisting the memory. (Gk.) 'Mnemonicæ, precepts or rules, and common places to help the memory;' Phillips, ed. 1706. — Gk. μνημονικά, mnemonics; neut. pl. of μνημονικός, belonging to memory. — Gk. μνημονι-, crude form of μνήμων, mindful. — Gk. μνέομαι, I remember. — ✓MAN, to think; see Mind.

MOAN, a complaint, a low sound of pain. (E.) M. E. mone, Chaucer, C. T. 11232. This corresponds to an A. S. form mán, which does not appear with the modern sense; but the derived verb ménan, to moan, to lament, is common; see exx. in Grein, ii. 222. β. This A. S. verb passed into the M. E. menen, to moan; whence mened hire = bemoaned herself, made her complaint, P. Plowman, B. iii. 169. After a time this verb fell into disuse, and its place was supplied by the sb. form, used verbally. 'Than they of the towne began to mone;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 348. γ. Stratmann and others identify A. S. ménan, to moan, with A. S. ménan, to mean; see Mean (1). I doubt this identification; Grein records the verbs separately. Ettmüller refers A. S. ménan in both senses to A. S. mán, adj., evil, wicked, sb. evil, wickedness. δ. It seems right to refer A. S. ménan, to moan, to A. S. mán, wickedness; the difficulty is in the remarkable change of sense. Note, however, that the Icel. mein (cognate with A. S. mán, wickedness), means a hurt, harm, disease, sore, whence there is but a step to a moan as the expression of pain. Cf. Dan. meen, defect, blemish, harm, damage. ε. Fick refers A. S. mán, from a supposed Teut. type MAINA, to ✓MI, to change, deceive; iii. 237. Der. moan, verb, as explained above; also be-moan, q. v.

MOAT, a trench round a fort, filled with water. (F., — Teut.) M. E. mote, P. Plowman, B. v. 595. — O. F. mote, 'chaussée, levée, digue,' i. e. a causeway, embankment, dike; Roquefort. Just as in the case of dike and ditch, the word moat originally meant either the trench dug out, or the embankment thrown up; and in O. F. the usual sense was certainly an embankment, hill. It is therefore the same word as mod. F. motte, a mound, also a clod, or piece of turf. 'Motte, a clod, lumpe, round sodd, or turfe of earth; also, a little hill or high place; a fit seat for a fort or strong house; hence, also, such a fort, or house of earth; . . . a butt to shoot at;' Cotgrave. The orig. sense is clearly a sod or turf, such as is dug out, and thrown up into a mound; and the word is associated with earthen fortifications, whence it was transferred to such a trench as was used in fortification. Thus Shak. speaks of 'a moat defensive to a house;' Rich. II, ii. 1. 48; and in P. Plowman, the 'mote' is described as being 'the manere aboute,' i. e. all round the manor-house. Cf. also: 'Mothe, a little earthen fortresse, or strong house, built on a hill;' Cotgrave.

β. Of Teut. origin, but rarely found; it occurs, however, in the Bavarian mott, peat, esp. peat such as was dug up, burnt, and used for manure; whence motten, to burn peat; Schmeidler, Bavarian Dict., col. 1693. This Bavarian word is perhaps related to E. mud; see Mud. Cf. Du. mot, dust of turf; Ital. mota, mire, motta, a heap of earth, also a hollow; Span. mota, a mound; Irish, mota, a mound, moat. Der. moat-ed, Meas. for Meas. iii. 1. 277. [†]

MOB (1), a disorderly crowd. (L.) Used by Dryden, in pref. to Cleomenes, 1692; as cited in Nares. A contraction from mobile vulgus, 'I may note that the rabble first changed their title, and were called 'the mob' in the assemblies of this [The Green Ribbon] Club. It was their beast of burden, and called first mobile vulgus, but fell naturally into the contraction of one syllable, and ever since is become proper English;' North's Examen (1740), p. 574; cited in Trench, Study of Words. In the Hatton Correspondence, ed. E. M. Thompson (Camden Soc.), the editor remarks that mob is always used in its full form mobile throughout the volumes (see ii. 40, 99, 124, 156); but, as Mr. Thompson kindly pointed out to me, he has since noted that it occurs once in the short form mob, viz. at p. 216 of vol. ii. Thus, under the date 1690, we read that 'Lord Torrington is most miserably reproached by the mobiles' (ii. 156); and under the date 1695, that 'a great mob have been up in Holborn and Drury Lane' (ii. 216). And see Spectator, no. 135. — Lat. mobile, neut. of mobilis, moveable, fickle; mobile vulgus, the fickle multitude. See Mobile and Vulgar. Der. mob, verb.

MOB (2), a kind of cap. (Dutch.) 'Mob, a woman's night-cap;' Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. We also say mob-cap. — Du. mop-muts, a woman's night-cap; where muts means 'cap;' O. Du. mop, a woman's coif (Sewel). Cf. prov. E. mop, to muffle up (Halliwell). Probably connected with Muff and Muffle.

MOBILE, easily moved, moveable. (F., — L.) 'Fyxt or els mobyll;' Skelton, Why Come Ye Nat to Courte, l. 522. The expression 'mobil people' occurs, according to Richardson, in The Testament of Love, b. i. — F. mobile, 'movable'; Cot. — Lat. mobilis, moveable (put for mobilis). — Lat. movere, to move; see Move. Der. mobility, from F. mobilité, which from Lat. acc. mobilitatem; also mobilité, from mod. F. mobiliser; hence mobilité-at-ion.

MOCCASIN, MOCCASSIN, MOCASSIN, a shoe of deer-skin, &c. (N. American Indian.) Spelt moccasin in Fenimore Cooper, The Pioneers, ch. i. A North-American Indian word. Webster gives: 'Algonquin makisin.'

MOCK, to deride. (F. — Teut.) M. E. mokken, Prompt. Parv. — O. F. mocquer, later moquer. 'Se moquer, to mock, flowt, frumpe, scoffe'; Cot. From a Teutonic source, of which we have ample evidence in G. mucken, to mumble, mutter, grumble; O. Swed. mucka, to mumble (Ihre); Low G. mukken, to put the mouth in a position for speaking, to mumble (Bremen Wörterbuch); O. Du. mocken, to mumble (Kilian), 'to move one's cheeks in chawing' (Hexham). From the sense of moving the mouth in grumbling to that of mocking is an easy step; cf. Ital. mocca, 'a mowing mouth', moccare, 'to mock'; Florio.

β. All from the imitative root MUK, an extension of MU, to make a muttered sound. This root MUK also appears as MAK, to make derisive sounds with the lips, whence Lat. maccus, a buffoon; Gk. μῦκος, mockery; Gael. mag, to scoff, deride; Irish magaire, a scoffer, jester; W. mocio, to mimic. γ. The roots MAK, MUK, being imitative, are unaffected by Grimm's law. From the base MU we have also Motto, Mumble, Mutter, Mow (3). The Du. moppen, to pout, is a variant of mock; see Mope. Der. mock, sb.; mock-er; mock-ery, Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 100 (R.), from F. moquerie; mock-ing, mock-ing-bird. [+]

MODE, a manner, measure, rule, fashion. (F. — L.) 'In the first figure and in the third mode,' Sir T. More, Works, p. 504 d; where it is used in a logical sense. — F. mode, 'manner, sort, fashion'; Cot. — Lat. modum, acc. of modus, a measure, manner, kind, way. β. Akin to Gk. μέτρος, a plan, μέτρον, I intend, plan; from ✓MAD (Teut. MAT), to measure, to plan, best exemplified in E. mete; cf. Icel. máti, a mode, manner, way; see Meté. γ. This ✓MAD is merely a secondary root from ✓MA, to measure; cf. Skt. mā, to measure, whence also E. measure, moon, &c. Der. mod-al, a coined word from Lat. mod-us; mod-ish, coined from F. mode; mod-el, q. v., mod-er-ate, q. v., mod-ern, q. v., mod-est, q. v.; mod-ic-um, q. v., mod-i-fy, q. v.; mod-ul-ate, q. v. From the Lat. modus we also have accommod-ate, com-mod-ious. Doublet, mood (2).

MODEL, a pattern, mould, shape. (F. — Ital. — L.) See Shak. Rich. II. iii. 2. 153; Hen. V. ii. chor. 16; &c. — O. F. modèle (F. modèle), 'a modell, pattern, mould'; Cot. — Ital. modello, 'a model, a frame, a plot, a mould'; Florio. Formed as if from a *Latin modellus, dimin. of modulus, a measure, standard, which again is a dimin. of modus. See Modulate, Mode. Der. model, vb., modell-er, modell-ing.

MODERATE, temperate, within bounds, not extreme. (L.) 'Moderately and with reuerence,' Sir T. More, Works, p. 361 h. — Lat. moderatus, pp. of moderari, to fix a measure, regulate, control. From a stem *mod-er-us, answering to an older *mod-es-us, extended from modus, a measure; see Modest, Mode. Der. moderate, verb, Shak. Troil. iv. 4. 5; moderate-ly, moderate-ness, moderat-or, Sir P. Sidney, Apology for Poetrie, ed. Arber, p. 32, from Lat. moderator; moderat-ion, Troil. iv. 4. 2, from O. F. moderation, 'moderation' (Cot.), which from Lat. acc. moderationem.

MODERN, belonging to the present age. (F. — L.) Used by Shak. to mean 'common-place'; Mach. iv. 3. 70; &c. — F. moderne, 'modern, new, of this age'; Cot. — Lat. modernus, modern; lit. of the present mode or fashion; formed from a stem *moder-us; from modus, a measure; cf. modo, adv., just now. See Moderate. Der. modern-ly, modern-ness, modern-ise.

MODEST, moderate, decent, chaste, pure. (F. — L.) Modestly is in Gascoigne, Fruites of Warre, st. 208 (and last). Modestie is in Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 25 (R.) — F. modeste, 'modest'; Cot. — Lat. modestus, modest, lit. keeping within bounds or measure. From a stem *mod-es- (extended from modus), with Aryan suffix -ta; the same stem, weakened to moder-, gives moder-ate, moder-n. — Lat. modestus, a measure; see Mode. Der. modest-ly, modest-y.

MODICUM, a small quantity. (L.) In Shak. Troil. ii. 1. 74. Merely Lat. modicum, neut. of modi-c-us, moderate. From modus, a measure; see Modify, Mode.

MODIFY, to moderate, change the form of. (F. — L.) M. E. modifien, Gower, C. A. iii. 157, l. 25. — F. modifier, 'to modifie, moderate'; Cot. — Lat. modificare. — Lat. modi-, for modo-, crude form of modus, a measure; and -fic-, put for fac-, to make. See Mode and Fact. Der. modifi-er, modifi-able; modifi-ca-tion = F. modification, 'modification' (Cot.), from Lat. acc. modificati-onem.

MODULATE, to regulate, vary. (L.) 'To modulate the sounds'; Grew, Cosmographia Sacra (1701), b. ii. c. 5. sect. 16 (R.)

[But the verb is really due to the sb. modulation, given as both a F. and E. word by Cotgrave; from the Lat. acc. modulationem.] — Lat. modulatus, pp. of modulari, to measure according to a standard. — Lat. modulus, a standard; dimin. of modus, a measure. See Mode. Der. modulati-on, as above; modulat-or, from Lat. modulator. So also module, from F. module, 'a modell or module' (Cot.), from Lat. modulus. Also modulus = Lat. modulus.

MOGUL, a Mongolian. (Mongolia.) In Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, p. 75; Milton, P. L. xi. 391. 'Mr. Limberham is the mogul [lord] of the next mansion'; Dryden, Kind Keeper, iv. 1. The word Mogul is only another form of Mongol; the Great Mogul was the emperor of the Moguls in India. 'The Mogul dynasty in India began with Baber in 1525'; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. Cf. Pers. Moghól, a Mogul; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 1460.

MOHAIR, cloth made of fine hair. (F. — Arab.) The E. spelling is a sophisticated one, from a ridiculous attempt to connect it with E. hair; just as in the case of cray-fish, cause-way; see those words. Spelt mokaire in Skinner, ed. 1691. — O. F. mouaire, cited by Skinner; the mod. F. is moire. Other O. F. forms are mohère, mouhaire, cited by Scheler. The name was given to a stuff made from the hair of the Angora goat (Asia Minor). — Arab. mukhayyar, 'a kind of coarse camelot or hair-cloth'; Rich. Dict. p. 1369, col. 2. See Devic, in Supp. to Littre. Doublet, moire, from F. moire.

MOHAMMEDAN, a follower of Mohammed. (Arab.) From the well-known name. — Arab. muhammad, praiseworthy; Rich. Dict. p. 1358. — Arab. root hamada, he praised; id. p. 581.

MOHUR, a gold coin current in India. (Pers.) From Pers. muhr, muhur, 'a gold coin current in India for about £1 16s.'; Rich. Dict. p. 1534, col. 1.

MOIDORE, a Portuguese gold coin. (Port. — L.) 'Moidore, a Portugal gold coin, in value 27 shillings sterling'; Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. — Port. moeda d'ouro or moeda de ouro, a moidore, £1 7s. Lit. 'money of gold.' — Lat. moneta, money; de, of; aurum, gold. See Money and Aureate.

MOIETY, half, a portion. (F. — L.) See K. Lear, i. 1. 7, where it means 'a part' merely. It means 'a half' in All's Well, iii. 2. 69. — F. moitié, 'an half, or half part'; Cot. — Lat. medieta-tem, acc. of medietas, a middle course, a half. — Lat. medius, middle; see Mediate. [+]

MOIL, to toil, to drudge. (F. — L.) Skinner, ed. 1691, explains moil by 'impigrè laborare,' i. e. to toil, drudge. But it is prob. nothing but a peculiar use of the word moile, given in Minshew, ed. 1627, with the sense 'to defile, to pollute'; cf. moil, 'to drudge, to dawb with dirt'; Phillips, ed. 1706. As Mr. Wedgwood suggests, moil, to drudge, is probably 'only a secondary application from the laborious efforts of one struggling through wet and mud'; or simply, from the dirty state in which hard labour often leaves one. β. The sense seems to have been affected by confusion with prov. E. moil, a mule, and again, with Lat. moliri, to use effort, to toil. The latter, in particular, may easily have been present to the mind of early writers. But we must not derive the word from these; for (1) we never meet with a verb to mule; and (2) the Lat. moliri would only have given a form to mole; see Mole (3). γ. We find earlier quotations for both senses; Halliwell cites 'we myrle and toyle' from the Marriage of Wit and Humour, A. D. 1579. Rich. quotes from Gascoigne: 'A simple soule much like myself did once a serpent find, Which, almost dead with cold, lay moiling in the myre'; i. e. wallowing in the dirt. So also Spenser uses moyle for 'to wallow'; see his Hymn of Heavenly Love, st. 32. Still earlier, the sense is simply to wet or moisten. M. E. moillen, to wet. 'A monk . . . moillid al hir patis,' i. e. moistened all their heads by sprinkling them with holy water; Introd. to Tale of Beryn, ed. Furnivall, p. 6, l. 139. — O. F. moiller, moiler (Littre), moillier (Burguy), later moillier, 'to wet, moisten, soak'; Cot. The orig. sense was 'to soften,' which is effected, in the case of clay, &c., by wetting it. The O. F. moiler answers to a *Low Lat. form molliare, to soften (not found), formed directly from Lat. molli-, stem of mollis (O. F. mol), soft. See Mollify.

MOIRE, watered silk. (F. — Arab.) A later form of Mohair, q. v.; in a slightly altered sense.

MOIST, damp, humid. (F. — L.) M. E. moiste; 'a moiste fruit with-alle'; P. Plowman, B. xvi. 68. The peculiar use of M. E. moiste is decisive as to the derivation of the F. word. It means 'fresh' or 'new'; thus the Wife of Bath's shoes were 'ful moiste and newe'; Chaucer, C. T. 459. The Host liked to drink 'moiste and corny ale'; id. 12249. And again 'moiste ale' is opposed to old ale; id. 17009. — O. F. moiste (Littre), later moite, 'moist, liquid, humid, wet'; Cot. But the old sense of F. moiste must have agreed with the sense with which the word was imported into English. — Lat. musteus, of or belonging to new wine or must, also new, fresh; as musteus caseus, new cheese (Pliny). — Lat. mustum, new wine; a neut. form from mustus, adj., young, fresh, new. β. Of uncertain origin; but if mustus be for mud-tus, a connection with Skt. mud, to rejoice, is not improbable. Der. moist-ly, moist-ness; moist-en, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 6. 34, where the final -en is really of comparatively late addition (by analogy with other verbs in -en), since Wyclif has 'bigan to moiste hise feet with teeris,' Luke, vii. 38; moist-ure, Gower, C. A. iii. 109, l. 8, from O. F. moisteur, moistour, mod. F. moiteur (Littre).

MOLAR, used for grinding. (L.) 'Molar teeth or grinders;' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 752. — Lat. molaris, belonging to a mill, molar. — Lat. mola, a mill. — √ MAR (later form MAL), to grind; see Mar, Mill.

MOLASSES, syrup made from sugar. (Port., — L.) Also molasses; in Phillips, ed. 1706. It ought rather to be melasses. As it came to us from the West Indies, where the sugar is made, it is either a Port. or a Span. word. However, the Span. spelling is melaza, where the z (sounded like th in bath) would hardly give the E. ss. We may consider it to be from Port. melago, molasses; where the g is sounded like E. ss. [We also find Span. melaza, Ital. melassa, F. melasse.] — Lat. mellaceus, made with honey, hence honey-like; cf. Port. melado, mixed with honey. Formed with ending -ac-e-us from mel, honey. See Mellifluous (with which cf. also marmalade, another decoction).

MOLE (1), a spot or mark on the body. (E.) M. E. mole. 'Many moles and spots;' P. Plowman, B. xiii. 315. [As usual, the M. E. o answers to A. S. ā.] — A. S. mal, also written maal (where aa = ā). 'Stigmatum, fūl maal on rægel' = a foul spot on a garment; Ælfric's Gloss., in Wright's Vocab. i. 26, col. 1. + Dan. maal, a goal, end, butt; properly, a mark. + Swed. mdl, a mark, butt. + O. H. G. meil, a spot; G. maal, a mole. + Goth. mail, a spot, blemish. β. All from a base MAH, answering to √ MAK, to pound, whence Lat. mac-ula, a spot, orig. a bruise. See Fick, iii. 226, i. 737. And see Maculate, Mackerel.

MOLE (2), a small animal that burrows. (E.) Mole is merely a shortened form of the older name moldwarp. Shak. has both forms, viz. mole, Temp. iv. 194; and moldwarp, 1 Hen. IV. iii. 1. 149. Palsgrave has mole. Earlier, we find M. E. moldwarp, Wyclif, Levit. xi. 30. β. The sense is 'the animal that casts up mould or earth,' in allusion to mole-hills. From M. E. molde, mould; and uerpen, to throw up, mod. E. to warp. See Mould and Warp.

So also Du. mol, 'a mole or want' (Hexham; cf. prov. E. wont, a mole); from O. Du. moldworp (Kilian). So also Icel. moldwarpa, a mole; similarly formed. Der. mole-hill, Cor. v. 3. 30. [†]

MOLE (3), a breakwater. (F., — L.) 'Mole or peer' [pier]; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — F. mole, 'a peer, a bank, or causey on the sea-side;' Cot. — Lat. moleum, acc. of mōles, a great heap, vast pile. A word of doubtful origin. Der. From Lat. moles we also have molecule, q. v., molest, q. v., and e-mol-u-ment.

MOLECULE, an atom, small particle. (L.) Formerly written molecula. 'Molecula, in physicks, a little mass or part of anything;' Bailey's Dict. vol. ii. ed. 1751. A coined word; formed with double dimin. suffix -cul- (in imitation of particula, a particle) from Lat. moles, a heap. A Roman would have said molicula. See Mole (3). Der. molecul-ar.

MOLEST, to disturb, annoy. (F., — L.) M. E. molesten, Chaucer, Troilus, b. iv. l. 880. — F. molester, 'to molest;' Cot. — Lat. molestare, to annoy. — Lat. molestus, adj., troublesome, burdensome. β. Formed (with suffix -tus = Aryan -ta) from a stem mōles-, which again is from moli-, crude form of moles, a heap. See Mole (3). Der. molest-er, molest-at-ion, Oth. ii. 1. 16.

MOLLIFY, to soften. (F., — L.) In Isa. i. 6. (A. V.) 'It [borage] mollyfieth the body;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 9. [The sb. mollification is in Chaucer, C. T. 16322.] — O. F. mollifier, 'to mollify;' Cot. — Lat. mollificare, to soften. — Lat. moli-, crude form of mollis, soft; and -fic-, put for facere, to make. β. Lat. mollis is akin to Gk. μαλακός, soft, and μαλός, tender; the lit. sense is 'ground to powder,' hence soft; from √ MAL, weakened form of √ MAR, to grind. See Mar. Der. mollifi-able, mollifi-er; also mollifi-at-ion, regularly formed from mollificatus, pp. of mollificare. And see moil, mollusc.

MOLLUSC, an invertebrate animal, with a soft fleshy body, as a snail. (F., — L.) Modern. Not in Todd's Johnson. — F. mollusque, a mollusc (Littre). — Lat. mollusca, a kind of nut with a soft shell, which some molluscs were supposed to resemble. — Lat. molluscus, softish; allied to mollescere, to become soft. — Lat. mollis, soft; see Mollify.

MOLTEN, melted. (E.) In Exod. xxxii. 4; &c. The old pp. of melt; see Melt.

MOLY, the name of a certain plant. (L., — Gk.) In Spenser, Sonnet 26. — Lat. moly. — Gk. μῶλυ; Homer, Od. x. 305.

MOMENT, importance, value, instant of time. (F., — L.) 'In a moment;' Wyclif, 1 Cor. xv. 52. — F. moment, 'a moment, a minute, a jot of time; also moment, importance, weight;' Cot. — Lat. mōmentum, a movement, hence an instant of time; also moving force, weight. β. Put for mōvimentum; formed with the common suffix -ment- from movere, to move; see Move. Der. moment-ar-y, Temp. i. 2. 202, from Lat. momentarius; moment-ar-i-ly, -ness; moment-an-y (obsolete), Mids. Nt. Dr. i. 1. 143, from Lat. momentaneus; moment-ly; moment-ous, from Lat. momentosus; momentous-ly, -ness. Doublets, momentum (= Lat. momentum); also movement.

MONAD, a unit, &c. (L., — Gk.) The pl. monades was formerly used as synonymous with digits. 'Monades, a term in arithmetick, the same as digits;' Phillips, ed. 1706. — Lat. monad-, stem of monas, a unit. — Gk. μονάς, a unit. — Gk. μόνος, alone, sole. See Mono-.

MONARCHY, sole government, a kingdom. (F., — L., — Gk.) The word monarchy is much older than monarch in English. Sir David Lyndsay's book entitled 'The Monarchè,' written in 1552, treats of monarchies, not of monarchs; see l. 1979 of the poem. M. E. monarchie, Gower, C. A. i. 27, l. 11. — F. monarchie, 'a monarchie, a kingdom;' Cot. — Lat. monarchia. — Gk. μοναρχία, a kingdom. — Gk. μόναρχος, adj., ruling alone. — Gk. μῶν, for μόνος, alone; and ἀρχεῖν, to be first. See Mono- and Arch-. Der. monarch, Hamlet, ii. 2. 270, from F. monarque = Lat. monarcha, from Gk. μονάρχης, a sovereign; monarch-al, Milton, P. L. ii. 428; monarch-ic, from F. monarchique (Cot.), Gk. μοναρχικός; monarch-ic-al; monarch-ise, Rich. II, iii. 2. 165; monarch-ist.

MONASTERY, a house for monks, convent. (L., — Gk.) The older word was minster, q. v. Sir T. More has monastery, Works, p. 135 e. Englished from Lat. monasterium, a minster. — Gk. μοναστήριον, a minster. — Gk. μοναστής, dwelling alone; hence, a monk. — Gk. μονάζειν, to be alone. — Gk. μόνος, alone. See Mono-. Der. From Gk. μοναστής we also have monast-ic, As You Like It, iii. 2. 441 = Gk. μοναστικός, living in solitude; hence monast-ic-al, monastic-ism. Doublet, minster.

MONDAY, the second day of the week. (E.) M. E. monenday, Rob. of Glouc. p. 495, l. 13; later Moneday, Monday. — A. S. Mōnan dæg, Monday; rubric to John, vii. 32. The lit. sense is 'day of the Moon.' — A. S. mōnan, gen. of mōna, the moon (a masc. sb. with gen. in -an); and dæg, a day. See Moon and Day.

MONETARY, relating to money. (L.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. Imitated from Lat. monetarius, which properly means 'belonging to a mint,' or a mint-master. — Lat. moneta, (1) a mint, (2) money; see Money.

MONEY, current coin, wealth. (F., — L.) M. E. monie; Chaucer, C. T. 705. — O. F. monie; mod. F. monnaie. — Lat. moneta, (1) a mint, (2) money. See further under Mint (1). Der. money-bag, Merch. Ven. ii. 5. 18; money-ed, Merry Wives, iv. 4. 88; money-changer; money-less. Also monetary, q. v.

MONGER, a dealer, trader. (E.) Generally used in composition. M. E. wool-monger, a wool-monger; Rob. of Glouc. p. 539, l. 20. — A. S. mangere, a dealer, merchant; the dat. case mangere occurs in Matt. xiii. 45. Formed with suffix -ere (= mod. E. -er) from mangian, to traffic, barter, gain by trading, Luke, xix. 15. Cf. mangung, merchandise, Matt. xxii. 5. β. The form mangian is phonetically equivalent to mengan, in which the i is lost after a change of a to e; and the derivation of mangian is the same as that of mengan, to mingle, already treated of under Mingle, q. v. But I may here further observe that mangian is 'to deal in a mixture of things,' i. e. in miscellaneous articles. — A. S. mang, a mixture, preserved in the forms ge-mang, ge-mong, a mixture, crowd, assembly, Grein, i. 425. Mang may be taken as allied to manig, many; see Many.

γ. Similarly, Vigfusson derives the Icel. mangari, a monger, from manga, to trade, which again is from mang, barter, so named 'from traffic in mingled, miscellaneous things; as manga is used in Kormak, and even in a derived sense, it need not be borrowed from the A. S., but may be a genuine Norse word formed from margr [many] at a time when the n had not yet changed into an r' (for the Icel. margr stands for mangr). δ. Compare also Du. mangelen, to barter. The relationship to the Lat. mango, a dealer in slaves, is not clear; but the E. word does not appear to have been borrowed from it. Der. cheese-monger, fell-monger, fish-monger, iron-monger, &c.

MONGREL, an animal of a mixed breed. (E.) In Macbeth, iii. 1. 93. Spelt mungril, mungril in Levins, ed. 1570. The exact history of the word fails, for want of early quotations; but we may consider it as short for mong-er-el, with double dimin. suffixes as in cock-er-el, pick-er-el (a small pike), so that it was doubtless orig. applied to puppies and young animals. β. As to the stem mong-, this we may refer to A. S. *mangian, old form of mengan, to mingle; cf. mong-er, a-mong, which are from the same A. S. base mang, a mixture. The sense is 'a small animal of mingled breed.' See Mingle, Monger. [†]

MONITION, a warning notice. (F., -L.) 'With a good monicion;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 245 g. -F. monition, 'a monition, admonition;' Cot. -Lat. monitionem, acc. of monitio, a reminding. -Lat. monitus, pp. of monere, to remind; lit. to bring to mind or make to think. -✓MAN, to think; see Man. Der. monit-or, from Lat. monitor, an adviser, from monit-us, pp. of monere; hence monit-or-y, Bacon, Henry VII, ed. Lumby, p. 73, l. 6; monit-or-ship; monit-r-ess (with fem. suffix -ess = F. -esse, Lat. -issa, Gk. -ισσα); monit-or-i-al. And see Admonish. The doublet of monitor is mentor.

MONK, a religious recluse. (L., -Gk.) M. E. monk, Chaucer, C. T. 165. -A. S. munec, Grein, ii. 269; also munuc, Sweet's A. S. Reader. -Lat. monachus. -Gk. μοναχός, adj. solitary; sb. a monk. Extended from Gk. μόνος, alone; see Mono-. Der. monk-ish; monk's-hood. Also (from Lat. monachus) monach-ism. And see monastery, minster.

MONKEY, an ape. (Ital., -L.) Spelt munkie in Levins, monkey, munkie, in Palsgrave; perhaps not found earlier. Corrupted from O. Ital. monicchio, 'a pugge, a munkie, an ape;' Florio, ed. 1598. Dimin. from O. Ital. mona, 'an ape, a munkie, a pug, a kitlin [kitten], a munkie-face; also a nickname for women, as we say gammer, goodie, good-wife such an one;' Florio. He notes that mona is also spelt monna; cf. mod. Ital. monna, mistress, dame, ape, monkey (Meadows). Cf. also Span. mona, Port. mona, a she-monkey; Span. and Port. mono, a monkey. The order of ideas is: mistress, dame, old woman, monkey, by that degradation of meaning so common in all languages. β. The orig. sense of Ital. monna was 'mistress,' and it was used as a title; Scott introduces Monna Paula as a character in the Fortunes of Nigel. As Diez remarks, it is a familiar corruption of madonna, i.e. my lady, hence, mistress or madam; see Madonna, Madam.

¶ The Span. and Port. mona were, apparently, borrowed from Italian; being feminine sbs., the masc. sb. mono was coined to accompany them.

MONO-, prefix, single, sole. (Gk.) From Gk. μόνος, crude form of μόνος, single. Perhaps allied to Skt. manák, adv., a little. Shortened to mon- in mon-arch, mon-ocular, mon-ody; see also mon-ad, mon-astery, mon-k.

MONOCHORD, a musical instrument with one chord. (Gk.) In Hall's Chron. Hen. VII, an. 1 (R.) -Gk. μόνο- and χορδή, the string of a musical instrument. See Mono- and Chord.

MONOCOTYLEDON, a plant with one cotyledon. (Gk.) Modern and botanical. See Mono- and Cotyledon.

MONOCULAR, with one eye. (Hybrid; Gk. and Lat.) A coined word; used by Howell (R.). From Gk. μον-, for μόνος, from μόνος, sole; and Lat. oculus, an eye. See Mono- and Ocular.

MONODY, a kind of mournful poem. (Gk.) 'In this monody,' &c.; Milton, Introd. to Lycidas. So called because sung by a single person. -Gk. μονοδία, a solo, a lament. -Gk. μον-, for μόνος, crude form of μόνος, alone; and ὁδή, a song, ode, lay. See Mono- and Ode. Der. monod-ist.

MONOGAMY, marriage to one wife only. (L., -Gk.) Spelt monogamie in Minshew, ed. 1627. Used by Bp. Hall, Honour of the Married Clergie, sect. 19, in speaking of a book by Tertullian. -Lat. monogamia, monogamy, on which Tertullian wrote a treatise. -Gk. μονογαμία, monogamy; μονόγαμος, adj., marrying but once. -Gk. μόνος, crude form of μόνος, alone, sole; and γαμείν, to marry, γάμος, marriage. See Mono- and Bigamy. Der. monogam-ist, Goldsmith, Vicar of Wakefield, ch. xiv.

MONOGRAM, a single character, a cipher of characters joined together. (L., -Gk.) Used by Ben Jonson, according to Richardson. -Lat. monogramma, a monogram. -Gk. μονογράμματον, a mark formed of one letter; neut. of μονογράμματος, consisting of one letter. -Gk. μόνος, sole; and γράμματ-, stem of γράμμα, a letter, from γράφειν, to grave, write. See Mono- and Grave (1). Der. So also mono-graph, a modern word, from Gk. γραφή, writing.

MONOLOGUE, a soliloquy. (F., -Gk.) 'Besides the chorus or monologues;' Dryden, Essay of Dramatic Poesie. But Minshew, ed. 1627, distinguishes between monologue, a sole talker, and monologie, 'a long tale of little matter.' -F. monologue, given by Cotgrave only in the sense 'one that loves to hear himselfe talke'; but, as in dia-logue, the last syllable was also used in the sense of 'speech.' -Gk. μονόλογος, adj. speaking alone. -Gk. μόνος, alone; and λέγειν, to speak. See Mono- and Logie.

MONOMANIA, mania on a single subject. (Gk.) A coined word; from Mono- and Mania.

MONOPOLY, exclusive dealing in the sale of an article. (L., -Gk.) 'Monopolies were formerly so numerous in England that parliament petitioned against them, and many were abolished, about 1601-2. They were further suppressed by 21 Jas. I, 1624;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. 'Thou hast a monopoly thereof;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 1303 h. -Lat. monopolium. -Gk. μονοπώλιον, the right of monopoly; μονοπωλία, monopoly. -Gk. μόνος, sole (see Mono-); and πωλεῖν, to barter, sell, connected with πέλειν, to be in motion, to be busy; and this is perhaps to be further connected with κέλωμαι, I urge on, κέλλειν, to drive, from ✓KAL, to drive. Der. monopol-ize, spelt monopol-ize in Bacon, Hist. Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 147, l. 33; a coined word, formed by analogy, since the O. F. word was simply monopoler (Cotgrave).

MONOSYLLABLE, a word of one syllable. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; he makes it an adjective. Altered from F. monosyllabe, adj. 'of one syllable;' Cot. -Lat. monosyllabus, adj. -Gk. μονοσύλλαβος, adj. of one syllable. See Mono- and Syllable. Der. monosyllab-ic.

MONOTONY, sameness of tone. (Gk.) Bailey, vol. ii. ed. 1731, gives it in the form monotonia. -Gk. μονοτονία, sameness of tone. -Gk. μόνотονος, adj., of the same tone, monotonous. See Mono- and Tone. Der. monoton-ous, formed from Gk. μόνотονος by change of -os into -ous; this is rare, but the change of Lat. -us into E. -ous (as in ardu-ous, &c.) is very common. Also monotone, a late term. Also monoton-ous-ly, -ness.

MONSOON, a periodical wind. (Ital., -Malay, -Arab.) Spelt monson in Hackluyt's Voyages, ii. 278. Sir T. Herbert speaks of the monsoones; Travels, ed. 1665, pp. 409, 413. Ray speaks of 'the monsoons and trade-winds;' On the Creation, pt. 1 (R.) It is not quite certain whence the word reached us, but monsoon agrees more closely with Ital. monsone than with Span. monzon, Port. monção, or F. mousson. [The Span. z is not sounded as E. z, but more as th.] -Malay músim, 'a season, monsoon, year;' cf. also awal músim, 'beginning of the season, setting in of the monsoon;' Marsden, Malay Dict. pp. 340, 24. -Arab. mausim, a time, a season; Rich. Dict. p. 1525. -Arab. wasm (root wasama), marking; id. p. 1643.

MONSTER, a prodigy, unusual production of nature. (F., -L.) M. E. monstre, Chaucer, C. T. 11656. -F. monstre, 'a monster;' Cot. -Lat. monstrum, a divine omen, portent, monster. To be resolved into mon-es-tru-m (with Aryan suffixes -as- and -tar, for which see Schleicher's Compendium) from mon-ere, to warn, lit. to make to think. -✓MAN, to think; see Man, Mind. Der. monstr-ous, formerly monstru-ous, as in Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iv. met. 3, l. 3502, from O. F. monstrüeux, 'monstrous' (Cot.), which from Lat. monstruosus (also monstrosus), monstrous; monstrous-ly, monstrousness; monstros-i-ty, spelt monstruosity, Troilus, iii. 2. 87. Also de-monstrate, re-monstrate. Doublet, muster.

MONTH, the period of the moon's revolution. (E.) Properly 28 days; afterwards so altered as to divide the year into 12 parts. M. E. moneth (of two syllables), Rob. of Glouc., p. 59, l. 16. Sometimes shortened to month. -A. S. mónað, sometimes móþð, a month; Grein, ii. 262; properly 'a lunation.' -A. S. mána, moon; see Moon. + Du. maand; from maan. + Icel. mánuðr, mánaðr, mónaðr, from máni. + Dan. maaned; from maane. + Swed. månad; from måne. + Goth. menoths; from mena. + G. monat; from mond (O. H. G. máno). Cf. also Lithuan. mėnėsis, a month, from mėnė, moon; Russ. mesiat's, a month, also the moon; Lat. mensis, a month; Irish and W. mis, Gael. mios, a month; Gk. μήν, month, μήνη, moon; Skt. māsa, a month. Der. month-ly, adj., K. Lear, i. 1. 134; month-ly, adv., Romeo, ii. 2. 110.

MONUMENT, a record, memorial. (F., -L.) Tyndall speaks of 'reliques and monuments;' Works, p. 283, col. 1. -F. monument, 'a monument;' Cot. -Lat. monumentum, a monument. β. Formed, with suffix -ment, from mon-u- = mon-i-, seen in moni-us, pp. of monere, to remind, cause to think. -✓MAN, to think; see Monition. Der. monument-al, All's Well, iv. 3. 20.

MOOD (1), disposition of mind, temper. (E.) It is probable that the sense of the word has been influenced by confusion with mood (2), and with mode. The old sense is simply 'mind,' or sometimes 'wrath.' M. E. mood; 'asked was his mood' = his wrath was appeased; Chaucer, C. T. 1762. -A. S. mód, mind, feeling, heart (very common); Grein, ii. 257. + Du. moed, courage, heart, spirit, mind. + Icel. móðr, wrath, moodiness. + Dan. and Swed. mod, courage, mettle. + Goth. modis, wrath. + G. muth, courage. β. All from a Teut. type MODA, courage, wrath; Fick, iii. 242. Cf. Gk. μέ-μα-α, I strive after, μῆμα, I seek after. Perhaps from ✓MA, shorter form of ✓MAN, to think; see Mind. Der. mood-y, A. S. módig, Grein, ii. 260; mood-i-ly, mood-i-ness.

MOOD (2), manner, grammatical form. (F., -L.) A variant of mode, in the particular sense of 'grammatical form of a verb.' Spelt mode in Palsgrave. 'Mood, or Mode, manner, measure, or rule. In Grammar there are 6 moods, well known;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. See Mode. ¶ Perhaps it has often been confused with Mood (1); see Mood in Trench, Select Glossary.

MOON, the planet which revolves round the earth. (E.) M. E.

monè, of two syllables; Chaucer, C. T. 9759. — A. S. mōna, a masc. sb.; Grein, ii. 262. + Du. maan. + Icel. máni, masc. sb. + Dan. maane. + Swed. måne, masc. + Goth. mena, masc. + G. mond, masc.; O. H. G. māno. + Lithuan. mėnù, masc. + Gk. μήνη. Cf. Skt. māsa, a month, which Benfey refers to mānt, pres. pt. of mā, to measure. — ✓ MA, to measure, as it is a chief measurer of time. See also Month. Der. moon-beam, moon-light, moon-shine; moon-calf, Temp. ii. 2. 111; moon-ish, As You Like It, iii. 2. 430.

MOOR (1), a heath, extensive waste ground. (E.) M. E. more, King Alisaunder, 6074. — A. S. mōr, a moor, morass, bog; Grein, ii. 262. + Icel. mór, a moor, also peat. + O. Du. moer, 'mire, dirt, mud'; moerlandt, 'moorish land, or turfe land of which turfe is made'; Hexham. + Dan. mor. + M. H. G. muor, G. moor. β. An adjectival form, derived from this sb., occurs in O. Du. moerasch, later moeras, whence E. morass; see Morass. γ. The account in Fick, iii. 224, is not satisfactory; it is plain that morass is an adjectival form from moor; and it would seem that the Icel. mýr-lendi, Swed. myra, a moorland, as well as the sense of Du. moer, link the word to mire and moss. If this be so, we must be careful to separate morass (allied to moor and moss) from the words marsh and marish (allied to mere). See Mire, Moss. Der. moor-ish, moorland, moor-cock; moor-hen, M. E. mor-hen, Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 158, l. 6. Also mor-ass, q. v., mire, q. v.

MOOR (2), to fasten a ship by cable and anchor. (Du.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; Milton, P. L. i. 207. Like many sea-terms, it is borrowed from Dutch. — Du. marren, to tie, to moor a ship; O. Du. marren, maren, to bind, or tie knots (Hexham). The Du. marren also means to tarry, loiter, O. Du. marren, merren, to stay, retard (Hexham). Cognate with A. S. merran, whence the compound ámerran, which signifies not only to mar, but also to hinder, obstruct; see Bosworth and Grein. Hence moor is a doublet of mar; see Mar. The successive senses are: to pound, mar, spoil, obstruct, fasten. Der. moor-ing, moor-age; and see marline.

MOOR (3), a native of North Africa. (F., — L., — Gk.) 'A Moore, or one of Mauritania, a blacke moore, or neger'; Minshew, ed. 1627. — O. F. More, 'a Moor, Maurian, blackamore'; Cot. — Lat. Maurus. — Gk. Μαῦρος, a Moor; see Smith's Class. Dict. β. Apparently the same word as Gk. μαῦρος, δμᾶντος, dark; on which see Curtius, ii. 189. Der. Moor-ish; and see morris, morocco. Also black-a-moor, spelt blackamore, in Cotgrave, as above; a corruption of black moor in Minshew, as above; also spelt blackmoor in Beaum. and Fletcher, Mons. Thomas, v. 2. [†]

MOOSE, the American elk. (W. Indian.) The native West Indian name; 'Knisteneaux mouswah, Algonquin monse [mouse?], Mackenzie'; cited in Mahn's Webster.

MOOT, to discuss or argue a case. (E.) Little used, except in the phr. 'a moot point.' 'To moote, a tearme vsed in the innes of the Court, it is the handling of a case, as in the Vniuersitie, their disputations, problemes, sophismes, and such other like acts'; Minshew, ed. 1627. The true sense is 'to discuss in or at a meeting,' and the verb is unoriginal, being due to A. S. mót, M. E. mote, later moot, an assembly or meeting, whence also moot-hall, i. e. a hall of assembly, occurring in P. Plowman, B. iv. 135; cf. also ward-mote, i. e. meeting of a ward, id. prol. 94. M. E. motien, moten, to moot, discuss, also to cite, plead, P. Plowman, B. i. 174. — A. S. mótian, to cite, summon (to an assembly or court); 'gif man . . . þane mannan mótie' = if one summon (or cite) the man; Laws of Hlothære, sect. 8; see Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 31. — A. S. mót, a meeting, an assembly; usually spelt gemót, a word familiar in the phrase witena gemót, an assembly of wise men, a parliament. + Icel. mót, a meeting, court of law. + M. H. G. muoz, móz, a meeting. β. From a Teutonic type MÓTA or MÓTI, Fick, iii. 242. Fick takes the o to stand for an, as in gōs for gans (goose); this gives an orig. form MAN-TA, which he thinks is 'obviously' from the ✓ MAN, to remain, which appears in Lat. man-ere, Gk. μένειν. Der. moot-able, moot-case, i. e. case for discussion; moot-point, i. e. point for discussion; moot-hall, a hall of assembly, law court. Also meet, q. v. ¶ Observe that meet is a mere derivative of moot, as shewn by the vowel-change; to derive moot from meet would involve an impossible inversion of A. S. phonetic laws.

MOP (1), an implement for washing floors, &c. (F., — L.?) Mr. Wedgwood says that, in a late edition of Florio's Ital. Dict., the word pannatore is explained by 'a maukin, a mop of rags or clouts to rub withal.' It is not in the 1st ed., 1598. Halliwell gives prov. E. mop, a napkin, as a Glouc. word. β. Of uncertain origin; but most likely borrowed from O. F. mappe, a napkin, though this word is almost invariably corrupted to nappe. See Nappe in Littré, who cites the spelling mappe as known in the 15th century, though the corrupt form with initial n was already known in the 13th century. Both mappe and nappe are from Lat. mappa, a napkin; whence also Map and Napkin, the former being taken from the form mappe, whilst the latter was due to nappe. γ. Owing to the rare occurrence of O. F. mappe, some suppose mop to be of Celtic origin; and, in fact, we find Welsh mop, mopa, a mop; Gael. moibéal, a besom, broom, mop, Irish moipal, a mop; but it is difficult to say to what extent these Celtic languages have borrowed from English. δ. It deserves to be added that if these words be Celtic, they are unconnected with Lat. mappa, because the latter is not of true Lat. origin, but borrowed from Carthaginian; see Map. Der. mop, verb.

MOP (2), a grimace; to grimace. (Du.) Obsolete. 'With mop and mow'; Temp. iv. 47. Also as a verbal sb.; 'mopping and mowing'; K. Lear, iv. 64. The verb to mop is the same as Mope, q. v.

MOPE, to be dull or dispirited. (Du.) In Shak. Temp. v. 240. The same word as mop, to grimace; see Mop (2). Cf. 'in the mops, sulky'; Halliwell. — Du. moppen, to pout; whence to grimace, or to sulk. Cf. prov. G. muffen, to sulk (Flügel). This verb to mop is a mere variant of to mock, and has a like imitative origin; see Mock. And see Mow (3). Der. mop-ish, mop-ish-ness.

MORaine, a line of stones at the edges of a glacier. (F., — Teut.) Modern; well known from books of Swiss travel. — F. moraine, a moraine; Littré. Cf. Port. morraria, a ridge of shelves of sand, from morra, a great rock, a shelf of sand; Ital. mora, a pile of rocks. (But not Span. moron, a hillock.) β. Of Teut. origin; cf. Bavarian mur, sand and broken stones, fallen from rocks into a valley; Schmeller, Bayerisches Wörterbuch, col. 1642. Schmeller notes the name moraine as used by the peasants of Chamouni, according to Saussure. γ. The radical sense is 'mould' or 'crumbled material'; hence fallen rocks, sand, &c.; cf. G. mürbe, soft, O. H. G. murawi, soft, brittle, A. S. mearu, tender. — ✓ MAR, to pound, bruise, crumble; whence also Lat. mola, a mill, E. meal, &c. See Mould (1), Meal.

MORal, virtuous, excellent in conduct. (F., — L.) 'O moral Gower'; Chaucer, Troilus, b. v, last stanza but one. — F. moral, 'moral'; Cot. — Lat. moralis, relating to conduct. — Lat. mor-, stem of mos, a manner, custom. Root uncertain. Der. moral, sb., morals, sb. pl.; moral-er, i. e. one who moralises, Oth. ii. 3. 301; moral-ly; morale (a mod. word, borrowed from F. morale, morality, good conduct); moral-ise, As You Like It, ii. 1. 44; moral-ist; moral-i-ty, Meas. for Meas. i. 2. 138, from F. moralité, 'morality,' Cot. From the same source, de-mure.

MORass, a swamp, bog. (Du.) 'Morass, a moorish ground, a marsh, fen, or bog'; Phillips, ed. 1706. Todd says that P. Heylin, in 1656, noted the word as being 'new and uncouth'; but he omits the reference. — Du. moeras, marsh, fen (Sewel). The older Du. form is moerasch, adj., 'moorish' (Hexham); from the sb. moer, 'mire, dirt, or mud' (id.). But this Du. moer also means a moor, since Hexham also gives 'moerlandt', moorish land, or turfe land of which turfe is made; and is plainly cognate with E. moor; see Moor (1). β. The suffix -as, older form -asch, is adjectival, and an older form of the common suffix -ish; it is due to the Aryan suffixes -as- and -ka- (for which see Schleicher, Compend. §§ 230, 231). It occurs again in various cognate words, viz. in G. morast (corrupted from morask), a morass; Swed. moras; Dan. morads (a corrupt form). ¶ The words marsh, marish, are to be referred to a different base, viz. to Mere (1). [†]

MORbid, sickly, unhealthy. (F., — L.) 'Morbid (in painting), a term used of very fat flesh very strongly expressed'; Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. — F. morbide, sometimes similarly used as a term in painting (Littré). — Lat. morbidus, sickly (which has determined the present sense of the E. word). — Lat. morbus, disease. Allied to mor-i, to die, mors, death; see Mortal. Der. morbid-ly, morbid-ness; also morbi-fic, causing disease, a coined word, from morbi- (= morbo-), crude form of morbus, and Lat. suffix -fic-us, due to facere, to make.

MORDacitY, sarcasm. (F., — L.) Little used. It occurs in Cotgrave. — F. mordacité, 'mordacity, easie detraction, bitter tears'; Cot. — Lat. acc. mordacitatem, from nom. mordacitas, power to bite. — Lat. mordaci-, crude form of mordax, biting; with suffix -itas (= Aryan -ta). — Lat. mordere, to bite. β. Prob. from the same root as E. Smart, q. v. Der. mordaci-ous, little used, from the crude form mordaci-; mordaci-ous-ly.

MORE, additional, greater. (E.) The mod. E. more does duty for two M. E. words which were, generally, well distinguished, viz. mo and more, the former relating to number, the latter to size. 1. M. E. mo, more in number, additional. 'Mo than thries ten' = more than thirty in number; Chaucer, C. T. 578. — A. S. mā, both as adj. and adv., Grein, ii. 201. Thus 'þær byð wundra mā' = there are wonders more in number, lit. more of wonders (Grein). This A. S. mā seems to have been originally an adverbial form; it is cognate with G. mehr, more, Goth. mais, more, adv., Lat. magis, more.

The full form of the orig. base is MAG-YANS, formed with the Aryan compar. suffix -yans (Schleicher, Compend. § 232) from the base mag, great, ✓MAG, to have power; see May (1). 2. M. E. more, larger in size, bigger; 'more and lesse' = greater and smaller, Chaucer, C. T. 6516. [The distinction between mo and more is not always observed in old authors, but very often it appears clearly enough.] = A. S. māra, greater, larger; Grein, ii. 212. Cognate with Icel. meiri, greater; Goth. maiza (stem maizan-), greater. This is really a double comparative, with the additional comp. suffix -ra, the orig. base being MAG-YANS-RA; for the Aryan suffix -ra see Schleicher, Compend. § 233. It is therefore an extension of the former word. ¶ It deserves to be noted that some grammarians, perceiving that more has one comparative suffix more than mo, have rushed to the conclusion that mo is a positive form. This is false; the positive forms are mickle, much, and (practically) many. Der. more-over.

MOST, the superl. form, answers to M. E. most, Chaucer, C. T. 2200, also spelt meste, maste, measte, in earlier authors (see Stratmann). = A. S. māst, most; Grein, ii. 226. Cognate with Icel. mestr, G. meist, Goth. maists; from an orig. form MAG-YANS-TA, where -ta is a superl. suffix. See above.

MORGANATIC, used with reference to a marriage of a man with a woman of inferior rank. (Low Lat., = G.) 'When the left hand is given instead of the right, between a man of superior and a woman of inferior rank, in which it is stipulated that the latter and her children shall not inherit the rank or inherit the possessions of the former. The children are legitimate. Such marriages are frequently contracted in Germany by royalty and the higher nobility. Our George I. was thus married;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. = Low Lat. morganatica. Ducange explains that a man of rank contracting a morganatic marriage was said 'accipere uxorem ad morganaticam'. This Lat. word was coined, with suffix -atica, from the G. morgen, morning, which was in this case understood as an abbreviation for M. H. G. morgengabe, morning-gift, a term used to denote the present which, according to the old usage, a husband used to make to his wife on the morning after the marriage-night. This G. morgen is cognate with E. morn; see Morn.

MORION, an open helmet, without visor. (F., = Span.) In Spenser, Muipopotmos, l. 322. = F. morion, 'a murrian, or head-peece;' Cot. Cf. Span. morrión, Port. morrião, Ital. morione, a morion. The word is Spanish, if we may accept the very probable derivation of Span. morrión from morra, the crown of the head. The latter word has no cognate form in Ital. or Port. Cf. Span. morro, anything round; moron, a hillock. Perhaps from Basque murua, a hill, heap (Diez).

MORMONITE, one of a sect of the Latter-day Saints. (E.; but a pure invention). The Mormonites are the followers of Joseph Smith, 'called the prophet, who announced in 1823, at Palmyra, New York, that he had had a vision of the angel Moroni. In 1827 he said that he found the book of Mormon, written on gold plates in Egyptian characters;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates, q. v. We may call the word E., as used by English-speaking people; but it is really a pure invention. Der. Mormon-ism. [†]

MORN, the first part of the day. (E.) M. E. morn, a North E. form. 'On the morn' = on the morrow; Barbour's Bruce, i. 601; to-morn = to-morrow; id. i. 621. Morn and morrow are merely doublets; the former being contracted from M. E. morwen, and the latter standing for M. E. morwe, the same word with loss of final n. The form morwe is in Chaucer, C. T. 1492; the older form morwen is in the Ancien Riwle, p. 22, l. 16. = A. S. morgen, morn, morrow, Grein, ii. 264; whence morn by mere contraction, and morwen by the common change of g to w. + Du. morgen. + Icel. morginn, morgunn. + Dan. morgen. + Swed. morgon. + G. morgen. + Goth. maurgins. β. Fick compares Lithuan. merkti, to blink; iii. 243. Perhaps we shall not be wrong in referring these words to an extension of the ✓MAR, to glimmer, shine, appearing in Gk. μαρμαίρειν, to glitter, Lat. marmor, marble, Skt. marichi, a ray of light. That the original sense was 'dawn' is probable from the deriv. morn-ing, q. v.

MORNING, dawn, morn. (E.) M. E. morning, P. Plowman, B. prol. 5; contracted from the fuller form morwening, Chaucer, C. T. 1064. Morwening signifies 'a dawning,' or 'a becoming morn;' formed with the substantival (not participial) suffix -ing (A. S. -ung) from M. E. morwen = A. S. morgen, morn; see Morn. Der. morning-star.

MOROCCO, a fine kind of leather. (Morocco.) Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. Named from Morocco, in N. Africa; whence also F. maroquin, morocco leather. Der. moor (3), morris.

MOROSE, ill-tempered, gloomy, severe. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. See Trench, Select Gloss., who shews that the word was once used as if it owed its derivation to Lat. mora, delay; but this use is obsolete. = Lat. morosus, self-willed; (1) in a good sense, scrupulous, fastidious, (2) in a bad sense, peevish, morose. = Lat. mor-, stem of mos, (1) self-will, (2) usage, custom, character. See Moral. Der. morose-ly, morose-ness. Also moros-i-ty, in Minshew, ed. 1627, from O. F. morosité, 'morosity, frowardnesse,' Cot.; but now obsolete.

MORPHIA, MORPHINE, the narcotic principle of opium. (Gk.) Modern; coined words from Gk. Morpheus (Μορφεύς), the god of sleep and dreams, lit. 'the shaper,' i. e. creator of shapes seen in dreams. = Gk. μορφή, a shape, form; prob. from Gk. μαρμαίρειν, to grasp, seize, clasp.

MORRIS, MORRIS-DANCE, an old dance on festive occasions. In Shak. Hen. V, ii. 4. 25. See Nares' Glossary. The dance was also called a morisco, as in Beaumont and Fletcher, Wild Goose Chase, v. 2. 7. A morris-dancer was also called a morisco, 2 Hen. VI, iii. 1. 365; and it is clear that the word meant 'Moorish dance,' though the reason for it is not quite certain, unless it was from the use of the tabor as an accompaniment to it. = Span. Morisco, Moorish. Formed with suffix -isco (= Lat. -iscus, E. -ish) from Span. Moro, a Moor; see Moor (3). ¶ We also find morris-pike, i. e. Moorish pike, Com. Errors, iv. 3. 38. [†]

MORROW, morning, morn. (E.) A doublet of morn. From M. E. morwe by the change of final -we to -ow, as in arr-ow, sparr-ow, sorr-ow, &c. 'A morwe' = on the morrow, Chaucer, C. T. 824. Again, morwe is from the older morwen, by loss of final n; and morwen = mod. E. morn. See Morn. Der. to-morrow = A. S. tō morgene, where tō = mod. E. to; the sense is 'for the morrow;' see Grein, ii. 264.

MORSE, a walrus. (Russ.) Spelt morsse, Hackluyt's Voyages, i. 5 (margin). 'The tooth of a morse or sea-horse;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 23. § 5. A Russ. word; walrus being found in the White Sea, as described in Othello's Voyage. = Russ. morj, a walrus; where the j is sounded as French j. As another Russ. name for the walrus is morshaia korova, i. e. sea-cow, I suppose we may derive Russ. morj from moré, the sea, cognate with E. Mere (1), q. v.

MORSEL, a mouthful, small piece. (F., = L.) M. E. morsel, Chaucer, C. T. 128. Also mossel, Rob. of Glouc. p. 342, l. 6; 'thys mossel bred' = this morsel of bread. The corrupt form morsel is still in common use in prov. E. = O. F. morsel, morcel, mod. F. morçeau, 'a morsell, bit,' Cot. (And see Burguy.) Cf. Ital. morsello. Dimin. from Lat. morsum, a bit. = Lat. morsum, pp. of mordere, to bite; see Mordacity.

MORTAL, deadly. (F., = L.) See Trench, Select Glossary. M. E. mortal, Chaucer, C. T. 61, 1590. = O. F. mortal (Burguy), later mortel (Cot.). = Lat. mortalis, mortal. = Lat. mort-, stem of mors, death. The crude form mor-ti- contains the Aryan suffix -ta-. = ✓MAR, to die, intrans. form from ✓MAR, to grind, rub, pound (hence bruise to death); cf. Skt. mri, to die, pp. mrta, dead; Lat. mori, to die. Der. mortal-ly; mortal-i-ty, from F. mortalité, 'mortality' (Cot.), from Lat. acc. mortalitatem; morti-fer-ous, Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, from Lat. fer-re, to bring, cause. And see mort-gage, mortify, mort-main, mort-u-ary.

MORTAR (1), MORTER, a vessel in which substances are pounded with a pestle. (L.) [A certain kind of ordnance was also called a mortar, from its orig. resemblance in shape to the mortar for pounding substances in. This is a French word.] M. E. morter, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 44; King Alisaunder, l. 332. = A. S. mortere, a mortar; A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, i. 142. [Cf. O. F. mortier, 'a mortar to bray [pound] things in, also, the short and wide-mouthed piece of ordnance called a mortier, &c.; Cot.] = Lat. mortarium, a mortar. Cf. Lat. martulus, marculus, a hammer. = ✓MAR, to pound, bruise; see Mar. See mortar (2).

MORTAR (2), cement of lime, sand, and water. (F., = L.) M. E. mortier, Rob. of Glouc., p. 128, l. 6. = O. F. mortier, 'morter used by dawbers;' Cot. = Lat. mortarium, mortar; lit. stuff pounded together; a different sense of the word above; see Mortar (1).

MORTGAGE, a kind of security for debt. (F., = L.) M. E. mortgage, spelt morgage in Gower, C. A. iii. 234, l. 6. = O. F. mortgage, morgaige, 'a mortgage, or mortgage;' Cot. 'It was called a mortgage, or dead pledge, because, whatever profit it might yield, it did not thereby redeem itself, but became lost or dead to the mortgagee on breach of the condition;' Webster. = F. mort, dead, from Lat. mortuus, pp. of mori, to die; and F. gage, a pledge. See Mortal and Gage (1). Der. mortgag-er; mortgag-ee, where the final -ee answers to the F. -é of the pp.

MORTIFY, to destroy the vital functions, vex, humble. (F., = L.) M. E. mortifier, used as a term of alchemy, Chaucer, C. T. 16594. = O. F. mortifier, 'to mortifie,' Cot. = Lat. mortificare, to cause death. = Lat. mort-i-, crude form of mors, death; and -fic-, for fac-ere, to make, cause; see Mortal and Fact. Der. mortifying; mortifie at-ion, Sir T. More, Works, p. 700 f., from O. F. mortification (Cot.), from Lat. acc. mortificationem.

MORTISE, a hole in a piece of timber to receive the tenon, or a piece made to fit it. (F.) Spelt mortise in Palsgrave; mortaise in Cot. Shak. has mortise as a sb., Oth. ii. 1. 9; and the pp. mortised, joined together, Hamlet, iii. 3. 20. M. E. morteys, Prompt. Parv. — F. mortaise, 'a mortise in a piece of timber'; Cot. Cf. Span. mortaja, a mortise.

β. Of unknown origin; it cannot be from Lat. mordere, to bite, which could not have given the i. Devic (in a supplement to Ducange) thinks the Span. word may be of Arabic origin; cf. Arab. murtazz, fixed in the mark (said of an arrow), immovably tenacious (said of a miser); Rich. Dict. p. 1386. Der. mortise, verb.

MORTMAIN, the transfer of property to a corporation. (F., — L.) 'Agaynst all mortmayn;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 333 h. The Statute of Mortmain was passed A.D. 1279 (7 Edw. I). Property transferred to the church was said to pass into main mort or mort main, i. e. into a dead hand, because it could not be alienated. — F. mort, dead; and main, a hand (Lat. manus). See Mortgage and Manual.

MORTUARY, belonging to the burial of the dead. (L.) The old use of mortuary was in the sense of a fee paid to the parson of a parish on the death of a parishioner. 'And [pore over] Linwode, a booke of constitutions to gather tithes, mortuaries, offerings, customes,' &c.; Tyndall's Works, p. 2, col. 1. Tyndwode, to whom Tyndall here refers, died A.D. 1446. Englished from Low Lat. mortuarium, a mortuary; neut. of Lat. mortuarius, belonging to the dead. — Lat. mortuus, dead, pp. of mori, to die; see Mortal. [†]

MOsaic, MOsaic-WORK, ornamental work made with small pieces of marble, &c. (F., — L., — Gk.) Spelt mosaick, Milton, P. L. iv. 700. 'Mosaicall-worke, a worke of small inlayed peeces;' Minshew's Dict., ed. 1627. — O. F. mosaïque, 'mosaicall work'; Cot. Cf. Ital. mosaico, mosaic; Span. mosaica obra, mosaic work. Formed from a Low Lat. *mosaicus, adj., an extended form from Lat. musæum opus (also called musium opus), mosaic work. The Low Lat. form mosaicus answers to a late Gk. *μουσαϊκός, an extended form from late Gk. μουσεῖον, mosaic work; neut. of μουσεῖος, of or belonging to the Muses (hence artistic, ornamental). — Gk. μοῦσα, a Muse; see Muse (2).

MOSLEM, a Mussulman or Mohammedan; as adj., Mahomedan. (Arab.) 'This low salam Replies of Moslem faith I am;' Byron, The Giaour (see note 29). — Arab. muslim, 'a musulman, a true believer in the Muhammedan faith'; Rich. Dict. p. 1418. Allied to Arab. musallim, 'one who submits to, and acquiesces in the decision of another'; id. A musulman is one who professes islām, i. e. 'obedience to the will of God, submission, the true or orthodox faith'; id. p. 91. Derived from the 4th conjugation of salamā, to submit (whence salm, submitting, id. p. 845). The words moslem, musulman, islam, and salam are all from the same root salamā. Doublet, musulman. [†]

MOSQUE, a Mahomedan temple or church. (F., — Span., — Arab.) 'Mosche or Mosque, a temple or church among the Turks and Saracens;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — F. mosquée, 'a temple or church among the Turks'; Cot. — Span. mezquita, a mosque. — Arab. masjad, masjid, a mosque, temple; Rich. Dict. p. 1415. Cf. Arab. sajjidah, 'a carpet, &c., place of adoration, mosque'; also sijdat, sajdat, 'adoring, adoration'; id. p. 812. — Arab. root sajada, to adore, prostrate oneself.

MOSQUITO, a kind of gnat. (Span., — L.) Spelt moskito in Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, p. 128. — Span. mosquito, a little gnat; dimin. of mosca, a fly. — Lat. musca, a fly. Cf. Gk. μύα, a fly; Lithuan. musė, a fly. ¶ It can hardly be related to midge, unless we may refer it to the same ✓ MU, to murmur, buzz. [†]

MOSS, a cryptogamic plant. (E.) M. E. mos, P. Plowman, C. xviii. 14; mosse (dat.), id. B. xv. 282. — A. S. meos, Deut. xxviii. 42. + Du. mos. + Icel. mosi, moss; also, a moss, moorland. + Dan. mos. + Swed. mossa. + G. moos, M. H. G. mos, moss; also a moss, swamp; allied to which is M. H. G. mies, O. H. G. mios, moss. β. Further allied to Russ. mokh, moss; Lat. muscus, moss; perhaps also to Gk. μόσχος, a young, fresh shoot of a plant, a scion, sucker (though the last seems to me doubtful). ¶ We may note the E. use of moss in the sense of bog or soft moorland, as in Solway Moss, Chat Moss; this sense comes out again in E. mire, which is certainly related to moss, being cognate with O. H. G. mios; see Mire. Der. moss-land, moss-rose; moss-trooper, i. e. a trooper or bandit who rode over the mosses on the Scottish border; moss-ed, As You Like It, iv. 3. 105; moss-grown, 1 Hen. IV. iii. 1. 33; moss-y, moss-i-ness. Also mire.

MOST, greatest; see under More.
MOTE, a particle of dust, speck, spot. (E.) M. E. mot, mote; Chaucer has the pl. mot, C. T. 6450. — A. S. mot, Matt. vii. 3. Root unknown.

MOTET, a short piece of sacred music. (F., — Ital., — L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — F. motet, 'a verse in music, or of a song, a poesie, a short lay'; Cot. — O. Ital. motetto, 'a dittie, a verse, a jigge, a short song; a witty saying'; Florio. Dimin. of Ital. motto, a motto, a witty saying; see Motto. [†]

MOTH, a lepidopterous insect. (E.) M. E. mothe, Chaucer, C. T. 6142; also spelt moþpe, moþe, mouþte, P. Plowman, C. xiii. 217. — A. S. moððe, Grein, ii. 261; also moððe, Matt. vi. 20, latest text; O. Northumbrian moððe, moðða, Matt. vi. 20. + Du. mot. + Icel. motti. + Swed. mdt, a mite. + G. motte, a moth. β. It is remarkable that there is a second form of the word, which can hardly be otherwise than closely related. This appears as A. S. maðu, a maggot, bug; 'Cimex, maðu, Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Insectorum, in Wright's Vocab. i. 24; cognate forms being Du. and G. made, a maggot, Goth. matha, a worm; also the dimin. forms Icel. maðkr, Dan. maddik, a maggot, whence is derived the prov. E. mauk, a maggot, discussed above in a note to Maggot, q. v. A late example of M. E. maþe, a maggot, occurs in Caxton's tr. of Reynard the Fox, ed. Arber, p. 69; 'a dede hare, full of maþes and wormes.' γ. It is probable that both words mean 'a biter' or 'eater'; Fick refers A. S. maðu to the root of E. mow, to cut grass. Der. moth eaten, M. E. moth-eten, P. Plowman, B. x. 362. [†]

MOTHER (1), a female parent. (E.) M. E. moder, Chaucer, C. T. 5261, where Tyrwhitt prints mother; but all the six MSS. of the Six-text ed. have moder or mooder, Group B. l. 841. [The M. E. spelling is almost invariably moder, and it is difficult to see how mother came to be the present standard form; perhaps it is due to Scand. influence, as the Icel. form has the th.] — A. S. móðer, móður, Grein, ii. 261. + Du. moeder. + Icel. móðir. + Dan. and Swed. moder. + G. mutter, O. H. G. muotar. + Irish and Gael. ma-thair. + Russ. mate. + Lithuan. moči (Schleicher). + Lat. mater. + Gk. μήτηρ. + Skt. mátā, mātri. β. All formed with Aryan suffix -tar (denoting the agent) from ✓ MA, orig. to measure; cf. Skt. mā, to measure. It is not certain in what sense mā is here to be taken; but most likely in the sense to 'regulate' or 'manage'; in which case the mother may be regarded as 'manager' of the household. Some explain it as 'producer,' but there is little evidence for such a sense. Der. mother-ly, mother-li-ness, mother-hood, mother-less.

MOTHER (2), the hysterical passion. (E.) In K. Lear, ii. 4. 56. Spelt moder in Palsgrave; the same word as the above. So also Du. moeder means 'mother, womb, hysterical passion'; cf. G. mutter-beschwerung, mother-fit, hysterical passion; mutterkolik, hysterical passion.

MOTHER (3), lees, sediment. (E.) 'As touching the mother or lees of oile olive;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxiii. c. 3. It is prob. an E. word, though there is no early authority for it. The form should really be mudder, as it is nothing but an extension of the word Mud, q. v. But it has been confused with M. E. moder, a mother, and the very common word has affected the very rare one. β. This phenomenon is not confined to English. Cf. O. Du. modder, 'mudd or mire in which swine and hoggs wallow' (Hexham); whence O. Du. modder, moeyer, ofte grond-sop, the lees, dregs, or the mother of wine or beer; id. But in mod. Du. we have moer signifying both sediment or dregs, also a matrix or female screw, by a confusion of moer (short for modder) with moer (short for moeder). γ. So again, G. moder, mud, mould, mouldering decay (whence moderig, mouldy, exactly like prov. E. mothy, mouldy) also appears as mutter, mother, sediment in wine or other liquids. Der. mother-y.

MOTION, movement. (F., — L.) 'Of that mocyon his cardynalles were sore abashed;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 326. — F. motion, omitted in Cotgrave, but used by Froissart in this very passage, as quoted by Littré. — Lat. motionem, acc. of motio, a movement. — Lat. motus, pp. of mouere, to move; see Move. Der. motion-less, Hen. V. iv. 2. 50.

MOTIVE, an inducement. (F., — L.) Properly an adj., but first introduced as a sb. M. E. motif, a motive, Chaucer, C. T. 5048, 9365. — O. F. motif, 'a motive, a moving reason'; Cot. — Low Lat. motivum, a motive; found A.D. 1452; but certainly earlier. — Low Lat. motivus, moving, animating; found A.D. 1369. Formed with Lat. suffix -ivus from mot, stem of motus, pp. of mouere; see Move. Der. motiv-i-ty (modern). Also motor, i. e. a mover, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 2. § 2, borrowed from Lat. motor, a mover.

MOTLEY, of different colours. (F., — G.) M. E. motelee, Chaucer, C. T. 273. So called because spotted; orig. applied to curdled milk, &c. — O. F. mattéle, 'clotted, knotted, curdled, or curd-like'; Cot. Cf. O. F. mattonné, in the expression ciel mattonné, 'a curdled [i. e. mottled] skie, or a skie full of small curdled clouds'; id. The O. F. mattéle answers to a pp. of a verb *matteler, representing an O. H. G. *matteln, a frequentative verb regularly formed from Bavarian matte, curds; Schmeller's Bayerisches Wörterbuch, col. 1685. Root unknown. Der. mottled, Drayton, Muses' Elysium, Nymph. 6

(R.); this is a mere translation of O. F. matellé, with E. -ed for F. -é.

MOTTO, a sentence added to a device. (Ital., -L.) In Shak. Per. ii. 2. 38. - Ital. motto, 'a word, a saying, a posic or briefe in any shield, ring, or emprise' [device]; Florio. - Lat. muttum, a mutter, a grunt, a muttered sound; cf. mutire, muttire, to mutter, mumble. Formed from \sqrt{MU} , to make a low sound; cf. Gk. $\mu\upsilon$, a muttered sound. See Mutter. Der. mot-et.

MOULD (1), earth, soil, crumbling ground. (E.) M. E. molde, P. Plowman, B. prol. 67, iii. 80. - A. S. molde, dust, soil, earth, country; Grein, ii. 261. + Du. mul, dust, dirt, refuse; cf. molm, mould. + Icel. mold, mould, earth. + Dan. muld. + Swed. mull (for muld). + Goth. mulda, dust; Mk. vii. 11. + G. mull; prov. G. molt, molten, garden mould (Flügel). β . All from a Teut. type

MOLDA, Fick, iii. 235. - \sqrt{MAL} , to grind, bruise, crumble; see Meal (1). Der. mould-warp, the old name for a mole (see mole); mould-y (see Addenda); also mould-er, a frequentative verb, 'to crumble often,' hence, to decay, cf. 'in the mouldering of earth in frosts and sunne,' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 337. [+]

MOULD (2), a model, pattern, form, fashion. (F., -L.) M. E. molde, P. Plowman, B. xi. 341. Formed (with excrement d, like the d after l in boul-d-er) from O. F. molle, mole, mod. F. moule, a mould. Littré gives molle as the spelling of the 14th century; a still earlier form was molde, in the 13th cent. - Lat. modulum, acc. of modulus, a measure, standard, size. See Model. \S It is far more likely that M. E. molde is from the form molle than from modle, whence it might, however, have been formed by transposition. But the Span. molde, on the other hand, is from modulus, by transposition. Der. mod-el, a dimin. form. Also mould, vb., Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 211; mould-er, mould-ing.

MOULT, to cast feathers, as birds do. (L.) The l is intrusive, just as in fault from M. E. faute; see Fault. M. E. mouten; 'his haire moutes,' i. e. falls off, Pricke of Conscience, l. 781. 'Moutyn, as fowlys, Plumso, deplumso;' Prompt. Parv. 'Mowter, moulter, quando auim pennæ decidunt;' Gouldman, cited by Way to illustrate 'Mowtare, or moutard [i. e. moulter, moulting bird], byrde, Plutor;' Prompt. Parv. - Lat. mutare, to change; whence F. muer, to moul; see Mew (3). So also O. H. G. muzôn, to moul, is merely borrowed from Lat. mutare; now spelt mausen in mod. G. Der. moulting; also mews; and see mutable.

MOUND, an earthen defence, a hillock. (E.) 'Compast with a mound;' Spenser, F. Q. ii. 7. 56. The sense of 'hillock' is due to confusion with the commoner word mount; but the two words are not at all nearly connected, though possibly from the same root. The older sense of mound was 'protection,' and it was even used of a body-guard or band of soldiers. M. E. mound, a protection, guard. 'Sir Jakes de Saint Poul herde how it was, Sixtene hundred of horsmen assemble o the gras; He wende toward Bruges pas pur pas, With swithe gret mounde' - Sir J. de S. P. heard how it was, he assembled 1600 horsemen on the grass; He went towards B. step by step, with a very great body of men; Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 189; - A. S. mund, protection, chiefly used as a law-term; see Bosworth. Grein, ii. 268, gives mund (1) the hand, (2) protection. We may note also the comp. mund-beorg, lit. a protecting mountain, as giving something of the sense of the mod. E. mound. + O. Fries. mund, mond, a protector, guardian. + O. H. G. mund, a protection, protector, hand; whence G. vormund, a guardian. β . The sense of 'protection' is more radical than that of 'hand,' and should be put first; the contrary order is due to a supposed connection with Lat. manus, which I hold to be a mistake. γ . Fick (iii. 231) gives the Teutonic type as MONDI; and refers it to \sqrt{MAN} , to jut out, as seen in Lat. e-min-ere, to jut out. This I believe to be right, as we may fairly deduce both promontory and mount from the same root as mound. The successive senses seem to be 'jutting out,' 'mountain,' 'protection,' 'hand.' See Mount.

MOUNT (1), a hill, rising ground. (L.) M. E. munt, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 11, l. 14. - A. S. mund, Grein, ii. 269. [Immediately from Latin, not through the F. mont.] - Lat. montem, acc. of mons, a mountain; stem mon-ti. Formed (with suffix -ta) from \sqrt{MAN} , to project, seen in Lat. e-min-ere, to jut out; cf. E. promontory. See Eminent, and Menace. Der. mount-ain, q. v.; mount (2), q. v.

MOUNT (2), to ascend. (F., -L.) M. E. mounten, P. Plowman, B. prol. 67; older form monten, King Alisaunder, 784. - F. monter, 'to mount;' Cot. - F. mont, a mountain, hill. [The verb is due to the use of the O. F. adverb a mont, up-hill; so also the adv. a val, down-hill, produced F. avalier, to swallow, and avalanche.] - Lat. montem, acc. of mons, a hill. See Mount (1). Der. mount-er, mount-ing; also mount-e-bank, q. v. Also a-mount, q. v.

MOUNTAIN, a hill. (F., -L.) In early use. M. E. montaine, Layamon, l. 1282. - O. F. montaigne, montaine; mod. F. montagne, a mountain. - Low Lat. montanea, montana, a mountain; Ducange. - Lat. montana, neut. pl., mountainous regions; from montanus, adj., hilly. - Lat. mont-, stem of mons, a mountain. See Mount (1). Der. mountain-ous, Cor. ii. 3. 127, from O. F. montaigneux, 'mountainous,' Cot.; mountain-er, Temp. iii. 3. 44, with suffix -er = F. -ier.

MOUNTBANK, a charlatan, quack doctor. (Ital., -L. and G.) Lit. 'one who mounts on a bench,' to proclaim his nostrums. See Trench, Select Glossary. In Shak. Hamlet, iv. 7. 142. 'Fellows, to mount a bank! Did your instructor in the dear tongues, never discourse to you Of the Italian mountebanks?' Ben Jonson, Volpone, i. 2 (Sir Politick). - Ital. montabanco, a mountebank; O. Ital. monta in banco, 'a mountebanke, montar' in banco, 'to plaie the mountibanke;' Florio. β . Hence the e stands for older i, which is short for in; the mod. Ital. must be divided monta-m-banco, where -m- (put for in) has become m before the following b. - Ital. montare, to mount, cognate with F. monter, to mount; in = Lat. in, in, on; and Ital. banco, from O. H. G. banc, a bench, money-table. See Mount (2), In, and Bank (2).

MOURN, to grieve, be sad. (E.) M. E. murnen, mournen, mornen; Chaucer, C. T. 3704. - A. S. murnan, to grieve; Grein, ii. 269. Also meornan, id. ii. 240. + Icel. morna. + Goth. maurnan. + O. H. G. mornén. β . The Goth. -n- before -an is a mere suffix, giving the verb an intransitive character, and as au is from older u, the base is simply MUR, to make a low moaning sound, which occurs also (reduplicated) in Murmur, q. v. This is accurately preserved in G. murren, 'to murmur, matter, grumble, growl, snarl'; Icel. murra, to murmur. Der. mourn-ful, Spenser, F. Q. i. 1. 54; mourn-ful-ly, mourn-ful-ness; mourn-ing, sb., A. S. murnung.

MOUSE, a small rodent quadruped. (E.) M. E. meus (without final e), Chaucer, C. T. 144. - A. S. mús, in Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Ferarum; Wright's Vocab. i. 23, col. 1. The pl. is mýs, by vowel change; whence E. mice. + Du. muis. + Icel. mús, pl. mýss. + Dan. mus. + Swed. mus. + G. maus. + Russ. muš'. + Lat. mus. + Gk. $\mu\upsilon\varsigma$. + Pers. mušk; Rich. Dict. p. 1325. + Skt. músha, a rat, a mouse. β . The sense is 'the stealing animal' = \sqrt{MUS} , to steal; whence Skt. muṣh, to steal, músha, a stealer. Der. mouse, vb., Mach. ii. 4. 13, mouse-er; mouse-eat, a plant, mouse-tail, a plant. Also muscle. (But not tit-mouse.)

MOUSTACHE, MUSTACHE, the hair on the upper lip. (F., - Ital., - Gk.) Formerly mustachio, Shak. L. L. L. v. 1. 110; this is taken from the Ital. form given below. Both mustachio and mustache are given in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - F. moustache, 'a mustachoe;' Cot. - Ital. mostaccio, 'a face, a snout, a mostachoe;' Florio. [Cf. Span. mostacho, a whisker, moustache; answering to the E. form mostacho in Florio.] - Gk. $\mu\upsilon\sigma\tau\alpha\kappa$, stem of $\mu\upsilon\sigma\tau\alpha\varsigma$, the upper lip, a moustache; Doric and Laconic form of $\mu\upsilon\sigma\tau\alpha\varsigma$, that wherewith one chews, the mouth, the upper lip; cf. $\mu\alpha\sigma\tau\acute{\alpha}\zeta\omega$, to chew, eat. See Mastic.

MOUTH, the aperture between the lips, an aperture, orifice, outlet. (E.) M. E. mouth, Chaucer, C. T. 153. - A. S. múð, Grein, ii. 266. + Du. mond. + Icel. munnr (for munr). + Dan. mund. + Swed. mun. + Goth. munths. β . Fick gives the Teutonic type as MONTHA; iii. 231. The proposed connection with Lat. mentum, the chin, seems doubtful. Der. mouth, vb., Hamlet, iv. 2. 20; mouth-ful, Pericles, ii. 1. 35; mouth-piece. [+]

MOVE, to set in motion, stir, impel. (F., -L.) M. E. mouen, meuen, meuen; P. Plowman, B. xvii. 194 (where all three spellings occur in the MSS. The v is written for v; the form meuen is common.) Also in Chaucer, Assembly of Foules, l. 150. - O. F. mouvoir, mod. F. mouvoir. - Lat. mouēre, to move; pp. motus. - \sqrt{MU} , to push; whence also Skt. miv, to push (with pp. múta, moved, corresponding to Lat. motus; also Gk. $\mu\epsilon\upsilon\epsilon\upsilon\mu\alpha\iota$, Doric form of $\mu\epsilon\upsilon\epsilon\upsilon\mu\alpha\iota$, I change, change place. Der. mov-er, Chaucer, C. T. 2989; mov-able, of which the M. E. form was meble or moible, P. Plowman, B. iii. 267, borrowed from F. meuble, Lat. mobilis, movable; mov-ably, mov-able-ness; move-mant, Gower, C. A. iii. 107. l. 12, from O. F. movement (Burguy); mov-ing, mov-ing-ly. Also mobile, from Lat. mobilis, moveable, often contracted to mob; see Mob. Also mot-ion, q. v., mot-ive, q. v., mot-or; from Lat. pp. motus. Also mo-ment, com-mot-ion, e-mot-ion, pro-mote, re-mote, re-move.

MOW (1), to cut down with a scythe. (E.) M. E. mowen; 'Mowe other mowen' (other MSS. mouwen), i. e. mow (hay) or stack (in a mow); P. Plowman, C. vi. 14. The old pt. t. was mew, still common in Cambridgeshire; see Layamon, 1942. - A. S. máwan, Grein, ii. 213. (The vowel-change from A. S. á to E. o is perfectly regular; cf. stán, stone, bán, bone.) + Du. maaien. + Dan. meie. + G. mähen, O. H. G. májan, mán. β . All from a base MA, to mow, reap; whence also Gk. $\delta\mu\acute{\alpha}\omega$, I reap, Lat. me-t-ere, to reap. Der. mow-er, mow-ing; also mea-d, mea-d-ow, after-ma-th, and (perhaps) mo-th.

MOW (2), a heap, pile of hay or corn. (E.) M. E. moue; 'moue' to pollute, render turbid, whence Gk. μῶναι (= μῶ-av-yeiv), to pollute; Russ. myite, to disturb, render muddy, whence myte, a muddy place (in water). Der. mudd-y, mudd-i-ly, mudd-i-ness, mudd-le.
 of sheaves = heap of sheaves, given as a various reading in Wyclif, Ruth. iii. 7 (later text). = A. S. mūga, a mow, Exod. xxii. 6, where the Vulgate has aceruus frugum. + Icel. múga, múgi, a swathe in mowing, also a crowd of people, a mob. β. The change from A. S. g to M. E. w is common; so also in M. E. morwe (morrow) from A. S. morgen. γ. Perhaps from ✓MU, to bind; cf. Skt. mú, mav, to bind.

MOW (3), a grimace; obsolete. (F., -O. Du.) 'With mow and mow'; Temp. iv. 47. 'Mopping and mowing'; K. Lear, iv. i. 64. 'I mowe, I mocke one; he useth to mocke and mowe'; Palsgrave. = F. moue, 'a mow, or mouth, an ill-favoured extension or thrusting out of the lips'; Cot. = O. Du. moewe, the protruded underlip; see Oudemans, who cites the phrase maken die moewe = to make a grimace, deride, in two passages. Cf. O. Du. mocken, or moelen, 'to move ones cheeks in chawing'; Hexham. Allied to Mock, q. v. ¶ The word mop, its companion, is also Dutch; see Mop (2).

MUCH, great in quantity. (Scand.) M. E. moche, muche, miche. Formerly also used with respect of size. 'A moche man' = a tall man; P. Plowman, B. viii. 70; where one MS. reads mykil. 'Moche and lite' = great and small; Chaucer, C. T. 496 (Six-text, A. 494), where other MSS. have muche, miche, meche. β. When we compare M. E. miche, moche, muche, with the corresponding forms michel, mochel, muchel, all variants of michel or mickle (A. S. mycel, micel), we see at once that the mod. E. muck and mickle only differ by the suffix at the end of the latter. Muche occurs in Layamon, 10350; but not in A. S. = Icel. mjóh, adv., much. Much answers to Gk. μέγας just as mickle does to Gk. *μεγάλος, appearing in the fem. form μεγάλη. See further under Mickle. And see More, Most. ¶ Just as we have both muck and mickle, we find A. S. lyt and lytel; see Little.

MUCILAGE, a slimy substance, gum. (F., -L.) Richardson cites the word from Bacon's Philosophical Remains. The adj. mucilaginous is in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = F. mucilage, 'slime, clammy sap, glewy juice'; Cot. = Lat. mucilago (stem mucilag-in-), mouldy moisture; not in White's Lat. Dict., but used by Theodorus Priscianus (iv. 1), a physician of the 4th century. Extended from *mucilus, an adj. formed from mucus; see Mucus. Der. mucilaginous (from the stem).

MUCK, filth, dung, dirt. (Scand.) M. E. muck; spelt muck, Gower, C. A. ii. 290, l. 3; muc, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 2557. (Stratmann also refers to Havelok, 2301, but the ref. is wrong.) = Icel. myki, dung; whence myki-rika, a muck-rake, dung-shovel; cf. moka, to shovel dung out of a stable. + Dan. møg, dung. Cf. Swed. mokka, to throw dung out of a stable, like prov. E. 'to muck out.' ¶ Not allied to A. S. meox, dung, whence prov. E. mixen, a dung-heap, which seems to go with A. S. migan, Icel. míga, the same as Lat. mingere, Skt. mih. See Mist. Der. muck-y, muck-i-ness; muck-heap, muck-rake (Bunyan's Pilg. Progress).

MUCK, AMUCK, a term applied to malicious rage. (Malay.) Only in the phrase 'to run amuck'; the word has been absurdly turned into a muck. Dryden goes further, and inserts an adjective between muck and the supposed article! 'And runs an Indian muck at all he meets'; Hind and Panther, iii. 1188. To run amuck is to run about in a mad rage. = Malay amuk, 'engaging furiously in battle, attacking with desperate resolution, rushing in a state of frenzy to the commission of indiscriminate murder, running amuck. It is applied to any animal in a state of vicious rage'; Marsden, Malay Dict. p. 16.

MUCUS, slimy fluid. (L.) The adj. mucous is in older use, the sb. being modern. Sir T. Browne says the chameleon's tongue has 'a mucous and slimy extremity'; Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 21, § 7. = Lat. mucus, mucosus, slime from the nose; whence the adj. mucosus, Englished by mucous. + Gk. μῦκος, a rare word, allied to μῦα, the discharge from the nose, μῦκη, snuff of a wick; cf. Gk. ἀπομύσσειν (= ἀπομύκ-yeiv), to wipe the nose; Lat. mungere. = ✓MUK, to cast away; appearing in Skt. muck, to let loose, dismiss, cast, effuse; muk-taka, a missile weapon; Fick, i. 727. Der. muc-ous; and see mucilage, match (2).

MUD, wet, soft earth, mire. (O. Low G.) M. E. mud; the dat. mudde occurs in Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 407; see Spec. of Eng., ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 156, l. 407. Not found in A. S. Of Old Low G. origin. = O. Low G. mudde, mud; whence the adj. muddig, muddy, Bremen Wörterbuch; cf. O. Swed. modd, mud (Ihre). Commoner in an extended form; cf. Du. modder, mud, Swed. modder, mother, lees of wine; Dan. mudder, mud; see Mother (3). β. The cognate High German form is found in the Bavarian mott, peat, already mentioned as the origin of E. moat; see Moat. This establishes it as a Teut. word. γ. Prob. further related to Icel. móðr, muddy snowbanks, heaps of snow and ice; to Icel. móða, (1) a large river, (2) mud, as in 'af leiri ok af móðu' = of earth and mud; and to Icel. móð, refuse of hay.

δ. The form of the root appears to be MU, to pollute, render turbid, whence Gk. μῶναι (= μῶ-av-yeiv), to pollute; Russ. myite, to disturb, render muddy, whence myte, a muddy place (in water). Der. mudd-y, mudd-i-ly, mudd-i-ness, mudd-le.

MUDDLE, to confuse. (O. Low G.) 'Muddle, to rout with the bill, as geese and ducks do; also, to make tipsy and unfit for business; Kersey, ed. 1715. A frequentative verb, formed with the usual suffix -le, from the sb. mud. Thus to mudd-le is to go often in mud, to dabble in mud; hence, to render water turbid, and, generally, to confuse. Similarly, Dan. muddre, to stir up mud in water, said of a ship, from Dan. mudder, mud. (The G. muddern has the same sense, but is merely borrowed from Low G. or Danish.) See Mud.

MUEZZIN, a Mohammedan crier of the hour of prayer. (Arab.) Spelt muezin in Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, p. 339. = Arab. mu-zin, mu-azzin, 'the public crier, who assembles people to prayers by proclamation from a minaret'; Rich. Dict. p. 1523; mu'azzin, 'the crier of a mosque'; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 617. Connected with Arab. azan, the call to prayers, Palmer, col. 17; uzn, the ear, Rich. p. 48, Palmer, col. 17; azina, he listened, Rich. p. 48.

MUFF (1), a warm, soft cover for the hands. (Scand.) Spelt muffe in Minshew, ed. 1627. Of Scand. origin. = O. Swed. muff, a muff (Ihre); Dan. muffe. + Du. mof, a muff; O. Du. mouwe, a sleeve (Hexham). + G. muff, a muff; M. H. G. mouwe, mowe, a sleeve, esp. a wide-hanging woman's sleeve (Wackernagel). + O. Fries. mowe, a hanging sleeve; Low G. mous, a sleeve (Bremen Wörterbuch).

β. The old sense is 'a sleeve,' esp. a long hanging sleeve such as was worn by women, in which the hands could be wrapped in cold weather. Fick gives the Teut. type as MOWA, a sleeve, iii. 225; and cites Lithuan. už-movùs, a muff, derived from Lith. mauti, to strip, whence už-mauti, to strip up, tuck up; see Nesselmann, p. 389.

γ. He further compares Lith. mauti with Lat. mouere, to move. If this be right, the word is derived from the verb which appears in E. as move; see Move. But the connection is hard to perceive. Der. muff-le, q. v.

MUFF (2), a silly fellow, simpleton. (E.) A prov. E. word, of imitative origin. It simply means 'a mumbler' or indistinct speaker. Cf. prov. E. muff, muffle, to mumble (Halliwell); moffle, to do anything ineffectually; id. So also prov. E. maffle, to speak indistinctly, an old word, occurring in Richard the Redeles, ed. Skeat, iv. 63; 'And somme maffid with the mouth, and nyst [knew not] what they mente.' A muff knows not what he means. Cf. Du. muffen, to dote; prov. G. muffen, to be sulky (Flügel). See Mumble.

MUFFLE, to cover up warmly. (F., -O. Low G.) Levins, ed. 1570, gives: 'A muffle, focale [i. e. a neck-cloth]; to muffle the face, velare; to muffle the mouth, obturare'; col. 184. 'I muffyll, je em-mouffle'; Palsgrave. Only the verb is now used, but it is derived from the sb. here given. = O. F. mofle, moufle (13th cent., Littré); the same as moufle, which Cot. explains by 'a winter mittaine.' = O. Du. moffel, 'a muff, or muffle lined with fure'; Hexham. Cf. Norweg. muffel, a half-glove, mitten; Aasen. β. It is clear that muff-le, sb., is a mere dimin. of muff, with the common Teut. dimin. suffix -el (-le). The Low Lat. muffula, a winter glove (whence F. moufle, Span. mufla), is a mere borrowing from Teutonic.

γ. From the sb. muffle came the verb to muffle, in common use owing to analogy with the numerous frequentative verbs ending in -le. See Muff (1). B. To muffle a bell is to wrap a cloth round the clapper; a muffled peal is a peal rung with such bells, rung on the 31st of December. At midnight, the muffles are taken off, and the New Year is rung in. Hence the phrase 'a muffled sound'; the sense of which approaches that of prov. E. muffle, to mumble, from a different source, as explained under Muff (2). Der. muffler, Merry Wives, iv. 2. 73.

MUFTI, an expounder of the law, magistrate. (Arab.) In Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, pp. 175, 285; spelt mufti, Howell, Directions for Travel, ed. Arber, p. 85. = Arab. mufti, 'a magistrate' (Palmer, col. 590); 'wise, one whose sentence has the authority of the law, an expounder of the Muhammedan law, the mufti or head law-officer amongst the Turks'; Rich. Dict. p. 1462. Connected with fatwá, 'a judicious or religious decree pronounced by a mufti, a judgment, sentence'; id. p. 1070. ¶ The phrase 'in mufti' means in civilian costume, as opposed to military dress.

MUG, a kind of cup for liquor. (C.) 'A mugge, pottle, Ollula'; Levins, 184. 24. Household utensils are sometimes Celtic, as noggin, piggin (sometimes shortened to pig); and the like. Probably of Celtic origin; cf. Irish mugan, a mug; mucog, a cup. β. On the other hand, a Swed. mugg, a mug, is given in the Tauchnitz Swed. Dict., but not in Widegren or Ihre; perhaps that also is of Celtic origin. It is difficult to decide, for want of materials.

MUGGY, damp and close, said of weather. (Scand.) Both muggy and muggish are in Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. = Icel. mugga, soft drizzling mist; whence mugguueðr, muggy, misty weather. Cf. Icel. mygla, to grow musty, allied to Swed. mögel, mould, mouldiness.

We find also Dan. muggen, musty, mouldy, mugne, to grow musty. Not improbably allied to Muck; cf. prov. E. moky, misty (Lincolnshire); Halliwell. Der. muggi-ness.

MUGWORT, the name of a wild flower. (E.) Spelt mogwort in Palsgrave. A.S. mucgwyrt, the Artemisia; see numerous examples of the word in Cockayne's A.S. Leechdoms, iii. 339. It plainly means 'midge-wort'; see Midge. Perhaps regarded as being good against midges; cf. flea-bane.

MULBERRY, the fruit of a certain tree. (Hybrid; L. and E.) M.E. moolbery. Trevisa translates sycomoros by moolberyes, i. 11, l. 4. Here the l, as is so often the case, stands for an older r; the A.S. name for the tree was mor-beam; see Cockayne's A.S. Leechdoms, iii. 339. 'Morus, vel rubus, mor-beam'; Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Arborum, in Wright's Vocab. i. 32, col. 2. [The A.S. beum, a tree, is mod. E. beam.] β. Berry is an E. word; mul=M.E. mool=A.S. mor-. The A.S. mor- is from Lat. morus, a mulberry-tree. The Gk. μῶρον, μῶρος, a mulberry, μωρία, a mulberry-tree, are rather cognate than the orig. of the Lat. word. γ. Root unknown. The G. maulbeere is similarly compounded, from Lat. morus and G. beere. See Sycamore. Der. murrey.

MULCT, a fine, penalty. (L.) Given as a sb. in Minshew, ed. 1627.—Lat. multa, a fine, penalty; whence also O.F. multe (Cotgrave). The older and better Lat. form is multa. Root unknown. Der. multet, vb.

MULE, the offspring of the horse and ass. (L.) M.E. mule, Rob. of Glouc. p. 189, l. 3.—A.S. mul; 'Mulus, mul,' Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Ferarum, in Wright's Voc. i. 23.—Lat. mūlus. β. The long u points to a loss of e; the word is cognate with Gk. μύλος, an ass, μύχλος, a stallion ass; we also find μύκλα, μύκλος, a black stripe on the neck and feet of the ass. Perhaps allied to Gk. μάχλος, lewd. Der. mūl-ish; mul-et-er, spelt mulet in old ed. of Shakespeare, 1 Hen. VI, iii. 2. 68, from F. muletier, 'a mulet' (Cot.), which from F. mulet, 'a moyle, mulet, or great mule' (id.), formed with suffix -et from F. mule=Lat. mulum, acc. of mulus. Also mul-atto, one of mixed breed, the offspring of black and white parents, in Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, p. 116, from Span. mulato, by-form of muleto, a young mule, a mulatto, cognate with F. mulet.

MULLED, a term applied to sweetened ale or wine. (E.) Corrupted from mould, as will appear. From this term has been evolved the verb to mull, to sweeten ale or wine; but this is modern, and due to a total loss of the orig. sense of the word. The older term is mulled ale, a corruption of muld-ale, or mold-ale, lit. a funeral ale or banquet. [It must be remembered that M.E. ale meant a feast or banquet; see Bridal.] M.E. 'mold-ale, molde ale, Potacio funerosa vel funeralis'; Prompt. Parv. p. 341; see the account of funeral entertainments in Brand's Popular Antiquities. Cf. Lowland Sc. mulde-mete, lit. mould-meat, a funeral banquet; Jamieson. For further proof that mulde=mould, cf. Lowland Sc. muldes, mools, pulverised earth, esp. the earth of the grave; mule, mool, to crumble; Jamieson. Note also Icel. mold, earth, pl. moldar, a funeral. See Mould. B. It is easy to see how the word took up a new sense, viz. by confusion with M.E. mullen, to break to powder, crumble (Prompt. Parv. p. 348), and the sb. mull, powder, the sense of which was transferred (as Way suggests) to the 'powdered condiments' which the ale contained, esp. grated spices, and the like. C. It is remarkable that this confusion did not much affect the etymology; for the M.E. mull, powder, is only another form of mould, which is still spelt mull in Swedish.

MULLEIN, a kind of wild flower. (E.) The great mullein is Verbascum thapsus. Spelt mullein in Minshew, ed. 1627. M.E. moleyn, Prompt. Parv.—A.S. molegn, mullen; in Cockayne's A.S. Leechdoms, iii. 339; cf. Wright's Voc. i. 290, l. 34. β. The suffix -egn (= ign) is due to a combination of the Aryan suffixes -ka and -na. It occurs again in holegn, holly; and the prov. E. hollen or hollin (holly) is formed from holegn (with loss of g) just as mullein or mullen is formed from molegn. The weakening of g explains the i in the form mullein. Thus the word is certainly E., and the F. molène is borrowed from it. γ. One kind of mullein is called moth-mullein (Verbascum blattaria, from blatt, a moth), from a notion that it was good against moths; cf. 'Herbe aux mites, moth-mullein'; Cot. This renders very plausible the suggestion (in Diefenbach) of a derivation from the old Teutonic word preserved in Goth. malō, a moth (Matt. vi. 29), and in Dan. møl, a moth. Cf. G. mottenkraut, moth-mullein (Wedgwood).

MULLET (1), a kind of fish. (F.,—L.) M.E. molet; 'Molet, fysche, Mullus'; Prompt. Parv. Older form mulet, occurring as a gloss to Lat. mulus in a list of fishes of the 12th cent.; see Wright's Vocab. i. 98, l. 1.—O.F. mulet, 'the mullet-fish'; Cot. Formed, with dimin. suffix -et, from Lat. mullus, late Lat. mulus, the red mullet. Root unknown. [†] ed. 1674. A term in heraldry.—O.F. molette, a rowel; 'molette d'esperon, the rowell of a spur'; Cot.; 'mollette, 'a mullet, the ram-head of a windlesse, the rowell of a spur'; id. Cf. O. Ital. mollette, 'mulletts, nippers, or fire-tongs,' Florio; dimin. of molla, 'a wheel of a clock that moueth all the rest,' id. Again, Ital. molla is another form of Ital. mola, 'a mill-stone, grinding-stone, wheel'; id.—Lat. mola, a mill. See Molar, Mill. ¶ The transference of sense was from 'wheel of a water-mill' to any wheel, including the spur-rowel, which the mullet resembled. Perhaps the F. word was borrowed from the Ital. instead of directly from the Latin.

MULLET (2), a five-pointed star. (F.,—L.) In Blount's Gloss.,

MULLION, an upright division between the lights of windows. (F.,—L.) A corruption of munion, with the same sense, which is still in use in Dorsetshire; Halliwell. It occurs in some edd. of Florio; see below.—F. moignon, 'a stump, or the blunt end of a thing; moignon des ailes, the stumps, or pinions of the wings; moignon du bras, the brawn, or brawny part of the arm'; Cot. β. Hence munion, just as O.F. troignon gives E. trunnion. Cf. O. Ital. mugnone, a carpenter's munnion or trunnion, Florio (as cited by Wedgwood); it is not in the ed. of 1598. As Wedgwood well observes, 'the munnion or mullion of a window is the stump of the division before it breaks off into the tracery of the window.' It clearly took its name from the likeness to the stump of a lopped tree, which is one of the senses of F. moignon; see Littré. The word also occurs as Span. muñon, the brawn or muscle of the arm, the stump of an arm or leg cut off; Port. munhões, pl. of munhão, the trunnions of a gun. Further allied to Span. muñeca, the wrist, Port. muneca. γ. From O.F. moing, maimed (Diez, 4th ed. p. 725). Diez cites only the Breton moñ, maimed, mutilated in the hand or arm. But Legonidec, in his Breton Dict., says that the forms mañk, moñk, and moñs occur in the same sense; and it seems to me likely that the Bret. mañk, clearly the oldest form, is cognate with Lat. mancus, maimed, mutilated. And when Diez rightly derives trunnion (O.F. troignon) from O.F. tronc (= Ital. tronco), we can hardly be wrong in connecting munion (O.F. moignon) with Ital. monco, maimed, which of course is the Lat. mancus.

5. Whatever irregularities there may be in the one case are the same as in the other, with the exception of the vowel. But this need not prevent us from identifying Ital. monco with mancus, though the more usual form is manco. The fact is that the nasal n is apt to turn a into o, as in E. long, from A.S. lang, corresponding to which is Lat. longus. ¶ For the change from n to i, cf. Boulogne from Bononia, and Ital. alma from Lat. anima.

MULTANGULAR, having many angles. (L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715.—Lat. multi, stem of multus, many; and angularis, angular. See Multitude and Angular. ¶ Similarly, multi-lateral, from multi=multo-, crude form of multus, and E. lateral, q. v. So also multi-form.

MULTIFARIOUS, manifold, diversified. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; he says it occurs in Bacon. Englished (by change of -us to -ous, as in ardu-ous, &c.) from Lat. multifarius, manifold, various. The orig. sense appears to be 'many-speaking,' i. e. speaking on many subjects.—Lat. multi=multo-, crude form of multus, much; and -farius, prob. connected with fari, to speak. Cf. the rare word fariari, to speak. See Multitude and Fate.

MULTIPLE, repeated many times. (L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. A coined word, analogous to tri-ple, quadru-ple, &c., the suffix being due to the Lat. suffix -plex; see Multiply.

MULTIPLY, to increase many times, make more numerous. (F.,—L.) M.E. multiplen, Chaucer, C. T. 16303. He also has multiplyng, sb., C. T. 12308; and multiplication, C. T. 16317.—F. multiplier, 'to multiply'; Cot.—Lat. multiplicare, to render manifold.—Lat. multipl-, stem of multipl-, manifold.—Lat. multi=multo-, stem of multus, much; and the suffix -plex, answering to E. fold. See Multitude and Complex, Plait, Fold. Der. multiple-and, from the fut. pass. part. multiplicandus; multiple-at-ion, from F. multiplication=Lat. acc. multiplicationem; multiple-at-ive; multipl-er; multiple-i-ty, Drayton, The Mooncalf (R.).

MULTITUDE, a great number, a crowd. (F.,—L.) M.E. multitude, Gower, C. A. i. 220.—F. multitude, 'a multitude'; Cot.—Lat. multitudin-, acc. of multitudo, a multitude. Formed (with suffix -tudo) from multi=multo-, crude form of multus, many, much. Root unknown. Der. multitudin-ous, Macb. ii. 2. 62, from the stem multitudin-.

MUM, an interjection, impressing silence. (E.) In Shak. Temp. iii. 2. 59. M.E. mom, mun, expressive of the least possible sound with the lips; P. Plowman, B. prol. 215; Lydgate, London Lyckpeny, st. 4, in Spec. of Eng. ed. Skeat, p. 24. So also Lat. mu, Gk. μῦ, the least sound made with the lips; Skt. man, to murmur. Evidently of imitative origin. Der. mum-ble; and see nummer. Compare mew, murmur, mutter, myth.

MUMBLE, to speak indistinctly, to chew inefficiently. (E.) The b is excrement, and due to emphasis; the final -le is the usual frequentative ending. M.E. momelen, mamelen, to speak indistinctly or weakly; P. Plowman, A. v. 21, B. v. 21. Formed with the frequent. suffix -el- from M. E. mom, a slight sound. See MUM. Cf. Du. mommen, G. mummeln, to mutter, mumble; similarly formed. Also Dan. mumle, Swed. mumla, to mumble. Der. mumbl-er, mumbl-ing.

MUMMER, a masker, buffoon. (F., -Du.) 'That goeth a mummyng'; Tyndall, Works, p. 13, col. 2, l. 1. 'As though he came in in a mummyng'; Sir T. More, Works, p. 975 b. 'Made prouysyon for a dysguysynge or a mummyng'; Fabyan's Chron. an. 1399-1400. 'Mommery, mommerie'; Palsgrave. This early use of the F. form mummery shows that we took the word through the French, though it was orig. a Dutch or Platt-deutsch word. Cotgrave gives, however, no verb; but this was easily developed. -O. F. mommeur, 'a mummer, one that goes a mummyng'; also mommerie, 'a mummery, a mummyng'; Cot. -O. Du. mommen, 'to goe a moming, or in a maske'; also mom, mommer, or mommekans, 'a mummer, or a masker'; also mommerye, 'mommong, or masking' (with F. suffix); Hexham. He also gives mom-aensicht, 'a vizard, or a mommers vizard'. Cf. Low G. mummeln, betummeln, to mask, mums, a mask; Bremen Wörterbuch. (Hence G. vermummen, to mask.) β. The origin is imitative, from the sound mum or mom, used by nurses to frighten children, like the E. bo! See Wedgwood, who refers to the habit of nurses who wish to frighten or amuse children, and for this purpose cover their faces and say mum! or bo! whence the notion of masking to give amusement. Cf. G. mummel, a bugbear. Thus the origin is much the same as in the case of mum, mumble; see MUM. Der. mummer-y.

MUMMY, an embalmed human body. (F., -Ital., -Pers.) Formerly used of stuff derived from mummies. 'Mumy, Mumy, a thing like pitch sold by the apothecaries; . . . one [kind] is digged out of the graves, in Arabia and Syria, of those bodies that were embalmed, and is called Arabian Mumy'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'Mummy hath great force in stanching blood'; Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 980. -O. F. mumie, 'mummy; man's flesh embalmed; or rather the stuffe wherewith it hath been long embalmed'; Cot. -Ital. mumia (cf. Span. momia). -Pers. mumayin, a mummy. -Pers. mum, móm, wax (much used in embalming); Rich. Dict. p. 1529. [†]

MUMP, to mumble, sulk, whine, beg. (Du.) A mumper was an old cant term for a beggar; and to mump was to beg, also to be sulky; see Nares, ed. Halliwell and Wright. The original notion was to mumble, hence to mutter, be sulky, to beg; used derivatively with various senses. 'How he mumps and bridles!' where the sense appears to be 'grimaces'; Beaum. and Fletcher, iii. 2 (Pedro). -Du. mompēn, to mump, to cheat (Sewel). Cf. O. Du. mompelen, to mumble (Sewel); mommen, mompelen, to mumble (Hexham). β. The form mompelen is nothing but an emphasised form of mommen, and mompēn of mommen, to say mum, to mask. That is, mump is merely a strengthened form of the imitative word mum; see MUM, MUMBLE, MUMMER. The curious Goth. verb bi-mump-jan, to deride, mock at, Luke, xvi. 14, has a similar origin. Der. mump-er, mump-ish (sullen); mumps, q. v.

MUMPS, a swelling of the glands of the neck. (Du.) This troublesome disease renders speaking and eating difficult, and gives the patient the appearance of being sullen or sulky. 'To have the mumps' or 'to be in the mumps' was, originally, to be sullen; the sense was easily transferred to the disease which gave such an appearance. It is derived from the verb MUMP, q. v. We find mumps used as a term of derision. 'Not such another as I was, mumps!' Beaum. and Fletcher, Scornful Lady, v. 1 (Elder Loveless). 'Sick o' the mumps,' i. e. sulky; B. and F., Bonduca, i. 2 (Petillius), near the end.

MUNCH, to chew, masticate. (E.) In Mach. i. 3. 5 (where old edd. have mounck'd). M. E. monchen, Chaucer, Troil. i. 915. Monch- answers to an older form manck-, evidently an imitative word parallel to the base nam- in M. E. namelen, to mumble; see MUMBLE.

¶ We cannot deduce it from F. manger, for phonetic reasons; yet it is quite possible that this common F. word may have helped to suggest the special sense. The F. manger is from Lat. manducare, to chew, extended from manducus, a glutton, which is from mandere, to chew; see MANDIBLE. Der. munch-er.

MUNDANE, worldly. (F., -L.) Taken from F., but now spelt as if from Latin. 'For folowinge of his pleasaunce mondayne'; Skelton, Book of Three Fooles, ed. Dyce, i. 205. -F. mondain, 'mundane'; Cot. -Lat. mundanus, worldly. -Lat. mundus, the world (lit. order, like Gk. κόσμος). -Lat. mundus, clean, adorned. -✓MAND, to adorn; preserved in Skt. mand, to dress, adorn.

MUNICIPAL, pertaining to a township or corporation. (F., -L.) In Cotgrave. -F. municipal, 'municipall'; Cot. -Lat. municipalis, belonging to a municipium, i. e. a township which received the rights of Roman citizenship, whilst retaining its own laws. -Lat. municipi-, crude form of municipes, a free citizen, lit. one who takes office or undertakes duties. -Lat. munici- (see MUNIFICENCE) and capere, to take; see CAPTURE. Der. municipal-i-ty.

⊕ MUNIFICENCE, bounty, liberality. (F., -L.) Both munificence and munificent are in Minsheu, ed. 1627. The sb. is the more orig. word. -F. munificence, 'munificence'; Cot. -Lat. munificentia, bounty, bountifulness. Formed as if from a pres. pt. munificent-, from a verb munificere; but the only related word found is the adj. munificus, bountiful, liberal, formed upon mun-, base of munus, a duty, a present, and facere, to make; so that munificus = present-making. [The verb munificare is a mere derivative of munificus.] β. For the verb facere, see FACT. The Lat. munus signifies orig. 'obligation'; from ✓MU, to bind, whence also E. munition, muniment, com-mon, com-mune, com-muni-cate, im-muni-ty, re-muner-ate. See below. Der. munificent, coined to suit the sb.; munificent-ly.

MUNIMENT, a defence, a record of a claim, title-deed. (F., -L.) In Shak. muniments means expedients or instruments; Cor. i. 1. 122. -F. muniment, 'a fortifying; also used in the sense of munition'; Cot. -Lat. munimentum, a defence, safeguard. Formed with suffix -mentum from munire, to fortify, put for moenire, lit. to furnish with a wall. -Lat. moenia, neut. pl., ramparts, walls, defences. -✓MU, to bind, hence, to protect; cf. Skt. mu, mav, to bind. See MUNITION.

MUNITION, materials used in war; also, a fortress. (F., -L.) In Isaiah, xlix. 7, xxxiii. 16; and in Shak. K. John, v. 2. 98. -F. munition, 'munition, store, provision, provant or victuals for an army'; Cot. -Lat. munitionem, acc. of munio, a blockading, defending, securing. -Lat. munitus, pp. of munire, to fortify. See MUNIMENT. Der. am-munition.

MUNION, the older and correct form of MULLION, q. v. MURAL, belonging to a wall. (F., -L.) 'He [Manlius Capitolinus] . . . was honoured with a murall crown of gold'; Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. vii. c. 28. -F. mural, 'mural, of or belonging to a wall'; Cot. -Lat. muralis, mural. -Lat. murus, a wall; O. Lat. moerus, moirus.

β. Probably akin to moenia, walls; from ✓MU, to bind; hence, to protect. See MUNIMENT. Der. im-mure.

MURDER, MURTHUR, wilful killing of another man. (E.) M. E. mordre, morder; Chaucer, C. T. 15057. Also morthre, Rob. of Glouc. p. 560, l. 9. -A. S. morðor, morður, Grein, ii. 263. + Goth. maurth.

β. The word appears without a suffix in A. S. and O. Sax. morð, O. Friesic morth, mord, G. mord, Icel. morð, death, murder, cognate with Lat. mors (stem mort-), death; see MORTAL. Der. murder, vb., M. E. murtheren, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 278; murder-er; murder-ess, spelt morðrice in Gower, C. A. i. 351, last line; murder-ous or murher-ous, Mach. ii. 3. 147; murder-ous-ly.

MURIATIC, briny, pertaining to brine. (L.) In Johnson. -Lat. muraticus, pickled or lying in brine. -Lat. maria, salt liquor, brine, pickle.

β. Prob. related to Lat. mare, the sea; see MERE (1).

MURICATED, prickly. (L.) 'Muricated, in botany, prickly, full of sharp points'; Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. -Lat. muricatus, adj. of the form of a pp. formed from murice, stem of murex, a fish having sharp prickles, also, a sharp pointed stone, a spike. Root unknown.

MURKY, MIRKY, dark, obscure, gloomy. (E.) The -y is a modern addition. 'Hell is murky'; Mach. v. 1. 41. M. E. mirke, merke. 'The merke dale'; P. Plowman, B. i. 1. 'The mirke nith' [night]; Havelok, 404. -A. S. murc, myrce, mirce, murky, dark; Grein, ii. 269, 271. + O. Sax. mirki, dark. + Icel. myrk. + Dan. and Swed. mörk. β. The form of the word, according to Fick, iii. 234, is such as to remind us of Lithuan. margas, striped, variegated, which is certainly related to E. mark; in which case, the orig. sense was covered with marks, streaky, parti-coloured. See MARK (1). γ. But we can hardly overlook the Russ. murake, gloom, mrachite, to darken, obscure; though the final letters of the stem do not quite suit.

δ. The form of the root appears to be MARG; it is remarkable that the shorter form MAR, to rub, grind, is the root of Skt. malas, dirty, Gk. μέλας, black, Skt. malina, obscure, Lithuan. melinas, livid blue, &c. These certainly seem to be related words; and even E. mark is of the same family.

ε. Otherwise, from ✓MAR, to glimmer; see MORN. Der. murki-ly, murki-ness.

MURMUR, a low muttering sound; to mutter, complain in a low voice. (F., -L.) M. E. murmur, sb., Chaucer, C. T. Pers. Tale, De Invidia; murmuren, vb., id. 10518. -F. murmure, 'a murmur'; also murmurer, 'to murmur'; Cot. -Lat. murmur, a murmur; whence the verb murmurare. + Gk. μωρμύρειν, to rush and roar as water. + Skt. marmara, the rustling sound of the wind. β. Evidently a reduplicated form from the imitative ✓MAR or MUR, expressive of a rustling noise; as in Icel. murra, G. murren, to murmur. Der. murmur-ous, Pope, tr. of Odyssey, b. xx. l. 19.

MURRAIN, an infectious disease among cattle. (F., -L.) M. E. moreyne, moreine, P. Plowman, C. iv. 97. -O. F. moreins, 'not found; closely allied to O. F. morine, a carcass of a beast, a malady or murrain among cattle. See Roquefort, who cites an O. F. translation of Levit. xi. 8; 'tu eschiveras mortes morines' = thou shalt eschew dead carcasses.' Cf. Span. morriña, Port. morrinha, murrain. -O. F.

morir (mod. F. mourir), to die (Burguy).—Lat. mori, to die; see Mortal.

MURREY, dark red; obsolete. (F.,—L.) 'The leaves of some trees turn a little murray or reddish;' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 512. Spelt murrey; Palsgrave.—O. F. moree, 'a kind of murrey, or dark red colour;' Cot. This O. F. moree answers to a Low Lat. morata, fem. of moratus. We actually find Low Lat. moratum in the sense of a kind of drink, made of thin wine coloured with mulberries; see Ducange. Cf. Ital. morato, mulberry-coloured, from Ital. mora, a mulberry; Span. morado, mulberry-coloured, from Span. mora. Hence the derivation is from Lat. morus, a mulberry; and the sense is properly 'mulberry-coloured.' See Mulberry.

MURRION, another spelling of Morion, q. v.

MUSCADEL, MUSCATEL, MUSCADINE, a rich, fragrant wine, a fragrant pear. (F.,—Ital.,—L.,—Pers.,—Skt.) Shak. has muscadell, a wine, Tam. Shrew, iii. 2. 174. 'Muscadell, mulsam apianum;' Levins. Spelt muscadine, Beaum. and Fletcher, Loyal Subject, iii. 4, last line. And see Nares.—O. F. muscadell, 'the wine muscadell or muscadine;' Cot.—O. Ital. moscadello, moscatello, 'the wine muscadine;' moscardino, 'a kinde of muske comfets, the name of a kind of grapes and peares;' moscatini, 'certain grapes, peares, and apriocks, so called;' Florio. Dimin. forms from O. Ital. moscato, 'sweetened or perfumed with muske; also the wine muskadine;' id.—O. Ital. muschio, musco, 'muske; also, a muske or civet cat;' id.—Lat. muscus, musk; see Musk.

MUSCLE (1), the fleshy parts of the body by which an animal moves. (F.,—L.) Sir T. Elyot has the pl. musculus; Castet of Helth, b. ii. c. 33. But this is a Latinised form. Spenser has muscles, Astrophel, 120.—F. muscle.—Lat. musculus, acc. of musculus, (1) a little mouse, (2) a muscle, from its creeping appearance. Dimin. of mus, a mouse, cognate with E. mouse; see Mouse. Der. muscul-ar, in Kersey, ed. 1715, substituted for the older term musculus (Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674), from Lat. musculosus, muscular.

MUSCLE (2), MUSSEL, a shell-fish. (L.) Really the same word as the above, but borrowed at a much earlier period, and directly from Latin. M. E. muscle, Chaucer, C. T. 7682; P. Plowman, C. x. 94; which follows the F. spelling.—A. S. muscle; 'Muscula, musle;' and again, 'Geniscula, muscle;' Wright's Vocab. i. 65, 77. [Here the x (or cx) stands for es, by metathesis for se, just as in A. S. æscian for ascian; see Ask.]—Lat. musculus, a small fish, sea-muscle; the same word as musculus, a little mouse; see Muscle (1).

¶ The double spelling of this word can be accounted for; the Lat. musculus became A. S. muscle, early turned into musle, whence E. mussel, the final -el being regarded as the A. S. dimin. suffix. The spelling muscle is French. ¶ The remarkable change of sense in Lat. musculus from 'little mouse' to 'muscle' has its counterpart in Dan. mus-ling, a muscle (the fish), lit. 'mouse-ling.' Cf. Swed. mus, a mouse; musla, a muscle (fish); Gk. μῦς, (1) mouse, (2) muscle, in both E. senses. We even find, as Mr. Wedgwood points out, F. souris, 'a mouse, also, the sinewy brawn of the arm;' Cot. [†]

MUSCROID, moss-like. (Hybrid; L., with Gk. suffix.) Botanical. Coined from Lat. musco, crude form of muscus, moss; and the Gk. suffix -ειδής, like, from εἶδος, form. See Moss.

MUSE (1), to meditate, be pensive. (F.,—L.) M. E. musen, Chaucer, C. T. 5453; P. Plowman, B. x. 181. [We also find M. E. mosard, musard, a dreamer, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, pp. 229, 266; from F. musard, sb. 'a musser, dreamer,' also as adj. 'musing, dreaming,' &c.; Cot.]—F. muser, 'to muse, dreame, study, pause, linger about a matter;' Cot.—O. F. musse, the mouth, snout of an animal; only preserved in the dimin. musel, later museau, whence E. muzzle; see Muzzle.

β. Strange as it may seem, this etymology, given by Diez, is the right one; it is amply borne out by Florio's Ital. Dict., where we find: 'Musare, to muse, to think, to surmise, also to muzzle, to muffle, to mocke, to iest, to gape idlie about, to hould ones muzzle or snout in the aire.' This is plainly from Ital. muso, 'a musle, a snout, a face.' The image is that of a dog snuffing idly about, and musing which direction to take; and may have arisen as a hunting term. [†] γ. Other derivations, such as from Lat. musinari, to meditate, or from O. H. G. muazôn, to have leisure, or from Lat. musare, to mutter, are (phonetically) incorrect. Der. mus-er, a-muse.

MUSE (2), one of the nine fabled goddesses who presided over the arts. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) In Shak. Hen. V, prol. 1.—F. musse.—Lat. musca, a muse.—Gk. μοῦσα, a muse. Root uncertain. Der. mus-um, q. v., mus-ic, q. v., mos-aic, q. v.

MUSEUM, a repository for works of art, &c. (L.,—Gk.) 'Museum, a study, or library; . . . The Museum or Ashmole's Museum, a neat building in the city of Oxford . . . founded by Elias Ashmole, Esq.:' Phillips, World of Words, ed. 1706. This building was finished in 1683.—Lat. museum.—Gk. μουσεῖον, the temple of the muses, a study, school.—Gk. μοῦσα, a muse; see Muse (2).

MUSHROOM, a kind of fungus. (F.,—O. H. G.) In Shak.

Temp. v. 39. The final m is put for n. M. E. muscheron, explained as 'toodys hatte, boletus, fungus;' Prompt. Parv.—O. F. mouscheron, mousseron, 'a mushrome;' Cot. Extended from O. F. mousse, moss.—O. H. G. mos (G. moos), moss; cognate with E. moss; see Moss.

MUSIC, the science of harmony. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) M. E. musik, musyk, P. Plowman, B. x. 172.—F. musique, 'music;' Cot.—Lat. musica.—Gk. μουσική, any art over which the muses presided, esp. music; fem. of μουσικός, belonging to the muses.—Gk. μοῦσα, a muse; see Muse (2). Der. music-al, L. L. L. iv. 3. 342; music-ally; music-i-an, Merch. Ven. v. 106, from F. musicien.

MUSIT, a small gap in a hedge; obsolete. (F.) In Shak. Venus, 683; and see Two Noble Kinsmen, iii. 1. 97, and my note thereon; also Nares.—O. F. mussette, 'a little hole, corner, or hoord to hide things in;' Cot. Hence applied to the hole in a hedge through which a hare passes. Dimin. of O. F. musse, 'a secret corner;' Cot.—F. musser, 'to hide, conceal;' id. Of uncertain origin.

MUSK, a strong perfume obtained from the musk-deer. (F.,—L.,—Pers.,—Skt.) In Shak. Merry Wives, ii. 2. 68.—F. musc, 'musk;' Cot.—Lat. muscum, acc. of muscus, musk.—Pers. muskh, mishk, musk; Rich. Dict. p. 1417; whence also late Gk. μόσχος, musk.—Skt. mushka, a testicle; because obtained from a bag behind the deer's navel. The orig. sense of Skt. mushka is thief; from mushk, to steal. See Mouse. Der. musc-adel, q. v., nut-meg, q. v.; musk-apple, mush-rose (from the scent); mush-y.

MUSKET, a small hawk; a hand-gun. (F.,—Ital.,—L.) α. The old guns had often rather fanciful names. One was called the falconet, a dimin. of falcon; another a saker, which was also the name of a hawk; another a basilisk; another a culverin, i. e. snake-like; see Culverin. So also the musket was called after a small hawk of the same name.

β. Shak. has musket, a hand-gun; All's Well, iii. 2. 111. M. E. musket, spelt muskyte in Prompt. Parv., and explained as a 'byrde.' 'Musket, a lytell hauke, mouchet;' Palsgrave. See Way's note, who remarks that 'the most ancient names of fire-arms were derived from monsters, dragons, or serpents, or from birds of prey, in allusion to velocity of movement.'—O. F. mousquet, 'a musket (hawke, or piece)'; Cot. [Here piece = gun.] [Cotgrave also gives O. F. mouchet, mouschet, 'a musket, the tassel of a sparhawk; also the little singing-bird that resembles the friquet, [which is] a kind of sparrow that keeps altogether about walnut-trees.']—Ital. moschetto, 'a musket; also, a musket-hawke;' Florio. γ. Just as O. F. mouchet, mouschet, is related to O. F. mosche, mousche, a fly, so Ital. moschetto is related to Ital. mosca, a fly. The connection is not very obvious, but see the remarks in Scheler, who shews that small birds were sometimes called flies; a clear example is in G. gras-mücke, a hedge-sparrow, lit. a 'grass-midge.' The particular hawk here spoken of was so named from his small size.

δ. And this, mere smallness of size, may be the reason for the name of 'fly,' not because of their speckled plumage, as some have supposed; the F. moucheter, to speckle, is a longer form than mouchet, not the original of it. Ample proofs of this appear in Florio, in the forms moscardo, 'a kind of birde, also a musket hawk;' moscherino, 'a kind of flie, the name of a birde;' moschetti, 'a kind of sparowes in India, so little, as with feathers and all one is no bigger then [than] a little walnut;' all of which words are derived from mosca. [We may also compare the Span. and E. mosquito.]—Lat. musca, a fly; see Mosquito. Der. musket-er, spelt musqueteer in Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2, l. 567, from O. F. mousquetaire, 'a musketeer, a soldier that serves with a musket;' Cot.; musket-oon, 'a short gun, with a very large bore,' Kersey, ed. 1715, from Ital. moschettone, a blunderbuss; musket-r-y.

MUSLIN, a fine thin kind of cotton cloth. (F.,—Ital.,—Syriac.) Spelt musellin and muslin in Phillips, ed. 1706.—F. mousseline, muslin.—Ital. musolino, muslin; a dimin. form of muscolo, also used in the same sense.—Syriac Mosul (Webster), the name of a city in Kurdistan, in the E. of Turkey in Asia, where it was first manufactured, according to Marco Polo. The Arab. name of the city is Mawsil; Rich. Dict. p. 1526.

MUSQUITO, MUSSEL; see Mosquito, Muscle (2).

MUSSULMAN, a true believer in the Mohammedan faith. (Pers.,—Arab.) 'The full-fed Mussulman;' Dryden, Hind and Panther, i. 377. In Richardson's Arab. and Pers. Dict., p. 1418, the form musulmán, an orthodox believer, is marked as Persian. The Arab. form is muslim, answering to E. moslem; see Moslem.

MUST (1), part of a verb implying 'obligation.' (E.) This verb is extremely defective; nothing remains of it but the past tense, which does duty both for past and present. The infinitive (mote) is obsolete; even in A. S. the infin. (motan) is not found. But the present tense is common in the Middle-English period. M. E. mot, moot, pres. t., I am able, I can, I may, I am free to, very seldom with the sense of obligation; pt. t. moste (properly dissyllabic), I could, I might, I ought. 'As euer moot I drinken wyn or ale' = as sure as I can (or hope to be free to) drink wine or ale; Chaucer, C. T. 834. In Ch. & C. T. 734, 737, 740, 742, Tyrwhitt has wrongly changed moot into moste, against both the MSS. and the metre. The right readings are: 'He moot rehearse' = he is bound to relate; 'he moot telle' = he will be sure to tell; 'He moot as wel' = he is bound as well; 'The wordes mole be' = the words should be. The pt. t. moste, muste occurs in l. 712; 'He muste preche' = he will have to preach; where many MSS. have the spelling moste. — A. S. *mōtan, not used in the infinitive; pres. t. ic mōt, I am able, I may, can, am free to, seldom with the sense of obligation; pt. t. ic mōste; see Grein, ii. 265. + O. Sax. mōtan; pres. t. ik mōt, ik muot; pt. t. ik mōsta. + O. Fries. pres. t. ik mot; pt. t. ik moste. + Du. moeten, to be obliged; pres. t. ik moet, pt. t. ik moest. + Swed. mōste, I must, both as pres. and pt. tense; so that the similar use in E. may be partly due to Scand. influence. + G. müssen, M. H. G. muezen, O. H. G. mōzan, of which the old sense was 'to be free to do' a thing, to be allowed; pres. t. ich muss; pt. t. ich musste. + Goth. *mōtan, not found; pres. t. ik mot, pt. t. ik mōsta. β. Root uncertain; it may be connected with meet, moot; but this is not at all made out.

MUST (2), new wine. (L.) In early use. M. E. must, most; P. Plowman, B. xviii. 368; Layamon, 8723. — A. S. must, in a gloss (Bosworth). — Lat. mustum, new wine; neut. of mustus, young, fresh, new; whence also E. moist. See Moist. Der. must-ard.

MUSTACHE, MUSTACHIO; see Moustache.

MUSTARD, a condiment made from a plant with a pungent taste. (F., — L.: with Teut. suffix.) M. E. mustard, Prompt. Parv.; mostard, Aenbite of Inwyrt, ed. Morris, p. 143, l. 30. — O. F. mostarde (a spelling evidenced by the occurrence of a related word mostaige in Roquefort), later moustarde (Cotgrave), mod. F. moutarde. Cf. Ital. and Port. mostarda, Span. mostaza (with a different suffix). β. The suffix -arde is of Teut. origin; see Brachet, Introd. to Etym. Dict. § 196. The condiment took its name from the fact that it was made by mixing the pounded seeds of the mustard-plant with must or vinegar (Littré). The name was afterwards given to the plant itself (Lat. sinapi). γ. From O. F. *most, only found in the form moust, mod. F. moût, must. Cf. Ital., Span., and Port. mosto. — Lat. mustum, must, new wine; see Must (2).

MUSTER, an assembling in force, display, a fair show. (F., — L.) The E. sb. is older than the verb, and is nearly a doublet of monster. M. E. moustre. 'And the moustre was thretti thousandis of men;' Wyclif, 3 Kings, v. 13, earlier version; the later version has summe [sum]. 'And made a gode moustre' = and made a fair show; P. Plowman, B. xiii. 362. — O. F. mostre (13th cent.), another form of O. F. monstre, 'a pattern, also a muster, view, shew, or sight;' Cot. Mod. F. monstre, which see in Littré. Cf. Port. mostra, a pattern, sample, muster, review of soldiers, mostrar, to shew; Ital. mostra, a show, review, display, mostrare, to shew. — Low Lat. monstra, a review of troops, show, sample. — Lat. monstrare, to shew. See Monster. Der. muster, vb., M. E. mustren, Romance of Partenay, ed. Skeat, 3003; muster-master.

MUSTY, mouldy, sour, spoiled by damp. (L. ?) 'Men shall find little fine flowre in them, but all very mustie branne, not worthy so muche as to fede either horse or hogges;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 649 h (not p. 694, as in Richardson). See Hamlet, iii. 2. 359. α. Of disputed origin; but it is evident that the final -y is the usual E. adjectival suffix, and equally evident that the sb. could only have been must. I see no reason why this may not be the usual E. must in the sense of new wine. This sb. was in very early use (as shewn) and was once common. All that is missing is sufficient historical evidence to shew how the new sense was acquired. β. We know (1) that Chaucer has moisty with respect to ale, C. T. 17009, where he really means musty ale, i. e. new ale; also (2) that moisty and musty are mere doublets from the same source. If moisty may have the sense of musty, there can be no reason why musty should not have the sense of moisty, i. e. damp; whence the senses of mouldy, &c. would easily result. We can further understand that a vessel once filled with must and afterwards emptied might easily leave a scent behind it such as we should call musty.

γ. Until we have further evidence, I confidently reject all other interpretations; though admitting that some confusion with O. F. moisi, explained by Cotgrave as 'mouldy, musty, fusty,' may have taken place. But to derive the word from O. F. moisi is, phonetically, impossible. ¶ It may be added that moisty is used (in the sense of moist) by other authors; Rich. quotes from Brende, Quintus Curtius, fol. 87; and see Ascham, Toxophilus, ed. Arber, p. 156, l. 23. See Moist. Der. must-i-ly, -ness.

MUTABLE, subject to change. (L.) M. E. mutable, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iv. pr. 6, l. 3945. — Lat. mutabilis, subject to change. — Lat. mutare, to change; see Moult. Der. mutabili-ty, Chaucer, Troilus, i. 846. Also mut-al-ion, M. E. mutacioun, Chaucer, Boeth. b. i. pr. 6, l. 689, from F. mutation (Cot.), from Lat. acc. mutationem. Also (from mutare) com-mute, per-mute, trans-mute.

MUTE (1), dumb. (F., — L.) M. E. muet, Chaucer, Troilus, v. 194. — F. muet, 'dumb;' Cot. — Lat. mutum, acc. of mutus, dumb. β. The form is that of a pp. from ✓ MU, to bind; cf. Skt. mū, mav, to bind, Gk. μνέω, to close; and esp. Skt. mūka, dumb, Gk. μῦδος, dumb. γ. Some derive it from the notion of attempting to mutter low sounds; from the imitative Lat. mu, Gk. μῦ, a muttered sound. This also may be right, since ✓ MU, to bind, may have been of imitative origin, with the notion of speaking with closed lips, muttering. See Mumble, Mutter, Mum. See Curtius, i. 419. Der. mute-ly, mute-ness; also mutter.

MUTE (2), to dung; used of birds. (F., — O. Low G.) In Tobit, ii. 10 (A. V.) — O. F. mutir, 'to mute, as a hawk;' Cot. A clipped form of O. F. esmeutir, 'to mute, as birds do;' id. Spelt esmeltir in the 13th cent. (Littré, who strangely fails to give the etymology, which is to be found in Scheler). — O. Du. smelten, also smelten, to smelt, to liquefy; also used of liquid animal discharge, as very plainly expressed in Hexham. See Smelt. [†] MUTILATE, to maim. (L.) Formerly a pp. 'Imperfect or mutilate,' i. e. mutilated; Frith, Works, p. 90, col. 1. — Lat. mutillatus, pp. of mutillare, to maim. — Lat. mutillus, maimed. + Gk. μῦριλος, also μῦριλος, curtailed, docked. β. Prob. from ✓ MA or MI, to diminish, whence also Minish, q. v. Der. mutilat-ion, from F. mutilation, 'a mutilation,' Cot., from Lat. acc. mutilationem.

MUTINY, a rebellion, insurrection, tumult. (F., — L.) Mutin-y is formed from the old verb to mutine. 'If thou canst mutine in a matron's bones;' Hamlet, iii. 4. 83. [Hence were also formed mutin-er, Cor. i. 1. 254; mutin-er, Temp. iii. 2. 40; mutin-ous, Temp. v. 42.] — O. F. mutiner, 'to mutine;' Cot. — O. F. mutin, 'mutinous, tumultuous;' id. β. O. F. mutin stands for meutin, extended from O. F. meute, a sedition (Burguy), better known by the mod. F. derivative émeute. The mod. F. meute, though the same word, is only used in the sense of 'a pack of hounds;' answering to Low Lat. mota canum (Ducange). — Low Lat. mota, a pack of hounds, contracted form of movita, a movement, contention, strife. — Lat. mota, fem. of mōtus (= movitus), pp. of movere, to move; see Move.

γ. Thus the orig. sense is 'movement,' well expressed by our 'commotion.' Parallel forms are O. Ital. mutino, 'a mutinie' (Florio), mutinare, 'to mutinie' (id.), whence mod. Ital. ammutinarsi, to mutiny; also Span. motin, a mutiny, sedition, Port. motim, a mutiny, uproar. The Span. and Port. forms are important for shewing the vowel-sound. Der. mutiny, verb, As You Like It, i. 1. 24; mutin-er (as above), mutin-er (as above), mutin-ous (as above), mutin-ous-ly, mutin-ous-ness.

MUTTER, to murmur, speak in a low voice. (E.) M. E. mutren, Chaucer, Troil. i. 542. Also moteren, whence the pres. part. moteringe, used to tr. Lat. mutissantes, Wyclif, 2 Kings, xii. 19. The word is rather E. than borrowed from Lat. mutire, to mutter. To be divided as mut-er-en, where -er is the usual frequentative verbal suffix, and mut- or mut- is an imitative sound, to express inarticulate mumbling; see Mum. Cf. Prov. G. mustern, to whisper, similarly formed from a base must-; Lat. mut-ire, mutt-ire, mutt-are, to mutter, muttum, a muttered sound; &c.

MUTTON, the flesh of sheep. (F., — C.) M. E. motoun (with one r), spelt motone in Prompt. Parv. In P. Plowman, B. iii. 24, the word motoun means a coin of gold, so called because stamped with the image of a sheep. The older spelling molton is in Gower, C. A. i. 39. — O. F. moton (mod. F. mouton), a sheep; a still older spelling is molton (Burguy). — Low Lat. multonem, acc. of multo, a sheep, also a gold coin (as in P. Plowman). Cf. Ital. montone, 'a ram, a mutton,' Florio; where n is substituted for l, preserved in the Venetian form molton, cited by Diez. β. Of Celtic origin; as shewn by Irish and Manx molt, Gael. mult, W. mollt, Bret. maout, meut (for molt?), a wether, sheep. Root unknown. γ. Diez cites mod. Prov. mout, Como mot, Grisons mutt, castrated, which he thinks are corruptions from Lat. mutillus, mutilated, imperfect, which would be cut down to mutlus, and would then pass into mutlus. See Mutilate.

Compare (says Diez) mod. Prov. cabro mouto, a goat deprived of its horns, which in old Prov. would have been cabra mouta, exactly answering to capra mutila in Columella, and to the Swiss form muttli, with the same sense. ¶ The Celtic solution is surely the simpler. Der. mutton-chop. [†]

MUTUAL, reciprocal, given and received. (F., — L.) 'Conspiracy and mutual promise;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 1019 c. — O. F. mutuël, 'mutual, reciprocal;' Cot. Extended from Lat. mutu-us, mutual, by help of the suffix -el (= Lat. -alis). β. The orig. sense is 'exchanged;' from Lat. mutare, to change; see Mutable, Moult. Cf. mort-u-us, from the base mort-. Der. mutual-ly, mutual-i-ty.

MUZZLE, the snout of an animal. (F., — L.) M. E. mosel, Chaucer, C. T. 2153. — O. F. *mosel, not found; later form musel (Burguy), whence museau, 'the muzzle, snout, or nose of a beast;' C c Cot. Here Chaucer preserves an older form mosel than is found in O. French; but (as Diez shews) a still older form morsel is indicated by the Bret. morzel, which (like Bret. muzel) means 'muzzle,' and is merely a borrowed word from O. French. β. Again, the Provençal (according to Diez) not only has the form mus, but also mursel, in which the r is again preserved; but it is lost in Ital. muso, the muzzle, and in the E. Muse (1). γ. The O. F. morsel thus indicated is a dimin. (with suffix -el) from a form mors; cf. Ital. muso, standing for an older orso, which must have meant 'muzzle' as well as 'bit, bridle, or snaffle for a horse' (Florio). Cf. F. mors, 'a bitt, or biting'; Cot. = Low Lat. morsus, (1) a morsel, (2) a buckle, (3) remorse, (4) a beak, snout, in which sense it is found A. D. 1309; Lat. morsus, a bite, a tooth, clasp of a buckle, grasp, fluke of an anchor. [The last sense comes very near to the sense of the grip of an animal that holds on by his muzzle.] = Lat. morsus, pp. of morde, to bite. See Morsel. Der. muzzle, verb, spelt mosell in the Bible of 1551, Deut. xxv. 4.

MY, possessive pronoun. (E.) M. E. mi, formed from M. E. min, mine, by dropping the final n. 'Ne thenkest nowt, of mine opes That ich haue mi louerd sworn?' Havelok, 578; where grammar requires 'min louerd' to answer to the plural 'minē opes.' See Mine. ¶ The final n is often retained before vowels, as in the case of an. Der. my-self, M. E. mi self, a substitution for me self; see Stratmann, s. v. self.

MYRIAD, ten thousand, a vast number. (Gk.) In Milton, P. L. i. 87, &c. Englished from Gk. μυριάδ, stem of μυρία, the number of 10,000. = Gk. μυρίος, numberless. See Pismire.

MYRMIDON, one of a band of men. (L., = Gk.) Gen. in pl. myrmidons; the Myrmidons were the followers of Achilles; in Chapman, tr. of Homer, Iliad ii. 604; and in Surrey, tr. of Æneid, ii. l. 10. = Lat. Myrmidones, Verg. Æn. ii. 7. = Gk. Μυρμιδόνες, a warlike people of Thessaly, formerly in Ægina (Homer). There was a fable (to account for the name) that the Myrmidons were ants changed into men; Ovid, Met. vii. 635-654. Cf. Gk. μυρμηδών, an ant's nest; μύρμηξ, an ant, cognate with Pers. mūr, Lat. formica.

MYRRH, a bitter aromatic gum. (F., = L., = Gk., = Arab.) M. E. mirre, Ancren Riwle, p. 372, l. 7; now adapted to the Lat. spelling. = O. F. mirre (11th cent.); mod. F. myrrhe (Littre). = Lat. myrrha. = Gk. μύρρα, the balsamic juice of the Arabian myrtle. = Arab. murr, (1) bitter, (2) myrrh, from its bitterness; Rich. Dict., p. 1381. + Heb. môr, bitter; from mārār, to be bitter, or to flow (Fürst). MYRTLE, the name of a tree. (F., = L., = Gk., = Pers.) In Shak. Meas. for Meas. ii. 2. 117. = O. F. myrtill, 'a mirtle-berrie; also, the lesse kind of mirtle, called noble mirtle'; Cot. Dimin. of myrte, meurte, 'the mirtle-tree'; id. = Lat. murtus, myrtus, myrta, the myrtle. = Gk. μύρτος. = Pers. murd, the myrtle; Palmer, col. 617; Rich. Dict. p. 1524.

MYSTERY (1), anything kept concealed or very obscure, a secret rite. (L., = Gk.) M. E. mysterie, Wyclif, Rom. xvi. 25. Englished from Lat. mysterium, Rom. xvi. 25 (Vulgate). = Gk. μυστήριον, Rom. xvi. 25. = Gk. μύστης, one who is initiated. = Gk. μυσθίνω, to initiate into mysteries. = Gk. μύειν, to close the eyes. = Gk. μῦ, a slight sound with closed lips; answering to ✓ MU, to bind, which appears to be of imitative origin. See Mute, Mum. Der. mysteri-ous, from F. mysterieux, 'mysterious'; Cot.; mysteri-ous-ly, -ness. And see mystic, mystify.

MYSTERY (2), MISTERY, a trade, handicraft. (F., = L.) Cotgrave translates O. F. mestier by 'a trade, occupation, mystery, handicraft.' Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale, 221, speaks of the soldier's occupation as being 'the noblest mysterie.' And we read of 'mystery plays,' so called because acted by craftsmen. This is a totally different word from the above, but sadly confused with it. It should rather be spelt mistery. Indeed, it owes to the word above not only the former y, but the addition of the latter one; being a corruption of M. E. mistere, a trade, craft, Chaucer, C. T. 615. = O. F. mestier (as above); mod. F. métier. [Cognate with Span. menester, want, need, employment, trade; Ital. mestiere, with same sense.] = Lat. ministerium, service, employment. = Lat. minister, a servant; see Minister. [†]

MYSTIC, secret, allegorical. (F., = L., = Gk.) Milton has mystick, P. L. v. 178, ix. 442; also mystical, P. L. v. 620. = F. mystique, 'mystical'; Cot. = Lat. mysticus. = Gk. μυστικός, mystic. = Gk. μύστης, fem. μύστης, one who is initiated into mysteries; see Mystery. Der. mystic-al, as above, mystic-ism; and see mystify.

MYSTIFY, to involve in mystery, puzzle. (F., = Gk. and L.) Quite modern; not in Todd's Johnson. = F. mystifier, to mystify. A ridiculous and ill-formed jumble from Gk. μυστικός, mystic (not well divided), and Lat. ficare, for facere, to make. See Littre, who remarks that it was not admitted into the F. Dict. till 1835. See Mystic. Der. mysticif-ation, from mod. F. mystification.

MYTH, a fable. (Gk.) Now common, but quite a mod. word.

and formed directly from Gk. μῦθος, a fable; see Mythology, which is a much older word in the language. Der. myth-ic, myth-ic-al, myth-ic-al-ly.

MYTHOLOGY, a system of legends, the science of legends. (F., = L., = Gk.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. i. c. 8, Of Ctesias. = F. mythologie, 'an exposition, or moralising of fables'; Cot. = Lat. mythologia. = Gk. μυθολογία, legendary lore, a telling of fables. = Gk. μῦθος, crude form of μῦθος, a fable; and λέγειν, to tell. β. The Gk. μῦθος is from μῦ, a slight sound, hence a word, saying, speech, tale; which is from ✓ MU, to utter a low sound, of imitative origin; see Mum. Cf. Skt. má, to sound, mim, to sound, man, to sound, murmur. Der. mytholog-ic, mytholog-ic-al, mytholog-ist.

N.

N. A few remarks upon this letter are necessary. An initial n, in English, is very liable to be prefixed to a word which properly begins with a vowel; and again, on the other hand, an original initial n is sometimes dropped. A. In the former case, the n is probably due to the final letter of an or mine; thus an ewt becomes a newt, mine uncle becomes my nuncle, and hence newt and nuncle, used independently. Other examples occur in nickname for ek-name, and nugget, formerly niggot = ningot, for ingot. In Middle-English, numerous similar examples occur, such as a noke for an oak, an oak (cf. John Nokes = John an-oaks, i. e. John of the oaks); a naye = an aye, an egg; thi nye = thin ye, thine eye; thi nymon = thin ymon, thine eyes; examples of all these are given in Halliwell, under noke, naye, nys, and nymon respectively. In the case of for the nonce, the n belongs to the old dat. case of the article, the older phrase being for then ones; see Nonce. B. On the other hand, an original n is lost in auger for nauget, in the sense of a carpenter's tool; in umpire for numpire, adder for nadder, orange for norange, apron for napron, ouch for nouch. See my note to P. Plowman, C. xx. 306.

NAB, to seize. (Scand.) A cant word, prob. introduced by sailors, but of perfectly respectable origin. Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. = Swed. nappa, Dan. nappe, to catch, snatch at. Prob. allied to Nip, q. v. ¶ Rich. cites the word nab-cheats from Beaum. and Fletcher, Beggar's Bush, ii. 1, with the sense of caps. This is a totally different word; here nab = knob, the head; cheat = a thing, in the cant language; and nab-cheat = head-thief, cap; see Harman's Caveat, ed. Furnivall, p. 82.

NABOB, an Indian prince, very rich man. (Hindi, = Arab.) See Burke, Speech on the Nabob of Arcot's debts. The word signifies 'deputy' or vice-roy, esp. applied to a governor of a province of the Mogul empire (Webster). Also nobobb, a nobleman; so spelt by Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, p. 104, who assigns it that meaning 'in the language of the Mogul's kingdom, which hath mixt with it much of the Persian.' = Hindi nawwáb (pl. of náib), 'vice-gerents, deputies; vulg. nabob'; Bate's Dict., p. 367. But the word is merely borrowed from Arabic; Devic notes that Hindi often employs Arab. plurals as sing. = Arab. nawwáb, a nabob. Properly a plural form, signifying vice-gerents, deputies; pl. of náib, a vice-gerent, lieutenant, deputy. Cf. Arab. nawb, supplying the place of another. See Rich. Dict. pp. 1606, 1557, 1608. Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 665, has: Arab. nawwáb, 'a viceroy, governor; in Persia, this title is given to princes of the blood'; cf. col. 639. Cf. Port. nababo, a nabob.

NADIR, the point of the sky opposite the zenith. (Arab.) Chaucer uses nadir to signify the point of the zodiac opposite to that in which the sun is situate; Treatise on the Astrolabe, pt. ii. sect. 6, l. 1. = Arab. nazirí's samt (or simply nazir), the point of the sky opposite the zenith. = Arab. nazir, alike, corresponding to; and as samt, the azimuth, or rather an abbreviation of samtur-ras, the zenith. Rich. Dict. pp. 1586, 848. See Azimuth, Zenith. The Arab. z here used is the 17th letter of the Arab. alphabet, an unusual letter with a difficult sound, which came to be rendered by d in Low Lat. and E.

NAG (1), a small horse. (O. Low G.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. M. E. nagge. 'Nagge, or lytlyle beest, bestula, equillus'; Prompt. Parv. 'He neyt [neighed] as a nagge'; Destruction of Troy, ed. Pantan and Donaldson, l. 7727. = O. Du. negghe, a small horse (Kilian); negge, 'a nagg, a small horse'; Hexham. From the base neg of O. Du. neyn (for older negen), to neigh (Hexham, Oudemans). And compare prov. G. nickel, a nag, with North E. nicker, to neigh. The sense is 'neigher.' See Neigh. Der. hack-nev, q. v.

NAG (2), to worry, tease. (Scand.) Provincial; but a good word. = Swed. nagga, to nibble, peck; Dan. nage, Icel. naga, to gnaw. A doublet of Gnaw, q. v.

NAIAD, a water-nymph. (L., = Gk.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 128. — Lat. naiad-, stem of naïas, a water-nymph. — Gk. naïas (gen. naïád-os), a water-nymph. — Gk. naïev, to flow; Æolic form váveiv (= váfēiv). — ✓ SNU, to flow; cf. Skt. snu, to distil, flow.

NAIL, the horny scale at the end of the human fingers and toes; a spike of metal. (E.) M. E. nail, nayl; the pl. nailes, used of the human nails, is in Havelock, 1263; the pl. nailes, i. e. iron spikes, is in Chaucer, C. T. 6351. — A. S. nagel, in both senses, Grein, ii. 274. [The loss of g is regular, and occurs in hail, sail, &c.] + Du. nagel, in both senses. + Icel. nagl, the human nail; nagli, a spike, peg. + Dan. nagle, in both senses. + Swed. nagel, in both senses. + Goth. *nagls, only in the derived verb ganagljan, to nail. + G. nagel, in both senses. β. All from a Teut. type NAGLA or NAGLI, a nail (Fick, iii. 159); to be divided as nag-la, nag-li, the suffix denoting the agent. The sense is 'gnawer,' i. e. in the case of the finger-nails, 'scratcher,' and, in the case of the peg, 'piercer.' All from the Teut. base NAG, to gnaw, scratch, pierce, appearing in G. nagen, to gnaw, and in the E. nag, g-naw; see Nag (2), Gnaw. γ. It is difficult to explain fully the allied words in other languages, in which only the sense of finger-nail or toe-nail survives. Still we may certainly connect Lithuan. nagas, a claw, nail, Russ. nogote, a nail, Skt. nakha (for nagha), a nail of the finger or toe; all from a ✓ NAGH, to gnaw or pierce, which is lost in these languages, except in so far as it is represented by Skt. niksh, to pierce. δ. The Gk. ὄνυξ, a nail, claw, Lat. unguis, Gael. and Irish iunga, W. ewin, go back to a ✓ ANGH, which appears to be a transposed (and earlier) form of the ✓ NAGH; see Curtius, i. 400. Der. nail, vb., A. S. næglian, whence the pp. nægled, in Grein; nail-er. ☞ The remarkable variation of Lat. unguis from A. S. nægel throws doubt on the above solution.

NAIVE, artless, simple, ingenuous. (F., = L.) A late word; the adv. naively is used by Pope in a letter; see the quotation in Richardson. — F. naïve, fem. of naïf, which Cot. explains by 'lively, quick, naturall, kindly, . . . no way counterfeit.' — Lat. natiuus, native, natural; see Native. ¶ The fem. form naïve was chosen, because it appears in the adv. naïvement, and in the sb. naïveté; and, in fact, it is nearer the Latin original than the masc. naïf. Der. naive-ly, put for F. naïve-ment; and naive-té, sb., directly from the French. Doublet, naïve.

NAKED, bare, uncovered, exposed. (E.) Always dissyllabic. M. E. naked, Chaucer, C. T. 2068. — A. S. naecod (= nac-od), which is plainly an old pp., with the pp. suffix -od; Grein, ii. 272. + O. Fries. nakad, naken. + Du. naakt. + Icel. naktr, nakinn, nökviðr. + Dan. nögen. + Swed. naken. + G. nackt, M. H. G. nacket, O. H. G. nachot, nakot. + Goth. nakwaths (where -aths is the usual pp. suffix). β. All these forms point to an old pp. form; the Du. -t, Icel. -tr, -ðr, G. -t, Goth. -aths, are all pp. suffixes of a weak verb, and lead us back to the orig. Teut. type NAKW-ATHA, from a base NAKW, NAK; Fick, iii. 157. γ. But it is not a little remarkable that some of the forms, viz. Icel. nak-inn, Dan. nögen, Swed. nab-en, O. Fries. nak-en, present the pp. suffixes of a strong verb from the base NAK, answering to an Aryan ✓ NAG, to strip, lay bare; whence are obviously also derived Skt. nagna, naked, Russ. nagoi, naked, Lith. nûgas, naked (Schleicher), Lat. nûdus (= nugdus, for nogdus, nagdus). Further allied words are the Irish and Gael. nochd, naked, bare, exposed, desolate, W. noeth, Bret. noz. δ. Lastly, it is remarkable that English alone has preserved the verb, which appears in M. E. naken. The following are examples. 'He nakide the hous of the pore man,' Wyclif, Job, xx. 19, early version; the later version has 'he made nakid the hows.' 'O nice men, whi nake ye youre bakkes' = O foolish men, why do ye expose your backs (to the enemy, by turning to flee); Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iv. met. 7, l. 4288. It is also found much later. 'Lus. Come, be ready, nake your swords, Think of your wrongs;' Tounneur, The Revenger's Tragedy, Act v (R.) We even find a derived verb naknen; 'Al nu naenes mon mi lef' = Ah! now men strip my beloved; O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 283, l. 10. ¶ The sense of the Aryan ✓ NAG is somewhat doubtful; but the English use fairly assigns to it the sense 'to strip.' Hence also the secondary Skt. verb naj, to be ashamed, as the result of stripping. Der. naked-ly, M. E. nakedliche, Ancren Riwle, p. 316; naked-ness, M. E. nakednesse, Wyclif, Rev. iii. 19. Also stark-naked, q. v. Doublet, nude. [†]

NAME, that by which a thing or person is called, a designation. (E.) M. E. name (orig. dissyllabic); Chaucer, C. T. 3939. — A. S. nama, noma, Grein, ii. 273. + Du. naam. + Icel. nafn, namn. + Dan. navn. + Swed. namn. + Goth. namo. + G. name, O. H. G. namo. + Lat. nomen (for gnomen); cf. Lat. co-gnomen, i-gnominia. + Gk. ὄνομα, Ionic ὄνομα (for δ-γνομα; Curtius, i. 399). + Skt. náman (for jnáman; Benfey). β. Perhaps from an Aryan form GNÁMAN, a name, designation by which a thing is known; from ✓ GNA, to know; see Know. If so, an initial k or g is lost in all but Latin; or a trace of it remains in Russ. znameníe, a sign, token (from znate, to know), but even the initial n is lost in Russ. imíá, a name, fame, Gaelic ainm, a name. Der. name, vb., A. S. nemnan, Grein, ii. 280; nam-er; name-ly, M. E. nameliche, nomeliche, Ancren Riwle, p. 18, l. 17; name-less, M. E. nameles, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iv. pr. 5, l. 3762; name-less-ly, name-less-ness; also name-sake (= name's sake, the 's' being dropped before s following), i. e. one whose name is given him for the sake of another's fame, Dryden, Absalom, pt. ii. l. 323 (see Sake). Allied words are co-gnomen, i-gnomin-i-ous, i-gno-ble; also nominal, de-nominate, noble, note, and all derivatives of Know. Doublet, noun. ☞ The Aryan form is disputed.

NANKEEN, NANKIN, a kind of cotton cloth. (China.) Added by Todd to Johnson. So called from Nankin in China.

NAP (1), a short sleep. (E.) We now say 'to take a nap,' and treat nap as a sb. We also say 'to be caught napping,' where it is a sb. formed from a verb. It was formerly a verb, though napping was also used. M. E. nappen, to doze. 'Se! how he nappeth;' Chaucer, C. T. 16958. — A. S. knæppian, to nap; knæppað is a gloss upon dormit, Ps. xl. 9, ed. Spelman. The orig. sense is 'to nod,' or 'droop,' or 'bend forwards;' allied to A. S. knipian, to bend oneself, Grein, ii. 91; also to Icel. knipna, to droop, despond. Cf. Bavarian knappen, to nod with the head, knipfen, to hobble (Schmeller); G. nicken, to nod, doze. Der. napping, A. S. knæppung, Grein, ii. 90.

NAP (2), the roughish surface of cloth. (C.) In Spenser, Muipotmos, l. 333. Shak. has napless = threadbare; Cor. ii. 1. 250. The older form is nop. M. E. noppe; 'noppe of a cloth, villus;' Prompt. Parv. See Way's note, where he cites passages to shew that noppe 'denotes those little knots, which, after cloth has passed through the fulling-mill, are removed by women with little nippers; a process termed curling cloth.' He cites: 'noppy, as cloth is that hath a gross woffe [woof].' Also: 'Clarisse the nopster (esbourysse) can well her craft, syth whan she lerned it, cloth for to noppe;' Caxton, Book for Travellers. We now apply the term, not to the knoppy or knobby (i. e. knotty) surface, but to the sheared surface, by a natural change in the sense, due to our not seeing the cloth till the process is completed. — A. S. knoppa, nap of cloth; an unauthorised form given by Sommer, but prob. correct. It is plainly a mere variant of A. S. cneap, a top, a knob, knob; see Knop, Knob. + Du. nop; O. Du. noppe, 'the nap of wooll or cloath,' Hexham; cf. O. Du. noppen, 'to sheare off [off] the nap,' id. Allied to Du. knopp, a knot, knob, knop, a knob. + Dan. noppe, frizzed nap of cloth; cf. Dan. knop, a knob. + O. Swed. nopp, nap; cf. Swed. knop, a knot. + Low G. nobbe, nap; Bremen Wörterbuch. (All are words of Celtic origin.) And see Nape. Der. nap-less, as above.

NAPE, the joint of the neck behind. (C.) In Shak. Cor. ii. 1. 43. M. E. nape, Prompt. Parv. 'Dedly woundid through the nape;' King Alisaunder, l. 1347. The orig. sense is projection or 'knob'; and the term must have been first applied to the slight knob at the back of the head, felt on passing the finger upwards from the neck. It is, in fact, a mere variant of M. E. knappe, a knob, button, P. Ploverman, B. vi. 272. Cf. Icel. knæppr, knæppr, W. cnap, a knob, stud, button. See Nap (2), Knop, and Neck.

NAPERIE, linen for the table. (F., = L.) 'Manie farmers . . . have learned also to garnish their cupboards with plate, . . . and their tables with fine naperie;' Harrison, Descr. of England, ed. Furnivall, b. ii. c. 12, p. 239. — O. F. naperie, orig. the office in a household for providing table-linen; Roquefort. — Low Lat. naparia, the same; Ducange. — Low Lat. napa, a cloth; corrupted from Lat. mappa, a cloth. See Napkin.

NAPHTHA, an inflammable liquid. (L., = Gk., = Arab.) In Milton, P. L. i. 729. Spelt nephtha by Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 182 (Todd). — Lat. naphtha. — Gk. νάφθα. — Arab. naft, nift, 'naphtha, bitumen;' Rich. Dict. p. 1593. The final letter of the Arab. word is the 16th letter of the alphabet, sometimes rendered by th.

NAPKIN, a cloth used at the table, a small cloth. (F., = L.; with E. suffix.) M. E. napekin. 'Napot or napekyn, Napella, manupiarium, mapella;' Prompt. Parv. Both these forms, nap-et and nape-kyn, are formed with dimin. suffixes from F. nappe, 'a table-cloth;' Cot. — Low Lat. *nappa, nappa; corruptions of Lat. mappa, a cloth. See Map. Der. ap-ron (for nap-ron); nap-er-y, q. v.

NARCISSUS, a kind of flower. (L., = Gk.) In Cotgrave, to translate F. narcisse. — Lat. narcissus. — Gk. νάρκισσος, the narcissus; named from its narcotic properties; see Narcotic.

NARCOTIC, producing torpor; an opiate. (F., = Gk.) Chaucer has the pl. narcotikes as a pl. sb., C. T. 1474. It is properly an adj. — F. narcotique, 'stupefactive, benumbing;' Cot. [The Lat. form does not appear.] — Gk. ναρκωτικός, benumbing. — Gk. ναρκῶς, I benumb; ναρκῶν, I grow numb. — Gk. νάρκη, numbness, torpor. Put for σνάρκη, i. e. contraction; see Narrow, Snare. Der. narcissus, from νάρκη.

NARD, an unguent from an aromatic plant. (F., = L., = Gk., = Pers., = Skt.) In the margin of A. V., Mark, xiv. 3, where the text has spikenard; and in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xii. c. 12. — F. nard, 'spikenard'; Cot. — Lat. nardus, Mk. xiv. 3 (Vulgate). — Gk. vapōs, Mk. xiv. 3. — Pers. nard, merely given as 'the name of a tree' in Rich. Dict. p. 1571. — Skt. nalada, the Indian spikenard, Nardostachys jatamansi; Benfey. — Skt. nal, to smell. β. The name is Aryan; the Arab, nardin is borrowed. The interchange of l and r is common in many languages. Der. spike-nard.

NARRATION, a tale, recitation. (F., = L.) [The verb narrare is late.] Narration is in Minshew, ed. 1627. It is prob. much earlier, and perhaps to be found in M. E. — F. narration, 'a narration'; Cot. — Lat. narrationem, acc. of narratio, a tale. — Lat. narratus, pp. of narrare, to relate, tell; lit. to make known. — Lat. narus, another form of gnarus, knowing, acquainted with. — √ GÑĀ, to know; cf. Skt. ñā, to know, Russ. znate, E. know; see KNOW. Der. From Lat. narrare we also have narrate, vb., in Johnson's Dict.; narrat-ive, adj., from F. narratif, 'narrative' (Cot.); narrat-ive, sb., Bacon, Life of Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 54, l. 14; narrat-or.

NARROW, of little breadth or extent. (E.) M. E. narowe, narewe, narwe (with one r); Chaucer has narwe (=narrowly) as an adv., C. T. 3224; also as an adj., C. T. 627. — A. S. nearu, nearo, adj.; nearwe, adv., Grein, ii. 287, 288. + O. Sax. narū, adj., narawo, adv. β. There seems at first sight to be some connection with near; but this is an unoriginal word derived from nigh (see NEAR), and nigh and narrow have nothing in common but the letter n. γ. We also find Du. naauw, O. Du. nauw (Hexham), narrow, close; this appears to be O. Sax. narū, with loss of r. δ. Connected by Curtius (i. 392) with nerve and snares; see NARCOTIC and SNARE. Der. narrow-ly, narrow-ness, narrow-mind-ed.

NARWHAL, the sea-unicorn. (Scand.) In Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. — Dan. and Swed. narhval; Icel. nárhvalr, a narwhale. β. The latter part of the word is the same as E. whale. As to the sense of the prefix, the lit. sense of Icel. ná-hvalr is 'corpse-whale'; from Icel. nár (in compounds ná-), a corpse; and the fish is often of a pallid colour. Such is the usual explanation. γ. We should rather expect the prefix to stand for Icel. nas- (=nose), as in nas-hyrningar, a 'nose-horned' animal, a rhinoceros, from Icel. nös (stem nas-), the nose. The long horn projects like a nose from the upper jaw. The change from s to r is quite regular and common; cf. E. iron from A. S. isen, E. hare = G. hase. But this guess does not explain Icel. d.

NASAL, belonging to the nose. (F., = L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. Burton uses nasals for medicines operating through the nose; Anat. of Melancholy, p. 384 (R.); or p. 393 (Todd). — F. nasal, belonging to the nose; Cot. — Low Lat. nasalis, nasal; a coined word, not used in good Latin. — Lat. nas-us, the nose, cognate with E. nose; see NOSE. Der. nas-turt-ium, q. v.

NASCENT, springing up, arising. (L.) A late word, added by Todd to Johnson. — Lat. nascent-, stem of pres. part. of nasci, to be born, to arise, an inceptive form with pp. natus. See NATAL.

NASTURTIUM, the name of a flower. (L.) In Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. 'Cresses took the name in Latine nasturtium, a narium tormento, as a man would say, nose-wring, because it will make one writh and shrink vp his nostrils;'. Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xix. c. 8. — Lat. nasturtium, cress; better spelt nasturcium. — Lat. nas-, stem of nasus, the nose; and torc- = torc-, from torquere, to twist, torment. See NOSE and TORTURE.

NASTY, dirty, filthy, unpleasant. (Scand.) In Hamlet, iii. 4. 94. Formerly also (as Wedgwood points out) written nasky. 'Mau-lavé, ill-washed, slubbered, naskie, nasty, foul'; Cot. In such cases, the form with k is the older. Of Scand. origin; preserved in Swed. dial. naskug, nasty, dirty, foul (used of weather); we also find the form nasket, dirty, sullied (Rietz). The word has lost an initial s (which occasionally drops off before n, as in Lat. nix beside E. snow). Cf. Swed. dial. snaskig, nasty, swinelike; Swed. snushig, slovenly, nasty. — Swed. dial. snaska, to eat like a pig, to eat greedily and noisily, to be slovenly (Rietz); Dan. snaske, to champ one's food with a smacking noise. These words are of imitative origin, like various other suggestive words of a like character, such as Swed. snattra, to chatter, E. snap, snatch; see SNATCH. The word appears also in Low G. nask, nasty, Bremen Wörterbuch; and in Norweg. nask, greedy, naska, to eat noisily. Der. nasti-ly, nasti-ness.

NATAL, belonging to one's birth. (F., = L.) 'By natal Joves feast' = by the feast of Jove, who presides over nativity, Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 150. — F. natal, in use at least as early as the 15th cent. (Littré); though the true O. F. form is noël. — Lat. natalis, natal, also presiding over a birth. — Lat. natus (for gnatus), born. Cf. Gk. γένος, in ναοί-γεντος, a blood relation. From the base GÑĀ, formed from √ GAN, to beget, produce; see KIN, GENUS. Der. From Lat. natus are in-nate, cog-nate; and see nat-ion, nat-ive, nat-ure.

NATION, a race of people. (F., = L.) M. E. nation, Chaucer, C. T. 4688. — F. nation. — Lat. nationem, acc. of natio, a race. — Lat. natus, born; see NATAL. Der. nation-al, nation-al-ly, nation-al-ity, nation-al-ise.

NATIVE, original, produced by nature, due to birth. (F., = L.) 'O native land!' Surrey, tr. of Æneid, b. ii. l. 305; where the Lat. text has patria; see Spec. of English, ed. Skeat, p. 207. 'Hys native country'; Sir T. More, Works, p. 306 a. — F. natif, masc. native, fem. 'native'; Cot. — Lat. nativus, natural, native. — Lat. natus, born; see NATAL. Der. native-ly, native-ness; also nativ-i-ty, M. E. natiuite, Chaucer, C. T. 14022, from F. nativité, from Lat. acc. natiuitatem. Doublet, naive.

NATURE, kind, disposition. (F., = L.) M. E. nature, in O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 35, l. 29. — F. nature. — Lat. natura, nature; orig. fem. of fut. part. of nasci, to be born; see NATAL. Der. natur-al, M. E. naturel, O. Eng. Miscellany, p. 30, l. 17, from F. naturel = Lat. naturalis; natur-al-ly, natural-ness, natur-al-ism, natur-al-ise, natur-al-ist (see Trench, Select Gloss.), natur-al-is-at-ion (Minshew); also un-natural, preter-natural, super-natural.

NAUGHT, NOUGHT, nothing. (E.) M. E. naught, Chaucer, C. T. 758. Older spelling nawiht, Layamon, 473. — A. S. náwihit, often contracted to náht, Grein, ii. 274. — A. S. ná, no, not; and wiht, a whit, thing; Grein, ii. 272, 703. See NO and WHIT. Der. naught, adj., i. e. worthless, As You Like It, i. 2. 68, 69, iii. 2. 15; whence naught-y, i. e. worthless (Prov. vi. 12), Sir T. More, Works, p. 155e; naught-i-ly, naught-i-ness. Doublet, not.

NAUSEOUS, disgusting. (L., = Gk.) Nauseous and nauseate are in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Englished from Lat. nauseosus, that produces nausea. — Lat. nausea, nausia, sea-sickness, sickness. — Gk. navōia, sea-sickness. — Gk. navis, a ship, cognate with Lat. navis; see NAVE (2). Der. nauseous-ly, -ness; nause-ate, from Lat. nauseatus, pp. of nauseare, to feel sick, from nausea, sickness. We have also adopted the sb. nausea, which occurs in Phillips, ed. 1706.

NAUTICAL, naval, belonging to ships. (L., = Gk.) Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, has nautical and nautick, the latter being the more orig. form. — Lat. nauticus, nautical. — Gk. navτικός, pertaining to ships. — Gk. navτης, a sea-man. — Gk. navis, a ship, cognate with Lat. navis; see NAVE (2). Der. nautical-ly.

NAUTILUS, a kind of shell-fish. (L., = Gk.) 'The Nautilus or Sailer, a shell-fish, that swims like a boat with a sail'; Phillips, ed. 1706. — Lat. nautilus. — Gk. navtilos, a sea-man, also, the nautilus. — Gk. navτης, a sea-man; see NAUTICAL.

NAVAL, belonging to ships, marine. (F., = L.) In Cotgrave. — F. naval, 'navall'; Cot. — Lat. navalis, naval. — Lat. navis, a ship; see NAVE (2).

NAVE (1), the central portion or hub of a wheel, through which the axle passes. (E.) M. E. nave (with u = v), Chaucer, C. T. 7848 [not 7938]. — A. S. nafu, nafa; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, b. iv. pr. 6, cap. xxxix, § 7. + Du. naaf. + Icel. nóf. + Dan. nav. + Swed. naf. + G. nabe. + Skt. nábhi, the navel, the nave of a wheel, the centre. β. The Skt. word is supposed to be derived from naḥ, to burst; hence the sense of swelling or projection easily results; similarly breast is connected with E. burst. 'The navel ... appears at the first period of life as a button or small projection'; Wedgwood. Der. nav-el, q. v. From the same root, nebula, nimbus, &c.

NAVE (2), the middle or body of a church. (F., = L.) In Phillips, World of Words, ed. 1706. Spelt nef in Addison, Travels in Italy, description of the church of St. Justina in Padua. — F. nef, 'a ship; also, the body of a church'; Cot. — Low Lat. navem, acc. of navis, the body of a church. The similitude by which the church of Christ is likened to a ship tossed by waves was formerly common. See my note to P. Plowman, C. xi. 32, where I cite the passage from Augustine about 'navis, i. e. ecclesia'; S. Aug. Sermo lxxv. cap. iii. ed. Migne, v. 475. — Lat. navis, a ship. + Gk. navis, a ship. + Skt. nav, a ship, boat. + A. S. naca, a boat; Grein, ii. 270. + Icel. nókkvi, a boat. + G. nachen, a skiff. β. All formed with suffixes -wa or -ka from a base na, for older sua, signifying to 'swim' or 'float'; cf. Lat. nare, to swim, Gk. naein, to flow. — √ SNA, SNU, to flow, swim, float; cf. Skt. sná, to bathe, snu, to flow. Der. nav-al, q. v., nav-ti-c-al, q. v., nav-ti-lus, q. v., argo-naui, q. v., nav-ig-ate (see navigation), nav-y. From the same root are nai-ad, ne-re-id, nav-sea, a-ner-oid; perhaps snake; perhaps adder.

NAVEL, the central point of the belly. (E.) Merely the dimin. of nave (1). We find nave used for navel, Macb. i. 2. 22; and conversely navels (= navels) for the naves of a wheel, Bible, ed. 1551, 3 Kings, vii. 33. M. E. navel (= navel), Chaucer, C. T. 1959. — A. S. nafela, Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, b. iv. c. 1. § 3. + Du. navel, from naaf, a nave. + Icel. nafl, from nóf. + Dan. navle, from nav. + Swed. nafl, from naf. + G. nabel, from nabe. Cf. Skt. nábhi, nav, nave, centre. See NAVE (1).

NAVIGABLE, that may be travelled over by ships. (F., = L.) In Cotgrave. — F. navigable, 'navigable'; Cot. — Lat. navigabilis, navigable. — Lat. navigare, to navigate; see NAVIGATION. Der. navigabl-y, navigable-ness.

NAVIGATION, management of a ship. (F., -L.) In Shak. Macb. iv. 1. 54. — F. navigation, 'navigation, sailing'; Cot. — Lat. navigationem, acc. of navigatio, a sailing. — Lat. navigare, to sail, manage a ship. — Lat. navis, stem of navis, a ship; and -ig-, put for ag-, base of agere, to drive. See Nave (2) and Agent. Der. navigate, from Lat. navigatus, pp. of navigare, but suggested by the sb.; navigat-or, familiarly contracted to navy, formerly applied to the labourers on canals for internal navigation, and now applied to labourers on railways! Also circum-navigate.

NAVY, a fleet of ships. (F., -L.) M.E. navie, Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, i. 216. — O.F. navie, a fleet (Burguy); the orig. sense was a single ship. — Lat. navia, a ship, vessel. — Lat. navi-, crude form of navis, a ship; see Nave (2).

NAY, no, a form of denial. (Scand.) There was a difference in usage between nay and no formerly; the former answered simple questions, the latter was used when the form of the question involved a negative expression. Besides this, nay was the simple, no the emphatic form, often accompanied by an oath. The distinction went out of use in the time of Henry VIII; see Skeat, Spec. of Eng. p. 192, l. 22, and the note; Student's Manual of the Eng. Language, ed. Smith, pp. 414, 422. Moreover, nay is of Scand. origin, whilst no is E. M.E. nay, Chaucer, C.T. 1667, 8693; spelt nai, Layamon, 13132. — Icel. nei, no, Dan. nei, Swed. nej; cognate with E. no; see No. Opposed to Aye.

NAZARITE, a Jew who made vows of abstinence, &c. (Heb.; with Gk. suffix.) 'To vowe a vowe of a Nazarite to separate [himself] unto the Lorde;' Geneva Bible, 1561, Numb. vi. 5 (R.); [rather, vi. 2]. Formed with suffix -ite (= Lat. -ita, from Gk. -ιτης) from Heb. nāzar, to separate oneself, consecrate oneself, vow, abstain. Der. Nazarit-ism.

NEAP, scanty, very low; said of a tide. (E.) M.E. neep, very rare. 'In the neep-seasons,' i.e. in the neap-tide seasons, when boats cannot come to the quay; Eng. Gilds, ed. Toulmin Smith, p. 425. — A.S. nēp, in the term nēp-flōd, as opposed to hēdh-flōd = high flood; Wright's Vocab. i. 57, col. 1. The word has lost an initial h, and nēp stands for hnēp, the orig. sense being 'scanty.' + Icel. neppr, hnēppr, scanty, + Dan. knap, scanty, strait, narrow; cf. adv. knap, neppe, scarcely. β. The orig. sense is 'pinched, narrow, scanty'; the derivation being from the verb to nip; see Nip. ¶ Quite a distinct word from ebb. Der. neap-tide. [†]

NEAR, nigh, close at hand. (E.) By a singular grammatical confusion, this word, orig. used as the comparative of nigh, came to be used as a positive, from which the new comparative nearer was evolved. In Schmidt's Shakespeare Lexicon, the explanation is given wrongly; he says that near is put by contraction for nearer, whereas it is the old form of the word. Shak. uses both near and nearer as comparatives; both forms occur together, Macb. ii. 3. 146; cf. 'nor near nor farther off;' Rich. II, iii. 2. 64; 'being ne'er the near,' id. v. 1. 88. The form nearer is late, not found in the 14th cent., perhaps not in the 15th. Dr. Morris (Outlines of E. Accidence) observes that 'near, for nigh, first came into use in the phrase far and near, in which near is an adverb.' [He goes on to cite an A.S. neorran, not given in the dictionaries.] It is clear that the precise form was first of all adverbial; the M.E. form of nigher was nerre, whilst the adv. was ner, or neer. 'Cometh near' = come near; Chaucer, C.T. 841. — A.S. neār, comp. adverb from neāh, nigh; Grein, ii. 283. + Icel. neār, adv.; both pos. and comp. See Nigh. Der. near-ly, Macb. iv. 2. 67; near-ness, Rich. II, i. 1. 119; near-sight-ed.

NEAT (1), black cattle, an ox, cow. (E.) M.E. neet, both sing. and pl.; used as pl. in Chaucer, C.T. 599. — A.S. neāt, neut. sb., unchanged in the plural (like sheep, deer, also neuters); Grein, ii. 288. + Icel. naut, neut. sb., unchanged in the plural, and gen. used to mean cattle, oxen. + M.H.G. nōz, nōss, neut. sb., cattle. β. So named from their usefulness and employment. — A.S. neōtan, nōtan, to use, employ; Grein, ii. 292. + Icel. njóta, to use, enjoy. + M.H.G. niesen, O.H.G. niozan, G. geniessen, to enjoy, have the use of. + Goth. niutan, to receive joy (or benefit) from. γ. All from Teut. base NUT (Fick, iii. 164), answering to an Aryan base NUD, whence Lithuan. naudā, usefulness, naudingas, useful (Nesselmann). Cf. Skt. nand, to be pleased, to be pleased with, nandaya, to gladden; Gk. δινύμι, I profit, help, support, δινύμιος, useful, δινυρός, profitable. See Schmidt, Vocalismus, i. 157. ¶ The etymology given in Ælfred's tr. of Boethius, c. xiv. § 3, from nitan, not to know (!), is an utter mistake. Der. neat-herd.

NEAT (2), tidy, unadulterated. (F., -L.) 'Neat and fine;' Two Gent. of Verona, i. 2. 10. Also spelt nett; Spenser, F.Q. iii. 12. 20. — F. net, masc., nette, fem., 'neat, clean, pure'; Cot. [Cf. beast from O.F. beste.] — Lat. nitidum, acc. of nitidus, shining, clear, handsome, neat, elegant. — Lat. nitere, to shine. Prob. allied to Icel. gneisti, a spark; see Gneiss. Der. neat-ly, neat-ness. Doublet, net (2).

NEB, the beak of a bird, the nose. (E.) In Winter's Tale, i. 2. 4

183. M.E. neb. 'Ostende mihi faciem, scheau thi neb to me' = shew me thy face; Ancr. Riwle, p. 90. — A.S. nebb, the face, John, xi. 44. + Du. neb, bill, beak, nib, mouth. + Icel. nef, the nose. + Dan. nebb, beak, bill. + Swed. näbb, beak, bill. β. The word has lost an initial s; we also find Du. sneb, a bill, beak; G. schnebel, a bill, beak, nib; schneppe, a nozzle. The M.H.G. snabel, a bill, is derived from M.H.G. snaben, to snap; and the E. sb. nipple (dimin. of nib) is spelt with p. Hence sneb stands for snep, derived from the verb to snap; see Snap. Der. See nib, nipple, snipe.

NEBULA, a little cloud; a cluster of very faintly shining stars. (L.) Modern and scientific. — Lat. nebula, a mist, little cloud; allied to nubes, a cloud, nimbus, cloud. + Gk. νεφέλη, a cloud; dimin. of νέφος, cloud, mist. + G. nebel, mist, fog. β. The Gk. νέφος is cognate with Skt. nabhas, sky, atmosphere, æther. — √NABH, to swell, burst; Skt. nabh, to burst, injure; from the 'bursting' of rain-clouds and storms. See Nave (1). Der. nebul-ar, nebul-ose, nebul-ous, nebul-os-ity.

NECESSARY, needful, requisite. (F., -L.) M.E. necessarie, Chaucer, C.T. 12615. — O.F. necessaire, 'necessary'; Cot. — Lat. necessarius, needful. — Lat. nesse, neut. adj., unavoidable, necessary. β. The usual derivation from ne, not, and cedere, to give way, is not satisfactory; it is more probably connected with Lat. nancisci (pp. nac-tus), to get, obtain, come upon; which would give to nece-esse the orig. sense of 'coming in one's way,' or nigh. See Nigh. Der. necessari-ly; also necessity, M.E. necessitee, Chaucer, C.T. 3044, from O.F. necessite = Lat. acc. necessitatem; hence necessit-ous, -ly, -ness, necessit-ate, necessit-ian.

NECK, the part of the body joining the head to the trunk. (E.) M.E. nekke (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C.T. 589. — A.S. hnecca, Deut. xviii. 35. + Du. nek, the nape of the neck. + Icel. hnakki, the nape of the neck, back of the head. + Dan. nakke, the same. + Swed. nacke, the same. + G. nacken, O.H.G. hnack, the same. β. Frequently derived from A.S. hnigan, to bend, which is impossible; we cannot derive h from g. The evidence shews that the orig. sense is rather the 'nape of the neck,' or back of the head; and neck and nape are nearly parallel forms with much the same sense. Just as nape is a mere variant of knop, so neck is allied to knag, knuckle. Cf. Norweg. nakk, a knoll, nakke, nape, neck; G. knocken, a knot, knag. The O. Du. knocke, 'the knob or knot of a tree' (Hexham), explains both E. knuckle and F. nugue, the nape of the neck. See Knuckle. Der. neck-cloth, neckerchief (for neck-kerchief, see Kerchief), neck-band, neck-tie; neck-lace, Winter's Tale, iv. 4. 244, compounded of neck and lace; neck-verse, Tyndall's Works, p. 112, col. 1, on which see my note to P. Plowman, C. xv. 129.

NECROLOGY, a register of deaths. (Gk.) Added by Todd to Johnson. From Gk. νεκρός, stem of νεκρός, a corpse; and -λογία, due to λόγος, discourse, from λέγειν, to speak. See Necromancy.

NECROMANCY, divination by communion with the dead. (F., -L., -Gk.) The history of the word is somewhat concealed by our modern knowledge of Gk., which enables us to spell the word correctly. But the M.E. forms are nigromance, nigromancie, and the like. Precisely the same 'correction' of the spelling has been made in modern French. Spelt nygremauncye in King Alisaunder, l. 138; nigromancye in P. Plowman, A. xi. 158, on which see my Notes to P. Pl., p. 246. Trench rightly remarks, in his Eng. Past and Present, that 'the Latin mediæval writers, whose Greek was either little or none, spelt the word nigromantia, as if its first syllables had been Latin.' — O.F. nigromance, 'nigromancy, conjuring, the black art'; Cot. Spelt nygromancye in the 15th cent.; see Littré. — Low Lat. nigromantia, corrupt form of necromantia. — Gk. νεκρομαντεία, necromancy. — Gk. νεκρός, crude form of νεκρός, a corpse; and μαντεία, prophetic power, power of divination. β. The Gk. νεκρός is extended from νεκρός, a corpse, dead body. — √NAK, to perish, to kill; whence Skt. naḡ, to perish, nācāya, to destroy, Lat. necare, to kill, and E. inter-nec-ine, q. v. γ. The Gk. μαντεία is from μάντις, a prophet, seer, inspired one, from √MAN, to think, whence also E. man-ia, men-tor. Der. necromanc-er, Deut. xviii. 11 (A.V.); necromantic, from Gk. νεκρο- and μαντικός, prophetic; necromantic-al. ¶ From the singular confusion with Lat. niger, black, above mentioned, the art of necromancy came to be called the black art!

NECTAR, a delicious beverage. (L., -Gk.) In Spenser, Sonnet 39, l. 13. — Lat. nectar. — Gk. νέκταρ, the drink of the gods; Homer, II. xix. 38, Od. v. 93. Root unknown. Der. nectar-e-an, nectar-e-ous, nectar-ous, nectar-y; also nectar-ine, the name given to a variety of the peach, orig. an adj., as in 'Nectarine fruits,' Milton, P. L. iv. 332.

NEED, necessity, distress. (E.) M.E. need, nede, Chaucer, C.T. 4523. — A.S. nȳd, niēd, neād, nēd; Grein, ii. 301. + Du. nood. + Icel. nauf. + Dan. and Swed. nöd. + Goth. nauths. + G. noth, O.H.G. nót. β. The Teut. type is NAUDI (Fick, iii. 156), to be divided as nau-di. The orig. sense is that of compulsion, or being driven or pushed about; cf. A. S. á-nýdan, to repel, drive away, force. The base is NU, appearing in O. H. G. nirwan, M. H. G. nirwen, núen, to pound, to crush (orig. to drive, force), Wackernagel; and again, in Skt. nud (=nu-d), to push on, push away, drive. Cf. Russ. nydite, to force; nyda, need. Der. need-ful, M. E. needful, Ancren Riwle, p. 260, l. 10; need-less, need-less-ly, need-less-ness; need-y, M. E. ned-y, P. Plowman, xx. 40, 41, 47, 48, 49, need-i-ly, need-i-ness. Also need-s, adv., M. E. needes, nedes, Chaucer, C. T. 1171, where the final -es is an adverbial ending, orig. due to A. S. gen. cases in -es; but in this case nedes supplanted an older form nede, Layamon, l. 1051, which originated in A. S. nýde, gen. case of nýd, which was a fem. sb. with gen. in -e.

NEEDLE, a sharp pointed steel implement, for sewing with. (E.) M. E. nedle, nedel, also spelt neide, neelde; P. Plowman, C. xx. 56, and various readings.—A. S. nédl, Grein, ii. 274. + Du. naald (for naadt). + Icel. nál (by contraction). + Dan. naal. + Swed. nål. + G. nadel, O. H. G. nádelá. + Goth. nethila. β. The Teut. type is NÁ-THLA (Fick, iii. 156), from a base NA, to sew, fasten with thread, preserved in O. H. G. náhen, G. náhen, to sew, and also in Lat. neq., Gk. νήθειν, νήειν, to spin. The suffix = Aryan -tar, denoting the agent. γ. This is clearly one of the rather numerous cases in which an initial s has dropped off; the orig. root is ✓SNA, prob. to bind; see Curtius, i. 393. The initial s appears in Irish snathad, a needle, snathaim, I thread, or string together, snaidhe, thread, Gael. snathad, a needle, snath, thread, yarn; also G. schnur, a noose, and E. snare. From the same root is nerve. See Nerve, Snare. Der. needle-book, -ful, -gun, -woman, -work.

NEESE, NEEZE, to breathe hard, sneeze. (E.) 'To neeze' = to sneeze, Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 56. The sb. neezing is in Job, xli. 18 (A. V.).—M. E. nesen, vb., nesing, sb.; see Prompt. Parv., and Way's note. Somner gives an A. S. form niesan, but it is unauthorised. Still the word must be E., being known to all the Teut. languages. + Du. niezen, to sneeze. + O. Icel. hnjósa; mod. Icel. hnerra. + Dan. nyse. + Swed. nysa. + G. niesen, O. H. G. nisan. β. From a Teut. base HNUS, to sneeze; Fick, iii. 82. The word, like the parallel form sneeze, is doubtless of imitative origin. ¶ In the later version of Wyclif, Job, xli. 18, the reading is fnesynge; this is not quite the same word, though of similar formation. The sense of fnesynge is 'violent blowing,' but it also means sneezing; cf. A. S. fneosung, sneezing, fneast, a puff, Du. fniezen, to sneeze. Cf. 'And fneseth taste' = and puffs hard, Chaucer, C. T. Six-text ed., Group H, l. 62. It reminds us of Gk. νήειν, to blow. Der. nees-ing, neez-ing, as above.

NEFARIOUS, unlawful, very wicked. (L.) In Butler, To the Memory of Du-Val, l. 20. Englished from Lat. nefarius, impious, very wicked; by change of -us to -ous, as in arduous, &c.—Lat. nefas, that which is contrary to divine law, impiety, great wickedness.—Lat. ne, not; and fas, divine law, orig. that which is divinely spoken, from fari, to speak; see No and Fate. Der. nefarius-ly, -ness.

NEGATION, denial. (F., -L.) In Shak. Troilus, v. 2. 127.—F. negation, 'a negation'; Cot.—Lat. acc. negationem, from nom. negatio.—Lat. negatus, pp. of negare, to deny. β. Negare is opposed to aierre, to affirm; and though the mode of its formation is not clear, it may be taken as due to ne, not, and aierre, to say. γ. This verb aierre is allied to Gk. ήνυ, I say, and to Skt. ah, to say, to speak. The Skt. ah stands for older agh; and all are from ✓AGH, to say, speak, affirm. For the prefix ne, see No. Der. negat-ive, adj., Wint. Tale, i. 2. 274, M. E. negatif (to be found, according to Richardson, in b. iii. of the Testament of Love), from F. negatif = Lat. negativus; negative-ly, negative-ness; also negative, sb., Twelfth Nt. v. 24. From the same Lat. negare we have de-ny, ab-negate, re-negate, re-negade.

NEGLECT, to disregard. (L.) Orig. a pp. 'Because it should not be neglect or left undone'; Tyndall, Works, p. 276, col. 2. 'To neglects and set at nought'; Sir T. More, Works, p. 257 g.—Lat. neglectus, pp. of negligere, to neglect. Negligere = nece-legere.—Lat. nee, nor, not, contr. form of ne-que, compounded of ne, not, and que, enclitic particle related to qui, who; and legere, to gather, collect, select. See No, Who, and Legend. Der. neglect-ful, neglect-ful-ly, neglect-ful-ness; neglect-ion, a coined word, i Hen. VI, iv. 3. 49; and see negligence.

NEGLIGENCE, disregard. (F., -L.) M. E. negligence, Chaucer, C. T. 1883.—F. negligence, 'negligence'; Cot.—Lat. negligentia, carelessness.—Lat. negligent-, stem of pres. part. of negligere, to neglect; see Neglect. Der. negligent, M. E. negligent, Chaucer, C. T. 7398, from F. negligent (Cot.) = Lat. negligentem, acc. of pres. part. of negligere; negligent-ly; also negligee, from F. negligé, pp. of negligere, to neglect = Lat. negligere.

NEGOTIATE, to do business, transact. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627.

'She was a busy negotiating woman'; Bacon, Life of Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 24, l. 14.—Lat. negotiatius, pp. of negotiarī, to transact business.—Lat. negotium, business. Compounded of Lat. nec, nor, not (see Neglect); and otium, leisure (root uncertain). Der. negotiat-or, from Lat. negotiator; negotiat-ion, from F. negociation, 'negociation', Cot., from Lat. acc. negotiationem; negotia-ble; negotiat-or-y. ¶ The right (historical) spelling is negotiate for the verb, negotiation for the sb.; but this is seldom attended to.

NEGRO, one of the black race of mankind. (Span., -L.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. iii. 5. 42.—Span. negro, a black man.—Lat. nigrum, acc. of niger, black; see Nigrescent. ¶ Minshew gives the form neger; this is from the O. F. negre (mod. F. negre), 'a negro' (Cot.), and answers to mod. E. nigger. [†]

NEGUS, a beverage of wine, water, sugar, &c. (E.) 'The mixture now called negus was invented in Queen Anne's time by Colonel Negus'; Malone, Life of Dryden, p. 484 (Todd's Johnson). Col. Francis Negus was alive in the reign of Geo. I. The Neguses are a Norfolk family; see Notes and Queries, 1 Ser. x. 10, 2 Ser. v. 224; Gent. Mag. Feb. 1799, p. 119.

NEIF, NEAF, the fist. (Scand.) In Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. iv. 1. 20; 2 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 200. M. E. neue (=neve, date case), Havelok, 2405.—Icel. hnēfi, the fist; Swed. näfve; Dan. näve. The sense is the closed hand, with 'bent' fingers; as explained by the allied Gk. form κνάμναι, κνάμναι, to crook, bend, κνάμνός, bent, curved. These are nasalised forms from κνάμναι, to bend.

NEIGH, to make a noise as a horse. (E.) M. E. nezen, Wyclif, Isa. xxiv. 14, earlier version.—A. S. hneagan, to neigh; Ælfric's Grammar, 22. 30; whence the sb. hneagung, a neighing, id. i. 1. + Icel. gnegga, hneggja. + Swed. gnägga. + Dan. gnetge. + M. H. G. neigen (Benecke). An imitative word. Der. nag (i).

NEIGHBOUR, one who dwells near. (E.) M. E. neighbour, Chaucer, C. T. 9423.—A. S. neihgebür, a neighbour, John, ix. 8; so that the trisyllabic form neigh-e-bour in Chaucer is easily explained. The A. S. form neihbūr also occurs, but more rarely.—A. S. neih, nigh; and gebūr, a husbandman, for which see the Laws of Ine, sect. vi, in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, i. 106. The A. S. gebūr or būr is cognate with Du. boer, a boor (the prefix ge- making no difference). + M. H. G. nachgebür, nachbūr; mod. G. nachbar. See Nigh and Boor. Der. neighbour, adj., Jerem. xlix. 18, l. 40 (A. V.); neighbour-hood, M. E. neighbourhede, Prompt. Parv.; neighbour-ing, All's Well, iv. 1. 18; neighbour-ly, Merch. Ven. i. 2. 85; neighbour-li-ness.

NEITHER, not either. (E.) M. E. nether, Wyclif, Mk. v. 3. Various spelt noither, nouther, nothar (whence the contracted form nor); earlier nouther (Ormulum, 3124), nawther, nauther; see examples in Stratmann.—A. S. náwðer, contracted form of ná-hwæðer, neither; Sweet's A. S. Reader.—A. S. ná, no; and hwæðer, whether. Thus neither = no-whether; see No and Whether. β. It is rightly opposed to either, which also contains the word whether; see Either. Doublet, nor. ¶ The word ought rather to be nother; it has been altered under the influence of either.

NEMESIS, retributive justice. (L., -Gk.) In Shak. i Hen. VI, iv. 7. 78.—Lat. Nemesis.—Gk. νέμεσις, distribution of what is due, retribution.—Gk. νέμειν, to distribute; see Nomad.

NEOLOGY, the introduction of new phrases. (Gk.) Modern. Compounded from Gk. νέος, crude form of νέος, new; and -λογία, from λόγος, discourse, which from λέγειν, to speak. See New and Logic. Der. neologi-c, neologi-c-al, neolog-ise, neolog-ism, neolog-ist.

NEOPHYTE, a new convert, a novice. (L., -Gk.) 'There stands a neophyte glazing of his face'; Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, iii. 2 (Crites).—Lat. neophytus.—Gk. νεόφυτος, lit. newly planted, hence, a novice.—Gk. νέο-, for νέος, new; and φύσις, a plant, φύσις, grown, from the vb. φύειν, (1) to cause to grow, (2) to grow, allied to E. be. See New and Be.

NEOTERIC, recent, novel. (L., -Gk.) Spelt neoterique in Minshew, ed. 1627; but not given in Cotgrave or Littre.—Lat. neotericus.—Gk. νεωτερενός, novel; expanded from νεωτερος, comp. of νέος, new, which is cognate with E. new. See New. Der. neoteric-al.

NEPENTHE, NEPENTHES, a drug which lulled sorrow. (Gk.) Spelt nepenthe in Spenser, F. Q. iv. 3. 43; better nepenthes, as in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxi. c. 21.—Gk. νηπενθής, an epithet of a soothing drug in Homer, Od. iv. 221; neut. of νηπενθής, free from sorrow.—Gk. νη-, negative prefix allied to E. no; and πένθος, grief, a nasalised form allied to πένος, suffering. See No and Pathos.

NEPHEW, a brother's or sister's son. (F., -L.) The old meaning is 'grandson,' as in 1 Tim. v. 4, &c. The ph is a substitute for the older v, often written u. M. E. newew (=neveu), Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, l. 2656; newer (=neveu), Rob. of Glouc. p. 169, l. 17.—O. F. neveu, 'a nephew'; Cot.—Lat. nepotem, acc. of nepos, a grandson, a nephew (for the letter-changes, see Brachet). + Skt. napat, a grandson. + A. S. nefa, a nephew; Ælfred, tr. of Bede, b. iii. c. 6 (near the end). [This A. S. word was supplanted by the

F. form.] + O. H. G. nefo, nevo, G. neffe. Cf. Gk. νεφίος, a first cousin, kinsman. Root uncertain. Der. nepot-ism, i. e. favouritism to relations, from Lat. stem nepot-, with suffix -ism. See niece. [†]

NEREID, a sea-nymph. (L., -Gk.) Minshen has the pl. form Nereides. -Lat. Nereid-, stem of Nereis (pl. Nereides), a sea-nymph, a daughter of Nereus. -Gk. Νηρείς, a sea-nymph, a daughter of Nereus. -Gk. Νηρέα, an ancient sea-god. -Gk. νηρός, wet; an allied word to vaits, vaids, a naiad; see Naiad.

NERVE, physical strength, firmness, a fibre in the body conveying sensation. (F., -L.) M. E. nerfe, Chaucer, Troilus, b. ii. l. 642. -F. nerf, 'a sinew, might'; Cot. -Lat. neruum, acc. of neruus, a sinew. + Gk. νεῦρον, a sinew, string; cf. Gk. νεῦπά, a string. β. The Lat. and Gk. forms have lost an initial s, which appears in G. sehnur, a string, cord, line, lace, and in E. snare. The form of the root is SNA, to tie (?); hence also Irish snaidhe, thread, snaitheim, I thread together, and E. needle. See Needle, Snare. Der. nerve, verb, not in early use; neru-ous, formerly used in the sense of 'sinewy' (Phillips), from F. nerveux, 'sinewy' (Cot.), which from Lat. neruosus, full of nerve; neruosus-ly, nervous-ness; also neru-y, i. e. sinewy (obsolete), in Shak. Cor. ii. 1. 177; nerve-less; neur-algia.

NESH, tender, soft. (E.) Still in use in prov. E. M. E. nesh; 'tendre and nesh'; Court of Love, l. 1092 (15th cent.); 'That tendre was, and swithe [very] nesh'; Havelok, 2743. -A. S. hnæsc, hnesc, soft; Grein, ii. 91. + Goth. hnaskwus, soft, tender, delicate, Matt. xi. 8. [†]

NESSE, a promontory. (E.) Preserved in place-names, as Tot-ness, Sheer-ness. -A. S. næs, nes, (1) the ground, (2) a promontory, headland, as in Beowulf, ed. Grein, l. 1360; the form nassa also occurs, Grein, ii. 277. + Icel. næs; Dan. næs; Swed. näs. β. The sense of 'promontory' is due to some confusion with nose; but it is not quite certain that the words are related.

NEST, the bed formed by a bird for her young. (E.) M. E. nest, P. Plowman, B. xi. 336. -A. S. nest, a nest; Grein, ii. 282. + Du. nest. + Swed. näste. + G. nest. + Bret. neiz. + Gael. and Irish nead. + Lat. nidus (for nis-dus). + Lithuan. lizdas (for nizdas); Nesselmann. + Skt. nīda, a nest, a den. β. All from ✓ NAS, to go to, join oneself to, visit; cf. Skt. nas, to go to, join (Vedic); Gk. νέομαι, νέομαι, I go, νέοτος, a return home, ναίειν (= ναο-yeiv), to dwell. Thus the orig. sense is 'a place to go to,' a home, den, nest. Fick, iii. 161; Curtius, i. 391. Der. nest, vb.; nest-le, a frequentative form, orig. 'to frequent a nest'; nest-ling, with double dimin. suffix (= -ling), as in gos-ling, duck-ling.

NET (1), an implement made of knitted or knotted twine for catching fish, &c. (E.) M. E. net, nett, Wyclif, John, xxi. 6. -A. S. net, nett, Grein, ii. 282. + Du. net. + Icel. and Dan. net. + Swed. nät. + Goth. nati. + G. netz. β. Root uncertain; some consider it to be related to Goth. netjan, to wet, netzen, to wet, to steep; these are rather related words than original verbs, as shewn by their form. Probably named from their employment in rivers; cf. Skt. nada, a river. ¶ Certainly not connected with knot, which has initial k. Der. net, verb, (1) to use a net, (2) to make a net; nett-ing, net-work.

NET (2), clear of all charges. (F., -L.) Merely a doublet of neat; see Neat (2).

NETHER, lower. (E.) M. E. nethere; 'the ouere lippe and the nethere' = the upper lip and the lower one, Wright's Vocab. i. 146, l. 14. -A. S. neodæra, neodra, Ps. lxxxvii. 6, ed. Spelman. A comparative adj. due to the compar. adv. niðer, niðor, downward; Grein, ii. 294. Related forms are niðe, adv. below, neodan, adv. below, Grein, ii. 294, 290; but these are really forms suggested by niðer, and not original ones. β. In fact, the word is to be divided as ne-ther, the suffix -ther being comparative, as in o-ther, and answering to the -ter in af-ter, and the Skt. -tara (Gk. -τερος). + Icel. neðri, nether, lower; neðarr, adv. lower; cf. neðan, from below. + Dan. neder-, in comp. nederdeel, the lower part of a thing; cf. neden, adv. below, nede, ned, down. + Swed. nedre, nether, as in nedre läppen, the nether lip; cf. nedre, below, neder, ned, down. + G. nieder, nether, lower. γ. As said above, the base is ni-, and the orig. Teut. form is NI-THAR. This is shewn at once by the Skt. nitarām, adv. used in the sense of 'excessively, continually,' but grammatically a comparative form (with suffix -tara) from ni, downward, into. Cf. also Russ. nije, lower. Der. nethermost, 1 Kings, vi. 6; a false form, due to a popular etymology which connected the ending with most (as if the sense were 'most more down,' an absurd expression); it is really a corruption of A. S. niðemesta, in Elfled, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 2 (cap. vii. § 3); and A. S. niðe-mest- is from ni, down, with the Aryan suffixes -ta-ma- (as in Lat. op-ti-mus, best) and the usual A. S. superl. suffix -est. For a further account of these double superl. forms, see After, Aftermost. Also be-neath.

NETTLE, a well-known stinging plant. (E.) M. E. netle, nettle (better with one t); 'Nettle in, dock out'; Chaucer, Troil. iv. 461. -A. S. netele, netle; Cockayne, A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 340. + Du. netel. + Dan. nelde (for nedle). + Swed. nässla (for nätla). + G. nessel, O. H. G. nezzilā, nezilā. β. A dimin. form, with suffix -la = Aryan -ra; the simple form appears in O. H. G. nazza, Gk. νήθη, a nettle. γ. The Gk. form shews that the Teut. forms have lost an initial k, which easily drops off in the Teut. languages. The common Teut. type is HNATILA, dimin. of HNATYA; see Fick, iii. 81. δ. All from a Teut. base HNAT = Gk. KNAD, to sting, scratch; cf. Gk. κνᾶδ-άλλειν, to scratch; we also find Gk. κνίζειν (= κνιβ-yeiv), to scrape, grate, cause to itch, but this is a derivative from the sb. κνίδη. Thus the orig. sense is 'scratcher'; alluding to its stinging. Allied to Nit, q. v. Der. nettle-rash; nettle, vb., Phillips, ed. 1706.

NEURALGIA, pain in the nerves. (Gk.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. Coined from Gk. νεῦρ, stem of νεῦρον, a nerve, cognate with Lat. neruus; and Gk. ἄλγος, stem of ἄλγος, pain (root uncertain); with Gk. suffix -ia (-ia). See Nerve. Der. neuralgi-c.

NEUTER, neither, sexless, taking neither part. (L.) 'The duke . . . abode as neuter and helde with none of both parties'; Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 252 (R.). -Lat. neuter, neither. Compounded of ne, not; and uter, whether of the two (put for quater), cognate with E. Whether, q. v. Cf. Skt. katara, whether of two. Thus neuter = no-whether; which is the exact force of E. neither; see Neither. Der. neutr-al, Macb. ii. 3, 115, from Lat. neutalis; neutr-al-ly, neutr-al-ise, neutr-al-is-at-ion; neutr-al-ity = F. neutralité (Cotgrave), from Lat. acc. neutralitatem.

NEVER, not ever, at no time. (E.) M. E. neuer (with u for v), Chaucer, C. T. 1135. -A. S. nefre; compounded of ne, not, and æfre, ever; Grein, ii. 275. See No and Ever. Der. never-the-less, M. E. neuerpeles, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 9, l. 16, substituted for the earlier form napeles = A. S. nā þe læs (= no-the-less, not the less). In this phrase, the A. S. þe, also written þy, is the instrumental case of the def. article se, seo, þæt, and is cognate with Goth. thé, on that account, instrum. case of sa, so, thata; for examples, see les in Grein, ii. 164. See The.

NEW, recent, fresh. (E.) M. E. newe (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 459, 8733. -A. S. niwe, neowe, niowe, Grein, ii. 298. + Du. nieuw. + Icel. nýr. + Dan. and Swed. ny. + Goth. niujis. + G. neu, O. H. G. niuwī. + Lat. nouus. + W. newydd. + Irish nua, nuadh, Gael. nuadh. + Lithuan. naufas; of which an older form was perhaps navas (Nesselmann). + Russ. novuii. + Gk. νέος. + Skt. nava, new. We also find Skt. nūana, new, fresh. β. All formed from a base NU, which is no other than E. now; cf. Skt. nu, nū, now; see Now. Thus new means 'that which is now,' recent. Der. new-ly = A. S. niwlice, Grein, ii. 299; new-ness, used by Sir T. More, Works, p. 1328 g; new-ish, new-fashioned; and see new-fangled, news, re-new; also nov-el, nov-ice.

NEWELL, the upright column about which a circular staircase winds. (F., -L.) 'The staires, . . . let them bee upon a faire open newell, and finely raild in'; Bacon, Essay 45, Of Building. Cotgrave, s. v. noyau, spells it nuell, which is an older and better spelling. The right sense is much the same as that of nucleus, with which word it is closely connected. The form shews that the word was borrowed early, prob. not later than A. D. 1400. -O. F. nual (12th cent., see Littré), later F. noyau, 'the stone of a plumme, also, the nuell or spindle of a winding staire'; Cot. So called because it is the centre or nucleus of the staircase, round which the steps are ranged. -Lat. nucalis, neut. of nucalis, lit. belonging to a nut; hence applied to the kernel of a nut or the stone of a plum. -Lat. nuc-, stem of nux, a nut; with suffix -alis. See Nucleus.

NEWFANGLED, fond of what is new, novel. (E.) The old sense is 'fond of what is new'; see Shak. L. L. L. i. 1. 106, As You Like It, iv. 1. 152; and in Palsgrave. The final -d is a late addition to the word; due to a loss of a sense of the old force of -le (see below); the M. E. form is newefangel (4 syllables), fond of novelty, Chaucer, C. T. 10932. So also Gower, C. A. ii. 273: 'But every newe loue quemeeth To him, that newefangel is' = but every new love pleases him who is fond of what is new. β. Compounded of newe, new; and fangel, ready to seize, snatching at, not found in A. S., but formed with perfect regularity from the base fang-, to take (occurring in A. S. fang-en, pp. of fōm, contracted form of fangan, to take), with the suffix -el (= A. S. -ol) used to form adjectives descriptive of an agent. γ. This suffix is preserved in mod. E. whitt-ol = one who knows, sarcastically used to mean an idiot; cf. A. S. sprec-ol, fond of talking, talkative; wac-ol, vigilant; and see Nimble. So also fangel = fond of taking, readily adopting, and new-fangle = fond of taking up what is new; whence new-fangle-d, by later addition of d. δ. The suffix -ol, by the usual interchange of l and r, is nothing but another form of the familiar suffix -er, expressive of the agent. Thus newfangle = new-fang-er. See Fang. Der. newfangled-ness, a corruption of M. E. newefangelnes, Chaucer, C. T. 10924; formed by adding -nes (-ness) to M. E. newe-fangel.

NEWS, what is new, tidings. (E.) Formerly newes, which does not seem to be older than about A. D. 1500. 'Desyrous to here newes;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 66. 'What newes he brought;' Surrey, tr. of Virgil, Æn. ii. l. 95. It is nothing but a plural, formed from new treated as a sb.; so also tidings. It is a translation of F. nouvelles, news, pl. of nouvelle, new (Cotgrave); so also Lat. noua = new things, i. e. news. See New. Der. news-boy, -monger, 1 Hen. IV, iii. 2. 25, -paper, -room, -vendor.

NEWT, a kind of lizard. (E.) This is one of the words which has taken to itself an initial n, borrowed from the indef. art. an; see remarks on the letter N. A newt = an ewt. M. E. newte, ewte. 'Newte, or ewte, wyrm, lacertus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 355. Ewte is a contraction of the older form euete (= ewete). The O. F. lesard, a lizard, is glossed by ewte (the MS. prob. has ewte); in Walter de Bibbesworth; see Wright's Vocab. i. 159. — A. S. efeta; 'Lacerta, efeta,' in a gloss; Wright's Voc. i. 78, col. 2. β. The word is to be divided as ef-eta, where -eta is a suffix due to Aryan suffix -ta; see March, A. S. Grammar, p. 120. The base ef-, for af-, answers to Aryan AP, signifying 'river'; cf. Skt. ap, water (whence apchara, living in water), Lithuan. uppis, a stream. γ. The Lithuanian has the parallel form uppetakis, adj., that which goes in the water, which was used as a sb. to mean 'a trout' (Nesselmann). Hence a newt or eft is a 'water-animal,' or inhabitant of a stream, a name due to its amphibious nature. ¶ The mod. prov. E. eft is a contraction of A. S. efeta. For further references, see King Alisaunder, l. 6027, Mandeville's Travels, p. 61, &c.; see Stratmann.

NEXT, highest, nearest. (E.) Next is a doublet of nighest, of which it is an older spelling. 'When þe bale is hest, þenne is þe bote nest' = when the sorrow is highest, then is the remedy highest; Proverbs of Hendyng, st. 23. This is often cited in the form: 'When bale is hest, then bote is neast;' and just as hest or hest is a contraction of M. E. hehest (highest), so is next or neast a contraction of M. E. nehest (highest). See Stratmann, s. v. neh. The A. S. forms are neðst, neðst, nyht, niht, nieht; Grein, ii. 283. See Nigh.

NIB, the point of a pen. (E.) Another form of neb, which is the older spelling. The spelling nib is in Johnson's Dict., but does not seem to be old. See Neb. Der. nipp-le, q. v.

NIBBLE, to eat in small portions. (E.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 1. 62. Not connected with nib, or neb, but with nip, of which it is the frequentative form, and means 'to nip often.' In fact, it has lost an initial k, and stands for knibble, just as nip does for knip. + Low G. nibbeln, knibbeln, to nibble, gnaw slightly; Bremen Wört. Cf. also Du. knibelen, to cavi, haggle; the same word, differently employed. See Nip. Der. nibbi-er.

NICE, hard to please, fastidious, dainty, delicious. (F., — L.) M. E. nice, foolish, simple; later, it took the sense of fastidious; and lastly, that of delicious. In Chaucer, C. T. 5508, 6520; in the latter passage 'wise and nothing nice' = wise and not simple at all. So also in P. Plowman, B. xvi. 33. 'For he was nyce, and kowþe no wisdom' = for he was foolish, and knew no wisdom; Rob. of Glouc. p. 106, last line. — O. F. nice, 'lazy, slothful, idle, faint, slack, dull, simple;' Cot. The orig. sense was 'ignorant.' — Lat. nescius, acc. of nescire, ignorant. — Lat. ne, not; and sci-, related to scire, to know. See No and Science. ¶ The remarkable changes in the sense may have been due to confusion with E. nesh, which sometimes meant 'delicate' as well as 'soft.' Der. nice-ty, M. E. nicete, Chaucer, C. T. 4044, from O. F. nicete, 'sloth, simplicity' (Cot.); nice-ness.

NICHE, a recess in a wall, for a statue. (F., — Ital., — L.) In Minshen, ed. 1627. — F. niche, 'a niche;' Cot. — Ital. nicchia, a niche; closely allied to nicchio, a shell, hence a shell-like recess in a wall, so called (probably) from the early shape of it. Florio explains nicchio as 'the shell of any shell-fish, a nooke or corner, also such little cubboords in churches as they put images in or as images stand in.' — Lat. mitulum, mýtilum, acc. of mitulus, mýtilus, a sea-muscle. 'Derived in the same way as Ital. secchia from situla, a bucket, and Ital. vecchio from Lat. vetulus, old; as to the change of initial, cf. Ital. nespola with Lat. mespilum, a medlar;' Diez. A similar change of initial occurs in E. napkin, due to Lat. mappa. β. Referred by some to Gk. μυρίλος, a muscle; but the Gk. word may be of Lat. origin. The Lat. mytilus is also found in the form mýtilus, and is allied to musculus, a little mouse, also a sea-muscle; cf. Gk. μύαξ, a sea-muscle. γ. All dimin. forms from mu-, put for mus, a mouse. See Muscle, Mouse. ¶ The similarity to E. nick is accidental.

NICK (1), a small notch. (O. Low G.) 'Though but a stick with a nick;' Fotherby, Atheom., p. 62, ed. 1622 (Todd's Johnson). 'To nick, to hit the time right; I nick'd it, I came in the nick of time, just in time. Nick and notch, i. e. crena, are synonymous words, and to nick a thing seems to me to be originally no more than to hit just the notch or mark;' J. Ray, pref. to Collection of English (dialectal) Words, ed. 1691. Nick is an attenuated form of noek, the old spelling of notch, and means a little notch; so also tip from top. See Notch. β. Hence nick, a score on a tally, a reckoning; 'out of all nick' = past all counting, Two Gent. iv. 2. 76. Der. nick, to notch slightly, Com. Errors, v. 175.

NICK (2), the devil. (E.) In the phrase 'Old Nick.' A name taken from the old Northern mythology. A. S. nicor, a water-sprite; Beowulf, ed. Grein, ll. 422, 575, 845, 1427. + Icel. nykr, a fabulous water-goblin. + Dan. nök, nisse. + Swed. näcken, a sea-god. + O. H. G. nichus, a water-sprite, fem. nichessa; G. nix, fem. nixe. Root unknown; cf. Fick, iii. 163.

NICKEL, a grayish white metal. (G., — Gk.?) One of the few G. words in E. Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. — G. nickel, nickel; kupfernichel, nickel of copper. β. In Mahn's Webster we are told that nickel is an abbreviation of kupfer-nickel, i. e. 'copper of Nick, or Nicholas, a name given in derision, as it was thought to be a base ore of copper.' The Swed. form kopparnickel is added, which I fail to trace, though nickel was first described by Cronstedt, a Swede, in 1751. γ. If this be right, the word is not a true G. word, but borrowed from Gk. Νικόλαος; cf. Acts, vi. 5.

NICKNACK, the same as Knickknack, q. v.

NICKNAME, a surname, soubriquet. (E.) In Shak. Romeo, ii. 1. 12. One of the words which has acquired an unoriginal initial n; see remarks on the letter N. M. E. nekename, corruption of ekename, an additional name; in later times changed to nickname, from a popular etymology which connected the word with the verb nick, which properly means 'to notch,' not 'to clip.' It may further be remarked that a nickname is not so much a docking of the name, as an addition to it, a sur-name. 'Neke-name, or eke-name, agnomen;' Prompt. Parv. p. 352. Way cites in his note similar glosses, such as: 'Agnomen, an ekename, or a surname (sic),' Medulla; 'An ekname, agnomen;' Catholicon. Spelt ekename, Testament of Love; Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, p. 295 back, col. 2, l. 9. There can be no doubt as to the purely E. origin of the word, which has just the sense of Lat. agnomen, and is a mere variation of M. E. toname, a to-name, additional name, surname (cognate with G. zuname, a nick-name), for which see P. Plowman, C. xiii. 211, Layamon, 9383. Thus the word is simply compounded of eke and name; see Eke, Name. + Icel. auknafn, a nickname; from auka, to eke, and nafn, a name. + Swed. öknamn, from öka, to eke, and namn, a name. + Dan. ögenavn, from öge, to eke. Der. nickname, verb, Hamlet, iii. 1. 151.

NICOTIAN, belonging to tobacco. (F.) 'Your Nicotian [tobacco] is good too;' Ben Jonson, Every Man, ed. Wheatley, A. iii. sc. 5, l. 89. — O. F. Nicotiane, 'Nicotian, tobacco, first sent into France by Nicot in 1560;' Cot. Coined, with fem. suffix -iane (= Lat. -iana), from the name Nicot. Der. Hence also nicot-inse.

NIECE, the daughter of a brother or sister. (F., — L.) The fem. form of nephew. M. E. nece, Rob. of Glouc. p. 353, l. 9; spelt neyce, King Alisaunder, l. 1712. — O. F. niece, mod. F. nièce. Cf. Prov. neptia, a niece, in Bartsch, Chrestomathie Provençale. — Low Lat. neptia, which occurs A. D. 809 (Brachet). — Lat. neptis, a granddaughter, a niece; used as fem. of nepos (stem nepot-); see Nephew.

NIGGARD, a miser. (Scand.) M. E. nigard (with one g), Chaucer, C. T. 5915; whence the sb. nigardie, id. 13102. The suffix -ard is of F. origin, as usual; and the F. -ard is of O. H. G. origin; see Brachet, Introd. to F. Etym. Dict. § 196. But this suffix was freely added to E. words, as in drunk-ard; and we find a parallel form in M. E. nygun. '[He was] a nygun and anarous' = he was a niggard and an avaricious man; Rob. of Brunne, Handlyng Synne, l. 5578. We also find an adj. niggish; Richardson. Of Scand. origin. — Icel. hnöggrr, niggardly, stingy; Swed. njugg, niggardly, scanty, noga, exact, strict, precise; Dan. nöie, exact. + G. genau, close, strict, precise. + A. S. hneaw, sparing. β. These forms answer to a Teut. type HNAWA, sparing; Fick, iii. 81. The form of the root is KNU (= Teut. HNU), preserved in Gk. κνέειν, to scratch, κνός, the itch, κνύμα, a scratching; so that the orig. sense is 'one who scrapes.' Der. niggard, adj., Hamlet, iii. 1. 13; niggard-ly, Hen. V, ii. 4. 46; niggard-ly, adv., Merry Wives, ii. 2. 205; niggard-li-ness.

NIGH, near, not far off, close. (E.) M. E. neh, neih, ney, neigh, nigh; Chaucer, C. T. 1528; Havelok, 464; &c. — A. S. neah, neh, Grein, ii. 282, used as adj., adv., and prep. + Du. na, adv., nigh. + Icel. ná, adv., nigh; only used in composition, as ná-búi, a neighbour. + Goth. nehw, nehwa, adv., nigh; whence nehujan, to draw nigh. + G. nahe, adj., nach, prep., nigh, next, &c. β. These forms answer to a Teut. type NÄHW or NAHWA, adv., nigh, nearly, allied to Goth. ganohs, A. S. genoh, E. enough; see Enough. γ. The base of Goth. ganohs is NAH, appearing in Goth. ganah it suffices, Matt. x. 25. — ✓ NAK, to attain, reach to; cf. Skt. naç, to attain, Lat. nancisci, to acquire. Thus the sense of nigh is 'that which reaches to,' or 'that which suffices.' Der. near, q. v., neighbour, q. v., next, q. v. And see necessary, enough.

NIGHT, the time of the sun's absence. (E.) M. E. niht, night; Chaucer, C. T. 23. — A. S. niht, neht, neakt, Grein, ii. 284. + Du. nacht. + Icel. nátt, nótt. + Dan. nat. + Swed. natt. + Goth. nahts. + G. nacht. + W. nos. + Irish nochd. + Lithuan. naktis. + Russ. noche. + Lat. nox (stem noct-). + Gk. νύξ (stem nykt-). + Skt. nakta. β. All from the ✓ NAK, to fail, disappear, perish, from the failure of light; cf. Skt. naḥ, to disappear, Gk. νέω, a corpse, Lat. nex, death, destruction, Skt. nashta, lost, invisible, dead. Der. night-cap, -dress, -fall, -jar (from its jarring noise), -piece, -watch; also night-ly, M. E. nihliche, Reliquiæ Antiquæ, i. 131 (Stratmann), night-less, night-ward; also numerous compounds in Shak., as -bird, -crow, -dog, -fly, -foe, -gown, &c. And see night-mare, night-shade, night-in-gale, nocturn.

NIGHTINGALE, the bird that sings by night. (E.) The n before g is excrement, as in messenger for messager, passenger for passager, &c. M. E. nightingale, Chaucer, C. T. 98; earlier form nyhtegale, Reliquiæ Antiquæ, i. 241 (Stratmann). — A. S. nihtegale, Wright's Vocab. i. 62, col. 2. Lit. 'singer of the night.' — A. S. nihte, gen. case of niht, neht, night; and gale = singer, from galan, to sing (Grein). + Du. nachtegal. + Dan. nattergal. + Swed. näktergal. + G. nachtigall, O. H. G. nahtigala, nahtigala, nahtigala. β. In each case the second syllable is due to a case-ending of the sb.; thus Dan. natter, Swed. näkter, answer to an O. Icel. gen. sing. náttar, mod. Icel. náttir; cf. Icel. náttartíal, a tale or number of nights, a parallel form to nightertale in Chaucer, C. T. 97. γ. The verb galan became galen in M. E., and occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 6414; it is cognate with Dan. gale, Swed. gala, to crow as a cock, O. H. G. halan, to sing; and is closely related to E. yell. See Yell.

NIGHTMARE, an incubus, a dream at night accompanied by pressure on the breast. (E.) M. E. nightmare. 'Nygthe mare, or mare, or wytyche, Epialtes, vel effialtes' [epialtes]; Prompt. Parv. [Tyrrwhitt's reading of nyghtes mare in Chaucer, C. T. 3485, is unauthorised.] — A. S. neahst, niht, night; and mar, a night-mare, a rare word, occurring in Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 306, l. 12. + Du. nachtmerrie, a night-mare; an accommodated spelling, due to confusion with Du. merrie, a mare, with which the word has no connexion. A like confusion is probably common in modern English, though the A. S. forms are distinct. + Icel. mar, the nightmare, an ogress. + Swed. mar. + Dan. mare. + Low G. moor, nagt-moor; Bremen Wörterbuch, iii. 184, where the editor, against the evidence, confuses moor with Low L. märe, a mare. + O. H. G. mar, a night-mare, incubus; also spelt mar. β. The sense is 'crusher'; from ✓ MAR, to pound, bruise, crush; see Mar. The A. S., Icel., and O. H. G. suffix -a denotes the agent, as in numerous other cases; e. g. A. S. hant-a, a hunter, huntsman. [+]

NIGHTSHADE, a narcotic plant. (E.) A. S. nihtscadu, nihtscada, nightshade; Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 340. Compounded of niht, night, and scadu, shade; perhaps because thought to be evil, and loving the shade of night. See Night, Shade. [+]

NIGRESCENT, growing black. (L.) In Todd's Johnson. — Lat. nigrescent-, stem, of pres. pt. of nigrescere, to become black, inceptive form of nigrere, to be black. — Lat. nigr-, stem of niger, black. β. Niger has the crude form nigro = nic-ro, formed from nic-, allied to Skt. nig, night, which is an attenuated form of nakta, night. Thus the sense of niger is 'night-like.' See Night, Negro. Der. nigritude, from Lat. nigritudo, blackness; see Hood's Poems, A Black Job, last line but one.

NIMBLE, active. (E.) The b is excrement. M. E. nimel, nimil; see 'Nymyl, capax' in Prompt. Parv., and Way's note. Formed from A. S. nim-an, to take, catch, seize, with the A. S. suffix -ol, still preserved in E. witt-ol, lit. a wise man, used sarcastically to mean a simpleton. We find the parallel A. S. forms numol, numul, numel, occurring in the compounds searþ-numul, lit. 'sharp-taking,' i. e. efficacious, and teart-numul, also lit. 'tart-taking,' i. e. efficacious; Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms, i. 134, l. 10, 152, l. 3, and footnotes; these are formed from num-, the base of the past tense pl. and pp. of the same verb niman. The sense is 'quick at seizing,' hence active, nimble. So also Icel. nema, keen, quick at learning, from nema, to take; Dan. nem, quick, apprehensive, adroit, from nemme, to apprehend, learn. β. The A. S. niman, to seize, is cognate with Icel. nema, Dan. nemme, G. nehmen, Goth. niman, to take; a strong verb, with A. S. and Goth. pt. t. nam. The orig. sense is 'to take as one's share.' — ✓ NAM, to apportion, distribute, allot; whence also Gk. νέμειν, to distribute, Lat. num-erus, a number, &c. Der. nimbl-y, nimble-ness. From the same root, nem-esis, nom-ad, num-b-er, num-ism-at-ic. And see Numb.

NINE, a numeral, one less than ten. (E.) M. E. nyne, nine, Chaucer, C. T. 24. Here the final -e is the usual pl. ending, and nyne stands for an older form niȝene, extended form of niȝen, Layamon, 2804. — A. S. nigon, nigen, Grein, ii. 296. + Du. negēn. + Icel. niú. +

Dan. ni. + Swed. nio. + G. neun. + Goth. niun. + W. naw. + Irish and Gael. naoi. + Lat. novem. + Gk. ἐννέα (= ē-néfa). + Skt. navan. β. All from an orig. NAWAN, nine; of unknown origin. Cf. also Lithuan. devyni, devyni (Nesselmann), nine, Russ. deviate, with initial d for n. As Curtius remarks, the word reminds us of Skt. nava, Lat. novus, new, and perhaps points 'to an old system of numbering by fours;' but this is mere guesswork. Der. nine-fold, nine-pins; nine-teen, A. S. nigontyne (Grein); nine-ty, A. S. nigontig (Grein); nin-th, A. S. nigoða, nigeða (id.).; nine-teen-th, nine-ti-eth; nin-th-ly. And see Novem-ber. [+]

NINNY, a simpleton. (Ital.) 'What a pied ninny's this!' Temp. iii. 2. 71. — Ital. ninno, a child, a dialectal form cited by Diez, not given in Florio nor in Meadows' Dict., but the same word with Span. niño, a child, infant, one of little experience. Of imitative origin; cf. Ital. ninna, a lullaby, nurse's song to rock a child to sleep, ninnare, to lull to sleep, nanna, 'a word that women use to still their children with' (Florio). From the repetition of the syllables ni, ni, or na, na, in humming or singing children to sleep. See Nun.

NIP, to pinch, break off the edge or end. (E.) M. E. nippen; 'nyppynge his lypes' = biting his lips, pressing them with his teeth, P. Plowman, C. vii. 104. Put for knip; see G. Douglas, Prol. to XII Book of the Æneid, l. 94. Not found in A. S., though the derivative cnif, a knife, occurs; see Knife. + Du. knippen, to pinch; knippen, to fillip, crack, snap, entrap. + Dan. knibe, to pinch, nip. + Swed. knipa, to pinch, squeeze, catch. + G. kneifen, to pinch, nip; kneipen, to pinch, twitch. + Lithuan. žnybti, žnypti, to pinch, nip, as a crab with his claws, to bite as a goose with its beak (Nesselmann). β. All from a Teut. base KNIB, to nip (Fick, iii. 48). Der. nip, sb., a cut, Tam. Shrew, iv. 3. 90; nipp-er, nipp-ers, nibb-le. And see knife, neap.

NIPPLE, a teat, a small projection with an orifice. (E.) In Shak. Macb. i. 7. 57; and in Minshew, ed. 1627. A dimin. of nib, just as neble is the dimin. of neb. 'Nebble of a womans pappe, bout de la mamelle;' Palsgrave. Nib and neb are the same word; see Nib, Neb. ¶ The alleged 'A. S. nyppele, a nipple,' in Lye's Dict., is wholly unauthorised. Der. nipple-wort.

NIT, the egg of a louse or small insect. (E.) M. E. nite, nyte, also used to mean a louse. 'Nyte, wyrm, Lens;' Prompt. Parv. — A. S. hnitu, to translate Lat. lens; Wright's Vocab. i. 24, col. 1. + Du. neet. + Icel. nitr, O. Icel. gnit. + Dan. gnid. + Swed. gnēt. + G. niss, M. H. G. niz. Cf. also Russ. gnida, a nit, Gk. κόβις (stem κόβιδ-). β. The Teut. type is HNITI or HNITA; Fick, iii. 81; the sense is 'that which attacks' or 'stings' (orig. 'that which makes to itch'), from the Teut. base HNIT, to attack, thrust. This appears in A. S. hnitan, only used of an ox, meaning 'to gore,' Exod. xxi. 28, Icel. hnita, to attack, strike. The corresponding Aryan root is KNID, appearing in Gk. κνίσειν (= κνίδ-yein), to scrape, tease, make to itch; and KNID is another form of KNAD, which is the root of nettle; see Nettle. [+]

NITRE, saltpetre. (F., -L., -Gk., -Arab.) Spelt niter in Minshew, ed. 1627. — F. nitre, 'niter;' Cot. — Lat. nitrum. — Gk. νίτρον, 'natron, a mineral alkali, our potassa or soda, or both (not our nitre, i. e. saltpetre);' Liddell and Scott. This means that the sense of the word has changed; but the form is the same. — Arab. nitrún, natrún, natron, native alkaline salt; Rich. Dict. p. 1585. Der. nitr-ale, nitr-ic, nitr-ous, nitr-i-fy, nitr-ite. Also nitro-gen, i. e. that which produces nitre, from νίτρο-, crude form of νίτρον, and γεν-, base of γίγναι, to produce; see Generate. [+]

NO (1), a word of refusal or denial. (E.) M. E. no, Will. of Palerne, 2701, 3115. There is a clear distinction in M. E. between no and nay, the former being the stronger form; see Nay, which is of Scand. origin. — A. S. ná, nó, adv., never, no. Compounded of ne, not, and á, ever. The form á became oo in M. E., occurring in Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 111; but this form was entirely superseded by the cognate word ai, ay, mod. E. ay, aye, which is of Scand. origin. See Aye, adv., ever. β. The neg. particle ne, signifying 'not,' is cognate with O. H. G. ni, M. H. G. ne, not; Goth. ni, not; Russ. ne, not; Irish, Gael., and W. ni, not; Lat. ne, in non-ne; Skt. na, not. The Skt. form na is the most original. C. In mod. E. this neg. particle is represented by the initial n- of n-ever, n-ought, n-one, n-either, n-ay, n-or, and the like. ¶ It is quite a mistake to suppose that the M. E. ne, not, so common in Chaucer, is of F. origin. It is rather the A. S. ne, which happens to coincide in form with F. ne, of Lat. origin; and that is all.

NO (2), none. (E.) Merely a shortened form of none, as a is of an; see None. Der. no-body, q. v.

NOBLE, illustrious, excellent, magnificent. (F., -L.) In early use. M. E. noble, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 273, l. 16. — F. noble. — Lat. nobilem, acc. of nobilis (= gnó-bilis), well-known, notable, illustrious, noble. — Lat. gnó-, base of noscere (= gnoscerere), to know, cognate with E. know; with suffix -bilis. See Know. Der. nobly, adv.; noble-man, in O. Eng. Homilies, as above; noble-ness (a hybrid word, with E. suffix), Wint. Tale, ii. 3. 12. Also nobil-i-ty, K. John, v. 2. 42, from O. F. nobilite = Lat. acc. nobilitatem.

NOBODY, no one. (E.) In Shak. Merry Wives, i. 4. 14. Compounded of no, short for none, and body; not in early use. It took the place of M. E. no man, which is now not much used. See None and Body.

NOCK, the old form of Notch, q. v.

NOCTURN, the name of a service of the church. (F., -L.) See Palmer, Origines Liturgicæ, i. 202, ed. 1832. 'A nocturne of the Psalter'; Lord Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 26 (R.) M. E. nocturne, Ancræn Riwle, p. 270, l. 1. = F. nocturne, nocturnal; also, a nocturn. = Low Lat. nocturna, a nocturn; orig. fem. of Lat. nocturnus, belonging to night. β. To be divided as nocturnus, answering to Gk. νυκ-τερ-νός, nocturnal; from noc- = noct-, stem of nox, night, cognate with E. night; with Aryan suffixes -tar and -na. See Night. Der. nocturn-al, Milton, P. L. iii. 40, viii. 134, from late Lat. nocturnalis, extended from nocturnus; nocturn-al-ly. [†]

NOD, to incline the head forward. (E.) M. E. nodden, Chaucer, C. T. 16996. Not found in A. S., and difficult to trace. But it answers to a G. form *notten, found in the frequentative form notteln, a prov. G. word, meaning to shake, wag, jog (Flügel). To nod is to shake the head by a sudden inclination forwards, as is done by a sleepy person; to make a butting movement with the head. Closely allied to M. H. G. nuōtōn, O. H. G. hnōtōn, to shake. β. A parallel form occurs in prov. E. nod, to jog, to move on (Halliwell); Lowland Sc. noggan, 'walking steadily, and regularly nodding the head' (Jamieson). Cf. also Low Sc. nodge, to strike with the knuckles, nodge, a push or stroke, properly with the knuckles (Jamieson); mod. E. nudge. The orig. notion seems to be that of butting or pushing; and there is a connection with Icel. hnjóða, to hammer, clinch, rivet, hnjóða, a rammer for beating turf. Fick (iii. 82) gives HNUD as the form of the Teut. base of the latter words. See also Knock, Nudge. ¶ Not connected with Lat. nuere, to nod (base nu). Der. nod, sb.

NODDLE, a name for the head. (E.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, i. 1. 64. Wedgwood well says: 'the noddle, noddock, or niddock is properly the projecting part at the back of the head, the nape of the neck, then ludicrously used for the head itself.' M. E. nodle, nodil. 'Nodly, or noddle of the heed, or nolle, Occiput'; Prompt. Parv. β. It really stands for knoddle, and is the dimin. of knoda, a word lost in Early E., but preserved in other languages; cf. O. Du. knodde, a knob (Hexham); Icel. hnúðr, a knob, ball; G. knoten, a knot, a knob. γ. This knod is a mere variant of Knot, q. v. And see Node, below. [†]

NODE, a knot. (L.) 'Nodes, in astronomy, are the points of the intersection of the orbit of the sun or any other (!) planet with the ecliptick'; Phillips, ed. 1706. 'Nodus or Node, a knot, or noose, &c.'; id. = Lat. nodus (= gnodus), a knot; cognate with E. Knot, q. v. Der. nod-ous, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 4. § 1, Englished from Lat. nodosus; nod-os-i-ty, id. b. v. c. 5. § 2, from F. nodosité, 'knottness' (Cot.) = Lat. acc. nodositatem; nod-ule, Englished from Lat. nodulus, a little knot, dimin. of nodus.

NOGGIN, a wooden cup, small mug. (C.) 'Of drinking-cups . . we have . . mazers, broad-mouthed dishes, noggins, whisks, piggins, &c.'; Heywood, Drunkard Opened, &c., ed. 1635, p. 45 (Todd). Also in Minshew, ed. 1627. = Irish noigin, 'a noggin, a naggin, quarter of a pint,' O'Reilly; Gael. noigean, a wooden cup. The word has lost an initial c, appearing in Irish cnagaire, 'a naggin'; Gael. cnagan, a little knob, peg, pin, an earthen pipkin. β. All these words are from Gael. and Irish cnag, a knob, peg, also a knock; note also Gael. cnagaire, a knocker, a noggin, cnagaidh, bunchy. Hence the noggin is named from its round form, or from its being made of a knotty piece of wood; cf. Irish cnag, a knot in wood. γ. Also the orig. sense of cnag was a knock, a blow, hence a bump, as being the effect of a blow. All from Irish and Gael. cnag, to knock; see Knag, Knock. ¶ Hence the spelling knoggin in Swift, cited by Richardson, is correct.

NOISE, a din, troublesome sound. (F., -L., -Gk.?) In early use. M. E. noise, Ancræn Riwle, p. 66, l. 18. = F. noise, 'a brabble, brawle, debate, . . also a noise'; Cot. β. The O. F. form is noise; and the Provençal has nausa, nauza, noisa, nueiza (Bartsch). The origin is uncertain; it is discussed by Diez, who decides that the Prov. form nausa could only have been derived from Lat. nausea, so that a noise is so called because nauseous; see Nausea. If this be right, the word is really of Greek origin. γ. Others hold to a derivation from Lat. noxia, harm, as if a noise were noxious; see Noxious. This latter derivation, though at first sight more obvious, hardly agrees with the Prov. nausa, and perhaps not even with O. F. nose. Der. nois-y, for which formerly noise-ful was used, as in Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, st. 40; nois-i-ly, nois-i-ness; noise-less, -ly, -ness; also noise, verb, M. E. noisen, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. met. 6, l. 2171.

NOISOME, annoying, troublesome. (F., -L.; with E. suffix.) Formed from M. E. noy, annoyance, injury; with E. suffix -some = A. S. -sum, as in Winsome, q. v. We find three forms in use formerly, viz. noy-ous, Wyclif, 2 Thess. iii. 2; noy-ful, Sir T. More, Works, p. 481 c; and noy-some, id. p. 1389 h. β. Noy is a mere contraction of M. E. anoy, anoi; see Romaunt of the Rose, 4404, &c. The derivation is from the Lat. phrase in odio habere, as explained s. v. Annoy, q. v. ¶ Not connected with Lat. nocere, to hurt.

NOMAD, wandering; one of a wandering tribe. (Gk.) 'The Numidian nomades, so named of changing their pasture'; Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. v. c. 3. = Gk. νομάς, stem of νομᾶς, roaming, wandering, esp. in search of pasture. = Gk. νομός, a pasture, allotted abode. = Gk. νέμειν, to assign, allot. = √ NAM, to assign; cf. Skt. nam, to bow to, bow, bend, upa-nam, to fall to one's share, upa-nata, due. Hence also nem-ests, nim-ble, num-ber; and the suffix -nomy in astronomy, auto-nomy, gastro-nomy, anti-nomi-an. Der. nomad-ic.

NOMENCLATOR, one who gives names to things. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. = Lat. nomenclator, one who gives names, lit. 'name-caller.' = Lat. nomen, a name; and calare, to call. See Name and Calendar. Der. nomenclat-ure, from Lat. nomenclatura, a calling by name, naming.

NOMINAL, pertaining to a name, existing only in name. (L.) 'One is a reall, another a nominall'; Tyndal's Works, p. 104, col. 1; see Spec. of English, ed. Skeat, p. 176, l. 316. This refers to the famous dispute between the Nominalists and Realists; the founder of the former sect was condemned by a council at Soissons, A.D. 1092; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. = Lat. nominalis, nominal. = Lat. nomin-, stem of nomen, a name, cognate with E. Name, q. v. Der. nominat-ion, Fryth's Works, p. 58, col. 2, from F. nominat-ion, 'a nomination' (Cot.); nominat-or, nominat-ive, M. E. nominatif, Trevisa, i. 327, from O. F. nominatif, in use in the 13th century (Littre), from Lat. nominativus. Also nomin-ee, a term of law, formed as if from a F. verb nominer, with a pp. nominé; but the real F. verb is nommer.

NON-, prefix, not. (L.) In compounds, such as non-appearance, non-compliance. = Lat. non, not; orig. none, not one; compounded of Lat. ne, not, and ounum, old form of unum, neut. of unus, one. Thus Lat. non is of parallel formation with E. None, q. v.

NONAGE, minority. (L.; and F., -L.) In Shak. Rich. III. ii. 3. 13. Compounded of Lat. non, not, and age; see Non-, Age. [†]

NONCE, in phr. for the nonce. (E.) M. E. for the nonces, Chaucer, C. T. 381. The sense is for the once, for the occasion or purpose. The older spelling is for then ones, still earlier for then ones, as in St. Juliana, ed. Cockayne, p. 71. Thus the n really belongs to the dat. case of the article, viz. A. S. ðam, later ðan, then. Ones = mod. E. once; see Once. We may note that ones was first a gen. case, then an adv., and was lastly used as a sb., as here.

NONCONFORMING, refusing to conform. (L.; and F., -L.; with E. suffix.) The Act of Uniformity came into operation on 24 Aug. 1662; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. Hence arose the name nonconformist, and the adj. nonconforming. Compounded of Lat. non, not; and Conform, q. v. Der. nonconform-ist, non-conform-i-ty.

NONDESCRIPT, not yet described, novel, odd. (L.) Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. = Lat. non, non; and descriptus, pp. of describere, to describe; see Describe.

NONE, not one. (E.) M. E. noon, non; as in 'non other' = no other, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 5. Before a consonant it commonly becomes no, as in mod. E.; but in very early authors we find non even before a consonant, as in 'non tonge'; Rob. of Glouc. p. 285, l. 19. = A. S. nán, none; compounded of ne, not, and án, one; see No (1) § B, and One.

NONENTITY, a thing that does not exist. (L.) In Johnson. From Non- and Entity.

NONES, the ninth day before the ides. (L.) Also used of the old church service at the ninth hour, which is the older use in E. This ninth hour or nones was orig. 3 p.m., but was changed to mid-day; whence our noon. See further under Noon.

NONJUROB, one who refuses to take the oath of allegiance. (L.; and F., -L.) First used of those who refused allegiance to Will. III in 1689. From Non- and Jurob.

NONPAREIL, one without equal, matchless. (F., -L.) In Shak. Temp. iii. 2. 108. = F. non, not, from Lat. non; and pareil, equal, from Low Lat. pariculus, double dimin. from Lat. par, equal. See Apparel, and Par.

NONPLUS, a state of perplexity; to perplex. (L.) Most commonly a verb. 'He has non-plus'd me'; Dryden, Kind Keeper, iii. r. The orig. phrase was, probably, 'to be at a non-plus,' which occurs in Locke (Todd), and probably earlier. A half-ludicrous coined term for a state of perplexity, in which one can do no more, nor go any further. — Lat. non plus, no more. See Non- and Plural.

NONSENSE, language without meaning. (L.; and F., —L.) It occurs, according to Richardson, in an Elegy by Mr. R. B. in Memory of Donne. From Non- and Sense. Der. nonsensu-ic-al.

NONSUIT, a withdrawal of a suit at law. (L.; and F., —L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, which see. From Non- and Suit. Der. nonsuit, verb.

NOOK, a corner, recess. (C.) M. E. nok, Havelok, 820; pl. nokes, Cursor Mundi, 17675. The comp. feower-noked = four-cornered, occurs in Layamon, ii. 500, l. 21999. The Lowland Sc. form is neuk (Jamieson); which leads us to the Celtic. — Irish and Gael. niuc, a nook, corner. Root unknown; nor is it at all certain that there is any connection with nock or notch.

NOON, midday. (L.) Orig. the ninth hour of the day, or 3 P.M., but afterwards the time of the church-service called nones was altered, and the term came to be applied to midday. M. E. nones, pl., P. Plowman, B. v. 378, vi. 147 (see notes). A. S. nón-tid (= noon-tide), the ninth hour, Mark, xv. 33, 34. — Lat. nona, ut for nona hora, ninth hour; where nona is the fem. of nonus, ninth. Nonus = nōnimus, from novem, nine; cf. decimus from decem, ten. The Lat. novem is cognate with E. Nine, q. v. Der. noon-tide, A. S. nón-tíd, as above; noon-day, Jul. Caesar, i. 3. 27. Also nones, mun-chion.

NOOSE, a slip-knot. (Unknown.) 'Caught in my own noose;' Beaumont and Fletcher, Rule a Wife, iii. 4 (Perez). Perhaps not found earlier. Origin unknown; perhaps it is due to O. F. nous, pl. of nou or neu, mod. F. nauvé, a knot; which is from Lat. nodus, cognate with E. Knot. See Litttré. Wedgwood cites Languedoc nous-courren, a running-knot; nouzelut, knotty. β. Mahn suggests W. nais, a band, tie; Gael. nasg, a tie-band, a wooden collar for a cow; Irish nasc, nasg, a tie, collar, chain, ring; Bret. nask, a cord used for tying up cows by their horns, either to fasten them to the stall, or to lead them about. Cf. Lat. nexus, a tie, fastening, noose. γ. The Celtic verb appears in Irish nasgaim, I bind, tie, chain, Gael. naisg, to bind, make fast, Lat. nectere, to fasten. ¶ The vowel occasions a difficulty in the latter case. Der. noose, verb.

NOR, neither. (E.) M. E. nor, short for nother, which is merely another spelling of neither. 'Vor her hors were al astoned, and nolde after wyllle Sywe noþer spore ne brydel' = for their horses were all astoned, and would not, according to their will, obey nor spur nor bridle; Rob. of Glouc. p. 396. For a full account of the word, see Mätzner, Gramm. ii. 2. 352. See Neither.

NORMAL, according to rule. (L.) A late word; added by Todd to Johnson. — Lat. normalis, made according to a carpenter's square. — Lat. norma, a carpenter's square, rule, pattern. Contracted from a form *gnorima, and perhaps merely a borrowed word from Gk. The corresponding Gk. word is γνώριμ, fem. of γνώριμος, well-known, whence the sense of 'exact' in Latin; cf. Gk. γνώριον, that which knows or indicates, an index, a carpenter's square. Both γνώριον and γνώριμος are from the √ GNA, to know. See Gnomon and Know. Der. normal-ly; also e-norm-ous, q. v., ab-norm-al (modern).

NORMAN, a Northman. (F., —Scand.) M. E. Norman, Rob. of Glouc. p. 360, l. 9. — O. F. Normand, 'a Norman'; Cot. — Dan. Nor-mand; Icel. Norðmadr (= Norðmannr), pl. Norðmenn, a Northman, Norwegian. See North. Der. Norman-d-y, M. E. Normandy, Rob. of Glouc. p. 345, F. Normandie, Dan. Normandi, Icel. Norðmann-di, Normandy, Norman's land; where the suffix = F. -ie, Lat. -ia.

NORSE, Norwegian. (Scand.) Short for Norsk, the Norwegian and Dan. spelling of Norse, = Icel. Norskr, Norse, adj., which appears in the 14th cent. instead of the older Icel. Norrann. Norsk is short for North-isk, i. e. North-isk; see North.

NORTH, the cardinal point opposite to the sun's place at noon. (E.) M. E. north, Wyclif, Luke, xiii. 29. — A. S. norð, Grein, ii. 300. + Du. noord. + Icel. norðr. + Dan. and Swed. nord. + G. nord. Root unknown. The Skt. nára, water, does not help us; the suggestion that north meant 'rainy quarter' is a mere guess. Der. north-ern, Chaucer, C. T. 1989, A. S. norðern (Grein), cognate with O. H. G. norda-róni, where the suffix is from the verb to run, and means north-running, i. e. coming from the north (Fick, iii. 251). Also north-east, -west, &c. Also north-ward; north-er-ly (short for north-ern-ly), &c. Also Nor-man, Nor-se.

NOSE, the organ of smell. (E.) M. E. nose (orig. dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 123, 152, 556. — A. S. nōsu, Grein, ii. 300. + Du. neus. + Icel. nös. + Dan. næse. + Swed. näsa. + G. nase. + Russ. nos'. + Lithuan. nosis. + Lat. nasus. + Skt. násá (the base of some cases and derivatives is nas). Root uncertain. Der. nose-bag, nose-less; nose, v., Hamlet, iv. 3. 38; nose-gay, Mids. Nt. Dr. i. 1. 34, and Palsgrave, with which cf. prov. E. (Essex) gay, a painted picture in a child's book, derived from gay, adj. And see nos-tril, nozz-le, nuzz-le. [†]

NOSOLOG-Y, the science of disease. (Gk.) In Johnson's Dict. — Gk. nóso-, crude form of nóσos, disease; and -λογία, from λόγος, a discourse, which from λέγειν, to speak. The Gk. nóσos is perhaps from the same root as Gk. νεκρός, dead; see Neeromancy.

NOSTRIL, one of the orifices of the nose. (E.) Nostril = nose-thrill or nose-thirl. M. E. nosethirl, Chaucer, C. T. 559. — A. S. nōsþyrl; the pl. nōsþyrla (= nōsþyrlu, the sb. being neuter) is used to translate Lat. nares in Wright's Vocab. i. 43, col. 1. — A. S. nós-, for nōsu, the nose; and þyrel, þyrel, a perforation, orifice, Grein, ii. 613. See further under Thrill.

NOSTRUM, a quack medicine. (L.) In Pope, Prol. to Satires, l. 29. — Lat. nostrum, lit. 'our own,' i. e. a special drug only known to the seller of it. Neut. of noster, ours, possess. pron. formed from nos, we. Cf. Skt. nas, us.

NOT (1), a word expressing denial. (E.) M. E. not, often spelt nought, Chaucer, C. T. 294. The same word as Naught, q. v.

NOT (2), I know not, or he knows not. (E.) Obsolete. M. E. not, noot, Chaucer, C. T. 286. — A. S. nát, I know not, or he knows not; Grein, ii. 274. Equivalent to ne wát; from ne, not, and wát, I know or he knows. See Wot, Wit.

NOTABLE, remarkable. (F., —L.) M. E. notable, Chaucer, C. T. 13615. — F. notable, 'notable'; Cot. — Lat. notabilis, remarkable. — Lat. notare, to mark. — Lat. nota, a mark, note; see Note. Der. notabl-y, notable-ness; notabil-i-ty, M. E. notabilitee, Chaucer, C. T. 15215, answering to F. notabilité, as if from Lat. acc. *notabilitatem, from nom. *notabilitas, a word not recorded.

NOTARY, a scrivener, one who takes notes. (F., —L.) The pl. notaries occurs in the Avenbite of Inwyt, p. 40, l. 8. Englished from O. F. notaire, 'a notary, a scrivener'; Cot. — Lat. notarium, acc. of notarius, a short-hand writer, one who makes notes; formed with the adj. suffix -arius from not-a, a mark; see Note.

NOTATION, a system of symbols. (L.) In Ben Jonson's Eng. Grammar, cap. viii is on 'the notation of a word,' by which he means the etymology. The word was really taken directly from Latin, but was put into a French form, by analogy. Formed as if from a F. notation (not in Cotgrave); from Lat. notationem, acc. of notatio, a designating, also, etymology. — Lat. notatus, pp. of notare, to mark; from nota, a mark; see Note.

NOTCH, NOCK, an indentation, small hollow cut in an arrow-head, &c. (O. Low G.) Formerly nock, of which notch is a weakened form. 'The nocke of the shaft; Ascham, Toxophilus, b. ii. ed. Arber, p. 127. M. E. nokke, Prompt. Parv. p. 357; Way, in the footnote, cites: 'Nocke of a bowe, ocke de l'arc; nocke of a shafte, ocke de la flesche, penon, coche, locke; I nocke an arrowe, I put y^e nocke in-to y^e stryng, le encocche;' Palsgrave. In the Romaine of the Rose, l. 942, we read of arrows 'Nocked and feathered aright.' — O. Du. nock; 'een nock ofte kerfken in een pijl, a notch in the head of an arrow;' Hexham. + O. Swed. nocka, a notch, incision (Ihre); Swed. dial. nokke, nokk, an incision or cut in timber (Rietz). β. Whether this is the same word with Dan. nok, a pin, peg, Icel. hnokki, a small metal hook on a distaff, is not clear; perhaps not, though both senses are given by Rietz under the same form nokk. γ. The O. Ital. nocca, 'the nocke of a bowe' (Florio), is merely a borrowed word from Teutonic; the E. nock is older than the period of our borrowings from Italian. Der. notch, verb, Cor. iv. 5. 199. Also nich (1), q. v.

NOTE, a mark, sign. (F., —L.) In early use. M. E. note, Chaucer, C. T. 13477; Layamon, 7000. — F. note. — Lat. nota, a mark, sign, note. β. The o is short, and nota stands for gnōta, allied to nōtus (for gnōtus), known. The shortening of the syllable appears still more decisively in cognitus = cognōtus, known. — √ GNA, to know, whence also E. Know, q. v. Thus a note is 'a mark whereby a thing is known.' Der. note, verb, M. E. noten, Gower, C. A. iii. 164, l. 16; not-ed, ibid.; not-ed-ly, note-less, not-er; note-book, Jul. Cæs. iv. 3. 98; note-worthy (= worthy of note), Two Gent. of Verona, i. 1. 13. And see not-able, not-ary, not-at-ion, not-ice, not-ify, not-ion, not-or-i-ous.

NOTHING, absence of being, insignificance. (E.) Merely an abbreviation, in pronunciation, for no thing. The words were formerly written apart. Thus, in Chaucer, C. T. 1756 (Six-text, A. 1754), the Ellesmere and Hengwrt MSS. have no thyng, where the Camb. MS. has noþyng. See No (2) and Thing. Der. nothing-ness, in Bp. Hall, Select Thoughts, § 22 (R.)

NOTICE, an observation, warning, information. (F., —L.) In Shak. Hen. V, iv. 7. 122. — F. notice, 'notice'; Cot. — Lat. notitia, a being known, knowledge, acquaintance. Extended from notus, known, pp. of noscere, to know. See Note, Know. Der. notice, verb, notice-able, notice-ably.

NOTIFY, to signify, declare. (F., = L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; cf. Oth. iii. 1. 31. = F. notifier, 'to notify'; Cot. = Lat. notificare, to make known. = Lat. noti = noto, crude form of notus, known; and -fic, for fac-ere, to make. See Notice and Fact. Der. notificat-ion.

NOTION, an idea. (F., = L.) Formerly, intellectual power, sense, mind; see Shak. Cor. v. 6. 107. = F. notion, omitted by Cotgrave, but given in Sherwood's Index to the same. = Lat. notionem, acc. of notio, an investigation, notion, idea. = Lat. notus, known; see Notice. Der. notion-al.

NOTORIOUS, manifest to all. (L.) In Shak. All's Well, i. 1. 111. Notoriously is in Sir T. More, Works, p. 960 f. Englished from Lat. *notorius, by changing -us into -ous, as in arduous, &c. This Lat. word is only represented in White's Dict. by the fem. and neut. forms notoria, notorium, both used substantively; cf. O. F. notoire, 'notorious' (Cot.), which points back to the same Lat. adj. Formed from Lat. nōtor, a voucher, witness; which again is formed with suffix -or from not, base of notum, supine of nocere, to know, cognate with E. know; see Know. Der. notorious-ly, -ness.

NOTORIETY, notoriousness. (F., = L.) Used by Addison, On the Christian Religion (Todd). = O. F. notoriété, 'notoriousness'; Cot.; mod. F. notoriété. = Low Lat. notorietatem, acc. of notorietas (Ducange). = Lat. *notorius; see Notorious.

NOTWITHSTANDING, nevertheless. (E.) M. E. nought withstanding, Gower, C. A. ii. 181, l. 11. From nought = naught; and withstanding, pres. part. of withstand. Perhaps suggested by Lat. non obstante. See Naught and Withstand.

NOUCH, the same as Ouch, q. v.

NOUGHT, the same as Naught, q. v.

NOUN, the name of a thing. (F., = L.) Used so as to include adjectives, as being descriptive. Rich. quotes 'that nouns knowledge and that verbe knowledge' from Sir T. More, Works, p. 437 a; but the word is much older, and belongs at least to the 14th cent., as shewn by the form. = O. F. non (Littre), noun, nun (Burguy), mod. F. nom, a name, a noun. In Philip de Thaur, Livre des Creatures, we have the Norman F. forms nun, l. 241, num, l. 233; see Wright's Popular Treatises on Science. = Lat. nomen, a name, noun; cognate with E. Name, q. v. Doublet, name.

NOURISH, to feed or bring up. (F., = L.) In early use. M. E. norisen, norysen, Rob. of Glouc. p. 238, l. 5; whence the sb. norysynge in the preceding line. = O. F. noris (mod. F. nourris), base of parts of the verb norir (mod. F. nourrir), to nourish. = Lat. nutrire, to suckle, feed, nourish. β. Root uncertain; probably ✓ SNU, to distil; cf. Skt. snu, to distil. Der. nourish-er, Macb. ii. 2. 40, nourish-able; nourish-ment, Spenser, F. Q. vi. 9. 20. And see nurse, nurture, nutrient, nutritious, nutritive.

NOVEL, new, strange. (F., = L.) In Shak. Sonnet 123. It seems to be far less old in the language than the sb. novelty, which is M. E. noveltee, Chaucer, C. T. 10933. But it follows the O. F. spelling of the sb. = O. F. novel (Burguy), later nouvel, mod. F. nouveau. = Lat. novellus, new; dimin. form from novus, which is cognate with E. New, q. v. Der. novel-ty, M. E. noveltee (as above), O. F. noveliteit, from Lat. novellitatem, acc. of novellitas, newness; novel, sb., a late word in the mod. sense, but the pl. novels (= news) occurs in the Towneley Mysteries (see Trench, Select Glossary); novel-ist, formerly an innovator (Trench); and see novice, in-nov-ate.

NOVEMBER, the eleventh month. (L.) In Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 10. l. 10. = Lat. November, the ninth month of the Roman year. = Lat. novem, nine. See Nine.

NOVICE, a beginner. (F., = L.) In Shak. Meas. i. 4. 18. M. E. novice, Chaucer, C. T. 13945. = F. novice, 'a novice, a young monk or nunne'; Cot. = Lat. novicius, novitius, new, fresh, a novice; Juvenal, Sat. iii. 265. Extended from novus, new; see Novel, New. Der. noviti-ate, Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, from F. novitiat, 'the estate of a novice', from Low Lat. novitiatus, sb.; see novitiari in Ducange.

NOW, at this present time. (E.) M. E. now, Chaucer, C. T. 763; also spelt now, for older nu. = A. S. nu, Grein, ii. 301. + Du. nu. + Icel. nú. + Dan. and Swed. nu. + O. H. G. nu. + Goth. nu. + Skt. nu, nú, now (Vedic). β. The G. nu-nk, Gk. vū-v, Lat. nu-n-c, are extended forms from the same source; NU seems to be an old pronominal stem; cf. the pronom. stem NA, whence Gk. vū, we two, Lat. no-s, we. Der. now-a-days (= now on days), Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 1. 148, Chaucer, C. T. 16864; see A-(2), prefix. Hence also new, novel.

NOWAY, NOWAYS, in no way. (E.) The older form is noways, put for M. E. names weies, in no way, by no way, Layamon, 11216. This answers to A. S. nānes weges, the gen. case used adverbially, as usual. = A. S. nānes, gen. of nān, none; and weges, gen. of weg, a way. See No (2) and Way.

NOWHERE, in no place. (E.) A. S. nukwar, nowhere; Grein, ii. 273. = A. S. nā, no; and hwær, where. See No (1) and Where.

NOWISE, in no way. (E.) Short for in no wise, M. E. on none wise, Castell of Love, ed. Weymouth, 573 (Stratmann). Here on = in, is a prep.; none is dat. case of M. E. noon, A. S. nān, none; wise = wisan, dat. of A. S. wise, a wise, a way. See No (2) and Wise, sb.

NOXIOUS, hurtful. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Englished from Lat. noxius, hurtful, by change of -us to -ous, as in ardu-ous, &c. = Lat. noxa, harm, hurt; cf. nocere, to hurt, nex (stem nec), destruction. = ✓ NAK, to perish, or cause to perish; whence also Skt. nag, to be lost, disappear, Gk. nekus, a corpse. Der. noxious-ly, -ness. From the same root are nec-ro-mancy, night, inter-nec-ine, per-nic-i-ous, ob-nox-i-ous, nig-res-cent, neg-ro, nuisance, &c.

NOZZLE, a snout. (E.) Rare in books. Spelt nozle in Arbuthnot and Pope, Martinus Scriblerus (Todd). The dimin. of nose, with suffix -le (or -el). See Nose, Nuzzle. [†]

NUCLEUS, the kernel of a nut, core. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. = Lat. nucleus, a small nut, a kernel; cf. nucula, a small nut. Dimin. from Lat. nux, a nut (stem nuc). Root uncertain. ¶ Not allied to E. nut. Doublet, newel, q. v.

NUDGE, a slight push. (Scand.) 'Knudge, v. to kick with the elbow;' E. D. S. Glos. B. 1; A. D. 1781. Lowland Sc. nodge, 'a push or strike, properly with the knuckles, nodge, to strike with the knuckles;' Jamieson. Cf. Lowland Sc. gnidge, to press, squeeze; id. Allied to Knock, and Knuckle; and see under Nod. Cf. Icel. knúi, a knuckle, knýja, to press down with the fists and knees; Swed. knoge, a knuckle; Dan. knuge, to press.

NUDE, naked, bare. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. Taken from the Lat. directly; cf. nude contract, Englished from Lat. law term nudum pactum, Blount's Nomolexicon. = Lat. nudus, naked. Lat. nūdus = nugdus, allied to Skt. nagna, naked, and to E. Naked, q. v. Der. nude-ly; nud-i-ty, spelt nuditie in Minshew, from F. nudité, 'nudity' (Cot.), from Lat. acc. nuditatem.

NUGATORY, trifling, vain. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = Lat. nugatorius, trifling. = Lat. nugator, a trifier. = Lat. nugatus, pp. of nugari, to trifle. = Lat. pl. nugæ, trifles. Root unknown. Cf. Lat. naucum, a trifle.

NUGGET, a lump or mass of metal. (E.) Formerly spelt niggot. 'After the fire was quenched, they found in niggots of gold and silver mingled together, about a thousand talents;' North, tr. of Plutarch's Lives, p. 499; cited in Trench, Eng. Past and Present, without a statement of the edition used; it is not that of 1631. Another quotation from the same author is also cited. Niggot is supposed to be a corruption of ningot, which stands for ingot; as to the frequent prefixing of n in English words, see note on the letter N. See Ingot, a purely E. word.

NUISANCE, a troublesome or annoying thing. (F., = L.) Spelt nuisance in Minshew, ed. 1627; but nuisance is better, as in Cotgrave. = F. nuisance, 'nuisance, hurt, offence'; Cot. = F. nuisant, 'hurtful'; id.; properly the pres. part. of nuire, to hurt. = Lat. nocere, to hurt; see Noxious.

NULL, of no force, invalid. (L.) In Dryden, tr. of Juvenal, Sat. i. 87. Rather from the Lat. than the F.; or prob. suggested by the sb. nullity, which occurs earlier, in Minshew, ed. 1627. = Lat. nullus, none, not any. = Lat. ne, not, related to E. no; and ullus, any, short for unulus, dimin. from unus, one. See No (1) and One. Der. null-i-ty, from F. nullité, 'a nullity' (Cot.), from Low Lat. acc. nullitatem; nulli-fy, formed (as if from F. nullifier) from Lat. nullificare, to make void, from nulli = nullō, crude form of nullus, and -fic, for facere, to make; also null, verb, Milton, Samson, 935. Also an-nul, dis-an-nul. [†]

NUMB, deprived of sensation. (E.) The b is excrement; spelt numme in Shak. 1 Hen. VI. ii. 5. 13 (first folio). M. E. nome, a shortened form of nomen, which was orig. the pp. of M. E. niman, to take. Thus nome = taken, seized, hence overpowered, and lastly, deprived of sensation. 'When this was said, into weeping She fel, as she that was through-nome With love, and so fer overcome' = when this was said, she fell a-weeping, as being thoroughly overcome by love, &c.; Gower, C. A. ii. 249. Gower uses the same word nome elsewhere in the ordinary sense of 'taken'; C. A. ii. 227, l. 23, ii. 386, l. 4. = A. S. numen, pp. of niman, to take; see Nimble. So also Icel. numinn, the pp. of nema, to take, is similarly used; as in numinn melli, bereft of speech; sjörvi numna, life-bereft. Der. be-numb, q. v.; also numb, verb, Spenser, F. Q. vi. 11. 45; numb-ness, Wint. Tale, v. 3. 102 (spelt nummesse in the first folio). Also num-scul.

NUMBER, a unit in counting, a quantity. (F., = L.) The b is excrement in the F. form. M. E. nombre, noumbre, Rob. of Glouc.

p. 60, last line; Chaucer, C. T. 718. — F. nombre; Norman F. nombre (see Philip de Thaur, Livre des Creatures, l. 127, in Wright, Popular Treatises on Science, p. 24). — Lat. numerus, acc. of numerus, a number. — NUM, to distribute; see Nomad, Nimble. Curtius, i. 389, 390. Der. number, verb, M. E. nombren, noumbren, Rob. of Glouc. p. 61; number-er; number-less; and see numer-al, numer-ation, numer-ous.

NUMERAL, a figure expressing a number. (L.) Orig. an adj. 'Numeral, of or belonging to number;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. numeralis, belonging to number. — Lat. numerus, a number; see Number. Der. numeral-ly.

NUMERATION, numbering. (F., — L.) In Phillips, World of Words, ed. 1706. — F. numération (Littre), in use in the 16th cent. — Lat. numerationem, acc. of numratio, a counting out. — Lat. numerus, pp. of numerare, to number. — Lat. numerus, number; see Number. Der. numerate (really due to the sb.), formed from Lat. numeratus; numerat-or = Lat. numerator, a counter, numberer. Also e-numerate, in-numer-able.

NUMEROUS, many. (F., — L.) In Milton, P. L. i. 675, &c. — F. nombreux, a less usual form than nombreux; both are in Cotgrave. — Lat. numerosus, numerous. — Lat. numerus, a number; see Number. Der. numeros-ly, numeros-ness; also (obsolete) numerosity = F. numerosité, 'numerosity, a great number' (Cot.) So also numer-ic, Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3, l. 461, as if from Lat. numericus * (not used); numeric-al, -al-ly.

NUMISMATIC, relating to coins. (L., — Gk.) The pl. sb. numismatics was added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. Coined from Lat. numismat-, stem of numisma, current coin. — Gk. νόμισμα, a custom, also, current coin. — Gk. νομίζειν, to practise, adopt, to use as current coin. — Gk. νόμος, usage. — Gk. νέμειν, to distribute; see Nomad. Der. numismatic-ly; numismatic-ology, from -λογία, which from λόγος, a discourse, from λέγειν, to speak.

NUN, a female celibate, living in seclusion. (L.) M. E. nonne, Chaucer, C. T. 118; but this is an alteration to the F. spelling; cf. F. nonne, a nun. The mod. E. agrees with the A. S. spelling, and with M. E. nunne, as found in the Ancræn Riwe, p. 316, last line. — A. S. nunna, a nun; Laws of Ælfred (political), sect. 8; in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, i. 66. — Low Lat. nunna, more commonly nonna, a nun, orig. a title of respect, esp. used in addressing an old maiden lady, or a widow who had devoted herself to sacred duties. The old sense is 'mother,' answering to Lat. nonnus, father, later, a monk; a word of great antiquity. + Gk. νάννη, νάννα, an aunt; νάννας, νέννος, an uncle. + Skt. naná, a familiar word for mother, used by children; see the St. Petersburg Dict. iv. 25; answering to Skt. tata, father. β. Formed by repetition of the syllable na, used by children to a father, mother, aunt, or nurse; just as we have ma-ma, da-da or daddy, and the like. Compare Mamma, and Dad. Der. nunn-er-y, M. E. nonnerie, Rob. of Glouc. p. 291, l. 13, from O. F. nonnerie, spelt nonerie in Roquefort, which was formed from O. F. nonne, a nun, from Lat. nonna.

NUNCHION, a luncheon. (Hybrid; L. and E.) In Butler, Hudibras, i. i. 346. Cotgrave explains O. F. ressie by 'an afternoon's nunchion, or drinking;' and rightly, for the old sense had relation to drinking, not to eating, as will appear. The M. E. spelling, in one instance at least, is nonechenche. We find that certain donations for drink to workmen are called in the [London] Letter-book G, fol. iv (27 Edw. III), nonechenche; see Riley, Memorials of London, p. 265, note 7; see my note to P. Plowman, C. ix. 146. It should rather be spelt noneschenche. β. The etymology is obvious, viz. from M. E. none, noon; and schenche, a pouring out or distribution of drink. The none-schenche or 'noon-drink' was the accompaniment to the none-mete or 'noon-meat,' for which see numete in the Prompt. Parv. p. 360, and Way's note upon it. γ. The M. E. none, noon, is from Lat. nona, the ninth hour, as explained s. v. Noon. δ. M. E. schenche, a pouring out of drink, is a sb. made from M. E. schenchen, to pour out drink. 'Bachus the wyn hem schenchith al aboute' = Bacchus pours out the wine for them all round; Chaucer, C. T. (Harleian MS.) ed. Wright, l. 9596. Tyrwhitt's ed. has skinketh, l. 9596; the Six-text edition (E. 1722) has skynketh, shynketh, shenkeith, schenkeith, as various readings. All these are various forms of the verb skenken, from A. S. scencan, to pour out drink, occurring in Beowulf, ed. Grein, l. 496. This A. S. verb is cognate with Du. schenken, to pour out, fill, give, present, Icel. skenkja, to serve drink, fill one's cup, Dan. skienke, G. schenken, einschenken.

ε. The derivation of A. S. scencan is very curious; it is a causal verb, derived with the usual vowel-change of a to e, from A. S. scanc, usually written seanc, a shank; see Shank. The explanation is, that a shank also meant a hollow bone, a bone of the leg, shin-bone, and hence 'a pipe;' in particular, it denoted the pipe thrust into a cask to tap it and draw off the liquor. Thus prov. E. shank means 'a tunnel for a chimney' (Halliwell), i. e. a chimney-pipe; the O. Du. schekkan means 'a pot with a pipe or a gullet to pour out,' Sewel. A precisely parallel interchange of sense occurs in G. rohr, a reed, tube, pipe; whence röhrlein, the hollow bone of a leg, shin-bone; röhrbrunnen, a jet of a fountain; röhre, a pipe, also a funnel, shaft, or tunnel (like the use of prov. E. shank).

¶ It would be easy to add further proofs of this curious derivation of nuncheon from noon-shenk, and of shenk from shank. We can now understand the full force of the quotation in Way's note from Kennett's MS., viz. 'Nooning, beavre, drinking, or repast ad nonam, three in the afternoon, called . . . in the North parts a noonchion, an afternoon's nunchion.' In many parts, the use of nuncheon was driven out by the use of bever (lit. a drinking) in the same sense, and in East Anglia by the more intelligible word nooning. Lastly, by a curious confusion with the prov. E. lunch, a lump of bread, nuncheon was turned into the modern luncheon; see Luncheon. The same change of initial n to l occurs in lilac, from Pers. nil, blue; see Lilac. The verb schenken is used by Gower as well as Chaucer; see the quotation in Halliwell; it was afterwards turned into skink, and occurs in Shakespeare in the deriv. under-skinker, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 26. The derivation of the verb from shank is given by Fick and Wackernagel, and is nothing new; but the complete history of nuncheon and luncheon is now (I believe) here given for the first time.

NUNCIO, a messenger, esp. a papal ambassador. (Ital., — L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; and in Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 4. 28. — Ital. nuncio, nuntio, 'an ambassador;' Florio. — Lat. nuntium, acc. of nuntius, a bringer of tidings; see further under Announce. Cf. de-nounce, pro-nounce, e-nounce, re-nounce.

NUNCUPATIVE, declared by word of mouth. (F., — L.) 'Nuncupative, called, named, pronounced, expressly declared by word of mouth;' Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674. It occurs in Cotgrave. — F. nuncupatif, 'nuncupative;' Cot. — Low Lat. nuncupativus, nominal. — Lat. nuncupatus, pp. of nuncupare, to call by name. β. Etym. doubtful; but prob. from nomen, a name, and capere, to take. We find cup for cap in oc-cup-are, to occupy. Der. nuncupat-or-y, formed from Lat. nuncupator, a namer, caller by name.

NUPTIAL, pertaining to marriage. (F., — L.) 'Our nuptial hour;' Mids. Nt. Dr. i. 1. 1. — F. nuptial, 'nuptial;' Cot. — Lat. nuptialis, belonging to a marriage. — Lat. sb. pl. nuptia, a wedding. — Lat. nupta, a bride, fem. of nuptus, pp. of nubere, to marry, lit. to cover, cover with a veil, because the bride was veiled. Allied to nubes, a cloud, and to nebula, a little cloud; see Nebula, Nimbus. Der. nuptial, sb., Meas. for Meas. iii. 1. 122, usually in pl. nuptials, Pericles, v. 3. 80. And see con-nub-i-al.

NURSE, one who nourishes an infant. (F., — L.) Contracted from M. E. nurice, a nurse; Ancræn Riwe, p. 82, l. 20. Also norice, King Alisaunder, l. 650. — O. F. norrice, nurrice (Littre), later nurrice (Cot.), a nurse. — Lat. nutricem, acc. of nutrix, a nurse, formed with fem. suffix from nutrire, to feed, nourish; see Nourish. Der. nurse, verb, Wyatt, To his Ladie, cruel over her yelden Louer, l. 5, in Tottell's Miscellany, ed. Arber, p. 62; nurs-er, 1 Hen. VI, iv. 7. 46; nurs-er-y, K. Lear, i. i. 126, Cymb. i. i. 59, and see Trench, Select Glossary; nurs-ling, spelt noursling in Spenser, Virgil's Gnat, 282, formed with double dimin. suffix -l-ling, as in duck-ling; nurs-ing-father, Numb. xi. 12. And see nurture.

NURTURE, nourishment, education. (F., — L.) M. E. noiture, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 188, l. 3. — O. F. noiture (Burguy), mod. F. nourriture, 'nourishment, nutriment, . . . also nurture;' Cot. Cf. Ital. nutritura, nutriment. — Lat. nutritura, fem. of nutriturus, fut. part. of nutrire, to nourish; see Nourish. Der. nurture, verb, spelt nourter in the Bible of 1551, Dent. viii. 5; nurtur-er. And see nutriment.

NUT, the fruit of certain trees, a hard shell with a kernel. (E.) M. E. homies, Havelok, 419; King Alisaunder, 3203; nute, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 79, l. 14. — A. S. hnutu, to translate Lat. nux; Wright's Vocab. i. 32, col. 2, l. 1. + Du. noot. + Icel. hnót. + Swed. nöt. + Dan. nöd. + G. nuss. β. Fick (iii. 81) gives the Teutonic type as HNÖTI, from the Teut. base HNAT, to bite, for which see Nettle. Cf. Lithuan. kandūlas, a kernel (Schleicher), from the verb handu, I bite (Nesselmann). ¶ It cannot be brought under the same form with Lat. nux. Der. nut, verb, to gather nuts; nut-shell, M. E. noteschale, Trevisa, iv. 141; nut-brown, M. E. nute-brun, Cursor Mundi, 18846; nut-cracker, nut-hatch, a bird also called the nutjobber or nutpecker, M. E. nuthake, Squire of Low Degree, 55, the sense being nut-hacker, the bird that hacks or pecks nuts, see Hatch (3) and Hack (1). And see nut-meg.

NUTMEG, the musk-nut. (Hybrid; E. and F., — L., — Pers., — Skt.) M. E. notemuge, Chaucer, C. T. 13693; later nutmegge, Rom. of the Rose, 1361. A hybrid word; the former half being E. nut; see Nut. β. The latter half is from O. F. muge, musk, standing for musge, which from Lat. muscum, acc. of muscus, musk; see Musk.

This O.F. muge occurs in a quotation cited by Littré from Ducange, s. v. musculus. 'Que plus que muge ne que mente Flaira souef lor renomee' = that their renown will smell sweeter than musk or mint. The s of the form muge occurs in the dimin. form musguet (Burguy), the old form of mod. F. muguet, a lily of the valley, similarly named from its scent; the same s is represented by r in the dialectal F. murguet cited by Littré.

γ. The identification is completely established by comparing O.F. muguette, 'a nutmeg,' Cot.; F. noix muscade, 'a nutmeg,' id.; Span. nuez moscada, a nutmeg, Ital. noce moscada, the same; Low Lat. muscata, a nutmeg, lit. 'musk-like,' formed with suffix -ata from musc-, stem of musculus. The Lat. musculus is from the Pers., and this again from the Skt., as shewn s.v.

NUTATION, a nodding, vibratory movement of the earth's axis. (L.) In Pope, Dunciad, ii. 409. Astronomical. Englished from Lat. nutatio, a nodding, swaying. — Lat. nutatus, pp. of nutare, to nod, frequentative form of nuere, to nod. + Gk. νέμειν, to nod. From a base NU, signifying 'to move slightly.' Der. Hence also in-nuendo.

NUTRIMENT, nourishment, food. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. — Lat. nutrimentum, food; formed with suffix -mentum from nutri-re, to nourish; see Nourish. Der. nutrimental; and see nutritious.

NUTRITIOUS, furnishing nutriment. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Englished from Lat. nutritivus, by change of -us to -ous, as in ardu-ous, &c. The Lat. word is also (better) spelt nutricius. — Lat. nutric-, stem of nutrix, a nurse; see Nurse. Der. nutritious-ly, -ness. So also nutrition, Pope, Essay on Man, ii. 64; a coined word.

NUTRITIVE, nourishing. (F., — L.) In Minshew and Cotgrave. — F. nutritif, 'nutritive,' Cot. Formed with suffix -if (= Lat. -ivus) from nutrit-, stem pp. of nutrire, to nourish; see Nourish. Der. nutritive-ly, -ness.

NUZZLE, to thrust the nose in. (E.) Also spelt nousle; Shak. Venus, 1115; Pericles, i. 4. 42; nosyll in Palsgrave. A frequentative verb, with suffix -le, from the sb. nose. It means 'to nose often,' i.e. to keep pushing the nose or snout towards. Cf. Low G. nusseln, with the same sense. See Nose, and cf. Nozzle. [†] NYLGHAU, a large species of antelope. (Pers.) Lit. 'blue cow;' the males being of a blueish colour. — Pers. nilgāw, 'the white-footed antelope of Pennant,' and antelope picta Pallas; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 1620. — Pers. nil, blue; and gāw, a bullock, cow, cognate with E. cow; id. pp. 1619, 1226. See Lilac and Cow.

NYMPH, a bride, maiden. (F., — L., — Gk.) M. E. nympe, Chaucer, C. T. 2930. — F. nympe, 'a nymph;' Cot. — Lat. nympha. — Gk. νύμφη, a bride, lit. 'a veiled one,' like Lat. nupta. A nasalised form from the same root as νέφος, a cloud, covering; see Nuptial, Nebula, Nimbus. Der. nymph-like, Milton, P. L. 452.

O.

O (1), OH, an interjection. (E.) M. E. o, Ancren Riwe, p. 54; Layamon, 17126. Not in A.S. + Du. o. + Dan. and Swed. o. + G. o. + Goth. o, Mk. ix. 19. + Lat. o. + Gk. ὦ, ὦ. β. A natural exclamatory sound, akin to Ah!

¶ There is no particular reason for the spelling oh, which is not old. Some make a distinction in use between o and oh; this is merely arbitrary.

O (2), a circle. (E.) In Shak. Hen. V, prol. 13; Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 188. So called because the letter o is of a circular shape.

OAF, a simpleton. (Scand.) 'You oaf, you!' Dryden, Kind Keeper, i. 1; where the old ed. has auph; see ed. 1763, vol. iv. p. 302. In Drayton's Nymphidia, l. 79, the old ed. of 1627 has auf; Prof. Morley prints aaf. It is the same word as prov. E. auf, an elf (Halliwell). Again, auf or auf stands for auf, a dialectal variety of E. elf. — Icel. álfr, an elf, cognate with E. Elf, q. v. β. Thus aaf is the Northern or Scand. variant of elf; a similar loss of i is common in the North; cf. Lowland Sc. bauk for balk, a' for all, &c.

OAK, the name of a tree. (E.) M. E. oke, better oak, Chaucer, C. T. 3019. — A.S. ác, Grein, i. 14; the long a changes into later oo, by rule. + Du. eik. + Icel. eik. + Dan. eeg, eg. + Swed. ek. + G. eiche. β. All from the Teut. type AKA; Fick, iii. 3. Cf. Lith. auzolas, an oak. Root unknown. Der. oak-en, adj., A.S. dean (Bosworth), with adj. suffix -en as gold-en, beech-en, &c. Also oak-apple, oak-leaf, oak-gall. [But not acorn, as often wrongly supposed.]

OAKUM, tow, old ropes teased into loose hemp. (E.) Spelt oakam in Skinner, ed. 1671. Spelt oakam in Dampier's Voyages, v. i. p. 295, an. 1686 (R.). — A.S. ácumba, tow, in a gloss (Leo); cf. 'Stuppa, decumbe,' Ælfric's Gloss., in Wright's Vocab. i. 40, col. 2.

[The Lat. stuppa means 'tow.' β. The sense is 'that which is combed out;' the prefix is the usual A.S. á-, cognate with G. er-, Goth. us-; see A- (4), prefix. The rest of the word is related to A.S. cemban, to comb, and camb, a comb; see Comb. Mr. Wedgwood says: 'O. H. G. ácambi, tow; M. H. G. hanef-ácamb, the combings or hards of hemp, tow, what is combed out in dressing it; as ásuinc, the refuse swingled out in dressing flax. "Stuppa pectitur ferreis hamis, donec omnis membrana decorticatur;" Pliny, xix. i. 3, cited by Aufrecht in Philological Transactions.' Holland's translation of the passage is as follows: 'Now that part thereof which is vtmost and next to the pill [peel] or rind, is called tow or hards, and it is the worst of the line or flaxe, good for little or nothing but to make lampe-match or candle-wick; and yet the same must be better kemberd with hetchell teeth of yron, vntill it be clesned from all the grosse barke and rind among;' vol. ii. p. 4. [†]

OAR, a light pole with a flat blade, for rowing boats. (E.) M. E. ore, Havelok, 1871; Northern form ar, Barbour's Bruce, iii. 576, 691. — A.S. ár, Grein, i. 34; the change from á to long o being quite regular. + Icel. ár. + Dan. aare. + Swed. åra. β. Further allied to Gk. ἀρά-ῥη-ης, double-oared, ἀρά-ῥη-ης, rowing through the sea, ῥη-ῥη-ης, an oarsman, ῥη-ῥη-ης, to row, ῥη-ῥη-ης, an oar = Lat. rēmus (for eremus); also to Lithuan. ir-ti, to row, ir-klas, an oar; also to Skt. ar-itra, a rudder (orig. a paddle). γ. All from the ✓AR, perhaps in the sense 'to drive;' see Curtius, i. 427, Fick, i. 19, iii. 22. Der. oar, verb, Temp. ii. 1. 118; oar-ed; eight-oar, i. e. eight-oared boat, &c.; oar-s-man, formed like hunt-s-man; from the same root we have also row, rudder.

OASIS, a fertile spot in a desert. (L., — Gk., — Egyptian.) Quite modern, but now common; see Todd. — Lat. oasis. — Gk. ὄασις, ἀβάσις, a name of the fertile islets in the Libyan desert; Herod. iii. 26. Of Egyptian origin; cf. Coptic ouake, a dwelling-place, oasis; oukh, to dwell; from oukh, to add; Peyron, Copt. Lexicon, 1835, pp. 159, 160.

OAST, OAST-HOUSE, a kiln for drying hops. (E.) Spelt oast or east in Ray's Collection of South-Country Words, ed. 1691. [The form east is from Du. east.] M. E. ost, oste; for examples, see Pegge's Kenticisms (E. D. S.), s. v. oast. — A.S. ást, a kiln. 'Siccatorium [i. e. a drying-house], cylind. vel ást;' Wright's Vocab. i. 58, col. 1. Thus the word is purely E., the change from á to oa being quite regular; cf. A.S. de, an oak, ár, an oar. + Du. east; O. Du. ast; 'een ast, a place where barley is dried to make malt with;' Hexham.

β. Allied to A.S. ád, a funeral pile (Leo), M. H. G. ei, a fire, oven; just as Lat. æstus, glow, is related to Lat. ædes, a hearth, house. Cf. Gk. αἶθος, a burning heat. — ✓IDH, to kindle; see Ether.

OATH, a solemn vow. (E.) M. E. oath, oth; Chaucer, C. T. 120. — A.S. að, Grein, i. 17; the change from á to oa being regular, as in de, oak, ár, oar. + Du. eed. + Icel. eiðr. + Dan. and Swed. ed. + Goth. aiþs. + G. eid; O. H. G. ei. β. The Teut. type is AITHA; Fick, iii. 4; allied to O. Irish oeth, oath (Rhys); cf. W. an-ud-on, a false oath, perjury.

OATS, the name of a kind of grain. (E.) M. E. otes, s. pl., Chaucer, C. T. 7545. The sing. form appears in mod. E. oat-cake, oat-meal, and the adj. oat-en. — A.S. áta; we find wilde áta as a gloss to zizania in the Northumb. gloss to Matt. xiii. 38; also æcer-sæd áten, an acre-seed of oats, A.S. Chron. an. 1124, where áten is for átan, gen. sing. of áta. β. Mr. Wedgwood compares A.S. áta with Icel. áta, food to eat; but the A.S. word rightly answering to Icel. áta is át, Grein, i. 73, which of course is from the verb etan, to eat.

γ. Instead of this, I should prefer to connect A.S. áta with Icel. eiðill, a nodule in stone, Norweg. eiðel, a gland, knot, nodule in stone, Russ. iadro, a kernel in fruit, bullet, ball, shot, Gk. αἶθος, a swelling. If this be right, the orig. meaning of oat was grain, corn, kernel, with reference to the manner of its growth, the grains being of bullet-like form; and it is derived from ✓IDH, to swell, not from ✓AD, to eat. See Fick, i. 28, iii. 4. Der. oat-en, adj., with suffix -en as in gold-en, oak-en; oat-meal, oat-cake.

OB-, prefix. (L.) A common prefix, changing to oo- before e, of- before f, and op- before p, as in oo-cur, of-fer, op-pose. The Lat. prep. ob is supposed by some to answer to Gk. prep. ἐπί, and to Skt. adv. api, thereto, moreover. Cf. also Lithuan. api, near, about. The force of ob- in composition is variable, viz. towards, at, before, upon, over, about, against, near. See Curtius, i. 329.

OBODURATE, hardened, stubborn. (L.) 'Obdurate in malice;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 503 b. — Lat. obduratus, pp. of obdurare, to render hard. — Lat. ob, prefix (which hardly affects the sense); and durare, to harden, from durus, hard. See Ob- and Dure. Der. obdurate-ly, -ness; obdurac-y, 2 Hen. IV, ii. 2. 50.

OBEDIENT, submissive, dutiful. (F., — L.) In early use. M. E. obedient, Ancren Riwe, p. 424, l. 11. — O. F. obedient, 'obedient;' Cot. — Lat. obedient-, stem of pres. pt. of obedire, to obey. β. The old Lat. form was oboedire.—Lat. ob-, prefix (of little force); and audire, to hear, listen to. See Ob- and Audience. Der. obedient-ly, obedience, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 213, l. 5 from bottom, = O. F. obedience, Lat. obedientia. And see obesance, obey.

OBEISANCE, a bow or act of reverence. (F.,—L.) M. E. obesance, formerly also used in the orig. sense of obedience or act of obedience, Chaucer, C. T. 8106, 8378; cf. Gower, C. A. i. 370, ii. 219. —O. F. obesance, later obesance, 'obedience, obeisance, a dutiful observing of;' Cot.—Lat. obedientia, obedience. Doublet, obedience. See Obey. The F. obeissant, pres. part. of obeir, to obey, exhibits similar letter-changes.

OBELISK, a tall tapering pillar. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) In Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxvi. c. 8 and c. 9; and in Minshew, ed. 1627. And see Trench, Select Glossary.—O. F. obelisque, 'an obeliske;' Cot.—Lat. obeliscum, acc. of obeliscus.—Gk. obeliskos, lit. a small spit, hence a thin pointed pillar; dimin. of obelos, a spit; Æolic and Doric obelos. Root uncertain. See Obolus.

OBESE, fat, fleshy. (L.) The sb. obeseness is in Bailey, vol. ii. ed. 1731. [The sb. obesity is older, and occurs in Cotgrave to translate F. obesité, der. from Lat. acc. obesitatem.]—Lat. obesus, (1) wasted, eaten away, (2) fat, lit. that which has eaten away from something.—Lat. obesus, pp. of obedere, to eat away. See Ob- and Eat. Der. obese-ness, obesity.

OBEY, to submit, yield to, do as bid. (F.,—L.) M. E. obeyen, Gower, C. A. ii. 219, l. 15.—O. F. obeir, 'to obey;' Cot.—Lat. obedire; see Obedience.

OBFUSCATE, to darken, bewilder. (L.) 'Obfuscate, or made darke;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 22 (R).—Lat. obfuscatus, pp. of obfuscare, to darken over, obscure; also spelt offuscare.—Lat. ob, over; and fuscare, to darken, from fuscus, dark, swarthy. See Ob- and Fuscous.

OBITU, a funeral rite. (F.,—L.) Almost obsolete. 'Men shall care little for obites within a while;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 880 d. —O. F. obit, 'an obit, obsequy, buriall;' Cot.—Lat. obitus, a going to, a going down, downfall, death.—Lat. obitum, supine of obire, to go near.—Lat. ob, near; and ire, to go, from √I, to go. See Ob- and Itinerant. Der. obitu-al, formed with suffix -al (= Lat. -alis) from obitu-, crude form of obitus; also obitu-ary, adj. relating to a decease, whence obitu-ary, sb. notice of a decease. [†]

OBJECT, to offer in opposition, oppose. (F.,—L.) 'The kinges mother objected openly against his marriage;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 60, l. 1. 'To objecte [venture] their owne bodies and lyues for their defence;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 12.—O. F. obiecter, 'to object;' Cot.—Lat. obiectare, to throw against, oppose; frequentative of obicere (obicere), to throw towards.—Lat. ob, towards, against; and iacere, to throw. See Ob- and Jet (1). Der. object, sb., a thing thrown before or presented to the senses or mind, Merch. Ven. i. 1. 20; object-glass; object-ion, i Hen. VI. iv. 1. 129, and in Palsgrave, from F. objection (objection in Cotgrave), from Lat. acc. objectionem; object-ion-able; object-ive, in Bailey, vol. ii. ed. 1731, a coined word, object-ive-ly, object-ive-ness, object-iv-ity.

OBJURGATION, a blaming, reproving. (F.,—L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; and in Cotgrave.—F. objurgation, 'an objurgation, chiding;' Cot.—Lat. obiurgationem, acc. of obiurgatio, a chiding.—Lat. obiurgatus, pp. of obiurgare, to chide.—Lat. ob, against; and iurgare, to sue, proceed against, quarrel, chide. β. Lat. iurgare stands for iur-ig-are, from iur-, stem of ius, law; and -ig-, for ag-ere, to drive. See Jurist and Agent.

OBLATE, widened at the sides. (L.) Mathematical.—Lat. oblatus, pushed forwards, viz. at the sides, said of a sphere that is flattened at the poles, and (by comparison) protrudes at the equator.—Lat. ob, towards; and latus, pushed, lit. borne, put for flatus (= Gk. πλητός), from √TAL, to bear, sustain. See Ob- and Tolerate. ¶ Oblatus is used as the pp. of offerre, with which it has no etymological connection. Der. oblatus-ness; also oblat-ion. (And see prolate.)

OBLATION, an offering. (F.,—L.) 'Blessed oblation of the holy masse;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 338 f.—F. oblation, 'an oblation, an offering;' Cot.—Lat. oblationem, acc. of oblatio, an offering.—Lat. oblatus, used as pp. of offerre, to offer. See Oblate.

OBLIGE, to constrain, to bind by doing a favour to, to do a favour to. (F.,—L.) M. E. obligen, Rob. of Glouc. p. 12, l. 21.—F. obliger, 'to oblige, tie, bind;' Cot.—Lat. obligare, to bind together, oblige.—Lat. ob, to; and ligare, to bind. See Ob- and Ligament. Der. oblig-ing, used as adj., Pope, Prol. to Satires, 208; oblig-at-ion, M. E. obligacion, Rob. of Glouc. p. 391, l. 11, from F. obligation = Lat. acc. obligationem; oblig-at-or-y, from Lat. obligatorium; oblig-at-or-i-ly, oblig-at-or-i-ness.

OBLIQUE, slanting, perverse. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Timon, iv. 3. 18.—F. oblique, 'crooked, oblique;' Cot.—Lat. obliquus, obliquus, slanting, sideways, awry.—Lat. ob (scarcely affecting the sense); and liquis (rare), oblique (White). β. The orig. sense of liquis or liquus is 'bent;' cf. Russ. luka, a bend, luke, a bow, G. lenksam, pliable, flexible, Lithuan. lenkti, to bend. = √LAK, to bend; Fick, i. 748. See Lake (1). Der. obliqu-i-ty, from F. obliquité, 'obliquity' (Cot.), from Lat. acc. obliquitatem; oblique-ness.

OBLITERATE, to efface. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627.—Lat. obliteratus, pp. of obliterare or oblitterare, to efface, smear out.—Lat. ob, over; and litera, littera, a letter; see Letter, Line. β. The etymology is generally given from litus, pp. of linere, to smear; which will not account for the syllable -er-; the fact is, that the orig. sense of litera is a smear, mark, stroke, and that it is litera which is connected with litus.

γ. Hence the usual derivation is ultimately correct, but it passes over (without explanation) a stage in the word's history. Der. obliteration.

OBLIVION, forgetfulness. (F.,—L.) M. E. obliuion (for oblivion), Gower, C. A. ii. 23, l. 19.—F. oblivion.—Lat. oblivionem, acc. of oblivio, forgetfulness.—Lat. obliu-, base of the inceptive verb obliviisci, to forget. Root uncertain; the prefix is the prep. ob. Perhaps connected with liuescere, to become livid, turn black and blue (hence, perhaps, to become dark). See Livid. Der. oblivi-ous, Minshew, obliuouse in Palsgrave, from F. oblivieux (Cot.) = Lat. obliviosus; oblivi-ous-ly, oblivi-ous-ness.

OBLONG, long from side to side. (F.,—L.) In Cotgrave.—F. oblong, 'oblong, somewhat long;' Cot.—Lat. oblongus, long, esp. long across.—Lat. ob, across, over; and longus, long. See Ob- and Long.

OBLIQUE, calumny. (L.) 'From the great obloquy in which hee was;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 44 f. Englished from Lat. obloquium, contradiction.—Lat. obloqui, to speak against.—Lat. ob, against; and loqui, to speak. See Ob- and Loquacious.

OBNOMINOUS, offensive, answerable. (L.) Formerly used in the Lat. sense of 'liable to;' as in Milton, Samson, 106; P. L. ix. 170, 1094. See Trench, Select Glossary.—Lat. obnoxius, liable to hurt; also, hurtful; whence the E. word was formed by change of -us to -ous.—Lat. ob, prefix; and noxius, hurtful. See Ob- and Noxious. Der. obnoxious-ly, -ness.

OBOE, a hautboy. (Ital.,—F.,—L. and Scand.) The Ital. spelling of hautboy.—Ital. oboe, a hautboy (Meadows, Eng.-Ital. section).—F. hautbois. See Hautboy.

OBOLUS, a very small Gk. coin. (L.,—Gk.) Sometimes used in mod. E.—Lat. obolus.—Gk. ὀβολός, a small coin, perhaps orig. in the shape of a small rod or nail; a collateral form of ὀβελός, a spit. See Obelisk.

OBSCENE, unchaste, foul. (L.) Spelt obscene in Minshew, ed. 1627.—Lat. obscenus, obscenus, obscenus, repulsive, foul. 'Ety. very doubtful; as one sense of obscenus is ill-boding, inauspicious, it may be connected with Lat. scævus, left, left-handed, unlucky, inauspicious. Der. obscene-ness, obscene-ity.

OBSCURE, dark, little known. (F.,—L.) 'Now is faire, and now obscure;' Rom. of the Rose, 5351.—F. obscur, 'obscure,' Cot.—Lat. obscurus, dark, lit. 'covered over.'—Lat. ob, over; and -scurus, covered, from √SKU, to cover. Cf. Skt. sku, to cover; and see Sky. Der. obscure-ly, -ness; obscure, verb, used by Surrey to translate Lat. caligare in Virgil, Æn. ii. 606; obscur-ity, from F. obscurité, 'obscurity' (Cot.), from Lat. acc. obscuritatem; also obscur-at-ion, directly from Lat. obscuratio.

OBSEQUIES, funeral rites. (F.,—L.) M. E. obsequies, Chaucer, C. T. 995 (Six-text, A. 993).—O. F. obseques, 'obsequies;' Cot.—Lat. obsequias, acc. of obsequia, s. pl. funeral rites; lit. 'followings.'—Lat. ob, prep., near; and sequi, to follow. See Ob- and Sequence; also Obsequious. [†]

OBSEQUIOUS, compliant. (F.,—L.) See Trench, Select Glossary. In Shak. Oth. i. 1. 46.—O. F. obsequieux, 'obsequious;' Cot.—Lat. obsequiosus, full of compliance.—Lat. obsequium, compliance.—Lat. obsequi, to comply with; lit. 'to follow near.'—Lat. ob, near; and sequi, to follow. See Ob- and Sequence. Der. obsequious-ly, -ness.

OBSERVE, to heed, regard, keep. (F.,—L.) M. E. obseruen (with u = v), Chaucer, C. T. 13561.—O. F. observer, 'to observe;' Cot.—Lat. observare, to mark, take notice of.—Lat. ob (scarcely affecting the sense); and servare, to keep, heed. See Ob- and Serve. Der. observ-er, observ-able, observ-able-ly, observ-able-ness; observ-ance, M. E. observaunce, Chaucer, C. T. 1502, 10830, from F. observance, which from Lat. observantia; observ-ant, Hamlet, i. 1. 71, from F. observant, pres. part. of the verb observer; observant-ly; observ-at-ion, L. L. L. iii. 28, and in Palsgrave, directly from Lat. observatio; observ-at-or, observ-at-or-y.

OBSOLESCEMENT, going out of use. (L.) In Johnson's Dict., s. v. Hereout.—Lat. obsolescent-, stem of pres. part. of obsolescere, to grow old, inceptive form of obsolescere, to decay. See Obsolete. Der. obsolescence.

OBSOLETE, gone out of use. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. — Lat. obsoletus, pp. of obsoletus, to grow old, decay. β. The etym. of this word is very doubtful; it is not even known how it should be divided. Perhaps from ob, against, and solere, to be wont, as if obsoletus = to go against custom. Moreover, the Lat. solere is also a difficult word; perhaps from ✓SAL, for SAR, to keep; see Fick, ii. 254. Der. obsoletus; and see obsolescent.

OBSTACLE, a hindrance. (F., —L.) M. E. obstacle, Chaucer, C. T. 9533. — F. obstacle. — Lat. obstaculum, a hindrance, a double dimin. form with suffixes -culu-. — Lat. obstare, to stand in the way. — Lat. ob, over against; and stare, to stand, from ✓STA, to stand. See Ob- and Stand; also Obstetric. [†]

OBSTETRIC, pertaining to midwifery. (L.) In Pope, Dunciad, iv. 394. Shortened from obstetricious, occurring in Cudworth, Intellectual System, b. i. c. 4 (R.). — Lat. obstetricius, obstetric. — Lat. obstetrici-, crude form of obstetric, a midwife; the stem being obstetric-. β. In obstetric, the suffix -trix is the fem. suffix answering to masc. suffix -tor; the lit. sense is 'a female who stands near or beside.' — Lat. obstare, to stand near. — Lat. ob, near; and stare, to stand. See Obstacle. Der. obstetric; obstetric-al.

OBSTINATE, stubborn. (L.) M. E. obstinat, Gower, C. A. ii. 117, l. 10. We find the sb. obstinacy 5 lines above, with the Lat. obstinacio in the margin. — Lat. obstinatus, resolute, stubborn; pp. of obstinare, to set about, be resolved on. — Lat. ob, over against; and an obsolete sb. *stina (= stana), only occurring in the comp. de-stina, a support, stay, prop. See Ob- and Destine. The root is ✓STA, to stand, stand firm. Der. obstinately; obstinac-y, formed by analogy with legacy from legate, &c.

OBSTREPEROUS, noisy, clamorous. (L.) In Beaumont and Fletcher, Maid in a Mill, iii. 1. 5. — Lat. obstreperus, clamorous; by change of -us to -ous. — Lat. ob, against, near; and strepere, to make a noise, rattle, roar, perhaps of imitative origin. Der. obstreperously, -ness.

OBSTRUCTION, obligation. (L.) Very rare. In Milton, Samson, 312. A coined word; made from Lat. obstrictus, bound, obliged, pp. of obstringere, to bind, fasten. — Lat. ob, over against; and stringere, to bind. See Ob- and Strict.

OBSTRUCT, to block up a way, &c. (L.) In Milton, P. L. v. 257, x. 636. [Probably really due to the earlier sb. obstruction, occurring in Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 32, a word taken directly from Lat. obstructio.] — Lat. obstructus, pp. of obstruere, to build in the way of anything. — Lat. ob, over against; and struere, to build. See Ob- and Structure. Der. obstruction, as above; obstructive, obstructive-ly.

OBTAIN, to get, gain, hold. (F., —L.) 'Possible for vs in this life to obtaine;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 7 d. — F. obtenir. — Lat. obtinere, to hold, obtain. — Lat. ob, near, close to; and tenere, to hold. See Ob- and Tenable. Der. obtainable.

OBTRUDE, to thrust upon, thrust in upon. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. — Lat. obtrudere, pp. obtrusus, to thrust against, obtrude on one. — Lat. ob, against; and trudere, to thrust, allied to E. threaten. See Ob- and Threat. Der. obtrusion, obtrusive, obtrusive-ly; from the pp. obtrusus.

OBTUSE, blunt, dull. (F., —L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. — O. F. obtus, 'dull, blunt;' Cot. — Lat. obtus, blunt; pp. of obtrudere, to beat against or upon, to dull, deaden. — Lat. ob, upon; and tundere, to beat, strike, from ✓TUD, to strike; cf. Skt. tud, to strike. Der. obtusely, -ness.

OBVERSE, lit. turned towards one, used of the face of a coin, as opposed to the reverse. (L.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. — Lat. obversus, pp. of obvertere, to turn towards. — Lat. ob, towards; and vertere, to turn. See Ob- and Verse. Der. obverse-ly.

OBVIATE, to meet in the way, prevent. (L.) 'Obviate, to meet with one, withstand, resist;' Minshew, ed. 1627. — Lat. obuiatus, pp. of obuiare, to meet in the way, go towards. — Lat. ob, over against; and uia, a way. See Ob- and Voyage. And see Obvious.

OBVIOUS, evident. (L.) Orig. 'meeting in the way,' as defined by Minshew, ed. 1627. — Lat. obuius, meeting, lying in the way, obvious. — Lat. ob, near; and uia, a way; see Obviate. Der. obviously, -ness.

OCCASION, opportunity, occurrence. (F., —L.) M. E. occasion, occassion, Chaucer, C. T. 12000. — F. occasion. — Lat. occasionem, acc. of occasio, opportunity. — Lat. oc-, put for ob before c; and casus, pp. of cadere, to fall, befall; see Ob- and Chance. Der. occasion-al, occasion-ally. And see occident.

OCCIDENT, the west. (F., —L.) Not now common. M. E. occident, Chaucer, C. T. 4717. — O. F. occident, 'the occident, the west;' Cot. — Lat. occidentem, acc. of pres. pt. of occidere, to set (as the sun), go down. — Lat. oc- (for ob before c); and cadere, to fall; see Ob- and Chance. Der. occident-al, All's Well, ii. 1. 166.

OCCIPUT, the back part of the skull. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. [The adj. occipital is found earlier, in Minshew, ed. 1627.] — Lat. occiput, the back of the head. — Lat. oc- (for ob before c), over against; and caput, the head. See Ob- and Chief. Der. occipit-al, formed from occipit-, crude form of occiput.

OCCULT, hidden, secret. (F., —L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — F. occulte, 'hidden;' Cot. — Lat. occultum, acc. of occultus, hidden, pp. of occulere, to cover over. — Lat. oc- (for ob before c); and *calere, to hide (not found), from ✓KAL, to cover, hide, whence also E. hell. See Ob- and Hell. ¶ The change from a in *calere to short u is the same as in occupy from capere, to take.

Der. occult-ly, -ness; occult, verb, Hamlet, iii. 2. 85, from F. occultare, 'to hide' (Cot.), which from Lat. occultare, frequentative of occulere. Also occult-at-ion, in Palsgrave, an astronomical term, borrowed from Lat. occultatio, a hiding.

OCCUPY, to keep, hold, fill, employ. (F., —L.) M. E. occupien, Chaucer, C. T. 4844; P. Plowman, B. v. 409. — F. occuper. — Lat. occupare, to lay hold of, occupy. — Lat. oc- (for ob before c); and capere, to seize. See Ob- and Captive. ¶ Compare note to Occult. The final -y is due to the i in the M. E. infin. ending -ien, which was substituted for the ordinary ending -en, probably to strengthen the word; cf. the suffix -ian for -an in A. S. causal verbs. Der. occupi-er; also occup-at-ion, M. E. occupacion, Gower, C. A. ii. 50, l. 18, from F. occupation, which from Lat. acc. occupationem; also occup-ant, from F. occupant, pres. pt. of occuper; occup-anc-y.

OCCUR, to happen. (F., —L.) The word occurs in a letter from Cromwell to Sir T. Wyatt dated Feb. 22, 1538 (R.). — F. occurre, 'to occur;' Cot. — Lat. occurrere, to run to meet, meet, appear, occur. — Lat. oc- (for ob before c); and currere, to run. See Ob- and Course. Der. occurr-ent, Bible, 1 Kings, v. 4, from O. F. occurrent, 'occurrent, accidental' (Cot.), which from occurrere, stem of the pres. part. of occurrere. Also occurr-ence, 1 Hen. V, v. chor. 40, from O. F. occurrence, 'an occurrence or accident,' Cot.

OCEAN, the main sea. (F., —L., —Gk.) M. E. ocean, Chaucer, C. T. 4925 (not 9425). — O. F. ocean, fem. oceane; Cot. gives 'la mer oceane, the ocean, or maine sea.' — Lat. oceanum, acc. of oceanus, the main sea. — Gk. Ὠκεανός, the great stream supposed to encompass the earth, Homer, Il. xiv. 245, xx. 7; a word of unknown origin. Der. ocean-ic.

OCELOT, a small carnivorous animal. (Mexican.) Described in a tr. of Buffon, London, 1793, i. 303. 'Ocelotl, or leopard-cat of Mexico;' Clavigero, Hist. of Mexico, tr. by Cullen, ii. 319. 'Ocelotl in Mexican is the name of the tiger, but Buffon applies it to the leopard-cat;' id., footnote. — Mex. ocelotl, a tiger.

OCHRE, a fine clay, commonly yellow. (F., —L., —Gk.) In Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxiii. c. 13. The ch is due to Gk. χ; it is spelt occar in Palsgrave, oker in Cotgrave. — O. F. ocre, 'painters' oker;' Cot. — Lat. ochra. — Gk. ὠχρα, yellow ochre, so called from its pale colour. — Gk. ὠχρός, pale, wan, esp. pale-yellow. Root uncertain. Der. ochre-ous, ochry.

OCTAGON, a plane figure with eight sides and angles. (Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Coined from Gk. ὀκτώ, for ὀκτώ, eight, cognate with E. eight; and γωνία, an angle, corner, derived from γωνία, the knee. See Eight and Knee. Der. octagon-al.

OCTAHEDRON, a solid figure with eight equal triangular sides. (Gk.) Spelt octaedron in Phillips, ed. 1706. The h represents the Gk. hard breathing. Coined from ὀκτώ, for ὀκτώ, eight, cognate with E. eight; and ἑδρα, a base, a seat, from the base ἑδ-, cognate with E. sit. See Eight and Sit. And see Decahedron.

OCTANGULAR, having eight angles. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Formed with adj. suffix -ar (= Lat. -aris) from Lat. octangulus, eight-angled. — Lat. oct-, for octo, eight; and angulus, an angle. See Eight and Angle.

OCTANT, the aspect of two planets when distant by the eighth part of a circle. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. — Lat. octant, stem of octans, an instrument for measuring the eighth of a circle. — Lat. octo, eight. See Eight.

OCTAVE, lit. eighth; hence eight days after a festival, eighth note in music. (F., —L., —Gk.) [The true old F. form of eight was oit, whence M. E. utas, an octave (Halliwell); occurring as late as in Palsgrave.] 'The octavis [octaves] of the Epyphany;' Fabyan's Chron. an. 1324-5, ed. Ellis, p. 428. — F. octaves, pl. of octave; Cot. gives 'octave, an octave, an eighth; octaves d'une feste, the octave, eight days, [or] on the eighth day, after a holiday. — Lat. octava, fem. of octavus, eighth. — Lat. octo, eight; see Eight. Der. octav-o, from Lat. octavo, abl. case of octavus; a book was said to be in folio, in quarto, in octavo, &c.

OCTOBER, the eighth month of the Roman year. (L.) In Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 10, l. 4. — Lat. October; from octo, eight. The origin of the suffix -ber is doubtful.

OCTOGENARIAN, one who is eighty years old. (L.) Added by Todd to Johnson. Coined from Lat. octogenarius, belonging to eighty. — Lat. octogeni, eighty each; distributive form belonging to octoginta, eighty. — Lat. octo, eight; and -ginta = -cinta, short for decinta, a derivative from decem, ten, cognate with E. ten. See Eight and Ten.

OCTOSYLLABIC, having eight syllables. (L., — Gk.) Tyrwhitt, in his Introductio to Chaucer, § vii, speaks of 'the octosyllable metre,' without the suffix -ic. — Lat. octosyllabus, adj., having 8 syllables. — Gk. ὀκτώ, eight; and σλλαβή, a syllable. See Eight and Syllable.

OCULAR, pertaining to the eye. (L.) 'Ocular proof;' Oth. iii. 3. 360. — Lat. ocularis, adj., formed from oculus, the eye, a dimin. of *ocus, the eye, a form not used, but cognate with E. eye; see Eye. Der. ocular-ly, bin-ocular, in-oculate; also ocul-ist, from Lat. oculus.

ODD, not even, strange, queer. (Scand.) M. E. odde. 'Odde or euen;' Gower, C. A. iii. 138, l. 10. 'None odde ȝerez' = no odd years, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 426. 'None odde wedding' = no irregular marriage; Myrc's Instructions for Parish Priests, ed. Peacock, l. 198. — Icel. oddi, a triangle, a point of land; metaph. from the triangle, an odd number, opp. to even; also used in the metaphorical phrase standask á odða, to stand at odds, be at odds, quarrel. In composition, we find Icel. oddmadr, the odd man, the third man, one who gives a casting vote; oddatala, an odd number. Hence it is clear that the notion of 'oddness' arose from the figure of a triangle, which has two angles at the base and an odd one at the vertex. Also oddi is closely related to oddr, a point of a weapon, which stands for ordr, by assimilation. + A. S. ord, point of a sword, point, beginning, chief. + Dan. od, a point; odde, a tongue of land. + Swed. udda, odd, not even; udde, a point, cape, promontory; udd, a point, prick. + G. ort, a place, region, M. H. G. ort, an extreme point. β. The common Teut. type is USDA, Fick, iii. 36; and the orig. sense is sharp point or edge, esp. of a weapon. — √ WAS, to cut; cf. Skt. vas, to cut. Perhaps Gk. ῥύς, a plough-share, and Lat. vomer, a plough-share, are also from this root. And cf. Skt. vási, a carpenter's adze. ¶ The sense of 'strange,' or 'queer,' seems to be a mere development from that of uneven. The W. od, notable, excellent, odd, is prob. merely borrowed from E.; the sense of 'notable' is sometimes attached to A. S. ord. The phrase odds and ends means 'points and ends,' hence, scraps; it is closely allied to the M. E. ord and ende = beginning and end; see Tyrwhitt's note to Chaucer, C. T. 14639, and my note to the same line in the Monks Tale, Group B, l. 3911. ¶ Quite distinct from Orts, q. v. Der. odd-ly, odd-ness, odd-i-ty, odd-fellow; odds, Oth. ii. 3. 185.

ODE, a song. (F., — L., — Gk.) In Shak. L. L. L. iv. 3. 99. — F. ode, 'an ode;' Cot. — Lat. oda, ode. — Gk. ὕδῃ, a song; contracted form of δοῦδῃ, a song. — Gk. αἰδέειν, to sing; related to ἀηδών, a nightingale, singing bird. β. The base of αἰδέειν is ἀείδω, where δ is prosthetic, and είδω is a weakened form of φαδ = vad, cognate with Skt. vad, to sound, to speak; cf. Skt. vādya, to cause to sound, to play, vādya, a musical instrument. — √ WAD, to speak, call, sing. Der. ep-ode, com-ed-y (for com-od-y), trag-ed-y (for trag-od-y), mel-od-y, mon-od-y, palm-ode, par-od-y, psalm-od-y, pros-od-y, rhaps-od-y.

ODIUM, hatred. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. [The adj. odious is much older; in Henrysoun, Complaint of Creseide, st. 19, last line.] — Lat. odium, hatred. — Lat. odi, I hate; an old pt. t. used as a present. Allied to Gk. ὀθεῖν, to thrust, push; so that the orig. sense was 'to thrust away.' Also to Skt. vadh, to strike. — √ WADH, to strike. See Curtius, i. 323. Der. odi-ous, Test. of Creseide, st. 33, from F. odieux, 'odious' (Cot.), which from Lat. odiosus, adj., formed from odium; odi-ous-ly, -ness. And see annoy.

ODOUR, scent, perfume. (F., — L.) M. E. odour, Wyclif, Eph. v. 2. — F. odeur, 'an odor, sent;' Cot. — Lat. odorem, acc. of odor, a scent. — √ AD, to smell; whence also Gk. ὀζειν (= ōd-yein), to smell, and Lithuan. ūdziau, I smell. Der. odor-ous, Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 110, from Lat. odōrus, by change of -us to -ous, and throwing back the accent; odor-ous-ly. Also odori-fer-ous, L. L. L. iv. 2. 128, coined from Lat. odori-fer, odour-bearing; which from odori-, crude form of odor, and -fer, bearing, from ferre, to bear; see Bear (1). And see Olfactory, Osmium, Ozone, Redolent.

OF, from, belonging to, among. (E.) M. E. of; passim. — A. S. of, of; Grein, ii. 308. + Du., Icel., Swed., Dan., and Goth. af. + G. ab; O. H. G. aba. + Lat. ab. + Gk. ἀπό. + Skt. apa, away. β. Apparently an instrumental case from a base AP. From the same base we have the gen. case appearing in Gk. ἀπὸ, back again, Lat. abs, away from; also the locative case appearing in Gk. ἐνί, Lat. ob, near to. Also Lat. apud, near, at. γ. The E. off is merely another spelling of of; see Off. δ. A comparative form occurs in E. after (= of-ter); see After. And see A- (6), Ab-, Apo-, Ob-, Epi-.

OFF, away, away from. (E.) Merely another form of of; and in old authors there is no distinction between the words, the spelling of doing duty for both. 'Smiteth of my hed' = smite off my head; Chaucer, C. T. 784. The spelling off for of occurs in Barbour's Bruce, i. 27, &c. The earliest instance appears to be in the line: 'For thou art mon off strange lond;' Rob. of Glouc. p. 115, l. 15. In the 13th century the spelling off is (I believe) never found. See Of. Der. see below, of-fal, off-ing, off-scouring, off-set, off-shoot, off-spring.

OFFAL, waste meat, refuse. (E.) See Trench, Select Glossary. M. E. offal; 'Offal, that ys bleuit of a thyng, as chypys, or other lyke, Caducum;' Prompt. Parv. Thus it was formerly used of chips of wood falling from a cut log; and is merely compounded of off and fall; see Off and Fall. + Du. afval, fall, windfall, refuse, offal; from af, off, and vallen, to fall. + Dan. afald, a fall off, decline, refuse, offal. + G. abfall, offal; from ab, off, and fallen.

OFFEND, to annoy, displease. (F., — L.) M. E. offenden, Chaucer, C. T. 2396. — F. offendre, 'to offend, hurt;' Cot. — Lat. offendere (pp. offensus), to strike or dash against, hurt, injure. — Lat. of- (put for ob before f), against; and *fendere, to strike, only occurring in compounds. See Defend. Der. offence or offense, M. E. offence, Chaucer, C. T. 5558, from O. F. offence or offense (Cot.), from Lat. offensa, an offence, orig. fem. of pp. offensus; offens-ive, K. Lear, iv. 2. 11, from F. offensif (Cot.), as if from Lat. *offensivus (not used); offens-ive-ly, offens-ive-ness; also offend-er.

OFFER, to propose, present, lay before. (L.) Directly from Latin. In very early use; found even in A. S. M. E. offren, Chaucer, C. T. 12841; Rob. of Glouc. p. 14, l. 16. — A. S. offrian, to offer; see xxx in Sweet's A. S. Reader. — Lat. offerre, to offer. — Lat. of- (for ob before f), near; and ferre, to bring, to bear, cognate with E. bear. See Ob and Bear. Der. offer, sb., offer-er; offer-ing = A. S. offrung, Mark, ix. 49. Also offer-tor-y, M. E. offertorie, Chaucer, C. T. 712 = F. offertoire (Cot.), from Lat. offertorium, a place to which offerings were brought, an offertory, extended from offertor, an offerer, formed from the verb offerre with agential suffix -tor.

OFFICE, duty, employment, act of worship, &c. (F., — L.) In early use. M. E. offiz, office. 'On thin offiz' = in thy official position; Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 2071. — F. office. — Lat. officium, duty, service, lit. the doing of a service; contracted from officium. — Lat. opi-, crude form of opes, sb. pl. wealth, also aid, help; and facere, to do. See Opulent and Fact. ¶ We can hardly derive officium from opus, work. Der. office-bearer; office-er, M. E. officere, Chaucer, C. T. 8066, from F. officier = Low Lat. officiarius, one who performs an office; offic-i-al, P. Plowman, B. xx. 136, from O. F. official, 'an official' (Cot.), which from Lat. officialis; offic-i-al-ly; offic-i-ate, in Milton, P. L. viii. 82, from Low Lat. officiatus, pp. of officiare, to perform an office, occurring A. D. 1314 (Ducange). Also offici-ous (see Trench, Select Glossary), used sometimes in a good sense, Titus Andron. v. 2. 202, from F. officieux, 'officious, dutiful, serviceable' (Cot.), which from Lat. officiosus, obliging; offici-ous-ly, offici-ous-ness.

OFFING, the part of the visible sea remote from the shore. (E.) 'Offin or Offing, the open sea, that part of it which is at a good distance from the shore;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Merely formed from off with the suffix -ing. See Off.

OFFSCOURING, refuse. (E.) Lit. anything scoured off; hence, refuse. In 1 Cor. iv. 13 (A. V.) From Off and Scour.

OFFSET, a young shoot, &c. (E.) Used in several senses. The sense 'shoot of a plant' occurs in Ray, as cited in Todd's Johnson (without a reference). From Off and Set.

OFFSHOOT, that which shoots off. (E.) Not in Todd's Johnson. From Off and Shoot.

OFFSPRING, progeny, issue. (E.) M. E. ofspring, Rob. of Glouc. p. 164, l. 14. The odd spelling oxspring occurs in Cursor Mundi, l. 11415. — A. S. ofspring, Gen. iii. 15. — A. S. of, off, from; and springan, to spring. See Off, Of, and Spring.

OFT, OFTEN, frequently. (E.) Oft is the orig. form; this was lengthened into ofte (dissyllabic), because -e was a common adverbial ending in the M. E. period. Lastly, ofte was lengthened to often before a vowel or h in hadde, &c. Thus: 'Ful ofte tyme,' Chaucer, C. T. 358 (Group A, 356), where Tyrwhitt prints often unnecessarily, the best MSS. having ofta. Again: 'That often hadde ben,' id. 312 (Group A, 310). — A. S. oft, Grein, ii. 320. + Icel. oft, oft (pronounced oft). + Dan. ofte. + Swed. ofta. + G. oft; O. H. G. ofto. + Goth. ufta, adv. oft, Mk. v. 4; used as adj. in the phrase thizo ufta sauhte, frequent infirmities, 1 Tim. v. 23. β. The common Teut. type is UFTA, adv., Fick, iii. 34. In form, the word answers to Gk. ὑπέρτος, highest, best; and it is closely related to Gk. ὑπέρ, Lat. super, E. over; see Over. From the notion of what is 'over' or superfluous, we pass to that of frequency. Der. often, adj., first found in the phr. ofte tyme or often-tyme, Chaucer, C. T. 52, 358; often-ness. We now say often-er, often-est; the old forms were oft-er, oft-est.

OGEE, OGIVE, a double curve. (F., -Span., -Arab.) Sometime absurdly written OG, as if compounded of two letters of the alphabet. Ogee is another form of ogive (with i as in machine). 'An Ogive or Ogee, a wreath, circlet, or round band in architecture;' Minshew, ed. 1627. It is now generally used to mean a double curve, formed by the union of a convex and concave line. An ogee arch is a pointed arch, with doubly-curved sides. - O. F. augive, 'an ogive, a wreath, circlet, round band, in architecture;' Cot. He also has: 'Ogive, an ogive, or ogee in architecture.' β. The suggestion in E. Müller is certainly right; he compares the Span. auge, highest point. Excellent examples of the ogee curve are to be found in Moorish domes and arches, and we may derive the term from the pointed top of such domes, &c. Cf. Span. cimacio ogee, an ogee moulding, where cimacio is derived from cima, a summit, top; late Lat. cymatium, an ogee curve (Vitruvius). Similarly, the F. augive is derived from Span. auge, highest point, which curious word is also found in Port. and Italian. γ. The Span. auge is obviously derived from Arab. awj, top, summit, vertex; Rich. Dict. p. 200. Der. ogiv-al, adj., sometimes oddly corrupted to ogee-fall.

OGLE, to look at sideways, glance at. (Du.) Not an old word in E. In Pope, Rape of the Lock, v. 23. Certainly of Du. origin; answering to a Du. verb *oogelen (not in the Dict.), a regular frequentative of oogen, 'to cast sheep's eyes upon one;' Hexham. Such frequentative verbs are extremely common in Dutch, and may be numbered by hundreds; and we actually find the Low G. oegeln, to ogle, in the Bremen Wörterbuch, used as a frequentative of oegen, to look at; as well as O. Du. oogheler, a flatterer, eye-servant, i. e. ogler (Oudemans). - Du. ooge, the eye; cognate with E. Eye, q. v. [†]

OGRE, a monster, in fairy tales. (F., -Span., -L.) Late. Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. The quotation in Todd is from the E. version of the Arabian Nights, which was taken from the F. version. It is pretty clear that the word came to us by means of that very book. - F. ogre, an ogre; by no means an early word; used by Voltaire in 1740 (Littre). Traced by Diez as borrowed from Span. ogro (not in Meadows), O. Span. huergo, uerco; cognate with Ital. orco, a hobgoblin, demon. - Lat. orcum, acc. of orcus, (1) the abode of the dead, (2) the god of the infernal regions, Orcus, Pluto. The O. Lat. form is said by Festus to have been uragus (White). Cf. A. S. ore, a demon; occurring in orcneas (perhaps better orcneas) = monsters, Beowulf, ed. Grein, 112. Der. ogr-ess, from F. ogresse.

OH, a later spelling of O, q. v.

OIL, juice from the olive-tree, a greasy liquid. (F., -L., -Gk.) We find in A. S. the form ele, in Goth. aleu, forms borrowed ultimately from the Gk., but at a very early period; see Curtius, i. 448. The M. E. oile was borrowed from French; it occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 2963. - O. F. oile (Burguy), later huile (Cotgrave). - Lat. oleum. - Gk. elaion, oil; cf. elaia, an olive-tree, also an olive. So named from its liquidity. - ✓ LI, later form of ✓ RI, to flow; see Liquid. β. 'With Benfey, ii. 120, Diefenbach, Wtb. i. 36, Hehn, 422, I now regard the words in all other languages as borrowed from elaia; oliva is to elaia as Achivi to Ἀχαιοί; initial o for e as in elogium = ἐλεγίον. We ought perhaps to consider as the root of elaion (with Pott, i. 1. 208) the root LI, liquefacere. In Greek, the prefixing of a vowel is justified; it would not be so in the other languages;' Curtius, i. 448. Der. oil, verb; the pp. oiled occurs in Hall's Satires, b. iv. sat. 4, l. 38. Also oil-y, K. Lear, i. 1. 227; oil-i-ness. Also oil-bag, -cake, -cloth, -colour, -nut, -painting. And see Olive, Oleaginous, Oleaster.

OINTMENT, a greasy substance for anointing wounds, &c. (F., -L.) The i is due to confusion with verb to anoint; the M. E. form being oinement or oynement. '[They] bouzten [bought] swete-smelling oynementis, to come and to anoynte Jesu;' Wyclif, Mark, xvi. 1. Spelt oinement in Chaucer, C. T. 633. - O. F. oignement, an anointing, also an unguent, liniment; Burguy. Formed with suffix -ment (= Lat. -mentum) from O. F. ongier (Burguy), another form of O. F. (and mod. F.) oindre, to anoint. - Lat. ungere, to anoint; see Unguent, Anoint.

OLD, aged, full of years, ancient. (E.) M. E. old, def. form and pl. olde; Chaucer, C. T. 5240, 10023. - A. S. eald, O. Northumb. ald, Luke, i. 18. + Du. oud (for old). + G. alt. + Goth. altheis. And cf. Lat. ad-ultus, an adult, one of full age. β. The common Teut. type is ALTHA, whence ALDA; Fick, iii. 26. Like the -ultus in Lat. adultus, it is a pp. form from the ✓ AL, to nourish, as seen in Goth. alan, to nourish, Lat. alere, to nourish; cf. Goth. us-althan, to grow old. It means 'well nourished, grown up.' See further under Adult, Adolescent. Der. old-en, Macbeth, iii. 4. 75, apparently a Scand. word from Icel. aldinn, old, or perhaps the adj. suffix -en is merely tacked on; cf. gold-en. Also old-ness, K. Lear, i. 2. 50; cf. eldness, Wyclif, Rom. vii. 6. Also eld, sb., eld-er (1), eld-est, aid-er-man.

OLEAGINOUS, oily. (L., -Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. oleaginus, belonging to olive-oil; by change of -us to -ous, as in arduous, &c. An adj. form from oleum, oil. Not a true Lat. word, but borrowed from Gk. elaion; see Oil.

OLEANDER, the rose-bay-tree. (F., -Low Lat.) 'Oleander, rose-bay, rose-tree.' - O. F. oleandre, 'the rose-tree, rose-bay, rose-lawrell, rose-bay-tree;' Cot. The same as Ital. oleandro, Span. eloandro, 'the rose-bay-tree,' Minshew (1623), Port. eloandro, loandro. All those forms are variously corrupted (it is supposed) from Low Lat. lorandrum, a word cited by Isidore of Seville. β. Again, it has been suggested that lorandrum is an attempt at rendering rhododendron. This is but a guess; and there is no very great resemblance between the shrubs. Perhaps we may rather guess lorandrum to represent *laurodendron, a quite conceivable compound from lauro, from Lat. laurus, laurel, and Gk. δένδρον, a tree.

γ. The change from lorandrum to oleandrum is clearly due to confusion with oleaster.

OLEASTER, the wild olive. (L., -Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. - Lat. oleaster, Rom. xi. 17 (Vulgate). Formed with suffix -ster (as in poeta-s-ter) from olea, an olive-tree. - Gk. elaia, an olive-tree. See Oil.

OLFACTORY, pertaining to smell. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. - Lat. olfactorius, belonging to one that smells; only appearing in the fem. and neut. forms, olfactoria, olfactorium, a smelling-bottle. - Lat. olfactor, one who smells; (but only the fem. form olfactrix occurs). - Lat. olfactus, a smelling, also pp. of olfacere, to smell, to scent; of which a fuller form olefacere also occurs. - Lat. olē-re, to smell; and facere, to make; hence, to emit a scent. β. It is almost certain that olere stands for *odere, whence odor, smell. The change of d to l is a peculiarity of Latin, as in Ulysses for Odysseus, lacruma for dacruma; see Tear (2). See Odour.

OLIGARCHY, government by a few. (F., -L., -Gk.) Spelt oligarchie in Minshew, ed. 1627. - F. oligarchie, 'an oligarchie;' Cot. - Low Lat. oligarchia (Ducange). - Gk. ὀλιγαρχία, government in the hands of a few. - Gk. ὀλίγος, few, little; and -αρχία, from ἀρχειν, to rule. β. In the Gk. ὀλιγός, the ὀ is prosthetic; the word is akin to Lithuan. lēsas, thin, lean, and to Skt. lṛṣa, smallness, from lṛ, to become small. And see Arch-, prefix. Der. oligarchi-cal; also oligarch, Gk. ὀλιγάρχης; oligarch-al.

OLIO, a mixture, medley. (Span., -L.) A mistaken form of olia, which is an E. spelling of Span. olla, sounded very nearly as olia, the Span. ll answering to E. ly or to E. lli in million. The mistake occurs in Eikon Basilike, cap. xv, and is noticed by Milton. 'Not to tax him for want of elegance as a courtier in writing oglio for olla, the Spanish word;' Milton, Answer to Eikon Basilike, cap. 15. - Span. olla, 'a round earthen pot, an oglio' (sic); Meadows. Properly, the latter sense is due to the Span. dish called olla podrida, a dish of various meats and vegetables, hence a mixture, medley, olio. - Lat. olla, a pot; from O. Lat. aula, a pot. Root uncertain.

OLIVE, the name of an oil-yielding tree. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. oliue (with u for v). O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 89, l. 5 from bottom. - F. olive. - Lat. oliva. - Gk. elaia, an olive-tree. See further under Oil.

OMBRE, a game at cards. (F., -Span., -L.) In Pope, Rape of the Lock, i. 56. - F. ombre, ombre (Hamilton). - Span. juego del hombre, the game of ombre; lit. 'game of the man;' see Eng.-Span. part of Meadows' Dict. The Span. juego is from Lat. iocus; see Joke. The Span. hombre is from Lat. hominem, acc. of homo, a man; see Human. [†]

OMEGA, the end. (Gk.) In Rev. i. 8. The sense 'end' is due to the fact that omega is the last letter of the Gk. alphabet. Its force is that of long o. - Gk. ὦ, called ὦ μέγα, i. e. great o or long o; where μέγα is the neut. of μέγας, great, allied to E. mickle; see Mickle. ¶ Opposed to alpha, the first letter; see Alphabet.

OMELET, a pancake made chiefly of eggs. (F., -L.) In Cotgrave. - F. omelette, 'an omelet or pancake of eggs;' Cot. An older form was aumelette; Cot. also gives: 'Aumelette d'œufs, an omelet, or pancake made of egges.' β. The forms of the word are various; a very common old form, according to Scheler, was amelette, but this was preceded by the forms alemette, alemelle, and alumelle. It is clear that amelette is a corruption from the older alemette; and it seems that alemette, in its turn, took the place of alemelle.

γ. Now the O. F. alemelle signified 'a thin plate,' esp. the blade of a knife, and is still preserved in the mod. F. alumelle (a corrupted spelling), with the sense of 'sheathing of a ship,' as a nautical term (Hamilton). That is, the omelet was named from its thin, flat, shape, and has nothing to do with F. œufs, eggs, as some supposed; so that the old expression in Cotgrave, viz. aumelette d'onyx, is quite correct, not tautologous. See alemele, the blade of a knife, in Roquefort. 8. Lastly, alemele (or alemele) is a mistaken form, due to confusion of la lemelle (the correct form) with l'alemele, as if the article had been elided before a vowel. = Lat. lamella, a thin plate, properly of metal; dimin. of lamina, a thin, flat plate; see Lamina. ¶ There seems to be no reason for doubting the correctness of this curious etymology, due to Littré; see the articles in Littré and Scheler, under the words omelette and alumelle.

OMEN, a sign of a future event, prognostication. (L.) In Shak. Hamlet, i. 1. 123. — Lat. omen, an omen; O. Lat. osmen. β. Root uncertain; some connect it with os, the mouth, others with auscultare, to hear, and auris, the ear; the latter is more likely. Der. omen-ed, chiefly in ill-omened; omin-ous (Minsheu), imitated from Lat. omin-ousus, adj., formed from omin-, stem of omen; omin-ous-ly, omin-ous-ness. Also ab-omin-ate.

OMIT, to leave out, neglect. (L.) 'Nor omitted no charitable means;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 887 e. — Lat. omittere, to omit; lit. 'to let go.' Put for omittere, which stands (by assimilation) for omittere. = Lat. ob (which often scarcely affects the sense); and mittere, to send, let go. See Ob- and Mission. Der. omission, Troil. iii. 3. 230, from F. omission, 'an omission' (Cot.), which from Lat. omissionem, acc. of omissio, from pp. omissus. Also omit-ance, a coined word, As You Like It, iii. 5. 133.

OMNIBUS, a public vehicle. (L.) The name seems to have been first used in France. They were used in Paris about 1828; and were so called because intended for the use of all classes. — Lat. omnibus, for all, dat. pl. of omnis, all. Root uncertain.

OMNIPOTENT, almighty. (F., — L.) M. E. omnipotent, Chaucer, C. T. 6005. — F. omnipotent; Cot. — Lat. omnipotent-, stem of omnipotens, all-powerful. = Lat. omni-, crude form of omnis, all; and potens, powerful; see Potent. Der. omnipotent-ly, omnipotence, from F. omnipotence (Cot.).

OMNIPRESENT, everywhere present. (F., — L.) Milton has omnipresence, P. L. vii. 590, xi. 336. Coined from omni-, crude form of omnis, all; and Present, q. v. Der. omnipresence.

OMNISCIENT, all-knowing. (L.) In Milton, P. L. vi. 430. Coined from omni-, crude form of omnis, all; and scient-, stem of sciens, pres. part. of scire, to know. See Science. Der. omniscience.

OMNIVOROUS, all-devouring, feeding on all kinds of food. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. omnivorus, all-devouring; by change of -us to -ous. = Lat. omni-, crude form of omnis, all; and -vorus, devouring, from vorare, to devour; see Voracious.

ON, upon, at, near. (E.) M. E. on; passim. — A. S. on; passim. + Du. aan. + Icel. á (for an). + Dan. an, prep. and adv. + Swed. å, prep.; an, adv. + G. an. + Goth. ana, to, upon, on. + Gk. aná. + Russ. na. β. All from ANA, pronom. base of the third person; 'aná is evidently a case-form of the demonstrative stem, which is preserved as ana in Skt., as anas (= ille) in Lithuanian, and as onū with the same meaning in Church-Slavonic;' Curtius, i. 381. See In, which is a weakened form, or a different case; on is perhaps an instrumental case, and in a locative case. Der. on, adv.; on-set, on-slaught, on-ward, on-wards; and see anon.

ONCE, a single time; at a former time. (E.) M. E. ones, cones, onis, Chaucer, C. T. 5592, 5595; cf. at ones, id. 767. The final s was sharp, not pronounced as z; and this is why the word is now spelt with ce, which is an attempt to shew this. — A. S. ðnes, once; orig. gen. case masc. and neut. of án, one; the gen. case was sometimes used adverbially, as in need-s, twi-ce, thri-ce. See One (1). Der. nonce, in the phr. for the nonce; see Nonce.

ONCE, OUNCE, an animal; see Ounce (2).

ONE (1), single, undivided, sole. (E.) [The mod. pronunciation [wun] seems to have arisen in the W. of England; it is noticed by Jones, in 1701, as in use 'in Shropshire and some parts of Wales;' Ellis, On Early Eng. Pronunciation, p. 1012. It does not appear to be older in literature than about A.D. 1500; I believe the spelling won occurs in the Works of Tyndal (a Gloucestershire man), but I have lost the reference. At any rate, the M. E. pronunciation was like that of -one in stone, bone, and is still preserved in al-one, at-one, on-ly; we never say wunly. We do, however, say wuns (with sharp s) for once.] M. E. oon, on; also oo, o; dative oone, one; Chaucer, C. T. 343, 365, 681, 749, &c. — A. S. án, one; Grein, i. 29. + Du. een. + Icel. einn. + Dan. een. + Swed. en. + G. eín. + Goth. ains. + W. un. + Irish and Gael. oon. + Lat. unus; O. Lat. oinos. + Gk. ólós, one. β. 'The stem AI-NA for one is proved to be a common European form. The Skt. éka-s, the Zend ae-va [cf. Gk. ólos] are other extensions of the same base AI;' Curtius, i. 399. γ. The base AI appears to be a strengthened form from I, a pronominal base of the 3rd person, appearing in Skt. i-dam, this. Der. one-sided, one-sided-ness; one-ness; and see on-ce, on-ly, al-one, l-one, at-one;

un-ique, un-ise, un-ion, un-animous, uni-son, uni-versal, on-ion; also n-one, n-on-ce, an-on (= in one), an-other. Doublet, an or a. The Gk. éls, one (base he) cannot be fairly referred to the same source, but appears to be related to E. same; see Acc. [†]

ONE (2), a person, spoken of indefinitely. (E.) In the phrase 'one says,' the one means a single person. Cf. 'One that moche wo wroughte, Sleuthe was his name' = one who wrought much wo, whose name was Sloth; P. Plowman, B. xx. 157. See Mätzner, Engl. Grammatik. 'The indefinite one, as in one says, is sometimes, but wrongly, derived from the F. on, Lat. homo. It is merely the use of the numeral one for the older man, men, or me;' Morris, Hist. Outlines of Eng. Accidence, p. 143; which see for examples. The false explanation, that one stands for F. on, seems hard to kill; but the more Middle-English is studied, the sooner it will be disbelieved.

ONEROUS, burdensome. (F., — L.) In the Rom. of the Rose, l. 5636. — F. oneroux, 'onerous'; Cot. — Lat. onerousus, burdensome. — Lat. oner-, stem of onus, a burden. β. Benfey (Skt. Dict. p. 19) compares onus with Skt. anas, a cart. Der. onerous-ly, -ness; also ex-oner-ate.

ONION, the name of a plant. (F., — L.) M. E. onion, Chaucer, C. T. 636. — F. oignon, 'an onion'; Cot. — Lat. unionem, acc. of unio, (1) unity, oneness, (2) a single large pearl, (3) a kind of onion. — Lat. unus, one; cognate with E. One, q. v. Doublet, union, esp. in the sense 'a large pearl,' Hamlet, v. 2. 283. [†]

ONLY, single, singly. (E.) Both adj. and adv. M. E. oonli, earlier oonliche, onliche. 'Onliche liue' = solitary life; Ancræn Riwe, p. 152, last line but one. Onliche, adv., Will. of Palerne, 3155. — A. S. ánlic, adj., unique, lit. one-like; Grein, i. 33. — A. S. án, one; and lic, like. See One and Like.

ONOMATOPEIA, name-making, the formation of a word with resemblance in sound to that of the thing signified. (Gk.) Esp. used of words such as click, hiss, and the like, directly imitative of sounds. In modern use; yet the Gk. word is a real one. — Gk. ὀνοματωρία, the making of a name; we also find ὀνοματωρίζω. — Gk. ὄνομα, crude form of ὄνομα, a name; and ποιέω, to make. See Name and Poem. Der. onomatopoeic. Also (from Gk. ὄνομα) an-onym-ous, hom-onym, met-onym-y, par-onym-ous, syn-onym.

ONSET, an assault, attack. (E.) In King John, ii. 326. A good word; but not in early use. Due to the phrase to set on, i. e. to attack. 'Percy! and set on!' 1 Hen. IV, v. 2. 97. See On and Set.

ONSLAUGHT, an attack. (E.) In Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3. ll. 422, 424. The M. E. form would be onslaht; but I do not know that it occurs. Compounded of M. E. on, on; and slaht, slahti, slaught, a stroke, blow, also slaughter, as in Gower, i. 343, l. 16. — A. S. on, on; and slaht, a stroke, blow, found in the compounds morðor-slaht, wæl-slaht, Grein, ii. 264, 647, and derived from slēan, to strike. See On and Slaughter.

ONWARD, ONWARDS, forward. (E.) Not an old word. 'I haue driuen hym onwarde one steppe down;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 409 d. It does not seem to appear much earlier. Compounded of on and -ward, in imitation of Toward, q. v. So also onwards, Shak. Sonn. 126, in imitation of towards.

ONYX, a kind of agate. (L., — Gk.) In Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxviii. c. 6. — Lat. onyx. — Gk. ὄνυξ, a claw, a nail, a finger-nail, a veined gem, onyx, from the resemblance to the colour of the finger-nail. The stem is ὄνυξ, with prosthetic o; allied to Skt. nakha, a nail, Russ. nogot, a nail, and E. nail; see Nail. [†]

OOLITE, a kind of limestone. (F., — Gk.) Modern and geological. A coined word, but coined in France; an Englishman would have said oolith. — F. oolithe, with th pronounced as E. t; Littré. — Gk. ὄλιθ, crude form of ὄλιθ, an egg, cognate with Lat. ovum; and λίθ-os, a stone. See Oval and Lithography.

OOZE, moisture, soft mud, gentle flow. (E.) This word has lost an initial w; it should rather be woze. For the loss of w, cf. prov. E. 'ooman for woman, Shropshire 'ood for wood. M. E. wose, P. Plowman, c. xiii. 229; and Prompt. Parv. p. 532. — A. S. wāse; the sepia or cuttle-fish was called wāse-scite = ooze-shooter, from the sepia which it discharges; see Wright's Voc. i. 56, col. 1. We also find A. S. wās, juice; as in ofetes wās, juice of fruit; Wright's Voc. i. 27, col. 2, l. 8. + Icel. vás, wetness. + M. H. G. wase, O. H. G. waso, turf, sod; wasal, rain. β. Perhaps related to Icel. úr, drizzling rain, ver, sea, A. S. wær, sea, Skt. vári, water, fluidity. Der. ooze, verb, Timon, i. 1. 21; ooz-y. [†]

OPACITY, opaqueness; see Opaque.

OPAL, a precious stone. (F., — L.) In Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxvii. c. 6; Tw. Nt. ii. 4. 77. — F. opale, 'the opal stone'; Cot. — Lat. opalus, an opal; Pliny, as above. Cf. Gk. ὀπάλλιος, an opal. Origin unknown; perhaps from Skt. upala, a stone; cf. tapana-upala, a fabulous gem, rasa-upala, a pearl (Benfey).

OPAQUE, not transparent, dark. (F., — L.) In Milton, P. L. iii. 619. — F. opaque, 'dusky, gloomy, obscure'; Cot. — Lat. opacum, acc.

of opacus, shady. Root unknown. Der. opaque-ness; also opac-i-ty, Minshew, from F. opacité, 'opacity' (Cot.), from Lat. acc. opacitatem.

OPE, to open. (E.) A short form for open, verb; K. John, ii. 536. So also ope is used as a short form for open, adj., as in 'the gates are ope,' Cor. i. 4. 43. Seldom used except in poetry. See Open.

OPEN, unclosed, free of access, clear. (E.) The verb is formed from the adj., as is shewn by the old forms. M. E. open, Chaucer, C. T. 8666. At a later period contracted to ope; see Ope.—A. S. open, open, Grein, ii. 355. 'Lit. 'that which is lifted up'; the metaphor being probably taken from the lifting of the curtain of a tent, or the lifting of a door-latch; cf. dup (=do up), to open, Hamlet, iv. 5. 53.—A. S. up, up; see Up.—Du. open; from op, up. + Icel. opinn, open, also face upwards; from upp, up. + Dan. aaben, from op, up; cf. the phr. luk Døren op, open the door, lit. 'lock the door up.' + Swed. öppen; from upp. + G. öffnen; from auf, O. H. G. uif. Der. open, verb, A. S. openian, causal verb from adj. open; so also Du. openen, from open; Icel. opna, from opinn; Dan. aabne, from aaben; Swed. öppna; G. öffnen. Also open-ly, open-ness, open-ing, open-handed, open-hearted.

OPERA, a musical drama. (Ital.,—L.) 'An opera is a poetical tale or fiction,' &c.; Dryden, pref. to Albion and Albanus.—Ital. opera, work; hence a performance.—Lat. opera; see Operate. Der. operat-ic; opera-glass.

OPERATE, to produce an effect. (L.) In Shak. Cymb. v. 5. 197. [Really due to the sb. operation, in much earlier use; M. E. operacion, Chaucer, C. T. 6730, Gower, C. A. iii. 128, l. 8; from F. operation, which from Lat. acc. operationem.]—Lat. operatus, pp. of operari, to work.—Lat. opera, work; closely allied to Lat. opus (stem oper-), work, labour, toil. + Skt. apas, work (Vedic).—✓AP, to attain; cf. Skt. āp (orig. also ap), to attain, obtain. Der. operat-ion, as above; operat-ive, King Lear, iv. 4. 14, from F. operatif, 'operative' (Cot.); operat-ive-ly; operat-or, from Lat. operator; oper-ant, Hamlet, iii. 2. 184, from operant-, stem of pres. part. of operari; oper-ance, Two Noble Kinsmen, i. 3. 63. Also oper-ose, i. e. laborious, Blount's Gloss., from Lat. operosus; oper-ose-ly, oper-ose-ness; oper-osity, Minshew. From the same root we have co-operate, en-ure, in-ure, man-ure, man-œuvre, of-fice. There is perhaps an ultimate connection with ap-t, in-ep-t, op-tat-ive, option.

OPHICLEIDE, a musical instrument. (F.,—Gk.) Modern.—F. ophicleide, 'an ophicleid, key-serpent;' Hamilton. An odd name; due to the old twining musical instrument called 'a serpent,' to which keys were added, thus turning it into a 'key-serpent.'—Gk. ὄφις, crude form of ὄφης, a serpent; and κλειδ, stem of κλείς, a key. See Ophidian and Clavicle.

OPHIDIAN, relating to serpents. (Gk.) Modern; formed with E. suffix -an (=Lat. -anus) from Gk. ὄφις—*, an imaginary form wrongly supposed to be the crude form of ὄφης, a serpent. The true crude form is ὄφις, as seen in ophi-cleide and Ophi-uchus (Gk. ὄφιοχος, serpent-holder, from ἔχειν, to hold), Milton, P. L. ii. 709.

OPHTHALMIA, inflammation of the eye. (Gk.) Spelt ophthalmie in Blount's Gloss., which is borrowed from F. ophthalmie (Cotgrave).—Gk. ὀφθαλμία, a disease of the eye.—Gk. ὀφθαλμός, the eye; apparently put for ὀφθαλμός; cf. Doric ὀφθαλμός, the eye, ὀφθαλμύς, to see, ὀφθαλμύς, one who looks, a spy, eye-witness. See Optic. Der. ophthalmi-c.

OPINION, a notion, judgment, estimation. (F.,—L.) M. E. opinion, Chaucer, C. T. 183; Gower, C. A. i. 267.—F. opinion, 'opinion;' Cot.—Lat. opinionem, acc. of opinio, a supposition.—Lat. opinari, to suppose; rarely opinare.—Lat. opinus, thinking, only in the comp. nec-opinus, in-opinus, unexpected; connected with apisci, to obtain, also to comprehend, understand, and with aptus, fitted, fit; see Apt.—✓AP, to attain to; cf. Skt. āp (orig. also ap), to attain, obtain, get; whence follow the ideas of comprehending, thinking, expecting. See Optative. Der. opinion-at-ive (Johnson), which has taken the place of the older opinative (Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674), coined from Lat. opinatus, pp. of opinari, to suppose; opinion-at-ive-ly, opinion-at-ive-ness. We also use the coined word opinion-at-ed, a clumsy formation. The verb opine is not much used, but is a perfectly correct word, from F. opiner, 'to opine' (Cot.), which from Lat. opinare, more commonly opinari, as above; it occurs in Pope, Moral Essays, iii. 9. The derivatives opin-able, opin-at-ive, opin-at-or (all in Blount) are obsolete.

OPIMUM, a narcotic drug. (L.,—Gk.) In Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xx. c. 18; and in Milton, Samson, 630. [The M. E. opie, Chaucer, C. T. 1474, answers to an O. F. opie.]—Lat. opium; Pliny.—Gk. ὀπιον, poppy-juice, opium; dimin. from ὀπός, juice, sap. β. Perhaps connected with E. sap, Curtius, ii. 63; but Fick (i. 490) takes a different view. If Curtius be correct, it is also cognate with Lat. sucus, juice; see Succulent. Der. opi-ate, Milton, P. L. xi. 133, spelt opiat in Cotgrave, from F. opiate, which from Low Lat. opiatum (Ducange), lit. 'provided with opium.'

OPOSSUM, an American quadruped. (W. Indian.) In a tr. of Buffon's Nat. Hist., London, 1792, i. 214. 'Orig. opassom, in the language of the Indians of Virginia;' Webster.

OPPIDAN, at Eton, a student who boards in the town, not in the college. (L.) Formerly in more general use. 'Oppidan, a citizen or townsman;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—Lat. oppidanus, belonging to a town.—Lat. oppidum, a town; O. Lat. oppedum. Cf. Lat. Pedum, the name of a town in Latium, Livy, ii. 39. 4. β. 'The word oppidum I derive from pedum (cf. Pedum) = Gk. πῆδον, ground, country, Skt. pada-m, tread, step, place, spot, foot-print, track, and ob, on, near, over, and interpret it accordingly as orig. 'What lies on or over the open ground;' . . . hence may well also be derived the old use of oppida for the barriers of a race-course, which lie on [or] over the arena;' Curtius, ii. 103, 303. The Skt. pada answers to E. foot. See Ob and Foot.

OPPONENT, one who opposes. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627.—Lat. opponent-, stem of pres. pt. of opponere, to oppose, lit. set against.—Lat. op (for ob before p); and ponere, to place. See Ob and Position.

OPPORTUNE, seasonable. (F.,—L.) Spelt oportune in Lydgate, Siege of Thebes, prol. 149.—F. opportun, 'timely;' Cot.—Lat. opportunus, convenient, seasonable; lit. near the harbour.—Lat. op (for ob before p), near; and portus, a harbour, port. See Ob and Port (2). Der. opportune-ly, opportune-ness; also opportunit-i-ty, M. E. opportunité, Wyclif, Matt. xxvi. 16, from F. opportunité (Cot.), which from Lat. acc. opportunitatem.

OPPOSE, to resist, withstand. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) M. E. opposen, used commonly in the special sense of to contradict in argument, as an examiner used to do in the schools; see Chaucer, C. T. 7179 (Six-text, Group D, 1597), where Tyrwhitt prints apposen; Gower, C. A. i. 49, l. 15. 'Aposen, or oposyn, Oppono;' Prompt. Parv. p. 13.—F. opposer; reflexively s'opposer, 'to oppose himself, to resist, withstand, gainsay, to object, except, or protest against;' Cot.—F. op—Lat. op (for ob before p), against; and F. poser, to place. See Ob and Pose. Der. oppos-er, oppos-able.

OPPOSITE, over against, contrary, adverse. (F.,—L.) M. E. opposite, Chaucer, C. T. 1896.—F. opposite, 'opposite;' Cot.—Lat. oppositus, pp. of opponere, to set against.—Lat. op (for ob before p), against; and ponere, to put, set; see Ob and Position. Der. opposite-ly, opposite-ness; also opposit-ion, M. E. oppositioun, Chaucer, C. T. 11369, from F. oppositioun, which from Lat. acc. oppositiōnem.

OPPRESS, to press against, constrain, overburden. (F.,—L.) M. E. oppressen, Chaucer, C. T. 11723.—F. oppresser, 'to oppress;' Cot.—Low Lat. oppressare, to oppress; Ducange.—Lat. oppress-us, pp. of opprimere, to oppress, press upon. See Ob and Press. Der. oppression, Chaucer, C. T. 6471, from F. oppression, which from Lat. acc. oppressionem; oppress-ive, oppress-ive-ly, oppress-ive-ness; oppress-or, Hamlet, iii. 1. 71.

OPPROBRIOUS, reproachful, disgraceful. (L.) Spelt opprobrius, perhaps by a misprint, in The Remedie of Loue, st. 41, pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 323, back.—Lat. opprobrius, full of reproach.—Lat. opprobrium, reproach.—Lat. op (for ob before p), on, upon; and probrum, disgrace, infamy. Root uncertain. Der. opprobriously, opprobri-ness. The sb. opprobrium is also sometimes used, having taken the place of the older word opprobry; see Todd's Johnson.

OPPUGN, to oppose, resist. (F.,—L.) 'The true catholike faythe is, and euer hath been, oppugned and assaulted;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 571 (h.).—F. oppugner, 'to oppugne;' Cot.—Lat. oppugnare, to buffet, beat with the fists.—Lat. op (for ob before p), against; and pugnare, to fight, esp. with the fists, from pugnus, the fist.

β. Pugnus is from a base pug-, appearing in pug-il, a boxer, pugilist; it is also cognate with E. fist. See Ob and Pugilist or Fist. Der. oppugn-er; oppugn-anc-y, Shak. Troil. i. 3. 111.

OPTATIVE, wishful, wishing. (F.,—L.) The name of a mood in grammar, sometimes expressive of wishing. In Sherwood's Index to Cotgrave, where the F. optatif is also given.—F. optatif.—Lat. optativus, expressive of a wish; the name of a mood.—Lat. optatus, pp. of optare, to wish; a frequentative verb from a base op-, connected with ap-isci, to obtain.—✓AP, to obtain; cf. Skt. āp, ap, to obtain, attain. Der. optative-ly; from the same source, opt-ion, op-ulent, op-in-ion, op-tim-ism; ad-opt, apt, ad-ep-t, in-ep-t.

OPTIC, relating to the sight. (F.,—Gk.) Formerly optick. 'Through optick glass;' Milton, P. L. i. 288.—F. optique, 'of, or belonging to, the eye-sight;' Cot.—Gk. ὀπτικός, belonging to the sight; cf. ὀπτήρ, a spy, eye-witness. From the base OP (for OK) occurring in Ionic ὀν-ων-α, I have seen, ὀψομαι, I shall see; whence also Lat. oc-ulus, Russ. ok-o, the eye, cognate with E. eye; see Eye. Der. optic, sb., an eye, as in 'the cleere casements of his own optiques;' Howell, Instructions for Foreign Travel, last sentence; optic-s, sb.; optic-al, optic-al-ly, optic-i-an. Also aut-op-s-y, cat-op-tric, di-op-tric, syn-op-sis; and see oph-thalmia, antel-ope, anthr-opo-logy.

OPTIMISM, the doctrine that all is for the best. (L.; with Gk.

suffix.) Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. Coined by adding the suffix -ism (=Gk. -ισμος) to optim-, stem of Lat. optimus, best, orig. 'choice'; from the same base as optio, choice, option. See Optative. Der. optim-ist, with Gk. suffix -ιστης.

OPTION, choice, wish. (F.,—L.) In Minshew. — F. option, 'option'; Cot. — Lat. optionem, acc. of optio, choice. Allied to optare, to wish; see Optative. Der. option-al, option-al-ly.

OPULENT, wealthy. (F.,—L.) In K. Lear, i. 1. 81. — F. opulent, 'opulent'; Cot. — Lat. opulentus, wealthy. Extended from op-, stem of opes, sb. pl., wealth, riches. Cf. Skt. āpnas, Gk. ἀπνος, wealth. — Lat. ap-, base of ap-isci, to obtain, ap-ere, to bind. — AP, to obtain; see Optative, Apt. Der. opulence; opulenc-y, Timon, v. 1. 38. From the same source are c-op-y, c-op-i-ous, c-op-ul-ate, &c.

OR (1), conjunction, offering an alternative. (E.) Short for other, owther, outher, auther, the older forms. 'Amys other elles' = amiss or else; P. Plowman, B. i. 175; where the Trin. MS. (printed by Wright) has 'amys outher ellis.' 'Other catell other cloth' = either property or cloth; P. Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, l. 116. 'Auther to lunge lye, or to lunge sitte' = either to lie long, or to sit long; Gawain and the Grene Knight, l. 88. β. This other or auther is not the mod. E. other, but the mod. E. either; see exx. in Stratmann. See Either. So also nor = neither. Der. n-or.

OR (2), ere. (E.) The use of or for ere is not uncommon; see 'or ever I had seen that day;' Hamlet, i. 2. 183. Particularly in the phrase or ere, Temp. i. 2. 11; Macb. iv. 3. 173, &c. The forms or, er, ar occur as exact equivalents in the same passage in the three texts of P. Plowman, C. viii. 66, B. v. 459, A. v. 232. All are from A. S. dr, er, or from its equivalents in various E. dialects. See Ere. ¶ It is probable that or ere arose as a reduplicated expression, in which ere repeats and explains or; later this was confused with or er; whence or ever.

OR (3), gold. (F.,—L.) A common heraldic term. — F. or, gold. — Lat. aurum, gold; see Aureate.

ORACLE, the utterance or response of a deity. (F.,—L.) M. E. oracle, Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, b. i. l. 11. — F. oracle, 'an oracle'; Cot. — Lat. oraculum, a divine announcement; formed with double dimin. suffix -culu- from orare, to speak, announce, pray; see Oral. Der. oracul-ar, due to Lat. oracularius, oracular; oracul-ar-ly, -ness.

ORAL, spoken, uttered by the mouth. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. A coined word; formed with suffix -al (=F. -al, -el, Lat. -alis) from or-, stem of os, the mouth. β. Allied to Skt. āśya, the mouth, āśana, the mouth; the form ans, by loss of n, would give ōs, with long o. — AN, to breathe; whence also E. animal, animate; see Animate. Der. oral-ly; also or-ac-le, q. v., or-at-ion, q. v., or-at-or, q. v., ori-fice, q. v., ori-son, q. v.; also ad-ore, in-ex-or-able.

ORANG-OUTANG, a large ape. (Malay.) 'Orang-outang is the name this animal bears in the E. Indies; Pongo, its denomination at Lowando, a province of Congo;' E. tr. of Buffon, London, 1792. — Malay orang utan, 'the wild man, a species of ape;' Marsden, Malay Dict., p. 22. — Malay orang, a man, id.; and hutan, utan, 'woods, a forest, wild or uncultivated parts of the country, wild, whether in respect to domestication or cultivation;' id. p. 364. [†]

ORANGE, the name of a fruit. (F.,—Ital.,—Pers.) The pl. oranges is in Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 7. 'Colour of orange' occurs in l. 7 of a 15th-century ballad beginning 'O mossie Quince,' pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 344, back; and see Orange in Prompt. Parv. — O. F. orange (14th century), Littré; later changed into orange, 'an orange'; Cot. The form should rather have been nareng, but the initial n was lost, and areng became orange under the influence of F. or (Lat. aurum), gold; because the notion arose that the name denoted the golden colour of the fruit. — Ital. arancio, an orange, an orange-tree. Cf. Span. naranja, Port. laranja (put for naranja), an orange. — Pers. nāranj, nārinj, also nārang, an orange; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 1548. Cf. Pers. nār, a pomegranate. [†]

ORATION, a speech. (F.,—L.) In Sir T. More, Works, p. 399 a. — F. oration, 'an oration, or harangue'; Cot. — Lat. orationem, acc. of oratio, a speech. — Lat. oratus, pp. of orare, to speak, pray; see Oral.

ORATOR, a speaker. (F.,—L.) Formerly orateur, but now conformed to the Lat. spelling. M. E. orateur, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. 4. pr. 4. l. 3705. — F. orateur, 'an orator'; Cot. — Lat. oratore, acc. of orator, a speaker. — Lat. oratus, pp. of orare; see Oration. Der. oratori-cal, oratori-cal-ly; orator-y, M. E. oratorie, Chaucer, C. T. 1907, from F. oratoire, 'an oratory' (Cot.), from Lat. oratorium, a place of prayer, neut. of oratorius, belonging to prayer; orator-i-o, from Ital. oratorio, an oratory, also an oratorio, from the same Lat. oratorius.

ORB, a sphere, celestial body, eye. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. v. 50; and prob. earlier. — F. orbe, an orb; omitted in Cotgrave, but given in Sherwood's Index, and in use in F. in the 13th c.

century (Littré). — Lat. orbem, acc. of orbis, a circle, circuit, orb. Root unknown. Der. orb-ed, Haml. iii. 2. 166; orbi-cul-ar, Milton, P. L. iii. 718, from Lat. orbicularis, circular; orbi-cul-ar-ly; also orb-it, Phillips, ed. 1706, directly from Lat. orbita, a track, course, orbit, formed with suffix -ta from orbi-, crude form of orbis. Hence orbit-al.

ORCHARD, a garden of fruit-trees. (E.) M. E. orchard, Ancrén Riwe, p. 378, l. 2 from bottom; orchard, Layamon, 12955. — A. S. oræard, usually spelt orærd, Gen. ii. 8, 16; Wright, Popular Treatises on Science, p. 10, l. 3. The older form is ortegard, Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Pastoral, c. 40; ed. Sweet, p. 292, l. 4. We also find wyrtegard, to translate Lat. promptuarium, Ps. cxliii. 16, ed. Spelman. Orteard and wyrtegard are mere variants, both signifying 'wort-yard,' i. e. yard of worts or vegetables; the form ort is due to a Teutonic type URTI, put for WARTI; and the form wyr to a Teut. WORTI, also put for WARTI; see Fick, iii. 35. 295. See Wort and Yard. + Icel. jurtagarðr, a garden of herbs; from jurt, later urt, herbs, and garðr, a yard, garden; but perhaps jurt is only a borrowed word in Icelandic, from E. or G. + Dan. urtegard, herb-garden; from urt and gaard. + Swed. örtgård; from ört and gård. + Goth. aurtigards, a garden, John, xviii. 1; cf. aurtja, a gardener, husbandman, Luke, xx. 10. ¶ It is singular that Lat. hortus is related to the latter syllable yard; but of course not to the former.

ORCHESTRA, the part of a theatre for the musicians. (L.,—Gk.) In Holland, tr. of Suetonius, p. 242 (R.). — Lat. orchestra. — Gk. ὀρχήστρα, an orchestra; which, in the Attic theatre, was a space on which the chorus danced. — Gk. ὀρχέομαι, I dance. Root uncertain. Der. orchestr-al.

ORCHIS, a name for certain plants. (L.,—Gk.) In Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxvi. c. 10; and in Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, (1779), p. 233, l. 1. — Lat. orchis (Pliny). — Gk. ὄρχις, a testicle; hence applied to a plant with roots of testicular shape. Der. orchid-ac-e-ous, a coined word, as if from orchid-, stem of orchis (but the Lat. orchis makes gen. orchis, and Gk. ὄρχις makes gen. ὀρχέως); also orchid, similarly coined. ¶ A similar mis-coining is seen in ophidian, for which see under Ophicleide.

ORDAIN, to set in order, arrange, regulate. (F.,—L.) M. E. ordeynen; P. Plowman, B. prol. 119; Rob. of Glouc. p. 236, l. 10. — O. F. ordener, later ordonner, as in Cotgrave. — Lat. ordinare, to set in order. — Lat. ordin-, stem of ordo, order; see Order. Der. ordin-ance, q. v.; ordin-ate, adj., M. E. ordinat, Chaucer, C. T. 9160, from Lat. pp. ordinatus; ordin-ate, sb. (in mathematics); ordin-ate-ly; ordin-at-ion, in Phillips, ed. 1706, formed, by analogy with F. words in -tion, from Lat. ordinatio, an ordinance, also ordination. And see ordin-al, ordin-ar-y, ord-nance.

ORDEAL, a severe trial, a judgment by test of fire, &c. (E.) It is most remarkable that this word (from complete ignorance of its etymology) is commonly pronounced ord-ā-l in three syllables, though the -deal is absolutely the same word as when we speak of dealing cards, or a deal of work. M. E. ordal, Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 1048, ed. Tyrwhitt. (In order to correspond with the mod. form, it should rather have been ordeel.) — A. S. ordēl, ordāl; the spelling ordēl is rare, but occurs in the Laws of Edward and Guthrum, sect. ix, in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, i. 172; this form answers to mod. E. ordeal. The usual spelling is ordāl, as in the Laws of Ethelred, sect. i (in Thorpe, i. 281), and sect. iv (id. i. 294), and see numerous references in Thorpe's Index; this form answers to Chaucer's ordal, and the latter part of the word (dāl) answers to mod. E. dole. The orig. sense is 'a dealing out,' separation, or discrimination; hence, a judgment, decision. + O. Fries. ordel. + O. Sax. urdēli, a judgment, decision. + Du. oordeel, judgment. + G. urtheil, O. H. G. urteil, urteili, judgment. B. The latter part of the word is the same as Deal (1) or Dole; as shewn by Du. deel, G. theil. The prefix is the Du. oor-, O. Sax. and G. ur-, answering to the O. H. G. prep. ur, Goth. us, out, out of; perhaps related to Skt. ava, away, off, down. It is not preserved in any other mod. E. word (except Ort, q. v.), but was common in A. S., in such words as or-mēte, immense, or-mōd, despondent, or-sorg, free from care, or-tryve, wanting in trust, or-wēna, wanting in hope, or-wige, unwelcome, &c.; see Grein, ii. 356–360.

ORDER, arrangement, system. (F.,—L.) M. E. ordre; occurring four times on p. 8 of the Ancrén Riwe. — F. ordre, substituted for O. F. ordene, ordine by the not uncommon change of n to r; see Coffer. — Lat. ordinem, acc. of ordo, order, arrangement. β. Supposed to be connected with Lat. oriri, to arise, originate; though this is not very clear; see Origin. Der. order, verb, in Sir T. Wiat, Sat. ii. l. 87; order-less, K. John, iii. 1. 253; order-ly, adj., Cymb. ii. 3. 12; order-ly, adv., Two Gent. i. 1. 130; order-li-ness, order-ing. Also dis-order, ordain, ordin-ance, ordn-ance, ordin-ate, ordin-at-ion, ordin-al, ordin-ar-y, in-ordin-ate, co-ordin-ate, sub-ordin-ate.

ORDINAL, shewing order or succession. (L.) In Phillips, ed.

1706; chiefly in the phr. 'an ordinal number.' = Lat. ordinalis, in order, used of an ordinal number. = Lat. ordin-, stem of ordo, order; see Order. Der. ordinal, sb., 'a book of directions for bishops to give holy orders,' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, from Low Lat. ordinale, neut. of ordinalis.

ORDINANCE, an order, regulation. (F., -L.) M. E. ordenance, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 83, last line. = O. F. ordenance, later ordonnance (Cotgrave). = Low Lat. ordinantia, a command. = Lat. ordinant-, crude form of pres. part. of ordinare, to set in order; see Ordain. Doublet, ordnance.

ORDINARY, usual, customary. (F., -L.) 'The ordinary manner;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 583 d. Ordinarily occurs on p. 582 h. = F. ordinaire, 'ordinary;' Cot. = Lat. ordinarius, regular, usual. = Lat. ordin-, stem of ordo, order; see Order. Der. ordinary, sb., from F. ordinaire, 'an ordinary' (Cot.), Lat. ordinarius, an overseer; ordinari-ly. Also extra-ordinary.

ORDINATE, ORDINATION; see Ordain.

ORDNANCE, artillery. (F., -L.) The same word as ordnance, which is the old spelling; see K. John, ii. 218; Hen. V, ii. 4. 126. It orig. meant merely the bore or size of the cannon, and was thence transferred to the cannon itself, exactly as in the case of Caliver, q. v. 'Engin de telle ordnance, of such a bulk, size, or bore;' Cotgrave.

ORDURE, excrement. (F., -L.) In Shak. Hen. V, ii. 4. 39. M. E. ordure, Chaucer, Pers. Tale, De Superbia (Six-text, Group I, l. 428). = F. ordure, 'ordure;' Cot. = O. F. ord (fem. orde), 'filthy, nasty, foule, . . . ugly, or loathsome to behold;' Cot. Cf. O. F. ordir, 'to foule, defile, soil;' id. [So also Ital. ordura is from the adj. ordo, dirty, slovenly, soiled, deformed.] = Lat. horridus, rough, shaggy, wild, frightful; see Horrid. So also Ital. ordo answers to O. Ital. horrida, mod. Ital. orrida, which Florio explains by 'horrid, hideous, . . . euill fauoured, . . . lothesome to behold.'

ORE, crude or unrefined metal. (E.) M. E. or, Ancr. Riwe, p. 284, note b; the dat. ore is in Chaucer, C. T. 6646. = A. S. ôr; 'hit is eac berende on wegga drum âres and isernes,' it is fertile in ores of lumps of brass and iron; Ælfred, tr. of Beda, lib. i. c. 1. The word ôr seems to be merely another form of âr, brass, occurring in the above quotation; the dat. case dre, meaning 'bronze,' occurs in Gregory's Pastoral, c. 37. ed. Sweet, p. 266. The change from A. S. â to long o is seen again in E. oar from A. S. âr. + Icel. eir, brass. + O. H. G. êr, brass. + Goth. aiz, ais, brass, coin, money, Matt. vi. 8; cf. aizasmitha, a copper-smith, 2 Tim. iv. 14. + Lat. æs, ore, bronze. Cf. Skt. ayas, iron; Max Müller, Lect. ii. 256.

ORGAN, an instrument, esp. of music. (F., -L., -Gk.) In old books, the instrument of music is commonly called the organs or a pair of organs; the pl. orgone or orgoon (answering to Lat. organa) occurs in P. Plowman, C. xxi. 7; Chaucer, C. T. 14857; the pl. organs is in Chaucer, C. T. 15603; see my note to P. Plowman, C. xxi. 7. = F. organe, 'an organ, or instrument wherewith anything may be made or done;' Cot. = Lat. organum, an implement. = Gk. ὄργανον, an implement; allied to Gk. ἐργα, I did, accomplished, and to Gk. ἐργον, a work; see Work. And see Orgies. Der. organ-ic, organ-ical, organ-ic-al-ly, organ-ism, organ-ist, organ-ise, organ-is-at-ion. The A. S. organan, sb. pl., used to translate Lat. organa in Ps. cxxxvi. 2 (ed. Spelman), can hardly be called an A. S. word.

ORGIES, sacred rites accompanied with revelry, revelry, drunkenness. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Milton, P. L. i. 415; Drayton, Polyolbion, s. 6 (R.). = F. orgies, 'the sacrifices of Bacchus;' Cot. = Lat. orgia, sb. pl., a nocturnal festival in honour of Bacchus, orgies. = Gk. ὄργια, sb. pl., orgies, rites; from sing. ὄργιον, a sacred act; closely connected with ἐργον, work. See Organ and Work.

ORIEL, a recess (with a window) in a room. (F., -L.) 'It may generally be described as a recess within a building; Blount has oriel, the little waste room next the hall in some houses and monasteries, where particular persons dined, and this is clearly an authorised and correct explanation;' Halliwell's Dict., which see. Spelt oryall in the Squire of Low Degree, l. 93; in Ritson's Metrical Romances, vol. iii. = O. F. oriel, a porch, alley, gallery, corridor; Roquefort. We find le oriel glossed by 'de la chambre,' i. e. the oriel of a chamber, in Wright's Vocab. i. 166, l. 9. The Low Lat. form is oriolum, explained as a small refectory or a portico in Matt. Paris, in Ducange; see the citations in Wedgwood and Halliwell. β. When we come to examine the matter more closely, there need be no doubt as to the etymology, though I am not aware that it has ever been pointed out. The passage from Walter de Bibbesworth, in Wright's Vocab. i. 166 (as above), runs thus: 'Plus est delit en le oriel (glossed de la chambre) Escoter la note de l'oriel (glossed a wodewale);' i. e. it is very delightful in the recess of a chamber to listen to the note of the oriole. Thus the 'oriel' and 'oriole' are spelt exactly alike in O. F., and may, for that reason, be referred alike to the same Lat. source. The Lat. word for 'oriole' is aureolus, golden; and the Low Lat. oriolum (oriel) is plainly for Lat. neuter aureolum, gilded or ornamented with gold; see further under Oriole.

γ. This explains at once the varied use of the word; it meant any portico, recess, or small room, which was more private and better ornamented than the rest of the building. Hence its special application to the small apartment in which it was the privilege of sick monks to dine; 'ut non in infirmaria sed seorsim in oriolo monachi infirmi carnem comederent;' Matt. Paris, in Ducange. And hence, again, its special application to a lady's closet, or as we should now say, a boudoir, as in the Squire of Low Degree and in the Erl of Tolouse, l. 307; Ritson, Met. Rom. vol. iii. Pliny speaks of 'laquearia, quæ nunc et in priuatis domibus auro teguntur;' or, in Holland's translation, 'now a daies you shall not see any good house of a priuat man, but it is laid thicke and covered ouer with gold; nay, the brauery of men hath not staid so, but they haue proceeded to the arched and embowed roufs [roofs], to the walls likewise of their houses, which we may see euerywhere as well and thoroughly gilded as the siluer plate vpon their cupboards;' tr. of Pliny, b. xxxiii. c. 3. This shews that the custom of gilding certain apartments was derived from the Romans; it was probably common enough elsewhere in early times. ¶ There is a good article on the senses of the word Oriel in the Archæologia, vol. xxiii; but the etymology there proposed is ridiculous.

ORIENT, eastern. (F., -L.) M. E. orient, in Chaucer, C. T. 14320. = F. orient. = Lat. orient-, stem of oriens, the rising sun, the east; properly pres. part. of oriri, to rise. See Origin. Der. orient-al, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. sect. 5, l. 4, from F. oriental, Lat. orientalis; orient-al-ist.

ORIFICE, a small opening. (F., -L.) Spelt orifs in Spenser, F. Q. iv. 12. 22. = F. orifice, 'orifice;' Cot. = Lat. orificium, an opening, lit. 'the making of a mouth.' = Lat. ori-, crude form of os, a mouth; and -fic-, for facere, to make. See Oral and Fact.

ORIFLAMME, the old standard of France. (F., -L.) 'The oryflambe, a speciall relyke that the Frenshe kynges vse to bere before them in all battayles;' Fabyan's Chron. an. 1335, ed. Ellis, p. 467. = F. oriflambe, 'the great and holy standard of France;' Cot. = Low Lat. auriflamma, the standard of the monastery of St. Denis in France. The lit. sense is 'golden flame,' hence 'a golden banner;' so called because the banner was cut at the outermost edge into flame-shaped strips, and was carried on a gilt pole. Cf. Lat. flamula, a little flame, also a small banner used by cavalry. = Lat. auri, for auro-, stem of aurum, gold; and flamma, a flame. See Aureate and Flame. A drawing, showing the shape of the oriflamme, is given in Webster's Dictionary.

ORIGAN, ORIGANUM, wild marjoram. (F., -L., -Gk.) [An older name is organy, mentioned in Cotgrave; this is A. S. organe, for which see Cockayne's Leechdoms, iii. 340, borrowed directly from Lat. organum.] In Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xx. c. 17; Spenser, F. Q. i. 2. 40. = F. origan, 'garden organ, wild marjoram;' Cot. = Lat. organum (Pliny). = Gk. ὀρίγανον, ὀρίγανος, marjoram; lit. 'mountain-pride.' = Gk. ὄρι, for ὄρει, crude form of ὄρος, a mountain; and γάνος, brightness, beauty, ornament, delight. β. Gk. ὄρος is allied to Russ. gora, Skt. giri, a mountain; γάνος is perhaps from the same root as Lat. gaudere, to rejoice.

ORIGIN, source, beginning. (F., -L.) In Hamlet, i. 4. 26; the adj. original is much older, in Chaucer, C. T. 12434. = F. origine, 'an originall, beginning;' Cot. = Lat. originem, acc. of origo, a beginning. = Lat. oriri, to arise, begin. = ✓ AR, to arise; cf. Skt. ri, to rise, Gk. ὄρϋμι, I stir up. Der. origin-al (as above), origin-al-ly, origin-al-ity, origin-ate, origin-at-ion, origin-at-cr. And see ori-ent, prim-ordial.

ORIOLE, the golden thrush. (F., -L.) Called 'the golden oriole' in a translation of Buffon, London, 1792. The old names are golden thrush, witwall, wodewale, and heighaw. = O. F. oriel, 'a heighaw, or witwall;' Cot. (And see quotation under Oriel). = Lat. aureolus, golden; a dimin. form of aureus, golden. = Lat. aurum, gold; see Aureate. And see Oriel.

ORISON, a prayer. (F., -L.) M. E. oryson, orisoun, Rob. of Glouc. p. 235; Chaucer, C. T. 5016. = O. F. orison, oreson, oreison (Burguy), later oraison, 'orison, prayer;' Cot. = Lat. orationem, acc. of oratio, a speech, prayer. = Lat. oratus, pp. of orare, to pray. = Lat. or-, stem of os, the mouth; see Oral. Doublet, oration. [†]

ORLOP, a deck of a ship. (Du.) 'Orlope, the uppermost deck of a great ship, lying between the main and misen mast, and otherwise called the spare-deck; the second and lowest decks of a ship that has three decks, are likewise sometimes termed orlopes;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Contracted from overlope. = Du. overloop, 'a running over; de overloop van een schep, the deck of a ship, the orlope;' Sewel. So called because it runs over or traverses the ship; cf. Du. overloopen, 'to run over, to run from one side to the other; Sewel. — Du. over, cognate with E. over; and loopen, to run, cognate with E. leap. See Over and Leap.

ORMOLU, a kind of brass. (F., — L.) 'Ormolu, an alloy in which there is less zinc and more copper than in brass, that it may present a nearer resemblance to gold. . . Furniture ornamented with ormolu came into fashion in France in the reign of Louis XV' [1715–1774]; Beeton's Dict. of Univ. Information. — F. or moulu, lit. pounded gold. — F. or, gold, from Lat. aurum; and moulu, pp. of moudre, to grind, pound, O. F. moudre, molre, from Lat. molere, to grind; see Aureate and Mill.

ORNAMENT, that which beautifies, adornment. (F., — L.) M. E. ornament; the pl. ornamentes occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 8134 (Six-text, E, 258); where it is remarkable that the Ellesmere and Camb. MSS. have aornementes, and the Hengwrt MS. has aornementes. [These forms answer to O. F. aornement, an ornament, from the verb aornier (= Lat. adornare), to adorn.] Also ornementes, pl., Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1799. — F. ornement, 'an ornament'; Cot. — Lat. ornamentum, an ornament; formed with suffix -mentum from ornare, to adorn. β. Allied to Skt. varna, colour, gold, beauty, embellishment, a derivative from vari, to cover. — √ WAR, to cover; cf. Skt. vari, to cover. See Curtius, i. 323. Der. ornament, verb, added by Todd to Johnson; ornament-al (a late coinage), ornament-al-ly, ornament-at-ion; also (from Lat. pp. ornatus) ornate, Court of Love, l. 34; ornate-ly, ornate-ness. Also ad-orn.

ORNITHOLOGY, the science of birds. (Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, where it is noted as being 'the title of a late book.' — Gk. ὀρνιθολογία, crude form of ὀρνις, a bird; and -λογία, allied to λόγος, a discourse; see Logic. β. The Gk. ὀρνις is interesting as being cognate with A. S. earn, an eagle, Matt. xxiv. 28. A shorter form appears in Goth. ara, G. aar, an eagle; cf. also Russ. orél', an eagle. Named from its soaring; cf. Gk. ὀρνυμι, I stir up. — √ AR, to arise; cf. Skt. ri, to rise; see Origin. Der. ornithological, ornithologist.

ORNITHORHYNCHUS, an Australian animal. (Gk.) Lit. 'bird-snout'; so called from the resemblance of its snout to a duck's bill. — Gk. ὀρνιθορυγχος, crude form of ὀρνις, a bird (see above); and ὀρυγχος, a snout, muzzle.

ORPHAN, a child bereft of father or mother, or of both parents. (L., — Gk.) 'He will not leue them orphanes, as fatherlesse children.' Sir T. More, Works, p. 173 c; with a reference to John, xiv. [This form supplanted the older F. form orphelin, used by Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 3, l. 939]. — Lat. orphanus, John, xiv. 18 (Vulgate). — Gk. ὀρφανός, destitute, John, xiv. 18; A. V. 'comfortless.' Cf. Gk. ὀρφός, with the same sense; whence ὀρφόβωρνος, one who brings up orphans. The shorter form ὀρφός answers to Lat. orbus, deprived, bereft, destitute. Root uncertain. Der. orphan-age, a coined word.

ORPIMENT, yellow sulphuret of arsenic. (F., — L.) M. E. orpiment, Chaucer, C. T. 16291. Lit. 'gold paint.' — F. orpiment, 'orpiment'; Cot. — Lat. auripigmentum, orpiment. — Lat. auri-, for auro-, crude form of aurum, gold; and pigmentum, a pigment, paint. See Aureate and Pigment. Der. orpine.

ORPINE, ORPIN, a kind of stone-crop. (F., — L.) Also called live-long; whence Spenser speaks of the 'orpine growing still,' i.e. growing continually; Muiopotmos, l. 193. M. E. orpyyn; Prompt. Parv. — F. orpin, 'orpin, or live-long; also orpine, orpiment, or arsenick'; Cot. Merely a docked form of F. orpiment, orpiment; so called from its yellow flowers. See Orpiment.

ORRERY, an apparatus for illustrating the motions of the planets, &c. (Ireland.) 'Constructed at the expense of Charles Boyle, [second] earl of Orrery, about 1715;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. Orrery is the name of a barony in the county of Cork, in Ireland; the chief town in it is Bannevant. [†]

ORRIS, the name of a plant. (Ital., — L., — Gk.) 'The nature of the orris-root is almost singular;' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 863. Spelt orice in Cotgrave, who explains F. iris by 'the rainbow, also, a flowerdeluce; iris de Florence, the flowerdeluce of Florence, whose root yields our orice-powder.' The Spanish term for orris-root is raiz de iris florentina = root of the Florentine iris. In Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxi. c. 7, we read: 'but as for the flour-de-lis [commonly called ireos, Holland's note], it is the root only therof that is comfortable for the odor.' It thus appears that orris, orice, and orrice, are English corruptions of the Ital. irios or ireos. — O. Ital. irios, 'a kind of sweete white roote called oris-roote'; Florio, ed. 1598; cf. mod. Ital. ireos, corn-flag, sword-grass (Meadows). β. The form of the Ital. irios, ireos is not easy to explain; but it is certainly connected with Lat. iris, which is the very word in Pliny, b. xxi. c. 7; and this is borrowed from Gk. ἴρις, 'the plant iris, a kind of lily with an aromatic root'; Liddell and Scott. See Iris. [†] ortes, sb. pl., spelt ortus in the Prompt. Parv. p. 371, which has: 'Ortus, releef of beestys mete,' i.e. orts, remnants of the food of animals. Not found in A. S., but it is at least O. Low G., being found in O. Du., Low G., and Friesic. The Friesic is ort (Outzen); the Low G. is ort, esp. used of what is left by cattle in eating; cf. Low G. ortstro, refuse-straw; Bremen Wörterbuch, iii. 272. The word is completely solved by the fuller form found in O. Du., viz. oorste, oorste, a piece left uneaten at a meal, also nausea due to over-eating; Oudemans, v. 403. β. This is a compound word, made up of O. Du. oor-, cognate with A. S. or-, O. H. G. ur- (mod. G. er-), Goth. us, prep. signifying 'out' or 'without'; and Du. elen, cognate with E. eat. Thus the sense is 'what is left in eating,' an 'out-morsel,' if we may so express it. For the prefix, see further under Ordeal; and see Eat.

ORT, a leaving, remnant, morsel left at a meal. (O. Low G.) Usually in the pl. orts, Troil. v. 2. 158; Timon iv. 3. 400. M. E.

γ. This solution, certainly the right one, is pointed out by Wedgwood, but with some hesitation. He adduces some parallel words, some of which are cognate, others mere chance resemblances. We may particularly note Swed. dial. or-äte, ur-äte, refuse fodder, orts, from ur-, or-, the prefix corresponding to Du. oor- above, and Swed. äta, to eat, also victuals, food (Rietz). Also Bavarian urässen, urezen, to eat wastefully, uräss, urez, refuse; where ur- is the O. H. G. form of the same prefix, and ässen = G. essen, to eat; see Schmeller, Bav. Wort. i. 134. With such proof we may rest content. ¶ The A. S. oretan, to spoil, is probably not related. But Lowland Sc. worts, refuse fodder, is E. orts with a prefixed unoriginal w.

ORTHODOX, of the right faith. (F., — L., — Gk.; or L., — Gk.) Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, has orthodox and orthodoxal; so also in Cotgrave. — F. orthodoxe, orthodoxe, orthodoxall. — Late Lat. orthodoxus (White). — Gk. ὀρθόδοξος, of the right opinion. — Gk. ὀρθός, crude form of ὀρθός, upright, right, true; and δόξα, opinion. β. For ὀρθός, there was a Doric form βορβός; Curtius, ii. 85. It answers to Skt. úrđhva, erect, upright, connected with urđh, to grow, augment, from √ WARDH, to raise; see Fick, i. 775. γ. Gk. δόξα is from δοκεῖν, to seem, allied to Lat. deceit, it is fitting; see Decorum. Der. orthodox-y, Gk. ὀρθοδοξία.

ORTHOEPY, correct pronunciation. (Gk.) The word occurs in Bp. Wilkins, Essay towards a Real Character, pt. iii. c. 1 (R.) This word appeared in 1668. Imitated from Gk. ὀρθοέπεια, correct pronunciation. — Gk. ὀρθός, crude form of ὀρθός, right, true; and ἐπος, a word. See Orthodox and Epic.

ORTHOGRAPHY, correct writing. (F., — L., — Gk.) In rather early use. 'Of this word the true ortographie;' Remedy of Love (15th cent.), st. 41, l. 6; pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 323, back. The word was at first spelt orto-, as in French, but afterwards corrected. — O. F. ortographie; Cot. only gives the verb ortographier, 'to orthographise, to write or use true orthography.' — Lat. orthographia (White). — Gk. ὀρθογραφία, a writing correctly. — Gk. ὀρθός, crude form of ὀρθός, right; and γράφειν, to write; see Orthodox and Graphic. Der. orthographi-c, orthographi-c-al, -al-ly; orthograph-er, -ist.

ORTHOPTEROUS, lit. straight-winged; an order of insects. (Gk.) Modern and scientific: coined from ὀρθός, crude form of ὀρθός, right, straight; and πτερόν, a wing. See Orthodox and Diptera. So also orthoptera.

ORTOLAN, the name of a bird. (F., — Ital., — L.) See Trench, Select Glossary; the word means 'haunting gardens,' and Trench cites ortolan in the early sense of 'gardener' from the State Papers, an. 1536, vol. vi. p. 534. — O. F. hortolan, 'a delicate bird,' &c.; Cot. — O. Ital. hortolano, 'a gardiner; also a daintie bird so called'; Florio. — Lat. hortulanus, a gardener, belonging to a garden. — Lat. hortulus, a little garden, dimin. of hortus, a garden, cognate with E. garth; see Court, Garth, Yard. ¶ The change from u to o is common in Italian.

ORTS, the pl. of Ort, q. v.

OSCILLATE, to swing. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. oscillatus, pp. of oscillare, to swing, sway. — Lat. oscillum, a swing. β. Vaníček (with a reference to Corssen in Kuhn's Zeitschrift, xv. 156) identifies oscillum, a swing, with oscillum, a little mouth, a little cavity, a little image of the face, mask or head of Bacchus which was suspended on a tree (White); with the remark that it meant a puppet made to swing or dance. If so, oscillum is a dimin. of osculum, the mouth, itself a dimin. from os, the mouth; see Oral. Der. oscillat-ion, oscillat-or-y. And see oscilate.

OSCULATE, to kiss. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. osculatus, pp. of osculari, to kiss. — Lat. osculum, a little mouth, pretty mouth; double dimin. (with suffix -culu-) from os, the mouth; see Oral. Der. osculat-or-y, osculat-ion.

OSIER, the water-willow. (F., — Gk. ?) In Shak. L. L. L. iv. 2. 112. M. E. osyere; Prompt. Parv. p. 371. — F. osier, 'the osier, red withy, water-willow tree'; Cot. β. Origin somewhat uncertain; Littré cites the Berry forms oisi, oisil, oisis, onsier; Walloon, woisir, or not; it is more probable that lonza stands for lonza in Ital. than that l has been dropped in the other languages. I believe this point admits of direct proof; for though lonza is an old word in Ital. (occurring in Dante, Inf. i. 32), it is certain that onza was also in use, a fact which the authorities have overlooked. Yet Florio, ed. 1598, records: 'Onza, an ounce weight, also a beast called an ounce or cat of mountaine.' γ. A derivation from Lat. lynx is (I think) out of the question; because we find Ital. lince, a lynx. It is most likely that all the forms are nasalised forms of the Pers. name for the animal. Cf. Pers. yúz, 'a panther, a pard, a lynx, those esp. used in hunting deer' [i.e. the ounce]; Rich. Dict. p. 1712. [†]

OUR, possessive pronoun of the 1st pers. plural. (E.) M. E. oure, older form ure; Havelok, l. 13. = A. S. úre, gen. pl. of 1st personal pronoun; orig. meaning 'of us.' This gen. pl. was used as a possessive pronoun, and regularly declined, with gen. úres, dat. úrums, &c.; see Grein, ii. 633. It then completely supplanted the older A. S. possess. pron. úser, usser (Grein, ii. 633), cognate with G. *uns*er and Goth. unsar.

β. Yet úre is itself a contracted form for úsera (contracted to úre, úrre, úre), which again stands for unsara, the Gothic form of the gen. pl. of the 1st pers. pronoun. Here -ara is the gen. pl. suffix, and a shorter form appears in Goth. uns, equivalent to E. us.

γ. Briefly, our is the gen. pl. corresponding to the acc. pl. us; see Us. Der. our-s, M. E. oures, Chaucer, C. T. 13203, due to A. S. úres, gen. sing. of úre, when declined as above; also our-selves, or (in regal style) our-self; see Self. As to the old dispute, whether we should write ours or our's, it cannot matter; we write day's for A. S. dages (gen. sing.), but days for A. S. dagas (nom. pl.), thus marking the omission, strangely enough, only where the weaker vowel is omitted. The apostrophe is merely conventional, and better omitted.

OURANG-OUTANG; see Orang-Outang. (Malay.)

OUSEL, a kind of thrush. (E.) M. E. osel, Wright's Vocab. i. 164, l. 3; osul, Trevisa, tr. of Higden, i. 237. = A. S. ósle, Wright's Vocab. i. 281, col. i, l. 17. Here, as in A. S. óðer, other = Goth. anþar, the long ó stands for an or am; thus ósle = ósele = ansele or amsele. + G. amsel, O. H. G. amsala, a blackbird, ousel; we also find M. H. G. amelsá, O. H. G. amalsá. β. The orig. form is AMSALA; root unknown.

OUST, to eject, expel. (F., -L.) The word has come to us through Law French. 'Ousted, from the Fr. oster, to remove, or put out, as ousted of the possession (Pecks Case, Mich. 9 Car. 1. 3 Part Crokes Rep. fol. 349), that is, removed, or put out of possession;' Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691. = O. F. oster, 'to remove, withdraw,' Cot.; mod. F. ôter. Cf. Prov. ostar, hostar (Bartsch). β. Of disputed origin; it has been proposed to derive it from Lat. obstare, to withstand, hinder, but this does not well suit the sense. The most likely solution is that of Diez, who derives it from *haustare, a supposed derivative of haurire, to draw water; we at any rate have the word exhaust in English, formed from Lat. exhaustire, which was used in the precise sense required, viz. 'to take away, remove' (White). See Exhaust. Der. oust-er. [†]

OUT, without, abroad, completely. (E.) M. E. oute, older form ute, adv., out. 'That hiie ne solde oute wende' = that they should not go out; Rob. of Glouc. p. 170, l. 16. = A. S. úte, útan, adv., out, without; Grein, i. 634. Formed with adv. suffix -e (or -an) from A. S. út, adv. 'Fleogan of húse út' = to fly out of the house; 'út of earce' = out of the ark; Grein, ii. 633. (This shews the origin of the phrase out of = out from.) + Du. uit. + Icel. út. + Dan. ud. + Swed. ut. + G. aus, O. H. G. úz. + Goth. ut; whence uta, adv. (= A. S. úte); utana, adv. and prep. (= A. S. útan). + Skt. ud, up, out. It appears also in Gk. ὑστερος = ὑδ-ρεος, corresponding to E. utter, outer. All from an Aryan type UD, up, out. Der. with-out, there-out, out-er, ut-ter, out-m-ost, ut-m-ost (double superlatives); see Utter, Utmost, Uttermost. Also as a prefix in numerous compounds, for which see below. (But not in outrage.)

OUTBALANCE, to exceed in weight. (Hybrid; E. and F., -L.) In Dryden, tr. of Ovid, Met. xiii. 397. From Out and Balance.

OUTBID, to bid above or beyond. (E.) In Shak. 2 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 363. See Bid (2).

OUTBREAK, an outburst. (E.) In Hamlet, ii. 1. 33. See Break.

OUTBURST, a bursting forth. (E.) Apparently a modern coinage, in imitation of out-break; but a good word. Neither in Rich. nor Todd's Johnson. See Burst.

OUTCAST, one who is cast out, a wretch. (Hybrid; E. and Scand.) 'For if so be that he is most out cast (Lat. abiection) that most folk dispisen;' Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 4. l. 2002. See Cast.

OUTCOME, result, event. (E.) An old word; M. E. utcome, a coming out, deliverance; Ancrén Riwe, p. 80. See Come.

OUTCRY, a crying out. clamour. (Hybrid; E. and F., -L.) In Shak. Romeo, v. 3. 193; and in Palsgrave. See Cry.

OUTDO, to surpass. (E.) In Shak. Cor. ii. 1. 150. See Do.

OUTDOOR, in the open air. (E.) A modern contraction for out of door. See Door.

OUTER, OUTERMOST; see Utter, Uttermost.

OUTFIT, equipment. (Hybrid; E. and Scand.) A late word; added by Todd to Johnson. See Fit. Der. outfit-er, outfitt-ing.

OUTGO, to surpass. (E.) In Shak. Timon, i. 1. 285; and Palsgrave. See Go. Der. outgo-ing, sb., expenditure. And see outwent.

OUTGROW, to grow beyond. (E.) In Shak. Rich. III, iii. 1. 104. See Grow.

OUTHOUSE, a small house built away from the house. (E.) In Beaum. and Fletcher, The Coxcomb, iii. 1. 53. See House.

OUTLANDISH, foreign. (E.) Very old. A. S. útlendisc, Levit. xxiv. 22. = A. S. út, out; and land, land. See Land.

OUTLAST, to last beyond. (E.) In Beaum. and Fletcher, Nice Valour, iv. 1 (Shamont). See Last.

OUTLAW, one not under the protection of the law. (Scand.) M. E. outlawe, Chaucer, C. T. 17173, 17180, 17183. = A. S. útlaga, útlak, an outlaw; see numerous references in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, index to vol. i. Borrowed from Icel. útlagi, an outlaw. See Out and Law. ¶ The word law is rather Scand. than E. Der. outlaw, verb, K. Lear, iii. 4. 172, from A. S. útlagian, A. S. Chron. an. 1052; outlaw-ry (with F. suffix -rie = -erie), Jul. Cæs. iv. 3. 173.

OUTLAY, expenditure. (E.) Not in Todd's Johnson; but a good word. See Lay.

OUTLET, a place or means by which a thing is let out. (E.) An old word. M. E. ullete, Owl and Nightingale, l. 1754; lit. 'a letting out.' = A. S. útlétan, verb, to let out, let down; Luke, v. 5. See Let (1).

OUTLINE, a sketch. (Hybrid; E. and F., -L.) Used by Dryden; Todd's Johnson (no reference). Lit. a line lying on the outer edge, a sketch of the lines enclosing a figure. See Line. [†]

OUTLIVE, to live beyond. (E.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. iv. 1. 269. See Live.

OUTLOOK, a prospect. (E.) 'Which owe's to man's short out-look all its charms; Young's Night Thoughts, Night 8 (latter part). See Look. Der. out-look, verb, to look bigger than, K. John, v. 2. 115.

OUTLYING, remote. (E.) Used by Sir W. Temple and Walpole; see Richardson. See Lie (1).

OUTPOST, a troop in advance of an army. (Hybrid; E. and F., -L.) Late; see quotation in Richardson. See Post.

OUTPOUR, to pour out. (Hybrid; E. and C.?) In Milton, P. L. iii. 311; Samson, 544. See Pour. Der. outpour-ing.

OUTRAGE, excessive violence. (F., -L.) M. E. outrage, to be divided as outr-age, there being no connection with out or rage; Chaucer, C. T. 2014; Rob. of Glouc. p. 46, l. 6. = O. F. outrage, earlier oltrage (Burguy); also oultrage, 'outrage, excess,' Cot. Cf. Ital. oltraggio, outrage. β. Formed with suffix -age (= Lat. -aticum) from O. F. olire, outre, beyond; spelt oultre in Cotgrave; cf. Ital. oltra, beyond. = Lat. ultra, beyond. See Uterior. Der.

outrage, verb, Spenser, F. Q. i. 6. 5; outrag-e-ous, M. E. outrageous, Chaucer, C. T. 3997, from O. F. oltrageux, outrageux, spelt oultrageux in Cotgrave; outrageous-ly, ness.

OUTREACH, to reach beyond. (E.) In Beaum. and Fletcher, Love's Pilgrimage, v. 4 (Philippo). See Reach.

OUTRIDE, to ride faster than. (E.) In 2 Hen. IV, i. 1. 36. See Ride. Der. outrid-er, one who rides forth, Chaucer, C. T. 166.

OUTRIGGER, a naval term. (E. and Scand.) A projecting spar for extending sails, a projecting rowlock for an oar, a boat with projecting rowlocks. See Rig.

OUTRIGHT, thoroughly, wholly. (E.) Properly an adverb. 'The frere made the foole madde outright;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 483 a. See Right.

OUTROAD, an excursion. (E.) Lit. 'a riding out.' In 1 Macc. xv. 41 (A. V.) For the sense of road = a riding, see Inroad.

OUTRUN, to surpass in running. (E.) M. E. out-rennen, Chaucer, C. T. 2451. See Run.

OUTSET, a setting out, beginning. (E.) Used by Burke (R.) See Set.

OUTSHINE, to surpass in splendour. (E.) In Spenser, F. Q. v. 9. 21. See Shine.

OUTSIDE, the exterior surface. (E.) In King John, v. 2. 109. See Side.

OUTSKIRT, the outer border. (E. and Scand.) 'All that out-shirke of Meathe;' Spenser, View of the State of Ireland; Globe ed. p. 668, col. 1, l. 27. See Skirt.

OUTSTRETCH, to stretch out. (E.) M. E. outstrecchen, pp. outsstraichte, Rom. of the Rose, 1515. See Stretch.

OUTSTRIP, to outrun. (E.) In Hen. V, iv. 1. 177. See Strip.

OUTVIE, to exceed, surpass. (E. and F., -L.) In Tam. of the Shrew, ii. 387. See Vie.

OUTVOTE, to defeat by excess of votes. (E. and F., -L.) 'Sense and appetite outvote reason;' South's Sermons, vol. iii. ser. 6 (R.) See Vote.

OUTWARD, towards the outside, exterior. (E.) M. E. outward, earlier utward, adv., Ancræn Riwle, p. 102, l. 3. - A. S. úteaward, úteverð, Exod. xxix. 20. - A. S. úte, adv., out; and -ward, suffix indicating direction. See Out and Toward. Der. outward, adj., Temp. i. 2. 104; outward, sb., Cymb. i. 1. 23; outward-ly, Mach. i. 3. 54; outward-s, where the -s answers to the M. E. adv. suffix -es, Hamlet, ii. 2. 392; outward-bound, as to which see Bound (3).

OUTWEIGH, to exceed in weight. (E.) In Shak. Cor. i. 6. 71. See Weigh.

OUTWENT, went faster than. (E.) In Mark, vi. 33 (A. V.) From Out, and went, pt. t. of Wend.

OUTWIT, to surpass in wit. (E.) 'To outwit and deceive themselves;' South's Sermons, vol. ii. ser. 7 (R.) See Wit.

OUTWORKS, external or advanced fortifications. (E.) 'And stormed the outworks of his quarters;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 1, l. 1136. See Work.

OVAL, of the shape of an egg. (F., -L.) Spelt ovall in Minshew, ed. 1627. - O. F. oval, 'ovall, shaped like an egg;' Cot. Formed with suffix -al (= Lat. -alis) from Lat. ouum, an egg; there was prob. a late Latin ovalis, adj., but it is not recorded. β. Ovum is cognate with Gk. ὄν, an egg; and both answer to a common base AWIA, from AWI, a bird, appearing in Lat. avis; see Aviary. The common Teutonic type is AGGWIA; 'the introduction of gg before w, in other cases chiefly confined to single dialects, appears in this word to be universally Teutonic;' Fick, iii. 13. From the Teut. type AGGWIA we have E. egg; see Egg. Der. (from Lat. ovum) ov-ar-y, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 28, § 5, from Low Lat. ouaria, the part of the body where eggs are formed in birds (Ducange); ov-ate, i. e. egg-shaped, a coined word, with suffix answering to Lat. -atus, the pp. suffix of the 1st conjugation; and see ovi-form.

OVATION, a lesser Roman triumph. (F., -L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. - F. ovation, 'a small triumph granted to a commander;' Cot. - Lat. ovationem, acc. of ovatio, lit. shouting, exultation. - Lat. ovatus, pp. of ovare, to shout. + Gk. αἶνεν, to shout, call aloud. β. The verbs are of imitative origin, to denote the sound made by violent expulsion of breath. Cf. Skt. vá, to blow; and E. wind.

OVEN, a furnace, cavity for baking bread, &c. (E.) M. E. oven (with u for v), Wyclif, Luke, xii. 28. - A. S. ofen, ofn. Grein, ii. 310. + Du. oven. + Icel. ofn, later omn; of which an earlier form ogn is found. + Swed. ugn. + G. ofen. + Goth. auhns. β. It would appear that the common Teut. base is UHNA, for which some dialects substituted UFNA, putting the labial for the guttural sound, just as in the mod. pronunciation of E. laugh, cough; see Fick, iii. 32. Cf. Gk. ἰνός, an oven. Root unknown.

OVER, above, across, along the surface of. (E.) M. E. ouer (with u for v), Chaucer, C. T. 3920. - A. S. ofer (Grein). + Du. over. + Icel. yfir; also ofr, adv., exceedingly. + Dan. over. + Swed. öfver. + G. über, O. H. G. ubar. + Goth. ufar. + Gk. ἐνέπ. + Lat. super. + Skt. upari, above. β. The prefixed s in Lat. super has not yet been satisfactorily explained; see remarks in Curtius, i. 360; yet it clearly belongs to the set. The common Teut. type is UFAR, answering to Aryan UPARI, evidently the locative case of the Aryan adj. UPARA, upper, appearing in Skt. upara (Vedic, given under upari in Benfey), Lat. superus, A. S. ufara (Grein, ii. 614).

γ. It is obvious that UPARA is a comparative form; the superlative takes a double shape, (1) with suffix -MA, as in Lat. summus (from s-upama), highest, A. S. ufema, highest (only found with an additional suffix -est in ufemyst, written for ufemest, in Gen. xl. 17); and (2) with suffix -TA, as in Gk. ὑψίστος, highest, and in E. oft; see Sum and Offt. β. The positive form is UP; this appears in Skt. upa, near, on, under, Gk. ὑπό, under, Lat. sub, under, Goth. uf, under, M. H. G. obe, ob, O. H. G. oba, opa, upon, over. A closely related adverbial form occurs in Goth. ufan, above, G. oben, and E. ab-ove. The orig. sense was prob. 'near,' with esp. reference to things lying above one another. The Goth. form uf appears to be further related to E. up, and G. auf, upon; so that there are two parallel Teutonic types, viz. UF (Goth. uf, G. oben, E. ab-ove) and UP (E. up, G. auf); with the parallel comparative forms seen in over and upper.

α. The senses of 'under' and 'over' are curiously mixed, as in Lat. sub, under, and super, above; perhaps we may explain this from the sense of nearness; if we draw two parallel horizontal lines, near together, we say that the under one is close up to the upper one; and a ball thrown up to the ceiling is always under it. β. We may further note M. E. over, adj., with the sense of 'upper,' Chaucer, C. T. 133; and M. E. overest, with the sense of 'uppermost,' id. 292. And see Up, Sub, Hypo, Super, Hyper, Above, Of, Sum, Summit, Supreme, Sovereign. Der. verbs, as over-act, over-awe, &c.; adverbs, as over-board, &c.; sbs., as over-coat, &c.; adjectives, as over-due, &c.; see below.

OVERACT, to act more than is necessary. (E. and L.) Used by Stillingfleet and Tillotson; Todd's Johnson (no references). See Act.

OVERALLS, loose trousers worn above others. (E.) Modern; from Over and All.

OVERARCH, to arch over. (E. and F., -L.) In Milton, P. L. i. 304. See Arch.

OVERAWE, to keep in complete subjection. (E. and Scand.) In Shak. 1 Hen. VI, i. 1. 36. See Awe.

OVERBALANCE, to exceed in weight. (E. and F., -L.) 'For deeds always overbalance words;' South's Sermons, vol. vii. ser. 13 (R.) See Balance. Cf. out-balance. Der. overbalance, sb.

OVERBEAR, to overrule. (E.) Much Ado, ii. 3. 157; pp. overborne, 1 Hen. VI, iii. 1. 53. See Bear. Der. overbearing, adj.

OVERBOARD, out of the ship. (E.) Rich. III, i. 4. 19. See Board.

OVERBURDEN, to burden overmuch. (E.) Spelt ouerburdein, Sir T. More, Works, p. 824 b. See Burden.

OVERCAST, to throw over, to overcloud. (E. and Scand.) The orig. sense is 'to throw over,' M. E. overkasten, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 70. l. 14. The sense 'overcloud' is old; Chaucer, C. T. 1538. See Cast.

OVERCHARGE, to overburden, charge too much. (E. and F., -L., -C.) The old sense is 'to overburden;' Gascoigne, Steel Glass, 1062; and Palsgrave. See Charge. Der. overcharge, sb.

OVERCLOUD, to obscure with clouds. (E.) In Dryden, tr. of Virgil, Æn. xi. 1193. See Cloud.

OVERCOAT, a coat worn above the rest of the dress. (E. and F., -G.) Modern; see Coat.

OVERCOME, to subdue. (E.) M. E. ouercomen, Wyclif, John, xvi. 33. - A. S. ofercuman, Grein, ii. 314. - A. S. ofer, over; and cuman, to come. Cf. Icel. yfirkominn, pp. overcome. See Come.

OVERDO, to do too much, to fatigue, to cook too much. (E.) M. E. overdon; 'Thing that is overdon' = a thing that is overdone; Chaucer, C. T. 16113. - M. E. ouer, over; and don, to do. See Do.

OVERDOSE, to dose too much. (E. and F., -Gk.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. See Dose.

OVERDRAW, to exaggerate in depicting. (E.) Perhaps modern; not in Johnson. See Draw.

OVERDRESS, to dress too much. (E. and F., -L.) In Pope, Moral Essays, v. 52. See Dress.

OVERDRIVE, to drive too fast. (E.) In Gen. xxxiii. 13 (A. V.); and in the Bible of 1551. - A. S. oferdrifan, Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, b. i. c. 7; ed. Bosworth, p. 30, l. 27. See Drive.

OVERFLOW, to flood, flow over. (E.) We find the pp. overflowen, inundated, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 5. 17. M. E. ouerflowen, Wyclif, Luke, vi. 38. - A. S. oferflōwan, Luke, vi. 38. - A. S. ofer, over; and flōwan, to flow; pt. t. flēdū, pp. flōwen; so that the form overflowen for the pp. is correct. See Flow. Der. overflow, sb.; overflow-ing.

OVERGROW, to grow over. (E.) Pp. ouergrown, Sir T. More, Works, p. 74 d. See Grow.

OVERHANG, to project over, impend. (E.) Contracted to o'erhang, Hen. V, iii. 1. 13. See Hang.

OVERHAUL, to draw over, to scrutinise. (Hyb.) Spenser has overhaile, to hale or draw over; Shep. Kal. Jan. 75. See Hale, Haul.

OVERHEAR, to hear without being spoken to. (E.) In Shak. Meas. iii. 1. 161. See Hear.

OVERJOYED, transported with gladness. (E. and F., -L.) In Shak. Much Ado, ii. 1. 230. See Joy. Der. overjoy, sb., 2 Hen. VI, i. 1. 31.

OVERLADE, to lade with too heavy a burden. (E.) 'For men may overlade a ship or barge;' Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, Cleop. 42. The pp. overladen is in Ancræn Riwle, p. 368, l. 21. See Lade.

OVERLAND, passing over the land. (E.) Apparently modern; not in Todd's Johnson. See Land.

OVERLAP, to lap over. (E.) Apparently modern; not in Todd's Johnson. See Lap.

OVERLAY, to spread over, to oppress. (E.) Often confused with overlie; in particular, the pp. overlaid is often confused with overlain, the pp. of overlie. Richardson confounds the two. Wyclif has 'overleiyng of folkis' for Lat. pressura gentium; Luke, xxi. 25. See Lay.

OVERLEAP, to leap over. (E.) M. E. ouerlepen, pt. t. ouerleep; P. Plowman, B. prol. 150, where the true sense is 'outran,' in conformity with the fact that M. E. lepen (like G. laufen) commonly means 'to run.' — A. S. oferhleoþan; the pt. t. oferhleoþ occurs in Ælfred's tr. of Bede, b. v. c. 6. — A. S. ofer, over; and hleoþan, to run, to leap. See Leap.

OVERLIE, to lie upon. (E.) Often confused with overlay; the pp. overlain, in the sense of 'oppressed,' occurs in Gower, C. A. iii. 224, l. 4. The verb ouerliggen occurs in O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 53, l. 16. See Lie (1).

OVERLIVE, to outlive, survive. (E.) M. E. ouerliuen, Chaucer, C. T. 6842. — A. S. oferlibban, in Lye's Dict. (no reference). See Live.

OVERLOAD, to load overmuch. (E.) Gascoigne has ouerloading, Steel Glass, l. 1009. See Load. Doublet, overlade, q. v.

OVERLOOK, to inspect, also to neglect, slight. (E.) M. E. ouerloken, in the sense 'to look over,' or 'revise;' Chaucer, Book of the Duchess, l. 232. See Look.

OVERMATCH, to surpass, conquer. (E.) M. E. ouermachen, Chaucer, C. T. 6096. See Match.

OVERMUCH, too much. (E.) Spelt ouermyche in Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 7, l. 1191. See Much.

OVERPASS, to pass over. (E. and F., — L.) M. E. ouerpassen, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. v. pr. 6, l. 5057. See Pass.

OVERPAY, to pay in addition. (E. and F., — L.) In All's Well, iii. 7. 16. See Pay.

OVERPLUS, that which is more than enough. (E. and L.) In Antony, iii. 7. 51, iv. 6. 22. From E. over; and Lat. plus, more; see Nonplus. Doublet, surplus.

OVERPOWER, to subdue. (E. and F., — L.) Contracted to o'erpower, Rich. II, v. 1. 31. See Power. Der. overpower, sb., i. e. excess of power, Bacon, Ess. 58.

OVERRATE, to rate too highly. (E. and L.) Contr. to o'errate, Cymb. i. 4. 41. See Rate.

OVERREACH, to reach beyond, to cheat. (E.) M. E. ouer-rechen, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 374. See Reach.

OVERRIDE, to ride over. (E.) M. E. ouerriden, pp. ouerridden, Chaucer, C. T. 2024. — A. S. oferriðan, to ride across (a ford); Ælfred, tr. of Bede, iii. 14. See Ride.

OVERRULE, to influence by greater authority. (E. and L.) In K. Lear, i. 3. 16. See Rule.

OVERRUN, to spread or grow over, to outrun. (E.) M. E. ouerrennen, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 124, l. 10. See Run.

OVERSEE, to superintend. (E.) M. E. ouersen, P. Plowman, B. vi. 115. — A. S. oferseón, used in the sense to look down on, to despise; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. 36, sect. 2. See See. Der. ouerseer, Tyndall, Works, p. 252, l. 6; over-sight, (1) superintendence, Bible, 1551, 1 Chron. ix. 31, (2) omission, 2 Hen. IV, ii. 3. 47.

OVERSET, to upset, overturn. (E.) M. E. ouersetten, to oppress; O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 51; and see Prompt. Parv. p. 273. — A. S. ofersettan, to spread over, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 7, c. xviii. sect. 1. See Set.

OVERSHADOW, to throw a shadow over. (E.) M. E. ouerschadewen, Luke, ix. 34. — A. S. oferscedan, Luke, ix. 34. See Shadow.

OVERSHOOT, to shoot beyond. (E.) The pp. ouershotte (better ouershot) is in Sir T. More, Works, p. 1134 h. Palsgrave has I ouershotte my-selfe. See Shoot.

OVERSIGHT; see Oversee.

OVERSPREAD, to spread over. (E.) M. E. ouerspreden, pt. t. ouerspradde, Chaucer, C. T. 2873; Layamon, 14188. — A. S. oferspreðan, to overspread (Bosworth). — A. S. ofer, over; and spreðan; see Spread.

OVERSTEP, to step beyond, exceed. (E.) Contr. to o'erstep, Hamlet, iii. 2. 21. See Step.

OVERSTOCK, to stock too full. (E.) O'erstock'd is in Dryden, The Medal, 102. See Stock.

OVERSTRAIN, to strain too much. (E. and F., — L.) In Dryden, Art of Painting, § 54 (R). See Strain.

OVERT, open, apparent, public. (F., — L.) 'The way ther-to is so ouert;' Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, b. ii. l. 210. — O. F. ouert (later ouuert), pp. of ouvir (later ouvirir), to open. β. The exact formation of the word is uncertain; Diez cites Prov. obrir, ubrir, O. Ital. oprire (Florio), to open, which he distinguishes from Span. abrir, mod. Ital. aprire, derived directly from Lat. aperire, to open. γ. As to ouvir, he supposes this to be a shorter form of O. F. a-ouvir, a-ouvirir, to open, words of three syllables, occurring in the Livre des Rois. These forms arose from Prov. adubrir (Raynouard, Lexique Roman, ii. 104), in which the prefixed a- (= Lat. ad) does not alter the sense, but is added as in ablasmar, afranher; whilst dubrir is from the Lat. de-aperire, to open wide, lit. 'uncover,' used by Celsus (White). He supports this by instancing mod. Prov. dubrir, Piedmontese durvi, Walloon droui, Lorraine deurvi, all corresponding to the same Lat. deaperire.

δ. On the other hand, Littre supposes an early confusion between Lat. aperire, to open, and operire, to cover; and looks upon ouvir as a corruption of auvir (= aperire); whence dubrir might be explained as being formed with de used intensively, so that de-aperire would be to 'open completely' rather than to 'uncover.' See the whole discussion in Littre.

ε. Even if we can settle the question as to whether the word depends on Lat. aperire or operire, difficulties remain in these words also. Perhaps aperire = ab-perire, to uncover, and operire = ob-perire, to cover up; and -perire may be related to parare, to get ready, prepare; see Parade. Der. ouert-ly, ouert-ure, meaning 'an open, unprotected place.' Spenser, Shep. Kal. July, 28, from O. F. ouerture, later ouerture, 'an ouerture, or opening, an entrance, hole, beginning made, a motion made [i. e. proposal], also an opening, manifestation, discovery, uncovering,' Cot.

OVERTAKE, to come up with, in travelling. (E. and Scand.) M. E. ouertaken, Havelok, 1816; Ancren Riwele, p. 244, note g. — A. S. ofer, over; and Icel. taka, to take. Cf. Icel. yfirtak, an overtaking, surpassing, transgression; which prob. suggested the E. word. See Take.

OVERTASK, to task too much. (E. and F., — L.) In Milton, Comus, 309. See Task. ¶ So also over-tax.

OVERTHROW, to throw over, upset, demolish. (E.) M. E. ouerthrowen, King Alisaunder, 1113. See Throw. Der. ouerthrow, sb., Much Ado, i. 3. 69.

OVERTOP, to rise above the top of. (E.) Temp. i. 2. 81. See Top.

OVERTURE, a proposal, beginning. (F., — L.) All's Well, iv. 3. 46. Also 'a disclosure,' K. Lear, iii. 7. 89. See Over.

OVERTURN, to overthrow, upset. (E. and F., — L.) M. E. ouerturnen, Ancren Riwele, p. 356, l. 16. See Turn.

OVERVALUE, to value too much. (E. and F., — L.) Contracted to o'ervalue, Cymb. i. 4. 120. See Value.

OVERWEENING, thinking too highly, conceited. (E.) The pres. part. ouerweeninde occurs in the Ayenbite of Inwyrt, ed. Morris, p. 169, l. 26; where -inde is the Kentish form for -inge (-ing). Shak. even uses the verb ouerween, 2 Hen. IV, iv. i. 149. — A. S. oferwēnan, to presume, in a gloss (Bosworth). See Ween.

OVERWEIGH, to outweigh. (E.) M. E. ouerwezen; 'luue ouerweid hit' = love overweighs it, Ancren Riwele, p. 386, l. 25. See Weigh. Der. ouerweight.

OVERWHELM, to turn over, bear down, demolish. (E.) M. E. ouerwhelmen, Rom. of the Rose, 3775; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 190, l. 10. See Whelm.

OVERWISE, wise overmuch. (E.) In Beaum. and Fletcher, Philaster, last line of Act iv. See Wise. Der. ouerwise-ly, -ness.

OVERWORK, excess of work. (E.) The verb to ouerwork is in Palsgrave. The sb. is, etymologically, the more orig. word. See Work. Der. ouerwork, verb; whence the pp. ouerwrought.

OVERWORN, worn too much. (E.) In Twelfth Nt. iii. 1. 66. From over; and worn, pp. of wear. See Wear.

OVERWROUGHT, wrought to excess. (E.) In Dryden, Art of Poetry, c. i. l. 50. See Overwork.

OVIFORM, egg-shaped. (L.) Used by T. Burnet, Theory of the Earth, 1759 (R.) — Lat. oui-, from ouo, crude form of ouum, an egg; and form-a, form. See Oval and Form. ¶ So also ouiduct, Phillips, ed. 1706, from Lat. ductus, a conducting, a duct; see Duct. Also oui-parous, Phillips, ed. 1706, from Lat. ouiparus, egg-producing, from parere, to produce; see Parent. Also ovoid, egg-shaped, a clumsy hybrid compound, from Lat. ouo-, crude form of ouum, an egg, and Gk. eidōs, form.

OWE, to possess; hence, to possess another's property, to be in debt, be obliged. (E.) M. E. azen, awen, ozen, owen, orig. 'to possess;' hence, to be obliged to do, to be in debt. 'The dette thet tu owest me' = the debt that thou owest me, Ancren Riwele, p. 126, l. 13. 'How myche owist thou?' Wyclif, Luke, xvi. 5. For this important verb, see Mätzner's O. Eng. Dict. p. 49, s. v. āz'n; or Stratmann, p. 23. The sense 'to possess' is very common in Shakespeare; see Schmidt. — A. S. āgan, to have, possess, Grein, i. 19. The change from ā to o is perfectly regular, as in bān, bone, stān, stone; the g passes into w, as usual. + Icel. eiga, to possess, have, be bound, own. + Dan. æie, to own, possess. + Swed. äga, to own, possess, have a right to, be able to. + O. H. G. eigan, to possess. + Goth. aigan, to possess. β. Further related to Skt. ig, to possess, to be able; whence lga, a proprietor, owner; the form of the root being IK; Fick, i. 28. ¶ It may be noted that the Goth. aigan has the old past tense aik, used as a present tense; so also A. S. āh. Hence the base of the Teutonic words is AIH, strengthened from IH, answering to IK. There is, therefore, no connection with the Gk. ἐχέω, which has, moreover, lost an initial s, and answers to Skt. sah; see Scheme.

OUGHT. The pres. tense of A. S. āgan is dh, really an old past tense; the past tense is ahte (= Goth. ahita), really a secondary past tense or pluperfect; this became M. E. ahte, agte, oughte, oughte, properly dissyllabic, as in 'oughte be,' Chaucer, C. T. 16808, where Tyrwhitt has the inferior reading 'ought to be.' The pp. of A. S. āgan was āgen, for which see OWN (1). Der. ow-ing, esp. in phr. owing to, i. e. due to, because of. Also oun (1), oun (2).

OWL, a nocturnal bird. (E.) M. E. oule, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, 343; pl. oules, id. 599. — A. S. ūle, Levit. xi. 16. + Du. uil. + Icel. ugla. + Dan. ugle. + Swed. ugla. + G. eule, O. H. G. hiuwēla, ūwēla. β. Allied to Lat. ulula, an owl, Skt. ulūka, an owl. All from UL, to hoot, howl, screech, a root of imitative origin; cf. Gk. ὕλαα, I howl, ὀλοῦμαι, to howl, ὀλεέει, interjection; Lat. ululare, to howl, ulucus, a screech-owl.

γ. With a prefixed h, added for emphasis, we get G. heulen, whence O. F. huller, E. howl; see HOWL. Something similar is G. uhu, an owl, M. H. G. hiuwe, O. H. G. hiūwo; cf. E. hoot. Der. owl-et, dimin. form, also spelt howlet, Macb. iv. i. 17; owl-ish; and see hurlly-burly.

OWN (1), possessed by any one, proper, peculiar, belonging to oneself. (E.) M. E. āgen, awen (North. E. awin), owen; later, contracted to own by omission of e. 'Right at min owēn cost, and be your gyde,' Chaucer, C. T. 806. 'Thar awyn fre' = their own free property; Barbour, Bruce, iii. 752. — A. S. āgen, own, Grein, i. 20; orig. the pp. of the anomalous strong verb āgan, to owe, i. e. to possess; see OWE. + Icel. eigin, one's own; orig. the old pp. of eiga, to possess. + Dan. and Swed. egen, one's own. + Goth. agin, property, possessions; a neut. sb. formed from the adj. which was orig. the old pp. of aigan, to possess. Thus the orig. sense is 'possessed' or 'held.' Der. own, verb, to possess; see own (2).

OWN (2), to possess. (E.) M. E. aynen, ahnien, ohnien, ahnen, ohnen; see Layamon, 11864, 25359; Ormulun, 5649. — A. S. āgnian, to appropriate, claim as one's own; Grein, i. 22. Formed with causal suffix -ian from āgn, contracted form of āgen, one's own; see OWN (1). + Icel. eigna, to claim as one's own; from eigin, own. + Goth. ga-aignon, to make a gain of, lit. make one's own, 2 Cor. ii. 11; from agin, one's own property. ¶ It is thus evident that the verb is a derivative from the adjective. Der. own-er, M. E. osener, Aenbite of Inwynt, ed. Morris, p. 37, last line but one; owner-ship.

OWN (3), to grant, admit. (E.) This word is, in its origin, totally distinct from the preceding, though the words have been confused almost inextricably. 'You will not own it,' i. e. admit it, Winter's Tale, iii. 2. 60. The verb should rather be to own, but the influence of the commoner own has swept away all distinction. M. E. unnen, to grant, admit, be pleased with. 'Jif þu hit wel unnest' = if you are well pleased with it; Ancrén Riwle, p. 282, l. 23. 'Ge nowen nout unnen þet eni vuel word kome of ou' = ye ought not to permit that any evil word should come from you; id. p. 380, l. 5. 'Godd haueð purh his grace se much luue unnen' = God hath, through his grace, granted so much love; Hali Meidenhad, ed. Cockayne, p. 13, l. 27. See note on unnen in Sainte Marharete, ed. Cockayne, p. 111.

β. The pres. tense singular, 1st and 3rd person, had the form an, on; as 'ich on wel that ye witen' = I fully own that ye know; St. Catharine, 1761; '3if god hit an' = if God will grant it, Layamon, 14851; 'he on' = he grants, allows, O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 116, ll. 239, 241. See further as to this singular word in Stratmann, s. v. an, unnen. — A. S. unnan, to grant; old past tense used as present, ic an, Grein, ii. 625. + Icel. unna, pres. tense ek ann, to grant, allow, bestow (cognate with E. own, as noted in Icel. Dict.) + O. Sax. gi-unnan, to grant. + G. gönnen, to grant, M. H. G. gunnen, O. H. G. gi-unnan. See Fick, i. 17. ¶ It may be remarked that the true old sense was 'to grant as a favour,' hence the sense 'to grant as an admission,' to allow, admit. In the constant presence of the common verb to own, both the history and the true sense of the word have suffered. [†]

OX, a ruminant quadruped. (E.) M. E. ox, pl. oxen, Chaucer, C. T. 889; oxis, Wyclif, Luke, xvii. 7. — A. S. oxa, pl. oxan, Grein, ii. 360. + Du. os. + Icel. uxi, also oxi; pl. yan, öxn. + Dan. oxe, pl. oxer. + Swed. one. + G. ochse, ochs, pl. ochsen; O. H. G. okso. + Goth. auhsa, auhsus. + W. yeh, pl. yehen. + Skt. ukshan, an ox, bull; also, 'a Vedic epithet of the Maruts who, by bringing rain, i. e. by sprinkling, impregnate the earth like bulls,' Benfey. The Maruts are storms; see Max Müller, Lectures, ii. 416. β. The etymology of Skt. ukshan is known, viz. from uksh, to sprinkle. Further, uksh stands for waksh, and is an extension of the root WAG, to wet, appearing in

Gk. ὕψος, moist, and in Lat. ūmidus (= ug-midus), moist, as well as in Icel. vökr, moist, prov. E. wokey, moist (Halliwell); see Curtius, i. 229; Fick, i. 764; Benfey, p. 108. γ. Hence ox is ultimately co-radicate with humid; see Humid. Der. ox-eye, a plant, ox-eyed, ox-fly, ox-goad; also ox-lip, q. v.

OXALIS, wood-sorrel. (L., — Gk.) In Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xx. c. 21. — Lat. oxalis (Pliny). — Gk. ὄξαλις, (1) a sour wine, (2) sorrel. So named from its sourness. — Gk. ὄξυς, sharp, keen, cutting, acid. — ✓ AKS, an extended form of ✓ AK, to pierce; see AXE, Acid. Der. oxali-c; cf. ox-ide, oxy-gen, oxy-mel, oxy-tone.

OXIDE, a compound of oxygen with a non-acid base. (Gk.) A coined word; from ox-, short for oxy-, part of the word oxy-gen; and -ide, which appears to be due to Gk. -ειδής, like, and more commonly appears as -id, as in ellipso-id, sphero-id, ovo-id, and the like. See Oxygen. Der. oxid-ise, oxid-is-er, oxid-is-able, oxid-a-tion; all coined words.

OXLIP, the greater cowslip. (E.) In Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 250; Wint. Ta. iv. 4. 125. — A. S. oxanslyppe; see Cockayne's Leechdoms, iii. 340. — A. S. oxan, gen. case of oxa, an ox; and slyppe, a slop, i. e. a piece of dung. [This word fully confirms the etymology of cowslip already given; see Cowslip.] ¶ It should therefore be spelt ox-slip. Cf. M. E. cowslippe, cowslowepe, Wright's Voc. i. 162, 226.

OXYGEN, a gas often found in acid compounds. (Gk.) The sense is 'generator of acids,' and it is a coined word. The discovery of oxygen dates from 1744 (Haydn). — Gk. ὄξύς (written oxy- in Roman characters), crude form of ὄξυς, sharp, keen, acid; and -γεν, to produce, base of γί-γνομαι (= γί-γεν-ομαι), I am produced or born. See Oxalis and Generate. Der. oxygen-ate, oxygen-ise, oxygen-ous; and see ox-ide.

OXYMEL, a mixture of honey and vinegar. (L., — Gk.) In very early use; it occurs as A. S. oxumelle; see Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 368. — Lat. oxymeli (Pliny). — Gk. ὄξύμελι. — Gk. ὄξύς, crude form of ὄξυς, sharp, acid; and μέλι, honey. See Oxalis and Mellifluous.

OXYTONE, having an accute accent on the last syllable. (Gk.) A grammatical term. — Gk. ὀξύτονος, shrill-toned; also, as a grammatical term. — Gk. ὄξύς, crude form of ὄξυς, sharp; and τόνος, a tone. See Oxalis and Tone.

OYER, a term in law. (F., — L.) An O. F. law term. 'Oyer and terminer [lit. to hear and determine], is a commission specially granted to certain persons, for the hearing and determining one or more causes,' &c.; Blount's Law Dict., ed. 1691. — Norm. F. oyer, mod. F. ouir, to hear. — Lat. audire, to hear. See Audience. Der. oyez. [†]

OYEZ, OYES, hear ye! (F., — L.) The first word of every proclamation by a public crier; now corrupted into the unmeaning O! yes! 'O yes,' a corruption from the F. oyez, i. e. hear ye, is well known to be used by the cryers in our courts, &c.; Blount, Law Dict., ed. 1691. — Norman F. oyez, 2 p. pl. imp. of oyer, to hear; see Oyer.

OYSTER, a well-known bivalve shell-fish. (F., — L., — Gk.) The A. S. form ostre was borrowed from Latin; cf. 'ostrea, ostre' in Wright's Vocab. i. 65. The diphthong shews the mod. E. form to be from the French. M. E. oistre, Chaucer, C. T. 182. — O. F. oistre, in the 13th cent. (Littre); whence mod. F. huitre. — Lat. ostrea, more rarely ostreum. — Gk. ὀστρεον, an oyster; so called from its shell. — Gk. ὀστρεόν, a bone, shell; akin to Lat. os (gen. ossis), a bone. See Osseous, Ostracise. [†]

OZONE, a substance perceived by its smell in air after electric discharges. (Gk.) 'Ozone,' a name given in 1840 by M. Schönbein of Basel to the odour in the atmosphere developed during the electric discharge; Haydn. — Gk. ὄζων, smelling; pres. pt. of ὄζειν, to smell. Gk. ὄζειν stands for ὀδ-γειν, from the base ὀδ-, to smell, appearing also in Lat. od-or, smell; see Odour.

P.

PABULUM, food. (L.) 'Pabulum or food;' Bp. Berkeley, Siris (1747), § 197 (Todd). — Lat. pabulum, food. Formed with suffix -bul- from pā-, base of pascere, to feed (pt. t. pā-ū); see Pastor. Der. pabul-ous, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 21. § 16; pabul-ar.

PACE, a step, gait. (F., — L.) M. E. pas, paas, Rob. of Glouc. p. 149, l. 12; Chaucer, C. T. 825, 1032. — F. pas. — Lat. passum, acc. of passus, a step, pace, lit. a stretch, i. e. the distance between the feet in walking. — Lat. passus, pp. of pandere, to stretch. β. Pandere stands for pantere, causal form from patēre, to be open, spread out; see Patent. Der. pace, verb, the same word as Pass, q. v.; pac-er, Spectator, no. 104.

PACHA, another spelling of Pasha, q. v.

PACHYDERMATOUS, thick-skinned. (Gk.) Modern and scientific. = Gk. παχύς, crude form of παχύς, thick; and δέρμα, stem of δέρμα, a skin; with suffix -ous (= Lat. -osus). β. The Gk. παχύς is lit. 'firm'; allied to πῆχυς, I fix, Lat. pangere, and to E. Pact, q. v.

γ. Gk. δέρμα is a hide, 'that which is flayed off'; from Gk. δέρεω, to flay, tear, cognate with E. Tear, verb, q. v. Der. pachyderm, an abbreviation for pachydermatous animal.

PACIFY, to appease, make peaceful. (F., = L.) Spelt pacifie, Sir T. More, Works, p. 871 b. = F. pacifier, 'to pacify'; Cot. = Lat. pacificare, pacificari, to make peace. = Lat. paci-, crude form of pax, peace; and -ficare, for facere, to make; see Peace and Fact. Der. pacifi-er, spelt pacysyer, Sir T. More, Works, p. 872 d; pacification, from F. pacification, 'a pacification' (Cot.), which from Lat. acc. pacificationem, due to pacificatus, pp. of pacificare; pacificat-or, Bacon, Life of Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 52, l. 10, from Lat. pacificator; pacific, formerly pacifick, Milton, P. L. xi. 860, from F. pacifique, 'pacificous' (Cot.), which from Lat. adj. pacificus, peace-making; pacific-al, pacific-al-ly.

PACK, a bundle, burden, set of cards or hounds, &c. (C.) M. E. pakke, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 201; pl. packes, Ancren Riwle, p. 166, last line. Cf. Icel. pakki, a pack, bundle; Dan. pakke; Swed. packa; Du. pak; G. pack. β. But it does not appear to be a true Teutonic word; few Teutonic words begin with p. It is rather a survival of an O. Celtic pak, still preserved in Gael. pac, a pack, a mob (cf. E. pack of rascals), pac, verb, to pack up; Irish pac, pacadh, a pack, pacagim, I pack up; Bret. pak, a pack; cf. W. baich, a burden. γ. And these words, in accordance with Grimm's law, may fairly be considered as allied to Lat. pangere, to fasten, Skt. pag, to bind, Skt. pāga, a tie, band. = √ PAK, to fasten; see Pact. Thus the orig. sense is 'that which is tied up.' Der. pack, verb, M. E. pakken, P. Plowman, B. xv. 184; pack-er, pack-horse, 2 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 177; pack-ing; pack-man; pack-needle or pack-ing-needle, M. E. pakneddele or paknedde, P. Plowman, B. v. 212; pack-saddle, Cor. ii. 1. 99; pack-thread, Romeo, v. i. 47. Also pack-age, q. v., pack-et, q. v. Quite distinct from bag. [†]

PACKAGE, a packet, small bundle. (C.; with F. suffix.) A late and clumsy word; added by Todd to Johnson; formed by adding F. suffix -age (= Lat. -aticum) to E. pack; see Pack. Doublet, pack.

PACKET, a small pack, package. (F., = Low G., = C.) In Hamlet, v. 2. 15. = O. F. paquet, paquet, 'a packet, bundle'; Cot. Formed with dimin. suffix -et from Low Lat. pacus, a bundle, used A. D. 1506; Ducange. = Low G. pakk, a pack (Bremen Wörterbuch); O. Du. pack, 'a pack' (Hexham); Icel. pakki. Of Celtic origin; see Pack. ¶ It does not seem to be an old word in G., so that the Low Lat. word is prob. from Low G. or Dutch. Der. packet-boat, a boat for carrying mail-bags, Evelyn's Diary, Oct. 10, 1641; now often shortened to packet. Doublet, package.

PACT, a contract. (L.) In Bacon, Life of Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 7, l. 19; and p. 27, l. 30. = Lat. pactum, an agreement. = Lat. pactus, pp. of pacisci, to stipulate, agree; inceptive form of O. Lat. pacere, to agree, come to an agreement about anything. = √ PAK, to bind; whence also Skt. pag, to bind, Gk. πῆχυς, I fasten; as well as E. fadge; see Fadge. Der. pact-ion, Fox's Martyrs, p. 272 (R.), from F. paction (Cot.) = Lat. pactionem, acc. of pactio, an agreement. Also com-pact, im-pact, im-pinge. From the same root we have fang, fee; also pack, peace, pacify, pachy-dermatous, perhaps pag-an (with paynim), perhaps page (1), page (2), pale (1), palette, pallet (2), pay, pro-pag-ate, peasant, pec-uniar, pecuniary.

PAD (1), a soft cushion, &c. (Scand. ? or C. ?) 'He was kept in the bands, hailing under him but only a pad of straw;' Fox, Martyrs, p. 854 (R.) Spelt padde, Gascoigne, Fruits of War, st. 177. A stuffed saddle was called a pad; hence: 'Padde, saddle,' in Levins, ed. 1570. It also occurs in the sense of 'bundle'; see Halliwell. It is merely another form of pod, the orig. sense being 'bag.' Pod is the better spelling, as the o represents an older u. See Pod. Der. pad, verb; pad-ding.

PAD (2), a thief on the high road. (Du.) We now speak of a foot-pad. The old word is a padder, Massinger, A New Way, ii. 1, l. 15 from end; Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 1, l. 5 from end. This means 'one who goes upon the pad or foot-path.' A pad is also a 'roadster,' a horse for riding on roads; Gay's Fables, no. 46; also (more correctly) called a pad-nag, i. e. 'road-horse' (R.) = Du. pad, a path; O. Du. padt (Hexham); cf. Low G. pad. Cognate with E. path; see Path. Many cant words are of Du. origin; see Beaumont and Fletcher, Beggar's Bush. Der. pad, v., to tramp along.

PADDLE (1), to finger; to dabble in water. (E.) 1. It means 'to finger, handle;' Hamlet, iii. 4. 185; Oth. ii. 1. 259. It stands for pattle, of which it is a weakened form, and is the frequentative of pat. Thus the sense is 'to pat often,' to keep handling; see Pat, verb. So also prov. G. pad-den, pad-deln, to walk with short steps, i. e. to patter about, go with pattering steps; see Patter. 2. The sense 'to dabble in water' is in Palsgrave, who has: 'I pad-dyl in the myre;' and is perhaps due to O. F. patouiller, 'to slubber, to paddle or dabble in with the feet, to stir up and down and trouble;' Cot. This appears to be a derivative from F. pate, the foot; and pate appears to be a word of onomatopoeic origin, connected with G. patschen, to tap, pat, splash, dabble, walk awkwardly, which is also allied to E. pat. 3. Or again, it is shewn (s. v. Pat) that pat may stand for plat, so that paddle may be for pladdle, a form which may be compared with Low G. pladdern, to paddle, in the Bremen Wörterbuch. Either way, the ultimate origin is much the same. Der. paddle, sb., in the sense of broad-bladed oar, but there is probably some confusion with the word below; paddl-er, Beaumont and Fletcher, Wit at Several Weapons, i. 1. 20; paddle-wheel. Doublet, patter.

PADDLE (2), a little spade, esp. one to clean a plough with. (E.) In Deut. xxiii. 13 (A. V.) It has lost an initial s, and stands for spaddle, the dimin. of spade. 'Others destroy moles with a spaddle,' Mortimer's Husbandry (R.); and see spud and spittle-staff in Halliwell. Cf. also Irish and Gael. spadal, a plough-staff, paddle; words prob. borrowed from the O. English. ¶ In the sense of 'broad-bladed oar,' see Paddle (1).

PADDOCK (1), a toad. (Scand.) In Hamlet, iii. 4. 190; Macb. i. 1. 9. M. E. paddock. King Alisaunder, 6126. Dimin. with suffix -ok or -ock (as in hill-ock, bull-ock), from M. E. padde, a toad, frog; in Wyclif, Exod. viii. 9 (later version), one MS. has the pl. paddis for paddockis, which is the common reading. = Icel. pad-da, a toad. + Swed. pad-da, a toad, frog. + Dan. pad-de. + Du. pad-de, pad. β. As in many E. words beginning with p, an initial s has probably been lost. The form pad-d-a denotes an agent; cf. A. S. hunt-a, a hunter. The prob. sense is 'jerker,' i. e. the animal which moves by jerks; from Aryan √ SPAD, to vibrate, jerk, &c.; cf. Gk. σφοδρός, vehement, active, σφοδρώνη, a sling, Skt. spand, to vibrate, throb. In accordance with this supposition, we actually find Skt. sparga-spanda, a frog. ¶ The supposed A. S. pada (in Bosworth) is due to a mistake; the true E. words are toad and frog. Der. paddock-stool, a toad-stool.

PADDOCK (2), a small enclosure. (E.) 'Delectable country-seats and villas environed with parks, paddocks, plantations,' &c.; Evelyn (Todd; no reference). Here park and paddock are conjoined; and it is tolerably certain that paddock is a corruption of parrock, another form of park. 'Parrocke, a lytell parke,' Palsgrave; cited in Way's note to Prompt. Parv. p. 384. He adds that 'a fenced enclosure of nine acres at Hawsted (Suffolk), in which deer were kept in pens for the course, was termed the Parrock;' Cullum's Hawsted, p. 210. See also parrock in Jamieson, and parrick in Halliwell. [The unusual change from r to d may have been due to some confusion with paddock, a toad, once a familiar word; cf. pod-dish for porridge.] = A. S. pearroc, pearroc, a small enclosure. 'On ðisum lytlum pearroce' = in this little enclosure; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xviii. § 2, b. ii. prosa 7. Formed, with dimin. suffix -oc (= mod. E. -ock, as in padd-ock (1), hill-ock, bull-ock), from sparran, to shut, enclose; so that an initial s has been lost. We find 'gesparrado dure' = thy door being shut, Matt. vi. 6 (Lindisfarne MS.). β. This loss of s is certified by the occurrence of M. E. parren (for sparren), to enclose, confine, bar in; Havelok, 2439; Ywain and Gawain, 3227, ed. Ritson; and see the curious quotation in Halliwell, s. v. parred, where the words parred and speride (sparred) are used convertibly. Cf. G. sperr-en, to shut. γ. The verb sparran is, literally, to fasten with a spar or bar, and is formed from the sb. spar; see Spar (1). Doublet, park, q. v.

PADLOCK, a loose hanging lock. (E. ?) A padlock is a loose hanging lock with a staple, suitable for hampers, baskets, &c., when the case to which it is affixed is not made of a solid substance. It occurs in Pope's Dunciad, iv. 162. Todd quotes from Milton's Colasterion (1645): 'Let not such an unmerciful and more than legal yoke be padlocked upon the neck of any Christian.' Of uncertain origin; but perhaps formed by adding lock to prov. E. pad, a pannier (Halliwell), given as a Norfolk word. This word is more commonly written ped, M. E. pedde. 'Pedde, idem quod panere;' Prompt. Parv. Of unknown origin; see further under Pedar. [†]

PÆAN, a hymn in honour of Apollo. (L., = Gk.) 'I have ever hung Elaborate pæans on thy golden shrine;' Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, A. v. sc. 2; near the end. = Lat. pæan, (1) a name of Apollo, (2) a religious hymn, esp. to Apollo. = Gk. Παιών, Παιών, (1) Pæan, Pæon, the physician of the gods, who cures Hades and Ares, Homer, Il. v. 401, 899; cf. Od. iv. 232; also Apollo; also his son Æsculapius; a deliverer, saviour; (2) a choral song, hymn, chant, song of triumph.

β. Perhaps 'praise' may be the old sense; cf. Skt. pan, to praise, honour. Der. pæon-y, q. v.

PÆDOBAPTISM; the same as Pedobaptism, q. v.

PAGAN, a countryman, hence, a heathen. (L.) In Shak. Rich. II, iv. 95. [The M. E. form is paien or payen, Chaucer, C. T. 4954, 4962, from O. F. païen (Burguy); which from Lat. paganus.] — Lat. paganus, (1) a villager, countryman, (2) a pagan, because the rustic people were supposed to be unconverted at a time when townsmen were converts. The same idea appears in E. heathen, q. v. — Lat. paganus, adj., rustic, belonging to a village. — Lat. pāgus, a district, canton. β. The etymology is supposed to be from Lat. pangere (pt. t. pāgi), to fasten, fix, set, as being marked out by fixed limits; see Pact. Der. pagan-ish, pagan-ism, pagan-ise; and see paynim, peasant.

PAGE (1), a boy attending a person of distinction. (F., — Low Lat., — L. ?) M. E. page, King Alisaunder, 835; Havelok, 1730. — F. page, 'a page'; Cot. Cf. Span. page, Port. pagem, Ital. paggio. — Low Lat. pagium, acc. of pagius, a servant (Ducange). This word appears to be a mere variant of pagensis, constantly used in the sense of peasant, rustic, serf; and if so, the etymology is from Lat. pagus, a village; see Pagan, Peasant. ¶ See Littré, who does not admit the etymology suggested by Diez, viz. that Ital. paggio might have been formed from Gk. παῖδιον, a little boy, dimin. of παῖς, a boy, child; for which see Pedagogue. Littré argues that pages were, in the olden time, not particularly young; and thinks that Prov. pages (= pagensis), a peasant, may be a related word, though Diez admits no such relation. The Port. pagem (not noticed by the etymologists) seems to point directly to the form pagensis. The word remains doubtful, and something can be urged on both sides.

¶ We also find M. E. pagent (with added t), Romance of Partenay, prol. 79. The three forms page, pagine, pagent, from Lat. pagina, answer to the three forms marge, margin, margent, from Lat. marginem. Der. pagin-at-ion, a modern coined word.

PAGEANT, an exhibition, spectacle, show. (Low Lat., — L.) A. The history of this curious word is completely known, by which means the etymology has been solved. It orig. meant 'a moveable scaffold,' such as was used in the representation of the old mysteries. A picture of such a scaffold will be found in Chambers, Book of Days, i. 634. The Chester plays 'were always acted in the open air, and consisted of 24 parts, each part or pageant being taken by one of the guilds of the city. . . Twenty-four large scaffolds or stages were made, &c.; Chambers, as above; see the whole passage. Phillips, ed. 1706, well defines pageant as 'a triumphal chariot or arch, or other pompous device usually carried about in publick shows.' B. M. E. pagent. The entry 'pagent, pagina,' occurs in Prompt. Parv. p. 377; where there is nothing to shew whether a pageant is meant or a page of a book, the words being ultimately the same; see Page (2). But Way's excellent note on this entry is full of information, and should be consulted. He says: 'the primary signification of pageant appears to have been a stage or scaffold, which was called pagina, it may be supposed, from its construction, being a machine compaginata, framed and compacted together. The curious extracts from the Coventry records given by Mr. Sharp, in his Dissertation on the Pageants or Mysteries performed there, afford definite information on this subject. The term is variously written, and occasionally pagyn, pagen, approaching closely the Lat. pagina. The various plays or pageants composing the Chester mysteries . . . are entitled Pagina prima, . . . Pagina secunda, . . . and so forth; see Chester Plays, ed. Wright. A curious contemporary account has been preserved of the construction of the pageants [scaffolds] at Chester during the xvth century, "which pagiants were a high scaffold with 2 rowmes, a higher and a lower, upon 4 wheeles;" Sharp, Cov. Myst. p. 17. The term denoting the stage whereon the play was exhibited subsequently denoted also the play itself; but the primary sense . . . is observed by several writers, as by Higgs, in his version of Junius's Nomenclator, 1585: "Pegma, lignea machina in altum educta, tabulatis etiam in sublimis crescentibus compaginata, de loco in locum portatilis, aut quæ vehi potest, ut in pompis fieri solet: Eschaffaut, a pageant, or scaffold." Palsgrave has: 'Pagiant in a playe, mystere;' and Cotgrave explains O. F. pegmate as 'a stage or frame whereon pageants be set or carried.' See further illustrations in Wedgwood. O. Thus we know that, just as M. E. pagent is used as a variant of pagine, in the sense of page of a book, so the M. E. pagent (or pagiant, &c.) was formed, by the addition of an excrement t after n, from an older or pagin, which is nothing but an Anglicised form of Low Lat. pagina in the sense of scaffold or stage. For examples of excrement t, cf. ancient, margent, tyrant, pheasant. D. Though this sense of pagina is not given by Ducange, it was certainly in use, as shewn above, and a very clear instance is cited by Wedgwood from Monumenta Gildhalliæ Londoniensis, ed. Riley, iii. 459, where we find: 'parabatur machina satis pulcra . . . in eadem pagina erigebantur duo animalia vocata antelops;' shewing that machina and pagina were synonymous. E. The true sense of pagina I take to have been simply 'stage' or 'platform;' since we find one sense of Lat. pagina to be a slab of marble or plank of wood (White). Cf. Lat. paginatus, planked, built, constructed (White); which is rather a derivative from pagina than the original of it, as seems to have been Way's supposition. F. Hence the derivation is (not from paginatus, but) from Lat. pangere (base pag-), to fasten, fix; see Pact. G. Finally, we may note that another word for the old stage was pegma (stem pegmat-, whence O. F. pegmate in Cotgrave); this is the corresponding and cognate Greek name, from Gk. πηγμα (stem πηγματ-), a platform, stage, derived from the base of Gk. πηγνυμι, I fix, cognate with Lat. pangere. Indeed it is very probable that Low Lat. pagina, a stage, is a translation of Gk. πηγμα, but it is not merely borrowed from it, being an independent formation from the same base and root. Der. pageant, verb, to play, Shak. Troil. i. 3. 151; pageant-r-y, Pericles, v. 2. 6. [†]

PAGODA, an Indian idol's temple. (Port., — Pers.) Spelt pagotha in Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, pp. 69, 393; pagod in Skinner, ed. 1671. — Port. pagoda, now generally pagode; but both forms are given in the Eng.-Port. part of Vieyra's Dict. Corrupted from Pers. but-kadah, an idol-temple; Rich. Dict. p. 241, col. 2; spelt but-kedah in Palmer, Pers. Dict. col. 70. — Pers. but, an idol, image, God, id. p. 241, col. 1; and kadah, a habitation, id. p. 1175. β. The singular perversion of the sounds may fairly be explained by supposing that the Portuguese connected it mentally with pagão, pagan (= Lat. paganus); for which see Vieyra, in the Eng.-Port. division. It may be added that the initial Persian letter is sometimes rendered by p, as in Devic, Supplement to Littré. [†]

PAIL, an open vessel of wood, &c. for holding liquids. (F., — L.) M. E. paile, payle. 'Payle, or mylk-stoppe [milk-stoup];' Prompt. Parv. — O. F. paele, so spelt in the 13th century (Littré, Burguy). Both aenum and patella are glossed by O. F. paele; Wright's Vocab. i. 97, l. 2. Later paelle, 'a footlesse posnet [little pot] or skellet, having brimmes like a bason; a little pan;' Cot. Cf. mod. F. poêle, a frying-pan. — Lat. patella, a small pan or dish, a vessel used in cooking; dimin. of patera, a flat dish, saucer, which answers to Gk. πατήρ, a flat dish: see Paten. β. There is a difficulty here in the fact that the sense does not quite correspond. We may perhaps explain this by supposing that the O. F. paele as used in England took up the meaning of the older corresponding word of Celtic origin, viz. Irish padhal, a pail, ewer, Gael. padhal, an ewer. These words, like W. padell, a pan, are either cognate with or borrowed from the Lat. patella. ¶ We may note that prov. E. peel, a fire-shovel, is not the same word, though Cotgrave seems so to regard it; it is from O. F. pelle, Lat. pala, a shovel; see Peel (3). Der. pail-ful. ¶ I now think that pail has no connection with bale (3), as suggested under that word.

PAIN, bodily suffering, anguish. (F., — L.) M. E. peine, peyne, King Alisaunder, 4522. — F. peine, 'a paine, penalty;' Cot. — Lat. pœna, punishment, penalty, pain. + Gk. πῶνῃ, penalty. β. Some suppose the Lat. word was borrowed from the Gk. The root is not surely known; see Curtius, i. 349; Fick, i. 147. Der. pain, verb, M. E. peinen, Chaucer, C. T. 1748; pain-ed; pain-ful (with E. suffix -ful = full), formerly used with the sense of 'industrious,' see exx. in Trench, Select Glossary; pain-ful-ly, pain-ful-ness, pain-less, pain-less-ness; also pains-taking, adj., i. e. taking pains or trouble, Beaum. and Fletcher, Span. Curate, iv. 5 (Diego); pains-taking, sb. And see pen-al, pen-ance, pen-itent, pen-ish, pine (2).

PAINT, to colour, describe, depict. (F., — L.) M. E. peinten, Chaucer, C. T. 11946, 11949, 11951; but the word must have been in use in very early times, as we find the derived words paintunge, painting, and peinture, a picture, in the Ancren Riwe, p. 392, l. 16, p. 242, l. 14. — O. F. peint, paint (mod. F. peint), pp. of peindre, peindre (mod. F. peindre), to paint. — Lat. pingere, to paint. Allied to Skt. piñj, to dye, colour; piñjara, yellow, tawny. β. The form of the root is PIG, to colour; perhaps allied to ✓ PIK, to adorn, form, whence Skt. piḡ, to adorn, form, pegas, an ornament, and Gk. ποικίλος, variegated. See Fick, i. 145. Der. paint, sb. (a late word), Dryden, to Sir Robert Howard, l. 8; paint-er, Romeo, i. 2. 41; paint-ing, in early use, M. E. peintunge, as above. And see pic-ture, de-pict, pig-ment, pi-mento, or-pi-ment, or-pine.

PAINTER, a rope for mooring a boat. (F., — L., — Gk.) Painter, a rope employed to fasten a boat; 'Hawkesworth's Voyages, 1773, vol. i. p. xxix. Corrupted (by assimilation to the ordinary sb. painter) from M. E. panter, a noose, esp. for catching birds; see Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, 131; Prompt. Parv. p. 381; spelt panter, Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 344. — O. F. pantere, a kind of snare for birds, Roquefort; panthiere, 'a great swoop-net;' Cot. Cf. Ital. pantera, 'a kinde of trammel or fowling-net;' Florio; panthera, 'a net or haie to catch conies with, also a kind of fowling-net;' id. — Lat. panther, a hunting-net for catching wild beasts; cf. panthera, an entire capture. — Gk. πάνθηρος, catching all; cf. πανθήρα, the whole booty (a very late word). — Gk. πάν, neut. of πᾶς, every; and θηρ, a wild beast; see Pan- and Deer. ¶ The Irish painteur, Gael. paintneer, a gin, snare, are forms of the same word; but may have been borrowed from French, as the M. E. word occurs as early as the reign of Edw. II. It is remarkable that, in America, a panther is also called a painter; see Cooper, The Pioneers, cap. xxviii.

PAIR, two equal or like things, a couple. (F., — L.) M. E. peire, peyre, applied to any number of like or equal things, and not limited, as now, to two only. Thus 'a peire of bedes' = a set of beads, Chaucer, C. T. 159. 'A pair of cards' = a pack of cards; Ben Jonson, Masque of Christmas (Carol). 'A pair of organs' = a set of organ-pipes, i. e. an organ; see my note to P. Plowman, C. xxi. 7. 'A pair of stairs' = a flight of stairs. Yet we also find 'a peyre hose' = a pair of hose; Rob. of Glouc. p. 390, l. 4. — F. paire, 'a paire, or couple of; ¶ Cot. — F. pair, 'like, alike, equall, matching, even, meet;' Cot. — Lat. parem, acc. of par, alike. See Par, Peer. Der. pair, verb, Wint. Ta. iv. 4. 154. Also um-pire, q. v.

PALACE, a royal house. (F., — L.) M. E. palais, king Horn, ed. Lumby, 1256; paleis, Floriz and Blanchefur, 87. — F. palais, 'a palace;' Cot. — Lat. palatium, formerly a building on the Palatine hill at Rome. 'On this hill, the Collis Palatinus, stood . . . the houses of Cicero and Catiline. Augustus built his mansion on the same hill, and his example was followed by Tiberius and Nero. Under Nero, all private houses had to be pulled down on the Collis Palatinus, in order to make room for the emperor's residence . . . called the Palatium; and it became the type of all the palaces of the kings and emperors of Europe;' Max Müller, Lectures on Language, ii. 276. β. The Collis Palatinus is supposed to have been so called from Pales, a pastoral deity; see Max Müller, as above.

Pales was a goddess who protected flocks; and the name means 'protector;' cf. Skt. pāla, one who guards or protects. — √PA, to protect, feed; whence Skt. pā, to protect, cherish; Lat. pater, E. father, &c. See Father. Der. palati-al (Todd), formed with suffix -al from Lat. palati-um; also palat-ine, q. v.; palad-in, q. v.

PALADIN, a warrior, a knight of Charlemagne's household. (F., — Ital., — L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — F. paladin, 'a knight of the round table;' Cot. — Ital. paladino, 'a warrior, a valiant man at armes;' Florio. — Lat. palatinus; see Palatine. Properly applied to a knight of a palace or royal household. Doublet, palatine.

PALANQUIN, PALANKEEN, a light litter in which travellers are carried on men's shoulders. (Hind., — Skt.). 'A palamkeen or litter;' Sir T. Herbert, Travels, 1665, p. 72. Spelt palankee in Terry's Voyage to East India, 1655, p. 155 (Todd); palanquin in Skinner, ed. 1671. The spelling palanquin is French; in Portuguese it is palanquin. — Hind. palang, a bed, bedstead; Forbes, Hindustani Dict., 1857, p. 202. Cf. Pers. palank, palang, a bedstead; Rich. Dict. p. 335. (Litré cites Siamese banlangko, Pali paṭṭaṅka; Col. Yule, as cited in Wedgwood, gives the Pali form as palanki, a litter or couch carried on poles. Mahn cites Javanese pāṅgkhi, older form palangkan; as well as Hindi pālki, which is evidently a contracted form.) γ. All from Skt. paryāṅka, (Prakrit pallāṅka), a couch-bed, a bed; the change from r to l being very common. — Skt. pārī, about, round (Gk. περί); and āṅka, a hook, the flank, &c. Apparently from being wrapped round one. The Skt. āṅka is allied to Lat. uncus, a hook, A. S. angel, a hook. See Peri- and Angle (2).

PALATE, the roof of the mouth, taste, relish. (F., — L.) In Cor. ii. 1. 61. M. E. palet (a better form would have been palat), Wyclif, Lament. iv. 4. Prompt. Parv. p. 378. — O. F. palat, a form found in the 14th century; see Littré. — Lat. palatum, the palate. Root uncertain. ¶ The mod. F. palais answers to a Low Lat. palatium, which seems to have been used by mistake for palatum. See remarks in Max Müller, Lect. on Lang. ii. 276. Der. palat-able, palat-abi-ly. Also palate, verb, Cor. iii. 1. 104. [†]

PALATINE, orig. pertaining to a palace. (F., — L.) Chiefly in the phr. 'count palatine,' where the adj. follows the sb., as in French; see Merch. Ven. i. 2. 49. — F. palatin, 'a generall and common appellation, or title, for such as have any special office or function in a sovereign princes palace;' Cot. He adds: 'Compte palatin, a count palatine, is not the title of a particular office, but an hereditary addition of dignity and honour, gotten by service done in a domestical charge.' — Lat. palatinus, (1) the name of a hill in Rome, (2) belonging to the imperial abode, to the palace or court. See Palace. Der. palatin-ate, from F. palatinat, 'a palatinity, the title or dignity of a count palatine, also a county palatine;' Cot. Doublet, paladin.

PALAVER, a talk, parley. (Port., — L., — Gk.) Frequently used in works of travel, of a parley with African chiefs; a word introduced on the African coast by the Portuguese. — Port. palavra, a word, parole. See Parole, Parable.

PALE (1), a stake, narrow piece of wood for enclosing ground, an enclosure, limit, district. (F., — L.) M. E. paal, Wyclif, Ezek. xv. 3 (earlier version); the later version has stake; Vulgate, paxillus. Dat. pale, Wyclif, Luke, xix. 43. — F. pal, 'a pale, stake, or pole;' Cot. — Lat. pālus, a stake. The long a is due to loss of g; the base is pag-, as seen in pangere, to fasten; see Fact. ¶ The A. S. pal or pāl is uncertain; we find 'Palus, pal,' in Wright's Voc. i. 84; it answers rather to pole, q. v. The G. pfahl is merely borrowed from Latin. Der. pal-ing, Blackstone's Comment. b. ii. c. 3 (R.); pale, verb, 3 Hen. VI. i. 4. 103; im-pale; also pal-is-ade, q. v. Doublet, pole. ¶ The heraldic term pale is the same word.

PALE (2), wan, dim. (F., — L.) M. E. palē, Chaucer, C. T. 5065. — O. F. pale, palle (Burguy), later pasle (Cot.), whence mod. F. pâle. — Lat. pallidum, acc. of pallidus, pale. On the loss of the last two atonic syllables, see Brachet, Introd. § 50, 51. Allied to Gk. παλῖος, gray, Skt. palita, gray, and to E. fallow; see Fallow. Der. pale-ly, pale-ness, pal-ish. Doublet, pallid.

PALÆOGRAPHY, the study of ancient modes of writing. (Gk.) Modern; coined from Gk. παλαιο-, crude form of παλαιός, old; and γράφειν, to write. Παλαιός is from πάλαι, adv., long ago.

PALÆOLOGY, archæology. (Gk.) Modern. From Gk. παλαιο-, crude form of παλαιός, old; and -λογία, from λόγος, a discourse, which from λέγειν, to speak. See Palæography and Logic. Der. palæolog-ist.

PALÆONTOLOGY, the science of fossils, &c. (Gk.) Modern. Lit. 'a discourse on ancient creatures.' Coined from Gk. πάλαι, long ago; ὄντο, crude form of ὄν, being, from √AS, to be; and -λογία, from λόγος, a discourse, which from λέγειν, to speak. See Palæography, Sooth, and Logic. Der. palæontolog-ist.

PALESTRA, a wrestling-school. (L., — Gk.) Modern; yet the adj. palestr-al actually occurs in Chaucer, Troilus, v. 304. — Lat. palestra. — Gk. παλαιστρα, a wrestling-school. — Gk. παλαίειν, to wrestle. — Gk. πάλη, wrestling. Connected with Gk. πάλλειν, to quiver, brandish, swing, &c.; and with σπαίρειν, to quiver. — √SPAR, to struggle; preserved in E. spar, to box; see Spar (3). Der. palestr-al, as above.

PALETOT, a loose garment. (F., — Du.) Modern. Borrowed from mod. F. paletois, formerly palletoc, for which see below. However, the word is by no means new to English; the M. E. paltok is not an uncommon word; see numerous references in my note to P. Plowman, B. xviii. 25, where the word occurs; and see Prompt. Parv., and Way's note. This form was borrowed from O. F. palletoc, 'a long and thick pelt, or cassock, a garment like a short cloak with sleeves, or such a one as the most of our modern pages are attired in;' Cot. Borrowed, as Littré points out, from O. Dutch, but rather from the form paltroc (with loss of r) than from the fuller form paltrock. — O. Du. paltroc, for which Oudemans gives a quotation. The same word as O. Du. palsrock, which Oudemans explains by a holiday-dress, and cites the expression 'fluweelen palsrock,' i. e. velvet dress, as in use A. D. 1521. Hexham gives: 'een palts-rock, a coate or a jacket.'

β. Littré (if I understand him rightly) takes it to mean a pilgrim's coat, and connects pals with O. Du. pals-stock, contracted form of palster-stock, a pilgrim's staff (Hexham). This is certainly wrong; a very slight examination will shew that the coat was worn by soldiers, knights, and kings, and was made of silk or velvet. Way says that 'Sir Roger de Norwico bequeaths, in 1370, unum paltoke de uelute, cum armis meis;' &c. Hexham evidently connects palts-rock with palts, 'a pretour, i. e. a pretor. It is clear that the first syllable is O. Du. pals, later written palts with intrusive t, answering to G. pfalz; and this pals occurs in pals-grave, 'a count palatine' (Hexham), G. pfalzgraf, E. palsgrave or palgrave.

γ. The G. pfalz is a contraction of M. H. G. phalanze or phalanze, O. H. G. phalanza, palinza, a palace; a word due to Lat. palatium, a palace. Hence O. Du. pals = E. palace; and the sense is 'palace-coat,' i. e. court-dress.

δ. The O. Du. roc = G. rock, O. H. G. arock, a coat, from which some derive E. frock. See Palace and Frock. ¶ Not connected with toque, a cap; for the paltok was not hooded; though the borrowed Breton word paltok was used of a hooded mantle.

PALETTE, a small slab on which a painter mixes colours. (F., — Ital., — L.) 'Pallet, a thin oval piece of wood, used by painters to hold their colours;' Kersey, ed. 1715. The word is used by Dryden; see Todd (who gives no reference). — F. palette, 'a lingell, tenon, slice, or flat tool wherewith chirurgians lay salve on & plaisters; also, the saucer or porringer, whereinto they receive blood out of an opened vein; also, a battledoor; Cot. Thus it orig. meant a flat blade for spreading things, then a flat open saucer, then a slab for colours. — Ital. paletta, 'a lingell, slice [such] as apothecaries use;' Florio. Dimin. of pala, 'a spade;' id. — Lat. pāla, a spade, shovel, flat-bladed 'peel' for putting bread into an oven; see Peel (3). The base pā = pag, seen in pangere, to fasten, also to set, plant; whence pāla = the instrument used for planting. See Pact. Doublet, pallet (2).

PALFREY, a saddle-horse, esp. a lady's horse. (F., — Low Lat.) In early use. M.E. palefrai, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 5, l. 20; later palfrei, Chaucer, C. T. 2497. — O.F. palefrei (13th century, Littré), palefroy, 'a palfrey,' Cot.; mod. F. palefroi. Spelt palefreid in the 11th century; Littré. — Low Lat. paraveredus, a post-horse, lit. 'an extra post-horse' (White). Brachet gives quotations for the later forms paravredus, parafredus, and palafredus (10th century); and O.F. palefreid = Low Lat. acc. palafredum; every step being traced with certainty.

β. The Low Lat. paraveredus is a hybrid formation from Gk. παρά, beside (hence extra); and late Lat. ueredus, a post-horse, courier's horse (White). γ. White gives the etymology of ueredus from Lat. uere, to carry, draw; and rheda, a four-wheeled carriage; if so, it means 'the drawer of a four-wheeled carriage.'

δ. For παρά, see Para—; for uere, see Vehicle. Rheda is said to be a Gaulish word; cf. W. rhedu, to run, to race, rhe, fleet, swift. ¶ The Low Lat. paraveredus is also the original of G. pferd, Du. paard, a palfrey, horse.

PALIMPSEST, a manuscript which has been twice written on, the first writing being partly erased. (Gk.) Modern in E., though found in Greek. — Gk. παλιμψηστον, a palimpsest (manuscript); neut. of παλιμψηστος, lit. scraped again. — Gk. πάλιμ, for πάνιμ, again, before the following ψ; and ψηστός, rubbed, scraped, verbal adj. from ψάειν, to rub, Ionic ψέειν.

PALINDROME, a word or sentence that reads the same backwards as forwards. (Gk.) Examples are Hannah, madam, Eve; Todd quotes subi dura a rudibus from Peacham, Experience in these Times (1638). 'Curious palindromes;' Ben Jonson, An Execration upon Vulcan, Underwoods, lxi. l. 34. — Gk. παλινδρομος, running back again. — Gk. πάλιν, back, again; and δρομός, a running, from δραμῖν, to run; see Dromedary.

PALINODE, a recantation, in song. (F., — L., — Gk.) 'You, two and two, singing a palinode;' Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, last speech of Crites. — F. palinodie, 'a palinody, recantation, contrary song, unsaying of what hath been said;' Cot. — Lat. palinodia. — Gk. παλινῳδία, a recantation, strictly of an ode. — Gk. πάλιν, back, again; and ὀδῆ, a song; see Ode.

PALISADE, a fence made of pales or stakes. (F., — L.) Shak. has the pl. palisadoes, 1 Hen. IV. ii. 3. 55; this is (I suppose) a Span. form, though the mod. Span. word is palizada. Dryden has palisades, tr. of Virgil, b. vii. l. 214. — F. palissade, 'a palisadoe;' Cot. — F. paliss-er, 'to inclose with pales,' id.; with suffix -ade = Lat. -ata. — F. palis, a 'pale, stake, pole,' id.; extended from pal, a pale. See further under Pale (1). Der. palisade, verb.

PALL (1), a cloak, mantle, archbishop's scarf, shroud. (L.) M.E. pal, Layamon, 897, 1296; pl. palles, id. 2368. — A.S. pal, purple cloth; we find pallas and sidan = purple cloths and silks, as a gloss to Lat. purpuram et sericum in Ælfric's Colloquy (the Merchant); see Thorpe, Analecta, p. 27. — Lat. palla, a mantle, loose dress, under garment, curtain; cf. pallium, a coverlet, pall, curtain, toga.

β. Origin uncertain; perhaps for panula, pannula, dimin. form from panus, pannus, cloth. We can hardly connect it with pellis, skin. Der. pall-i-ate, q. v.

PALL (2), to become rapid, lose taste or spirit. (C.) M.E. pallen. 'Pallyn, as ale and drynke, Emorior;' Prompt. Parv. Way, in the note on the passage, quotes from Lydgate's Order of Fools: 'Who forsakith wyne, and drynkithe ale pallid, Such folitisse foolis, God lete him never the' [prosper]; Harl. MS. 2251, fol. 303. He also cites from Palsgrave: 'I palle, as drinke or bloode dothe, by longe standyng in a thyng, is appallys. This drink wyll pall (s'appallyra) if it stande vncouered all nyght. I palle, I fade of freshenesse in colour or beautye, ie flaitris.' β. The word presents great difficulty; I incline to the belief that Palsgrave has here made an error in using the O.F. verb appallir as the equivalent of E. pall. This verb, like mod. F. pâlir, seems to be only used with respect to loss of colour or light. See apalir, palie, in Roquefort, paslir, pallir in Cotgrave, and pâlir in Littré. Palsgrave may have been thinking of M.E. appallen, which was a strange hybrid word, made by prefixing the F. a- (= Lat. ad) to the word pall which we are now discussing. This confusion appears in Chaucer, C. T. 13033, where we find: 'But it were for an olde appalled wight' = except it were for an old enfeebled creature; where 3 MSS. have the reading oldes palled in place of olde appalled; Six-text, B. 1292. It is clear that the sense here implies loss of energy or vital power, and involves E. pall, not F. pâlir. Gower speaks of a drink 'bitter as the galle, Which maketh a mannes herte palle,' i. e. lose energy; C. A. iii. 13. Careful consideration of the use of the word shews that it is of Celtic origin, but has been confused with F. pâlir and E. pale. — W. pallu, to fail, to cease, to neglect; cf. pall, loss of energy, miss, failure; pallider, fallibility, palliant, fallacious, neglect. Allied to Corn. paleh, weak, sickly, amending poorly.

γ. As no W. word begins with sp, we may readily admit a loss of initial s, and connect pall with Irish spaillead, a check, abuse, spailleadh, a fall, Gk. σφάλαιον, to make to totter, σφάλαισθαι, to stumble, stagger, fall, fail. The s is also lost in Lat. fallere (whence E. fail), and in E. fall. δ. In fact pall is a mere doublet of fail or fall; all being from ✓ SPAL, to fall, totter; cf. Skt. sphal, sphul, to tremble, sphálaya, to crush (lit. to fell). The Skt. phalgu, pitiless, sapless, weak, is a related word, from the same root. Der. ap-pal, q. v. See Addenda. [*]

PALLADIUM, a safeguard of liberty. (L., — Gk.) 'A kind of palladium to save the city;' Milton, Of Reformation in England, B. 1 (Todd). — Lat. Palladium; Virgil, Æn. ii. 166, 183. — Gk. Παλλάδιον, the statue of Pallas on which the safety of Troy was supposed to depend. — Gk. Παλλάδ, stem of Παλλάς, an epithet of Athene (Minerva).

PALLET (1), a kind of mattress or couch, properly one of straw. (F., — L.) M.E. paillet, Chaucer, Troil. iii. 229. — F. paillet, a heap of straw, given by Littré as a provincial word. Cotgrave only gives pailier, 'a reek or stack of straw, also, bed-straw.' Dimin. of F. paille, 'straw;' Cot. — Lat. palea, straw, chaff; lit. anything shaken or scattered about. Allied to Gk. πάλη, fine meal, dust, Skt. palāla, straw. See Curtius, i. 359. And see palliasse. [†]

PALLET (2), an instrument used by potters, also by gilders; also, a palette. (F., — Ital., — L.) See definitions in Webster; it is, properly, a flat-bladed instrument for spreading plasters, gilding, &c., and for moulding; and is only another spelling of Palette, q. v.

PALLIASSE, a straw mattress. (F., — L.) Not in Todd's Johnson. The introduction of i is due to an attempt to represent the 'il mouillés' of the F. pallasse, which see in Littré. The form in Cotgrave is paillace, 'a straw-bed.' The suffix -ace, -asse (= Lat. -aceus) is a diminutive one; Brachet, Etym. Dict. Introd. § 272; and pall-ace is from paille, straw. See Pallet (1).

PALLIATE, to cloak, excuse. (L.) 'Being palliated with a pilgrim's coat and hypocritic sanctity;' Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, p. 341. Properly a pp., as in 'certain lordes and citizens . . in habite palliate and dissimuled;' Hall's Chron., Hen. IV. introd. fol. 5 (R.). — Lat. palliatius, cloaked, covered with a cloak. — Lat. pallium, a cloak, mantle. See Pall (1). Der. palliat-ion, palliat-ive.

PALLID, pale. (L.) 'Pallid death;' Spenser, F. Q. v. 11. 45. — Lat. pallidus, pale. See Pale (2). Doublet, pale (2).

PALLI-MALL, the name of an old game. (F., — Ital., — L.) Discussed under Mall (2), q. v.

PALLOR, paleness. (L.) Used by Bp. Taylor, Artificial Handsomeness, p. 2 (Todd). — Lat. pallor, paleness. — Lat. pallere, to be pale. Cf. Lat. pallidus, pale; see Pale (2).

PALM, the inner part of the hand; the name of a tree. (1. F., — L.; 2. L.) 1. The sense of 'flat hand' is the more original, the tree being named from its flat spreading leaves, which bear some resemblance to the hand spread out. Yet it is remarkable that the word was first known in England in the sense of palm-tree. To take the orig. sense first, we find M.E. paume, the palm of the hand, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 141, 147, 150, 153. — F. paume, 'the palme of the hand;' Cot. — Lat. palma, the palm of the hand. + Gk. πάλαμ. + A.S. folm; Grein, i. 311. Root uncertain; see Fick, i. 671. Allied to A.S. folm is E. fumble; see Fumble.

2. We find A.S. palm, a palm-tree; borrowed directly from Latin. 'Palma, palm-twig, vel palm;' Wright's Vocab. i. 32, col. 2. ¶ We may note that the Lat. spelling has prevailed over the French, as in psalm, &c. Der. (from the former sense) palm-ate, from Lat. palmatus; palm-ist-r-y, used by Sir T. Browne in his Vulg. Errors, b. v. c. 24, pt. 1, and coined by adding the suffixes -ist- (of Gk. origin), and -r-y (= F. -erie, Lat. -arium); also (from the latter sense) palm-er, M.E. palmere, Chaucer, C. T. 13, King Horn, ed. Lumby, 1027, i. e. one who bears a palm-branch in token of having been to the Holy Land; palm-er-worm, Joel, i. 4, ii. 25, a caterpillar supposed to be so called from its wandering about like a pilgrim, and also simply called palmer (see Eastwood and Wright's Bible Word-book); Palm-sunday, M.E. palmesunday, O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 39, l. 65; palm-y, Hamlet, i. 1. 113. ¶ The palmer or palm-er-worm may be named from prov. E. palm, the catkin of a willow; but we also find palmer in the sense of wood-louse, and in Holliband's Dict., ed. 1593, a palmer is described as 'a worme having a great many feete;' see Halliwell. It makes no ultimate difference.

PALPABLE, that can be felt, obvious. (F., -L.) In Macb. ii. 1. 40. -F. palpable, omitted by Cotgrave, but in use in the 15th century (Littre), and given by Palsgrave, who has: 'Palpable, apte or mete to be felte, palpable;' see Halliwell. -Lat. palpabilis, that can be touched. -Lat. palpare, to feel, palpari, to feel, handle. β. An initial s has been lost, as shewn by the related Gk. ψηλάφω, I feel, from the base SPAL; see Curtius, ii. 403. Moreover, the orig. sense of palpare was 'to quiver,' as shewn by the derivatives palp-ebra, that which quivers, the eye-lid, and palpitare, to quiver often, to throb. By comparing Skt. sphal, sphar, to quiver, tremble, palpitate, we derive all from ✓SPAR, to quiver. Fick, i. 831. Der. palpabi-y, palpable-ness, palpability. And see palpitare.

PALPITATE, to throb. (L.) In Minshen, ed. 1627. [It is not unlikely that the E. verb to palpitare was really due to the sb. palpitation.] -Lat. palpitatus, pp. of palpitare, to throb; frequentative of palpare, to feel, orig. to move quickly. See PALPABLE. Der. palpitation-ion, from F. palpitation, 'a panting;' Cot.

PALSY, paralysis. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. palesy, Wyclif, Matt. iv. 24; fuller form parlesy, Prick of Conscience, ed. Morris, 2996. -F. paralysie, 'the palsy;' Cot. -Lat. paralysin, acc. of paralysis; see PARALYSIS. Der. palsy, verb; palsi-ed, Cor. v. 2. 46.

PALTER, to dodge, shift, shuffle, equivocate. (Scand.?) See Macb. v. 8. 20; Jul. Cæs. ii. 1. 126. Cotgrave, s.v. harceler, has: 'to haggle, hucke, hedge, or palter long in the buying of a commodity.' It also means 'to babble,' as in: 'One whyle his tonge it ran and paltered of a cat, Another whyle he stammered styll upon a rat;' Gammer Gurton, ii. 2. If we take the sense to be 'to haggle,' we may esp. refer it to the haggling over worthless trash, or 'paltrie,' as it is called in Lowland Scotch. This seems to be the most likely solution, as most of the dictionaries connect it with paltry, which is shewn below to be due to a Scand. word palter, signifying 'rags, refuse,' &c.; see PALTRY. More literally, it meant 'to deal in rags.' This seems to be confirmed by comparing it with Dan. pialtebod, a rag-shop, old clothes' shop; pialtehandel, dealing in rags; pialtekræmmer, a rag-dealer, rag-man; &c. β. If this be the right solution, the verb appears to have been coined in England from the old sb. palter, rags, which must have been in use here, though only the derived adj. paltry has been recorded. In other words, though we cannot well derive the verb to palter from the adj. paltry, nor vice versa paltry from to palter, we may refer them both alike to a common source.

PALTRY, mean, vile, worthless. (Scand.) In Shak. Merry Wives, ii. 1. 164; Marlowe, Edw. II. ii. 6. 57. Jamieson gives paltrie, peltrie, vile trash; Halliwell has paltring, a worthless trifle; Forby explains Norfolk paltry by 'rubbish, refuse, trash;' and Brockett gives palterly as the North. Eng. form of the adj. paltry. The word, being used in the North and Norfolk, is, presumably, of Scand. origin; and such is the case. The word stands for palter-y (North. E. palter-ly), formed with the adj. suffix -y (or -ly) from an old pl. paltr-er (formed like M. E. child-er = children, breth-er = brethren), which is still preserved in Swed. and Danish. This account is verified by the G. forms; see below. The sense of palter is 'rags,' and that of paltr-y is 'ragged,' hence, vile, worthless, or, as a sb., trash or refuse. -Swed. paltror, rags, pl. of paltra, a rag; Ihre gives O. Swed. paltror, old rags, with a reference to Jerem. xxxviii. 11. + Dan. pialter, rags, pl. of pialt, a rag, tatter; hence the adj. piallet, ragged, tattered. + Low G. palte, pulte, a rag, a piece of cloth torn or cut off; whence the adj. paltrig, pultrig, ragged, torn; Bremen Wörterb. iii. 287. + Prov. G. palter (pl. paltern), a rag; whence palterig, paltry (Flügel). Cf. also O. Du. palt, a piece, fragment, as, palt brods, a piece of bread (Oudemans, Kilian); Fries. palt, a rag (Outzen). β. The origin is by no means clear; Ihre connects Swed. paltror with O. Swed. palt, a kind of garment. See Rietz, s.v. pallt. Perhaps allied to Lithuan. spalai (pl. of spalas), bits of broken flax, or trash in general. Der. paltri-ly, paltri-ness; and see palter. [†]

PAMPAS, plains in South America. (Peruvian.) From the Peruv. pampa, a plain (Webster); hence Moyo-bamba, Chugui-bamba, places in Peru, with bamba for pampa. The termination -s, indicating the plural, is Spanish.

PAMPER, to feed luxuriously, glut. (O. Low G.) In Much Ado, iv. 1. 61. 'Pampired with ease;' Court of Love, l. 177 (late 15th century or early 16th; first printed 1561). 'Oure pamperde panchyys,' Skelton, ed. Dyce, i. 19, l. 25. But the word was known to Chaucer. 'They ne were nat forpampred with owtirage;' Ætas Prima, l. 5; pr. in Appendix to Chaucer's tr. of Boethius, ed. Morris, p. 180. Wedgwood quotes the following from Reliquie Antiquæ, i. 41: 'Thus the devil fareth with men and women; First, he stirith hem to pappe and pampe her fleisch, desyringed delicious metis and drynkis.' Not found in A. S., and prob. imported from the Netherlands. The form pamp-er is a frequentative from an older verb pamp (as above), meaning to feed luxuriously; and this verb is a causal form from a sb. pamp, a nasalised form of pap; as will appear.

-Low G. pampen, more commonly slampampen, to live luxuriously; Brem. Wörterb. iv. 800. -Low G. pampe, thick pap, pap made of meal; also called pampelbry, i.e. pap-broth; and, in some dialects, pappe; id. iii. 287. It is therefore a nasalised form of Pap, q. v. So also vulgar G. pampen, pampeln, to cram, pamper, from pampe, pap, thick broth; Bavarian pampfen, to stuff, sich anpampfen, vollpampfen, to cram oneself with pap or broth (Schmeller, i. 394).

¶ The etymology is quite clear; the suggested connection with O. F. pamprer, to cover with vine-leaves (Cot.), is purely imaginary. The use of the prefix for- in Chaucer is almost enough in itself to stamp the word as being of Teutonic origin. Der. pamper-er.

PAMPHLET, a small book, of a few sheets stitched together. (F.?) Spelt pamflet, Testament of Love, pt. iii, near the end, ed. 1561, fol. 317 b, col. 1; pamphlet in Shak. i Hen. VI, iii. 1. 2. [The mod. F. pamphlet is borrowed from English (Littre).] Of unknown origin, but presumably French, as it occurs in the Test. of Love.

¶ Three theories concerning it may be mentioned. 1. From O. F. pauine, the palm of the hand, and feuille, 'a leaf of a book' (Cot.); as though it were a leaf of paper held in the hand. Suggested by Pegge; see Todd's Johnson. 2. 'From Span. papeleta [Neuman only gives papeleta], a written slip of paper, a written newspaper; by the insertion of the nasal, as in Du. pampier, paper;' Wedgwood. But we did not borrow Span. words in the 14th century. 3. Rather, as I think, from Lat. Pamphila, a female historian of the first century, who wrote numerous epitomes; see Suidas, Aul. Gellius, xv. 17, 23; Diog. Laertius, in life of Pittacus. Hence might come O. F. *pamflet, an epitome, and M. E. pamflet. Cf. F. pamphile, a name for the knave of clubs (Littre), due to the Gk. name Pamphilus. Der. pamphlet-er, Bp. Hall, Satires, b. ii. sat. 1, l. 30; pamphlet-er-ing. [†]

PAN, a broad shallow vessel for domestic use. (L.) 'Pannes and pottes;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 1. M. E. panne, Chaucer, C. T. 7196. -A. S. panne, a pan; 'Isern panne' = an iron pan; fyr-panne = a fire-pan; Ælfric's Vocab. Nomina Vasorum, in Wright's Voc. i. 25, col. 2. And see Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Pastoral, c. xxi, ed. Sweet, p. 162, last line. Cf. Icel. panna, Swed. panna, Dan. pande (for panne), Du. pan, G. pfanne; also Low Lat. panna. β. Certainly not a Teutonic word, but borrowed by the English from the Britons; cf. Irish panna, W. pan (given in Spurrell in the Eng.-W. division). As a Celtic word, it was rather borrowed from the Romans than an independent word; panna is an easy change from Lat. patina, a shallow bowl, pan, bason, just as Lat. penna stands for pet-na. See PATEN; and compare PEN.

γ. The Low Lat. panna was similarly formed; and the Lithuan. pana, a pan, was prob. borrowed from Latin. We may also note Irish padhal, a pail, W. padell, a pan, as corresponding to Lat. patella, the dimin. of patina; see PAIL. Der. brain-pan, with which cf. M. E. panne in the transferred sense of skull, Chaucer, C. T. 1167; knee-pan; pancake, As You Like It, i. 2. 67, and in Palsgrave.

PAN-, prefix, all. (Gk.) From Gk. πᾶν, neut. of πᾶς, all. The stem is παντ-, answering to Lat. quant- in quantus, how great; see QUANTITY. Curtius, ii. 67.

PANACEA, a universal remedy. (L., -Gk.) 'Panacea, a medicine . . . of much vertue;' Udall, pref. to Luke (R.). Oddly spelt panachaea, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 5. 32. -Lat. panacea, -Gk. πανᾰκεια, fem. of πανᾰκειος, the same as πανᾰχης, all-healing. -Gk. πᾶν, neut. of πᾶς, all; and αν-, base of ἀκέομαι, I heal, ἄκος, a cure, remedy. See PAN-, prefix.

PANCREAS, a fleshy gland under the stomach, commonly known as the sweet-bread. (L., -Gk.) 'Pancreas, the sweet-bread;' Phillips, ed. 1706. -Lat. pancreas, -Gk. πάγκρεας, the sweet-bread; lit. 'all flesh.' -Gk. πᾶν, neut. of πᾶς, all; and κρέας, flesh, cognate with Lat. caro. See PAN- and CARNAL. Der. pancreat-ic, from the stem παγκρεα-.

PANDECT, a comprehensive treatise, digest. (F., -L., -Gk.) 'Thus thou, by means which th' ancients never took, A pandect mak'st, and universal book;' Donne, Vpon Mr. T. Coryat's Crudities (R.). More properly used in the pl. pandects. -O. F. pandectes, 'pandects, books which contain all matters, or comprehend all the parts of the subject whereof they intreat;' Cot. -Lat. pandectas, acc. of pl. pandecta, the title of the collection of Roman laws made by order of Justinian, A. D. 529 (Haydn). The sing. pandecta also appears; also pandectes, the true orig. form. -Gk. πανδέκτης, all-receiving; whence pl. πανδέκται, pandects. -Gk. πᾶν, neut. of πᾶς, all; and δεκ-, base of δέχομαι, I receive, contain. See PAN- and DIGIT.

PANDEMONIUM, the home of all the demons, hell. (Gk.) In Milton, P. L. i. 756. Coined from Gk. πᾶν, all; and δαίμων, a demon; see PAN- and DEMON.

PANDER, PANDAR, a pimp, one who ministers to another's passions. (L., = Gk.) Commonly pander; yet pandar is better. Much Ado, v. 2. 31; used as a proper name, Troil. i. 1. 98. M. E. Pandare, shortened form of Pandarus; Chaucer uses both forms, Troil. i. 610, 618. — Lat. Pandarus, the name of the man 'who procured for Troilus the love and good graces of Chryseis; which imputation, it may be added, depends upon no better authority than the fabulous histories of Dictys Cretensis and Dares Phrygius; Richardson. In other words, the whole story is an invention of later times. — Gk. Πάνδαρος, a personal name. Two men of this name are recorded: (1) a Lycian archer, distinguished in the Trojan army; (2) a companion of Aeneas; see Smith's Classical Dict. Der. pander, vb., Hamlet, iii. 4. 88; pander-ly, adj., Merry Wives, iv. 2. 122; pander-er (sometimes used, unnecessarily, for the sb. pander).

PANE, a patch, a plate of glass. (F., = L.) 'A pane of glass, or wainscot;' Minsheu, ed. 1627. M. E. pane, applied to a part or portion of a thing; see Prompt. Parv. p. 380, and Way's note. 'Vch pane of pat place had þre zatez' = each portion of that place had three gates; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, i. 1034 (or 1033). — F. pan, 'a pane, piece, or pannell of a wall, of wainscot, of a glasse-window, &c.; also, the skirt of a gown, the pane of a hose, of a cloak, &c.;' Cot. — Lat. pannum, acc. of pannus, a cloth, rag, tatter; hence, a patch, piece. Allied to pānus, the thread wound upon a bobbin in a shuttle; and to Gk. πῆνος, πῆνη, the woof. Also to Goth. fana, and E. vane; see VANE. Der. pan-ed, in the phr. paned hose, ornamented breeches, which see in Nares; also pan-el, q. v. And see pawn (1), pan-icle.

PANEGYRIC, a eulogy, encomium. (L., = Gk.) Spelt panegyricke in Minshew, ed. 1627. — Lat. panegyricus, a eulogy; from panegyricus, adj., with the same sense as in Greek. — Gk. πανηγυρικός, fit for a full assembly, festive, solemn; hence applied to a festival oration, or panegyric. — Gk. πᾶν, neut. of πᾶς, all; and ἀγῶν-ς, Æolic form of ἀγορά, a gathering, a crowd, related to ἀγείρω, to assemble. See PAN- and Gregarious. Der. panegyric, adj. (really an older word); panegyric-al, panegyric-al-ly, panegyric-ise, panegyrist.

PANEL, PANNEL, a compartment with a raised border, a board with a surrounding frame. (F., = L.) In Shak. As You Like It, iii. 3. 89. M. E. panel, in two other senses: (1) a piece of cloth on a horse's back, to serve as a sort of saddle, Cursor Mundi, 14982; (2) a schedule containing the names of those summoned to serve as jurors, P. Plowman, B. iii. 315. The general sense is 'a piece,' and esp. a square piece, whether of wood, cloth, or parchment, but orig. of cloth only. — O. F. panel, later paneau, 'a pannell of wainscot, of a saddle, &c.;' Cot. — Low Lat. panellus, used in Prompt. Parv. p. 381, as equivalent to M. E. panele. Dimin. of Lat. pannus, cloth, a piece of cloth, a rag; see PANE. Der. em-panel, im-panel; see Empanel.

PANG, a violent pain, a throe. (C.) In the Court of Love, l. 1150, we find: 'The prange of love so straineth them to crie;' altered, in modern editions, to 'The pange of love.' In Prompt. Parv. p. 493, we find: 'Throwe, womannys pronge, sekeness, Erumpna;' i. e. a throe, a woman's pang. It is clear that the word has lost an r; for the etymology, see Prong. β. In Skelton, Philip Sparowe, l. 44, the word occurs as a verb: 'What heyness did me pange;' it is also a sb., id. l. 62. Cf. also: 'For there be in us certayne affectionate pangues of nature;' Udall, Luke, c. 4 (R.). Both sb. and vb. are common in Shakespeare. The loss of r is due, I think, to confusion with prov. F. poigne, a common term for 'a grip,' or the strength exerted by the wrist. 'La poigne de cet homme-là, c'est un étai' = that man's grip is like a vice. In the 15th century, we find: 'Car tourmenté sont de la poigne De tous les maux qu'en enfer sont' = for they are tormented with the grip of all the evils that are in hell; La Passion de Nostre Seigneur. See Littre, whence the whole of the above is cited. Cf. also O. F. empoigner, 'to seise, gripe, catch, lay hands on, lay hold of;' Cot. γ. The prov. F. poigne is closely related to O. F. poin, poing, mod. F. poing, the fist; from Lat. pugnum, acc. of pugnus, the fist; see Pugnacious. δ. It is extremely likely that the E. word has also been influenced by O. F. poign-, the base of several parts of F. poindre, to prick; cf. O. F. pointet, a stitch in the side (Cot.); and see Poignant. ¶ The word cannot be derived from A. S. pyngan (Lat. pungere), to prick; nor can it have any connection whatever with Du. pijnen, to torture; words which have been needlessly adduced, and explain nothing.

PANIC, extreme fright. (Gk.) When we speak of a panic, it is an abbreviation of the phrase 'a panic fear,' given in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Camden has 'a panicall feare;' Remaines, chap. on Poems (R.). — Gk. τὸ Πανικόν, used with or without δέμα (= fear), Panic fear, i. e. fear supposed to be inspired by the god Pan. — Gk. Πανικός, of or belonging to Pan. — Gk. Πάν, a rural god of Arcadia, son of Hermes. Cf. Russ. pan', a lord, Lithuan. ponas, a lord, also, the Lord. β. The orig. sense is prob. protector, guardian. — ✓PA, to protect; Skt. pá, to cherish; see FATHER. Der. panic-struck or panic-stricken.

PANICLE, a form of inflorescence in which the cluster is irregularly branched. (L.) Modern and scientific. — Lat. panicula, a tuft, panicle. Double dimin. form from panus, the thread wound round the bobbin of a shuttle; as to which see PANE. Der. panicul-at-ed, panicul-ate.

PANNEL, the same as Panel, q. v.

PANNIER, a bread-basket. (F., = L.) M. E. panier (with one n), Havelok, 760. — F. panier, 'a pannier, or dorse; ' Cot. — Lat. panarium, a bread-basket. — Lat. panis, bread. — ✓PA, to nourish, cherish; see FATHER. Der. see pantry.

PANOPLY, complete armour. (Gk.) In Milton, P. L. vi. 527, 760. — Gk. πανοπλία, the full armour of an ὁπλίτης, or heavy-armed soldier. — Gk. πᾶν, neut. of πᾶς, all; and ὅπλ-α, arms, armour, pl. of ὅπλον, a tool, implement. β. Gk. ὁπ-λον is connected with ἔπω, I am busy about (whence ἔπομαι, I follow); and ἔπομαι corresponds to Lat. sequor, I follow. — ✓SAK, to follow. See PAN- and Sequence. Der. panopli-ed.

PANORAMA, a picture representing a succession of scenes. (Gk.) Late; added by Todd to Johnson. Invented by R. Barker, A. D. 1788 (Haydn). Coined to mean 'a view all round.' — Gk. πᾶν, neut. of πᾶς, all; and ὄραμα, a view, from ὁράω, I see, which from ✓WAR, to protect, observe. See PAN- and Wary. Der. panoramic.

PANSY, heart's-ease, a species of violet. (F., = L.) In Hamlet, iv. 5. 176. — F. pensée, 'a thought; . . . also, the flower paunsie;' Cot. Thus, it is the flower of thought or remembrance; cf. forget-me-not. The F. pensée is the fem. of pensé, pp. of penser, to think. — Lat. pensare, to weigh, ponder, consider; frequentative form of pendere, to weigh (pp. pensus). See Pensive, Pension, Poise.

PANT, to breathe hard. (E.?) In Shak. Tw. Nt. iii. 4. 323. 'To pant and quake;' Spenser, F. Q. i. 7. 20. M. E. panten; Prompt. Parv. p. 381. And see Skelton, Phyllyp Sparowe, l. 132. Of uncertain origin; it is obviously connected with F. panteler, to pant, O. F. pantiser, 'to breathe very fast, to blow thick and short;' Cot. Also with O. F. pantois, 'short-winded, oft-breathing, out of breath;' pantois, sb., 'short wind, pursinesse, a frequent breathing, or a difficult fetching of wind by the shortness of breath; in hawks, we call it the pantais;' Cot. In Sherwood's index to Cotgrave we find: 'The pantasse or pantois in hawks, le pantais.' This use of the term in hawking appears to be the oldest. β. It is difficult to tell whether the F. word is from the E., or vice versa; but as the E. word occurs in the shorter form panten both in the Prompt. Parv. and, according to Stratmann, in the Towneley Mysteries (Surtees Soc.), p. 217, we may perhaps consider the word as E. It is obviously equivalent to Devonshire pank, to pant; see the Exmoor Scolding, l. 48 (E. D. S.); and cf. Low G. pinkepank, the bang-bang of hammers, pinkepanken, to hammer; Bremen Wörterbuch; words of imitative origin. And we may also note the curious Swed. dial. pank, exhausted, tired out, pankna, to be exhausted (Rietz); though there is no sure connecting link with this word. γ. Wedgwood suggests that it may be a nasalised form of the verb to pat, and cites from Skinner the remarkable Lincolnshire expression 'my heart went pitlady-pantledy,' where we now usually say pit-a-pat.

δ. Diez derives the F. word from the W. pantu, which he supposes to mean 'to press;' this does not seem right, as such is hardly the meaning; I find W. pantu, 'to sink in, to form a hollow, to indent, to dimple; pant, a depression, hollow; pantog, having a hollow or concavity;' Spurrell. [†]

PANTALOON (1), a ridiculous character in a pantomime, buf-foon. (F., = Ital., = Gk.) In Shak. As You Like It, ii. 7. 158; Tam. of Shrew, iii. 1. 37. — F. pantaloon, (1) a name given to the Venetians, (2) a pantalo; see Littre. — Ital. pantalone, a pantalo, buf-foon. 'The pantalone is the pantalo of Ital. comedy, a covetous and amorous old dotard who is made the butt of the piece;' Wedgwood. The name, according to Littre, was esp. applied to Venetians; and Mahn (in Webster) says that St. Pantaleone was 'the patron saint of Venice, and hence a baptismal name very frequent among the Venetians, and applied to them by the other Italians as a nickname.' Lord Byron speaks of the Venetian name Pantaleone as being 'her very by-word;' Childe Harold, c. iv. st. 14. β. St. Pantaleone's day is July 27; he was martyred A. D. 303; Chambers, Book of Days, ii. 127. The name is also written Pantaleon (as in Chambers), which is perhaps better. It is certainly Gk., and is given by Mahn as Πανταλέων, i. e. all-lion, 'a Greek personal name;' this is from παντα-, prefix, wholly, and λέων, a lion. γ. Littre says it stands for Pantelemon, which he explains as παντ-ελεῖμαν = all-pitiful; unless this rests on historical proof, it is very improbable, and one wonders why he did not at once write παντ-ελεῖων = all-pitying.

δ. The etymology advocated by Lord Byron is still more extraordinary, and indeed ridiculous, viz. Ital. pianta-leone = the planter of the lion, i.e. the planter of the standard bearing the lion of St. Mark, supposed to be applied to Venice; see note 9 to c. iv of Childe Harold. Der. pantaloon.

PANTALOONS, a kind of trousers. (F., -Ital., -Gk.) 'And as the French, we conquered once Now give us laws for pantaloon;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3, l. 923; on which Bell's note says: 'The pantaloon belongs to the Restoration. It was loose in the upper part, and puffed, and covered the legs, the lower part terminating in stockings. In an inventory of the time of Charles II. *pantaloon*s are mentioned, and a yard and a half of lutestrung allowed for them.' See also Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674. -F. pantalón, a garment so called because worn by the Venetians, who were themselves called *Pantaloon*s (Littre). See Pantaloon.

PANTHEISM, the doctrine that the universe is God. (Gk.) In Waterland, Works, vol. viii. p. 81 (R.) Todd only gives pantheist. Coined from Pan- and Theism. And see Pantheon. Der. so also pan-theist, from pan- and theist; hence pantheist-ic, pantheist-ic-al.

PANTHEON, a temple dedicated to all the gods. (L., -Gk.) 'One temple of pantheon, that is to say, all goddesses;' Udall, on the Revelation, c. 16; and in Shak. Titus, i. 242. -Lat. panthēon. -Gk. πάνθειον, put for πάνθειον ἱερόν, a temple consecrated to all gods. -Gk. πάνθειον, neut. of πάνθεος, common to all gods. -Gk. πᾶν, neut. of πᾶς, all; and θεός, divine, from θεός, god. See Pan-, and Theism.

PANTHER, a fierce carnivorous quadruped. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. pantere, King Alisaunder, 6820; panter, O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 23. [Cf. A. S. panðher (sic); Grein, ii. 361.] -O. F. panthere, 'a panther;' Cot. -Lat. panthēra; also panther. -Gk. πάνθηρ, a panther. Origin unknown. ¶ A supposed derivation from πᾶν, all, and θηρ, a beast, gave rise to numerous fables; see Philip de Thaurin, Bestiaire, l. 224, in Wright's Pop. Treatises on Science, p. 82. [+]

PANTOMIME, one who expresses his meaning by action; a dumb show. (F., -L., -Gk.) 'Pantomime, an actor of many parts in one play,' &c.; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. [Such is the proper sense of the word, though now used for the play itself.] -F. pantomime, 'an actor of many parts in one play,' &c.; Cot. -Lat. pantomimus. -Gk. παντομίμος, all imitating, a pantomimic actor. -Gk. παντο-, crude form of πᾶς, all; and μίμος, an imitator, from μιμέομαι, I imitate. See Pan- and Mimic. Der. pantomim-ic, pantomim-ist.

PANTRY, a room for provisions. (F., -L.) M. E. pantrye, pantrie; Prompt. Parv. -O. F. paneterie, 'a pantry;' Cot. -Low Lat. panetaria, panitaria, a place where bread is made (hence, where it is kept); Ducange. -Low Lat. paneta, one who makes bread. -Lat. pan-, base of panis, bread. -✓PA, to nourish; cf. Skt. pā, to nourish. Der. from the same base, pann-ter, com-pan-y, ap-pan-age; and see fa-ther, pa-ter-nal.

PAP (1), food for infants. (E.) 'An Englishe infant, which linethe with pappe;' Hall's Chron. Hen. VI, an. 3. The M. E. pappe is only found in the sense of 'breast;' we have, however, 'papiete for chyldey,' Prompt. Parv. p. 382. To be considered as an E. word, and perhaps of great antiquity, though seldom written down. β. Of onomatopoeic origin, due to a repetition of the syllable pa, 'Words formed of the simplest articulations, ma and pa, are used to designate the objects in which the infant takes the earliest interest, the mother and father, the mother's breast, the act of taking or sucking food;' Wedgwood. + Du. pap, 'pap sod with milke or flower;' Hexham. + G. pappe, pap, paste. + Lat. papa, pappa, the word with which infants call for food. Cf. Dan. pap, Swed. papp, pasteboard; also Span. papa, Ital. pappa, pap, from Lat. pappa. This is one of those words of expressive origin which are not affected by Grimm's law. See Pap (2), Papa.

PAP (2), a teat, breast. (Scand.) M. E. pappe, Havelok, 2132; Ormulum, 6441. -O. Swed. papp, the breast; which, as Ihre notes, was afterwards changed to pott. Still preserved in Swed. patt, the breast. So also Dan. patte, suck, give patte, to give suck. The Swedish dialects retain the old form pappe, papp (Rietz). So also N. Friesic pap, pape, pakke (Outzen); Lithuan. pápas, the pap. β. Doubtless ultimately the same word as the preceding; and due to the infant's cry for food. Such words do not suffer mutation according to Grimm's law.

PAPA, a child's word for father. (F., -L.) Seldom written down; the earliest quotation for it seems to be one from Swift, in Todd's Johnson (without a reference, but it occurs in his Directions for Servants, 1745, p. 13): 'where there are little masters and misses in a house, bribe them, that they may not tell tales to papa and mamma.' Whilst admitting that the word might easily have been coined from the repetition of the syllable pa by infants, and probably was so in the first instance, we have no proof that the word is truly of native origin; the native word from this source took rather the form of pap; see Pap (1) and Pap (2). In the sense of father, we may rather look upon it as merely borrowed. -F. papa, papa; in Molière, Malade Imaginaire, i. 5 (Littre). -Lat. papa, found as a Roman cognomen. Cf. Lat. pappas, a tutor, borrowed from Gk. πάππας, papa. Nausicaa addresses her father as πάππα φίλε = dear papa; Homer, Od. vi. 57. ¶ It is probable that the ✓PA, to nourish, whence Lat. pa-ter, and E. fa-ther, owes its origin to the same infantine sound. See Pope.

PAPAL, belonging to the pope. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. papal, papall, Gower, C. A. i. 257. -F. papal, 'papall;' Cot. -Low Lat. papalis, belonging to the pope. -Lat. papa, a bishop, spiritual father. See Pope. Der. pap-ac-y, M. E. papacie, Gower, C. A. i. 256, from Low Lat. papatia, papal dignity, formed from papati-, crude form of papas, pappas, borrowed from Gk. πάππας, papa, father. Also pap-ist, All's Well, i. 3. 56, from F. pape, pope; the word pap-ism occurs in Bale's Apology, p. 83 (R.); pap-ist-ic, pap-ist-ic-al, pap-ist-ic-al-ly.

PAPER, the substance chiefly used for writing on. (L., -Gk., -Egyptian?) M. E. paper, Gower, C. A. ii. 8, l. 8. Chaucer has paper-white = as white as paper; Legend of Good Women, 1196. Directly from Lat. papyrus, paper, by dropping the final syllable. See Papyrus. Der. paper-faced, 2 Hen. IV, v. 4. 12; paper-mill, 3 Hen. VI, iv. 7. 41; paper, adj., paper, vb., paper-ing; paper-hangings, paper-hang-er, paper-money, paper-reed, Isaiah, xix. 7, paper-stainer; and see papier-maché.

PAPIER-MACHÉ, paper made into pulp, then moulded, dried, and japanned. (F., -L.) Modern. F. papier mâché, lit. chewed paper. The F. papier is from Lat. papyrus; and maché is the pp. of mâcher, O. F. mascher, from Lat. masticare, to masticate. See Paper and Masticate.

PAPILIONACEOUS, having a winged corolla somewhat like a butterfly. (L.) Botanical. Used of the bean, pea, &c. -Lat. *papilionaceus, a coined word from papilion-, stem of papilio, a butterfly. See Pavilion.

PAPILLARY, belonging to or resembling the nipples or teats, warty. (L.) See examples in Todd's Johnson; Phillips, ed. 1706, gives the sb. papilla, a teat or nipple. -Lat. papilla, a small pustule, nipple, teat; dimin. of papula, a pustule. Again, papula is a dimin. from a base PAP, to blow out or swell. Cf. Lithuan. pápas, a teat, pampiti, to swell, Gk. πομπός, a bubble, blister on the skin. See Curtius, ii. 120; and see Pimple. Der. papul-ous, full of pimples; from papula.

PAPYRUS, the reed whence paper was first made. (L., -Gk., -Egyptian?) In Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xiii. c. 11 [not 21]. -Lat. papyrus. -Gk. πάπυρος, an Egyptian kind of rush or flag, of which writing-paper was made by cutting its inner rind (βύβλος) into strips, and glueing them together transversely. The word is not Gk., but is thought to be of Egyptian origin. See Bible.

PAR, equal value, equality of real and nominal value or of condition. (L.) 'To be at par, to be equal;' Phillips, ed. 1706. -Lat. par, equal. β. Perhaps allied to Lat. parare, to prepare; see Pare. Der. pari-ty, q. v.; also ap-par-el, non-par-el.

PARA-, beside; prefix. (Gk.) A common prefix. -Gk. παρά, beside. Allied to Skt. parā, away, from, forth, towards, param, beyond, pare, thereupon, further, paratas, further, &c. Also to Lat. per, through, and to E. prefix for- in for-give; see Curtius, i. 334. From ✓PAR, to go, fare; see Fare.

PARABLE, a comparison, fable, allegory. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. parable, Chaucer, C. T. 6261; parable, Wyclif, Mark, iv. 2. -O. F. parabole, 'a parable;' Cot. -Lat. parabola, Mark, iv. 2. -Gk. παράβολη, a comparison; also a parable, Mark, iv. 2. -Gk. παράβαλλειν, to throw beside, set beside, compare. -Gk. παρά, beside; and βάλλειν, to throw, cast, allied to Skt. gal, to trickle down, fall away, from ✓GAR, to fall away. See Para- and Balustrade. Doublets, parle (old form of parley), parole, palaver; also parabola, as a mathematical term, from Lat. parabola, Gk. παράβολη, the conic section made by a plane parallel to the surface of the cone. Hence parabol-ic, parabol-ic-al, parabol-ic-al-ly. And see parley, parole, palaver.

PARACHUTE, an apparatus like an umbrella for breaking the fall from a balloon. (F., -L.) Modern; borrowed from F. parachute, put for par' à chute, lit. that which parries or guards against a fall. -F. parer, to deck, dress, also to keep off or guard from, from Lat. parare, to prepare; à, prep., to, against, from Lat. ad, to; and chute, a fall, allied to Ital. caduto, fallen, from Lat. cadere, to fall. See Parry, A- (5), and Chance.

PARACLETE, the Comforter. (L., -Gk.) 'Braggyng Win-chester, the Pope's paraclete in England;' Bale, Image, pt. iii (R.) -Lat. paracletus. -Gk. παράκλητος, called to one's aid, a helper, the Comforter (John, xiv. 16). -Gk. παρακαλεῖν, to call to one's aid, summon. -Gk. παρά, beside; and καλεῖν, to call. See Para- and Calendar.

PARADE, show, display. (F.,—Span.,—L.) In Milton, P. L. iv. 780.—F. parade, 'a boasting appearance, or shew; also, a stop on horseback;' Cot. The last sense was the earliest in French (Littre).—Span. parada, a halt, stop, pause.—Span. parar, to stop, halt; a particular restriction of the sense 'to get ready' or 'prepare'.—Lat. parare, to prepare, get ready. β. The sense of 'display' in F. was easily communicated to Span. parada, because F. parer (=Span. parar) meant 'to deck, trimme, adorn, dress,' as well as 'to ward or defend a blow' (which comes near the Spanish use); see Cotgrave. See PARO.

PARADIGM, an example, model. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) Phillips, ed. 1706, gives paradigma, the Lat. form.—F. paradigme (Littre).—Lat. paradigma.—Gk. παράδειγμα, a pattern, model; in grammar, an example of declension, &c.—Gk. παράδεινυμι, I exhibit, lit. shew by the side of.—Gk. παρά, beside; and δείνυμι, I point out. See PARA- and Diction.

PARADISE, the garden of Eden, heaven. (F.,—L.,—Gk.,—Pers.) In very early use; in Layamon, l. 24122.—F. paradis, 'paradise;' Cot.—Lat. paradisus.—Gk. παράδεισος, a park, pleasure-ground; an Oriental word in Xenophon, Hell. 4. 1. 15, Cyr. 1. 3. 14, &c., and used in the Septuagint version for the garden of Eden. See Gen. ii. 8 (LXX version); Luke, xliii. 43 (Gk.). Cf. Heb. pardés, a garden, paradise. β. Said to be of Pers. origin, the Heb. word being merely borrowed, and having no Heb. root. Mahn (in Webster) gives the O. Pers. form as paradaēsas. It appears in other forms; cf. mod. Pers. and Arab. firdaus, a garden, paradise, Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 451, Rich. Dict. p. 1080; pl. farādīs, paradises, Rich. Dict. p. 1075. But the true O. Pers. form is pairidaēza, an enclosure, place walled in (Justi).—O. Pers. pairi, around; diz, to mould, form, cognate with Skt. dih. See Addenda. Doublet, parvis. [*]

PARADOX, that which is contrary to received opinion; strange, but true. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) In Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, A. ii. sc. 1 (Amorphus' second speech). Spelt paradoxe in Minshew, ed. 1627.—F. paradoxe, 'a paradox;' Cot.—Lat. paradoxum, neut. of paradoxus, adj.—Gk. παράδοξος, contrary to opinion, strange.—Gk. παρά, beside; and δόξα, a notion, opinion, from δοκέειν, to seem. See PARA- and Dogma. Der. paradox-ic-al, paradox-ic-al-ly, Sidney, Apologie for Poetrie, ed. Arber, p. 51, l. 6 from bottom; paradox-ic-al-ness.

PARAFFINE, a solid substance resembling spermaceti, produced by distillation of coal. (F.,—L.) 'First obtained by Reichenbach in 1830;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. It is remarkable for resisting chemical action, having little affinity for an alkali; whence its name.—F. paraffine, having small affinity. Coined from Lat. par-um, adv., little; and affinis, akin, having affinity. See Affinity.

PARAGOGÉ, the addition of a letter or syllable at the end of a word. (L.,—Gk.) Examples are common in English; thus in sound-~~d~~, ancien-~~t~~, whils-~~t~~, tyran-~~t~~, the final letter is paragogic. The word has 4 syllables, the final e being sounded.—Lat. paragoge.—Gk. παράγωγη, a leading by or past, alteration, variety.—Gk. παράγειν, to lead by or past.—Gk. παρά, beside, beyond; and άγειν, to lead, drive, cognate with Lat. agere. See PARA- and Agent. Der. paragog-ic, paragog-ic-al.

PARAGON, a model of excellence. (F.,—Span.,—L.) In Shak. Temp. ii. 1. 75; Hamlet, ii. 2. 320.—F. paragon, 'a paragon, or peerless one;' Cot.—Span. paragon, a model, paragon. β. A singular word, owing its origin to two prepositions, united in a phrase.—Span. para con, in comparison with; in such phrases as para con migo, in comparison with me, para con el, in comparison with him.—Span. para, for, to, towards, which is itself a compound prep., answering to O. Span. pora, from Lat. pro ad (see Diez); and con, with, from Lat. cum, with. Thus it is really equivalent to the three Lat. prepositions pro, ad, and cum. Der. paragon, vb., Oth. ii. 1. 62.

PARAGRAPH, a distinct portion of a discourse; a short passage of a work. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. But the word was in rather early use, and was corrupted in various ways, into paragrafte, pylerafte (by change of r to l), and finally into pilcrow or pyllcrow. 'Pylcrafte, yu a booke, paragraphe;' Prompt. Parv. p. 398; see Way's note for further examples. Even the sign ¶, which was used to mark the beginning of a paragraph, was called a pilcrow; see Tusser's Husbandry, Introduction, st. 3.—F. paragraphe, 'a paragraffe, or pillcrow;' Cot.—Low Lat. paragrapum, acc. of paragrapheus, occurring in the Prompt. Parv., as above.—Gk. παράγραφος, a line or stroke drawn in the margin, lit. 'that which is written beside.'—Gk. παρά, beside; and γράφειν, to write. See PARA- and Graphic. Der. paragraphe-ic, paragraphe-ic-al.

PARALLAX, the difference between the real and apparent place of a star, &c. (Gk.) In Milton, P. R. iv. 40. But since Milton's time, the word has acquired a peculiar meaning; he may have used it in the Gk. sense.—Gk. παράλλαξις, alternation, change; also, the inclination of two lines forming an angle, esp. the angle formed by lines from a heavenly body to the earth's centre and the horizon.—Gk. παράλλασσειν, to make things alternate.—Gk. παρά, beside; and άλλάσσειν, to change, alter, from άλλος, other, cognate with Lat. alius. See PARA- and Alien. See Parallel.

PARALLEL, side by side, similar. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) In Shak. Oth. ii. 3. 355.—O. F. parallele, 'parallel;' Cot.—Lat. parallelus.—Gk. παράλληλος, parallel, side by side.—Gk. παρά for παρά, beside; and *άλληλος, one another, only found in the gen., dat., and acc. plural. β. The base άλλ-ηλο- stands for άλλ-άλλο-, a reduplicated form, the two members of the word being dissimilated after reduplication; hence the sense is 'the other the other,' or 'one another,' i. e. mutual. Άλλος is cognate with Lat. alius, other. See PARA- and Alien. Der. parallel, sb., Temp. i. 2. 74; parallel, vb., Macb. ii. 3. 67; parallel-ism; also parallelo-gram, q. v., parallelo-piped, q. v.

PARALLELOGRAM, a four-sided rectilineal figure, whose opposite sides are parallel. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) In Cotgrave.—O. F. parallelogramme, 'a parallelogram, or long square;' Cot. [He uses only two f's.]—Lat. parallelogrammum, a parallelogram.—Gk. παράλληλογραμμον, a parallelogram; neut. of παράλληλογραμμος, adj., bounded by parallel lines.—Gk. παράλληλος, crude form of παράλληλος, parallel; and γράμμα, a stroke, line, from γράφειν, to write. See Parallel and Graphic.

PARALLELOPIPED, a regular solid bounded by six plane parallel surfaces. (L.,—Gk.) Sometimes written parallelopipeidon, which is nearer the Gk. form. In Phillips, ed. 1706. A glaring instance of bad spelling, as it certainly should be parallelepiped (with e, not o). Moreover, Webster marks the accent on the i, which is, etymologically, the weakest syllable in the word.—Lat. parallelepipedum, used by Boethius (White).—Gk. παράλληλεπίπεδον, a body with parallel surfaces.—Gk. παράλληλῃ, for παράλληλο-, crude form of παράλληλος, parallel; and ἐπίπεδον, a plane surface. The form ἐπίπεδον is neut. of ἐπίπεδος, on the ground, flat, level, plane; from ἐπῖ, upon, and πέδον, the ground. The Gk. πέδον is from the same root as πούς (gen. ποδός), the foot, and E. foot. See Parallel, Epi-, and Foot.

PARALOGISM, a conclusion unwarranted by the premises. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) In Minshew, ed. 1627.—F. paralogisme, cited by Minshew.—Lat. paralogismus.—Gk. παρολογισμός, a false reckoning, false conclusion, fallacy.—Gk. παρολογίζομαι, I misreckon, count amiss.—Gk. παρά, beside; and λογίζομαι, I reckon, from λόγος, a discourse, account, reason. See PARA- and Logic.

PARALYSE, to render useless, deaden. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) Modern; added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. It came in, perhaps, about the beginning of the present century. Todd cites: 'Or has taxation chill'd the aguish land And paralysed Britannia's bounteous hand?' London Cries, or Pict. of Tumult, 1805, p. 39.—F. paralyser, to paralyse; Littre. Formed from the sb. paralytie, palsy; see further under Paralysis.

PARALYSIS, palsy. (L.,—Gk.) In Kersey, ed. 1706.—Lat. paralysis.—Gk. παράλυσις, a loosening aside, a disabing of the nerves, paralysis.—Gk. παράλυν, to loose from the side, loose beside, relax.—Gk. παρά, beside; and λύνειν, to loosen. See PARA- and Lose. Der. paralyt-ic, from F. paralytique (Cot.), which from Lat. paralyticus = Gk. παρλυτικός, afflicted with palsy (Matt. iv. 24). Doublet, palsy.

PARAMATTA, a fabric like merino, of worsted and cotton. (New South Wales.) So named from Paramatta, a town near Sydney, New South Wales.

PARAMOUNT, chief, of the highest importance. (F.,—L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. He also gives paravail, the term used in contrast with it. A lord paramount is supreme, esp. as compared with his tenant paravail, i. e. his inferior. 'Let him [the pope] no longer count himselfe lord paramount over the princes of the world, no longer hold kings as his servants paravaile;' Hooker, A Discourse of Justification (R.) Neither words are properly adjectives, but adverbial phrases; they correspond respectively to O. F. par amont, at the top (lit. by that which is upwards), and par aval (lit. by that which is downwards). Both are Norman F. phrases used in the old law; see Blount's Law Lexicon. The prep. par = Lat. per; see Per-, prefix. The F. amont is explained under Amount; and F. aval under Avalanche. Der. paramount, sb., Milton, P. L. ii. 508. [†]

PARAMOUR, a lover, one beloved, now usually in a bad sense. (F.,—L.) In Chaucer, C. T. 6036. But orig. an adverbial phrase, as in: 'For par amour I louede hire first or thou;' id. C. T. 1157.—F. par amour, by love, with love.—Lat. per, by, with; and amorem, acc. of amor, love. See Per- and Amour.

PARAPET, a rampart, esp. one breast-high. (F.,—Ital.,—L.) In Shak. 1 Hen. IV. ii. 3. 55.—F. parapet, 'a parapet, or wall breast-high;' Cot.—Ital. parapetto, 'a cuirace, a breast-plate, a fence for the breast or hart; also, a parapet or wall breast-high;' Florio. =

Ital. para-, for parare, 'to adorn, . . . to ward or defende a blow,' Florio; and petto, the breast. — Lat. parare, to prepare, adorn; and pectus, the breast. See Parry and Pectoral.

PARAPHERNALIA, ornaments, trappings. (L., — Gk.) Properly used of the property which a bride possesses beyond her dowry. 'In one particular instance the wife may acquire a property in some of her husband's goods; which shall remain to her after his death, and not go to his executors. These are called her paraphernalia, which is a term borrowed from the civil law; it is derived from the Greek language, signifying over and above her dower;' Blackstone's Commentaries, b. ii. c. 29 (R.) Formed from Lat. paraphern-a, the property of a bride over and above her dower, by adding -alia, the neut. pl. form of the common suffix -alis. — Gk. παράπερνα, that which a bride brings beyond her dower. — Gk. πὰρὰ, beyond, beside; and φέρῃ, a dowry, lit. that which is brought by the wife, from φέρειν, to bring, cognate with E. bear. See Para- and Bear (1).

PARAPHRASE, an explanation or free translation. (F., — L., — Gk.) See Udall's translation of Erasmus' 'Paraphrase vpon the Newe Testamente,' 2 vols. folio, 1548-9. — O. F. paraphrase, 'a paraphrase;' Cot. — Lat. paraphrasin, acc. of paraphrasis. — Gk. παράφρασις, a paraphrase. — Gk. παράφραζειν, to speak in addition, amplify, paraphrase. — Gk. πὰρὰ, beside; and φράζειν, to speak. See Para- and Phrase. Der. paraphrase, vb.; paraphrast, one who paraphrases, Gk. παράφραστής; paraphrast-ic, paraphrast-ic-al, paraphrast-ic-al-ly.

PARAQUITO, a little parrot. (Span.) In Shak. 1 Hen. IV, ii. 3. 88; pl. paraquitos, Ford, Sun's Darling, A. i. sc. 1. — Span. periquito, a parakeet, small parrot; dimin. of perico, a parrot. β. The further etymology is uncertain; Diez says that Perico may mean 'little Peter,' as a dimin. from Pedro, Peter, which may also account for O. Span. perico, perillo, a little whelp (Minsheu). See Parrot.

PARASITE, one who frequents another's table, a hanger-on. (F., — L., — Gk.) In Shak. Rich. II, ii. 2. 70. — F. parasite, 'a parasite, a trencher-friend, smell-feast;' Cot. — Lat. parasitus. — Gk. παράσιτος, eating beside another at his table, a parasite, toad-eater. — Gk. πὰρὰ, beside; and σίτος, wheat, corn, grain, flour, bread, food, a word of unknown origin. Der. parasit-ic, from Gk. παράσιτικός; parasit-ic-al. [†]

PARASOL, a small umbrella used to keep off the heat of the sun. (F., — Port.?, — L.) 'Upon another part of the wall is the like figure of another great man, over whose head one officer holds a parasol;' Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, p. 153. — F. parasol, 'an umbrella;' Cot. It can hardly be an orig. F. word, but more likely borrowed from Portuguese, who would be just the people to apply it to the umbrellas of Eastern lands. — Port. parasol, an umbrella. — Port. para-, for parar, to ward off, parry; and sol, the sun. See Parry and Solar. We find also Span. parasol, Ital. parasole. ¶ Of similar formation is F. para-pluie, a guard against rain, an umbrella, from pluie, rain, Lat. pluvia.

PARBOIL, to boil thoroughly. (F., — L.) It now means 'to boil in part,' or insufficiently, from a notion that it is made up of part and boil. Formerly, it meant 'to boil thoroughly,' as in Ben Jonson, Every Man, iv. 1. 16 (ed. Wheatley); on which see Wheatley's note. 'To parboyle, præcoquere;' Levins. 'My liver's parboild,' i. e. burnt up; Webster, White Devil, near the end. M. E. parboilen; 'Parboyld, parbullitus; Parboylyn mete, semibullio, parbullio.' Here the use of semibullio shews that the word was misunderstood at an early time. — O. F. parbouillir, to cook thoroughly (Roquefort); Cotgrave has: 'pourbouillir, to parboile thoroughly.' — Low Lat. parbullire (as in the Prompt. Parv.); Lat. perbullire, to boil thoroughly. See Per- and Boil. ¶ For a somewhat similar change in sense, see Purblind.

PARCEL, a small part, share, division, small package. (F., — L.) M. E. parcel, P. Plowman, B. x. 63; parcelle, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 135, l. 14. The old sense is 'portion.' — F. parcelle, 'a parcell, particle, piece, little part;' Cot. Cf. Port. parcela, an article of an account. Formed from Low Lat. *particella, not recorded, but still preserved in Ital. particella, a small portion, a word given also in Florio; the true Lat. form is particula; see Particle. Der. parcel, vb.

PARCH, to scorch. (F., — L.) M. E. parchen, paarchen. 'Paarche pecyn or benys [= to parch peas or beans], frigo, ustillo;' Prompt. Parv. Of doubtful origin; hardly from a Celtic source, such as Irish barg, burning, red hot; O. Gael. barg, red hot. (These words seem to be related to Skt. bhraj, to boil, fry, from √ BHARG, to fry, to parch. See Fry.) β. Koch (Engl. Gramm. vol. iii. pt. 2, p. 193) suggests that parch is M. E. perchen, to pierce, an occasional form of percen, to pierce (F. percer); see Pierce. 'A knyghte . . . perchede the syde of Jesu;' Religious Pieces, ed. Perry (E. E. T. S.), p. 42; see another example in Halliwell, s. v. perche; and cf. √

PARSE, to pierce, id. Again, in Halliwell, s. v. persaunt, it appears that 'piercing' was an epithet of sun-beams. As to the correctness of this solution, see Addenda. [†]

PARCHMENT, the skin of a sheep or goat prepared for writing on. (F., — L., — Gk.) The t is excrement. M. E. perchemin, parchemyn; P. Plowman, B. xiv. 191, 193. — F. parchemin, parchment. — Lat. pergamina, pergamena, parchment; orig. fem. of Pergamenus, adj., belonging to Pergamos. [Parchment was invented by Eumenes, of Pergamus, the founder of the celebrated library at Pergamus, about 190 B. C.; Haydn.] — Gk. περγαμνή, parchment; from the city of Pergamos in Asia, where it was brought into use by Crates of Mallos, when Ptolemy cut off the supply of biblus from Egypt (Liddell and Scott). Crates flourished about B. C. 160. Either way, the etymology is clear. — Gk. Πέργαμος, more commonly Πέργαμον, Pergamus, in Mysia of Asia Minor; now called Bergamo.

PARD, a panther, leopard, spotted wild beast. (L., — Gk.) M. E. pard, Wyclif, Rev. xiii. 2. — Lat. pardus, a male panther; Rev. xiii. 2 (Vulgate). — Gk. πάρδος, a pard; used for a leopard, panther, or ounce. An Eastern word; cf. Pers. pārs, pārsh, a pard; pārs, a panther, Rich. Dict. pp. 316, 325. Der. leo-pard, camelo-pard. [†]

PARDON, to forgive. (F., — L.) Common in Shakespeare. Rich. quotes 'nor pardoned a riche man' from the Golden Boke, c. 47. But the verb hardly appears in M. E., being formed (in English) from the M. E. sb. pardonun, pardun, pardon, a common word, occurring in Chaucer, C. T. 12860. And see Chaucer's description of the Pardonere, l. 689. — F. pardon, sb., due to pardonner, vb., to pardon. — Low Lat. perdonare, to remit a debt (used A. D. 819), to grant, indulge, pardon. — Lat. per, thoroughly; and donare, to give, from donum, a gift. See Per- and Donation. Der. pardon, sb. (but see above); pardon-er, pardon-able, pardon-ably.

PARE, to cut or shave off. (F., — L.) M. E. paren. 'To wey pens with a peys and pare the heuyest' = to weigh pence with a weight, and pare down the heaviest; P. Plowman, B. v. 243. — F. parer, 'to deck, trimme, . . . also to pare the hoofe of a horse;' Cot. — Lat. parare, to prepare. β. The form of the root is PAR, but the sense is uncertain; it may be related either to PAR, to pass through (whence E. fare), or to PAR, to fill (whence E. full); see Curtius, i. 338, Fick, i. 664. Der. par-ing. From Lat. parare we have com-pare, pre-pare, re-pair (1), se-par-ate, em-per-or, im-per-ial, ap-par-at-us, sever, &c. And see Parry, Parade.

PARAGORIC, assuaging pain; a medicine that assuages pain. (L., — Gk.) 'Paragorica, medicines that comfort, mollify, and assuage;' Phillips, ed. 1706. — Lat. paragoricus, assuaging; whence neut. pl. paragorica. — Gk. παρηγορικός, addressing, encouraging, soothing. — Gk. παρηγορος, addressing, encouraging; cf. παρηγορεῖν, to address, exhort. — Gk. πὰρὰ, beside; and ἀγορεύειν, to speak in an assembly, from ἀγορά, an assembly. Cf. Gk. ἀγείρειν, to assemble; from √ GAR, to assemble; Fick, i. 73.

PARENT, a father or mother. (F., — L.) In the Geneva Bible, 1561, Ephes. vi. 1 (R.). — F. parent, 'a cousin, kinsman, allie;' Cot. — Lat. parentem, acc. of parens, a parent, lit. one who produces, formed from parere, to produce, of which the usual pres. part. is pariens. — √ PAR, to fill; whence also Skt. pri, to fill, pri, to bring over, protect, Gk. πρίν * (aor. ἔ-πρω-), to give, offer, allot. See Fick, i. 664. The same root appears in the latter syllable of E. hei-fer; see Heifer. Der. parent-al, from Lat. parentalis; parent-al-ly, parent-less; also parent-age, in Levins, from F. parentage, 'parentage,' Cot.

PARENTHESIS, a phrase inserted in another which would appear complete without it. (Gk.) In Cotgrave, to translate O. F. parenthese. — Gk. παρέθεσις, a putting in beside, insertion, parenthesis. — Gk. πὰρ, for πὰρὰ, beside; ἐν, in; and θέσις, a placing, from √ DHA, to place, set. See Para-, In, and Thesis. Der. parenthet-ic, extended from Gk. παρέθετος, put in beside, parenthetic; parenthet-ic-al, ly.

PARGET, to plaister a wall. (L.?) Perhaps obsolete; once rather common. In Levins, Baret, Falsgrave, &c. M. E. pargeten. 'Pargetyn walles, Gipso, linio (sic); Parget, or playster for wallys, Gipsum, litura;' Prompt. Parv., and see Way's note. It is frequently spelt perget.

β. The word has lost an initial s, as it is also found in the fuller form. 'Spargetyn or pargetete wallys, sparchyn or pargetyn, Gipso, limo;' Prompt. Parv. p. 467. This suggests a derivation from Low Lat. spargitare, to sprinkle frequently, a frequentative form of spargere, to sprinkle; see Sparse. See examples in Halliwell and Prompt. Parv. of M. E. sparkien, to sprinkle. Cf. 'Sparkling, claying between the spars to cover the thatch of cottages; Norfolk;' Halliwell. 'Spark, to splash with dirt; North;' id. ¶ The usual derivation is from Lat. parietem, acc. of paries, a wall. This does not account for initial s, nor does it seem to me to account for the g. Cf. O. F. paroy, 'a wall;' Cot.

PARHELION, a mock sun, a bright light sometimes seen near the sun. (L., — Gk.) Spelt parhelium and parelium in Phillips, ed.

1706. — Lat. parhelion, parelion (White). — Gk. παρήλιον, a parhelion; neut. of παρήλιος, adj., beside the sun. — Gk. παρ, for παρά, beside; and ἥλιος, the sun. See Para- and Heliacal.

PARIAN, belonging to Paros. (Gk.) Paros is an island in the Aegean sea.

PARIETAL, forming the sides or walls, esp. applied to two bones in the fore part of the skull. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. — Lat. parietalis, belonging to a wall. — Lat. pariet-, stem of paries, a wall. β. Paries is supposed to mean that which goes round; from par-, equivalent to Gk. περί, Skt. pari, round about; and -i, base of ire, to go. Cf. Skt. pariyanta, a boundary, which (however) is from pari, around, and anta, a limit = E. end. Der. pellitory (1), q. v.

PARISH, a district under one pastor, an ecclesiastical district. (F., —L., —Gk.) Orig. an ecclesiastical division. M. E. parische, Chaucer, C. T. 493. — F. paroisse, a parish. — Lat. paræcia, a parish, orig. an ecclesiastical district. — Gk. παροικία, an ecclesiastical district, lit. a neighbourhood. — Gk. παρόικος, neighbouring, living near together. — Gk. παρ, for παρά, beside, near; and οἶκος, a house, abode, cognate with Lat. vicus. See Para- and Vicinage. Der. parish-ion-er, formed by adding -er to M. E. parishen, P. Plowman, B. xi. 67; this M. E. parishen = O. F. paroisien = Low Lat. parochianus, with the same sense as (and a mere variant of) Lat. parochialis; see Parochial. Also paroch-i-al. ¶ It follows that parishioner should rather have been spelt parishianer or parishener; also that the suffix -er is quite unnecessary. Indeed Paroisien survives as a proper name; I find it in the Clergy List, 1873.

PARITY, equality, resemblance, analogy. (F., —L.) In Cotgrave. — F. parité, 'parity'; Cot. — Lat. paritatem, acc. of paritas, equality. — Lat. pari-, crude form of par, equal; with suffix -itas. See Par.

PARK, an enclosed ground. (E.) In early use; in Layamon, l. 1432 (later text). Park = O. F. parc, is a F. spelling, and is found in F. as early as in the 12th century; but the word is E., being a contraction of M. E. parrok, from A. S. pearroc, a word which is now also spelt paddock. See further under Paddock (2). We find also Irish and Gaelic paire, W. park and parwg (the latter preserving the full suffix), Bret. park; Du. perk, Swed. and Dan. park, G. pferch (an enclosure, sheepfold); also F. parc, Ital. parco, Span. parque. I suppose it to be of Teutonic origin, in which case the Celtic words are borrowed ones. Der. park-ed, 1 Hen. VI, ii. 4. 45; park-er, i. e. park-keeper (Levins); park-keeper; im-park.

PARLEY, a conference, treating with an enemy. (F., —L., —Gk.) 1. Shak. has parley as a sb., Macb. ii. 3. 87; also as a verb, Hamlet. i. 3. 123. — F. parler, sb., 'speech, talk, language'; Cot. This is derived from F. parler, vb., to speak. 2. Shak. also has the vb. parle, to speak, Lucrece, l. 100, whence the sb. parle, a parley, Hamlet. i. 1. 62. This is also from F. parler. — Low Lat. parabolare, to discourse, talk. — Low Lat. parabola, a talk; Lat. parabola, a parable. — Gk. παράβολή, a parable; see Parable. Der. parl-ance, borrowed from F. parlance, formed from F. parlant, pres. part. of parler; parl-i-ment, q. v., parl-our, q. v. And see parole, palaver.

PARLIAMENT, a meeting for consultation, deliberative assembly. (F., —L., —Gk.; with L. suffix.) M. E. parlement, Havelok, 1006; Rob. of Glouc., p. 169, l. 7; Chaucer, C. T. 2972. [The spelling parliament is due to Low Lat. parlamentum, frequently used in place of parlamentum, the better form.] — F. parlement, 'a speaking, parleying, also, a supreme court'; Cot. Formed with suffix -ment (= Lat. -mentum) from F. parler, to speak. See Parley. Der. parliament-ar-y, parliament-ar-i-an. [†]

PARLOUR, a room for conversation, a sitting-room. (F., —L., —Gk.) M. E. parlour, Chaucer, Troil. ii. 82; pariur, Ancien Riwe, p. 50, l. 17. — O. F. parleor (Littre), later parloir, 'a parlour'; Cot. — F. parl-er, to speak, with suffix -oir (= -eor) = Lat. -atorium, -itorium; so that parloir answers to a Low Lat. *parabolatorium, a place to talk in; cf. M. E. dortour, F. dortoir = dormitorium, a place to sleep in. See further under Parley.

PARLOUS, old pronunciation of Perilous. (F., —L.) 'A parlous fear,' Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 1. 14. See Peril.

PAROCHIAL, belonging to a parish. (L., —Gk.) In the Rom. of the Rose, 7689. — Lat. parochialis (White). — Lat. parochia, another form of paræcia, a parish. — Gk. παροικία; see Parish.

PARODY, the alteration of a poem to another subject, a burlesque imitation. (L., —Gk.) 'Satiric poems, full of parodies, that is, of verses patched up from great poets, and turned into another sense than their author intended them;' Dryden, Discourse on Satire [on the Grecian Sillis]; in Dryden's Poems, ed. 1851, p. 365. — Lat. parodia. — Gk. παρῳδία, the same as παρῳδή, a song sung beside, a parody. — Gk. παρ, for παρά, beside; and ὕδης, an ode. See Para- and Ode. Der. parody, verb; parod-ist.

PAROLE, a word, esp. a word of honour, solemn promise; a pass-word. (F., —L., —Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — F. parole, 'a word, a tearm, a saying'; Cot. The same word as Prov.

paraula (Bartsch), Span. palabra (= parabra = parabla, by the frequent interchange of r and l), Port. palavra; all from Low Lat. parabola, a discourse, Lat. parabola, a parable. See further under Parable. Doublets, parable, parle (old form of parley), palaver.

PARONYMOUS, allied in origin; also, having a like sound, but a different origin. (Gk.) Rather a useless word, as it is used in two senses, (1) allied in origin, as in the case of man, manhood; and (2) unallied in origin, but like-sounding, as in the case of hair, hare. — Gk. παρόνυμος, formed from a word by a slight change; i. e. in the former sense. — Gk. παρά, beside; and ὄνομα, a name, cognate with E. name; the ω resulting from α and ο. See Para- and Name. Der. paronom-as-ia, a slight change in the meaning of a word, from Gk. παρωνομασία, better παρωνομασία. Also paronyme, i. e. a paronymous word, esp. in the second sense.

PAROXYSM, a fit of acute pain, a violent action. (F., —L., —Gk.) 'Paroxysme, the accesse or fit of an ague;' Minshew. — F. paroxysme, 'the return, or fit, of an ague'; Cot. — Lat. paroxysmus. — Gk. παροξυσμός, irritation, the fit of a disease. — Gk. παροξύνειν, to urge on, provoke, irritate. — Gk. παρ, for παρά, beside; and δένειν, to sharpen, provoke, from δέν, sharp. See Para- and Oxalic. Der. paroxysm-al.

PARRICIDE, (1) the murderer of a father; (2) the murder of a father. (F., —L.) 1. The former is the orig. sense. Both senses occur in Shakespeare, (1) K. Lear, ii. 1. 48; (2) Macb. iii. 1. 32. — F. parricide, 'a parricide, a murderer of his own father'; Cot. — Lat. parricida, a murderer of his father. — Lat. parri-, put for patri-, crude form of pater, a father, cognate with E. father; and -cida = cæda, a slayer, from cadere, to slay, fell, causal verb from cadere, to fall. See Father and Cadence. 2. In the latter sense, it answers to Lat. parricidium, the murder of a father; formed from the same sb. and vb. ¶ There is the same ambiguity about fratricide and matricide. Der. parricid-al.

PARROT, a well-known tropical bird, capable of imitating the human voice. (F., —L., —Gk.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. i. 1. 53. Spelt parat in Levins, ed. 1570; but parrot in Skelton; see his poem called 'Speke, Parrot.' — F. perrot, 'a man's proper name, being a diminutive or derivative of Peter'; Cot. Cf. F. perroquet, 'a parrot'; Cot.; also spelt parroquet.

β. The F. Perrot or Pierrot is still a name for a sparrow; much as Philip was the M. E. name for the same bird. The F. perroquet was probably an imitation of, rather than directly borrowed from, the Span. perichito, which may likewise be explained as a derivative of Span. perico, meaning both 'a parrot' and 'little Peter,' dimin. of Pedro, Peter. γ. The mod. Ital. parrocchetto is also spelt perucchetto, as if it were a dimin. of parruca, a wig (!); but we find in Florio the O. Ital. forms parochetto, parochito, 'a kind of parrots, called a parachito;' which seems to be nothing but the Span. word adapted to Italian.

δ. The Port. form is also periquito, and we should expect the names to be borrowed from Spanish and Portuguese in particular, on account of their sea-voyages. The Ital. word would be borrowed from the Spanish name, and the F. perrot is a sort of translation of the same. If this be right, we may refer all the names to Lat. Petrus, Peter. — Gk. πέτρος, a stone, rock; as a proper name, Peter; a word of uncertain origin.

PARRY, to turn aside, ward off. (F., —L.) A late word. 'Parrying, in fencing, the action of saving a man's self, or staying off the strokes offered by another;' Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. — F. paré, used as equivalent to Ital. parata, a defence, guard; properly pp. of parer, 'to deck, trick, trimme, . . . also to ward or defend a blow'; Cot. — Lat. parare, to prepare, deck. See Pare. Der. par-a-chute, q. v., para-pet, q. v., para-sol, q. v., ram-part, q. v.

PARSE, to tell the parts of speech. (L.) 'Let the childe, by and by, both construe and parse it ouer againe;' Ascham, Schoolmaster, b. i. ed. Arber, p. 26. An old school term; to parse is to declare 'quæ pars orationis' = what part of speech, a word is. It is merely the Lat. pars used familiarly. See Part. Der. pars-ing.

PARSEE, an adherent of the old Persian religion, in India. (Pers.) Spelt Persee, Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1666, p. 55. — Pers. pârsî, a Persian; from Pârs, Persia; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 106.

PARSIMONY, frugality. (F., —L.) Spelt parsimonie in Minshew, ed. 1627. — F. parsimonie, not in Cotgrave, but cited by Minshew. — Lat. parsimonia, better parcimonia, parsimony. — Lat. parci = parco, crude form of parcus, sparing; with suffix -monia, formed by joining the Aryan suffixes -man and -ya (Schleicher, Compend. § 219). Cf. Lat. parcere, to spare. β. An initial s has been lost; the word parcus is allied to Gk. σπαρῶς, scarce, rare, and to E. spare; see Spare. Der. parsimoni-ous, -ly, -ness.

PARSLEY, a well-known pot-herb. (F., —L., —Gk.) Formerly persley, Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 5. M. E. persil, P. Plowman, B. vi. 288; spelt persely in one of the MSS., id. A. vi. 273, footnote. — F. persil, 'parsley'; Cot. Spelt peresil in the 13th cent.; Wright's Vocab. i. 139, col. 2. — Low Lat. petroselinum, rock-parsley. — Gk. πετροσέλινον, rock-parsley. — Gk. πέτρος, crude form of πέτρος, a rock; and σέλινον, a kind of parsley, whence E. Celery. The roots of these words are unknown.

PARSNIP, PARSNIP, an edible plant with a carrot-like root. (F., — L.) Formerly parsnep; the pl. parsnepes occurs in Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 9. (Palsgrave rightly drops the r, and spells it pasneppe). Corrupted from O.F. pastenague, 'a parsnip'; Cot. [For the change from qu to p, compare Lat. quinque with Gk. πέντε (five). The r is due to the sound of the F. a; the te was dropped, and the latter a was weakened, first to e, and then to i.] Cotgrave also gives pastenade and pastenaille with the same sense. — Lat. pastinaca, a parsnip.

β. Pastinaca prob. means 'that which is dug up,' hence a parsnip, also a carrot; the root being the edible part. — Lat. pastinare, to dig up. — Lat. pastinum, a kind of two-pronged dibble for breaking the ground. Prob. from a base PAS, weakened to PIS in pinser, to beat, crush, bruise; cf. Skt. piśh, piśh, piśh, to grind, pound, bruise. ¶ The corruption of the final syllable may have been influenced by the word turnep or turnip, in which the latter syllable is correct.

PARSON, the incumbent of a parish. (F., — L.) M. E. persone, Chaucer, C. T. 480. In the Ancrén Riwe, p. 216, persone means person. It is certain that parson and person are the same word; for the Low Lat. persona is constantly used in the sense of 'parson.' See the Low Lat. persona in Ducange; it means dignity, rank, a choir-master, curate, parson, body, man, person. The sense of parson may easily have been due to the mere use of the word as a title of dignity; cf. 'Laicus quidam magnæ personæ' = 'a certain lay-man of great dignity'; Ducange. β. The quotation from Blackstone is better known than his authority for the statement. He says: 'A parson, persona ecclesiæ, is one that hath full possession of all the rights of a parochial church. He is called parson, persona, because by his person the church, which is an invisible body, is represented;' Comment. b. i. c. 11. This reason may well be doubted, but without affecting the etymology. See PERSON. Der. parson-age, a coined word with F. suffix, Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. ser. 7 (R.)

¶ The proposed derivation from Lat. parochianus is impossible; this word is preserved in parishen, the old form of parishioner; see PARISHIONER. And a parishioner is precisely what a parson is not. [†]

PART, a portion, piece. (F., — L.) M. E. part, sb., Floris and Blanchefleur, ed. Lumby, l. 522; hence parten, vb., id. 387. — F. part, 'a part'; Cot. — Lat. partem, acc. of pars, a part.

β. The crude form is par-ti, formed with a suffix (Aryan ta) from the base par, occurring in Lat. parere *, only found in a-per-ire, o-per-ire, re-per-ire, all nearly related to par-are, to get ready, furnish, provide; so that the orig. sense of part would be 'that which is provided,' a share. See PARÉ. Der. part, vb., M. E. parten, as above; part-ible, from Lat. partibilis; part-ly, Cor. i. l. 40; part-ing; and see part-i-al, partake, part-i-cip-ate, part-i-cip-le, part-i-cle, part-i-san, part-i-ion, partner, part-y; also a-part, com-part-ment, de-part, im-part, re-part-ee, par-cel, port-ion.

PARTAKE, to take part in or of, share. (Hybrid; F., — L., and Scand.) For part-take, and orig. used as part take, two separate words; indeed, we still use take part in much the same sense. 'The breed which we breken, wher it is not [is it not] the delynge, or part takynge, of the body of the lord?' Wyclif, 1 Cor. x. 16 (earlier version; later version omits part). In the Bible of 1551, we find: 'is not the breade whiche we breake, partakynge of the body of Christ?' in the same passage. See further in a note by Dr. Chance in N. and Q. 4th Series, viii. 481. Similarly, we find G. theilnehmen = theil nehmen, to take a part. Indeed, E. partake may have been suggested by the corresponding Scandinavian word (viz. Dan. deeltage, Swed. deltaga, to partake, participate) since take is a Scand. word. See PART and TAKE. Der. partak-er, spelt partetaker in Coverdale's Bible (1538), Heb. xii. 8; partak-ing, spelt partetakyng, Palsgrave. [†]

PARTERRE, a laid-out garden, a system of plots with walks, &c. (F., — L.) 'Thus . . . was the whole parterre environ'd'; Evelyn's Diary, 8 Oct., 1641. — F. parterre, 'a floor, even piece of ground, part of a garden which consists of beds, without any tree'; Cot. — F. par terre, along the ground. — Lat. per terram, along the ground; see PER and TERRACE.

PARTIAL, relating to a part only. (F., — L.) Frequently in the sense of taking one part in preference to others, hence, inclined in behalf of. 'That in thine own behalf maist partiall seeme;' Spenser, F. Q. vii. 6. 35. — F. partial, 'solitary, . . . also partiall, unequal, factious'; Cot. — Low Lat. partialis; formed with suffix -alis from Lat. parti, crude form of pars, a part. See PART. Der. partial-ly; partial-i-ty, spelt parcialtye, Skelton, Colin Clout, l. 1195, from F. partialité, 'partiality,' Cot.

⊕ PARTICIPATE, to partake, have a share. (L.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. v. 245; properly a pp. or adj., as in Cor. i. 1. 106. — Lat. participatus, pp. of participare, to have a share, give a share. — Lat. participium, stem of particeps, sharing in. — Lat. parti-, crude form of pars, a part; and capere, to take. See PART and CAPACIOUS. Der. participat-ion, M. E. participacioun, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 10, l. 2564, from F. participation, which from Lat. acc. participationem; also particip-ant, from the stem of the pres. part.; also particip-le, q. v.

PARTICIPLE, a part of speech. (F., — L.) So called because partaking of the nature both of an adjectival substantive and a verb. In Ben Jonson, Eng. Grammar, c. 9. The insertion of the l is curious, and due to a misapprehension of the sound of the F. word, the difference in F. between partice and participle being slight. — F. participle, 'a participle, in grammar'; Cot. — Lat. participium, a participle. Lat. participi-, crude form of particeps, partaking; see PARTICIPATE.

PARTICLE, a very small portion, atom. (F., — L.) In Shak. Jul. Cæs. ii. 1. 139. An abbreviation for particule, due to loss of all stress in the last syllable. — F. particule, not in Cot., but in use in the 16th cent. (Littré). — Lat. particula, a small part; double dimin. (with suffixes -cu- and -la) from parti-, crude form of pars, a part. Der. particul-ar, M. E. particuler, Chaucer, C. T. 11434, from F. particulier, which from Lat. particularis, concerning a part; particular-ly; particular-ise, from F. particulariser, 'to particularize,' Cot.; particular-i-ty, from F. particularité, 'a particularity,' Cot. Doublet, parcel.

PARTISAN (1), an adherent of a party. (F., — Ital., — L.) 'These partizans of faction often try'd'; Daniel, Civil Wars, pt. ii. — F. partisan, 'a partner, partaker'; Cot. — Ital. partigiano, formerly also partegiano, 'a partner'; Florio. Cf. Ital. parteggiare, 'to share, take part with,' Florio; answering to F. partager, to take part in. The forms partigiano, parteggiare, answer to Low Lat. forms partitanius *, partaticare *, not found; the former being due to Lat. partitus, pp. of partiri, to part, divide, from parti-, crude form of pars, a part. See PART, PARTITION. Der. partisan-ship.

PARTISAN (2), PARTIZAN, a kind of halberd. (F., — O. H. G. ?) In Hamlet, i. 1. 140. — F. partisane, 'a partisan, or leading-staff'; Cot. β. But the spelling partisane is an accommodated form, to make it appear as if derived from F. partuiser, to pierce (from partuis, a hole, which from Lat. partusius, pp. of per-tundere, to strike through). Cf. O. F. partuisaine (15th cent.); Ital. partegiana, 'a partesan, a iavelin,' Florio; Swed. bardisan, a partisan; Low Lat. partesana (occurring A.D. 1488). γ. Etymology doubtful; but the word must almost certainly be extended from O. H. G. partā, M. H. G. barte, a battle-axe, which occurs in E. hal-berd. See further under Halberd. ¶ This etymology would be quite satisfactory if we could account for the suffix -esan or -isan; but this remains, at present, unexplained. Can we suppose that the weapon was jocosely termed 'a divider,' by intentional confusion with Low Lat. partizare, to divide, occurring as early as A.D. 1253? See PARTISAN (1).

PARTITION, a separate part, something that separates. (F., — L.) In Shak. meaning (1) division, Mid. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 210; (2) a party-wall, id. v. 168. — F. partition, omitted by Cot., but occurring in the 14th cent. (Littré). — Lat. partitionem, acc. of partitio, a sharing, partition. — Lat. partiti = partitio, crude form of pp. of partiri, to divide. — Lat. parti-, crude form of pars, a part. See PART. Der. partition, vb. So also partit-ive, from F. partitif (Littré), as if from Lat. partitivus *, not used; hence partit-ive-ly.

PARTNER, a sharer, associate. (F., — L.) A curious corruption, due to the eye, i. e. to the misreading of MSS. and books. In many MSS. c and t are just alike, and the M. E. word which appears as partener or parcener is really to be read as parcener, with c, not t. For a similar instance of misreading, see CITIZEN. The spelling parcener occurs as late as in Cotgrave, as will appear; and even in Blackstone's Commentaries, b. ii. c. 12 (R., s. v. parcel). For the spelling partener, see Wyclif, 1 Cor. ix. 12; for the spelling parcener, id. Rev. xviii. 4. — O. F. parsonnier, 'a partner, or co-parcener'; Cot. — Low Lat. partitionarius *, not found; though we find partionarius sometimes used in the sense of 'common' or 'mutual,' which seems to be a contracted form of it. — Lat. partition-, stem of partitio; see PARTITION. Thus partner = partitioner. Der. partner-ship. [†]

PARTRIDGE, a well-known bird preserved for game. (F., — L., — Gk.) M. E. partriche, pertriche, Richard the Redeles, ed. Skeat, iii. 38. — F. perdriz, 'a partridge,' in which the second r is intrusive. — Lat. perdicem, acc. of perdix. — Gk. πέδις, a partridge; perhaps named from its cry, as some connect it with Gk. πέδομαι, Skt. pard.

PARTURIENT, about to produce young. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. parturient-, stem of pres. part. of parturire, to be ready to bring forth young. — Lat. partur-us, fut. part. of parere, to produce; see PARENT. Der. partur-i-ion = F. parturition (Littré), from Lat. acc. parturitionem, which from parturius, pp. of parturire.

⊕ PARTY, a company, faction, assembly. (F., — L.) M. E. partie,

King Alisaunder, 4756; parti, party, Cursor Mundi, 7470. — F. partie, & 'a part, share, party, side;' Cot. We also find F. parti, 'a match, bargain, party, side;' Cot. The former is the fem. of the latter. — Lat. partita, fem. of partitus, pp. of partiri, to divide. — Lat. parti, crude form of pars, a part. See Part. Cf. Ital. partita, a share, part; Span. partida, a party of soldiers, crew, &c. Der. party-coloured, Merch. Ven. i. 3. 89; party-verdict, Rich. II. i. 3. 234.

PARVENU, an upstart. (F., — L.) Modern. — F. parvenu, lit. one who has arrived at a place, hence, one who has thriven; pp. of parvenir, 'to achieve, arrive, thrive;' Cot. — Lat. parvenire, to arrive. — Lat. per-, through; and venire, cognate with E. come. See Per- and Come.

PARVIS, a porch; also, a room over a church-porch for a school. (F., — L., — Gk., — Pers.) See Halliwell, and Prompt. Parv. p. 385. M. E. parvis (= parvis), Chaucer, C. T. 312; see note in Tyrwhitt's Glossary. — O. F. parvis, 'the porch of a church; also (or more properly), the utter court of a palace or great house;' Cot. — Low Lat. paravisus, a corruption of Low Lat. paradisus, used in the same sense, viz. a court or space before a church, a church-porch; also, paradise. It is thus the same word as Paradise, q. v. Diez cites Neapolitan paraviso as a variant of Ital. paradiso. According to Littré, when the old mystery-plays were exhibited in the church-yard, the porch represented paradise. The word had numerous meanings; it also meant an altar, or a berth in a ship; see Ducange.

PASCH, the Jewish passover; Easter. (L., — Gk., — Heb.) M. E. paske, P. Plowman, B. xvi. 139; Ormulum, 15850. — A. S. pascha; the gen. pasches is in the A. S. Chron. an. 1122. — Lat. pascha. — Gk. πάσχα, the passover, John, vi. 4. — Heb. pesakh, a passing over, the passover; from Heb. root pásakh, he passed over. See Exod. xii. 11, 27. Der. paschal, from F. paschal, 'paschall,' Cot., from Lat. paschalis; pasch-flower or pasque-flower. (The Heb. s is samech.)

PASH, to dash, strike hard. (Scand.) 'As he was pashing it against a tree;' Ford, Lover's Melancholy, i. 1. And in Shak. Troil. ii. 3. 213, v. 5. 10. M. E. paschen, P. Plowman, B. xx. 99. — Swed. dial. paska, to dabble in water (Rietz); cf. Norweg. baska, to dabble in water, tumble, work hard, fight one's way on, baksa, to box (Aasen); Dan. baske, to slap, thwack, drub; baxes, to box, baxer, a boxer, pugilist. β. Thus pash is really one word with box, to fight; the former = paska, and the latter = baksa = baska = paska; see Box (3). And see Flash.

PASHA, PACHA, PASHAW, BASHAW, a prince, lord. (Pers.) Spelt bashaw in Evelyn's Diary, Dec. 17, 1684; bashaw in Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, p. 139. — Pers. bāshā, bādshāh, 'a governor of a province, counsellor of state, great lord, sometimes the grand vazir;' corruption of pādshāh, 'an emperor, sovereign, monarch, prince, great lord;' Rich. Dict. pp. 234, 228, 315. — Pers. pād, protecting, guarding; and shāh, a king; id. pp. 315, 873. Of these, the former occurs in E. bezoar, the latter in E. shah and chess. Pād is prob. from ✓ PA, to cherish, guard, protect; see Paternal.

PASQUIN, PASQUINADE, a lampoon, satire. (F., — Ital.) Formerly also pasquil, from F. pasquille, 'a pasquill;' Cot. — F. pasquin, 'the name of an image or post in Rome, whereon libels and defamatory rimes are fastened, and fathered; also, a pasquill;' Cot. [Hence pasquinade, which see in Littré.] — Ital. Pasquino, 'a statue in Rome on whom all libels are fathered;' Florio; whence pasquinata, a libel, the original of F. pasquinade. 'In the 16th century, at the stall of a cobbler named Pasquin [Pasquino], at Rome, a number of idle persons used to assemble to listen to his pleasant sallies, and to relate little anecdotes in their turn, and indulge themselves in raillery at the expense of the passers-by. After the cobbler's death the statue of a gladiator was found near his stall, to which the people gave his name, and on which the wits of the time, secretly at night, affixed their lampoons;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. 'The statue still stands at the corner of the Palazzo Braschi, near the Piazza Navona;' note in Gloss. to Bacon, Adv. of Learning, ed. Wright.

PASS, to walk onward, pace, move on. (F., — L.) In early use; Ancren Riwle, p. 330, l. 20; Layamon, 1341 (later text). — F. passer, to pass. — Low Lat. passare, to pass.

β. Diez derives this verb from *Lat. passare, a frequentative form of pandere, to stretch; Littré shews that it may rather have been taken from passus, a step, a pace; and certainly the common use of the E. verb accords better with this view. Happily, it makes little ultimate difference, since passus is itself derived from the same verb, and meant, originally, 'a stretch,' hence the difference of space between the feet in walking. Either way, we are led to Lat. passus, pp. of pandere, to stretch. See Pace. Der. pass, sb., Hamlet, ii. 2. 77; pass-book, pass-key, pass-word; pass-able, Cor. v. 2. 13; pass-ably, pass-able-ness; pass-age, q. v.; pass-er, passer-by; pass-ing, Two Gent. i. 2. 17; pass-ing, adv., L. L. iv. 3. 103; passing-bell, Shak. Venus, 702; pass-over, Exod. xii. 11, 27; pass-port, q. v.; past; pastime, q. v.

PASSAGE, a journey, course. (F., — L.) M. E. passage, King &

Horn, ed. Lumby, 1323. — F. passage, 'a passage;' Cot. — Low Lat. passaticum, a right of passage, occurring A.D. 1095; Ducange. [Cf. Ital. passaggio, Span. pasage.] — Low Lat. passare, to pass; see Pass. Der. passeng-er, in which the n is merely excrement before the following g, the old spelling being passager, as in North's Plutarch, ed. 1631, p. 24 (life of Romulus), where we read that some 'hold a false opinion, that the vulturs are passagers, and come into these parts out of strange countries.' See F. passager in Cotgrave.

PASSERINE, relating to sparrows. (L.) Scientific. — Lat. passerinus, adj., formed from passeri, crude form of passer, a sparrow. Root uncertain.

PASSION, suffering, strong agitation of mind, rage. (F., — L.) In early use. M. E. passion; spelt passium, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 119, l. 6 from bottom. — F. passion, 'passion, perturbation;' Cot. — Lat. passionem, acc. of passio, suffering, &c. — Lat. passus, pp. of patis, to suffer. Root uncertain; but clearly related to Gk. πάθειν, to suffer; see Patient, Pathos. Der. passion-flower, passion-less, passion-week; passion-ate, Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 220, from Low Lat. passionatus, occurring A.D. 1409 (Ducange), with which cf. F. passioné (Cot.); passion-ate-ly, passion-ate-ness; com-passion. And see Passive.

PASSIVE, enduring, unresisting. (F., — L.) In Shak. Timon, iv. 3. 254. — F. passif, 'passive, suffering;' Cot. — Lat. passivus, suffering. — Lat. passus, pp. of patis, to suffer. See Passion. Der. passive-ly, -ness; passiv-i-ty, a coined word, in Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. ser. 10 (R.).

PASSPORT, a permission to travel. (F., — L.) 'A travelling warrant is call'd Passeport, whereas the original is passé par tout;' Howell, Familiar Letters, b. iv. let. 19. 'They gave us our passeport;' Hakluyt's Voyages, ed. 1598, vol. i. p. 71. Spelt passaporte, Gascoigne, Fruits of War, st. 116. [Howell's remark is wrong; a passport and a passé-partout are different things; one is 'leave to quit a town,' the other is 'permission to travel everywhere;' he probably means that the former word came to signify much the same as the latter. Dryden has: 'with this passé par tout I will instantly conduct her to my own chamber;' Kind Keeper, Act v. sc. 1.] — F. passe-port, 'a passe, or passe-port, or safe conduct;' Cot. — F. passer, to pass; and porte, a gate, from Lat. porta, a gate. See Pass and Port (3).

PASTE, dough prepared for pies, flour and water, &c. (F., — L., — Gk.) 'Paste for to make;' P. Plowman, B. xiii. 250. — O. F. paste, 'paste, or dough;' Cot. Mod. F. pâte; Span. and Ital. pasta. — Lat. Lat. pasta, paste, used by Marcus Empiricus, about A.D. 400 (White). — Gk. παστή, a mess of food; strictly a fem. form from πάσσειν, besprinkled, salted, adj., formed from πάσσειν, to strew, sprinkle, esp. to sprinkle salt. Thus the orig. sense was 'a salted mess of food.' Der. paste-board; past-y, M. E. pastee, Chaucer, C. T. 4344, from O. F. pasté (mod. F. pâte), 'a pie, or pastie,' Cot.; past-r-y, used in Shak. in the sense of a room in which pasties were made, Romeo, iv. 4. 2 (cf. 'Pastrye, pistorium,' Levins), and formed accordingly on the model of pant-r-y and butt-er-y (i. e. bottl-er-y), but now applied to articles made of paste; pastry-cook; past-y (as applied to oyster-patties), from mod. F. pâté.

PASTEL, a roll of coloured paste used like a crayon, a coloured crayon. (F., — Ital., — L.) An artist's term. — F. pastel, 'a pastel, crayon;' Hamilton. — Ital. pastello, 'a bit of pie, small cake, pastil' (i. e. pastel); Meadows. — Lat. pastillum, acc. of pastillus, a little loaf or roll. Dimin. of pastus, food. — Lat. pastus, pp. of pasce, to feed. See Pastor. Sometimes written pastil, but this makes it too like pastilla. However, pastel and pastille are doublets: and neither are at all related to pasty or paste. Doublet, pastille.

PASTEREN, the part of a horse's foot from the fetlock to the hoof. (F., — L.) Spelt pasterne in Levins, ed. 1570. Palsgrave has: 'Pastron of an horse, pasturon.' — O. F. pasturon, 'the pastern of a horse;' Cot. Mod. F. paturon. So called because when a horse was turned out to pasture, he was tethered to a peg by a cord passing round the pastern. It is, in short, the 'pasturing-joint.' The cord by which the horse was tied was called pasture in Old French. 'Le suppliant frappa icellui Godart deux ou trois coups par le costé d'unnes cordes appelées pastures;' — the petitioner beat this Godart twice or thrice on the side with cords called pastures; in a passage dated A.D. 1460, in Ducange, s. v. pasturale, and cited by Littré. — O. F. pasture, 'pasture, grasse, fodder;' Cot. See further under Pasture. Thus O. F. pasturon was formed from pasture, a tether, by adding the suffix -on, which gave various meanings to the sb.; see Brachet, Introd. § 231. So also Ital. pasturale, the pastern, from pastura, a pasture. Hence we may explain a passage in Beaumont and Fletcher, The Chances, i. 8. 16, which Rich. notices, but could not understand, viz. 'She had better have worn pasterns.' It means tethers, or clogs tied to her foot; i. e. she had better have been tethered up. Indeed Kersey, ed. 1715, gives: 'Pastern, the hollow of a beast's heel, the foot of a horse, that part under the fetlock to the hoof; also, a shackle for a horse.' It is remarkable that this sense should have been retained in English, though unnoticed in Cotgrave's F. Dict.

PASTILLE, a small cone made of aromatic substances, to be burnt to purify the air of a room. (F.,—L.) Modern. Borrowed from F. pastille. Cot. gives: 'Pastilles, little lumps or loaves of wood, &c.'—Lat. pastillum, acc. of pastillus, a little loaf or roll. Dimin. from pastus, food. See Pastel, which is a doublet. And see Pastor.

PASTIME, amusement. (Hybrid: F.,—L.; and E.) In Shak. Temp. v. 38. Put for pass-time. Spelt both passetyme and pastyme in Sir T. Elyot, The Governor, b. i. c. 22. It is a sort of half translation of F. passetemps, 'pastime'; Cot. We also find, in old authors, the form pastance or pastans, which is the F. passetemps Anglicised. Gawain Douglas has pastans, Frol. to Æneid, bk. xii. l. 212.

PASTOR, a shepherd. (L.) In Hamlet, i. 3. 47; spelt pastour in Skelton, ed. Dyce, i. 203, l. 23.—Lat. pastor, a shepherd, lit. feeder.—Lat. past-us, pp. of pascere, to feed, an inceptive verb, pt. t. pas-uit.—✓PA, to feed; whence also E. food; see Food. Der. pastor-al, in Sir P. Sidney, Apology for Poetrie, ed. Arber, p. 43, l. 16, from F. pastoral, 'pastoral, shepherdly,' Cot., from Lat. pastoralis; pastor-ship; pasture, Cursor Mundi, 18445, from O. F. pasture (mod. F. pâturer), 'pasture' (Cot.), which from Lat. pastura, a feeding, formed like fem. fut. part. of pasci, to browse, from pascere, to feed; pastur-able, from O. F. pasturable, 'pasturable,' Cot.; pastur-age, from O. F. pasturage (mod. F. pâturage), 'pasturage,' Cot. And see pastern, pabulum.

PAT (1), to strike lightly, tap. (E.) 'It is childrens sport, to prove whether they can rubbe upon their brest with one hand, and pat upon their fore-head with another;' Lord Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 62. Not in M. E. or A. S.; but closely allied to (perhaps a weakened form of) A. S. plætian, to strike. 'Hi plætton hyne'—they smote him with their hands, John, xix. 3. So also Swed. dial. pljätta, to pat, to strike lightly and often (Rietz), allied to Swed. plätta, to tap, plätt, a tap, pat. Cf. O. F. (Gascon) patact, 'a tack, clack, knock, flap;' Cot. Also Bavarian patzen, to pat, patzen, a pat on the hand; Schmeller. And see Patch (1). Der. pat, sb.; pat-er.

PAT (2), a small lump of butter. (C.) Of Celtic origin; cf. Irish pait, a hump, paiteog, a small lump of butter; Gael. pait, a hump, paiteach, lumpy, paiteag, a small lump of butter. Thus the orig. sense is 'lump.'

PAT (3), quite to the purpose. (E.) Orig. an adv., as in 'Pat he comes,' K. Lear, i. 2. 146; 'it will fall [happen] pat,' Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 188; 'now might I do it pat,' Hamlet, iii. 3. 73. This can hardly be other than the same word as pat, a tap; see Pat (1). But the sense is clearly due to an extraordinary confusion with Du. pas, pat, fit, convenient, in time, which is used in exactly the same way as E. pat; cf. komt het te pas, 'if it comes convenient,' i. e. pat, te pas dienen, 'to serve just at the time;' Hexham. So also G. pass, pat, fit, suitable; zu passe, apropos; passen, to fit, suit, to be just right. These do not appear to be true Teutonic words, but borrowed from F.; cf. 'se passer, whence il se passe à peu de chose, he is contented, he maketh shift, he doth well enough;' Cot. The E. word seems to have been pitched upon to translate the Du. word, though it must be really of a different origin.

PATCH (1), a piece sewn on a garment, a plot of ground. (O. Low G.) M. E. pacche, patche, Wyclif, Mark, ii. 21; Prompt. Parv. p. 377.

a. The letters tch really appear as ck in old MSS.; the spelling tch is of later date, and sometimes due to the editors. The letters ck answer to an older kk (or A. S. ce), as in M. E. strecchen, to stretch, from A. S. streccan. Hence pacche presupposes an older form pakke.

β. The etymology is obscured by the loss of l; patch stands for platch, and pakke for plakke. We find: 'Platch, a large spot, a patch, or piece of cloth sewed on to a garment to repair it;' Dialect of Banffshire, by W. Gregor. The loss of l was due to the difficulty of sounding it; for other instances, cf. E. pat with A. S. plætian, to pat, strike with the hands, and pate; see Pat (1), Pate.

γ. The word plakke is O. Low German.—Low G. plakke, plakk (1), a spot; (2) a piece, both a piece torn away, and a patch put on; (3) a piece of land (cf. E. patch of ground). Hence the verb plakken, to patch, fasten. 'Frisch, from Alberi Lexicon, cites: ich plak, reconcinno, resarcino; ich setze einen plakken an, assuo;' Bremen Wörterbuch. The orig. sense of plakken was 'to strike;' cf. O. Du. placken, (1) to strike, (2) to plaster, besmear with lime or chalk, (3) to spot, to stain; placke, mod. Du. plek, a spot (een mooi plek grondes, a fine spot [patch] of ground, Sewel); see Oudemans. So also Swed. dial. plagga, to strike, smite; plagg, an article of clothing.

δ. With a change of kk to tt, we have Dan. plette, to strike, A. S. plætian, to strike with the hands; and (most curious of all) Goth. plats, a patch, Mark, ii. 21, just where Wyclif has pacche. The A. S. placa is really the same as prov. E. plek, a patch of ground, which is related to plot. The phrase 'in the corners of the streets' (Lat. in angulis platearum) is glossed by 'huomum ðæra plæcena vel worðum' in the Northumb. version of Matt. vi. 5. See Plot.

ε. The root is PLAG, to strike, whence Gk. πληγή, Lat. plaga, a stroke, and E. plague, also Lithuanian plak-ti, to strike, pleka, a stroke. By Grimm's law, p is G. f; and we also find a collateral form to Low G. plakke in G. fleck, a spot, place, piece, botch, patch, speck, stain; which is just the cognate High German word. Cf. also M. E. flakken, to palpitate (orig. to beat), and E. flap; see Flag (1) and Flap. ¶ Other illustrations might be added; thus O. Du. plack means 'a ferule, or small batle-dore, wherewith school-boys are strooke in the palmes of their handes' (Hexham); this (by loss of l) is allied to G. patsche, an instrument for striking; cf. prov. G. patschen, to patch (Flügel), O. Du. plagge, rags, plets, a patch (Hexham). Der. patch, verb, Tw. Nt. i. 5. 52; patch-work.

PATCH (2), a paltry fellow. (O. Low G.) In Shak. Temp. iii. 2. 71, Com. Err. iii. 1. 32, Merch. Ven. ii. 5. 46; &c. 'In these passages, the word is by most commentators interpreted . . . "a domestic fool," supposed to be so called from his parti-coloured dress;' Schmidt. 'Wolsey we find had two fools, both occasionally called patch, though they had other names; see Douce, Illustrations of Shak., i. 258;' Nares. The supposition that patch is a nick-name from the dress is most probably right; if so, the derivation is from patch (1); see above. In Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 9, the word merely means clown, or an ill-dressed mechanic. ¶ It is independent of Ital. pazzo, a fool, madman, which is used in a much stronger sense. Der. patch-ock, a dimin. form (cf. bull-ock, hill-ock); 'as very patchokes [clowns] as the wild Irish,' Spenser, View of the State of Ireland, Globe ed. p. 636, col. 2; this is the word spelt pajock in Shak. Hamlet, iii. 2.

PATE, the head. (F.,—G.,—Gk.) In Spenser, Shep. Kal., June, l. 16. M. E. pate; 'bi pate and bi polle,' Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 237, in a song of the time of Edw. II. The etymology is disguised by the loss of l; pate stands for plate, i. e. the crown of the head.—O. F. pate, not recorded in the special sense here required, but Cotgrave gives: 'Pate, a plate, or band of iron, &c. for the strengthening of a thing;' which establishes the loss of l.—G. platte, a plate, bald pate, in vulgar language, the head (Flügel); M. H. G. platte, O. H. G. blätt, a plate, plate-armour, the shaven crown of the head. β. Cf. also Low Lat. plattia, the clerical tonsure from ear to ear (Ducange); obviously due to G. platte. Cf. O. Du. platte krunne, 'flat-crowned, or ball-pated,' Hexham; platte, the shaven crown, Kilian. γ. Even in Irish, we find plata, plate; plait, the forehead, plaitin, a little pate, a skull, the crown of the head (with the usual change of a to ai); O'Reilly. These words were prob. borrowed from O. F. or M. E. We may note a similar change in sense in the word crown, meaning (1) the clerical tonsure, (2) the top of the head, esp. if bald. See Plate.

PATEN, the plate for the bread in the eucharist. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) Spelt patine in Cotgrave; Shak. has patines=plates of metal, Merch. Ven. v. 59. M. E. paten, a paten, Havelok, 187.—O. F. patene, 'the patine, or cover of a chalice;' Cot.—Low Lat. patena, the paten in the eucharist; Lat. patena, patina, a wide shallow bowl, basin, pan. See Pan. Rather a word borrowed from Gk. than true Latin.—Gk. πατανή, a kind of flat dish. So named from its flatness; from ✓PAT, to spread out, whence Gk. πατάσσω, I spread out; Lat. patere, to lie open, spread out, extend; see Patent. Doublet, pan.

PATENT, lit. open, hence conspicuous, public; gen. as sb., an official document conferring a privilege. (F.,—L.) The use as an adj. is less common, but it occurs in Cotgrave. M. E. patente, sb., a patent, Chaucer, C. T. 12271. [The patent was so called because open to the inspection of all men.]—O. F. patent (fem. patente), 'patent, wide open, discovered;' Cot.—Lat. patent-, stem of pres. part. of patere, to lie open.—✓PAT, to spread out; whence also Gk. πατάσσω, I spread out, unfold, unfurl, and E. fath-om. See Petal. Der. patent, vb. (modern); patent-ee, where the suffix = F. -é = Lat. -atus. And see pace, pass, paten, pan, petal, fathom, ex-panse.

PATERNAL, fatherly. (F.,—L.) In Shak. King Lear, i. 1. 115.—F. paternel, 'paternal;' Cot.—Low Lat. paternalis, extended from Lat. paternus, paternal, fatherly. Formed with suffix -no (= Aryan -NA) from pater, a father. Pater is formed with suffix -ter (= Aryan -TAR) from ✓PA, to guard, feed, cherish; cf. Skt. pá, to protect, cherish, and E. food.+Gk. πατήρ.+E. father; see Father. Der. paternal-ly; also patern-i-ty, from F. paternité, 'paternity, fatherhood,' Cot., from Lat. acc. paternitatem. Also pater-noster, Chaucer, C. T. 3485, so called from the first two words, pater noster, i. e. Our Father. And see patri-arch, patri-cian, patri-mony, patri-ot, patri-istic, patri-on.

PATH, a way, track, road. (E.) M. E. path, pay, P. Plowman, B. xiv. 300; pl. paþes, Havelok, 268.—A. S. pað, pað, a path, Grein, ii. 361. + Du. pad. + G. pfad. + Lat. pons, a bridge, orig. a path, way; crude form ponti-, from base pat- + Gk. πάτος, a trodden way, a path. + Skt. patha, a way, path. = ✓ PAT, to go; whence Skt. path, panth, to go; Gk. πατέω, to tread. ¶ We should expect to find A.S. f for Skt. p; but there may have been a loss of initial s; Fick suggests that the root PAT may be extended from SPA, to stretch out, whence PAT has also the sense of 'spread,' as in E. patient, paten. Der. path-less, path-way. And see pont-on, pont-iff.

PATHOS, emotion, deep feeling. (Gk.) In South's Sermons, vol. iv. ser. 1 (R.); and in Phillips, ed. 1706. [But the adj. pathetical is in earlier use, occurring in Cotgrave, and is oddly used by Shak. As You Like It, iv. i. 196, &c.] = Gk. πάθος, suffering, deep feeling; from παθεῖν, used as 2 aor. infin. of πάσχειν, to suffer.

β. There are numerous related words, such as πῶθος, a yearning, πένθος, grief, all from a base πα-, παύω; cf. πῶτος, work, πονέω, I work, suffer. An initial s seems to be lost; all from ✓ SPA or SPAN, to draw or stretch out, as in G. spannen, to stretch out, E. span and spin. See SPAN. The notion of 'drawing out' leads to those of torture, suffering, labour, &c. See Curtius, i. 337. Der. path-et-ic, from O. F. pathetique, 'pathetically, passionate,' Cot., from Lat. patheticus (White) = Gk. παθητικός, extended from παθῆναι, subject to suffering, lit. one who has suffered; path-et-ic-al, path-et-ic-al-ly, path-et-ic-al-ness. Also patho-logy, in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, from O. F. pathologie, 'that part of physic which treats of the causes, qualities, and differences of diseases,' Cot., from Gk. παθολογείν, to treat of diseases, whence from πάθος, put for πάθος, and λέγειν, to speak. Hence patho-logy-ic, Gk. παθολογικός, patholog-ic-al, patholog-ist. And see patient.

PATIENT, bearing pain, enduring, long-suffering. (F., = L.) M. E. patient, patient, Chaucer, C. T. 486. = O. F. patient, 'patient.' = Lat. patient-, stem of pres. part. of pati, to suffer. β. Root pati uncertain; but clearly related to Gk. παθεῖν, to suffer, 2 aor. infin. of πάσχειν, to suffer. 'The θ is secondary, and we may fairly assume that the shorter root πα- (pa-) was in Greek expanded by θ, in Latin by t.' Curtius, ii. 17. Probably the orig. root was SPA, to draw out; see PATHOS. Der. patiens-ly; patience, M. E. pacience, Ancren Riwle, p. 180, from F. patience, Lat. patientia. And see passion.

PATOIS, a vulgar dialect, esp. of French. (F., = L.) Borrowed from F. patois, 'gibridge, clownish language, rustically speech;' Cot. Patois stands for an older form patrois; see Diez and Littré. = Low Lat. patriensis, one who is indigenous to a country, a native; so that patois is the 'speech of the natives.' = Lat. patria, one's native country. See Patriot, Paternal, Father. [†]

PATRIARCH, a chief father. (F., = L., = Gk.) The lit. sense is 'chief father.' M. E. patriarche, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 131, l. 4; patriarke, P. Plowman, B. xviii. 138. = O. F. patriarche, 'a patriarche,' Cot. = Lat. patriarcha, also patriarchēs. = Gk. πατριάρχης, the father or chief of a race. = Gk. πατρι-, short for πατριά, a lineage, race, from πατήρ, put for πατήρ, a father; and ἀρχή, beginning, rule, ἀρχέω, to rule. See Father and Archaic. Der. patriarch-al, patriarch-ic, patriarch-ate. ¶ The ecclesiastical historian Socrates gives the title of patriarch to the chiefs of Christian dioceses about A. D. 440; Haydn.

PATRICIAN, a nobleman in ancient Rome. (L.) In Shak. Cor. i. i. 16, 68, 75. Formed with suffix -an (= Lat. -anus) from Lat. patricius, adj. patrician, noble, sb. a patrician; 'a descendant of the patres, senators, or fathers of the state;' Wedgwood. = Lat. patri-, crude form of pater, a father, cognate with F. father. See Paternal and Father.

PATRIMONY, an inheritance, heritage. (F., = L.) M. E. patrimonie, P. Plowman, C. xxiii. 234; spelt patrimoine, id. B. xx. 233. = F. patrimoine, 'patrimony;' Cot. = Lat. patrimonium, an inheritance. Formed (with suffix -mon-ia = Aryan -man-ya) from patri-, crude form of pater, a father, cognate with E. father. See Paternal and Father. Der. patrimoni-al.

PATRIOT, one who loves his fatherland. (F., = Low Lat., = Gk.) 'A patriot, or countryman;' Minshew, ed. 1627. = O. F. patriote, 'a patriot, ones countryman;' Cot. = Low Lat. patriota, a native. = Gk. πατριώτης, properly, a fellow-countryman. = Gk. πάτριος, belonging to one's fathers, hereditary. = Gk. πατήρ, put for πατήρ, a father, cognate with Lat. pater and E. father. See Paternal and Father. Der. patriot-ic, Gk. πατριωτικός, patriot-ic-al-ly, patriot-ism; also com-patriot, ex-patriate, re-pair (2). ¶ The peculiar use of patriot in its present sense arose in French.

PATRISTIC, pertaining to the fathers of the Christian church. (F., = L.) From F. patriistique, which see in Littré. Coined from Lat. patr-, stem of pl. patres, i. e. the fathers of the Christian church; from the sing. pater, a father. See Father. ¶ Not a well-made word, the suffix -ist being Greek rather than Latin.

PATROL, to go the rounds in a camp or garrison; a going of the rounds. (F., = Teut.) It occurs, spelt patroll, in Phillips, ed. 1706, both as a sb. and verb. 'And being then upon patrol;'

Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3, l. 801. = O. F. patrouille, a still night-watch in warre, Cot. Lit. a paddling about, tramping about, from O. F. patrouiller, 'to paddle or pudder in the water;' Cot. The same word (with inserted r) as patouiller, 'to slubber, to paddle or dabble in with the feet;' Cot.

β. Formed, as a sort of frequentative verb, from O. F. pate (mod. F. patte), 'the paw, or foot of a beast;' Cot. Cf. Span. pata, a paw, beast's foot; patullar, to run through mud; patrulla, a patrol, patrullar, to patrol; Ital. patuglia, patrol, watch, sentry (showing that the r is inserted). γ. From a Teutonic base pat- appearing in G. patsche, an instrument for striking the hand, patsch-fuss, web-foot of a bird; patschen, to strike, dabble, walk awkwardly; Bavarian patzen, to pat (Schmeller). See Pat.

PATRON, a protector. (F., = L.) M. E. patron, Rob. of Glouc. p. 471, l. 16. = F. patron, 'a patron, protector.' = Lat. patronus, acc. of patronus, a protector, lit. one who takes the place of a father. = Lat. pater, stem of pater, a father, cognate with E. father. See Paternal and Father. Der. patron-age, from O. F. patronage, 'patronage,' Cot.; patron-ess, Cor. v. 5, 1; patron-ise. Doublet, pattern.

PATRONYMIC, derived from the name of a father or ancestor. (F., = L., = Gk.) 'So when the proper name is used to note one's parentage, which kind of nouns the grammarians call patronymics;' Ben Jonson, Eng. Grammar, b. ii. c. 3. = O. F. patronymique, 'derived of the fathers or ancestors names;' Cot. = Lat. patronymicus. Gk. πατρωνυμικός, belonging to the father's name. = Gk. πατρωνυμία, a name taken from the father. = Gk. πατρο-, extended from πατήρ, stem of πατήρ, a father; and ὄνομα, a name, usually spelt ὄνομα. The ω results from the doubling of the ο. The Gk. πατήρ is cognate with E. father; and Gk. ὄνομα is cognate with E. name. See Father and Name. Der. patronymic, sb.

PATTEN, a wooden sole supported on an iron ring; a clog. (F., = Teut.) 'Their shoes and pattens;' Camden's Remaines, On Apparel (R.) Spelt paten, patin in Minshew, ed. 1627; paten, Palsgrave. = F. patin, 'a patten, or clog; also, the footstall of a pillar;' Cot. = O. F. pate, patte, mod. F. patte, 'the paw or foot of a beast, also, the footstall of a pillar;' Cot. See further under Patrol. Cf. Ital. pattino, a skate, patten.

PATTER, to strike frequently, as hail. (E.) 'Or pattering hail comes pouring on the main;' Dryden, tr. of Virgil, Æn. ix. 910. A frequentative of pat, with the usual suffix -er; the double t being put in to keep the vowel short. See Pat (1). A dialectal (Lonsdale) variant is pattle, to pat gently (Peacock). Cf. Swed. dial. padra, to patter as hail does against a window (Rietz). ¶ It is probable that M. E. pateren, in the sense 'to repeat prayers,' was coined from pater, the first word of the pater-noster. 'And pater in my pater-noster;' P. Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, l. 6; so also in the Rom. of the Rose, ll. 6794.

PATTERN, an example, model to work by. (F., = L.) In many parts, as in Lincolnshire and Cambs., the common people say patron for pattern; and rightly. 'Patron, a pattern;' Peacock, Manley and Corringham Words (Lincoln); E. D. S. M. E. patron. 'Patrone, form to work by, patron or example, Exemplar;' Prompt. Parv. 'Patrons of blacke paper;' Eng. Gilds, ed. Toulmin Smith, p. 321. = F. patron, 'a patron, protector, . . also a pattern, sample;' Cot. See Patron.

PATTY, a little pie. (F., = L., = Gk.) Mod. F. pâté; O. F. pasté, a pasty. See Paste. Doublet, pasty. Der. patty-pan.

PAUCITY, fewness in number. (F., = L.) Spelt paucitis in Minshew, ed. 1627. = F. paucité, 'paucity;' Cot. = Lat. paucitatem, acc. of paucitas, fewness. = Lat. pauci = paucio, crude form of paucus, few; with suffix -itas. β. Allied to Gk. παῦρος, small; and to Gk. παύωμαι, I cease, παύω, I make to cease. Curtius, i. 336. See Pause, Pauper. Also allied to E. few; see Few.

PAUNCH, the belly. (F., = L.) M. E. paunche, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 87. = O. F. panche; also pance, 'the paunch, maw, belly;' Cot. = Lat. panticem, acc. of pantex, the paunch. Root unknown.

PAUPER, a poor person. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. = Lat. pauper, poor. β. The syllable pau- is the same as pau- in paucus, few, Gk. παῦρος; see Paucity. 'The second element in pauper must undoubtedly be compared, as Pott saw, with opi-parus, parere, parare; see Kuhn, Zeitschrift, x. 320; i. Curtius, i. 336. See Pare. Der. pauper-ise, pauper-ism; and see poor, poverty.

PAUSE, a stop, cessation. (F., = L., = Gk.) In Shak. Hamlet, ii. 2. 509. Earlier, in Skelton, Magnificence, l. 2466. = F. pause, 'a pause, a stop;' Cot. = Late Lat. pausa, a pause. Imitated from Gk. παῦσις, a pause, stopping, ceasing, end. = Gk. παύω, I make to cease; παύομαι, I cease. β. From the same base παυ- (pau-) we have pau-ci-ty, pau-per, and E. few. See Few. Der. pause, vb., Much Ado, iv. 1. 202. Doublet, pose, q. v.

PAVE, to floor, as with stones. (F., = L.) M. E. pauen (with u = v), Chaucer, C. T. 16094. = O. F. pauer, later paver, 'to pave,' Cot. = Lat. *pauare, a corrupt form of Lat. pauire, to beat, strike, also, to ram, tread down, tread the earth even and hard. † Gk. maleiv (for mafyev), to beat, strike. β. Both from ✓ PU, to strike, whence also Skt. pavi, the thunderbolt of Indra. See Curtius, i. 333; Fick, i. 677. Der. pave-ment, M. E. paviment (with u for v, and trisyllabic), Rob. of Glouc. p. 476, l. 10, pavement, Chaucer, C. T. 7686, from F. pavement (Cot.), which from Lat. pavimentum, a hard floor, from pavire, to ram; also pav-i-or (where the -i- is an English insertion, as in law-y-er, bow-y-er, saw-y-er, intended to give the word a causal force), from O. F. paveur, 'a paver,' Cot., answering a Low Lat. form *pavitur, from pavitus, pp. of pavire.

PAVILION, a tent. (F., -L.) The spelling with li is intended to represent the sound of the F. li. M. E. pavylon (with u = v), Rob. of Glouc. p. 272, l. 13. — F. pavillon, 'a pavillion, tent;' Cot. So called because spread out like the wings of a butterfly. — Lat. papilionem, acc. of papilio, (1) a butterfly, (2) a tent.

β. Pa-pil-io is a reduplicated form from a base pal, meaning to vibrate, cf. palpebra, the eyelid (from its quivering), pal-pit-are, to palpitate. Thus the lit. sense is 'the flutterer;' cf. G. schmetterling, a butterfly, with G. schmettern, to dash, lit. to strike often.

γ. Similarly the tent would be named from its fluttering when blown about. 'Cubacula aut tentoria, quos etiam papiliones uocant;' Augustine, cited in Ducange. See Palpitate. Der. pavilion-ed, Hen. V. i. 2. 129; also papilion-ac-e-ous, q. v.

PAVISE, a large shield. (F.) Obsolete. See examples in Halliwell and R. Also spelt pavese, pavish, pavesse, pauice, pauys. 'That impenetrable pauice,' Sir T. More, Works, p. 1179 c. Spelt pauys, Reliquiae Antiquae, ii. 22; paves, Skelton, ed. Dyce, i. 8, l. 48. — F. pavois, 'a great shield,' Cot. Cf. Span. paves, O. Ital. pavese, pavesce (Florio), Low Lat. pavensis, a large shield, occurring A. D. 1299. Of uncertain origin; some suppose it to have been named from the city of Pavia, in the N. of Italy.

PAW, the foot of a beast of prey. (C.?) M. E. pawe, Sir Isambard, l. 181, in the Thornton Romances, ed. Halliwell; powe, Rich. Cœur de Lion, l. 1082, in Weber's Met. Romances. 1. Perhaps of Celtic origin; cf. W. pawen, a paw, claw, hoof, Corn. paw, a foot (found in the 15th century), Bret. pad, paw, a paw, or jocularly, a large hand. 2. Otherwise, it is from O. F. poe, a paw (Burguy), a word of Low G. origin, from Low G. pote, a paw (Bremen Wörterbuch), the same word as Du. poot, G. pfote. All these words seem to be related. Der. paw, verb, Job, xxxix. 21. [†]

PAWL, a short bar, which acts as a catch to a windlass. (L.) A mechanical term; hence is also W. pawl, a pole, a stake, bar. Merely from Lat. paulus, whence E. pale; see Pale (1), Pole. Der. pawl-windlass (Halliwell).

PAWN (1), a pledge, something given as security for the repayment of money. (F., -L.) Spelt pawne in Minshew, ed. 1627; Levins (ed. 1570) has the verb to pawne. — F. pan, 'a pane, piece, or panel of a wall; also a pawn, or gage, also the skirt of a gown, the pane of a hose, of a cloak, &c.,' Cot. — Lat. pannum, acc. of pannus, a cloth, rag, piece. See Pane, which is a doublet.

β. The explanation of this peculiar use of the word lies in the fact that a piece of clothing is the readiest article to leave in pledge; hence the O. F. paner meant not only 'to take pledges,' but generally to take, seize (Burguy). So Span. pañó, cloth, stuff, pañós, clothes, is accompanied by the verb aññar, to seize, grasp, take, dress, patch; Diez. ¶ In our old pronunciation, the sounds of pane and pawn approached much closer to each other than at present. The Du. pand, a pledge, pawn, G. pfand, O. H. G. phant, Icel. pantr, is doubtless the same word, and very old in the Teutonic languages; but it was borrowed directly from Lat. pannum, the acc. case of pannus, the d or t being excrement after n, as in many other instances. From the old Teutonic form pand seems to have been made the A. S. pending, a penny; see Penny. Der. pawn, vb., pawn-er, pawn-broker. Doublet, pane.

PAWN (2), one of the least valuable pieces in chess. (F., -L.) M. E. pawne, Chaucer, Book of the Duchess, l. 661 (Moxon); but spelt poune, poun in the Tanner and Fairfax MSS. (Chaucer Soc.) — O. F. paon, a pawn at chess (Roquefort); spelt poon in the 12th cent. (Littré); the dimin. paonnet occurs in the 13th cent. (id.). Roquefort also gives the form paonné.

β. The mod. F. name is pion, explained by Cotgrave as 'a pawn at chess,' of which an older form was peon (Burguy), spelt pehon in the 15th century; this is the same as Span. peon, a foot-soldier, a pawn, Port. pião, one of the lower people, a pawn, Ital. pedone, 'a footman' (Florio), pedona, 'a pawn at chess,' id. These are all from Low Lat. pedonem, acc. of pedo, a foot-soldier; from ped-, stem of pes, a foot, cognate with E. Foot.

γ. From the F. pied, O. F. piet, foot, was also formed O. F. pieton (mod. F. piéton), 'a footman, one that travels on foot, also, a pawn at chess;' Cot. 8. Littré supposes the O. F. paon, poon, to be the same as F. paon, a peacock; but there is no reason whatever for the supposition. It is more likely that paon, poon, are mere variants of peon; the form occasions no difficulty, since the Low Lat. setonem = F. faon (Cot.) = E. fawn. Indeed, in Migne's epitome of Ducange, we find pedones explained as equivalent to O. F. paons, paonniers, where paon means a foot-soldier; cf. paonnier, 'fantassin, qui va à pied, piéton;' Roquefort.

8. As to the fact of the origin of the name there is no difficulty; the pawns were regarded as the foot-soldiers of the game, and I have seen a set in which each pawn was carved as a foot-soldier armed with a short glaive or halberd. Such was, I suppose, the arrangement from the very first; cf. Skt. chaturanga, adj., consisting of four parts, which, when joined with bala, an army, signifies a complete army, consisting of chariots, elephants, horse, and foot; also chaturanga, sb. a complete army, chess (Benfey). More strictly, chaturanga is the name of the orig. game out of which chess (the game of the kings) was developed. But even chaturanga had its foot-soldiers; there were four players, and each had a king and an army. The army consisted of an elephant (bishop), chariot (rook), horse (knight), and four foot-soldiers (pawns). There was then no queen. Der. pion-er, q. v. (And see Book.)

PAXWAX, the strong tendon in the neck of animals. (E.) Still common provincially; also called paxywaxy, packwax, faxwax, fixfax. M. E. paxwax, Prompt. Parv.; see Way's note. He quotes: 'Le vendon, the fax-wax,' MS. Harl. 219, fol. 150. Again he says: 'Gautier de Bibbesworth says, of a man's body, Et si ad le wenne (fex wex) au col derere,' i. e. and he has paxwax at the back of his neck. The orig. form is fax-wax or fex-wex, and it exactly corresponds to the equivalent G. haarwachs, lit. hair-growth; presumably because the hair grows down to the back of the neck, and there ceases. Compounded of M. E. fax, hair, as in Fair-fax = fair-hair; and wax, growth. — A. S. feax, fex, hair, Luke, vii. 38; and weaxan, to grow; see Pectinal and Wax (1).

PAY (1), to discharge a debt. (F., -L.) M. E. païen, Ancren Riwle, p. 108, l. 9; Layamon, 2340 (later text). It often has the sense of 'please' or 'content' in old authors. 'Be we païed with these thingis' = let us be contented with these things, Wyclif, 1 Tim. vi. 8. — O. F. paier (also paer), later payer, 'to pay, satisfy, content;' Cot. — Lat. pacare, to appease, pacify; Low Lat. pacare, to pay (A. D. 1338). — Lat. pac-, stem of pax, peace. See Peace. Der. pay, sb., M. E. paie, satisfaction, P. Plowman, B. v. 556; pay-able, pay-er, pay-ee (= F. payé, pp.); pay-master; pay-ment, M. E. païement, Chaucer, C. T. 5713, from O. F. païement, later payement, 'a payment or paying,' Cot.

PAY (2), to pitch the seam of a ship. (Span. ? - L.) A nautical term, as noticed by Skinner, ed. 1671; and in the proverb: 'the devil to pay, and no pitch hot.' 'To pay a rope, een kabel teeren,' lit. to tar a cable; Sewel's Eng.-Du. Dict. 1754. Most likely caught up from Spanish, the present spelling merely representing the supposed sound of the word. — Span. pega, a varnish of pitch, pegar, to join together, cement, unite; empegar, to pitch. The Span. pegar is from Lat. picare, to pitch. — Lat. picem, acc. of pix, pitch. See Pitch.

¶ Wedgwood cites, from Bombhoff, Du. paaien, to careen a vessel, the usual sense of the Du. verb being 'to pay;' but the Du. word is merely borrowed, and possibly from English, just as Du. paaien (or paaijen), to pay money, is from F. payer. He next cites the O. F. empoier, to pitch, from poix, pitch, with the quotation: 'Et ne sont pas empoïées, car ils n'ont pas de pois' = and they are not paid, for they have no pitch; Marco Polo, Pautier's edition, p. 535. This is an excellent illustration, but I think the Span. word comes nearer to E. than the O. F. does. The M. E. peys, pitch, K. Alisander, 1620, is, of course, from O. F. pois; but the verb to pay is late. [†]

PAYNIM, PAINIM, a pagan. (F., -L.) 'The paynim bold,' Spenser, F. Q. i. 4. 41; cf. Fairfax, tr. of Tasso, xviii. 80. M. E. paynim. 'The paynymys hii ouercome' = they overcame the pagans; Rob. of Glouc. p. 401. This E. use of the word is due to a singular mistake. A paynim is not a man, but a country; it is identical with paganism, which was formerly extended to mean the country of pagans, or heathen lands. It is correctly used in King Horn, ed. Lumby, l. 803, where we find 'a geaunt . . fram paynyne' = a giant from heathen lands. — O. F. païenisme, spelt païanisme in Cotgrave, who explains it by 'paganisme.' The sense is borrowed from that of O. F. païnie, païenie, the country inhabited by pagans (Burguy). — Low Lat. paganismus, paganism; formed with suffix -ismus (Gk. -ισμος) from Lat. pagan-us, a pagan. See Pagan. ¶ When a writer, wishing to use fine language, talks of a paynim, he had better say a pagan at once. [†]

PEA, a common vegetable. (L.) We now say pea, with pl. peas. This is due to mistaking the s of the older form for a plural termination; just as when people say shay for chaise, Chinee for Chinese, &c. Other words in which the same mistake is made are cherry (F. cerise), sherry (formerly sherrie). M. E. pese, pl. pesen and peses. 'A pese-lof' = a loaf made of peas, P. Plowman, B. vi. 181; pl. peses, id. 189; pesen, id. 198. A later spelling of the pl. is peason; see examples in Nares. Shak. has peas-cod = pea-pod, Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 1. 191; and otherwise only the form pease. We also find pescodes in Lydgate, London Lyckpeny, st. 9. — A. S. pisa, pl. pisan, in a gloss (Bosworth). Not an E. word, but borrowed from Lat. pisum, a pea. [The vowel-change from i to e occurs again in the case of pear, q. v.] + Gk. πίσος, a pea. — ✓ PIS, to grind, pound, whence Lat. pinsere, to pound, Skt. pish, to grind, pound. 'Hehn is prob. right in adding the Church-Slavonic pēs-akū, sabulum, calculus, and in conjecturing "globule" or "grain-fruit" to be the primary meaning, one which is easily derived from the root; ' Curtius, i. 343. Cf. Russ. pesok, sand. Der. pea-pod, peas-cod (as above). [†]

PEACE, quietness, freedom from war. (F., — L.) M. E. pais, occurring as early as in the A. S. Chron. an. 1135. — O. F. pais, later paix, 'peace'; Cot. — Lat. pacem, acc. of pax, peace, orig. a compact made between two contending parties. — Lat. pac-, seen in pac-isci, to make a bargain, and in O. Lat. pac-ēre, to bind, to come to an agreement. — ✓ PAK, to fasten; see Pact. Der. peace!, interj.; peace-able, Much Ado, iii. 3. 61; peace-able-y, peace-able-ness; peace-ful, K. John, ii. 340, peace-ful-ly, peace-ful-ness, peace-maker, As You Like It, v. 4. 108; peace-offering, peace-officer. Also ap-pease, pay (1), passi-fy.

PEACH (1), a delicious fruit. (F., — L., — Pers.) 'Of Peaches'; Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 7. — M. E. peche, peske, Prompt. Parv. p. 395; where it is also spelt peske, a form due to Low Lat. pescia. — O. F. pesche, 'a peach'; Cot. Cf. Port. pêcego, Ital. persica, shorter form pescia, a peach. — Lat. Persicum, a peach, Pliny, xv. 11. 11; so called because growing on the Persicus or peach-tree; where Persicus stands for Persica arbor, the Persian tree. — Pers. Pārs, Persia. See Parsee. Der. peach-coloured, peach-tree.

PEACH (2), to inform against. (F., — L.) From M. E. apechen, by loss of a; see Impeach.

PEACOCK, a large gallinaceous bird with splendid plumage. (Hybrid; L., — Gk., — Pers., — Tamil; and E.) M. E. pecock, but also pacok and pacok. In P. Plowman, B. xii. 241, where the text has pekok, two other MSS. have pekok, pacok. In Chaucer, C. T. 104, the MSS. have pekok, pekok. We also find po used alone, Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 159. The form pekok is due to pakok; and both pa-, po-, are from A. S. pawe, a peacock, which is not a true E. word, but borrowed from Lat. pavo. 'Pavo, Pausus, pawe'; Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Avium, in Wright's Vocab. i. 28. Here pawe is meant to be the A. S. form, whilst pauo, pauus, are Lat. forms. From Lat. pavo come also Du. pauw, G. pfa, F. paon, &c. β. The Lat. word is not a native one, but borrowed from Gk. ραῦς, ραῖν, where the aspirate is a relic of the digamma, from a form rafw̃s. See Liddell and Scott, and Curtius, ii. 101. The curious change from initial t to p indicates that both words are from a foreign source. — Pers. tāvus, tāus, Arab. tāwīs, a peacock; Rich. Dict., p. 962. — O. Tamil tōkei, tōgei, a peacock; Max Müller, Lect. i. 233. γ. The latter element of the word is E. cock, a native word of onomatopoeic origin.

¶ The suggestion, s. v. Cock, that the word is French, is wrong; it occurs in A. S. much earlier than I thought, viz. in Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Pastoral, ed. Sweet, p. 459. Der. pea-hen, similarly formed; M. E. pehen, pohen, P. Plowman, B. xii. 240.

PEA-JACKET, a coarse thick jacket often worn by seamen. (Hybrid; Du. and F.) Prob. of modern introduction. The latter element is the ordinary word jacket. The former element is spelt so as to resemble pea, a vegetable, with which it has nothing to do. It is borrowed from Du. pij, pje, a coat of a coarse woollen stuff; the word jacket being a needless explanatory addition. 'Een pje, a pie-gowne, or a rough gowne, as souldiers and seamen wear'; Hexham, 1658. As the Du. pje is pronounced like E. pie, it should rather be called a pie-jacket, as the form pie-gowne suggests. The material of which the jacket is made is called pj-laken, where laken is cloth.

β. The Du. pje is the same word as Low G. pje, a woollen jacket, called pigge, pyke in the Osnabrück dialect (Bremen Wörterbuch). Rietz gives the form pade, a coat, of which he considers the forms paje, paja, paj-rokk (rokk is a coat), pait, all found in various Swedish dialects, to be variants. If we are to connect all these, we may also compare Goth. paida, used to translate Gk. χιτών, a coat, Matt. v. 40; also M. H. G. pfeit, a shirt, and even perhaps Gk. βαῖτη, a shepherd's or peasant's coat of skins. It is remarkable that we even find W. pais, Corn. pais, in the sense of coat. [†] peak-ed, not quite the same word as M. E. piked (Prompt. Parv.) though used in the same sense; the M. E. form answers rather to mod. E. pike, sb., with the suffix -ed added. Also (probably) peak verb, to become thin, dwindle, Mach. i. 3. 23. Cf. peaked, thin, Dorsetshire (Halliwell).

¶ Cf. M. E. courtpey (short coat), Chaucer, C. T. 292. PEAK, a sharp point, top. (C.) M. E. pek; 'the hul of the pek' = the hill of the Peak, in Derbyshire; Rob. of Glouc. p. 7. In the A. S. Chron. an. 924, the same district is called Peac-land = Peak-land. Though the hill is flat at the top, it presents a remarkably peaked appearance from many points of view. It is one of the Celtic words so often met with in English place-names. — Irish peac, any sharp pointed thing, whence peacach, sharp-pointed, neat, showy. Cf. Gael. béic, a point, a nib, the bill of a bird; whence E. beak. See Beak. Allied to Pike, q. v., Peck, q. v., and Pick, q. v. Der.

PEAL, a loud sound, summons, chime of bells, sound of a trumpet. (F., — L.) 'A peale of gunnes, &c.:' Levins. The same phrase occurs in a tract dated 1532, in An English Garner, ed. Arber, vol. ii. p. 36. 'Peels of belles'; Palsgrave. A shortened form of appeal, by loss of the first syllable, which in the O. F. apel was a sole vowel, and may have been mistaken for the E. indef. article, just as we now use vow where the M. E. form is commonly avow. We speak of a trumpet's peal; compare this with F. appel, a call with drum or trumpet (Hamilton).

β. Besides the form apel, mod. F. appel, there was a later derived form appeau, now used in the sense of 'bird-call' (Hamilton). Cotgrave has: 'Appeau, as Appel, also a bird-call; Appeaux, chimes, or the chiming of bells.' This at once explains our common use of the phrase 'a peal of bells.' Note also M. E. apel, 'an old term in hunting music, consisting of three long moos; ' Halliwell. This etymology is noticed by Minshew, ed. 1627; he has: 'a peal of bells, from the F. appeller, i. e. vocare.' See Appeal. Der. peal, verb. [†]

PEAR, the same as Pisan, q. v. (L., — Gk.)

PEAR, a well-known fruit. (L.) M. E. pera, Chaucer, C. T. 10205. — A. S. pera or peru; Ælfric's Grammar, 6, 9 (Bosworth); spelt pere, Wright's Vocab. i. 285, col. 2. [The A. S. pirige, a pear-tree, occurs in 'Pirus, pirige'; Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Arborum, in Wright's Vocab. i. 32. Hence M. E. pery, a pear-tree, Chaucer, C. T. 10199, or pirie, P. Plowman, B. v. 16.] — Lat. pirum, a pear, Pliny, xv. 15, 16. Root unknown. ¶ The vowel-change from i to e appears again in Ital. pera, a pear. Der. pear-tree, perry.

PEARL, a well-known shining gem. (F., — L.) M. E. perle, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 1. — F. perle, 'a pearl, an union, also a berrie'; Cot.

β. Of disputed etymology, but doubtless Latin. It is best to collect the forms; we find Ital., Span., Prov. perla, Port. perala, sometimes perla; also A. S. perl, in Ælfric's Glossary (Lye); O. H. G. perala, perla, berala, berla (according to Diez). All prob. from Low Lat. perula, found in Isidore of Seville, in the 7th century (Brachet).

γ. Diez explains perula to stand for pirula, a little pear, from pirum, a pear; the change of vowel is seen again in Ital. pera, a pear. See Pear. This is perhaps the best solution; for, though the change of sense is curious, it may easily have been suggested by the use of the Lat. bacca, which meant (1) a berry, (2) an olive-berry, (3) any round fruit growing on a tree, (4) a pearl (Horace, Epod. viii. 14). Diez also draws attention to Span. perilla, (1) a little pear, (2) a pear-shaped ornament. Perhaps we may add O. Ital. perolo, 'a little button or tassell of wooll on the top and middle of a knit cap'; Florio. And observe the sense of 'berry' which Cotgrave assigns to F. perle. ¶ The next best solution appears to be that also due to Diez, viz. from Lat. pilula, a little ball, globule, pill, with change of the first l to r. Der. pearl-y, pearl-i-ness; pearl-ash, a purer carbonate of potash, named from its pearly colour; pearl-barley, F. orge perlé, 'pearl-barley', Hamilton, but perhaps for orge pelé, 'pilled barley', Cot. see Peel (1).

PEASANT, a countryman. (F., — L.) The t is excrement, as in ancien-t, tyran-t, but it occurs in O. F. In Gascoigne, Steele Glas, l. 647. — O. F. paisant, 'a peasant, boor'; Cot. Mod. F. payсан, and correct O. F. form paisan, answering to Ital. paisano, Span. paesano, one born in the same country, a compatriot.

β. Formed with suffix -an (= Ital. -ano, Lat. -anus) from O. F. pais (mod. F. pays), a country; answering to Ital. paese, Span. pais, Port. paiz. All these latter forms answer to Low Lat. *pagense, neut. of pagensis, orig. meaning a villager. — Lat. pagus, a village. See Pagan. Der. peasant-ry, Bacon, Life of Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 72, l. 16, a coined word.

PEAT, a vegetable substance like turf, found in boggy places, and used as fuel. (E.) 'There other with their spades the peats are squaring out;' Drayton, Polyolbion, s. 25. 'Turf and peat . . . are cheape fuels;' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 774. The true form is beat, as in Devonshire; the change from b to p is very unusual, but we have it again in purse from F. bourse; see Purse. 'Beat, the roots and soil subjected to the operation of burning beat, which answers to the paring and burning, or more technically, sod-burning, of other districts;' Marshall's Rural Economy of West Devonshire, 1796 (E. D. S., Gloss. B. 6). Marshall also gives beating-axe as the name of the implement used for paring the sods, but wrongly connects it with the verb to beat, with which it has nothing to do. The operation was so common in Devonshire that 'to Devonshire ground' or 'to Denshire land' passed into a proverb, and is mentioned in Fuller's Worthies, under Devonshire. β. The beat was so called because used for beeting, i. e. mending the fire; from M. E. beten, to replenish a fire. 'I wol don sacrifice, and fyres bete;' Chaucer, C. T. 2255. — A. S. betan, to better, amend, repair, to make up a fire. 'þa hét he betan þær-inne mycel fyr' = he then caused men to make up therein a great fire; Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, b. vi. c. xxxii. § 2. Formed (by usual vowel-change from o to e) from A. S. bót, advantage; see BOOT (2). See further in Wedgwood, who cites from Boucher, s. v. beate-burning, a passage from Carew about 'turfs which they call beating,' i. e. fuel; also 'betting, pared sods,' from Lewis's Herefordshire Glossary, &c. And see beit in Jamieson. [†]

PEBBLE, a small round stone. (E.) In Shak. Cor. v. 3. 58; a pebble-stone, Two Gent. ii. 3. 11. M. E. pobble, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 117; pibbil-ston, Wyclif, Prov. xx. 17. — A. S. papol-stán, a pebble-stone; Ælfrie's Homilies, i. 64. l. 3. β. Prob. named from its roundness; cf. Lat. papula, a pustule, papilla, a little pustule, nipple of a teat, rose-bud; Gk. ρῶμφος, a bubble, ρῆμφις, a bubble, a blister. — ✓ PAP, to swell up; nasalised in Lithuan. pampti, to swell, puff up; cf. Skt. pupputa, a swelling at the palate. ¶ The difficulty in this etymology is in the preservation of the Aryan p in A. S.; but all Teutonic words beginning with p present unusual difficulties. The A. S. papol may have been borrowed from Lat. papula as far as its form is concerned, but the sense hints at its being a survival of something older. Der. pebbly, pebbled.

PECCABLE, liable to sin. (L.) Rare; Rich. gives quotations for peccable and peccability from Cudworth, Intellectual System (first ed. 1678, also 1743, 1820, 1837, 1845), pp. 564, 565. Englished from Lat. *peccabilis, a coined word from peccare, to sin. Der. peccability. See PECCANT.

PECCADILLO, a slight offence, small sin. (Span., — L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Span. pecadillo, a slight fault, dimin. of pecado, a sin. — Lat. peccatum, a sin; orig. neut. of peccatus, pp. of peccare, to sin. See PECCANT.

PECCANT, sinning. (F., — L.) First used in the phrase 'peccant humours;' Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ed. Wright, p. 37. l. 32, p. 43, l. 28. — F. peccant, 'sinning;' l'humeur peccante, the corrupt humour in the body; Cot. — Lat. peccant, stem of pres. part. of peccare, to sin. β. Etymology doubtful; Cicero (Parad. iii. 1. 20) says 'peccare est tanquam transilire lineas,' like our transgress or trespass. It has been suggested that it may stand for pedicare, from pedica, a clog, fetter, shackle, like our phrase 'to put one's foot in it.' If there be any truth in this, the etymology is from ped-, stem of pes, a foot; see FOOT. Der. peccant-ly, peccant-ly; and see pecc-able, pecc-ad-illo.

PECCARY, a hog-like quadruped of S. America. (F., — S. American.) In a tr. of Buffon, Nat. Hist., London, 1792, i. 202. — F. pecari, a peccary. A S. American word. 'It is not improbable that the pecari has been so called by Buffon from pachira, which is the name given to this quadruped in Oronoko;' Clavigero's Hist. of Mexico, tr. by Cullen, 1787, ii. 319. It is also called, in different parts of America, saino, cojamel, and tatabro (id.).

PECK (1), to strike with something pointed, to snap up. (Scand., — C.) A mere variant of pick. In Chaucer, C. T. 14973 (Six-text, B. 4157) we have: 'Pikke hem right as they growe,' where most MSS. have Pekke or Pek. Pick is the older form; see PICK. β. A similar vowel-change appears in Corn. peg, a prick, answering to W. pig, a pike, point, also a nip. And some Swed. dialects have pekka for pikka. Der. peck-er, wood-peck-er.

PECK (2), a dry measure, two gallons. (Scand., — C.) M. E. pekke, Chaucer, C. T. 4008. The word is somewhat obscure, but it is probably a mere derivative of peck, to snap up. As in the case of most measures, the quantity was once quite indefinite, and prov. E. peck merely means 'a quantity;' we still talk of 'a peck of troubles.' In particular, it was a quantity for eating; cf. prov. E. peck, meat, victuals, from the prov. E. verb peck, to eat. 'We must scrat before we peck,' i. e. scratch (work) before we eat; Halliwell. Hence slang E. peg away, i. e. peck away, eat quickly, or drive hard; pecker, appetite. β. We do indeed find Irish peac, Gael. peic, a peck; but there is a suspicion that these are rather borrowed from E. than the orig. Celtic words. γ. Similarly Scheler derives picotin, a peck, a measure, from the verb picoter, to peck as a bird does; and picoter is itself a mere extension from the Celtic root appearing also in E. peck and pick. [†] PECTINAL, comb-like, applied to fish with bones like the teeth of a comb. (L.) Sir T. Browne speaks of pectinals, i. e. pectinal fish; Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 1, last section. Coined from Lat. pectin, stem of pecten, a comb. — Lat. pectere, to comb. + Gk. τεκτείνω, to comb; lengthened form from τέκνω, to comb, to card wool, to shear. β. From ✓ PAK, to pluck, pull hair, comb; preserved also in Lithuanian pesz-ti, to pluck, pull hair. From the same root is A. S. fæx, a head of hair, whence Fairfax, i. e. fair hair. And see FIGHT. Der. Hence also pectin-ate, pectin-at-ed; and see parwan.

PECTORAL, belonging to the breast or chest. (F., — L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. — F. pectoral, 'pectoral;' Cot. — Lat. pectoralis, belonging to the breast. — Lat. pector-, stem of pectus, the breast. Perhaps allied to Skt. paksha, in the sense of flank or side. Der. pectoral-ly, ex-pector-ate.

PECULATE, to pilfer, steal. (Lat.) 'Peculator, that robs the prince or common treasure;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. peculatus, pp. of peculāri, to appropriate to one's own use. Formed as if from *peculium, with the same sense as peculium, private property, and allied to pecū-nia, property; see Peculiar, Pecuniary. Der. peculiat-ion, peculiat-or.

PECULIAR, appropriated, one's own, particular. (F., — L.) In Levins; and in Shak. Oth. i. 1. 60. — F. peculier, 'peculiar;' Cot. — Lat. peculiaris, relating to property, one's own. — Lat. peculium, property; allied to pecunia, property, money, from which it merely differs in the suffix. See Pecuniary. Der. peculiar-ly, peculiar-ity.

PECUNIARY, relating to property or money. (F., — L.) Spelt pecuniarie in Minshew, ed. 1627. — F. pecuniaire, 'pecuniary;' Cot. — Lat. pecuniarius, belonging to property. — Lat. pecunia, property. β. Formed with Aryan suffixes -na and -ya from pecu-, as appearing in pl. pecu-a, cattle of all kinds, sheep, money; the wealth of ancient times consisting in cattle. + Skt. pagu, cattle; lit. that which is fastened up, hence cattle possessed and controlled by men. — ✓ PAK, to fasten; cf. Skt. pag, to fasten; and see Fee. Der. pecuniari-ly.

PEDAGOGUE, a teacher, pedant. (F., — L., — Gk.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. — F. pedagogue, 'a schoolmaster, teacher, pedant;' Cot. — Lat. pedagogus, a preceptor. — Gk. παιδαγωγός, at Athens, a slave who led a boy to school, hence, a tutor, instructor. — Gk. παῖς, stem of παῖς, a boy; and ἀγωγός, leading, guiding, from άγω, to lead.

β. The Gk. παῖς is from παῖς, i. e. pau-is, from a probable ✓ PU, to beget, whence numerous derivatives, such as Lat. pu-er, a boy, Skt. pu-tra, a son, Gk. πῶ-λος, a foal, and E. FOAL, q. v. The Gk. άγω, to lead, is cognate with Lat. agere, whence E. Agent, q. v. Der. pedagog-ic; pedagog-y, O. F. pedagogie (Cot.).

PEDAL, belonging to the foot. (L.) 'Pedal, of a foot, measure or space;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'Pedalls, or low keys, of organs;' Sherwood, index to Cotgrave. Now chiefly used as a sb., as the pedal of an organ, i. e. a key acted on by the foot. — Lat. pedalis, (1) belonging to a foot, (2) belonging to a foot-measure (whence the old use, as in Blount). — Lat. ped-, stem of pes, a foot; cognate with E. Foot, q. v.

PEDANT, a schoolmaster, vain displayer of learning. (F., — Ital., — Gk.?) In Shak. L. L. L. iii. 179. — F. pedant, 'a pedant, or ordinary schoolmaster;' Cot. Borrowed from Italian (Littré). — Ital. pedante, 'a pedante, or a schoolmaster, the same as pedagogo;' Florio.

β. Pedante is a pres. participial form as if from a verb *pedare, which, as Diez suggests, is probably not the O. Ital. pedare, 'to foote it, to tracke, to trace, to tread or trample with one's feet' (Florio), but an accommodation of the Gk. παῖδεσθαι, to instruct, from παῖς, stem of παῖς, a boy. See Pedagogue. Diez cites from Varchi (Ercol., p. 60, ed. 1570) a passage in Italian, to the effect that 'when I was young, those who had the care of children, teaching them and taking them about, were not called as at present pedanti nor by the Greek name pedagogi, but by the more horrible name of ripititori' [ushers]. γ. If this etymology be not approved, we may perhaps fall back upon the verb pedare in Florio, as if a pedant meant 'one who tramps about with children at his heels.' This is, of course, from Lat. ped-, stem of pes, a foot, cognate with E. Foot. Der. pedant-ic, pedant-ic-al, pedant-ry.

PEDDLE, to deal in small wares. (Scand.?) Bp. Hall contrasts 'pedling barbarismes' with 'classick tongues;' Satires, bk. ii [not iii]. sat. 3, l. 25. Here pedling means 'petty,' from the verb peddle or pedle, to deal in small wares; a verb merely coined from the sb. pedlar, a dealer in small wares, which was in much earlier use. See Pedlar. Der. piddle, to trifle, q. v.

PEDESTAL, the foot or base of a pillar. (Span., — Ital., — L. and G.) Spelt pedestall in Minshew, ed. 1627. — Span. pedestal, 'the base or foot of a pillar,' Minshew. Cf. O. F. piéd-stal in Cotgrave. As the Span. for 'foot' is pie, it is not a Span. word, but borrowed wholly from Ital. piéd-stallo, 'a footstall or a treshall [threshold] of a doore;' Florio. β. A clumsy hybrid compound; from Ital. pie, 'a foote, a base, a footstall or foundation of anything' (Florio), which from Lat. pedem, acc. of pes, a foot; and Ital. stallo, a stable, a stall, from G. stall, a stable, stall, cognate with E. stall. See Foot and Stall.

γ. Footstall (G. fussgestell) is a better word.

PEDESTRIAN, going on foot; an expert walker. (L.) Properly an adj. Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, gives the form pedestrial. Both pedestri-an and pedestri-al are coined words, from Lat. pedestri-, crude form of pedester, one who goes on foot. Formed, it is supposed, from *pedit-ter, i. e. by adding the suffix -ter (Aryan -tar) to pedit-, stem of pedes, one who goes on foot. Pedit-it is from ped-, stem of pes, a foot; and it-um, supine of ire, to go, from ✓ I, to go. Cf.

com-es (stem com-it-), a companion, one who 'goes with' another. The Lat. pes is cognate with E. foot; see Foot. Der. pedestrianism.

PEDICEL, PEDICLE, the foot-stalk by which a leaf or fruit is joined on to a tree. (F., -L.) Pedicle is modern, from mod. F. pedicelle; not a good form, since Lat. pedicellus means 'a little louse.' Pedicle is the better word, as used by Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 592. — O. F. pedicule, 'the stalk of a leaf, or of fruit'; Cot. — Lat. pediculum, acc. of pediculus, a little foot, foot-stalk, pedicle. Double dimin. from pedi-, crude form of pes, cognate with E. foot. See Foot.

PEDIGREE, a register of descent, lineage, genealogy. (F.?) In Shak. Hen. V, ii. 4. 90. Spelt pedegree in Minshew (1627); pedigrew in Levins (1570); petygrewe in Palsgrave (1530). In the Prompt. Parv., A.D. 1440, we find the spellings pedegru, pedegru, pedygru, pedegrewe, petygru, petygrue, and it is explained by 'lyne of kynrede and awncetrye, Stemma, in scalis.' In the Appendix to Hearne's ed. of Rob. of Gloucester, p. 585, he cites from a MS. of Rob. of Glouc. in the Herald's Office, a piece which begins: 'A petegreu, fro William Conquerour . . vn-to kyng Henry the vi.' The last circumstance mentioned belongs to A.D. 1431, so that the date is about the same as that of the Prompt. Parv. Wedgwood cites from the Rolls of Winchester College, temp. Henry IV, printed in Proceedings of the Archaeological Institute, 1848, p. 64, a passage relating to the expenses 'Stephani Austinwell . . ad loquendum . . de evidenciis scrutandis de pe de gre progenitorum heredium de Husey.' This, being in a Latin document, is not much to be relied on for spelling, but it appears to be the earliest trace of the word at present known. Thus the word does not appear till the 15th century.

β. Etymology unknown; but we may feel sure it is French. The numerous guesses, par degrés (Mahn), piéd and gré, père and dégré, petendo gradus, &c., are all utterly unsatisfactory. The evidence certainly points to something different from F. gré and Lat. gradus, or we should not have the forms gru and grewe in the Prompt. Parv.

γ. I merely add the guess that there may be a reference to F. grue, a crane. Danser la grue meant to hop or stand on one leg only (Cotgrave), in allusion to the crane's frequently resting on a single leg; and there is a proverbial phrase à pied de grue, 'in suspense, on doubtful terms, or not wel, or but halfe, settled, like a crane that stands but upon one leg'; Cot. Thus a pedegree would be so named, in derision, from its doubtfulness; or from the cranes' legs (single upright stalks) used in drawing out a pedigree. δ. Wedgwood (in N. and Q. 6 S. i. 309) gives piéd the sense of 'tree'; so that piéd de gres is 'tree of degrees.' Cf. F. piéd-bornier, 'a tree that serves to divide severall tenements'; Cot. [†]

PEDIMENT, an ornament finishing the front of a building. (L.) 'Fronton, in architecture, a member that serves to compose an ornament, raised over cross-works, doors, niches, &c., sometimes making a triangle, and sometimes part of a circle; it is otherwise called a pediment, and fastigium by Vitruvius'; Phillips, ed. 1706. I cannot trace the history of the word, and the dictionaries make no attempt to explain it. Mahn, in Webster, derives it from pes, a foot; which is but a poor account. The form of the word is clearly Latin; but there is no such word as pedimentum. I can only suppose that the orig. word is pedamentum, a stake or prop, with which trees and vines are supported; formed with suffix -mentum from pedare, to prop, from ped-, stem of pes, a foot; see Foot. The spelling pediment for pedament would naturally be brought about by confusion with the common word impediment.

β. This etymology is, as to the form, probably right; as to the reason of the use of the word, I can only guess that pedamentum was used as an equivalent to pedatura. Pedatura not only means a prop or 'pedament,' but in Low Lat. had the sense of a certain space, containing a certain number of feet, in which anything could be put, a site or plot (Ducange). And a pediment does, in fact, enclose a space which was often ornamented with sculpture. More light is desired as to the word's history.

PEDLAR, PEDLER, PEDDLER, a hawker, one who travels about selling small wares. (Scand.?) The verb to peddle, to sell small wares, is later, and a mere derivative from the sb. We find pedlar in Cotgrave, to explain F. mercerot, and pedlar in Sherwood's index. But the older form was peddar or pedder, appearing as late as in Levins, ed. 1570; although, on the other hand, pedlere occurs as early as in P. Plowman, B. v. 258. 'Peddare, calatharius [basket-maker], piscaarius [one who sells fish hawked about in baskets]'; Prompt. Parv.; formed from pedde, explained by 'panere,' i.e. a pannier; id. See Way's excellent illustrative note. The Prompt. Parv. also gives: 'Pedlare, shapmann,' i.e. chapman, hawker. β. As Way remarks, in the Eastern counties, a pannier for carrying provisions to market, esp. fish, is called a ped; 'the market in Norwich, where wares brought in from the country are exposed for sale, being known as the ped-market; and a dealer who transports his wares in such a manner is termed a pedder.' Probably pedlar is due to a dimin. form peddle, i.e. little 'ped,' which is not recorded. The word peddar is old, and is spelt peoddare in the Ancrer Riwe, p. 66, l. 17, where it has the exact sense of pedlar or hawker of small wares. And see Lowland Sc. peddir, a pedlar (Jamieson). γ. Origin unknown; but presumably Scand., as peddar is found in Scotch, and ped or pad in Norfolk. Cf. 'A haske is a wicker pad, wherein they vse to cary fish'; Gloss by E. Kirke to Spenser, Shep. Kal. Novemb. l. 16. Still, the word ped, or pad, a basket, is no longer to be traced in Scandinavian; and the word pad, in the sense of cushion, is almost as obscure. See Pad. Der. peddle, vb., q. v.

PEDOBAPTISM, infant baptism. (Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. A coined word, as if from Lat. *pedobaptismus, Latinised form of Gk. παιδοβαπτισμός; from παιδο, crude form of παῖς, a boy; and βαπτισμός, baptism. See Pedagogue and Baptism. Der. pedobaptist.

PEEL (1), to strip off the skin or bark. (F., -L.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. i. 3. 85. [Two F. verbs are mixed up here, viz. F. peler and F. piller. It is true that peler and piller are now well distinguished in French, the former meaning 'to peel, strip,' and the latter 'to plunder,' a sense preserved in E. pillage. But in O. F. they were sometimes confused, and the same confusion appears in M. E. pilien, pillen, used in the sense of 'peel.' 'Rushes to pilio' = to peel rushes, P. Plowman, C. x. 81; pilled = bald, Chaucer, C. T. 3993. A clear case is in Palsgrave, who has: 'I pyll rysshes, Je pille des ioncz.' For further remarks on pill, see Pillage.] We may consider peel, in the present place, as if due to peler only. — F. peler, 'to pill, pare, bark, unring, unskin'; Cot. Cf. Span. pelar, Ital. pellare, to strip, peel, O. Ital. pellare, 'to vnskin,' Florio. — Lat. pellis, skin; see Fell (2). ¶ But some senses of F. peler are due to Lat. pilare, to deprive of hair, make bald. — Lat. pilus, hair. Der. peel-ed; peel, sb.

PEEL (2), to pillage. (F., -L.) 'Peeling their provinces,' i.e. robbing them; Milton, P. L. iv. 136. This is not the same word as the above, but another spelling of the old verb pill (F. piller), to rob. See Pillage, and see remarks under Peel (1).

PEEL (3), a fire-shovel. (F., -L.) Once a common word; see Halliwell. 'Pele for an ouyn, pelle a four'; Palsgrave. — F. pelle, older form pale, 'a fire-shovell,' Cot. — Lat. pāla, a spade, shovel, peel. Root uncertain; but prob. pā = pag, to fasten, plant, as in Lat. pargere; whence pāla, the instrument used in planting. Der. pal-ette.

PEEP (1), to chirp, or cry like a chicken. (F., -L.) In Isaiah, viii. 19, x. 14; see Bible Wordbook. M. E. pipen, to peep, chirp. Owl and Nightingale, 503. Certainly a purely imitative word, but it seems nevertheless to have been borrowed from F. On the confusion between the sounds denoted by the E. ee in the 16th century, see remarks in Palsgrave, cited by Ellis, Early Eng. Pron. i. 77. Palsgrave says that the mod. bear and bier were both spelt beere in his time. Thus E. peep may answer either to O. F. pepier or to F. pipier; the M. E. pipen, however, is solely the latter. — O. F. pepier, 'to peep, cheep, or pule, as a young bird in the nest,' Cot.; pipier, 'to whistle, or chirp, like a bird,' id.; cf. pipée, 'the peeping or chirping of small birds,' id. — Lat. pipare, pipire, to peep, chirp. Of imitative origin; due to repetition of the syllable PI. Cf. Gk. πῖπιν, πῖπιν (ev), to chirp. See Pipe, Pule. [†]

PEEP (2), to look out (or in) through a narrow aperture, to look slyly. (F., -L.) 'Where dawning day doth never peepe,' Spenser, F. Q. i. 1. 39. 'To peepe, inspicere,' Levins, ed. 1570. The etymology offers great difficulties; but nearly all writers think it must be connected with the word above, as no other solution seems possible, the word being unknown in M. E.; whereas M. E. pipen, to peep, chirp, occurs in the Owl and Nightingale, 503. β. The explanations hitherto offered are very forced; Richardson suggests that the verb was 'transferred from the sound which chickens make upon the first breaking of the shell to the look accompanying it' Wedgwood says: 'When we endeavour to sound the highest notes in our voice we strain for a moment without effect until after an effort a thin, sharp sound makes its way through the constricted passages, affording a familiar image of a hidden force struggling through obstructions into life; as the sprouting of a bud through the bursting envelopes, or the light of day piercing through the shades of night. Hence may be explained Dan. at pippe frem (of a bud or seed), to shoot, or peep forth, and the O. E. [M. E.] day-pipe, rendered by Palsgrave la pipe du jour. We now call it the peep of day, with total unconsciousness of the original image. In the same way Du. kriechen, kriecheling, the day spring or creak of day, from krieken, F. criquer, to creak. "I peke or prie, je pipe hors" [I peep out]; Palsgrave.'

γ. It is far simpler to derive E. peep at once from O. F. pipier, formerly used, as the above happy quotation shows, in the phrase piper hors, to peep out, to pry. How the F. piper came to be used in that sense will appear at once if we refer the verb, not to the bird, but to the fowler who lies in wait for him, which was, in fact, a common use of it. 'Piper, to whistle, or chirp, like a bird; also to coulsen, deceive, cheat, gull, overreach, beguile, esp. by false cards or dice;' Cot. 'Pipée, the peeping or chirping of small birds, counterfeited by a bird-catcher; also, a counterfeit shew, false countenance,' &c.; id. 'Pipe, a bird-call, or little wooden pipe, wherewith fowlers do counterfeit the voices of the birds they would take;' id. Now at p. 212 of Lacroix (Manners, Customs, and Dress during the Middle Ages) there is an excellent illustration of 'bird-piping, or the manner of catching birds by piping,' being a fac-simile of a miniature in a MS. of the 14th century. The picture shews a man, nearly concealed within a bush, attracting wild birds by means of a pipe. He is piping and peeping out at once. I think we may therefore explain piper as meaning to act like a bird-catcher, to pipe, to peep, to beguile. The sense 'to beguile' is still common; see Littré. The above explanation shews why it is that to peep implies not merely to look out, but to look out sily, to look out so as not to be seen, 'to look as through a crevice, or by stealth' (Schmidt, Shakespeare-Lexicon). 'Why pry'st thou through my window? leave thy peeping;' Lucrece, 1089. See further under Peep (1). Der. by peep, Cymb. i. 6. 108; peep-bo. ¶ It deserves to be added that the use of the E. verb may have been further influenced by that of the old verb to peak, used in much the same sense. The quotation 'I peke or prie' has been given above, from Palsgrave. Cf. 'To peake into a place, inspiciere;' Levins. This is the M. E. piken; 'Cam nere, and gan in at the curtein pika' = came near, and peeped in at the curtain, Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 60; apparently borrowed from F. piquer, to pierce, hence (metaphorically) to poke one's nose into a thing. See Pique, Pick, Peck. [†]

PEER (1), an equal, a nobleman. (F., -L.) The orig. sense is 'equal;' the twelve peers of France were so called because of equal rank. M. E. perre, Chaucer, C. T. 10990 [not 11119]; per, Havelok, 2241. - O. F. per, peer, later pair, 'a peer, a paragon, also a match, fellow, companion;' Cot.; or, as an adj., 'like, equall,' id. Cf. Span. par, equal, also a peer; Ital. pare, pari, alike, pari, a peer. - Lat. parem, acc. of par, equal. See Par, Pair. Der. peer-ess, a late word, with fem. suffix -ess, of F. origin, Pope, Moral Essays, ii. 70, iii. 140; peer-age, used by Dryden (Todd; no reference), in place of the older word peer-dom, used by Cotgrave to translate F. pairie; also peer-less, Temp. iii. 1. 47; peer-less-ly, peer-less-ness.

PEER (2), to look narrowly, to pry. (O. Low G.) 'Peering in maps for ports;' Merch. Ven. i. 1. 19. M. E. piren. 'Right so doth he, whan that he pireth And tototh on her womanhede' = so does he, when he peers and looks upon her womanhood; Gower, C. A. iii. 29, l. 4. 'And preylich pirith till be dame passe' = and privily peers, or spies, till the mother-bird leaves the nest; Rich. Redeles, ed. Skeat, iii. 48. - Low G. piren, to look closely, a form in which l has been lost; it is also spelt pliren, plüren; see Bremen Wörterbuch. For the loss of l, cf. Patch. + Swed. plira, to blink; Dan. plire, to blink. The orig. sense of Low G. pliren is to draw the eyelids together, in order to look closely. See Blear-eyed. And see Peer (3). Doublet, pry.

PEER (3), to appear. (F., -L.) Distinct from the word above, though prob. sometimes confused with it. It is merely short for appear. M. E. peren, short for aperen. 'There was I bidde, in payn of deth, to pere;' Court of Love (late 15th cent.), l. 55. Cf. 'When daffodils begin to pere;' Shak. Wint. T. iv. 3. 1. As the M. E. aperen was frequently spelt with one p, the prefix a- easily dropped off, as in the case of peal for appeal; see Peal. See further under Appear. ¶ In F. the simple verb paraître (Lat. parere) was used in a similar way. 'Paraître, to appear, to peep out, as the day in a morning, or the sun over a mountain;' Cot.

PEEVISH, cross, ill-natured, fretful. (E.) M. E. peuvisch; spelt peyuessche in P. Plowman, C. ix. 151, where four MSS. have peuysche; the sense being 'ill-natured.' It occurs also in G. Douglas, tr. of Virgil, Æn. xi. 408 (Lat. text), where we find: 'Sik ane peuvisch and catyve saule as thine' = such a perverse and wretched soul as thine. And again, in the same, Æn. vi. 301, where the Lat. 'Sordidus ex humeris nodo dependet amictus' is translated by: 'Hys smottit habyt, ovr his schulderis lydder Hang peuagely knyt with a knot togidder,' where it seems to mean 'uncouthly.' And yet again, Aruns is called 'thys peuech man of weyr' [war], where it answers to Lat. improbus; Æn. xi. 767. Ray, in his North-country Words, ed. 1691, gives: 'Peevish, witty, subtil.' Florio explains schifezza by 'coynes, quaintnes, peuvisshnes, fondnes, frowardnes.' Peevish in Shak. is silly, childish, thoughtless, forward. Peevishnesse = waywardness, Spenser, F. Q. vi. 7. 37. Thus the various senses are childish, silly, wayward, froward, uncouth, ill-natured, perverse, and even witty. All of these may be reduced to the sense of 'childish,' the sense of witty being equivalent to that of 'forward,' the child being toward instead of froward.

β. A difficult and obscure word; but prob. of onomatopoeic origin, from the noise made by fretful children. The origin appears, perhaps, in Lowland Sc. peu, to make a plaintive noise, used in the Complaint of Scotland, ed. Murray, i. 39, to denote the plaintive cry of young birds: 'the chekyns [chickens] began to peu.' Wedgwood cites Dan. dial. pieve, to whimper or cry like a child; not given in Aasen. Cf. F. piauler, 'to peep or cheep as a young bird, also to pule, or howle as a young whelp;' Cot. Cf. also Peep (1) and Pewit. In this view, the suffix -ish has the not uncommon force of 'given to,' as in thievish, mopish. Similarly, from Gael. piug, a plaintive note, we have piugach, having a querulous voice, mean-looking. Der. peevish-ly, -ness.

PEEWIT, another spelling of Pewit. (E.)

PEG, a wooden pin for fastening boards, &c. (Scand., -C.) M. E. pegge; 'Pegge, or pynne of tymbyr;' Prompt. Parv. The nearest form is Dan. pig (pl. pigge), a pike, a spike, a weakened form of pik, a pike, peak; so also Swed. pigg, a prick, spike, from pik, a pike. (For the vowel-change, cf. Corn. peg, a prick.) [†] β. These are words of Celtic origin; cf. W. pig, a point, pike, peak; and see Peck, Peak, Pike. Der. peg, verb, Temp. i. 2. 295; pegged.

PELF, lucre, spoil, booty. (F., -L.?) 'But all his minde is set on mucky pelfe;' Spenser, F. Q. iii. 9. 4. M. E. pelfyr, pelfrey, 'Spolium;' Prompt. Parv. Pelf, to rob, occurs as a verb, Cursor Mundi, l. 6149. - O. F. pelfre, booty, allied to pelfrer, to pilfer (Burguy).

β. Of unknown origin; Roquefort gives O. F. pilfèr, pilfèr, to rob, plunder, which Mahn (in Webster) derives from Lat. pilare, to rob, and facere, to make. This derivation from two verbs is not satisfactory; yet it is highly probable that, at any rate, the first syllable of pelfrer is connected with F. and E. pillage. The difficulty is to explain the latter part of the word. γ. Pelf and pilfer are obviously related; but it is not clear which is the older word. See Pilfer.

PELICAN, a large water-fowl. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Hamlet, iv. 5. 146. Spelt pellican, Ancren Riwle, p. 118. - F. pelican, 'a pelican;' Cot. - Lat. pelicanus, pēlicanus. - Gk. πελεκάν (gen. πελεκάνος, πελεκᾶς, πελέκας, strictly, the wood pecker, the joiner-bird of Aristophanes, Av. 884, 1155; also a water-bird of the pelican kind. The wood-pecker was so called from its pecking; and the pelican from its large bill. - Gk. πελεκᾶν, I hew with an axe, peck. - Gk. πέλεκυς, an axe, hatchet. + Skt. paraqu, an axe, hatchet, paraquada, an axe.

PELISSE, a silk habit, worn by ladies. (F., -L.) Formerly a furled robe. Of late introduction; added by Todd to Johnson. [The older E. form is pelich, q. v.] - F. pelisse, formerly also pelice, 'a skin of fur;' Cot. - Lat. pellicca, pelliccia, fem. of pellicceus, pelliccius, made of skins. - Lat. pellis, a skin, cognate with E. fell, a skin; see Pell and Fell (2). Der. sur-plice. Doublet, pelich.

PELL, a skin, a roll of parchment. (F., -L.) M. E. pell, pel (pl. pellis); King Alisaunder, 7081. - O. F. pel (Burguy); mod. F. peau, a skin. - Lat. pellis, a skin, cognate with E. fell, a skin; see Fell (2). Der. pel-isse, pell-icle, pel-ice (2), sur-plice, pel.

PELLET, a little ball, as of lint or wax, &c. (F., -L.) M. E. pelot. Formerly used to mean a gun-stone, or piece of white stone used as a cannon-ball. 'As pale as a pelet;' P. Plowman, B. v. 78. 'A pelet out of a gonne' [gun], Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 553. - O. F. pelote, 'a hand-ball, or tennis-ball;' Cot. Cf. Span. pelota, a ball, cannon-ball, Ital. pillotta, a small ball. All diminutives from Lat. pila, a ball.

β. Allied to Gk. πάλλα, a ball; πάλλειν, to brandish, toss, throw, Lat. pellere, to drive. See Pulsate. Der. pellet-ed; plat-con, q. v.

PELLICLE, a thin film. (F., -L.) 'A pellicle, or little membrane;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 27, part 10. - F. pellicule, 'a little skin;' Cot. - Lat. pellicula, a small skin or hide; dimin. from pellis, a skin. See Pell.

PELLITORY (1), PARITORY, a wild flower that grows on walls. (F., -L.) Often called pellitory of the wall, a tautological expression. Pellitory stands for paritory, by the common change of r to l. M. E. paritorie, Chaucer, C. T. 16049. - O. F. paritoire, 'pellitory of the wall;' Cot. - Lat. parietaria, pellitory; properly fem. of adj. parietarius, belonging to walls. - Lat. pariet, stem of paries, a wall. β. Perhaps paries = that which goes round, from par- = Gk. περί = Skt. pari, around, and √ I, to go (whence Lat. i-re).

PELLITORY (2), PELLETER, the plant pyrethrum. (Span., -L., -Gk.) Sometimes called pelletier of Spain, because it grows there (Prior). It is the Anacyclus pyrethrum, the name of which has been assimilated to that of the plant above, which was earlier known. On account of this it is called by Cotgrave 'bastard pellitory, or right pellitory of Spain;' but the name is not from O. F. pirette (Cot.), but from Span. pelitre, pellitory of Spain. - Lat. pyrethrum. - Gk. πύρεθρον, a hot spicy plant, feverfew (Liddell). So named from its hot taste. - Gk. πύρ, fire, cognate with E. fire; with suffix -θρον = Aryan -tar, denoting the agent. See Fire.

PELL-MELL, promiscuously, confusedly. (F., -L.) In Shak. K. John, ii. 406. - O. F. pesle-mesle (mod. F. pèle-mêle), 'pell-mell, confusedly,' Cot.; also spelt pelle-melle in the 13th cent. (Littre).⁵ The lit. sense is 'stirred up with a shovel.' — F. pelle, a shovel, fire-shovel (E. peel, see Halliwell), which from Lat. pāla, a spade, peel, shovel; and O. F. mesler, to mix, from Low Lat. misculare, extended from miscere, to mix. See Peel (3) and Medley.

PELT (1), to throw or cast, to strike by throwing. (L.) 'The children billow seems to pelt the clouds'; Oth. ii. 1. 12. M. E. pellen, piltten, pulten, to thrust, strike, drive; pt. t. pelte, pilte, pulte; pp. pelt, pilt, pult. 'And hire oðer eare pilted hire tail per-inne' = and in her other ear she [the adder] thrusts her tail; O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 197. 'Fikenhild ajen hire pelte Wiþ his swerdes hiltē' = Fikenhild pushed against her with his sword-hilt; King Horn, ed. Lumby, 1415. The pp. pilt = thrust, put, is in Gen. and Exodus, ed. Morris, 2214. The pp. ipult = cast, thrown, is in Layamon, 10839 (later text). See further examples in Stratmann, to which add, from Halliwell: 'With grete strokes I shalle hym pelte,' MS. Ashmole 61; which comes very near the mod. usage. The sense of 'drive' comes out in the common mod. E. phrase full pelt = full drive.

β. The easiest way of interpreting the vowel-sounds is to refer the word to an A. S. form *pyltan, to thrust, drive, not recorded. This would give M. E. pulten or piltten; cf. A. S. lytel, whence M. E. lutel, litel, and A. S. pyt, a pit, whence M. E. put, pit. The e is a dialectal variety, like Kentish pet for pit, and E. dent as well as dint, from A. S. dynt.

γ. Just as pyt is from Lat. puteus, such a form as A. S. *pyltan would answer to Lat. pultare, to beat, strike, knock; and this is the most prob. origin of the word.

δ. Lat. pultare, like pulsare, is an iterative form from pellere (pp. pulsus), to drive; see Pulsate. The simple Lat. pellere appears, probably, in Havelok, 810: 'To morwen shal ich forth pelle' = tomorrow I shall drive forth, i. e. rush forth.

¶ It is usual to derive E. pelt from O. F. peloter, to throw a ball, from pelote, a ball, discussed under Pellet. But though the word pellet may have influenced the later usage of the verb to pelt, and probably did so, such an origin for the word must certainly be rejected, as the M. E. forms clearly shew; esp. as pelt was in use before pellet. Certainly full pelt is not full pellet, nor anything of the kind. Der. pelt-ing, pelt, sb.

PELT (2), a skin, esp. of a sheep. (F., — L.) Used in the North for the skin of a sheep; in hawking, a pelt is the dead body of a fowl killed by a hawk (Halliwell). The skin of a beast with the hair on (Webster). And see Richardson. M. E. pelt. 'Off shepe also comythe pelt and eke felle' [skin]; The Hors, Shepe, and Goos, l. 43. (by Lydgate), in Political, Religious, and Love Poems, ed. Furnivall. We also find prov. E. peltry, skins (Halliwell); formerly peltrie-ware, as in Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 170 (R.); Hackluyt's Voyages, i. 102, l. 11 from bottom, where it occurs in a reprinted poem of the 15th century. The form pelt seems to have been shortened from peltry or peltrie-ware, there being no such word as pellet in F.; whilst peltry = O. F. pelletierie, 'the trade of a skinner, or peltmonger'; Cot. — O. F. pelletier, 'a skinner.' Formed (like bijouier, graine-tier) by a suffix -tier (due to a diminutive -et and suffix -ier) from O. F. pel, mod. F. peau, a skin; see Pell. ¶ But it may be added that the passage quoted by Hackluyt says that peltrie-ware was brought from Pruce (Prussia); so that pelt may have been borrowed directly from M. H. G. pelliz (mod. G. pelz), a skin, the t being due to G. z. However, the M. H. G. pelliz, like Du. pels, are mere borrowings from O. F. pellice, 'a skin of fur' (Cot.) = Lat. pellicca, fem. of pelliccus, adj. formed from pellis. So that it comes to much the same thing. See Pelisse.

PELLUCID, transparent. (F., — L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — F. pellucide, 'bright, shining'; Cot. — Lat. pellucidus, transparent. — Lat. pellucere, perlucere, to shine through. — Lat. per, through; and lucere, to shine, from lux, light. See Per- and Lucid.

PELVIS, the bony cavity in the lower part of the abdomen. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. — Lat. pelvis, lit. a basin; hence, the pelvis, from its shape. Allied to Gk. πέλας, πέλλα, a wooden bowl, cup. Perhaps from ✓PAR, to fill; whence Lat. plenus, E. full, &c.

PEN (1), to shut up, enclose. (L.) M. E. pennen, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 43; also pinnen, see P. Plowman, C. vii. 219, and footnote. — A. S. pennan, only recorded in the comp. on-pennan, to un-pen. 'Ac gif sio pynding wierð onpennad' = but if the water-dam is unfastened or thrown open; Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Pastoral, ed. Sweet, c. xxxviii, p. 276. Cf. Low G. pennen, to bolt a door, from penn, a pin, peg. Pennan is thus connected with pin, and is ultimately of Latin origin. See Pin. Der. pen, sb., Merry Wives, iii. 4. 41; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 322. ¶ The verb to pen seems to have been connected with pindar at an early period; but pindar is related to a pound for cattle.

PEN (2), an instrument used for writing. (F., — L.) M. E. penne, Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 156, l. 15; P. Plowman, B. ix. 39. — O. F. penne, 'a quill, or hard feather, a pen-feather'; Cot. — Lat. penna, a feather; in late Lat. a pen. β. The old form of penna was pesna (Festus); formed with suffix -na from ✓PAT, to fly; whence also E. feath-er, im-pet-us, pet-it-ion, &c. See Feather. Der. pen, vb., Skelton, Phyllyp Sparowe, l. 810; pen-knife, pen-man, pen-man-ship; penn-er, a case for pens, Chaucer, C. T. 9753; penn-ale, from Lat. pennatus, winged; penn-on, q. v. Also pinw-ac-le, pinw-ale, pin-ion. Doublet, pin.

PENAL, pertaining to or used for punishment. (F., — L.) In Levins, 1570. — O. F. penal, 'penall'; Cot. — Lat. penalis, penal. — Lat. pena, punishment. + Gk. ποινή, a penalty, requital. Root uncertain, but perhaps from ✓PU, to purify; see Pure. 'Corssen (Beitr. 78) is probably right in assuming an orig. form pov-ina, by expansion from pu; . . Mommsen (Roman Hist. i. 26, English tr.) is certainly right in holding ποινή to be a Græco-Italic conception'; Curtius, i. 349. See Pain. Der. penal-ty, L. L. i. 1. 123, from O. F. penalité, not in Cotgrave, but in use in the 16th century (Littre), coined as if from a Lat. *penalitas. Also pen-ance, pen-it-ence, pun-ish.

PENANCE, repentance, self-punishment expressive of penitence. (F., — L.) M. E. penance, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 303, l. 14; penaunce, in the sense of penitence or repentance, Wyclif, Matt. iii. 2. — O. F. penance, older form penance (Burguy); formed from Lat. penitentia, penitence, by the usual loss of medial t between two vowels. It is thus a doublet of PENITENCE, q. v.

PENCIL, a small hair-brush for laying on colours, a pointed instrument for writing without ink. (F., — L.) The old use of a pencil was for painting in colours; see Trench, Select Glossary. M. E. pensil; 'With subtil pensil painted was this storie'; Chaucer, C. T. 2051. — O. F. pincel (13th century, Littre), later pinceau, 'a pensill, a white-limer's brush'; Cot. — Lat. penicillus, a small tail, also, a painter's brush; dimin. of peniculus, a little tail, which again is a dimin. of penis, a tail. Der. pencil, vb.; pencil-ed, Timon, i. 1. 159.

PENDANT, anything hanging, esp. by way of ornament. (F., — L.) 'His earerings had pendants of golde'; Hackluyt's Voyages, i. 346, l. 12. 'It was a bridge . . With curious corbes and pendants graven faire'; Spenser, F. Q. iv. 10. 6. — F. pendant, 'a pendant'; Cot. — F. pendant, hanging, pres. part. of pendre, to hang. — Lat. pendere, to hang; allied to pendere, to weigh. β. The Lat. pendere is further allied to Gk. σπενδών, a sling, Skt. spand, to tremble, throb, vibrate. — ✓SPAD, SPAND, to tremble, vibrate; Fick, iii. 831. Der. pend-ent, hanging, Latinised form of F. pendant; pend-ing, Anglicised form of F. pendant, as shewn by the F. phrase pendant cela, 'in the mean while, in the mean time'; Cot.; pend-ence (rare); pend-ul-ous, q. v., pend-ul-um, q. v., pens-ile, q. v. Also (from Lat. pendere) ap-pend, com-pend-i-ous, de-pend, ex-pend, im-pend, per-pend, per-pend-i-cu-lar, sti-pend, sus-pend, &c. Also (from pp. pendus) pen-sion, pens-ive, com-pens-ate, dis-pense, ex-pense, pre-pense, pro-pens-i-ty, recompense, sus-pens-ion; also poise, avoir-du-pois, pans-y, peni-house.

PENDULOUS, hanging, impending. (L.) In Shak. K. Lear, iii. 4. 69. Englished directly from Lat. pendulus, hanging, by change of -us to -ous, as in ardu-ous, &c. — Lat. pendere, to hang; see Pendant. Der. pendulous-ly, -ness.

PENDULUM, a hanging weight, vibrating freely. (L.) 'That the vibration of this pendulum.' Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3, l. 1024. — Lat. pendulum, neut. of pendulus, hanging; see Pendulous.

PENETRATE, to pierce into. (L.) In Palsgrave, ed. 1530. — Lat. penetratus, pp. of penetrare, to pierce into. β. Lat. penetrare is a compound. The part pen- is from the base of penes, with peni-tus, within, pen-us, the inner part of a sanctuary; prob. connected with penus, stored food, provisions kept within doors, Lithuan. penas, fodder, from ✓PA, to feed. 'The idea "stores, store-room," furnishes the intermediate step from penus to penetrare'; Curtius, i. 336. γ. The suffix -trare is the same as in in-trare, to enter, connected with Lat. in-tra, within, ex-tra, without, trans, across; from ✓TAR, TRA, to cross over, pass beyond, cf. Skt. tri, to cross. Der. penetra-ble, Hamlet, iii. 4. 36, immediately from Lat. penetrabilis; im-penetrable; penetrabl-y, penetrable-ness, penetrabil-ty; penetrat-ing; penetrat-ive, from O. F. penetratif, 'penetrative' (Cot.); penetrat-ive-ly, penetrat-ive-ness; penetrat-ion, Milton, P. L. iii. 585, immediately from Lat. penetratio.

PENGUIN, PINGUIN, the name of an aquatic bird. (C. ?) 'As Indian Britons were from penguins.' Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2, l. 60. It occurs still earlier, in the 15th note (by Selden) to Drayton's Polyolbion, song 9, ed. 1613, where we find: 'About the year 1170, Madoc, brother to David ap Owen, Prince of Wales, made this sea-voyage [to Florida]; and, by probability, those names of Capo de Breton in Norumbeg, and penguin in part of the Northern America, for a white rock and a white-headed bird, according to the British, were reliques of this discovery.' Certainly, the form penguin bears a striking resemblance to W. pen guyn, where pen = head, and guyn = white; and if the name was given to the bird by W. sailors, this may be the solution. We can go still further back, and shew that the word existed in Sir F. Drake's time. In a tract printed in 1588, and reprinted in An English Garner, ed. Arber, vol. ii. p. 119, we read that: 'On the 6th day of January, 1587, we put into the straits of Magellan; and on the 8th, we came to two islands named by Sir F. Drake, the one Bartholomew Island, because he came thither on that Saint's day; and the other Penguin Island, upon which we powdered [salted] three tons (l) of penguins for the victualling of our ship.' The etymology is open to the objection that the penguin's head is black, but the name may have been transferred to the penguin from some similar bird. 2. Another story (in Littre) is that some Dutchmen, in 1598, gave the name to some birds seen by them in the straits of Magellan, intending an allusion to Lat. pinguis, fat. But this will not account for the suffix -in, and is therefore wrong; besides which the 'Dutchmen' turn out to be Sir F. Drake, who named the island 11 years earlier than the date thus assigned. After all, is it certain that the name is not S. American? The F. pingouin appears to be derived from the E. word.

PENINSULA, a piece of land nearly surrounded by water. (L.) Cotgrave has 'peninsule, a peninsula.'—Lat. peninsula, a piece of land nearly an island.—Lat. pen-s, pan-s, almost; and insula, an island; see Isle. Der. peninsul-ar, peninsul-ate.

PENITENT, repentant, sorry for sin. (F.,—L.) M. E. penitent, Chaucer, C. T. Persones Tale, near beginning.—O. F. penitent, 'penitent'; Cot.—Lat. penitent, stem of pres. part. of poenitere, to cause to repent, frequentative form of poenire, the same as punire, to punish; see Punish. Der. penitent-ly; penitence, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 61, l. 4 (doublet, penance); penitent-i-al, penitent-i-al-ly, penitenti-ar-y.

PENNON, PENNANT, a small flag, banner, streamer. (F.,—L.) Pennant is merely formed from pennon by the addition of t after n, as in ancien-t, tyran-t. It occurs in Drayton, Battle of Agincourt (R.) Pennon is in Shak. Hen. V. iii. 5. 49. M. E. pennon, penoun, Chaucer, C. T. 980.—O. F. pennon, 'a pennon, flag, streamer; les pennons d'une fleiche, the feathers of an arrow'; Cot. Cf. Span. pendon, a banner (with excrement d); Ital. pennone, a pennon, of which the old meaning was 'a great plume or bunch of feathers' (Florio). Formed, with suffix -on, from Lat. penna, a wing, feather; whence the sense of 'plume,' and lastly, of streamer or standard. See Pen (2). Der. pennon-cel, a dimin. form, from O. F. pennoncel, 'a pennon on the top of a lance, a little flag or streamer'; Cot.

PENNY, a copper coin, one twelfth of a shilling. (L., with E. suffix.) Formerly a silver coin; the copper coinage dates from A.D. 1665. M. E. peni, Havelok, 705; pl. penies, Havelok, 776, also pens (pronounced like mod. E. penice) by contraction, P. Plowman, B. v. 243. The mod. E. penice is due to this contracted form.—A. S. pening, a penny, Mark, xii. 15, where the Camb. MS. has penig, by loss of n before g; the further loss of the final g produced M. E. peni. The oldest form is pending (A.D. 835), Thorpe, Diplomatarium, p. 471, l. 26; formed from the base pand- with dimin. suffix -ing.

β. It is clear that pand=Du. pand, a pawn, pledge, O. H. G. pfant, G. pfand; a word of Lat. origin; see Pawn. In this view, a penny is a little pledge, 'a token.' + Du. penning. + Icel. penningr. + Dan. and Swed. penning. + G. pfennig, O. H. G. phantinc. Der. penny-weight, penny-worth, penni-less.

PENNY-ROYAL, a herb. (F.,—L.) In Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 9, where however the first part of the word is a singular corruption of the old name puliol or pulioll; we find Cotgrave translating O. F. pulege by 'penny royall, pulioll royall,' the name being really due to Lat. pulegium regium, penny-royal (Pliny, b. xx. c. 14), a name given to the plant (like E. fla-bane) from its supposed efficacy against fleas; from Lat. pulex, a flea (see Flea). So also 'Origanum, puliol real, wde-minte,' i.e. wood-mint; Wright's Vocab. i. 140, col. 2.

PENSILE, suspended. (F.,—L.) 'If a weighty body be pensile,' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 763.—O. F. pensil, 'sleightly hanging'; Cot.—Lat. pensilis, pendent; prob. for an older form *pend-it-lis, formed with Aryan suffixes -ita and -la (= -ra) from pendere, to hang; see Pendant.

PENSION, a stated allowance, stipend, payment. (F.,—L.) In Shak. K. Lear, ii. 4. 217.—F. pension, 'a pension'; Cot.—Lat. pensionem, acc. of pensio, a payment.—Lat. pensus, pp. of pendere, to weigh, weigh out, pay; orig. to cause to hang, and closely connected with pendere, to hang; see Pendant. Der. pension, vb., pension-er, Mid. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 10; pension-ar-y. And see Pensive.

PENSIVE, thoughtful. (F.,—L.) M. E. pensif, Gower, C. A. ii. 65.—F. pensif, 'pensive'; Cot. Formed, as if from a Lat. *pensivus, from pensare, to weigh, ponder, consider; intensive form of pendere (pp. pensus), to weigh; see Pension. Der. pensive-ly, -ness. And see pansy.

PENT, for penned, pp. of Pen (1), q. v.

The adj. pentagonal is in Minshew, ed. 1627.—F. pentagone, 'five-cornered'; Cot.—Lat. pentagonus, pentagonius, pentagonal.—Gk. πεντάγωνος, pentagonal; neut. πεντάγωνον, a pentagon.—Gk. πέντα, old form of πέντε, five, cognate with E. five; and γωνία, a corner, angle, lit. a bend, from γωνι, a knee, cognate with E. knee. See Five and Knee. Der. pentagon-al.

PENTAMETER, a verse of five measures. (L.,—Gk.) In Skelton's Poems, ed. Dyce, i. 193, l. 6.—Lat. pentameter.—Gk. πεντάμετρος.—Gk. πέντα, old form of πέντε, five, cognate with E. five; and μέτρον, a metre; see Five and Metre.

PENTATEUCH, the five books of Moses. (L.,—Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Spelt pentateuches in Minshew, ed. 1627.—Lat. pentateuchus.—Gk. πέντα, old form of πέντε, five, cognate with E. five; and τεῦχος, a tool, implement, in late Gk., a book. Hence applied to the collection of the five books of Moses.

β. Τεῦχος is allied to τελέω, to prepare, get ready, make; older forms appear in Gk. τύκος, τύχος, an instrument for working stones with, a mason's pick or hammer, whence τυκίζω, to work stones. The base of τύκος is tuk or twak, allied to ✓ TAK, to hew, cut, prepare, arrange, seen in Gk. τάσσειν (= -τακ-yein), to set in order, τάξις, order. The lengthened form TAK-S appears in Lat. texere, to weave, Skt. taksh, to cut, takshan, a carpenter. See Five and Text. ¶ Thus -teuch is, etymologically, nearly an equivalent of teut; and it has much the same sense. Der. pentateuch-al.

PENTECOST, Whitsuntide; orig. a Jewish festival on the fiftieth day after the Passover. (L.,—Gk.) M. E. pentecoste, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 89, l. 5.—A. S. pentecosten, rubric to John vi. 44.—Lat. pentecosten, acc. of pentecoste.—Gk. πεντηκοστή, Pentecost, Acts, ii. 1; lit. fiftieth, fem. of πεντηκοστός, fiftieth (ἡμέρα=day, being understood).—Gk. πέντη=πέντα, old form of πέντε, five; and -κοστός=-κονστός=-κοντός, formed from -κοντα, tenth, as appearing in τριάκοντα, thirty. Again, -κοντα is short for δέκοντα, tenth, from δέκα, ten, cognate with E. ten. See Five and Ten. Der. pentecost-al.

PENTHOUSE, a shed projecting from a building. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Much Ado, iii. 3. 110. A corruption of pentice or pentis, due to an effort at making sense of one part of the word at the expense of the rest, as in the case of crayfish, &c. M. E. pentice, pentis. 'Pentice of an howse ende, Appendicium.' Prompt. Parv. Caxton, in the Boke of the Fayt of Armes, explains how a fortress ought to be supplied with fresh water, cisterns being provided 'where men may receiue inne the rayne-watres that fallen doune along the thackes of thappentyzes and houses.' Part ii. c. 17 (Way's note). Here thackes=thatches; and thappentyzes=the apentices, shewing that pentice stands for apentice, the first syllable having been dropped, as in peal for appeal. Way further quotes from Palsgrave: 'Penthouse of a house, apentis,' and from the Catholicon: 'A pentis, appendix, appendicium.'—O. F. apentis, apentis, 'a penthouse'; Cot.—Lat. appendicium, an appendage; allied to appendix, an appendage; see Append. ¶ Thus a penthouse is an 'appendage' or out-building. See the next word. [†]

PENTROOF, a roof with a slope on one side only. (Hybrid; F.,—L. and E.) Given in Webster. I notice it because it has probably affected the sense of penthouse, which has been confused with it, though they mean quite different things. They are, however, from the same ultimate source. Compounded of F. pent, a slope; and E. roof. The F. pent is formed from pendre, to hang, like vente from vendre, to sell.—Lat. pendere, to hang; see Pendant.

PENULTIMATE, the last syllable but one. (L.) A grammatical term; coined from Lat. pen-s, almost; and ultima, last. See Ultior. Der. penult, the contracted form.

PENUMBRA, a partial shadow beyond the deep shadow of an eclipse. (L.) Coined from Lat. pan-s, almost; and umbra, a shadow. See Umbrella.

PENURY, want, poverty. (F.,—L.) 'In great penury and misery,' Fabyan's Chron. vol. i. c. 157.—F. penurie, 'penury'; Cot.—Lat. penuria, want, need. Allied to Gk. πείνα, hunger, πείνα, need, σπείνα, σπείνα, want, poverty; so that an initial s has been lost.—✓ SPA, SPAN, to draw out; see Span, Spin. Der. penurious (Levins); penuri-ous-ness.

PEONY, PÆONY, a plant with beautiful crimson flowers. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) The mod. E. peony answers to the 16th century F. peone (Cot.) and to Lat. pæonia. The M. E. forms were pione, pioine, piane, pianie; P. Plowman, A. v. 155; B. v. 312; later, peony, Palsgrave.—O. F. pione (mod. F. pivoine); Littre.—Lat. pæonia, medicinal, from its supposed virtues; fem. of pæonius, belonging to Pæon.—Gk. Παίων, Pæon, the god of healing. See Pæan.

PEOPLE, a nation, the populace. (F.,—L.) M. E. peple, P. Plowman, A. i. 5; spelt poepel, id. B. i. 5; spelt peple, poepel, pupele, Chaucer, C. T. 8871 (Six-text, E. 995). [The spelling with eo or oe is an attempt at rendering the F. diphthong.]—O. F. peuple (Burguy), mod. F. peuple, people.—Lat. populum, acc. of populus, people.

β. Po-pul-us appears to be a reduplicated form; cf. Lat. ple-bes, people. Allied to ple-nus, full, from $\sqrt{\text{PAR}}$, to fill. See it discussed in Curtius, i. 344. And see Folk, Populace.

PEPPER, the fruit of a plant, with a hot pungent taste. (L., = Gk., = Skt.) M. E. peper (with only two p's), P. Plowman, B. v. 122. — A. S. pipor; A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, iii. 341. — Lat. piper. — Gk. πίπερον. — Skt. pippala, (1) the holy fig-tree, (2) long pepper; pippali, the fruit of the holy fig-tree (and, presumably, of the pepper-tree); Benfey, p. 552. Cf. Pers. pepul, pepper; Palmer's Dict. col. 114. Der. pepper-corn, pepper-mint.

PEPSINE, one of the constituents of the gastric juice, helpful in the process of digestion. (F., = Gk.) From mod. F. pepsine, formed with suffix -ine from Gk. πέψω, base of fut. of πέπτειν, to cook; from $\sqrt{\text{PAK}}$, to cook, whence also Skt. pach, Lat. coquere. See COOK. Der. So also pept-ic, i. e. assisting in digestion, from Gk. πεπτικός; whence dys-peptic.

PER-, prefix, through. (L.) Lat. per, through; whence F. per-, par-, as a prefix. Orig. used of spaces traversed; allied to Gk. παρά, πάρ, by the side of, Skt. parā, away, from, forth, param, beyond, and to E. from. — $\sqrt{\text{PAR}}$, to go through; see FARE, FROM. The prefixes para- and peri-, both Gk., are nearly related. See Curtius, i. 334, 338.

PERADVENTURE, perhaps. (F., = L.) The d before v is an insertion, as in adventure. M. E. peraventure (with u = v), Rob. of Glouc. p. 358, l. 20; often shortened to peraventure or paraunter, spelt paraunter in the same passage, in MS. Cotton, Calig. A. xi. — F. par, by; and aventure, adventure. — Lat. per, through, by; and see ADVENTURE.

PERAMBULATE, to walk through or over. (L.) Prob. made from the earlier sb. perambulation; Lambarde's 'Perambulation of Kent' was printed in 1576. — Lat. perambulatus, pp. of perambulare, lit. to walk through. — Lat. per, through; and ambulare, to walk; see PER- and AMBLE. Der. perambulation; also perambulator, an instrument for measuring distances, as in Phillips, ed. 1706, but now used to mean a light carriage for a child.

PERCEIVE, to comprehend. (F., = L.) M. E. perceyuen (with u = v), also parceyuen, P. Plowman, B. xviii. 241. — O. F. percever (Burguy); Cot. gives only the pp. perces. The mod. F. has only the comp. apercevoir, with the additional prefix a = Lat. ad. — Lat. percipere; from per, through, thoroughly, and capere, to take, receive. See PER- and CAPACIOUS. Der. perceiv-er, perceiv-able. Also perception, from F. perception, 'a perception' (Cot.), from Lat. perceptionem, acc. of perceptio, from the pp. perceptus; also percept-ive, percept-ive-ly, percept-iv-i-ty, percept-ive-ness; percept-ible, F. perceptible, 'perceptible' (Cot.), from Lat. perceptibilis, perceivable; percept-ibl-y, percept-ibil-i-ty. Also percipient, from the stem of the pres. part. of percipere.

PERCH (1), a rod for a bird to sit on; a long measure of five and a half yards. (F., = L.) The orig. sense is 'rod'; whether for measuring or for a bird's perch. M. E. perche, Chaucer, C. T. 2206. — F. perche, 'a perch'; Cot. — Lat. peritica, a pole, bar, measuring-rod. Root uncertain. Der. perch, vb., Rich. III, i. 3. 71; perch-er.

PERCH (2), a fish. (F., = L., = Gk.) M. E. perche, Prompt. Parv. p. 393; King Alisaunder, 5446. — F. perche. — Lat. perca. — Gk. πέσκη, a perch; so named from its dark colour. — Gk. πέσκος, πέσινος, spotted, blackish. — Skt. prīṇi, spotted, pied, esp. of cows; Curtius, i. 340. β. The original meaning is 'sprinkled'; and the Lat. spargere, to scatter, and E. sprinkle, as well as the Skt. spṛig, to touch, sprinkle, shew that the word has lost an initial s. See SPRINKLE.

PERCHANCE, by chance. (F., = L.) In Shak. Temp. ii. 2. 17. [The M. E. phrase is per cas or parcas, Chaucer, C. T. 12819; from F. par cas; see CASE.] — F. par, by; and chance, chance; see PER- and CHANCE.

PERCOLATE, to filter through. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Prob. due to the sb. percolation, in Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 3. — Lat. percolatus, pp. of percolare, to strain through a sieve. — Lat. per, through; and colare, to filter, from colum, a filter. See PER- and COLANDER. Der. percolation, percolat-or.

PERCUSSION, a shock, quick blow. (L.) Bacon has percussion, Nat. Hist. § 163; percussed, id. 164; percussant, id. 190. Formed, by analogy with F. sbs. in -ion, from Lat. percussio, a striking. — Lat. percussus, pp. of percute, to strike violently. — Lat. per, thoroughly; and quater, to shake, which becomes -cutere in compounds. — $\sqrt{\text{SKUT}}$, to shake; see CONCUSSION. Der. percuss-ive; percusi-ent, from the stem of the pres. part.

PERDITION, utter loss or destruction. (F., = L.) M. E. perdition, Wyclif, 2 Pet. ii. 1. — F. perdition; Cot. — Lat. perditionem, acc. of perditio, destruction. — Lat. perditus, pp. of perdere, to lose utterly, to destroy. — Lat. per, thoroughly, or (in this case) away, like Skt. parā, from, and Goth. fra- in verbal compounds; and -dēre, to put, gen. referred to $\sqrt{\text{DHA}}$, to place, but the form of the root is rather DA, to give; cf. pt. t. per-didi with dedi, I gave.

PEREGRINATION, travel, wandering about. (F., = L.) In Cotgrave. — F. peregrination, 'peregrination'; Cot. — Lat. peregrinationem, acc. of peregrinatio, travel. — Lat. peregrinatus, pp. of peregrinari, to travel. — Lat. peregrinus, foreign, abroad; see PILGRIM. Der. peregrinate, verb, rare, from Lat. pp. peregrinatus; peregrinat-or. Also peregrinate, adj., L. L. L. v. 1. 15.

PEREMPTORY, authoritative, dogmatical. (F., = L.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii [not iv]. 8. 16. Englished from F. peremptoire, 'peremptory'; Cot. — Lat. peremptorius, destructive; hence, decisive. — Lat. peremptor, a destroyer. — Lat. peremptus, pp. of perimere, older form peremere, to take entirely away, destroy. — Lat. per, away (like Skt. parā, from); and emere, to take, also to buy. See PER- and EXAMPLE. Der. peremptori-ly, -ness. [†]

PERENNIAL, everlasting. (L.) In Evelyn's Diary, Nov. 8, 1644. Coined by adding -al (= Lat. -alis) to perenni, crude form of perennis, everlasting, lit. lasting through many years. — Lat. per, through; and annus, a year, which becomes enni- in compounds. See PER- and ANNUAL. Der. perennial-ly. [†]

PERFECT, complete, whole. (F., = L.) M. E. parfit, perfit, Chaucer, C. T. 72. [The word has since been conformed to the Lat. spelling.] — O. F. parfit, parfeit, later parfait (Cot.); mod. F. parfait. — Lat. perfectus, complete; orig. pp. of perficere, to complete, do thoroughly. — Lat. per, thoroughly; and -ficere, for facere, to make. See PER- and FACT. Der. perfect-ly, -ness; perfect, vb., Temp. i. 2. 79; perfect-ible, perfect-ibil-i-ty; perfect-er; perfect-ion, M. E. perfection, Ancren Riwe, p. 372, l. 9, from F. perfection; perfection-ist.

PERFIDIOUS, faithless, treacherous. (L.) In Shak. Temp. i. 2. 68. Not a F. word, but formed (by analogy with words of F. origin) directly from Lat. perfidiosus, treacherous. — Lat. perfidia, treachery. — Lat. perfidus, faithless, lit. one that goes away from his faith. — Lat. per, away (like Skt. parā, from); and fides, faith. See PER- and FAITH. Der. perfidious-ly, -ness; also perfid-y, in Phillips, ed. 1706, answering to F. perfidia, used by Molière (Littre), from Lat. perfidia.

PERFOLIATE, having the stem passing through the leaf. (L.) 'Perfoliata, the herb thorough-wax'; Phillips, ed. 1706. Botanical. — Lat. per, through; and foli-um, a leaf; with suffix -ate (= Lat. pp. suffix -atus). See PER- and FOLIO. ¶ Cf. O. F. perfoliate, 'through-wax, an herb'; Cot.

PERFORATE, to bore through. (L.) Bacon uses perforate as a pp., Nat. Hist. § 470. — Lat. perforatus, pp. of perforare, to bore through. — Lat. per, through; and forare, to bore, cognate with E. bore. See PER- and BORE. Der. perforat-ion, -or.

PERFORCE, by force, of necessity. (F., = L.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 8. 38; spelt parforce, Lord Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 38 (R). — F. par, by (= Lat. per); and force, force. See PER- and FORCE.

PERFORM, to achieve. (F., = O. H. G.; with Lat. prefix.) M. E. parfournen, P. Plowman, B. v. 607; perfournen, Wyclif, John, v. 36. — O. F. parfournir, 'to perform, consummate, accomplish'; Cot. — F. par (= Lat. per), thoroughly; and fournir, to provide, furnish, a word of O. H. G. origin. See PER- and FURNISH. ¶ The M. E. form parfournen is thus accounted for; the M. E. parfournen is prob. due to an O. F. furnir, which (though not recorded) is the correct form of F. fournir. The word is not really connected with the sb. form, though this sb. has probably been long associated with it in popular etymology. Der. perform-er; perform-ance, Mach. ii. 3. 33, a coined word.

PERFUME, to scent. (F., = L.) The verb is the original word, and occurs in Shak. Temp. ii. 1. 48. But the sb. is found earlier, in Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iv. c. 2 (R). — F. parfumer, 'to perfume'; Cot. Lit. 'to smoke thoroughly'. — F. par (= Lat. per), through; and fumer, to smoke, from Lat. fumare, vb. formed from fumus, smoke. See PER- and FUME. Der. perfume, sb., F. parfum; perfum-er, perfum-er-y.

PERFUNCTORY, done in a careless way. (L.) 'In a careless perfunctory way'; Howell, Foreign Travel, § 4, ed. Arber, p. 27. Englished from Lat. perfunctorius, done in a careless way, done because it must be done. — Lat. perfunctus, pp. of perfungi, to perform, discharge thoroughly. — Lat. per, thoroughly; and fungi, to perform. See PER- and FUNCTION. Der. perfunctori-ly, -ness.

PERHAPS, possibly. (Hybrid; L. and Scand.) In Hamlet, i. 3. 14. A clumsy compound, which took the place of the M. E. per cas, and formed also on the model of perchance; see PERCHANCE. The per is rather from the F. par than the Lat. per, but it makes no difference. Haps is the pl. of hap, a chance, a word of Scand. origin. See HAP.

PERI, a fairy. (Pers.) See Moore's poem of 'Paradise and the Peri,' in Lalla Rookh. — Pers. pari, a fairy; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 112. Lit. 'winged'; allied to par, a wing, a feather; Rich. Dict. pp. 329, 323. Cf. Zend patara, a wing (Fick, i. 361); from $\sqrt{\text{PAT}}$, to fly; see FEATHER.

PERI-, prefix, round, around. (Gk.) Gk. περί, around, about. + Skt. pari, round about. Also allied to Lat. per- in permagnus, &c.; also to Gk. παρά, Skt. pará, from; all from ✓PAR, whence E. fare. See Curtius, i. 340.

PERICARDIUM, the sac which surrounds the heart. (L., -Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Anatomical. -Late Lat. pericardium. -Gk. περικάρδιον, the membrane round the heart. -Gk. περί, round; and καρδία, cognate with E. heart. See Peri- and Heart.

PERICARP, a seed-vessel. (Gk.) Botanical. -Gk. περικάρπιον, the shell of fruit. -Gk. περί, about (here near); and καρπός, fruit, allied to E. harvest. See Peri- and Harvest.

PERICRANIUM, the membrane that surrounds the skull. (Late Lat., -Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Anatomical. -Late Lat. pericranium. -Gk. περικράνιον, neut. of περικράνιος, passing round the skull. -Gk. περί, round; and κράνιον, the skull. See Peri- and Cranium.

PERIGEE, the point of the moon's orbit nearest the earth. (Gk.) Scientific. In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Opposed to apogee. Coined from Gk. περί, about (here near); and γή, the earth, which appears in geo-graphy, &c.

PERIHELION, the point of a planet's orbit nearest the sun. (Gk.) Scientific. In Phillips, ed. 1706. Opposed to aphelion. -Gk. περί, around (here near); and ἥλιος, the sun. See Peri- and Aphelion.

PERIL, danger. (F., -L.) M. E. peril, Ancr. Riwle, p. 194, l. 24. -F. peril, 'perill'; Cot. -Lat. periculum, periculum, danger; lit. a trial, proof. -Lat. periri, to try, an obsolete verb of which the pp. peritus, experienced, is common. β. Allied to Gk. πειράω, I try, prove, περάω, I press through, pass through, as well as to Goth. faran, to travel, fare. -✓PAR, to pass over; see Fare. Thus a peril is a trial which one passes through. Der. perilous, Chaucer, C. T. 13025; perilous-ly, -ness.

PERIMETER, the sum of the lengths of all the sides of a plane figure. (L., -Gk.) Lit. the 'measure round.' In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. -Lat. perimetros (White). -Gk. περίμετρος, the circumference of a circle; hence, the perimeter of a plane figure. -Gk. περί, round; and μέτρον, a measure; see Peri- and Metre.

PERIOD, the time of a circuit, date, epoch. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Shak. it often means 'conclusion, end;' Rich. III, ii. 1. 44; K. Lear, iv. 7. 97, v. 3. 204. -F. periode, 'a period, perfect sentence, conclusion;' Cot. -Lat. periodus, a complete sentence. -Gk. περίοδος, a going round, way round, circuit, compass, a well-rounded sentence. -Gk. περί, round; and ὁδός, a way. See Peri- and Exodus. ¶ The sense of 'time of circuit' is taken directly from the orig. Gk. Der. periodic; periodic-al (Blount, 1674), periodic-al-ly, periodic-ity.

PERIPATETIC, walking about. (L., -Gk.) 'Peripatetical, that disputes or teaches walking, as Aristotle did; from whence he and his scholars were called peripateticks;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. -Lat. peripateticus. -Gk. περιπατητικός, given to walking about, esp. while disputing; Aristotle and his followers were called περιπατητικοί. -Gk. περιπατέω, I walk about. -Gk. περί, about; and πάτω, I walk, from πάτος, a path, cognate with E. path. See Peri- and Path.

PERIPHERY, circumference. (L., -Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. M. E. periferie; 'This air in periferies thre Devided is,' Gower, C. A. iii. 93; where the side-note is: 'Nota, quod aer in tribus periferiis diuiditur.' -Lat. periferia, peripheria. -Gk. περιφέρεια, the circumference of a circle. -Gk. περί, round; and φέρειν, to carry, cognate with E. bear. See Peri- and Bear (1).

PERIPHRAISIS, a roundabout way of speaking. (L., -Gk.) 'Periphrase, circumlocution;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; but this is rather a F. form. -Lat. periphrasis. -Gk. περίφρασις. -Gk. περί, round; and φράσις, a speech, phrase. See Peri- and Phrase. Der. periphrase, vb.; periphrast-ic, adj., from Gk. περιφραστικός; periphrast-ic-al.

PERISH, to come to naught. (F., -L.) M. E. perisshen, Cursor Mundi, 8789; perischen, Wyclif, John, vi. 27. -F. periss-, stem of some parts of the verb perir, 'to perish;' Cot. (The stem periss- is formed as if from a Lat. *periscere, an imaginary inceptive form). -Lat. perire, to perish, come to naught. -Lat. per, thoroughly, but with a destructive force like that of E. for-; and ire, to go; thus perire = to go to the bad. Ire is from ✓I, to go; cf. Skt. i, to go. And see For- (2). Der. perish-able, perish-ably, perishableness.

PERIWIG, a peruke. (Du., -F., -Ital., -L.) In Shak. Two Gent. iv. 4. 196. The i after r is corruptly inserted; Minshew, ed. 1627, gives the spellings perwigge and perwicks. Of these forms, perwigge is a weakened form of perwicke or perwicks; and perwicks is an E. rendering of the O. Du. form, as distinct from peruke, which is the F. form. - O. Du. peruyk, 'a perwig;' Sewel. -

F. peruque, a peruke; see Peruke. β. The form periwig gave rise to a notion that peri- was a prefix, like Gk. περί; see Peri-. Hence, it was sometimes dropt, the resulting form being wig. See Wig. [†]

PERIWINKLE (1), a genus of evergreen plants. (L.) Formed with dimin. suffix -le, and insertion of i, from M. E. peruente, a periwinkle; Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 218, l. 11. -A. S. peruince, as a gloss to Lat. uinca, in Ælfric's Gloss, Nomina Herbarum; see Wright's Vocab. i. 31, col. 2. -Lat. peruinca, also called uinca peruinca, or (in one word) uinca-peruinca (White).

β. The name was doubtless orig. given to a twining plant, as it is clearly allied to uincire, to bind; the prefix per being the usual Lat. prep. Uincire is a nasalised form from a base WIK, appearing in E. Cervical, q. v. γ. Again, WIK is an extension of WI, to wind, to bind; cf. Lat. uere, to bind, ui-tis, a vine, ui-men, a flexible twig, E. ui-ty; see Withy, Vine.

PERIWINKLE (2), a small univalve mollusc. (E.; with L. (?) prefix.) In Levins. A corrupt form, due to confusion with the word above. The best name is simply winkle, as in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. ix. c. 32. Periwinkle is in Drayton, Polyolbion, song 25, l. 190; and is a corruption of the A. S. name pinewincla; Bosworth appears to explain this name of the plant, but we find 'see-snael, vel pinewincla,' i. e. sea-snail, or periwinkles, in Wright's Vocab. i. 24, col. 2. Cf. prov. E. (Norfolk) pin-patch, pin-paunch, a periwinkle (Forby). The A. S. pine or pin is from Lat. pina, a mussel. See Winkle.

PERJURE, to forswear (oneself), swear falsely. (F., -L.) The prefix has been conformed to the Lat. spelling. Shak. has perjured, Oth. v. 2. 63; also perjure, to render perjured, Antony, iii. 12. 30; also perjure, a perjured person, L. L. L. iv. 3. 47; perjury, L. L. L. iv. 3. 62. Skelton has pariured, perjured; How the Doughty Duke of Albany, &c., l. 125. -F. parjurer; whence se parjurer, 'to forswear himself;' Cot. Cf. F. parjure (also O. F. perjura), a perjured person; Cot. - Lat. periurare, to forswear; periurus, a perjured person. - Lat. per-, prefix used in a bad sense, exactly equivalent to the cognate E. for- in forswear; and iurare, to swear. See Per- and Jury. Der. perjury, directly from Lat. perjurius; perjur-er.

PERK, to make smart or trim. (W.) 'To be perked up [dressed up] in a glistering grief;' Hen. VIII, ii. 3. 21. 'How it [a child] speaks, and looks, and perks up the head!' Beaum. and Fletcher, Knight of the Burning Pestle, i. 1 (Wife). Prov. E. perk, 'proud, peart, elated;' peart, 'brisk, lively;' Halliwell. -W. perc, compact, trim; percu, to trim, to smarten; percus, smart. Also perit, smart, spruce; pertu, to smarten, trim; pertyn, a smart little fellow. ¶ I suspect that an initial s has been lost, and that the word is connected with prov. E. sprack, brisk, lively (Halliwell), Irish spraie, vigour, sprightliness, Icel. sparkr, lively. See Pert.

PERMANENT, enduring. (F., -L.) In Spenser, F. Q. vii. 6. 2; and in Skelton's Poems, ed. Dyce, i. 199, l. 19. -F. permanent, 'permanent;' Cot. -Lat. permanens, stem of pres. part. of permanere, to endure. -Lat. per, thoroughly; and manere, to remain. See Per- and Mansion. Der. permanently; permanence.

PERMEATE, to penetrate and pass through small openings or pores, pervade. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Sir T. Browne has 'permeant parts,' Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 5. § 8 (in speaking of gold). -Lat. permeatus, pp. of permeare, to pass through. -Lat. per, through; and meare, to pass, go, allied to migrare. See Per- and Migrate. Der. permeat-ion; permeant (from the stem of the pres. part.); permea-ble, from Lat. permeabilis.

PERMIT, to let go, let pass, allow. (L.) In Skelton, Magnificence, l. 58. 'Yet his grace . . . wolde in no wise permyt and suffice me so to do;' State Papers, vol. i. Wolsey to Henry VIII, 1527 (R.). -Lat. permittere (pp. permissus), to let pass through, lit. to send through. -Lat. per, through; and mittere, to send; see Per- and Mission. Der. permit, sb.; also (from pp. permissus) permiss-ible, permiss-ibly, permiss-ion, Oth. i. 3. 340; permiss-ive, Meas. for Meas. i. 3. 38; permiss-ive-ly.

PERMUTATION, exchange, various arrangement. (F., -L.) M. E. permutacion, Lament of Mary Magdalen, st. 9. -F. permutation, 'permutation;' Cot. -Lat. permutationem, acc. of permutatio, a changing. -Lat. permutatus, pp. of permutare, to change, exchange. -Lat. per, thoroughly; and mutare, to change; see Per- and Mutation. Der. permute, vb. (rare), from Lat. permutare; permut-able, permut-ably, permutableness.

PERNICIOUS, hurtful, destructive. (F., -L.) In Shak. Meas. ii. 4. 150. -F. pernicieux, 'pernicious;' Cot. -Lat. perniciosus, destructive. -Lat. perniciēs, destruction. -Lat. per, thoroughly; and nici-, put for neci-, crude form of nex, violent death. See Internecine. Der. pernicious-ly, -ness.

PERORATION, the conclusion of a speech. (F., -L.) In Shak. 2 Hen. VI, i. 1. 105. -F. peroration, 'a peroration;' Cot. -Lat. perorationem, acc. of peroratio, the close of a speech. -Lat.

peroratus, pp. of perorare, to speak from beginning to end, also, to close a speech. — Lat. per, through; and orare, to speak; see Per- and Oration.

PERPENDICULAR, exactly upright. (F., —L.) M. E. perpendicular, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. ii. § 23, l. 26. — F. perpendiculaire; Cot. — Lat. perpendicularis, according to the plumb-line. — Lat. perpendicularum, a plummet; used for careful measurement. — Lat. perpendere, to weigh or measure carefully, consider. — Lat. per, through; and pendere, to weigh. See Per- and Pension, Pendant. Der. perpendicularly, perpendicularity. Also perpend, to consider, Hamlet, ii. 2. 105, from perpendere.

PERPETRATE, to execute, commit. (L.) Orig. a pp. 'Which were perpetrated and done;' Hall, Hen. VI, an. 31 (R.). — Lat. perpetratus, pp. of perpetrare, to perform thoroughly. — Lat. per, thoroughly; and patrare, to make, accomplish, allied to potis, able, capable, and to potens, powerful. Cf. Skt. pat, to be powerful. See Per- and Potent. Der. perpetrat-or, from Lat. perpetrator; perpetrat-ion.

PERPETUAL, everlasting. (F., —L.) M. E. perpetuel, Chaucer, C. T. 1178. — F. perpetuel, 'perpetual;' Cot. — Lat. perpetualis, universal; later used in same sense as perpetuarius, permanent. — Lat. perpetuare, to perpetuate. — Lat. perpetuus, continuous, constant, perpetual. — Lat. perpet-, stem of perpes, lasting throughout, continuous. — Lat. per, throughout; and pet-, weakened form of ✓ PAT, to go, appearing in Gk. πάτος, a path, πατέω, to tread. See Per- and Path. Thus the orig. sense has reference to a continuous path, a way right through. Der. perpetuality, M. E. perpetually, Chaucer, C. T. 1344; perpetuate, Palsgrave, from Lat. pp. perpetuatus; perpetuation; perpetuity, from F. perpetuité, 'perpetuity' (Cot.), from Lat. acc. perpetuitem.

PERPLEX, to embarrass, bewilder. (F., —L.) 'In such perplexed plight;' Spenser, F. Q. iii. 1. 59. Minshew gives only the participial adj. perplexed, not the verb; and, in fact, the form perplexed seems to have been first in use, as a translation from the French. — F. perplex, 'perplexed, intricate, intangled;' Cot. — Lat. perplexus, entangled, interwoven. — Lat. per, thoroughly; and plexus, entangled, pp. of plectere, to plait, braid. See Per- and Plait, Der. perplexity, M. E. perplexitee, Gower, C. A. iii. 348, l. 18, from F. perplexité, which from Lat. acc. perplexitatem.

PERQUISITE, an emolument, small gain. (L.) Applied to a special allowance as being a thing sought for diligently and specially obtained. 'Perquisite (Lat. perquisitum) signifies, in Bracton, anything purchased, as perquisitum facere, lib. ii. c. 30, num. 3, and lib. iv. c. 22. Perquisites of Courts, are those profits that accrue to a lord of a manor, by virtue of his Court Baron, over and above the certain and yearly rents of his land; as, fines for copyhold, waives, estrays, and such like;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. perquisitum, as above; properly neut. of perquisitus, pp. of perquirere, to ask after diligently. — Lat. per, thoroughly; and querere, to seek; see Per- and Query.

PERRY, the fermented juice of pears. (F., —L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. 'Perrie, drinke of pearces;' Minshew, ed. 1627. — F. poiré, 'perry, drink made of pears;' Cot. [The change from poiré to the form perry was perhaps due to some confusion with M. E. pery, a pear-tree; for which see Pear.] Formed with suffix -é (= Lat. -atus, i. e. made of) from poire, a pear. — Lat. pirum, a pear; see Pear. [†]

PERSECUTE, to harass, pursue with annoyance. (F., —L.) The sb. persecution is older in E. than the vb., and is spelt persecucioun in Wyclif, Second Prologue to Apocalypse, l. 1. Shak. has persecute, All's Well, i. 1. 16. — F. persecuter, 'to persecute, prosecute;' Cot. Formed as if from a Low Lat. *persecutare, from Lat. persecutus, pp. of persequi, to pursue, follow after. — Lat. per, continually; and sequi, to follow. See Per- and Sequence. Der. persecution.

PERSEVERE, to persist in anything. (F., —L.) Formerly accented and spelt perséuer, Hamlet, i. 2. 92. M. E. perseueren (with u = v), Chaucer, C. T. 15585. — F. perseuerer, 'to persevere;' Cot. — Lat. perseuerare, to adhere to a thing, persist in it. — Lat. perseuerus, very strict. — Lat. per, thoroughly; and seuerus, strict; see Per- and Severe. Der. perseuerance, M. E. perseuerance, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 168, l. 22, from O. F. perseuerance, Lat. perseuerantia.

PERSIST, to continue steadfast, persevere. (F., —L.) In Shak. All's Well, iii. 7. 42. — F. persister, 'to persist;' Cot. — Lat. persistere, to continue, persist. — Lat. per, through; and sistere, properly to make to stand, set, a causal form from stare, to stand, from ✓ STA, to stand. See Per- and Stand. Der. persist, from the stem of the pres. part.; persistence; persistencey, 2 Hen. IV, ii. 2. 50.

PERSON, a character, individual, body. (F., —L.) M. E. person, (1) a person, Chaucer, C. T. 10339; (2) a person, id. 480; earlier persum, Ancren Riwle, p. 126, l. 15. — F. personne, 'a person, wight, creature;' Cot. — Lat. persōna, a mask used by an actor, a personage, character, part played by an actor, a person. The large-mouthed masks worn by the actors were so called from the resonance of the voice sounding through them; the lengthening of the vowel o may have been due to a difference of stress. — Lat. persōnare, to sound through. — Lat. per, through; and sonare, to sound, from sonus, sound. See Per- and Sound. Doublet, parson, q. v. Der. personable, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 4. 5; personage, id. F. Q. ii. 2. 46, from O. F. personnage (Cot.); person-al, Mach. i. 3. 91, from O. F. personnel, Lat. personalis; person-al-ly; personal-ity, also in the contracted form personal-ty, with the sense of personal property; person-ate, Timon, i. 1. 69, from Lat. pp. personatus; person-at-ion, person-at-or; person-i-fy, a coined and late word, in Johnson's Dict.; whence personification.

PERSPECTIVE, optical, relating to the science of vision. (F., —L.) Properly an adj., as in 'the perspective or optike art;' Minshew, ed. 1627; but common as a sb., accented perspective, in the sense of an optical glass or optical delusion; see Rich. II, ii. 2. 18; also Skelton's Poems, ed. Dyce, i. 25, l. 22. — F. perspective, sb. f., 'the perspective, prospective, or optike art;' Cot. — Lat. perspectiva, sb. f., the art of thoroughly inspecting; fem. of perspectivus, relating to inspection. — Lat. perspectus, clearly perceived, pp. of perspicere, to see through or clearly. — Lat. per, through; and specere, to see, spy. See Per- and Spy. Der. perspective-ly, Hen. V, v. 2. 347. And see Perspicacity, Perspicuous.

PERSPICACITY, keenness of sight. (F., —L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; and in Cotgrave. — F. perspicacité, 'perspicacity, quick sight;' Cot. — Lat. perspicacitatem, acc. of perspicacitas, sharp-sightedness. — Lat. perspicaci, crude form of perspicax, sharp-sighted; with suffix -itas. Formed with suffix -ax from perspicere, to see through; see Perspective. Der. perspicaci-ous, a coined word, as an equivalent to Lat. perspicax; perspicacious-ly, -ness. And see Perspicuous.

PERSPICUOUS, evident. (L.) In Shak. Troil. i. 3. 324. Taken immediately (by change of -us to -ous, as in arduous, &c.) from Lat. perspicuus, transparent, clear. — Lat. perspicere, to see through; see Perspective. Der. perspicuous-ly, -ness; also perspicu-ity, from F. perspicuité, 'perspicuity,' Cot.

PERSPIRATION, a sweating. (F., —L.) The verb perspire is really later, and due to the sb.; it occurs in Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 7. § 4: 'A man in the morning is lighter in the scale, because in sleep some pounds have perspired.' The sb. is in Cotgrave; perspirable is in Minshew, ed. 1627. — F. perspiration, 'a perspiration, or breathing through.' — Lat. perspirationem, acc. of *perspiratio, not given in White's Dict., but regularly formed from perspiratus, pp. of perspirare, to breathe or respire all over. — Lat. per, through; and spirare, to breathe; see Per- and Spirit. Der. perspirat-or-y; also perspire, verb, answering to Lat. perspire.

PERSUADE, to prevail on, convince by advice. (F., —L.) Common in Shak., Meas. for Meas. i. 2. 191; persuade in Palsgrave. — F. persuader, 'to persuade;' Cot. — Lat. persuadere (pp. persuasus), to persuade, advise thoroughly. — Lat. per, thoroughly; and suadere, to advise; see Per- and Suasion. Der. persuad-er; also (from pp. persuasus) persuasible, from F. persuasible, 'persuadable,' Cot.; persuasible-ness, persuasibility; also persuas-ion, Temp. ii. 1. 235, Skelton, Garland of Laurel, l. 34, from F. persuasion, 'persuasion,' Cot.; persuasive, from F. persuasif, 'persuasive,' Cot.; persuasive-ly, persuasive-ness.

PERT, forward, saucy. (C.) In Shak. it means 'lively, alert;' L. L. L. v. 2. 272. M. E. pert, which, however, has two meanings, and two sources; and the meanings somewhat run into one another. 1. In some instances, pert is certainly a corruption of apert, and perilly is used for 'openly' or 'evidently;' see Will. of Palerne, 4930, also 53, 96, 156, 180, &c. In this case, the source is the F. apert, open, evident, from Lat. apertus; see Malapert. 2. But we also find 'proud and pert,' Chaucer, C. T. 3948; 'stout he was and pert,' Li Beaus Disconus, l. 123 (Ritson). 'There is an equivalent form perk, which is really older; the change from k to i taking place occasionally, as in E. mate from M. E. make. 'Perke as a peacock;' Spenser, Shep. Kal. Feb. l. 8. 'The poppeiaes perken and pruyne fol proude' = the popinjays smarten up and trim themselves very proudly; Celestin and Susanna, ed. Horstmann, l. 81, pr. in Anglia, ed. Wülcker, i. 95. Cf. prov. E. perk, pert, proud, elated; perky, saucy; perly, brisk, lively. — W. pert, smart, spruce, pert; perc, compact, trim; percus, trim, smart; percu, to trim, to smarten. See Perk. Der. peri-ly, Temp. iv. 58; pert-ness, Pope, Dunciad, i. 112.

PERTAIN, to belong. (F., —L.) M. E. partenen, Will. of Palerne, 1419; Wyclif, John, x. 13. Not a common word. — O. F. partenir, to pertain, in Burguy and Roquefort, but not in Cotgrave. (It seems to have been supplanted by the comp. apartenir; see Apertain.) — Lat. pertinere, to pertain. See Pertinent.

PERTINACITY, obstinacy. (F., -L.) Phillips, ed. 1706, gives & both pertinacity and pertinacy; Minsheu, ed. 1627, has only the latter form, which is the commoner one in old authors, though now disused. Pertinacity is from F. pertinacité, omitted by Cotgrave, but occurring in the 16th century (Littre). Pertinacy is from F. pertinacie, cited by Minsheu, but not found in Cotgrave or Littre.

β. Pertinacity is a coined word; pertinacy (F. pertinace) is from Lat. pertinacia, perseverance. -Lat. pertinaci-, crude form of pertinax, very tenacious. -Lat. per-, very; and tenax, tenacious, from tenere, to hold. See Per- and Tenable. Der. pertinaci-ous, Milton, Apology for Smectymnus (R.), a coined word, to represent Lat. pertinax, just as perspicacious represents perspicax; pertinacious-ly, -ness.

PERTINENT, related or belonging to. (F., -L.) In Shak. Wint. Tale, i. 2. 221. -F. pertinent, 'pertinent'; Cot. -Lat. pertinent-, stem of pres. part. of pertinere, to belong. -Lat. per-, thoroughly; and tenere, to hold, cling to; see Per- and Tenable. Der. pertinent-ly, pertinence; and see pertinacity.

PERTURB, to disturb greatly. (F., -L.) M. E. perturben, Chaucer, C. T. 908. -F. perturber, 'to perturb, disturb'; Cot. -Lat. perturbare, to disturb greatly. -Lat. per-, thoroughly; and turbare, to disturb, from turba, a crowd. See Per- and Turbid. Der. perturb-at-ion, spelt perturbacyon, Bp. Fisher, On the Seven Psalms, Ps. 38, ed. Mayor (E. E. T. S.), p. 53, l. 21, from F. perturbation (Cot.), which from Lat. acc. perturbationem.

PERUKE, an artificial head of hair. (F., -Ital., -L.) The same word as periwig, which, however, is the Dutch form of the word; see Periwig. For the form peruke, R. refers to a poem by Cotton to John Bradshaw; and Todd refers to Bp. Taylor, Artificial Handsomeness, p. 44; we therefore find the word at the close of the 17th century, periwig being in earlier use. -F. perruque, 'a lock of hair'; Cot. -Ital. parrucca, O. Ital. parucca, 'a periwigge', Florio; who also gives the form perucca.

β. The same word with Span. peluca, a wig, Port. peruca; Littre also cites Sardinian pilucca, and other forms. The key to the etymology is in remembering the frequent interchange of r and l; the true forms are those with l, such as Span. peluca, Sardinian pilucca. These are closely related to Ital. piluccare, now used in the sense 'to pick a bunch of grapes'; but formerly 'to pick or pull out hairs or feathers one by one'; Florio.

γ. The true old sense of pilucca was probably 'a mass of hair separated from the head,' thus furnishing the material for a peruke. Cf. also Ital. pelluzzo, very soft down, O. Ital. pellucare, pelucare, 'to pluck off the hairs or skin of anything, to pick out hairs'; Florio. Also F. peluche, 'shag, plush,' Cot.; see Plush. δ. The O. Ital. pelucare and Sard. pilucca are formed (by help of a dimin. suffix -ucca) from Ital. pelo, hair. -Lat. pilum, acc. of pilus, a hair. Root unknown. Doublets, periwig, wig.

ε. The usual form of the Ital. dimin. is not -ucca, but -uccio or -uzzo in the masc., and -uccia, -uzzia in the feminine.

PERUSE, to examine, read over, survey. (Hybrid; L. and F., -L.) In Shak. in the sense 'to survey, examine,' Com. Errors, i. 2. 13; also 'to read,' Merch. Ven. ii. 4. 39. 'That I perused then,' G. Turberville, The Louer to Cupid for Mercy, st. 12. 'Thus haunye perused the effecte of the thirde booke, I will likewise peruse the fourth,' Bp. Gardiner, Explication, &c., Of the Presence, fol. 76 (R.). 'To peruse, peruti,' Levins, ed. 1570. And see Skelton, Phyllip Sparowe, l. 814. A coined word; from Per- and Use. ¶ No other source can well be assigned; but it must be admitted to be a barbarous and ill-formed word, compounded of Latin and French, and by no means used in the true sense; since to per-use could only rightly mean to 'use thoroughly,' as Levins indicates. The sense of the word comes nearer to that of the F. revoir or E. 'survey' or 'examine'; cf. 'Myself I then perused,' i. e. surveyed, Milton, P. L. viii. 267; 'Who first with curious eye Perused him,' id. P. R. i. 320. The F. revoir and E. survey both point to the Lat. videre, to see; hence Wedgwood observes: 'the only possible origin seems Lat. perusere, to observe [intensive form of peruidere], but we are unable to show a F. peruiser, and if there were such a term, the vocalisation of the v in the pronunciation of an E. peruse would be very singular.' Webster suggests that peruse arose from the misreading of an old word peruise, really peruise, but read as if the v were u. This is ingenious, but is utterly negated by the fact that an E. peruise is as mythical as a F. peruiser; at least, no one has yet produced either the one or the other. On the other hand, there is a fair argument for the supposed barbarous coinage from per and use, in the fact that compounds with per were once far more common than they are now. I can instance peract, Dr. Henry More, Poems (Chertsey Worthies' Library), p. 133, l. 31; perduce, perfixt, perplanted, perquire, persuay, all in Halliwell; perscrute, pertract, Andrew Borde, Introduction of Knowledge, ed. Furnivall, p. 144, l. 32, p. 264, l. 25; peruestigate, peruigilate, both in Minsheu; peraction, perarate, percruciate, perduction, perendinate, perflation, perfretation, perfriction, perfusion, per- graphical, perpession, perplication, perside, perstringe, perterebrate, pervagation, all in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Whoever ponders these examples will see that peruse is kept in countenance by many of them. The chief difficulty, after all, is in the curious change of sense, from that of 'use carefully' to 'survey' or 'read.' The testimony of Levins is curious; he seems to have accepted the word literally. We may also note, further, that peruse follows the old pronunciation of use, which had no initial y-sound, as it now has. Thus Chaucer could pronounce the usage as th'usage; C. T. 110. Der. perus-al, Hamlet, ii. 1. 90. [†]

PERVADE, to penetrate, spread through. (L.) 'Pervade, to go over or through,' Phillips, ed. 1706. -Lat. peruadere, to go through. -Lat. per-, through; and uadere, to go, allied to E. wade. See Per- and Wade. Der. per-uas-ive (rare), from the pp. peruasus, Shenstone, Economy, pt. iii.

PERVERT, to turn aside from the right, to corrupt. (F., -L.) M. E. perueren (with u for v), Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, bk. ii. pr. 1, l. 737. -F. pervertir, 'to pervert, seduce'; Cot. -Lat. peruertere, to overturn, ruin, corrupt (pp. peruersus). -Lat. per-, thoroughly; and uertere, to turn; see Per- and Verse. Der. pervert-er; also perverse, Fabian's Chron. vol. i. c. 112, in the description of Brunichildis, from F. peruers, 'perverse, cross' (Cot.), which from Lat. pp. peruersus; hence perverse-ly, perverse-ness, peruers-i-ty, peruers-ion. Also pervert-ible.

PERVICACIOUS, wilful, obstinate. (L.) 'Why should you be so peruicacious now, Pug?' Dryden, Kind Keeper, A. ii. sc. 2 (ed. Scott). Coined by adding -ous to peruicaci-, crude form of peruicax, wilful, stubborn. β. Perhaps from per-, thoroughly, and the base ui- seen in uis, strength. Cf. Lat. peruicax, stubborn, in which -cus is a suffix (Aryan -ka). See Per- and Violate.

PERVIOUS, penetrable. (L.) In Dryden, tr. of Ovid, Meleager, l. 146. Borrowed directly from Lat. peruius, passable, by change of -us to -ous, as in arduous, &c. -Lat. per-, through; and uia, a way; hence, 'affording a passage through.' See Per- and Voyage. Der. peruious-ly, -ness.

PESSIMIST, one who complains of everything as being for the worst. (L.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. Formed with suffix -ist (= Lat. -ista, from Gk. -ιστης) from Lat. pesim-us, worst. [So also optim-ist from optim-us, best.] β. Pessimus is the superl. connected with comp. peior, worse; see Impair.

PEST, a plague, anything destructive or unwholesome. (F., -L.) 'The hellish pest,' Milton, P. L. ii. 735. -F. peste, 'the plague, or pestilence'; Cot. -Lat. pestem, acc. of pestis, a deadly disease, plague. Perhaps from Lat. perdere, to destroy; see Perdition. Der. pest-house; pesti-ferous, Sir T. Elyot, The Governor, b. i. c. 3 (R.), Englished from Lat. pestiferus (the same as pestifer), from pesti-, crude form of pestis, and -fer, bringing, from ferre, to bring, cognate with E. Bear (1); also pesti-lent, q. v.

PESTER, to encumber, annoy. (F., -L.) The old sense is to 'encumber' or 'clog.' 'Neyther combred with ouer great multitude, nor pestered with too much baggage,' Brende, tr. of Q. Curtius, fol. 25 (R.). 'Pestered [crowded] with innumerable multitudes of people,' North's Plutarch (in Shakespeare's Plutarch, ed. Skeat, p. 175). Hence pesterous, cumbersome, in Bacon, Life of Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 196, l. 29 (wrongly explained as pestiferous). A shortened form of impester, by loss of the first syllable, as in the case of fence for defence, sport for disport, story for history, &c. Cotgrave explains the F. pp. empestré as 'impestered, intricately, intangled, incumbered.' -O. F. empestrer, 'to pester, intricate, intangle, trouble, incumber.' Mod. F. empêtrer.

β. 'Empêtrer signifies properly to hobble a horse while he feeds afield, and depêtrer is to free his legs from the bonds. These words come from the medieval Lat. pastorium, a clog for horses at pasture. Pastorium (derived through pastum from pasce, to feed) is common in this sense in the Germanic laws: 'Si quis in exercitu aliquid furaverit, pastorium, capistrum, frenum,' &c. (Lex Bavar. tit. II. vi. 1). So also in the Lex Longobard. tit. I. xx. 5: 'Si quis pastorium de caballo alieno tulerit;' Brachet. γ. Thus empestrer represents Low Lat. *impastoriare, regularly formed from in, prep., and pastorium, a clog. Pastorium is a derivative from pastus, pp. of pasce, to feed, inceptive form from a base pa-. -√ PA, to feed; see Food. ¶ Wholly unconnected with pest; but, on the other hand, it is closely connected with Pastern, q. v.

PESTILENT, bringing a plague, hurtful to health or morals. (F., -L.) In Hamlet, ii. 2. 315. [The sb. pestilence is much older; M. E. pestilence, P. Plowman, B. v. 13.] -F. pestilent, 'pestilent, plaguy'; Cot. -Lat. pestilent-, stem of pestilens, unhealthy; we also find an old rare form pestilentus. β. Pestilens is formed as a pres. part. from a verb *pestilere, not in use, but founded on the adj. pestilis, pestilential. This adj. is formed with suffix -li- (Aryan -ra) from pesti-, crude form of pestis, a plague; see Pest. Der. pestilence, sb. (as above), from F. pestilence = Lat. pestilentia; pestilent-ly, pestilent-i-al.

PESTLE, an instrument for pounding things in a mortar. (F., = L.) M. E. pestel, Tale of Gamelyn, l. 122. 'Pestel, of stampyng, Pila, pistillus, pistellus;' Prompt. Parv. = O. F. pestel (Roquefort), later pestel, 'a pestle or pestell;' Cot. = Lat. pistillum, a pestle; regularly formed, as a dimin. of an unused sb. *pistrum, from pistum, supine of pinsere, to pound, rarely spelt pisere. β. Pinsere (= pisere) is cognate with Gk. πίσσω, to grind coarsely, to pound, and Skt. piśh, to grind, pound, bruise. = √ PIS, to grind, pound; whence also Russ. piškate, to push, shove. See Pistil, Piston.

PET (1), a tame and fondled animal, a child treated fondly. (C.) 'The love of cronies, petts, and favourites;' Tatler, no. 266, Dec. 21, 1710. Formerly peat, as in Shak. Tam. Shrew, i. 1. 78. 'Pretty peat;' Gascoigne, Flowers, Hir Question; Works, ed. Hazlitt, i. 48. Ray (A. D. 1691) calls pet a North-country word, and explains a pet-lamb as 'a cade lamb.' Of Celtic origin. = Irish peat, sb. a pet, adj. petted. 'Oirce peata, petted pigs;' O'Reilly. Gael. peata, a pet, a tame animal. Der. pet, verb; pettish; and probably pet (2), q. v.

PET (2), a sudden fit of peevishness. (C.) 'In a pet of temperance;' Milton, Comus, 721. Shak. has pettish, adj., i. e. capricious. Troil. ii. 3. 139; spelt petish, Levins. There was also an old phrase 'to take the pet,' or 'to take pet.' Cotgrave translates F. se mesconter de by 'to take the pet, to be ill satisfied with.' The simplest and most probable derivation is from Pet (1), q. v. A pet is a spoilt child; hence pettish, capricious; to take the pet, to act like a spoilt child; whence, finally, the sb. pet in its new sense of 'capricious action' or peevishness. Der. pettish, pettish-ly, pettish-ness.

PETAL, a flower-leaf; part of a corolla. (Gk.) 'Petalā, among herbalists, those fine coloured leaves of which the flowers of all plants are made up;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Here petala is the Greek plural form, shewing that the word was taken from the Greek immediately. = Gk. πέταλον (pl. πέταλα), a leaf; properly neut. of πέταλος, spread out, broad, flat. Πέτα-λος is formed with suffix -λος (Aryan -ra) from the base petā- (whence also πέτα-ννυμι, I spread out), extended form of the base pet- (for par-), to spread. Cf. Lat. patulus, spreading, pat-ere, to lie open, be spread out. = √ PAT, to spread out; see Fathom. Der. petaloid.

PETARD, a war-engine, a case filled with explosive materials. (F., = L.) In Hamlet, iii. 4. 207; spelt petar in the quarto edd. of Hamlet, and by all editors down to Johnson. Cotgrave has both petard and petarre. = F. petart, petard, 'a petard or petarre; an engine . . . wherewith strong gates are burst open.' Formed with suffix -ari or -ard (of Germanic origin, from G. hart, hard, Brachet, Introd. § 196) from the verb peter, to break wind. = F. pet, a breaking wind, slight explosion. = Lat. petidium, a breaking wind. = Lat. petitus, pp. of pedere (contracted from perdere), to break wind. + Lith. persti, 1 p. s. pr. perd-zui. + Gk. πέπευ. + Skt. pard. + Icel. freta. + O. H. G. firzan, G. furzen. All from √ PARD, to crack, explode slightly; whence also E. partridge.

PETIOLE, the footstalk of a leaf. (F., = L.) Modern; botanical. = F. pétiole, a petiole. = Lat. petiolum, acc. of petiolus, a little foot, a stem or stalk. β. Apparently from petiolus; the usual derivation is from pedi-, crude form of pes, a foot; see Foot.

PETITION, a prayer, supplication. (F., = L.) M. E. peticion, petition; Rob. of Brunne [not Rob. of Glouc.], tr. of Langtoft, p. 313, l. 18. = F. petition, 'a petition;' Cot. = Lat. petitionem, acc. of petitio, a suit. = Lat. petitus, pp. of petere, to attack, ask; orig. to fall on. = √ PAT, to fly, fall; whence also E. find, feather, &c.; see Find, Feather, Impetus. Der. petition, vb., petition-ary, petition-er, petition-ing.

PETREL, PETEREL, a genus of ocean-birds. (F., = G., = L., = Gk.) 'The petereles, to which sailors have given the name of Mother Carey's chickens;' Hawkesworth's Voyages (Todd). The spelling petrel is used in a translation of Buffon's Nat. Hist., London, 1792, where we are told that the stormy petrels 'sometimes hover over the water like swallows, and sometimes appear to run on the top of it;' vol. ii. p. 128. From the latter peculiarity they take their name. = F. petrel (sometimes pétrel); Littré cites a letter written by Buffon, dated 1782, who gives his opinion that petrel is a better spelling than pétrel, because the derivation is from the name Peter, which is pronounced, he says, as Pétre. (The usual F. word for Peter is Pierre.) β. Thus petrel is formed as a diminutive of Pétre or Peter; and the allusion is to the action of the bird, which seems to walk on the sea, like St. Peter. The G. name Petersvogel (lit. Peter-fowl = Peter-bird) gives clear evidence as to the etymology. = G. Peter. = Lat. Petrus, Peter. = Gk. Πέτρος, a rock; a name given to the apostle by Christ; see John, i. 42, in the orig. Gk. text. See Petrify. ¶ The F. Pétre was prob. borrowed from G. Peter, not from the Lat. directly.

PETRIFY, to turn into stone. (F., = L. and Gk.) Properly transitive; also used intransitively. 'When wood and many other bodies do petrify;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, bk. ii. c. 1. § 3. =

F. petrifier, 'to make stony;' Cot. Formed as if from Lat. *petrificare, a coined word, to make stony. = Lat. petri-, for petra, a rock; and -ficare, for facere, to make. β. The Lat. petra is merely borrowed from Gk. πέτρα, a rock; cf. Gk. πέτρος, a mass of rock, a stone. Der. petrification, as if from a Lat. pp. *petrifactus, but the older word is petrification, from F. petrification, 'a petrification, a making stony' (Cot.); petrification-ive; also petrifice, adj., Milton, P. L. x. 294.

PETROLEUM, rock-oil. (Late Lat., = L., = Gk.) Minshew, ed. 1627, explains petrol or petroleum as 'a kind of marle or chaulky clay;' this is the same word, differently applied. Coined from Lat. petr-, stem of petra, a rock, a word borrowed from Gk. πέτρα; and Lat. oleum, oil. See Petrify and Oil. ¶ There is a curious mention of rock-oil in Plutarch's Life of Alexander; see North's Plutarch, ed. 1631, p. 702.

PETRONEL, a horse-pistol. (F., = Span., = L.) 'Their peeces then are called petronels;' Gascoigne, The Continuance of the Author, upon the Fruite of Fettes, st. 7; Works, ed. Hazlitt, i. 408. Spelt petrionel in Ben Jonson, Every Man, ed. Wheatley, iii. 1; some edd. have petronel. = F. petrinal, 'a petronell, or horseman's piece;' Cot.

β. Wedgwood remarks that they are said to have been invented in the Pyrenees; and he is very likely right in deriving the word from Span. petrina, a girdle, belt; as a horseman's carbine would require to be slung by a belt. Cf. O. Ital. pietranelli, 'souldiers serving on horseback, well armed with a pair of cuirasses and weaponed with a fire-locke-piece or a snaphance or a petronell;' Florio. γ. Span. petrina is allied to Span. petral, a poitrel; both are from Lat. pector-, stem of pectus, the breast; see Poitrel.

PETTY, small, insignificant. (F., = C.?) Common in Shak.; see Merch. Ven. i. 1. 12, &c. M. E. petit, P. Plowman, B. xiv. 242. = F. petit, 'little, small, . . . meane, petty;' Cot. β. Perhaps of Celtic origin; Diez connects it not only with Sardinian piticu, little, Wallachian pitic, a dwarf, O. Ital. pietto, petitto, Prov. and Catalan petit, Wallachian piti, small, little; but also with Span. pito, a pointed piece of wood [I can only find Span. picon, a tenderling, sprig or sprout of a tree], and O. F. pito, a small piece of money (Cotgrave). He cites several other words (none of them very easy to verify), from all of which he concludes the existence of a Celtic base pit, meaning something with a fine point, preserved in W. pid, a tapering point. γ. Similarly the Ital. piccolo, little, may be related to a Celtic base pic, seen in W. pig, a point, peak, bill, beak. ¶ The W. pitru, petty, may be borrowed from English. Der. pettily; petti-ness, Hen. V. iii. 6. 136; petti-coat, i. e. little coat, As You Like It, i. 3. 15 (see Coat); petti-fogger, Marston, The Malcontent, A. i. sc. 6 (R.), spelt pettie fogger in Minshew, ed. 1627, allied to prov. E. fog, to hunt in a servile manner, to flatter for gain, used by Dekker (Halliwell), from O. Du. focker, 'a monopole, or an engrosser of wares and commodities,' Hexham.

PETULANT, peevish. (L.) In Ben Jonson, Epigram 2 (To My Book), l. 5. = Lat. petulant-, stem of petulans, forward, pert, petulant; lit. 'ready to attack in a small way,' as it answers to the form of a pres. part. of *petulare, a dimin. of petere, to attack, seek. See Petition. Der. petulant-ly; also petulance, from F. petulance, 'petulancy,' Cot.; petulancy.

PEW, an inclosed seat in a church. (F., = L., = Gk.) M. E. puwe. 'Yparroked in puwes' = enclosed in pews; P. Plowman, C. vii. 144. = O. F. pui, an elevated place, the same as puye, 'an open and outstanding terrace or gallery, set on the outside with rails to lean on;' Cot. Cf. Span. poyo, a stone-bench near a door, Ital. poggio, a hillock. [Prob. orig. applied to a raised desk to kneel at.] = Lat. podium, an elevated place, a balcony, esp. a balcony next the arena, where the emperor and other distinguished persons sat. [The loss of d and final -um, and change of po-i to O. F. pui, are perfectly regular.] = Gk. πόδιον, a little foot; whence the senses of footstool, support for the feet, gallery to sit in, &c. must have been evolved; for there can be no doubt as to the identity of the Gk. and Lat. words. = Gk. πόδι, crude form of ποῦς, a foot; with dimin. suffix -ον. Gk. ποῦς is cognate with E. foot; see Foot. Der. pew-fellow, Rich. III. iv. 4. 58.

¶ The Du. puye, 'a pue' (Hexham), is borrowed from F. puye. [†] PEWET, PEEWIT, the lapwing. (E.) 'Pewet or Puet, a kind of bird;' Phillips, ed. 1706. 'Ben Piewit-vogel, ofte [or] Kiewit, a puet, or a lap-winkle;' Hexham's Du. Dict., ed. 1658. Named from its cry. So also Du. piewit or kiewit, G. kibitz.

PEWTER, an alloy of lead with tin or zinc. (F., = E.?) M. E. pewtir, pewtyr. 'Pewtyr, metalle;' Prompt. Parv. 'Pewter pottes;' Lydgate, London Lyckpeny, st. 12. = O. F. peutre, peautre, piautre, a kind of metal (Roquefort). Peutre stands, as usual, for an older form petre; cf. Span. petre, Ital. petro, pewter. Diez remarks that the Italians believe their word petro was borrowed from England; but he rejects this solution, on the ground that the form pewter could not well become petro in Italian. The solution is, probably, that the Ital., Span., and O. F. forms have lost an initial s, owing to the difficulty of sounding the initial sp; and the original word really does appear in E. in the form spelter. 'Spelter, a kind of metall, not known to the antients, which the Germans call zink;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Zinc and pewter are often confounded. See Spelter. Der. pewter-er, Prompt. Parv.

PHAETON, a kind of carriage. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) Properly Phaethon, but we took the word from French. Spelt phaëton (trissyllabic) in Young, Night Thoughts, l. 245 from end.—F. phaëton, a phaeton; occurring in a work written in 1792 (Littre).—F. Phaëthon, proper name.—Lat. Phaethon.—Gk. Φαέθων, son of Helios, and driver of the chariot of the sun.—Gk. φαέθων, radiant, pres. part. of φαέθειν, to shine, lengthened form of φαείν, to shine.—✓BHA, to shine; see Phantom.

PHALANX, a battalion of troops closely arrayed. (L.,—Gk.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; and Milton, P. L. i. 550, iv. 979.—Lat. phalanx.—Gk. φάλαγξ, a line of battle, battle-array, a battalion. Of uncertain origin. ¶ The Lat. pl. is phalanges.

PHANTASM, a vision, spectre. (Gk.) Phantasma, Minshew, ed. 1627. A shortened form of phantasma, Jul. Cæs. ii. 1. 65.—Gk. φάντασμα, a spectre; see Phantom. Der. phantasm-ogoria, lit. a collection of spectres, as shewn by the magic lantern, from Gk. ἀγορά, an assembly, collection, which from ἀγείρεν, to assemble. Doublet, phantom.

PHANTASTIC, PHANTASY; see Fantastic, Fancy.

PHANTOM, a vision, spectre. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) Partly conformed to the Gk. spelling. M. E. fantome, Chaucer, C. T. 5457; fantum, Wyclif, Matt. xiv. 26.—O. F. fantome, phantome, 'a spirit, ghost;' Cot.—Lat. phantasma.—Gk. φάντασμα, a vision, spectre, lit. an apparition, appearance.—Gk. φαντάζειν, to display; in passive, to appear; made from sb. *φάντης, one who shews, only used in the compounds ἱερο-φάντης, συκο-φάντης; see Hierophant, Syco-phant.—Gk. φάν, as seen in φαίνειν (= φάν-γειν), to shew, lit. 'to cause to shine,' with suffix -της (Aryan -ta); φάν is an extended form of φα, to shine; cf. φαείν, to shine, φάος, light.—✓BHA, to shine; cf. Skt. bhā, to shine, Lat. focus, the blazing hearth. Hence also fan-tasy (shorter form fancy), hierophant, syco-phant, dia-phan-ous, phen-o-men-on, pha-se, em-phus-is, phaeton, photograph, phosphorus. See Fancy, Focus, Phenomenon, Phase. Doublet, phantasm.

PHARISEE, one of a religious school among the Jews. (L.,—Gk.—Heb.) Partly conformed to the Gk. spelling; M. E. farisee, Wyclif, Matt. ix. 11.—Lat. phariseus, phariseus, Matt. ix. 11 (Vulgate).—Gk. φarisaios, Matt. ix. 11; lit. 'one who separates himself from men.'—Heb. pārash, to separate. Der. Pharisaic, -ic-al. [†]

PHARMACY, the knowledge of medicines; the art of preparing medicines. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) Partly conformed to the Gk. spelling. M. E. farmacy, Chaucer, C. T. 2715.—O. F. farmacie, later pharmacie, 'a curing, or medicating with drugs;' Cot.—Lat. pharmacia.—Gk. φάρμακεία, pharmacy.—Gk. φάρμακον, a drug. β. Perhaps so called from its bringing help; from φάρεν, Doric form of φέρειν, to bear, bring, cognate with E. bear; see Bear (1). Der. pharmaceutic, formed with suffix -ic (Gk. -ικος) from φαρμακέν-της, a drug-gist, which again is formed with suffix -της (Aryan -ta) from φαρμακέν-ειν, to administer a drug, from φάρμακ-ος, a druggist; hence pharmaceutic-al, pharmaceutic-s. Also pharmaco-pæia, from ποιέειν, to make, prepare.

PHARYNX, the cavity forming the upper part of the gullet. (L.,—Gk.) In Phillips' Dict. ed. 1706.—Late Lat. pharynx; merely the Latinised form of the Gk. word.—Gk. φάρυγξ, the joint opening of the gullet and wind-pipe; also, a cleft, a bore; closely allied to φάραγξ, a chasm, gully, cleft, ravine, and to φάραειν, to plough. All from the base φάρ, to bore, cut, pierce, hence, to cleave; cognate with Lat. forare and E. bore.—✓BHAR, to bore, cut; see Bore (1), Perforate.

PHASE, PHASIS, an appearance; a particular appearance of the moon or of a planet at a given time. (L.,—Gk.) The form phase does not appear to have been borrowed from F. phase, but to have resulted as an E. singular from the pl. sb. phases, borrowed immediately from Latin. 'Phases, appearances; in astronomy, the several positions in which the moon and other planets appear to our sight, &c.;' Phillips' Dict., ed. 1706. 'Phasis, an appearance;' Bailey, vol. ii. 1731. And see Todd's Johnson.—Late Lat. phasis, pl. phases (not in White's Dict.); merely the Lat. form of the Gk. word.—Gk. φάσις, an appearance; from the base φα, to shine; cf. φάος, light.—✓BHA, to shine; see Phantom. Der. em-phasis, q. v. ¶ The Gk. φάσις not only means 'appearance,' as above; but also 'a saying, declaration,' in which sense it is connected with φημί, I speak, declare, from ✓BHA, to speak; see Ban. This explains the word em-phasis. The root BHA, to speak, declare, is probably identical with BHA, to shine, to shew.

PHEASANT, a gallinaceous bird. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) Now conformed to the Gk. spelling as far as relates to the initial ph. Formed with excrement t (common after n, as in tyran-t, ancien-t, parchmen-t) from M. E. fesaun, Will. of Palerne, 183; later form fesaunt, Chaucer, Parl. of Fowles, 357.—O. F. faisan, 'a pheasant;' Cot.—Lat. phasiana, a pheasant; put for Phasianus = Phasian bird, where Phasiana is the fem. of Phasianus, adj.; we also find phasianus, masc., a pheasant.—Gk. Φασιανός, a pheasant, lit. Phasian, i. e. coming from the river Phasis (Φάσις) in Colchis. β. The river Phasis is now called the Rioni; it flows from the Caucasus into the Black Sea, at its extreme E. point. [†]

PHENIX, PHOENIX, a fabulous bird. (L.,—Gk.) The word appears very early. Spelt fenix, it is the subject of an A. S. poem extant in the Exeter book; printed in Grein's Bibliothek, i. 215. This poem is imitated from a Lat. poem with the same title.—Lat. phoenix; Pliny, Nat. Hist. i. 2. 2.—Gk. φοίνιξ, a phoenix; see Herodotus, ii. 73, and Smith's Classical Dictionary. β. The same word also means Phœnician, or Punic (Gk. φοίνιξ = Lat. Punicus); also, a palm-tree; also purple-red. The origin can hardly be assigned. ¶ Littre supposes that the phoenix was named from its bright colour; and that the colour was so named because invented by the Phœnicians.

PHENOMENON, a remarkable appearance, an observed result. (L.,—Gk.) Formerly phaenomenon, with pl. phaenomena, as in Phillips, ed. 1706.—Lat. phaenomenon, pl. phaenomena.—Gk. φανόμενον, φανόμενα, properly the neut. of the pass. part. of φαίνειν, to shew (pass. φαίνομαι, to be shewn, to appear). β. φαίνειν = φάν-γειν, lit. to make bright; from φάν, lengthened form of φα, to shine.—✓BHA, to shine; see Phantom. Der. phenomen-al, a coined adj.

PHIAL, a small glass vessel or bottle. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) Formerly spelt vial, viall, viol; altered to phial (a more 'learned' form) in some mod. edd. of Shakespeare. We find phial as well as vial in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. See Vial.

PHILANTHROPY, love of mankind. (L.,—Gk.) Spelt philanthropie in Minshew, ed. 1627. Englished from Lat. philanthropia.—Gk. φιλανθρωπία, benevolence.—Gk. φιλόανθρωπος, loving mankind.—Gk. φιλ, for φίλο, crude form of φίλος, friendly, kind; and άνθρωπος, a man. [The words philosophy, philology shew that φιλ represents φίλος, adj., not φιλέω, verb.] See Philosophy and Anthropology. Der. philanthropic; philanthrop-ist, Young, Night Thoughts, Night 4, l. 603.

PHILHARMONIC, loving music. (Gk.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. Coined from Gk. φιλ, for φίλος, friendly, fond of; and harmonia, Latinised form of Gk. ἁρμονία, harmony; with suffix -nos; as if from Gk. φιλ-αρμονικός. See Philosophy and Harmony.

PHILIBEG, a kilt (Gaelic). See Filibeg.

PHILIPPIC, a discourse full of invective. (L.,—Gk.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; and in Dryden, tr. of Juvenal, sat. x. l. 196.—Lat. Philippicum, used by Juvenal (sat. x. l. 125) in the pl. Philippica, used to denote the celebrated orations of Demosthenes against Philip.—Gk. φίλιππος, a lover of horses; also Philip, a personal name.—Gk. φιλ, for φίλος, fond of; and ἵππος, a horse, cognate with Lat. equus. See Philosophy and Equine.

PHILOLOGY, the study of languages. (L.,—Gk.) In Skelton, Why Come Ye Nat to Courte, 504. Spelt philologie in Minshew, ed. 1627. Englished from Lat. philologia.—Gk. φιλολογία, love of talking; hence, love of learning and literature.—Gk. φιλολόγος, fond of talking; also, a student of language and history.—Gk. φίλο, crude form of φίλος, fond of; and λόγος, discourse, from λέγειν, to speak. See Philosophy and Legend. Der. philologic-al, philologi-cal-ly; philologi-ist.

PHILOSOPHY, love of wisdom, knowledge of the causes of phenomena. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) M. E. philosophie, Rob. of Glouc. p. 130, l. 5; Chaucer, C. T. 297.—F. philosophie, 'philosophy;' Cot.—Lat. philosophia.—Gk. φιλοσοφία, love of wisdom.—Gk. φιλόσοφος, lit. loving a handicraft or art; also, a lover of true knowledge.—Gk. φίλο, crude form of φίλος, friendly, also, fond of; and σοφ, base of σοφ-ός, skilful, and σοφία, skill (see Sophist). β. The etymology of φίλος is quite uncertain. Der. philosophi-c, philosophi-c-al, philosophi-cal-ly; philosoph-ise, a coined word, spelt philosophize by Cotgrave, who uses it to translate the F. verb philosopher = Lat. philosophari = Gk. φιλοσοφείν, to be a philosopher. Also philosoph-er, M. E. philosophre, Chaucer, C. T. 299; here the r is a needless addition, as the F. word was philosophe, correctly answering to Lat. philosophus and Gk. φιλύσοφος.

PHILTRE, a love potion. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) In Minshew, ed. 1627.—F. philtre, 'an amorous potion;' Cot.—Lat. philtrum (Juv. vi. 609).—Gk. φίλτρον, a love charm, love potion, drink to make one love.—Gk. φιλ, for φίλος, dear, loving; and suffix -τρον (Aryan -tar), denoting the agent.

PHLEBOTOMY, blood-letting. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) Spelt phlebotomie in Minshew, ed. 1627.—F. phlebotomie, 'phlebotomy, bloodletting; Cot. = Lat. phlebotomia. — Gk. φλεβοτομία, blood-letting, lit. cutting of a vein. — Gk. φλέβη, crude form of φλέψ, a vein; and τομός, cutting. β. The sb. φλέψ is from φλέω, to gush, overflow, from the base φλε-, akin to φλα-, to spout forth, discussed in Curtius, i. 375; allied to Lat. flare, E. blow (1), and to Lat. florere, E. blow (2). — √ BHLA, to blow; Fick, i. 703. γ. For Gk. τέμνειν, see Tome. And see Fleam.

PHLEGM, slimy matter in the throat, sluggishness, indifference. (F., — L., — Gk.) Spelt flegme in Cotgrave. R. quotes from Arbuthnot, On Aliments, c. 6: 'Phlegm among the ancients signified a cold viscous humour, contrary to the etymology of the word, which is from φλέγειν, to burn; but amongst them there were two sorts of phlegm, cold and hot.' The use of the word was due to the supposed influence of the four 'humours,' which were blood, choler, phlegm, and gall; phlegm causing a dull and sluggish temperament. Chaucer, C. T. 625, has sawcestem, a word formed from Lat. salsum phlegma, salt phlegm. — F. phlegme, 'flegme'; Cot. — Lat. phlegma. — Gk. φλέγμα, base φλεγματ-, (1) a flame, (2) inflammation, (3) phlegm. — Gk. φλέγειν, to burn. β. Gk. φλέγμα (from φλέγειν) = Lat. flamma (put for flagma, from the base flag- in flagrare, to burn). Thus phlegm is a doublet of flame. See Flame, Flagrant, Bright. Der. phlegmat-ic, misused by Mrs. Quickly in Merry Wives, i. 4. 79, from the Gk. adj. φλεγματικός, from the base φλεγματ-; phlegmat-ic-al, phlegmat-ic-al-ly. Doublet, flame.

PHLOX, the name of a flower. (Gk.) It means 'flame,' from its colour. In Phillips, ed. 1706. — Gk. φλόξ, a flame. — Gk. φλέγειν, to burn; see Phlegm.

PHOCINE, pertaining to the seal family of mammals. (L., — Gk.) Scientific. — Lat. phoca, phoce, a seal. — Gk. φώκη, a seal; Homer, Od. iv. 404.

PHENIX, the same as Phenix, q. v.

PHONETIC, representing sounds. (Gk.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson; the science of sounds was formerly called phonics, spelt phonicks in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1706. — Gk. φωνητικός, belonging to speaking. — Gk. φωνέω, I produce a sound. — Gk. φωνή, a sound; formed with suffix -η (Aryan -na) from φω-, parallel form to φη- in φημί, I speak. — √ BHA, to speak; whence also E. ban. See Ban. Der. phonetic-al, phonetic-al-ly; also, from sb. φωνή, phon-ics (as above); phono-graphy, from γράφειν, to write; phono-graph, phono-graph-er, phono-graph-ic, phono-graph-ic-al; also phono-log, from -λογία, a discourse, from λέγειν, to speak; phono-type, phono-typ-y. Also, from Gk. φωνή, anthem = anti-phon.

PHOSPHORUS, a yellowish wax-like substance, of inflammable nature. (L., — Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Discovered in 1667 (Haydn). — Lat. phosphorus. — Gk. φωσφόρος, bearing, bringing, or giving light. — Gk. φῶς, light, equivalent to φῶς, light, from the base φα-, to shine; and -φορος, bringing, from φέρειν, to bring. From √ BHA, to shine; and √ BHAR, to bring, bear. Der. phosphor-ic, phosphor-ous, phosphur-et, phosphur-et-ic, phosphor-esc-ence.

PHOTOGRAPHY, the art of producing pictures by the action of light. (Gk.) Modern; Fox Talbot's photographs took the place of the old Daguerreotypes about 1839 (Haydn). — Gk. φωτο-, crude form of φῶς, light; and γράφειν, to write (hence, to produce impressions). The Gk. φῶς is equivalent to φῶς, light, from the base φα-, which from √ BHA, to shine; cf. Skt. bhā, to shine. Fick, i. 685. Der. photograph, short for photographed picture; photograph-ic, photograph-er. So also photo-meter, an instrument for measuring the intensity of light; see Metro.

PHRASE, part of a sentence, a short sentence. (F., — L., — Gk.) Frequent in Shak. Merry Wives, i. 1. 151, i. 3. 33, &c. — F. phrase, not in Cotgrave, but cited in Minshew; Littré cites the spelling frase in the 16th century. — Lat. phrasis. — Gk. φράσις, a speaking, speech, phrase. — Gk. φράζω (= φράδ-ειν), to speak. β. The Gk. base φραδ- is probably allied to Goth. frat, frath, as seen in frathjan, to perceive, know, think, understand, usfrathjan, to make wise. The Gk. φραδής, shrewd, cunning, answers to Goth. frods, froths, wise. See Fick, i. 679. Der. phrase, vb., Hen. VIII, i. 1. 34; phrase-less, Shak. Lover's Complaint, 226; phrase-o-logy, Spectator, no. 616, a strange compound, in which the o is inserted to fill out the word, and conform it to other words in -o-logy; phrase-o-logi-c-al. Also anti-phrasis, para-phrase, peri-phrasis.

PHRENOLOGY, the science of the functions of the mind. (Gk.) 'Phrenology, a compound term of modern formation, in very common use, but not very clearly explained by those who employ it;' Richardson. — Gk. φρενός, crude form of φρήν, the mind; and -λογία, from λόγος, a discourse, which from λέγειν, to speak. β. The Gk. φρήν is possibly allied to Gk. σπλήν, whence E. spleen. Der. phrenologi-c-al, phrenolog-ist.

PHTHISIS, consumption of the lungs. (L., — Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. [The disease was formerly called 'the phthisick,' as in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. This is an adjectival form, from Lat.

phthisica, fem. of phthisicus = Gk. φθισικός, consumptive. The difficulty of sounding phth was easily got over by the substitution of t for the compound sound; hence Phillips has 'Phthisis, the phthisick or tissick;' and it is still called 'the tizic.' The spelling tysyke occurs as early as in Skelton, Magnificence, l. 561. So also Ital. tisica, Span. tisica, tisis, consumption. Milton speaks of 'a broken-winded tizic;' Animadversions on the Remonstrants' Defence (R.).] — Lat. phthisis. — Gk. φθίσις, consumption, a decline, decay. — Gk. φθίω, to decay, wane, dwindle. The Gk. φθ answers to Skt. ksh, and φθίω is allied to Skt. kshiti, to destroy, whence pp. kshita, decayed, and kshitis = φθίσις; Curtius, ii. 370. Der. phthisi-c, phthisi-c-al. [†]

PHYLACTERY, a charm, amulet, esp. among the Jews, a slip of parchment inscribed with four passages from scripture. (F., — L., — Gk.) Spelt philaterie in Tyndall's version, A. D. 1526; M. E. filaterie, Wyclif, Matt. xxiii. 5. — O. F. filatere, filatiere, forms given in Littré, s. v. phylactère; Cotgrave spells it phylacterie. [The c, omitted in Wyclif and Tyndall, was afterwards restored.] — Lat. phylacterium, fylacterium. — Gk. φυλακτήριον, a preservative, amulet; Matt. xxiii. 5. — Gk. φυλακτήρ, a guard, watchman. — Gk. φυλάσσω (fut. φυλάξω), to guard. Cf. φύλαξ, a watchman, guard.

PHYSIC, the art of healing diseases; hence, a remedy for disease. (F., — L., — Gk.) 'Throw physic to the dogs;' Macb. v. 3. 47. 'A doctor of phisike;' Chaucer, C. T. 413. Spelt fisike, Seven Sages, ed. Weber, 186. — O. F. phisike, phisique. 'Phisique est une science par le [la] quele on connoist toutes les manieres du cors de l'homme, et par le quele on garde le [la] santé du cors et remue les maladies;' Alebrant, fol. 2 (13th cent.; cited in Littré). In Cotgrave's time, the word had a more 'learned' meaning; he gives 'Physique, natural philosophy,' and 'Physicien, a natural philosopher.' — Lat. physica, physice, natural science (White). — Gk. φυσική, fem. of φυσικός, natural, physical. — Gk. φύσις, crude form of φύσις, nature, essence of a thing; with suffix -ος. β. Gk. φύσις = φύ-τις, formed with suffix -τις (Aryan -ta) from the base φω- appearing in φύειν, to produce, also, to grow, wax. — √ BHU, to grow, to be; whence also Skt. bhū, to be, Lat. fore, and E. be. See Be. Der. physic, verb, As You Like It, i. 1. 92; physic-s, physic-al, physic-al-ly, physic-ist. Also physic-i-an, M. E. fiscian, fiscien, spelt fiscien in King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 3504, from O. F. physicien, coined as if from Lat. *physicianus. Also physiognomy, q. v.; physiology, q. v.

PHYSIOGNOMY, visage, expression of features. (F., — L., — Gk.) Lit. 'the art of knowing a man's disposition from his features;' but frequently used as merely expressive to features or face. M. E. fisionomie, visnomie; also fisnamy, fysnamy. 'The fairest of fysnamy that fourmede was euer;' allit. Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 3331; cf. l. 1114. — O. F. phisionomie, which occurs in the 13th century (Littré); Cotgrave has 'Physiognomie, physiognomie, a guess at the nature, or the inward disposition, by the feature, or outward lineaments;' and he gives physionomie as an old form of the word. The mod. F. is physionomie. [Observe that, though the g is now inserted in the word, it is not sounded; we follow the F. pronunciation in this respect.] Cf. Ital. and Span. fisionomia, features, countenance. Formed as if from a Lat. *physiognomia, but really corrupted from a longer form physiognomonía, which is merely the Lat. form of the Gk. word. — Gk. φυσιογνωμονία, the art of reading the features; for which the shorter form φυσιογνωμία is occasionally found. — Gk. φυσιογνώμων, skilled in reading features, lit. judging of nature. — Gk. φύσις, extended from φύσις, crude form of φύσις, nature; and γνώμων, an interpreter; see Physic and Gnomon. Der. physiognom-ist.

PHYSIOLOGY, the science of nature. (F., — L., — Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — F. physiologie, in Cotgrave. — Lat. physiologia. — Gk. φυσιολογία, an enquiry into the nature of things. — Gk. φύσις, extended from φύσις, crude form of φύσις, nature; and -λογία, a discourse, from λόγος, speech, which from λέγειν, to speak. See Physics and Legend. Der. physiologi-c-al, physiologi-c-al-ly.

PIACULAR, expiatory, or requiring expiation. (L.) Little used now. Blount, ed. 1694, has both piacular and piaculous. — Lat. piacularis, expiatory. — Lat. piaculum, an expiation; formed, with suffixes -cu-lu-, from piare, to expiate, propitiate, make holy. — Lat. pious, sacred, pious; see Pious, Expiate.

PIANOFORTE, PIANO, a musical instrument. (Ital., — L.) Generally called piano, by abbreviation. Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. Invented A. D. 1717; first made in London, 1766 (Haydn). So called from producing both soft and loud effects. — Ital. piano, soft; and forte, strong, loud. — Lat. planus, even, level (hence, smooth, soft); and fortis, strong. See Plain and Force (1). Der. pian-ist, a coined word.

PIASTRE, an Italian coin. (F., — Ital., — L., — Gk.) 'Piaster, a cōyn in Italy, about the value of our crown;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — F. piastre, in Cot. — Ital. piastra, 'any kind of plate or leaf of metall'; piastra d'argento, 'a coine or plate of silver used in Spaine' (Florio). [But the form of the word is Italian.] Closely allied to Ital. piastro, 'a plaister;' Florio. Cf. also O. Ital. plasma, 'a kind of coine or plate of silver in Spaine,' id. In fact, the word is a mere variant of Plaster, q.v. The lamina of metal was likened to a plaster or 'flattened piece.'

PIAZZA, a square surrounded by buildings; a walk under a roof supported by pillars. (Ital., =L., =Gk.) Pronounced piazza, as in Italian, with the Ital. vowel-sounds. In rather early use; described in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, at which time it was applied to the piazza in Covent Garden. 'The piazza or market-stead;' Fox, Martyrs, p. 1621, an. 1555 (R.). =Ital. piazza, 'a market-place, the chiefest streete or broad way or place in a town;' Florio. =Lat. platea; see Place. Doublet, place.

PIBROCH, the music of the bag-pipe, a martial tune. (Gaelic.) 'The pibroch resounds, to the piper's loud number, Your deeds on the echoes of dark Loch na Garr;' Byron, Lachin y Gair (1807). 'Pibroch is not a bag-pipe, any more than duet means a fiddle;' Edinb. Review, on the same. =Gael. piobaireachd, the art of playing on the bag-pipe, piping; a pipe-tune, a piece of music peculiar to the bag-pipe, &c. =Gael. piobair, a piper. =Gael. piob, a pipe, a bag-pipe; see Pipe.

PICA, a kind of printer's type. (L.) See Pie (1) and (2).

PICCADILL, PICKADILL, a piece set round the edge of a garment, whether at the top or bottom; most commonly the collar; Nares. (F., =Span., =C.) See Piccadell in Nares. 'Pickadill, the round hem, or the several divisions set together about the skirt of a garment, or other thing, also a kind of stiff collar, made in fashion of a band;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Also in Minshew, ed. 1627. =F. piccadille, picadille; Cot. explains the pl. piccadilles by 'piccadilles, the several divisions or peeces fastened together about the brim of the collar of a doublet.' The form of the word shews it to be Spanish; it is formed, with dimin. suffix -illo, from Span. picado, pp. of picar, to prick, to pierce with a small puncture (Neuman). Cf. picada, a puncture, incision made by puncture; picadura, a puncture, an ornamental gusset in clothes (Neuman). =Span. pica, a pike, a long lance, a word of Celtic origin; see Pike. Der. Piccadilly, the street so named, according to Blount and Nares; first applied to 'a famous ordinary near St. James's.'

PICK, to prick with a sharp-pointed instrument; hence, to peck, to pierce, to open a lock with a panted instrument, to pluck, &c. (C.) The sense 'to choose' or 'gather flowers' is due to a niceness of choice, as if one were picking them out as a bird with its beak. All the senses ultimately go back to the idea of using a sharply pointed instrument. M. E. picken, picken, Chaucer, C. T. 14972; in the Six-text edition (B. 4157) the Camb. MS. has pickke, where the rest have pekke. 'Get wolde he teteren and pileken mid his bile' = yet would tear in pieces and pluck with his bill; where another MS. has pickken for pileken; Ancren Riwele, p. 84. [We also find piken (with one k), as in 'to pyken and to weden it,' P. Plowman, B. xvi. 17, probably taken from F. piquer, which is ultimately the same word.] =A. S. pycan, to pick, of rather doubtful authority. 'And let him pycan ut his eagan' = and caused his eyes to be picked out; Two Saxon Chronicles, ed. Earle, an. 796, p. 267. [Thorpe prints pytan.] β. However, M. E. picken answers to an A. S. *piccan (= pician), a causal verb, meaning to use a pike or peak or sharp instrument; so also Icel. picka, to pick, to prick; Du. picken, to pick; G. picken, to pick, peck. γ. None of these are Teutonic words, but are all borrowed from Celtic. =Irish piccaim, I pick, pluck, nibble; Gael. pioc, to pick, nip, nibble; W. pigo, to pick, peck, prick, choose; Corn. piga, to prick, sting. These are probably derived from the sb. which appears in E. as peak and pika. See Peak, Pike, Pink (1). Der. pick-er, Hamlet, iii. 2. 348; pick-lock, pick-pocket; pick-purse, Chaucer, C. T. 1900; also pickaxe, q.v., picket, q.v., piquet. Also pick-fork = M. E. pickforke, Prompt. Parv. Perhaps pick-le, pic-nic. Doublets, pick (1), pitch, verb.

PICKAXE, a tool used in digging. (F., =C.) A pickaxe is not an axe at all, but very different; the name is an ingenious popular corruption of the M. E. pickois or pikeys; see my note to P. Plowman, C. iv. 465. 'Pykeys, mattokke;' Prompt. Parv. 'Mattok is a pykeys, Or a pyke, as sum men seys;' Rob. of Brunne, Handlyng Synne, 940. The pl. appears as pikeys in the Paston Letters, ed. Gairdner, i. 106; and as pikeyses, Riley, Memorials of London, p. 284. =O. F. picois, piquois (Burguy), later piequois, 'a pickax;' Cot. =O. F. piquer, 'to prick, pierce, or thrust into;' Cot. =F. pica, 'a masons pickax;' Cot.; still called 'a pick' by English workmen. Of Celtic origin. =Bret. pik, a pick or pickaxe. + W. pig, a point, pike. Cf. Irish piccaid, Gael. piccaid, a pickaxe. See Peak, Pike, Pick.

PICKET, a peg for fastening horses; a small outpost. (F., =C.) The sense of 'outpost' is secondary, and named from the picketing of the horses, i.e. fastening them to pegs. Not in early use; in Phillips, ed. 1706. =F. piquet, spelt picquet in Cotgrave, who explains it as 'a little pickax, also the peg or stick thrust down into the earth by a surveyor that measures with cord or a chain.' Dimin. of pie, a pickaxe; see Pickaxe. Der. picket, verb. Doublet, piquet.

PICKLE, a liquid in which substances are preserved. (Du. ? or E. ?) M. E. pikil, pykyl. 'Pykyl, sawce, Picula;' Prompt. Parv. Cf. Du. pekel, pickle, brine; Low G. pekel, the same (Bremen Wörterb.). β. Origin unknown; the old story that pickles took its name from its inventor, whose name is given as William Beukeler in Pennant's British Zoology, vol. iii, and as Wilhelm Böckel in the Bremen Wörterbuch, is an evident fable; b would not become p, the usual corruption being the other way. By way of mending matters, the name is turned into Pökel in Mahn's Webster, to agree with G. pökel, pickle; but then Pökel will not answer to the Du. form pekel. γ. Wedgwood's suggestion is preferable to this, viz. that the word is E., and the frequentative of the verb to pick, in the sense 'to cleanse,' with reference to 'the gutting or cleansing of the fish with which the operation is begun.' The prov. E. pickle, to pick, is still in use; and the Prompt. Parv. has: 'pykelynge, purgualcio,' derived from 'pykyn, or clensyn, or cullyn owte the onclene, purgo, purgulo, segrego.' Also 'pykyng, or clensynge, purgacio.' See Pick. Der. pickle, sb., brine; whence the phr. a rod in pickle, i.e. a rod soaked in brine to make the punishment more severe; also to be in a pickle, i.e. in a mess.

PICNIC, an entertainment in the open air, at which each person contributes some article to the common table. (E.) Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. The word found its way into French shortly before A. D. 1740 (Littre), and was spelt both picnic and piquenique. It also found its way into Swedish before 1788, as we find in Widegren's Swed. Dict. of that date the entry 'picknick, an assembly of young persons of both sexes at a tavern, where every one pays his club,' i.e. his share. β. It has no sense in F. or Swed., and I believe the word to be English; there can be little doubt that the first element is pick, in the sense 'to nibble,' see Webster; cf. slang E. peck, food, peckish, hungry, pecker, appetite.

γ. The latter element is difficult to explain; in reduplicated words, with riming elements, one of the elements is sometimes unmeaning, so that we are not bound to find a sense for it. At the same time, we may, perhaps, assign to nick (perhaps knick) the sense of 'trifle'; cf. knick-knacks, trifles, spelt nick-nacks in Hotten's Slang Dictionary. Thus picnic may mean an eating of trifles, a hap-hazard repast. Cf. the curious Northern word nicker-pecker, as a name for the wood-pecker (Halliwell); though this probably means 'a picker of nicks,' i.e. notches. Knack for 'trifle' is sufficiently common, and knick may be an attenuated form of it. Cf. click-clack, tip as a weakened form of top, clink of clank; &c. [+]

PICTURE, a painting, drawing. (L.) 'The picture of that lady's head;' Spenser, F. Q. ii. 9. 2. Englished (in imitation of F. peinture, a picture) from Lat. pictura, the art of painting, also a picture. Formed like the fem. fut. part. of pingere, to paint; see Paint. Der. pictur-escape, in Johnson's Dict., ed. 1755, s.v. Graphically, Englished from Ital. pittoreresco, like what is in a picture, where the suffix is the Lat. -iscus, Gk. -ισκος, cognate with A. S. -isc, E. -ish; hence picturesque-ly, -ness. Also pictor-i-al, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 24. § 2, formed with suffix -al from Lat. pictori-us, pictorial, from pictori-, crude form of pictor, a painter, which from pictus, pp. of pingere.

PIDDLE, to trifle, deal in trifles. (Scand. ?) 'Neuer ceasyng *pidde*lyng about your bowe and shaftes;' Ascham, Toxophilus, ed. Arber, p. 117. Perhaps a weakened form of peddle, orig. to deal in trifles; hence, to trifle. See Peddle. Hence piddling, paltry, used as an adj.; see Nares, ed. Halliwell. But see Addenda. [*]

PIE (1), a magpie; mixed or unsorted printer's type. (F., =L.) The unsorted type is called pie or pi, an abbreviation of pica; from the common use of pica-type. It is ultimately the same word as pie = magpie, as will appear; see Pie (2). M. E. pie, pye, a magpie, Chaucer, C. T. 10963. =F. pie, 'a pie, pyannat, meggatapy;' Cot. (See Magpie). =Lat. pica, a magpie.

β. Doubtless allied to Lat. picius, a wood-pecker; and prob. to Skt. pika, the Indian cuckoo. There has most likely been a loss of initial s, as we find G. specht, a wood-pecker, Lithuan. spakas, a starling; note also Gk. ονίφα, a small piping bird, esp. a kind of finch. γ. These words prob. all mean 'chirper,' and are of imitative origin; cf. Gk. ονίφειν, to chirp, Lat. pipire, to chirp; M. H. G. spah, a loud noise, cited by Fick, i. 831, whom see. Note also Irish piehead, Gael. pieghid, a magpie, Gael. pieghid, a robin, W. pi, pie, piog, piogen, a magpie. Der. pi-ed, variegated like a magpie, L. L. L. v. 2. 904; pi-ed-ness, variegation, Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 87; and see pie-bald.

PIE (2), a book which ordered the manner of performing the divine service. (F., =L.) 'Moreover, the number and hardness of the rules called the pie;' Intro. to Book of Common Prayer, 1661. Here, as in the case of Pie (1), the word pie is a F. form of the Lat. pica, which was the old name for the Ordinale: 'quod usitato vocabulo dicitur Pica, sive directorium sacerdotum,' Sarum Breviary, fol. 1, cited in Procter, On the Book of Common Prayer, p. 8. The name pica, lit. magpie, was doubtless given to these rules from their confused appearance, being printed in the old black-letter type on white paper, so that they resembled the colours of the magpie. β. The word pica is still retained as a printer's term, to denote certain sizes of type; and a hopeless mixture of types is pie. ¶ In the oath 'by cock and pie,' Merry Wives, i. 1. 316, cock is for the name of God, and pie is the Ordinal or service-book.

PIE (3), a pasty. (C.?) M. E. pie, Chaucer, C. T. 386. Certainly not a contraction from Du. pastei, a pasty, as suggested in Mahn's Webster, since we had the word pasty in English without going to Holland for it. This desperate guess shews how difficult it is to assign a reasonable etymology. β. We find Irish pighe, a pie, Gael. pighe, pigheann, a pie. If these are true Celtic words, we have here the obvious origin; the word is just of the character to be retained as a household word from the British. Cf. Irish pighe-feola, a pasty, lit. flesh-pie, in which feol, flesh, is certainly Irish. γ. I venture to suggest that the orig. sense of pighe may have been 'a pot,' with reference to the vessel in which the pie was made; cf. Gael. pige, a jar, pot. See Piggin.

PIEBALD, of various colours, in patches. (Hybrid: F., -L.; and C.) 'A piebald steed,' Dryden, tr. of Virgil, Æn. ix. l. 54. Richardson quotes it in the form 'A pie-ball'd steed;' which is a correct old spelling. Compounded of pie and bald. β. Here pie signifies 'like the magpie,' as in the word pied. Bald, formerly ball'd or balled, signifies 'streaked,' from W. bal, having a white streak on the forehead, said of a horse. See further under Pie (1) and Bald. ¶ A like compound is skew-bald, i. e. streaked in a skew or irregular way.

PIECE, a portion, bit, single article. (F., -L.?) M. E. pece, Rob. of Glouc. p. 555, l. 5; the spelling piece is rarer, but occurs in Gower, C. A. i. 295, l. 5. - O. F. piece, mod. F. pièce, a piece. Cf. Span. pieza, a piece; Prov. pessa, pessa (Bartsch); Port. peça; Ital. pezza.

β. Of unknown origin; we find Low Lat. petium, a piece of land, used as early as A. D. 730. This is clearly a related word, merely differing in gender. As F. piège, a net, is from Lat. pedica, we should expect pièce to come from a form petica *. Scheler draws attention to the use of Low Lat. pedica in the sense of a piece of land, and suspects an ultimate connection with pes (gen. pedis), a foot. Cf. Lat. petiolus, a little foot, a stem or stalk of fruits; see Petiole. Note also Gk. πέτα, a foot, also the hem or border of a garment. γ. Otherwise, Diez suggests a connection with W. peth, a part, Bret. pez, a piece; in which case the word is of Celtic origin; but the W. th does not suit. Der. piece, vb., Hen. V, prol. 23; piece-less, piec-er, piece-work; also piece-meal, q. v.

PIECE-MEAL, by portions at a time. (Hybrid: F. and E.) M. E. pece-mele; Rob. of Glouc. has pece-mele, p. 216, l. 20. The word is reduplicated, meaning 'by piece-pieces.' For the first element, see Piece. β. The second element is the M. E. termination -mele, found also in flokmele, in a flock or troop, lit. 'in flock-pieces,' Chaucer, C. T. 7962; lim-mele, limb from limb, lit. 'in limb-pieces,' Layamon, 25618. A fuller form of the suffix is -melum, as in wuke-melum, week by week, Ormulum, 536; hipyllmelum, by heaps, Wyclif, Wisdom, xviii. 25. See Koch, Eng. Gram. ii. 292. M. E. -melum = A. S. mélum, dat. pl. of mél, a portion; see Meal (2).

PIEPOWDER COURT, a summary court of justice formerly held at fairs. (F., -L.) Explained in Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691; he says, 'so called because they are most usual in summer, and suiters to this court are commonly country-clowns with dusty feet.' At any rate, the Lat. name was curia pedis pulverizati, the court of the dusty foot; see Ducange, s. v. curia. The E. piepowder is a mere corruption of O. F. pie pouldre, i. e. dusty foot. - F. pied, a foot, from Lat. acc. pedem; and O. F. pouldre, dusty, pp. of pouldrer, poudrer, to cover with dust, from poudre, poudre, dust. See Foot and Powder. ¶ Blount refers us to the statute 17 Edw. IV. cap. 2; &c.

PIER, a mass of stone-work. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. i. 1. 19. M. E. pere, 'Pere, or pyle of a brygge [bridge], or other fundament' [foundation]; Prompt. Parv. [The alleged A. S. per or pere is unauthorised.] - O. F. piere, later pierre, a stone. [With the M. E. spelling of pere for piere, compare that of pece for piece.] - Lat. petra, a rock, stone. - Gk. πέτρα, a rock; cf. πέτρος, a mass of rock. Root unknown. Der. pier-glass, properly a glass hung on the stone-work between windows; see Webster.

PIERCE, to thrust through, make a hole in, enter. (F., -L.?) M. E. percen, Rob. of Glouc. p. 17, l. 10. - F. percer, 'to pierce, gore;' Cot. [Florino has Ital. perciato, pierced through, but no verb perciare; it looks as if borrowed from French.] β. Origin uncertain; the suggestion in Diez, that percer is contracted from O. F. peruisier, with the same sense, is ingenious, but somewhat violent; it is, however, accepted by Mahn and E. Müller. Pertuisier, occurring in the 12th century, is from pertuis, a hole, and is parallel to Ital. pertugiare, to pierce, from pertugio, a hole; and to Prov. pertusar, to pierce, from pertuis, a hole. γ. The Ital. pertugio answers to a Low Lat. pertusium *, not found, but a mere extension from Lat. pertusus, pp. of pertundere, to thrust through, bore through, pierce, a compound of per, through, and tundere, to beat; see Con-tuse. δ. The suggestion of Diez is supported by these considerations, (1) that the Lat. per, through, seems certainly to be involved in F. percer; and (2) that Lat. pertundere gives the exact sense, Ennius has latu' pertudit hasta (White), which is exactly 'the spear pierced his side.' Der. piere-er; also pierce-able, spelt perceable in Spenser, F. Q. i. 1. 7.

PIETY, the quality of being pious. (F., -L.) In Shak. Timon, iv. 1. 15; and prob. earlier. - F. piété, piety; omitted by Cotgrave, but given in Sherwood's index. - Lat. pietatem, acc. of pietas, piety. Formed with suffix -tas (Aryan -ta), from pie-, put for the crude form of pius, pious; see Pious. Doublet, piety.

PIG, a porker, the young of swine. (E.?) M. E. pigge, Ancren Riwle, p. 204, l. 9. Prof. Earle kindly informs me that he has found the A. S. form pegg in a charter of Swinford, copied into the Liber Albus at Wells; to which must be added that the word is commonly pronounced peg in Berkshire, Wiltshire, and Somersetshire. The origin of the word is unknown, and it is doubtful if it is a Teutonic form, as Teutonic words rarely begin with p. + Du. bigge, big, a pig. + Low G. bigge, a pig, also, a little child; 'de biggen lopet enem under de vôte, the children run under one's feet; Bremen Wörterbuch. Cf. also Dan. pige, Swed. piga, Icel. píka, a girl. Der. pig, verb; pigg-ish, pigg-er-y; pig-head-ed, used by Ben Jonson (R.), pig-tail; pig-nut, Temp. ii. 2. 172. Also pig-iron: 'A sow of iron is an ingot; Pano di metallo, a mass, a sow or ingot of metal (Florino). When the furnace in which iron is melted is tapped, the iron is allowed to run into one main channel, called the sow, out of which a number of smaller streams are made to run at right angles. These are compared to a set of pigs sucking their dam, and the iron is called sow and pig iron respectively. Probably the likeness was suggested by the word sow having previously signified an ingot.' - Wedgwood. Add to this, that sow may very well have been applied jocularly to an ingot, owing to its bulk and weight. Ray mentions these sows and pigs in his 'Account of Iron-work;' see Ray's Glossary, ed. Skeat (E. D. S.), Gloss. B. 15, p. 13.

PIGEON, the name of a bird. (F., -L.) Spelt pyone (= pigon) in the Prompt. Parv. p. 396; pygeon in Caxton, tr. of Reynard the Fox (1481), ed. Arber, p. 58. - F. pigeon, 'a pigeon, or dove;' Cot. Cf. Span. pichon, a young pigeon; Ital. piccione, pipione, a pigeon. - Lat. pipionem, acc. of pipio, a young bird, lit. 'a chirper' or 'piper.' - Lat. pipire, to chirp, cheep, pipe; see Pipe, Peep. Of imitative origin, from the cry pi, pi of the young bird. Der. pigeon-hole, pigeon-hearted, pigeon-livered, Hamlet, ii. 2. 605.

PIGGIN, a small wooden vessel. (C.) 'Piggin, a small wooden cylindrical vessel, made with staves and bound with hoops like a pail;' Brackett. Cotgrave translates F. trayer by 'a milking pail, or piggin.' - Gael. pigeon, a little earthen jar, pitcher, or pot; diminutive of pigeadh (also pige), an earthen jar, pitcher, or pot; Irish pigin, a small pail, pighead, an earthen pitcher; W. picyn, a piggin.

PIGHT, old form of pitched; see Pitch (2). PIGMENT, a paint, colouring matter. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. pigmentum, a pigment; formed with suffix -mentum from pig-, base of pingere, to paint; see Paint. Der. or-piment, or-pine. Doublet, pimento.

PIGMY, the same as Pygmy, q. v. (F., -L., -Gk.)

PIKE, a sharp-pointed weapon, a fish. (C.) 1. M. E. pike, pyke, in the sense of a pointed staff, P. Plowman, B. v. 482; spelt pic, in the sense of spike, Layamon, 30752. [The A. S. pic is unauthorised.] Of Celtic origin. - Irish pice, a pike, fork; cf. picidh, a pike or long spear, a pickaxe; Gael. pic, a pike, weapon, pickaxe; W. pic, a point, pike, bill, beak, picell, a javelin; Bret. pik, a pick, pickaxe. β. The orig. sense is 'sharp point' or 'spike'; pike, peak, beak are all variants of the same word. See also Pick, Peck. γ. The F. words pic, piquer, bec are likewise of Celtic origin.

δ. There has been an early loss of initial s; cf. Lat. spica, a spike. See Spike. 2. M. E. pike, a fish; 'Bet is, quod he, a pike than a pikerel,' Chaucer, C. T. 9293. So called from its sharply-pointed jaws; see Hake. The young pike is called a pikerel, or pickerel (Nares), formed with dimin. suffixes -er and -el, like cock-er-el from cock. Der. pik-ed, old form of peaked, i. e. spiked, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 328, l. 8; pike-head, Spenser, F. Q. i. 7. 37; pikeman; pik-staff, i. e. piked-staff or staff with a spike, P. Plowman, B. vi. 105. Also pick, vb., peck, pitch, vb.; pickaxe; piccadill, picket, piquet, picnic. Doublets, peak, pick, sb., pique, sb., beak, spike. [+]

PILASTER, a square pillar or column, usually set in a wall. (F., — Ital., — L.) Spelt pilaster, pillaster in Phillips, ed. 1706. Pilaster in Chapman, tr. of Homer, Od. vii. 121. Also in Cotgrave. — F. pilastre, 'a pilaster or small pillar;' Cot. — Ital. pilastro, 'any kind of pillar or pilaster;' Florio. Formed with suffix -stro (Aryan double suffix -as-tar, as in Lat. min-is-ter, mag-is-ter) from Ital. pila, 'a flat-sided pillar;' Florio. — Lat. pila, a pillar; see Pile (2). Der. pilaster-ed.

PILCH, a furred garment. (L.) For the various senses, see Halliwell. It orig. meant a warm furred outer garment. M. E. pilche, Ancren Riwle, p. 362, last line. — A. S. pylce, in Scradunga, ed. Bouterwek, p. 20, l. 28; pylce, Wright's Voc. i. 81, col. 2. — Lat. pellicea, fem. of pelliceus, made of skins; see further under Pelisse. Doublet, pelisse.

PILCHARD, the name of a fish. (C.?) 'A Pilcher, or Pilchard;' Minshew, ed. 1627. Spelt pilcher in Shak. Tw. Nt. iii. 1. 39 (first folio). Of uncertain origin; but prob. Celtic; pilchards are abundant off the Cornish coast. Cf. Irish peilseir, a pilchard. We may also note Irish pelog, Gael. peilig, a porpoise; W. pilcod, minnows. The final d in the mod. E. word is excrement.

PILCROW, a curious corruption of Paragraph, q. v.

PILE (1), a roundish mass, heap. (F., — L.) In Shak. Cor. iii. 1. 207. — F. pîle, 'a ball to play with, a hand-ball, also a pile, heap;' Cot. — Lat. pila, a ball. Perhaps allied to Gk. πάλλα, a ball. Der. pîle, verb, Temp. iii. 1. 17. And see piles, pill (1). [†]

PILE (2), a pillar; a large stake driven into the earth to support foundations. (L.) M. E. pîle, pyle; P. Plowman, B. xix. 360; C. xxii. 366. — A. S. pyl, a stake; A. S. Chron. ed. Thorpe, p. 5, col. 2, l. 6 from bottom. — Lat. pila, a pillar; a pier or mole of stone. But the sense of 'sharp stake' is due rather to Lat. pilum, a javelin; cf. A. S. pyl, a javelin, stake, Grein. There seems to have been some confusion in the uses of the word. Der. pîle-driver; also pillar, q. v., pil-aster, q. v.

¶ Pile in the heraldic sense is an imitation of a sharp stake. In the old phrase cross and pile, equivalent to the modern head and tail, the allusion is to the stamping of money. One side bore a cross; the other side was the under side in the stamping, and took its name from the pîle or short pillar (Lat. pila) on which the coin rested. Thus Cot. translates O. F. pîle (which here = pila, not pila) by 'the pîle, or under-iron of the stamp, wherein money is stamped; and the pîle-side of a piece of monie, the opposite whereof is a crosse; whence, le n'ay croix ne pîle = I have neither cross nor pile.

PILE (3), a hair, fibre of wool. (L.) In Shak. All's Well, iv. 5. 103; cf. three-piled, L. L. v. 2. 407. Directly from Lat. pilus, a hair (the F. form being poil). Der. pil-ose, three-piled. Also de-pil-at-ory, pl-ush, per-uke, per-i-wig, wig.

PILES, hemorrhoids. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. Spelt pyles in Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 9. Small tumours; directly from Lat. pila, a ball; see Pile (1).

PILFER, to steal in a small way. (F., — L.?) In Shak. Hen. V. i. 2. 142. — O. F. pelfrer, to pilfer. — O. F. pelfre, booty, pelf. See Pelf. Der. pilfer-ings, K. Lear, ii. 2. 151.

PILGRIM, a wanderer, stranger. (F., — L.) M. E. pilgrim, Chaucer, C. T. 26; earlier forms pilgrim, pelegrim, Layamon, 30730, 30744. [The final m is put for n, by the frequent interchange between liquids.] — O. F. *pelegrin, only found in the corrupter form pelerin, 'a pilgrim;' Cot. Cf. Prov. pellegrins, a pilgrim (Bartsch), Port. and Span. peregrino, Ital. peregrino and pellegrino (shewing the change from r to l). — Lat. peregrinus, a stranger, foreigner; used in Heb. xi. 13, where the A. V. has 'pilgrims.' Orig. an adj. signifying strange, foreign, formed from the sb. peregrer, a traveller. This sb. was also orig. an adj. signifying 'on a journey,' abroad or away from home, lit. 'passing through a (foreign) country.' — Lat. per, through; and ager, a land, country, cognate with E. acre. The vowel-change from a in ager to e in peregrer is regular. See Per and Acre. Der. pilgrim-age, Chaucer, C. T. 12, from O. F. *pelegrinage, only preserved as pelerinage, 'a peregrination or pilgrimage;' Cot. Doublet, peregrine, chiefly used of the peregrine or 'foreign' falcon, Chaucer, C. T. 10742. And see Peregrination.

PILL (1), a little ball of medicine. (F., — L.) 'Pocions, electuaries, or pylles;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 5. A contracted form of pilule. — F. pilule, 'a physical pill;' Cot. — Lat. pilula, a little ball, globule, pill. Dimin. of pila, a ball; see Pile (1).

PILL (2), to rob, plunder. (F., — L.) Also spelt peel; see Peel (2). [But the words peel, to strip, and peel, to plunder, are from different sources, though much confused; we even find pill used in the sense 'to strip.' The sense of 'stripping' goes back to Lat. pellis, skin, or to pilare, to deprive of hair, from pilus, hair; as shewn under Peel (1).] M. E. pillen, Chaucer, C. T. 6944; also pilen, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 42, l. 9. — F. pillier, 'to pill, ravage, ransack, rifle, rob;' Cot. — Lat. pilare, to plunder, pillage; a rare verb, used by Ammianus Marcellinus; see Compile. Prob. not the same word as pilare, to strip or deprive of hair. Der. pill-age, plunder; we find 'such as delyte them in pyllage and robbery' in Fabyan, Chron. vol. i. c. 114, ed. Ellis, p. 87; from F. pillage (as if from a Lat. pilaticum). Hence pill-ag-er, for which pillor was formerly used, spelt pilour in Chaucer, C. T. 1009.

PILLAGE, plunder; see under Pill (2).

PILLAR, a column, support. (F., — L.) In early use. M. E. pilar, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 281, l. 29. — O. F. pilar (Littre), later pilier, 'a pillar;' Cot. Cf. Span. and Port. pilar, a pillar. — Low Lat. pilare, a pillar; formed (with adj. suffix) from Lat. pila, a pier of stone; see Pile (2).

PILLION, the cushion of a saddle, a cushion behind a saddle. (C.) Spenser speaks of a horseman's 'shawmch-pillion (shank-pillion) without stirrups;' View of the State of Ireland, Globe ed. p. 639, col. 2, l. 21. [Not the same word as pilion, a kind of hat, in P. Plowman's Crede, 839; which is from Lat. pilius.] — Irish piliun, pillin, a pack-saddle; Gael. pilleán, pillin, a pack-saddle, a cloth put under a pannel or rustic saddle. Obviously from Irish pill, a covering, better spelt peall, a skin, hide, couch, pillow. So also Gael. peall, a skin, hide, coverlet, mat, whence also peillie, a covering of skins or coarse cloth. And cf. W. pylyn, a garment, clout, pillion, allied to pilen, cuticle. β. The Irish and Gael. peall is cognate with Lat. pellis, a skin, and E. fell, a skin. See Pell, Fell (2). [†]

PILLORY, a wooden frame with an upright post, to which criminals were fastened for punishment. (F.) M. E. pylory, Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 345; pillory, P. Plowman, B. iii. 78, C. iv. 79 (see my note on the line). — F. pilori, 'a pillory;' Cot. β. Of unknown origin; it were easy to connect it with O. F. pilar (E. pillar) if it were not for the existence of forms which cannot thus be disposed of, such as Port. pelourinho, Prov. espillori, Low Lat. pilloricum, spiliorium, &c., cited by Littre and Scheler. There seems to have been a loss of initial s. [†]

PILLOW, a cushion for the head. (L.) M. E. pilwe, Gower, C. A. i. 142, last line. The change from M. E. -we to E. -ow is regular; cf. arrow, M. E. arwe. But it is less easy to explain the M. E. form, which we should expect to be pulā, as the A. S. is pylle, Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, b. v. c. 11. § 1. However, both M. E. pilwe and A. S. pylle are alike due to Lat. pulvinus, a cushion, pillow, bolster; a word of uncertain origin. β. The Lat. pulvinus also gave rise to Du. peuluw, a pillow, and G. pfühl, a pillow. E. Müller cites the M. H. G. phulwe, O. H. G. phulwi; and we may note that the M. H. G. phulwe resembles M. E. pilwe, whilst the G. pfühl comes near to A. S. pylle. Der. pillow, vb., Milton, Ode on Christ's Nativity, l. 231; pillow-case.

PILOT, one who conducts ships in and out of harbour. (F., — Du.?) Spelt pylot in Gascoigne, Voyage into Holland, A. D. 1572, l. 44; cf. Mach. i. 3. 28. — F. pilot, 'a pilot or steersman;' Cot. Mod. F. pilote. Connected with piloteur, to take soundings, a word used by Palsgrave, ed. 1852, p. 709.

β. This early use of piloteur as a verb renders it very probable (as admitted by Littre and Scheler) that the F. word is borrowed from Du. piloot, a pilot, rather than the contrary, as supposed by Diez. The O. Du. form was pijloot (Hexham); a word which is immediately explicable as being equivalent to pijl-loot, i. e. one who uses the sounding-lead; compounded of Du. pijlen, 'to sound the water' (Hexham), and loot, lead. Hexham also gives: 'een diep-loot, grondt-loot, ofte [or] sinck-loot, a pilots or a saylers plummet, to sound the depth of the water;' and 'lootmans water, water to sound.' γ. So also G. peilen, to sound; peil (as a nautical term), water-mark; peil-loth, a lead, plummet. δ. It is clear that the lit. sense of Du. pijloot (= G. peilloth) must have been 'a plummet or sounding-lead;' the transference in application from the plummet to the man who used it is curious, but there are several such examples in language; e. g. we call a sailor 'a blue-jacket,' and a soldier 'a red-coat;' we speak of 'a troop of horse,' meaning 'horse-men;' and the man who wields the bow-oar in a boat is simply called 'bow.'

ε. As to Du. pijl, it is the same word as E. pîle, a great stake, from Lat. pilum; Hexham has the pl. pijlen, 'piles, great stakes.' The earliest contrivance for sounding shallow water must certainly have been a long pole. The O. Du. pijle, peyle, 'a plummet of lead' (Hexham), is, perhaps, a mere derivative from the verb pijlen. The Du. loot, G. loth, is E. lead. See, therefore, Pile (2) and Lead (2). Der. pilot, vb., pilot-age, pilot-cloth, pilot-fish. [†]

PIMENTO, all-spice or Jamaica pepper; or, the tree producing it. (Port., — L.) Also called pimenta; both forms are in Todd's Johnson. — Port. pimenta (Vieyra); there is also (according to Mahn) a form pimento. The Spanish has both pimenta and pimiento; but the E. word clearly follows the Port. form. β. The O. F. piment meant 'a spiced drink,' and hence the M. E. piment, Rom. of the Rose, 6027. All these forms are from Lat. pimentum, (1) a pigment, (2) the juice of plants. See Pigment.

PIMP, a pandar, one who procures gratification for the lust of others. (F., — L.) Not an old word. 'Pol. Let me see; where shall

I chuse two or three for pimps now?' Middleton, A Mad World, Act iii (R.). Probably equivalent to F. pp. pimpée, but in any case connected with the F. verb pimper. — F. pimpée, 'sprucified, finified, curiously pranked, comely tricked up'; pp. of pimper, 'to sprucify, or finify it'; Cot. It may have merely meant 'a spruce fellow,' and have easily acquired a bad sense; but Littré notes that pimper is merely a nasalised form from piper, which not only meant 'to pipe,' but also, as Cotgrave says, 'to couzen, deceive, cheat, gull, overreach.' In this view, a pimp is 'a cheat' as well as 'a spruce fellow'; the combination of meanings suits the E. word well enough. β. Littré cites the Prov. verb pimpar, to render elegant, from the Prov. sb. pimpa, equivalent to F. pipeau, meaning (1) a pipe, (2) a bird-call, (3) a snare; with an allusion to an old proverb piper en une chose, to pipe in a thing, i. e. to excel in it. Hence pimper came to mean, (1) to pipe, (2) to excel, (3) to beautify or make smart. Cf. also F. pimpant, 'spruce' (Cot.), especially applied to ladies whose dress attracted the eye (Littré).

γ. Thus pimper is from piper, to pipe; see PIPE. PIMPERNEL, the name of a flower. (F., — L.) Spelt pympernel in Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 5. 'Hec pympernelle, pimpemolle;' Wright's Voc. i. 191, col. 1. — O. F. pimperlle, pimpinelle, 'the burnet,' Cot.; mod. F. pimperlle. Cf. Span. pimpinella, burnet; Ital. pimpinella, pimperl. β. Diez regards these words as corrupted from Lat. bipinnella = bipennula, a dimin. from bipennis, i. e. double-winged. The pimperl was confused with burnet (see Prior), and the latter has from two to four scale-like bracts at the base of the calyx; according to Johns, Flowers of the Field. γ. If this be right, we trace the word back to bi-, for bis, twice; and penna, a wing; see Bi- and Pen. δ. Diez also cites Catalan pampinella, Piedmontese pampinella, but regards these as corrupter forms, since we can hardly connect pimperl with Lat. pampinus, a tendril of a vine.

PIMPLE, a small pustule. (L.) Spelt pimpel in Minshew, ed. 1627. A nasalised form of A.S. pipel, appearing in the pres. part. pipligend, pypligend, pimply; A.S. Leechdoms, i. 234, note 9, i. 266, note 16. [The alleged A.S. pinpel is Lye's misprint for winpel; Wright's Voc. i. 26, l. 1.] Apparently not an E. word, but a nasalised form of Lat. papula, a pimple. Closely allied nasal forms appear in Gk. πυμψός, a bubble, a blister on the skin; and in Lithuanian pampiti, to swell. Thus the orig. sense is 'swelling.' — √ PAP, PAMP, to swell; Fick, i. 661. Cf. also Skt. pipḷu, a freckle, mole, puppata, a swelling at the palate or teeth; also F. pompette, 'a pumple or pimple on the nose, or chin,' Cot.; and (perhaps) W. pump, a bump.

PIN, a peg, a small sharp-pointed instrument for fastening things together. (L.) M. E. pinne, Chaucer, C. T. 196, 10630. Perhaps from an A.S. pin, said to mean a pen, also a pointed style for writing; but this form is due to Sommer, and unauthorised. The M. E. pinne or pin often means 'a peg' rather than a small pin in the modern sense.

β. We also find Irish pinne, a pin, peg, spigot, stud, pin, a pin, peg; Gael. pinne, a pin, peg, spigot; W. pin, a pin, style, pen; Du. pin, pin, peg; O. Du. penn, a wooden pin, peg (Hexham); pinne, a small spit or ironshod staff, the pinnacle of a steeple (id.); Swed. pinne, a peg, Dan. pind, a (pointed) stick; Icel. pinni, a pin; G. pinnen, to pin; penn, a peg.

γ. All borrowed words from Lat. pinna, variant of penna, a feather, pen, fin, pinnacle. In late Lat. penna meant a probe (Ducange); the various senses of the derived words easily suggest that penna, orig. a feather, came to mean, (1) a pen, (2) a style for writing on wax. From the latter sense the transition to the sense of 'peg' was easy. The double form of the Lat. word appears again in Du. and G. See Pen (2). Der. pin, verb, L. L. L. v. 2. 321, M. E. pinnen, Prompt. Parv.; pin-afore, so called because formerly pinned in front of a child, afterwards enlarged and made to tie behind; pin-case, Skelton, Elinor Rummyng, 529; pin-cushion; pin-money, Spectator, no. 295; pin-point; pin-er, (1) a pin-maker, (2) the lappet of a head-dress, Gay, Shepherd's Week, Past. 5; pin-tle (= pin-et-el), a little pin, a long iron bolt (Webster). And see pinna-ac-le, pinna-ate, pin-on. Doublet, pen (2).

PINCH, to nip, squeeze, gripe. (F.) M. E. pinchen, Chaucer, C. T. 328; P. Plowman, B. xiii. 371. — F. pincher, 'to pinch, nip, twist'; Cot. In the Guernsey dialect, pinchier; Métivier. β. This is a nasalised form of O. Ital. picciare, pizzare, 'to pinch, to snip' (Florio), mod. Ital. pizzicare, to pinch, Span. pinzar, to pinch (with which cf. Span. pinchar, to prick, to pierce with a small point); see Diez for other related forms.

γ. These verbs are from the sb. which appears as Ital. pinzo, a sting, a goad, O. Ital. pizza, an itching (Florio), Span. pizco, a pinch, nip. γ. The orig. sense seems to have been 'a slight pricking with some small pointed instrument'; the word being formed from a base pit (probably Celtic) allied to W. pid, a sharp point. Cf. Du. pitsen, pinsen, to pinch (Hexham). See Petty. Der. pinch-er; pinch-ers or pin-cers, M. E. pin-sors, Wright's Vocab. i. 180, l. 5, with which cf. F. pinces, 'a pair of pincers,' Cot.

PINCHBECK, the name of a metal. Personal name.) It is an alloy of copper and zinc, to resemble gold. Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict.; also in Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. So named from the inventor, Mr. Christopher Pinchbeck, in the 18th century; see Notes and Queries, Ser. I. vol. xii. p. 341; Ser. II. vol. xii. p. 81; and Hotten's Slang Dict.

β. The name was probably taken from one of the villages named East and West Pinchbeck, near Spalding, Lincolnshire.

PINDAR, PINNER, one who impounds stray cattle. (E.) See the anonymous play, 'A pleasant conceyted Comedie of George-a-Greene, the pinner of Wakefield,' London, 1599. Spelt pinder in the reprint of 1632. M. E. pinder, pinner; spelt pyndare, pinnar in Prompt. Parv. p. 400; and see Way's note. Formed, with suffix -er of the agent, from A. S. pyndan, to pen up; Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Pastoral Care, c. xxxix, ed. Sweet, p. 282, l. 13. Pyndan is formed (with the usual vowel-change from u to y) from the A. S. sb. pund, a pound for cattle; see Pound (2), Pinfold. The spelling pinner is due to a supposed connection with the verb to pen up; but there is no real relationship. See Pen (1).

PINE (1), a cone-bearing, resinous tree. (L.) M. E. pine, Legends of the Holy Rood, ed. Morris, p. 70, l. 307; spelt pigne, Gower, C. A. ii. 161, l. 10. — A. S. pin; pin-treow, a pine-tree; Wright's Vocab. i. 32. — Lat. pinus. β. Lat. pinus is for pic-nus, i. e. the tree producing pitch; from pic-, stem of pin, pitch. So also Gk. πίτυς, a pine, is connected with πίσσα, Attic πίττα, pitch. See Pitch (1). Der. pine-apple, because the fruit resembles a pine-cone; pine-cone; pine-ery, a place for pine-apples, a coined word. Also pinna-ace.

PINE (2), to suffer pain, waste away, be consumed with sorrow. (L.) M. E. pinen, almost always transitive, signifying 'to torment'; Rom. of the Rose, 3511; Chaucer, C. T. 15065; merely formed from the sb. pine, pain, torment, Chaucer, C. T. 1326, 6369. — A. S. pinan, to torment, A. S. Chron. an. 1137. — A. S. pin, pain, torment, A. S. Chron. an. 1137. β. Not a Teut. word, but borrowed from Lat. poena, pain; see Pain. Hence also G. pein, Du. pijn, &c.

PINFOLD, a pound for cattle. (E.) In Shak. Lear, ii. 2. 9. Put for pind-fold, i. e. pound-fold; see P. Plowman, B. xvi. 264, C. xix. 282, where we find poundfold, pondfold, pynfold. See Pound (2).

PINION, a wing, the joint of a wing. (F., — L.) Used in Shak. to mean 'feather,' Antony, iii. 12. 4; he also has nimble-pinioned = nimble-winged, Rom. ii. 5. 7. M. E. pinion. 'Pynion of a wyngne, pennula;' Prompt. Parv. — F. pinion, only given by Cotgrave in the sense of 'a finial, cop, or small pinnacle on the ridge or top of a house,' like mod. F. pinion, a gable-end. The sense of the E. word was probably derived from some dialectal F. pinion; we find O. F. pinion in the sense of 'pennon on a lance,' for which Burguy gives a quotation; and the Span. piñon means 'pinion,' as in English. β. Both F. pinion and Span. piñon are derivatives from Lat. pinna, variant of penna, a wing, feather, fin. In Low Lat. pinna means 'a peak,' whence the sense of F. pinion; the same sense appears in Lat. pinna-culum. See Pen (2), Pennon, Pinnacle.

γ. The E. pinion, in the sense of 'a small wheel working with teeth into another,' is really the same word; it is taken from F. pinion, with the same sense (Littré), which is from Lat. pinna, in the sense of 'float of a water-wheel' (White). Cotgrave gives 'pinon, the pinion of a clock.' Der. pinion, verb, lit. to fasten the pinions of a bird, hence, to tie a man's elbows together behind him, K. Lear, iii. 7. 23.

PINK (1), to pierce, stab, prick. (C.) Esp. used of stabbing so as to produce only a small hole, as, for instance, with a thin rapier. The word, though unusual, is still extant. 'Pink, to stab or pierce; in the days of rapier-wearing a professed duellist was said to be "a regular pinker and driller;" Slang Dictionary. Todd quotes from Addison's Drummer: 'They grew such desperate rivals for her, that one of them pinked the other in a duel.' Cotgrave has: 'Eschif-fur, a cutter or pinker.' Shak. has pink'd porringer, i. e. a cap reticulated or pierced with small holes, Hen. VIII. v. 4. 50. M. E. pinken, to prick. 'Heo *pynk*es with heore penne on heore parchemyn' — they prick with their pens on their parchment; Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 156. β. It is best to regard pink as the regular nasalised form of pick, in the sense to peck; from a Celtic source, viz. Gael. and Irish pic, W. pigo, Corn. piga, to prick, sting; see Pick. In fact, the E. pink, to cut silk cloth in round holes or eyes (Bailey), is parallel to O. F. piquer, with the same sense (Cotgrave).

γ. E. Müller derives pink from A.S. pyngan, to pierce, Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Pastoral, c. xl, ed. Sweet, p. 296, l. 7, which is merely borrowed from Lat. pingere, to prick. The Lat. pingere (base pu-, pt. t. pu-pugi), is to be referred to √ PIK, to prick, pierce; cf. Gk. πι-νός, bitter; see Pungent. δ. The root is the same either way.

¶ The A. S. pyngan is represented, not by pink, but by prov. E. ping, to push, M. E. pingen, to prick, Romance of Otuel, p. 55. See also Pinch, which is an allied word. [†]

PINK (2), half-shut, applied to the eyes. (Du., — C.) Obsolete. 'Plumpy Bacchus, with pink eyne;' Shak. Ant. ii. 7. 121. It means

'winking, half-shut;' from O. Du. pincken, or pinck-oogen, 'to shut the eyes,' Hexham; where ooge=eye. The notion is that of bringing to a point, narrowing, or making small, and it is much the same word as Pink (1), from a Celtic source pie, a point. The same notion comes out in the verb to pinch; also in prov. E. pink, a minnow, i.e. a very small fish. See also Pink (3). Der. pink-eyed, q.v.

PINK (3), the name of a flower, and of a colour. (C.) Spelt pinche, as the name of a flower, Spenser, Shep. Kal. April, l. 136. [The name of the colour is due to that of the flower, as in the case of violet, mauve; in the case of carnation, the flower is named from its colour. Again, the phrase 'pink of perfection' is prob. due to Shakespeare's 'pink of courtesy,' a forced phrase, as remarked by Mercutio; Romeo, ii. 4. 62.] The flower seems to have been named from the delicately cut or peaked edges of the petals; see Pink (1) and Pink (2). Or else from a resemblance to a bud or small eye; see Pink (2); an application which may easily have been suggested by the corresponding use of O. F. oeillet, which Cotgrave translates by 'a little eie, also, an oilet-hole; also, the young bud of a tree, &c., also, a gilliflower, also, a pink.' The use of pink in the sense to pierce, to cut silk cloth into round holes or eyes, has already been noted; see Pink (1). We may note 'pink'd porringer,' i.e. cap ornamented with eyelet-holes, in Shak. Hen. VIII, v. 4. 50. ¶ The prov. E. pink, a chaffinch, is W. pince, a chaffinch, connected with W. pin, smart, brisk, gay, fine; this is altogether a different word, and prob. allied to E. Pinch. ¶ We cannot, in opposition to phonetic laws, derive E. pink from F. pince, a pink; this F. pince also means 'a pincer,' or 'croce, great barre, or lever of iron; also, the view or footing of a deer, the tip, or edge of the bottom of a beast's hoof,' Cot., and is evidently connected with pincer, to nip, pinch. In this case, the F. pince, a pink, clearly takes its name from its peaked edges, since F. pincer is to be referred to a radical meaning 'pointed;' see Pinch. In any case, the ultimate origin of pink, in all senses but (4), is from a Celtic pie, a peak.

PINK (4), a kind of boat. (Du.) See Nares. 'Hoy's, *pink*s, and sloops;' Crabbe, The Borough, let. 1, l. 52.—Du. pink, a fishing-boat. The derivation is very curious, and is pointed to by Scheler in a note to the 4th edition of Diez; though Scheler fails after all to explain it. Pink is a corruption of O. Du. espincke, as shewn by Hexham, who has: 'Espincke, or pincke, a pinke, or a small fisher's boat.' This is the same word as Swed. espjng, Icel. espjngur, a long boat; formed with suffix -ing from esp, signifying 'aspens,' of which wood it must have been first made. Cf. Icel. espi, aspen-wood; O. Du. espe, 'an aspe-tree;' Hexham. See Aspen.

PINK-EYED, having small eyes. (Hybrid; Du.,—C.; and E.) 'Them that were pinke-eyed and had very small eies, they termed ocellæ;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xi. c. 37 (on the Eye). See Nares. 'Plumpy Bacchus, with pink [half-closed] eyne;' Antony, ii. 7. 121.—Du. pinken, to wink. Hexham has: 'pincke, light, or an eye; pincken, ofte [or] pinck-oogen, to shut the eyes; pimpooge, ofte [or] pinkpoogen, pink-eyes, or pink-eyed.' See further under Pink (4).

PINNACE, a small ship. (F.,—Ital.,—L.) In Shak. Merry Wives, i. 3. 89.—F. pinasse, 'the pitch-tree; also, a pinnae;' Cot.—O. Ital. pinaccia, pinazza, 'a kind of ship called a pinnae;' Florio. So called because made of pine-wood.—Lat. pinus, a pine; see Pine (1).

PINNACLE, a slender turret, small spire. (F.,—L.) M. E. pinacle, Gower, C. A. ii. 124, l. 20; spelt pinacle, Wyclif, Matt. iv. 5.—F. pinacle, 'a pinnacle, a spire;' Cot.—Lat. pinna, a pinnacle, peak of a building; Matt. iv. 5 (Vulgate). Double dimin. (with suffixes -cu-lu-) from pinna, a wing, feather, hence, a feather-like adjunct to a building. See Pin, Pen (2), Pinnate.

PINNATE, feather-like. (L.) A botanical term. 'Pinnata folia, among herbalists, such leaves as are deeply indented, so that the parts resemble feathers;' Phillips, ed. 1706.—Lat. pinnatus, feathered.—Lat. pinna, for penna, a feather. See Pen (2).

PINT, a measure for liquids. (F.,—Span.,—L.) M. E. pinthe, pynte; Prompt. Parv.—F. pinthe, 'a pint;' Cot.—Span. pinta, a spot, blemish, drop, mark on cards, pint. So called from the pint being marked by a mark outside (or inside) a vessel of larger capacity. The lit. sense is 'painted,' hence a mark, spot, &c. Cf. Span. pintor, a painter, pintura, a painting. β. The Span. pinta, pintor, pintura, answer to Lat. picta, pictor, pictura. Thus pinta is from Lat. picta, fem. of pictus, painted, pp. of pingere, to paint; see Paint.

PIONEER, a soldier who clears the way before an army. (F.,—L.) Formerly written pioner, Hamlet, i. v. 163. This may have been merely an E. modification, as the whole word appears to be F. Richardson quotes the spelling pyoner from Berners' tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 138.—F. pionnier, 'a pioner;' Cot. β. F. pionnier, O. F. peonier, is a mere extension of F. pion, O. F. peon, a foot-soldier; with the more special meaning of foot-soldier who works at digging mines. For the etymology of O. F. peon, see Pawn (2).

PIONY, the same as Peony, q. v.

PIOUS, devout. (F.,—L.) In Mach. iii. 6. 12, 27; and prob. earlier.—F. pieux (fem. pieuse), 'pious, godly;' Cot. The O. F. form was pius (Littre), directly from Lat. pius, holy; not from a form pious *. The root of Lat. pius is uncertain. Der. pious-ly; piety, Timon, iv. 1. 15, a coined word, and a doublet of pity, q. v.; piet-ist, borrowed from G. pietist, the name of a Protestant sect in Germany instituted about 1689 (Haydn), and taking their name from their devotion, the word being a mere coinage with suffix -ist from a part of the stem (piet-) of Lat. pietas. And see pity.

PIP (1), a disease of fowls, in which a horny substance grows on the tip of the tongue. (F.,—L.) M. E. pippe, pyppe (once dissyllabic). 'Pyype, sekenesse [sickness], Pituita;' Prompt. Parv. 'Pyype, a sicknesse, pepye;' Palsgrave.—O. F. pepie, 'pip;' Cot. Cf. Span. pepita, the pip (Neuman); Ital. pipita, Port. pevide (in the phrase pevide de gallinhas, the pip). β. All from Lat. pituita, phlegm, rheum, the pip; which must first have passed into the form pivita, and afterwards into that of pepita (Diez). Hence also O. H. G. phiphis, the pip, cited by Diez; Du. pip; O. Swed. pippe, &c. γ. Lat. pituita is formed (with suffix -ita, like -itus in crinitus) from a verbal stem pitui=sputu-, from sputus, pp. of spuere, to spit out; and means 'that which is spit out,' hence phlegm, &c. The Lat. spuere is cognate with A. S. splutan; see Spew.

PIP (2), the seed of fruit. (F.,—L.?—Gk.?) This is nothing but a contraction of the old name pippin or pepin, for the same thing. Pippin is in Cotgrave; pepin in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xv. c. 14, ed. 1634, p. 438 l.; b. xvii. c. 10, p. 511 a, b.—F. pepin, 'a pippin or kernel, the seed of fruit;' Cot. Allied to Span. pepita, a pip, kernel; and prob. to Span. pepino, a cucumber. β. It is conjectured that the name was first applied to the pips of the melon or cucumber, and that the derivation is, accordingly, from Lat. pepo, a melon, borrowed from Gk. πέπων, a melon, orig. an adj. signifying 'ripe.' The Gk. πέπων meant 'ripened by the heat of the sun,' lit. 'cooked,' from περ-, base of πέτρειν, to cook, allied to Skt. pach, to cook, and to Lat. coquere; see Cook. ¶ Would it not be simpler to refer F. pepin to Gk. πέπων, ripe, more directly, the presence of pips indicating ripeness? This would not disturb the etymology. The odd resemblance between Span. pepita, a pip, and pepita, the pip in fowls, is due to mere confusion; see Pip (1). They are not connected.

PIP (3), a spot on cards. (F.,—C.) The resemblance to pip, a kernel, is merely delusive; confusion between these words has caused corruption of the word now considered. Yet pip occurs as early as in Shakespeare, Tam. Shrew, i. 2. 33. β. The true name is pick, still preserved provincially. 'Pick, a diamond at cards; Grose says it means a spade,' Halliwell; and see Brockett. 'A diamond, or picke at cards;' Minsheu, ed. 1627.—O. F. picque, pieque, 'a spade, at cards;' Cot. It also means a pique; see Pique, Pique. The word seems to have meant (1) a spade, (2) a diamond, and (3) a pip (on cards) in general.

PIPE, a musical instrument formed of a long tube; hence, any long tube, or tube in general. (E.) The musical sense is the orig. one. M. E. pipe, Wyclif, Luke, vii. 32; Chaucer, C. T. 2752. The pl. pipes is in Layamon, 5110.—A. S. pipe, a pipe, A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, ii. 126, l. 3; and in comp. song-pipe, a song-pipe, in the Glosses to Prudentius (Leo). β. The word perhaps may be claimed as English, being obviously of imitative origin, from the 'peeping' or chirping sound; the pipe was frequently used to imitate and decoy birds. It is very widely spread. We find Irish and Gael. piob, a pipe, flute, tube; Irish piob, a pipe, tube; W. piob, a pipe, tube, pipian, to pipe, piobo, to pipe, squirt. Also Du. pijp, Icel. piþa, Swed. pipa, Dan. pibe, G. pfeife. Cf. also Lat. pipire, pipare, to peep or chirp as a young bird, Gk. πιπιεῖν, to chirp. All from the repetition pi-pi of the cry of a young bird. ¶ If the word was borrowed at all, it was, perhaps, taken from Celtic, i.e. from the old British. Der. pipe, verb, Chaucer, C. T. 3874 [not 3974]; pipe-er, pip-ing; pipe-clay; and see pip-kin, piob-rock. See also peep (1), peep (2). Doublet, pife.

PIPKIN, a small earthen pot. (E.) 'A pipkin, or little pot;' Minsheu, ed. 1627. A dimin. (with suffix -kin) of E. pipe, in the sense of a vessel, chiefly applied to a cask of wine. This particular sense may have been imported. It occurs both in French and Dutch. 'Pipe, a measure called a pipe, used for corn as well as wine;' Cot. 'Een pippe met oyle ofte wijn, a pipe or caske with oyle or wine;' Hexham. PIPPIN, a kind of tart apple. (F.?—L.?—Gk.?) In Shak. Merry Wives, i. 2. 13; and in Minsheu, ed. 1627. Cotgrave explains F. renette as 'the apple called a pippin, or a kind thereof.' Sometimes said to be named from pip (3), because of the spots upon it, which utterly fails to explain the suffix -in. We must rather connect it with pip (2), of which the old spelling was actually pippin, as has been shewn. That is, it was named with reference to the pips inside it (not outside); 'prob. an apple raised from the pip or seed,' Wedgwood. See Pip (2). ¶ Hexham has Du. 'pippinck, pippinck, a pipping, an apple so called; also 'pipping, an apple called a pippinck.' But the Du. word seems to have been borrowed from E., and they hardly knew what to make of it. Thus Sewel's Du. Dict. has yet another form pippeling, with the example 'Engelsche pippelingen, English pippins.' [†]

PIQUE, wounded pride. (F., -C.) Oddly spelt pique in Cotgrave, who is an early authority for it. - O. F. picque, pique, 'a pike; also, a pikeman; also a pique, debate, quarrel, grudge;' Cot. β. Of Celtic origin; see PIKE. Der. piquer, verb; piquant (as in 'piquant sauce,' Howell, Familiar Letters, vol. i. sect. 5. let. 38 [not 36], where, by the way, the spelling is pickant), from F. piquant, pres. part. of piquer, verb. Hence piquant-ly, piquant-y.

PIQUET, a game at cards. (F., -C.) 'Piquet, or Picket, a certain game at cards, perhaps so called from piquer, as it were a small contest or scuffle;' Phillips, ed. 1706. This is ingenious, and perhaps true; Littré says the game is supposed to have been named from its inventor. In any case, piquet is a doublet of Picket, q. v.

PIRATE, a sea-robber, corsair. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. i. 3. 25. - F. pirate, 'a pirate;' Cot. - Lat. pirata. - Gk. πειρατής, one who attempts or attacks, a pirate. Formed with suffix -της (Aryan -ta) from πειράω, I attempt. - Gk. πειρα, an attempt, trial, essay. - ✓ PAR, to go through, experience; appearing in Gk. πειράω, I pierce (perf. pass. πεπράμαι), and in E. ex-per-i-ence and fare; see Fare, Experience. Der. pirat-ic-al, pirat-ic-al-ly; pirate, verb; piracy.

PIROGUE, a sort of canoe. (F., -W. Indian.) Sometimes spelt piragua, which is the Span. spelling. Both F. piroque and Span. piragua are from the native W. Indian name. The word is said to be Caribbean (Littré).

PIROUETTE, a whirling round, quick turn, esp. in dancing. (F.) Formerly used as a term in horsemanship. 'Pirouette, Piroet, a turn or circumvolution, which a horse makes without changing his ground;' Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1751. - F. pirouette, 'a whirling, also a whirling about;' Cot. β. Origin unknown, according to Littré; but in Métyvier's Dict. Franco-Normand appears the Guernsey word piroue, a little wheel or whirling, a child's toy, of which pirouette is obviously the diminutive. Métyvier well compares this with the E. pirie or pirry, formerly in use to denote 'a whirlwind.'

The spelling has prob. been affected by confusion with F. roue (Lat. rota), a wheel. 'And not be aferde [afraid] of pirries or great stormes;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governor, b. i. c. 17; in Skeat, Spec. of English, p. 197. See further examples of pirry in Richardson, s. v. perry (which is an inferior spelling), and in Prompt. Parv. s. v. pyrry; also in Nares. γ. I take this word to be of imitative origin; cf. Scotch pirr, a gentle wind, Icel. byrr, wind; E. birr, buzz, with which compare also purrr, whirr, purrl. Similarly we find Span. birazones, land and sea breezes, O. F. birrasque, 'a high going sea, or tempest at sea, caused by whirlwinds, and accompanied by gusts of rain,' Cot. The latter is a Gascon word, from the Gascon birer, to turn. These examples lead to a base bir- or pir-, with the same sense as E. whirr. Hence pir-ou-ette may very well = whirl-igig, and pirr-y = whirl-wind. In fact, we find M. E. pirle, prille, a whirling, child's toy, Prompt. Parv. p. 413, which is a mere dimin. of a form pirr. Der. pirouette, vb. [†]

PISCES, the Fish; a zodiacal sign. (L.) M. E. Pisces, Chaucer, C. T. 6286. - Lat. pisces, pl. of piscis, a fish; cognate with E. Fish, q. v. Der. pisc-ine; pisci-vorous, fish-eating, from Lat. vorare, to devour; pisc-at-ory, from Lat. piscatorius, belonging to fishing, from piscator, a fisherman, formed from piscatus, pp. of piscari, to fish.

FISH, an interjection, expressing contempt. (E.) In Shak. Oth. ii. 1. 270; iv. 1. 42. Of imitative origin; it begins with expulsion of breath, as in pooh! and ends with a hiss.

PISMIRE, an ant. (Hybrid; F. and Scand.) In Shak. 1 Hen. IV. i. 3. 240. 'The old name of the ant, an insect very generally named from the sharp urinous smell of an ant-hill;' Wedgwood. M. E. pissemire (four syllables), Chaucer, C. T. 7407. - M. E. pissee, urine; and mire, an ant, in Reliquie Antiquæ, i. 214 (Stratmann). See Piss.

β. The A. S. mire, given in Benson's A. S. Dict., is unauthorised, but may be correct; still, the true E. word is emmet or ant, and mire is rather Scandinavian, appearing in Icel. maurr, Swed. myra, Dan. myre, an ant, also in Du. mier. γ. The word is very widely spread; we find also Irish moirbh, W. mor-grugyn, Bret. merien, Russ. mur-avei, Gk. μύρ-μη, all meaning 'ant,' for which Curtius proposes a root MUR, to swarm; cf. Gk. μυρίοι, ten thousand. The Cornish marrian means 'ants.' See Myriad. ¶ Wedgwood notes a similar method of naming an ant in the Low G. miegemke, an ant: from miegen = Lat. mingere. Rietz connects mire with midge, but this presents much difficulty, midge being from a base MUGYA (Fick, iii. 241), and containing a g which it is difficult to dispose of.

PISS, to discharge urine. (F.) M. E. pissem, Mandeville's Travels, ed. Halliwell, p. 249 (Stratmann). - F. pisser; supposed to be a Romance word, and of imitative origin. Cf. Lett. pischet; Wedgwood. Der. piss, sb., Chaucer, C. T. 6311; pis-mire, q. v.

PISTACHIO, PISTACHO, the nut of a certain tree. (Span., -L., -Gk., -Pers.) In Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 80. Spelt pistachoe or pistake-nut in Phillips, ed. 1706. - Span. pistacho (with ch as in English), a pistachio, pistich-nut. - Lat. pistacium. - Gk. πισταχίον, a nut of the tree called πιστάχη. - Pers. pistá, the pistachio-nut; Rich. Dict. p. 331. [†]

PISTIL, the female organ in the centre of a flower. (L.) In Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. Named from the resemblance in shape to the pestle of a mortar. - Lat. pestillum, a small pestle; dimin. of an obsolete form *pestum, a pestle. See Pestle. Doublet, pestle.

PISTOL, a small hand-gun. (F., -Ital.) In Shak. Merry Wives, iv. 2. 53; and as a proper name. - F. pistole, 'a pistol, a great horseman's dag;' Cot. [Here dag is an old name for a pistol.] - Ital. pistola, 'a dag or pistol;' Florio. β. We also find Ital. pistolese, 'a great dagger,' in Florio; and it seems to be agreed that the two words are closely connected; that the word pistolese is the older one; and that the name was transferred from the dagger to the pistol, both being small arms for similar use. The E. name dag for pistol confirms this; since dag must be the F. daguer, a dagger.

γ. Both pistolese and pistola are said to be named from a town in Tuscany, near Florence, now called Pistoja. The old name of the town must have been Pistola, as asserted by Mahn; and this is rendered extremely probable by the fact that the old Latin name of the town was Pistoria, which would easily pass into Pistola, and finally into Pistoja. 'Pistols were first used by the cavalry of England about 1544;' Haydn. Der. pistol, vb., Tw. Nt. ii. 5. 42; pistol-et. Doublet, pistole.

PISTOLE, a gold coin of Spain. (F., -Ital.) In Dryden, The Spanish Friar, Act v. The dimin. form pistoleto is in Beaumont and Fletcher, The Spanish Curate, Act i. sc. 1 (Jamie). Yet the word is not Spanish, but French. The forms pistole and pistoleto, in the sense of 'pistole,' are the same as pistole and pistoleto in the sense of pistol. - 'Pistoleto, a pistolet, a dag, or little pistoll, also, the gold coin termed a pistolet;' Cot. Diez cites from Claude Fauchet (died 1599) to the effect that the crowns of Spain, being reduced to a smaller size than French crowns, were called pistoleto, and the smallest pistoleto were called bidets; cf. 'Bidet, a small pistoll;' Cot. Thus the name is one of jocular origin; and the words pistole and pistol are doublets. Pistol, being more Anglicised, is the older word in English.

PISTON, a short cylinder, used in pumps, moving up and down within the tube of the pump. (F., -Ital., -L.) In Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. - F. piston, 'a pestell, or pounding-stick;' Cot. In mod. F. 'a piston.' - Ital. pistone, a piston; the same word as pestone, a large heavy pestle. - Ital. pestare, to pound. - Late Lat. pistare, to pound (White); formed from pistus, pp. of pinsere, pisere, to pound. - ✓ PIS, to pound. See Pestle, Pistil, Pea.

PIT, a hole in the earth. (L.) M. E. pit, Wyclif, Luke, xiv. 5; put, Ancren Riwe, p. 58, l. 4. - A. S. pyt, pytt; Luke, xiv. 5. - Lat. puteus, a well, pit; Luke, xiv. 5 (Vulgate). β. Perhaps orig. a well of pure water, a spring; and so connected with Lat. putus, pure, from the same root as purus; see Pure. Der. pit, verb, to set in competition, a phrase taken from cock-fighting. 'A pit is the area in which cocks fight; hence, to pit one against the other, to place them in the same pit, one against the other, for a contest;' Richardson. Also pit-fall, Macb. iv. 2. 35; pit-man, pit-saw; cock-pit. [†]

PITAPAT, with palpitation. (E.) In Dryden, Epilogue to Tamerlane. A repetition of pat, weakened to pit in the first instance. See Pat, Pant.

PITCH (1), a black sticky substance. (L.) M. E. pick, pych; Rob. of Glouc. p. 410, l. 12; O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 251, l. 24; older form pik, id. i. 269, l. 22. - A. S. pic, Exod. ii. 3. - Lat. pic-, stem of pin, pitch. Hence also G. pech. β. Allied words are Gk. πίσσα (for mu-ya), Lithuan. pikhis, pitch. Also Lat. pinus, a pine-tree, Gk. πίτυς, a pine-tree; Skt. pitúdārus, pítudārus, the name of an Indian pine (lit. pitch-tree, since dārus = tree). See Curtius, i. 201, who cites the Skt. word from Fick. See Pine (1). Der. pitch, verb; pitch-y, All's Well, iv. 4. 24. Also pay (2).

PITCH (2), to throw, to fall headlong, to fix a camp, &c. (C.) A weakened form of pick, to throw, Cor. i. 1. 204; esp. used of throwing a pike or dart. 'I pyche with an arrowe, Ie darda;' Palsgrave. It was particularly used of forcibly plunging a sharp peg into the ground; hence the phrase 'to pitch a camp,' i. e. to fasten the poles, tent-pegs, palisades, &c. 'At the east Judas schal picche tentis;' Wyclif, Numb. ii. 3, where the later version has 'sette tentis.' The old pt. t. was pikte or pihtle, pp. piht, piht. 'A spere that is piht into the erthe,' Mandeville's Travels, ed. Halliwell, p. 183. 'He pihtle him on the pomel of his hed' = he pitched [fell] on the top of his head; Chaucer, C. T. 2691. 'Ther he pihte his staf' = there he fixed his staff; Layamon, 29653. The same word as pick, verb; and closely related to pik; to pik is 'to throw a pike.' Of Celtic origin; cf. W. picellu, to throw a dart. See Pick, Pike. Der. pitch, sb., Tw. Nt. i. 1. 12; pitch-fork, M.E. pikforke = pick-fork = pike-fork, Prompt. Parv.; pitch-pipe.

PITCHER, a vessel for holding liquids. (F., = Low Lat., = Gk.) M.E. pycher, pycher; English Gilds, ed. Toulmin Smith, p. 354, l. 12; pychere, Sir Perceval, l. 454, in Thornton Romances, ed. Halliwell. = O.F. picher, a pitcher (Burgundy); spelt pichier in Cotgrave, who gives it as a Languedoc word. Cf. Span. and Port. pichel, a tankard, Ital. pecchero, bicchiera, a goblet, beaker. = Low Lat. picarium, bicarium, a goblet, beaker, wine-cup. = Gk. bikos, an earthen wine-vessel; with dimin. forms Budov, Buidov. β. The Gk. bikos is of Eastern origin (Liddell). Diez considers that the change of initial b to p was due to High-German influence, and gives O. H. G. pehhar as the old form of mod. G. becher. See Beaker, which is a doublet. ¶ We can hardly derive pitcher from a Celtic source, on account of the Span. and Ital. forms; the E. word of Celtic origin which somewhat resembles it is Piggin, q.v. Der. pitcher-plant.

PITH, the soft substance in the centre of stems of plants, marrow. (E.) M.E. pith, pithe, Chaucer, C. T. 6057. = A.S. piða, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxiv. § 10; lib. iii. pr. 11. + Du. pit, pith; O. Du. pitte (Hexham). + Low G. peddik, pith (Bremen Wörterbuch). β. Can it be allied to Skt. spṛāti, spṛīti, swelling, increase? Der. pith-y, Tam. Shrew. iii. 1. 68; pith-i-ly, pith-i-ness; pith-less, 1 Hen. VI. ii. 5. 11.

PITTANCE, an allowance of food, a dole, small portion. (F.) M.E. pitance (with one f), pitance, P. Plowman, C. x. 92; Ancrén Riwele, p. 114, l. 5. = F. pitance, 'meat, food, victual of all sorts, bread and drink excepted'; Cot. β. Of disputed etymology; cf. Span. pitanza, a pittance, the price of a thing, salary; Ital. pianza, a pittance, portion. In all probability the Ital. pianza is a popular corruption, due to a supposed connection with pietà, pity, mercy, as if to give a pittance were to give alms. The Lombard form is still pitanza (Diez). Diez connects pitance with O.F. pīte, a thing of little worth, which he further connects with petit, small; and he supposes pitance to be from the same Celtic origin as petty; see Petty. γ. The Span. pitara means to distribute allowances of meat, &c., and is clearly a connected word; this seems at once to set aside any connection with piety or pity. But Ducange gives the Low Lat. pictantia as a pittance, a portion of food (given to monks) of the value of a picta, which he explains to be a very small coin issued by the counts of Poitiers (moneta comitum Pictavensium). This answers to O.F. pīte, 'the half of a maille, a French farthing, also, a moath, a mite'; Cot. δ. This brings us back to the same O.F. pīte, but suggests a different origin for that word, viz. Low Lat. picta, a Poitiers coin. And this Lat. picta is supposed to be a mere abbreviation from Lat. Pictava, i.e. Poitiers (White). If this be right, the origin is really French.

PITY, sympathy, mercy. (F., = L.) M.E. pitē, Floriz and Blancheflor, ed. Lumby, 529; Ancrén Riwele, p. 368, l. 14. = O.F. pīte (pitē), 13th cent. (Littre); pitēt, 12th cent. (id.). = Lat. pietatem, acc. of pietas; see Piety. Der. pity, verb, As You Like It, ii. 7. 117; piti-able, piti-able-y, piti-able-ness; piti-ful, All's Well, iii. 2. 130; piti-ful-ly, piti-ful-ness; piti-less, As You Like It, iii. 5. 40; piti-less-ly, piti-less-ness; piti-ing-ly. Also pīte-ous, a corruption of M.E. pīte-ous, Chaucer, C. T. 8956, 8964, spelt pitōs, Rob. of Glouc., p. 204, l. 12, from O.F. pīteus, mod. F. pīteux, 'pitiful, merciful'; Cot. = Low Lat. pietōsus, merciful. And hence pīteous-ly.

PIVOT, a pin upon which a wheel or other object turns. F., = Ital., = Low Lat. In Cotgrave. = F. pivot, 'the pivot or, as some call it, the tampion of a gate, or great doore, a piece of iron, &c. made, for the most part, like a top, round and broad at one end and sharp at the other, whereby it enters into the crappaudine [iron wherein the pivot plays]; and serves as well to bear up the gate as to facilitate the motion thereof'; Cot. Formed, with dimin. suffix -ot, from Ital. piva, a pipe, a weakened form of pipa, a pipe. = Low Lat. pīpa, a pipe; connected with Lat. pipare, pipire, to chirp as a bird; see Pipe. β. The Ital. piva meant (1) a pipe, (2) a tube with a fine bore; and so at last came to mean a solid peg, as well shewn in the O. Ital. dimin. form pivolo, or piviolo, 'a pin or peg of wood, a setting or poaking sticke to set ruffles with, also a gardeners toole to set herbes with called a dibble'; Florio. ¶ Scheler intimates some doubt as to this etymology, but whoever will consult the articles piva and pivolo or piviolo in Florio will probably be satisfied; I do not reproduce the whole of his remarks.

PLACABLE, forgiving, easy to be appeased. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; and in Milton, P. L. xi. 151. Taken directly from Lat. placabilis, easily appeased; formed with suffix -bilis from placare, to appease. Allied to placere; see Please. Der. placabl-y, placable-ness. Also placabili-ty, Sir T. Elyot, The Governor, b. ii. c. 6.

PLACARD, a bill stuck up as an advertisement. (F., = Du.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; he notes that it occurs in the 2nd and 3rd years of Philip and Mary (1555, 1556). = F. placard, plaquard, 'a placard, an inscription set up,' &c.; . . . also a bill, or libell stuck upon a post; also, rough-casting or pargetting of walls'; Cot. The last is the orig. sense. Formed with suffix -ard (of O.H.G. origin, from G. hart = E. hard) from the verb plaquer, 'to parget or to rough-cast, also, to clap, slat, stick, or paste on'; Cot. = F. plaque, 'a flat lingot [ingot] or barre of metall, . . . a plate to naile against a wall and to set a candle in'; Cot. = Du. plak, a ferula, a slice; O. Du. plack, 'a ferule or a small battle-dore, wherewith schoole-boys are strooke in the palmes of their hands'; Hexham. β. This Du. word seems to have meant any thin slice or plate, whence the F. use of plaque. However, all doubt as to the derivation is removed by observing the use of the Du. verb plakken, viz. to paste, glue, formerly also 'to dawbe or to plaister'; Hexham. [The Du. plakkaat, a placard, is merely borrowed back again from the French.] γ. The Du. plak is cognate with G. blech, a plate, and comes from a base PLAK, with the notion of flatness, allied to the base PLAT, with the same notion. See Plate, Place. ¶ Diez prefers this etymology to that sometimes given from Gk. πλαῖς (stem πλακ-), a flat surface. This Gk. word is prob. related, but only in a remote way. Der. placard, verb.

PLACE, a space, room, locality, town, stead, way, passage in a book. (F., = L., = Gk.) In early use. In King Horn, ed. Lumby, 718. = F. place, 'a place, room, stead, . . . a faire large court'; Cot. = Lat. platea, a broad way in a city, an open space, courtyard. Sometimes platea, but properly platea, not a true Lat. word, but borrowed. = Gk. πλατεία, a broad way, a street; orig. fem. of πλατύς, flat, wide. + Lithuan. platus, broad. + Skt. prithus, large, great. All from √PRAT, to be extended, spread out; cf. Skt. prath, to spread out, spread. See Fick, i. 148; Curtius, i. 346. Hence also plant, q.v. Der. place, verb, K. Lear, i. 4. 156; place-er; place-man, added by Todd to Johnson. And see plaise, plane (3), plant, plastic. Doublet, piazza.

PLACENTA, a substance in the womb. (L.) Called placenta uterina in Phillips, ed. 1706. = Lat. placenta, lit. a cake. + Gk. πλακοῦς, a flat cake; cf. πλαῖς, a flat surface. See Plain. Der. placent-al.

PLACID, gentle, peaceful. (F., = L.) In Milton, P. L. iii. 217. = F. placide, 'calm'; Cot. = Lat. placidus, gentle, lit. pleasing. = Lat. placere, to please; see Please. Der. placid-ly; placid-i-ty, directly from Lat. placiditas, the F. placidité being quite a late word.

PLAGIARY, one who steals the writings of another, and passes them off as his own. (F., = L.) Spelt plagiarius in Minshew, ed. 1627, with the same definition as in Cotgrave (given below). [Sir T. Brown uses the word in the sense of plagiarism, Vulg. Errors, b. i. c. 6. § 7, yet he has plagiarism in the very next section. Bp. Hall has plagiary as an adj., Satires, b. iv. sat. 2. l. 84.] = F. plagiaire, 'one that steals or takes free people out of one country, and sells them in another for slaves; . . . also a book-stealer, a book-thief'; Cot. = Lat. plagiarius, a man-stealer, kidnapper. = Lat. plagium, kidnapping; whence also plagiare, to steal or kidnap a free person; lit. to ensnare, net. = Lat. plaga, a net; a weakened form for an older *placa, not found; cf. neg-otium for neo-otium, pangere from the base pac, &c. From the base PLAK, to weave, seen in Gk. πλέκω, to weave, Lat. plec-tere, plac-are; cf. Russ. pleste, to weave, plait. See Plait. Der. plagiar-ise, plagiar-ism, plagiar-ist.

PLAGUE, a pestilence, a severe trouble. (L.) Taken directly from Latin. M.E. plage (not common), Wyclif, Rev. xvi. 21, to translate Lat. plagam; the pl. plagis (= plages, plagues) is in Wyclif, Gen. xii. 17, where the Vulgate has the Lat. abl. plagis. = Lat. plāga, a stroke, blow, stripe, injury, disaster. + Gk. πληγή, a blow, plague, Rev. xvi. 21. β. From the base PLAK, to strike; appearing in Lithuan. plakti, to strike, Gk. πλάσσειν (= πλάκω-ειν), to strike, Lat. plangere, to strike. See Curtius, i. 345; Fick, i. 681. ¶ The spelling plage occurs as late as in the Bible of 1551, Rev. xvi. 21. The u was introduced to keep the g hard. Der. plague, vb., Temp. iv. 192; plague-mark, plague-spot. And see Plaint, Flag (1). [†]

PLAICE, a kind of flat fish. (F., = L.) M.E. plaise, playce; Havelok, 806. Spelt place, plaise in Minshew, ed. 1627. = O.F. plais, noted by Littre, s. v. plie; he also gives plaise as a vulgar F. name of the fish, the literary name being plie, as in Cotgrave. = Lat. platessa, a plaice (White); whence the F. forms by the regular loss of i between vowels. β. So called from its flatness; from the base PLAT, flat, which appears also in Lat. plat-ea, whence E. place. See Place.

PLAID, a loose outer garment of woollen cloth, chiefly worn by the Highlanders of Scotland. (Gael.) Spelt plad in Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 313, who speaks of a 'Scotch plad'; also in Phillips, ed.

1706, and in Kersey, ed. 1715. Plaid is in Johnson. — Gael. plaide, a blanket; cf. Irish plaide, a plaid, blanket. β. Macleod and Dewar consider plaide to be a contraction of Gael. (and Irish) peal-laid, a sheep-skin. Cf. Gael. peallag, a shaggy hide, a little covering. These words are from Gael. (and Irish) peall, a skin, hide, also a covering or coverlet. It thus appears that the original plaid was a skin of an animal, as might be expected. The Gael. peall is cognate with Lat. pellis, a skin, and with E. fell, a skin. See Fell (2). Der. plaid-ed. [†]

PLAIN, flat, level, smooth, artless, evident. (F.,—L.) M. E. plain. 'Thing that I speke it moot be bare and plain;' Chaucer, C. T. 11032. 'The cuntre was so playne;' Will. of Palerne, 2217. 'Upon the pleyn of Salesbury;' Rob. of Glouc. p. 7. l. 5; where it is used as a sb. — F. plain, 'plain, flat;' Cot. — Lat. planus, plain, flat.

β. The long a is due to loss of c; planus = placenus. Cf. Gk. πλάξ (stem πλακ-), a flat surface, πλακοῦς, Lat. placenta, a flat cake. From a base PLAK, flat; Curtius, i. 202. Der. plain, sb., plain-ly, plain-ness; plain, adv.; plain-dealer, Com. of Errors, ii. 2. 88; plain-deal-ing, adj., Much Ado, i. 3. 33; plain-deal-ing, sb., Timon, i. 1. 216; plain-hearted; plain-song, Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 1. 134; plain-spoken, Dryden, Pref. to All for Love (Todd); plain-work. Also ex-plain. And see plan, plane (1), planisphere, placenta, piano.

PLAINT, a lament, mourning, lamentation. (F.,—L.) M. E. pleinte, Havelok, 134; Ancren Riwle, p. 96. l. 18. — O. F. pleinte (11th century, Littré), later plainte, 'a plaint, complaint;' Cot. — Low Lat. planctus, a plaint; closely allied to Lat. planctus, lamentation. Both forms are from placatus (fem. planctus), pp. of plangere, to strike, beat, esp. to beat the breast as a sign of grief, to lament aloud. A nasalised form from the base PLAK, to strike; see Plague. Der. plaint-iff, q. v., plaint-ive, q. v.; also com-plain. The verb to plain, i. e. to mourn, is perhaps obsolete; it is equivalent to F. plandre, from Lat. plangere; see K. Lear, iii. 1. 39.

PLAINTIFF, the complainant in a law-suit. (F.,—L.) It should have but one f. M. E. plaintif; spelt playntyf, Eng. Gilds, ed. Toulmin Smith, p. 360, l. 18. — F. plaintif, 'a plaintiff;' Cot. Formed with suffix -if (Lat. -ius) from Lat. placatus, pp. of plangere, to lament, hence, to complain; see Plaint. Doublet, plaintive.

PLAINTIVE, mournful. (F.,—L.) Really the same word as the above, but differently used. In Daniel, Sonnet, To Celia (R.) — F. plaintif, fem. plaintive, adj., 'lamenting, mournful;' Cot. See Plaintiff. Der. plaintive-ly, ness.

PLAIT, a fold, braid; to fold together, interweave. (F.,—L.) Minsheu, ed. 1627, has 'to platte or wreath.' Shak. has plat, Romeo, i. 4. 89. For plaited, in K. Lear, i. 1. 183, the quartos have pleated, the folios plighted. Cotgrave translates F. plier by 'to fold, plait.' M. E. plaiten, pletten, verb; plait, sb. 'Playte of a clothe, Plica; Playtyd, Plicatus; Playtyn, Plico;' Prompt. Parv. The pt. t. plaited is in P. Plowman, B. v. 202; spelt pletade, id. A. v. 126. The verb is undoubtedly formed from the sb., which alone is found in French. — O. F. plait, pleit, plet, a fold (Burguy); the mod. F. word is pli; Littré, s. v. pli, gives an example of the use of the form plait in the 13th century. — Lat. plicatus, neut. or acc. of plicare, pp. of plicare, to fold. The F. verb plier = Lat. plicare, and also appears as ployer, 'to plie,' Cot. See Ply. Der. plait-er. Doublets, pleat, plight (2).

PLAN, a drawing of anything on a plane or flat surface; esp. the ground-plot of a building; a scheme. (F.,—L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706; Pope, Essay on Man, i. 6. — F. plan, 'the ground-plot of a building;' Cot. — F. plan, adj. (fem. plane), flat, which first occurs in the 16th century (Littré). A late formation from Lat. planus, plain, flat; the earlier and better F. form being plain; see Plain. Der. plan, verb, Pope, Satires from Horace, Ep. II. i. 374. Hence plann-er.

PLANE (1), a level surface. (F.,—L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706, who speaks of 'a geometrical plane,' 'a vertical plane,' &c. — F. plane, fem. of the adj. plan, flat; with the E. sense of 'a plane,' it occurs in Forcadell, Éléments d'Euclide, p. 3 (Littré), in the 16th century. See Plan. We also find E. plane as an adj., as 'a plane surface.' See Plane (2). Der. planei-sphere, q. v.

PLANE (2), a tool; also, to render a surface level. (F.,—L.) 1. The carpenter's plane was so called from its use; the verb is older than the sb. in Latin. We find M. E. plane, sb., a carpenter's tool, in the Prompt. Parv. This is the F. plane (Cot.), from late Lat. plana, a carpenter's plane (White).

2. The verb is M. E. planen, spelt planyn in the Prompt. Parv. — F. planer, to plane. — Lat. planare, to plane (White). ¶ White gives Corippus and Alcimus as authorities for the verb planare; Prof. Mayor gives me a reference to St. Augustine, de gen. c. Manich. I. § 13. See Plain.

PLANE (3), PLANE-TREE, the name of a tree, with spreading boughs. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) M. E. plane; Wyclif, Gen. xxx. 37; Squire of Low Degree, ed. Ritson; l. 40; plane-leef, leaf of a plane, Trevisa, tr. of Higden, i. 187, l. 9. — F. plane, 'the great maple;' Cot. — Lat. platanum, acc. of platanus, a plane; whence the

F. word is formed by the usual loss of t between vowels. — Gk. πλάνανος, the oriental plane; named from its broad leaves and spreading form (Liddell). — Gk. πλατύς, wide, broad. See Place. ¶ Sometimes called platane (an inferior form) from Lat. platanus.

PLANET, a wandering star. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) So called to distinguish them from the fixed stars. M. E. planete, Rob. of Glouc. p. 112, l. 20. — O. F. planete, 13th cent. (Littré); mod. F. planète. — Lat. planeta. — Gk. πλανήτης, a wanderer; lengthened form of πλανή, a wanderer, of which the pl. πλανήτες was esp. used to signify the planets. — Gk. πλανάω, I lead astray, cause to wander; pass. πλανάομαι, I wander, roam. — Gk. πλάνη, a wandering about. β. Prob. for πάλη-η; cf. Lat. pālari, to wander. Der. planet-ar-y, Timon, iv. 3. 108; planet-oid (see Asteroid); planet-stricken or planet-struck, see Hamlet, i. r. 162.

PLANE-TREE; see Plane (3).

PLANISPHERE, a sphere projected on a plane. (Hybrid; L. and Gk.) 'Planisphere, a plain sphere, or a sphere projected in plano; as an astrolabe;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. A barbarous hybrid compound. From plani-, put for the crude form of Lat. planus, flat; and sphere, a word of Gk. origin. See Plain and Sphere.

PLANK, a board. (L.) M. E. planke, Will. of Palerne, 2778; Rob. of Brunne, Handlyng Synne, 5261. — Lat. planca, a board, plank. So called from its flatness; it is a nasalised form from the base PLAK, with the idea of flatness. The cognate Gk. word is πλάξ (gen. πλακ-ός), a flat stone. See Placenta, Plain. Der. plank, verb. ¶ The F. form planche accounts for planned, Meas. for Meas. iv. 1. 30.

PLANT, a vegetable production, esp. a sprout, shoot, twig, slip. (L.) M. E. plante, Chaucer, C. T. 6345. A. S. plante; the pl. plantan occurs in the entry 'Plantaria, gesáwena plantan' in Wright's Vocab. i. 39, col. 1. — Lat. planta, a plant; properly, a spreading sucker or shoot. From the base PLAT, spreading, seen in Gk. πλατύς, spreading, broad. — ✓ PRAT, to spread out; see Place. ¶ The Lat. planta also means the flat sole of the foot; hence 'to plant one's foot,' i. e. to set it flat and firmly down. Der. plant, verb, Chaucer, C. T. 6346, A. S. geplantian, Kentish version of Psalm, ciii. 16; plant-er; plant-at-ion, see Bacon, Essay 33, Of Plantations, from Lat. plantatio, a planting, which from plantatus, pp. of plantare, to plant. Also plant-ing, plant-ain, plant-grade.

PLANTAIN, the name of a plant. M. E. plantain, Chaucer, C. T. 16049. — F. plantain, 'plantain, waybread;' Cot. — Lat. plantaginem, acc. of plantago, a plantain; Pliny. β. So named from its flat spreading leaf, and connected with planta; see Plant. So also arose the M. E. name waybread, A. S. wegbræde, 'properly way-broad, but called way-bread,' Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms, vol. ii. Glossary. So also the G. name wegbreit. [†]

PLANTIGRADE, walking on the sole of the foot. (L.) Scientific. Coined from planti-, put for planta, the sole of the foot, also a plant; and grad-i, to walk. See Plant and Grade. For the form planti-, cf. Lat. planti-ger, bearing shoots.

PLASH (1), a puddle, a shallow pool. (O. Low G.) M. E. plasche, Allit. Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 2798; Prompt. Parv. Not in A. S. — O. Du. plash; 'een plas ofte [or] plash, a splash of water; een plasc, a sudden flash [flush] of rain; cf. plasschen in't water, to splash, or plunge in the water;' Hexham. β. Cf. also G. platschen, to splash, dabble, Dan. pladske (for platske), to splash, dabble about, Swed. plaska (for platska), to dabble, shewing that a t has been lost before s, the Du. plash standing for plat-sch.

γ. The various forms are extensions from the base PLAT, to strike, beat, appearing in A. S. plættan or plættian, to strike with the palm, slap, John, xix. 3; also in Swed. dial. plätta, to strike softly, slap, whence the frequentative plättsa, to tap with the finger-points (Rietz). This base PLAT is a variant of PLAK, to strike, for which see Plague. And see Pat, Plod.

PLASH (2), another form of Pleach, q. v. In Nares.

PLASTER, a composition of lime, water, and sand, for walls; an external medical application for wounds. (L.,—Gk.) M. E. plastre, Chaucer, C. T. 10950. [This is a F. spelling, from O. F. plastre, used in the 13th and 14th century (Littré). The spelling plaster in English answers to the occasional 14th cent. F. spelling plastre.] A. S. plaster, a plaster for wounds; Cockayne's Leechdoms, i. 298, l. 12. — Lat. emplastrum, a plaster; the first syllable being dropped; cf. Low Lat. plastreus, made of plaster (Ducange). — Gk. ἐμπλαστρον, a plaster; a form used by Galen instead of the usual word ἐμπλαστον, a plaster, which is properly the neut. of ἐμπλαστος, daubed on or over. — Gk. ἐμπλάσσειν, to daub on. — Gk. ἐμ-, put for ἐν, in, before the following π; and πλάσσειν, to mould, form in clay or wax. See In and Plastic. Der. plaster, verb, M. E. plasteren, Prompt. Parv., from O. F. plastrer (F. plâtrer), 'to plaister,' Cot. Also plaster-er, plaster-ing. And see piastre. [†]

PLASTIC, capable of moulding; also, capable of being moulded. (L., -Gk.) Used in the active sense by Pope, Essay on Man, iii. 9; Dunciad, i. 101. -Lat. plasticus. -Gk. πλαστικός, fit for, or skilful in moulding. Formed with suffix -κ-ος from πλασσειν, formed, moulded. -Gk. πλάσσειν, to mould.

β. Gk. πλάσσειν appears to be put for πλατ-ειν, and to be related to πλατεις, broad. 'The verb πλάσσειν, with a dental stem (πλάσσειν, πλαστός), probably belongs here [viz. to πλατεις]; so that the fundamental meaning is extendere, expandere, a meaning well adapted for working in soft masses; hence also ἐμπλαστρον, plaster; Curtius, i. 346. Cf. the E. phrase 'to spread a plaster.' See PLACE. Der. plastic-i-ty, from mod. F. plasticité (Littre).

PLAT (1), PLOT, a patch of ground. (E.) Now commonly written plot, which is also the A.S. form. Spelt plat in 2 Kings, ix. 26, A. V. 'So three in one small plat of ground shall ly;' Herrick, Hesperides, i. p. 10 (Pickering's edition). 'A garden platte;' Udall's Erasmus, Luke, fol. 174 a (1548). See further under Plot, Patch. The spelling plat is prob. due to M. E. plat, F. plat, flat; for which see Plate.

PLAT (2), to plait. (F., -L.) In Shak. Romeo, i. 4. 89. The same as Plait, q. v.

PLATANE, a plane-tree; see Plane (3).

PLATE, a thin piece of metal, flat dish. (F., -Gk.) M. E. plate, Chaucer, C. T. 2123. -O. F. and F. plate, in use in the 12th century; see Littre. Hamilton, s. v. plat (flat), gives 'Vaisselle plate, hammered plate; particularly, plate, silver plate.' Plate is merely the fem. of F. plat, flat. Cf. Low Lat. plata, a lamina, plate of metal, Ducange; and esp. Span. plata, plate, silver (whence La Plata). But the Span. word was derived from the French; Littre. -Gk. πλατεις, broad; whence Du. and Dan. plat, G. and Swed. platt, are borrowed; see PLACE. Der. plate, vb., Rich. II, i. 3. 28; plate-glass, plat-ing. And see platt-er, plat-eau, plat-form, plat-ina, plat-i-ude. [†]

PLATEAU, a flat space, table-land. (F., -Gk.) Modern. Not in Todd's Johnson. -F. plateau; Cotgrave gives the pl. plateaux, 'flat and thin stones.' The mod. F. plateau also means 'table-land'; Hamilton. -O. F. platei, a small plate, used in the 12th century; Littre. Dimin. of plat, a platter, dish, which is a sb. made from the adj. plat, flat. See Plate. Doublet, platter, q. v. [†]

PLATFORM, a flat surface, level scaffolding. (F., -Gk. and L.) In Shak. meaning, (1) a terrace, Hamlet, i. 2. 213, (2) a scheme, plan, 1 Hen. VI, ii. 1. 77. -F. plateforme, 'a platform, modell'; Cot. -F. plate, fem. of plat, flat; and forme, form; so that the sense is 'ground-plan.' See Plate and Form.

PLATINA, a heavy metal. (Span., -F., -Gk.) Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. -Span. platina, so called from its silvery appearance. -Span. plata, silver. See Plate.

PLATITUDE, a trite or dull remark. (F., -Gk.) Modern. Not in Todd's Johnson. -F. platitude, flatness, insipidity (Hamilton). A modern word, coined (on the model of latitude) from F. plat, flat. See Plate.

PLATOON, a group of men, sub-division of a company of soldiers. (F., -L.) 'Platoon, a small square body of 40 or 50 men,' &c.; Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. Corrupted from F. peloton, 'pronounced plo-tong, a ball, tennis-ball, group, knot, platoon'; Hamilton. Formed, with suffix -on, from F. pelote, a ball; whence also E. pellet. See Pellet.

PLATTER, a flat plate or dish. (F., -Gk.) M. E. plater (with one t), Wyclif, Matt. xxiii. 25. Formed (with substitution of the suffix -er for -el, by the common interchange of l and r) from O. F. platei, a plate (Burguy), which is also the origin of mod. F. plateau, still used in the sense of 'waiter, tray, tea-board'; Hamilton. Thus platter and plateau are doublets. See Plateau.

PLAUDIT, applause. (L.) The form plaudit is due to misreading the Lat. plaudite as if it were an E. word, in which the final e would naturally be considered as silent. Sometimes the pronunciation in three syllables was kept up, with the singular result that the suffix -itè was then occasionally mistaken for the ordinary E. suffix -ity. Hence we find 3 forms; (1) the correct Latin form, considered as trisyllabic. 'After the plaudite's stye up Our plausible assente;' Drant, tr. of Horace, Art of Poetry (R.) (2) The form in -ity. 'And give this virgin crystal plaudities;' Cyril Tourneur, The Revenger's Tragedy, Act ii. sc. 1 (R.) (3) The clipped E. form. 'Not only the last plaudit to expect;' Denham, Of Old Age, pt. iv. (R.) -Lat. plaudite, clap your hands; a cry addressed by the actors to the spectators, requesting them to express their satisfaction. It is the imperative pl. of plaudere, to applaud, also spelt plodere; see Plausible. Der. plaudit-or-y, an ill-coined word, neither French nor Latin.

PLAUSIBLE, deserving applause, specious. (L.) In Shak. it means 'contented, willing;' Meas. iii. 1. 253. Englished from Lat. plausibilis, praiseworthy. Formed, with suffix -bilis, from plausi- = plauso, stem of plausus, pp. of plaudere, plodere, to strike, beat, clap hands, applaud. Root uncertain. Der. plausibly, plausibility, plausible-ness. And see plaudit, ap-plaud, ex-plode.

PLAY, a game, sport, diversion. (E.; perhaps L.) M. E. play, Chaucer, C. T. 8906. -A. S. plega, a game, sport, Grein, ii. 361. β. We may note how frequently the A. S. plega was used in the sense of fight, skirmish, battle. Thus æsc-plega, ash-play, is the play of spears, i. e. fighting with spears; sweord-plega, sword-play, fighting with swords. Even in the Bible, 2 Sam. ii. 14, to play really means to fight; but this is due to the use of ludere in the Lat. version; Wyclif uses the same word. To play on an instrument is to strike upon it. Cf. 'tympanan plegiendra' = of them that strike the timbrels; A. S. version of Ps. lxvii. 27, ed. Spelman. And again, 'plegað mid handum' = clap hands; Ps. xli. 1. Thus the orig. sense of plega is a stroke, blow, and plegian is to strike.

γ. The base is PLAG, and, considering the scarcity of Teutonic words with initial p, it is most likely that the word is merely a borrowed one, from Lat. plaga, a blow, stroke, thrust. See Plague. If plega were cognate with plaga, it would be less similar in form.

¶ E. Müller considers A. S. plega equivalent to O. Fries. plega, custom, G. pflège, care; but, though the form exactly answers, the sense is so widely different that it is hard to see a connection; see Plight. Der. play, verb, M. E. pleyen, Chaucer, C. T. 3333, A. S. plegian, formed from the sb. plega, not vice versa. Also play-bill, -book, -fellow, -house, -mate, -thing; player, playing, playing-card; play-ful, M. E. pleiful, Old Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, p. 205, l. 20; play-ful-ly, -ness. [†]

PLEA, an excuse, apology. (F., -L.) M. E. plee, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, 485; ple, Rob. of Glouc. p. 471, l. 22; play, Eng. Gilds, ed. Toulmin Smith, p. 350, l. 13. -O. F. ple, plai, occasional forms of O. F. plaii, plaid, a plea. Littre cites the pl. forms plez, plais, plaiiz (12th century) from Ducange, s. v. Placitum. Cotgrave gives plaid, 'sute, controversie, . . also a plea, or a pleading, also, a court of pleading' -Low Lat. placitum, a judgment, decision, decree, sentence; also a public assembly, conference, or council, so called because of the decisions therein determined on; Lat. placitum, an opinion. [The order of ideas is: that which is pleasing to all, an opinion, decision, conference for obtaining decisions, public court, law-court, proceedings or sentence in a law-court, and finally pleading, plea. The word has run a long career, with other meanings beside those here cited; see Ducange.] -Lat. placitum, neut. of placitus, pp. of placere, to please; see Please. Der. plead.

PLEACH, PLASH, to intertwine boughs in a hedge, to strengthen a hedge by enweaving boughs or twigs. (F., -L.) 'The hedge to plash;' Hood, The Lay of the Labourer, st. 5. 'The pleached bower;' Much Ado, iii. 1. 7. M. E. plechen, used in the sense 'to propagate a vine'; Palladius on Husbandry, ed. Lodge, b. iii. l. 330. -O. F. plessier (Burguy), later plesser, 'to plash, to bow, fold, or plait young branches one within another, also, to thicken a hedge or cover a walk by plashing;' Cot. Formed from Low Lat. plessa, a thicket of interwoven boughs, occurring A.D. 1215 (Ducange). He also gives the verb plectare, to plash; but O. F. plesser answers rather to a form *plectiare. We also find plexisseum, a pleached hedge; and numerous similar forms.

β. All from plectere, to weave, or from the pp. plexus, woven. Plect-ere is extended from the base PLAK, to weave, appearing in Gk. πλέκ-ειν, to weave, and in Lat. plic-are, to fold. See Ply, Plait.

PLEAD, to urge an excuse or plea. (F., -L.) M. E. pleden. 'Pledours shulde peyren hem to plede for such' = pleaders should take pains to plead for such; P. Plowman, B. vii. 42. [We also find the form pleten, id. vii. 39.] Also plaiden, Owl and Nightingale, 184. -O. F. plaidier, 'to plead, argue, or open a case before a judge, also, to sue, contend, goe to law'; Cot. -O. F. plaid, a plea; see Plea. ¶ The form pleten is due to O. F. plet, an occasional form of plaid which preserves the t of Lat. placitum. Der. plead-er = M. E. pledour, as above, from F. plaidier, 'a lawyer, arguer, pleader,' Cot. Also plead-ing, plead-ing-ly.

PLEASE, to delight, satisfy. (F., -L.) M. E. plesen, P. Plowman, B. xiv. 220; Chaucer, C. T. 11019. -O. F. plesir, plaisir, mod. F. plaire, to please. -Lat. placere, to please. Allied to placare, to appease.

β. Prob. also further allied to Lat. pro-cus, a wooer, prec-ari, to pray; from the notion of granting, favouring. See Pray. Der. pleas-er, pleas-ing, pleas-ing-ly. Also pleas-ant, M. E. pleasant, Wyclif, Heb. x. 8, from O. F. pleasant, pres. part. of plesir, to please. Hence pleas-ant-ly, -ness; also pleas-ant-ry, Walpole, Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 3 (R.), from F. plaisanterie, 'jeasting, merriment,' Cot. And see pleas-ure, plac-able, plac-id, com-plac-ent, dis-please, plea, plead.

PLEASURE, agreeable emotion, gratification. (F., -L.) Formerly plesure, as in The Nut-brown Maid (about A.D. 1500), l. 93; see Spec. of Eng. ed. Skeat, p. 102; but the word is probably older. Also pleasure, Skelton, Phyllyp Sparowe, 1004; id. p. 147. Formed, by the curious change of -ir into -ure, from F. plaisir, pleasure; the same change occurs in lei-ure, whilst in treasure the suffix takes the place of -or. The object seems to have been to give the word an apparent substantival ending.

β. Again, the F. plaisir is merely a substantival use of the O. F. infin. plaisir, to please; just as F. loisir (leisure) is properly an infinitive also. See PLEASE. Der. pleasure, verb, in Tottell's Miscellany, ed. Arber, p. 128, l. 16 of Poem on the Death of Master Deuerox; also pleasure-boat, pleasure-ground; pleasur-able, a coined word; pleasur-ably, pleasur-able-ness.

PLEAT, the same word as PLAIT, q. v.

PLEBEIAN, pertaining to the common people, vulgar. (F., -L.) In Shak. Cor. i. 9. 7; ii. 1. 10; &c. - O. F. plebeien, mod. F. plébéen; omitted by Cotgrave, but in use in the 14th century; Litré. Formed with suffix -en (=Lat. -anus) from Lat. plebeius, plebeian. - Lat. plebs, old stem of plebes, more usually plebs (stem plebi-), the people. β. Ple-bis orig. meant 'a crowd, a multitude,' and is connected with ple-rius, very many, ple-nus, full; from ✓ PAR, to fill. See PLENARY, Full. Der. plebeian, sb.

PLEDGE, a security, surety. (F., -L.) M. E. pledge, a hostage, Trevisa, iii. 129, l. 6; Eng. Gilds, ed. Toulmin Smith, p. 382, l. 26; also, a security, Prompt. Parv. - O. F. plege, 'a pledge, a surety,' Cot.; mod. F. pleige. Connected with O. F. plevir (Burguy), later plevir, 'to warrant, assure,' Cot.; see REPLEVY.

β. Of uncertain etymology; but Diez points out that O. F. plege cannot be from Lat. prædium, nor allied to præs, a surety, because this would not give the v in O. F. plevir. It corresponds rather to a Lat. form *præbium, a thing offered, from præbere (answering to plevir), to offer, proffer, furnish, render, give up. There is a Prov. form plevizó which answers exactly, in form, to Lat. præbitio, a providing, provision. I would add that the Lat. præbere also suits well with the M. E. sense of 'hostage' for pledge, as applied to persons. γ. The Lat. præbere is for præhibere; see PREBEND. Der. pledge, verb, 3 Hen. VI. iii. 3. 250; pledger.

PLEIOCENE, more recent; PLEISTOCENE, most recent. (Gk.) Terms in geology, referring to strata. Coined from Gk. πλείον, more, πλείστον, most; and καινός, recent, new. β. Gk. πλείων, πλείστος are comp. and superl. forms from πλεόν, full; see PLENARY, Full. The origin of καινός is uncertain.

PLENARY, full, complete. (Low Lat., -L.) Spelt plenarie in Minshew, ed. 1627. Englished from Low Lat. plenarius, entire, occurring A.D. 1340 (Ducange); which is extended, with suffix -arius, from Lat. plenus, full. β. Lat. plenus is connected with Gk. πλέων, full, πλήμ-πλημι, I fill; from the base PLA=PAL=✓ PAR, to fill; whence also Full, q. v. Der. pleni-potent-i-ary, q. v., pleni-tude, q. v., plen-ty, q. v. From the same root are com-plete, com-ple-ment, de-plet-ion, ex-plet-ive, im-ple-ment, re-plete, re-plen-ish, sup-ple-ment, sup-ply, ac-com-plish, pleb-ian, plu-ral, people, &c. Also (of Gk. origin) ple-o-nasm, ple-thora, plei-o-cene, pol-ice. Also full, q. v.

PLENIPOTENTIARY, having full powers. (L.) Sometimes used as a sb., but properly an adj., as in 'the plenipotentiary ministers' in Howell, Famil. Letters, b. ii. let. 44, Dec. i. 1643. Coined from Lat. pleni=pleno, crude form of plenus, full; and potenti, crude form of potens, powerful; with suffix -arius. See PLENARY and Potent. ¶ Milton has plenipotent, P. L. x. 404.

PLENITUDE, fulness, abundance. (F., -L.) In Shak. Complaint, 302. - F. plenitude, 'plenitude'; Cot. - Lat. plenitudo, fulness. - Lat. pleni=pleno, crude form of plenus, full; with suffix -tudo. See PLENARY, Plenty.

PLENTY, abundance. (F., -L.) In early use. M. E. plenté, plentee, Ancren Riwle, p. 194, l. 6. - O. F. plente, plentet, later plenté, 'plenty'; Cot. - Lat. plenitatem, acc. of plenitas, fulness. - Lat. pleni, for plenus, full; with suffix -tas. See PLENARY, Plenitude. Der. plente-ous, M. E. plenteus, Rob. of Glouc. p. 23, l. 6, frequently spelt plentivous (= plentivous), Wyclif, Matt. v. 12, i. Thess. iii. 12, from O. F. plentivose (Burguy); this form appears to be made with suffix -ose (=Lat. -osus) from O. F. plentif (Burguy), answering to a Lat. form *plentivus; hence plenteus stands for *plentivus, a form not found. Hence plenteous-ly, -ness. Also plenti-ful, Hamlet, ii. 2. 202; plenti-ful-ly, -ness.

PLEONASM, redundancy of language. (L., -Gk.) Spelt pleonasmie in Minshew, ed. 1627. - Lat. pleonasmus (White). - Gk. πλεονασμός, abundance, pleonasm. - Gk. πλεονάζειν, to abound, lit. to be more. - Gk. πλεόν, neut. of πλεόν, πλείων, more. See PLEIOCENE. Der. pleonast-ic, from Gk. πλεοναστικός, redundant; pleonast-ic-al-ly.

PLETHORA, excessive fulness, esp. of blood. (L., -Gk.) 'Fulness, in greek plethora, in latin plenitudo;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 1. The o is long. A Latinised spelling of Gk. πληθώρα, fulness. - Gk. πλήθ-ος, a throng, crowd; with the suffix -ωρη. β. Gk. πλήθ-ος (like πλήρ-ος, full, and Lat. ple-nus, full) is from the base πλη seen in πλήμ-πλημι, I fill; see PLENARY. Der. plethor-ic.

PLEURISY, inflammation of the pleura, or membrane which covers the lungs. (F., -L., -Gk.) [Quite different from plurisy, q. v.] Spelt pleurisie in Minshew, ed. 1627, and in Cotgrave. - F. pleurésie, 'a pleurisie'; Cot. - Lat. pleuritis, another form of pleuritis. - Gk. πλευρίτις, pleurisy. - Gk. πλευρά, a rib, the side, the 'pleura.' Root uncertain. Der. pleurit-ic, from Gk. πλευριτικός, suffering from pleurisy; pleurit-ic-al. Also pleuro-pneumon-ia, inflammation of the pleura and lungs, from Gk. πνεύμων, a lung; see PNEUMATIC.

PLIABLE, PLIANT, PLIERS; see under PLY.

PLIGHT (1), dangerous condition, condition; also, an engagement, promise. (E.) The proper sense is 'peril'; hence a promise involving peril or risk, a promise given under pain of forfeit, a duty, or solemn engagement for which one has to answer. M. E. pliht, (1) danger, Layamon, 3897; (2) engagement, Story of Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 1269; (3) condition, spelt plite, Chaucer [Addenda]. - A. S. pliht, risk, danger, used to translate Lat. periculum in Ælfric's Colloquy, in the Merchant's second speech. Formed with the substantival suffix -t (Aryan -ta) from the strong verb plidan, to risk, imperil, in Ælfric's tr. of Gregory's Pastoral Care, ed. Sweet, p. 229, l. 20; the pt. t. pleah occurs in the same, p. 37, l. 7. + O. Fries. plicht, peril, risk, care; we also find the short form ple, pli, danger, answering to A. S. plid, danger, in Ælfric, tr. of Gregory, p. 393, l. 9. + O. Du. plicht, 'duty, debt, obligation, administration, office, custom, or use'; Hexham; cf. plegen, 'to be accustomed, to experiment, or trie' [i. e. to risk]; id. + G. pflicht, duty, obligation, faith, allegiance, oath; from the O. H. G. strong verb plegan, to promise or engage to do. ¶ The connection, sometimes asserted, between this word and E. play, seems to me very doubtful. Der. plight, verb, M. E. plizten, plihien, P. Plowman, B. vi. 35, A. S. plihian, weak verb, to imperil, Laws of King Cnut (Secular), § 67, in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, i. 411; plight-er, Antony, iii. 13. 126. [†]

PLIGHT (2), to fold; as sb., a fold. (F., -L.) Shak. has 'plighted cunning,' K. Lear, i. 2. 283; where the quarto editions have pleated. Spenser has 'with many a folded plight;' F. Q. ii. 3. 26; also plight (= plighted) as a pp. meaning 'folded' or 'plaited,' F. Q. ii. 6. 7, vi. 7. 43. β. The word is really misspelt, by confusion with plight (1), and should be plite, without gh. Chaucer has the verb pliten, to fold, Troilus, ii. 697, 1204. It is clearly a mere variant of plait or pleat, though the vowel is difficult to account for. See PLAIT.

'Plinthe, the neather part of a pillars foot, of the forme of a four-square bricke or tile;' Minshew, ed. 1627. Cotgrave gives F. plinthe, 'a plinth,' &c. - Lat. plinthus. - Gk. πλίνθος, a brick or tile, a brick-shaped body, a plinth. Cognate with E. flint, q. v. Cf. Lithuan. plinta, a flint.

PLOD, to trudge on laboriously, labour unintermittingly. (C.) In Shak. Sonnet 50, Merry Wives, i. 3. 91, All's Well, iii. 4. 6. 'The primitive sense of plod is to tramp through the wet, and thence, figuratively, to proceed painfully and laboriously;' Wedgwood. It particularly means to wade through pools; Grose (ed. 1790) has 'Plouding, wading through thick and thin; North.' Jamieson has 'Plout, to splash; Plouter, to make a noise among water, to be engaged in any wet or dirty work; Plouter, sb., the act of foundering through water or mire; Plotch, to dabble, to work slowly.' [He also notes plod, ploud, a green sod.] The M. E. sb. plod (dat. plodde) meant a filthy pool or puddle; 'In a foul plodde in the strete suththe me hym slong' = people then threw him into a foul puddle in the street; Rob. of Glouc. p. 536, l. 6. So also Northern plud, a puddle; E. D. S. Gloss. B. i. - Irish plod, plodan, a pool, standing water, plodach, a puddle; whence plodaim, I float, plodanach, paddling and rowing in water. So also Gael. plod, a clod [accounting for Scot. plod, a green sod], also a pool, standing water, plodan, a small pool; whence plodanach, a paddling in water. Prob. related to PLASH (1), q. v. Der. plodd-er, plodd-ing, plodd-ing-ly.

PLOT (1), a conspiracy, stratagem. (F., -L.) One of the earliest instances of the word seems to be in Spenser, F. Q. vii. 6. 23 (about A.D. 1590); he also has plot as a verb, id. iii. 11. 20. It is hardly possible to assign any other origin for it than by considering it as an abbreviation of complot, used in exactly the same sense, both as a sb. and verb. We have numerous examples of the loss of an initial syllable, as in fence for defence, sport for disport, story for history. The word complot does not appear to be in much earlier use; and further information on this point is desired. Shak. has both plot and complot, and both words are employed by him both as sb. and verb. The sb. complot is in Titus Andronic. ii. 3. 265, v. 1. 65, v. 2. 147; the vb. complot in Rich. II. i. 1. 96. Minshew, ed. 1627, gives complot, but does not recognise plot, except as a ground-plan. - F. complot, 'a complot, conspiracy'; whence comploter, 'to complot, conspire,' Cot. The O. F. complot means (1) crowd, in the 12th century, (2) a battle, (3) a plot. β. Of disputed etymology; but Diez is prob. right in taking it to be the Lat. complicitum, neut. of complicatus, pp. of complicare, to complicate, involve, lit. to fold together. Another form of the pp. is complicatus. See Complicate, Complex.

 ¶ Littre thinks the F. word may be from English, and adduces E. plot in the sense of a plot or plat of ground. There does not seem to be any real connection between plot (1) and plot (2); though it is highly probable that the use of E. plot in the sense of a ground-plan or 'plat-form' (see Minshew) caused confusion, and the shortening of complot to plot. Neither plot (1) nor complot are old words in English, whereas F. complot is found in the 12th century. The very prefix com- indicates a Latin origin. Der. plot, vb., plotter. [†]

PLOT (2), PLAT, a small piece of ground. (E.) The sense of plot and of patch is almost exactly the same, and the words (as shewn under Patch) are closely related. A plot is a patch of ground; and it also meant, in M.E., a spot on a garment. 'Many foule plottes' = many dirty spots (on a garment); P. Plowman, B. xiii. 318. In the Prompt. Parv. p. 405, we are told that plot is the same as plek; and we also find 'Plecke, or plotte, portiuncula.' Way's note adds that 'Pleke is given by Cole, Ray, and Grose as a North-Country word, signifying a place, and is likewise noticed by Tim Bobbin'; and he correctly refers it to A.S. plæc, Matt. vi. 5 (Northumb. version). This plek is a mere variant of plæch, the older form of patch; thus bringing plot and patch into close connection, as above noted. So also 'Plock, a small meadow (Herefordshire)'; E. D. S. Gloss. B. 12. The expression 'plot of flowres faire' occurs in the Flower and the Leaf, l. 499 (15th century).—A.S. plot, a patch of ground; A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, iii. 286, l. 19 (the same passage is in Schmid, Die Gesetze der Angelsachsen, App. XI, l. 5; p. 408, ed. 1858). Cf. Goth. plats, a patch, Mark, ii. 21. ¶ For the spelling plat, see PLAT (1).

PLOUGH, an instrument for turning up the soil. (Scand.) M.E. plouh, plou, plow; Chaucer, C. T. 889; Havelok, 1017. It can scarcely be called an E. word; the traces of it in A.S. are but slight; we find plōh = a plough-land, in A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, iii. 286, l. 19, where is the phrase 'ne plot ne plōh' = neither plot of ground nor plough-land. It is rather Scand. than E., the true A. S. word being sulh.—Icel. plógr, a plough; which also seems to be a borrowed word, the genuine Norse word being arðr; Swed. pløg; Dan. plow. We find also O. Fries. plōch, G. pfug, O. H. G. pfuoc; and it is tolerably certain that the Lithuan. plugas, Russ. pluga, a plough, are borrowed words from the Teutonic. See Grimm, Gram. ii. 414; who has grave doubts as to whether the word is really Teutonic, though early known and widely spread. β. Perhaps of Celtic origin; cf. Gael. plac, a block of wood, stump of a tree, used as the orig. plough; see Plug, Block. γ. Max Müller, Lect. on Language, i. 296 (8th ed.), identifies plough with Skt. plava, Gk. πλοῖον, a boat, from √ PLU, to float: 'As the Aryans spoke of a ship ploughing the sea, they also spoke of a plough sailing across the field.' This sounds too poetical, and does not account for the gh. Der. plough, verb, Cor. iii. 1. 71; plough-er, see Latimer's Sermon on the Ploughers; plough-able; plough-boy; plough-iron, 2 Hen. IV. v. 1. 20; ploughman, M. E. plowman, Chaucer, C. T. 531; plough-share, spelt plowshare in Trevisa, ii. 353, and derived from the verb to shear.

PLOVER, the name of a wading bird. (F.,—L.) M.E. plouer (with u for v), P. Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, 764; Gower, C. A. iii. 33, l. 9; Prompt. Parv.—O. F. pluvier, in the 13th century (Littre), later pluvier, 'a plover'; Cot. Formed as if from a Low Lat. *pluviarius, equivalent to Lat. pluvialis, belonging to rain, because these birds are said to be most seen and caught in a rainy season.—Lat. pluvia, rain.—Lat. pluit, it rains.—√ PLU, to swim; whence also E. Flow, q. v. See Pluvial. ¶ 'We derive it from the F. pluvier, pour ce qu'on le prend mieux en temps pluvieux qu'en nulle autre saison,' Belon, Oyseaux, 260; cited in Pennant, Zoology, vol. ii (R.) Wedgwood remarks that the G. name is regenpfeifer, the rain-piper.

PLUCK, to pull away sharply, to snatch. (E.) M.E. plukken, P. Plowman, B. v. 591; xii. 249; Wyclif, Matt. xii. 1.—A.S. plucian, Matt. xii. 1. + Du. plukken. + Icel. plökka, plukka, perhaps a borrowed word. + Dan. plukke. + Swed. plukka. + G. pfücken. β. This is one of the five words beginning with p which Fick admits as being truly Teutonic; he gives the base as PLUK; iii. 167. The resemblance to Ital. piccioccare, to pick grapes, is remarkable, but is a mere coincidence; it is impossible that a word found in A. S. can be derived from Italian, and it is unlikely that there was such a form in early Low Latin. Der. pluck, sb., a butcher's term for the heart, liver, and lights of an animal, prob. because they are plucked out after killing it; Skinner, ed. 1671, has 'pluck, a sheep's pluck, i. e. cor animalis,' an animal's heart. Hence pluck in the sense of 'spirit, courage,' whence the adj. plucky. Cf. the phrase 'pluck up thy spirits,' Tam. Shrew, iv. 3. 38; 'pluck up, my heart; Much Ado, v. 1. 207.

PLUG, a block or peg used to stop a hole. (Du.,—C.) Skinner, ed. 1671, has 'a plug, or spug;' but that the initial s is a true part of the word may be doubted. The word is also in Hexham, ed. 1658, and was probably borrowed from Dutch.—O. Du. plugge, 'a plugge, or a wooden pegg'; also pluggen, 'to plugge, or pegge'; Hexham. Mod. Du. plug, a peg, bung. We find also Swed. plugg, a plug, Dan. pløk, a peg, G. pflock, a wooden nail, plug, peg, pin. β. The word is not Teutonic, and was doubtless borrowed from Celtic. The original word appears in Irish plóc, plue, a plug, stopper, bung; Gael. plóc, a club, bludgeon, head of a pin, block of wood, stump of a tree, plug, bung, block or pully, hump, plue, a lump, knot, bunch, bung; W. plóc, a block, plug. See further under Block; and see Bludgeon. Der. plug, verb. Doublet, block.

PLUM, the name of a fruit. (L.,—Gk.) M.E. ploume, plowme, Prompt. Parv. 'Piries and plowtrees' = pear-trees and plum-trees, P. Plowman, B. v. 16.—A.S. plūme, Ælfric's Grammar, 6 (Bosworth); cf. plūm-slā, lit. plum-sloe, plūm-trēow, plum-tree, in Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Arborum. Here plūm-slā translates Lat. prunulus, and plūm-trēow translates prunus. β. The A.S. plūme is a mere variation of Lat. prunum, a plum, with change of r to l, and of n to m. The change from r to l is very common, and hardly needs illustration; the Span. coronel = E. colonel. The change from n to m is not unfrequent, as in lime-tree for line-tree, venom for Lat. venenum, velum from F. velin, megrin from F. migraine. Thus plum is a doublet of prune; see Prune, which is of Gk. origin. The Swed. plommon, Dan. blomme, G. pfäume, are all alike borrowed from Lat. prunum. Der. plum-tree, as above; plum-cake, plum-pudding. Doublet, prune (2).

PLUMAGE, the whole feathers of a bird. (F.,—L.) 'Pruning his plumage, cleansing every quill'; Drayton, Noah's Flood (R.).—F. plumage, 'feathers'; Cot.—F. plume, a feather; see Plume. [†]

PLUMB, a mass of lead, hung on a string, to shew a perpendicular direction. (F.,—L.) 'Plumbe of lead [lead], Plumbum'; Prompt. Parv. The older spelling is plomb, shortened to plom in the comp. plomrule, a plumb-rule, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, ed. Skeat, pt. ii. § 38, l. 6.—F. plomb, 'lead, also, a carpenter's plummet or plumb-line'; Cot.—Lat. plumbum, lead. β. Probably cognate with Gk. μόλυβδος, μόλυβδος, lead; Russ. olovo, pewter; and O. H. G. plī (stem plīnā), G. blei, lead; apparently from a stem-form MLUWA; see Curtius, i. 462. Der. plumb, verb, to sound the depth of water with a plumb-line, from F. plomber, 'to sound,' Cot.; plumb-line, plumb-rule, used by Cot. to translate F. plombat; plumb-er, also spelt plumber, as by Cot. to tr. F. plombier; plumb-er-y, i. e. plumber's shop, Bp. Hall, Satires, Bk. v. sat. 1, l. 5 from end. Also plumb-e-an, plumb-e-ous, leaden, both formed from Lat. plumbus, leaden. Also plumb-ago, q. v.; plumm-et, q. v.; plump (2), plunge.

PLUMBAGO, black lead. (L.) A mineral resembling lead, but really different from it. In Ash's Dict., ed. 1777, but only as a botanical term, 'lead-wort'.—Lat. plumbago, a kind of leaden ore; black lead.—Lat. plumbum, lead. Cf. lumb-ago from Lat. lumbus. See Plumb.

PLUME, a feather. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Cor. iii. 3. 126.—F. plume, 'a feather, plume of feathers'; Cot.—Lat. pluma, a small soft feather, piece of down. β. Prob. so called from its floating in the air; cf. G. pfume, down.—√ PLU, to float, sail, flow, Curtius, i. 317; see Flow, Floater. Der. plume, verb, esp. in pp. plumed, K. Lear, iv. 2. 57, Oth. iii. 3. 349; plum-ose; also plum-age, q. v.

PLUMMET, a leaden weight, a plumb-line. (F.,—L.) M.E. plommet, Wyclif, Deeds [Acts], xxvii. 28.—F. plommet, 'a plummet,' Cot. Dimin. of plomb, lead; it thus means 'a small piece of lead.' See Plumb.

PLUMP (1), full, round, fleshy. (E. or O. Low G.) 'Plump Jack,' 1 Hen. IV. ii. 4. 527; 'plumpy Bacchus,' Antony, ii. 7. 121. M.E. plomp, rude, clownish (as in Dutch), Caxton, tr. of Reynard the Fox, ed. Arber, p. 100, l. 12. The word is in rather early use as a sb., meaning 'a cluster, a clump,' applied either to a compact body of men, or to a clump of trees. 'Presede into the plumpe' = he pressed into the throng; Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 2199. Though it cannot be traced much further back, the word may be E., as the radical verb is preserved in the prov. E. plim, to swell, given as an Exmoor word by Grose, but somewhat widely known, and still in use in Oxfordshire and elsewhere. β. Hence plump means orig. 'swollen,' and since that which is swollen becomes tight and firm, we find plump further used in the sense of 'hard'; as, 'the ways are plump' = the roads are hard (Kent); E. D. S. Gloss. B. 11; C. 5. In Oxfordshire, the word plim is also used as an adj., in the sense of plump. The word appears in most Teutonic tongues. Cf. 'Plump, to swell'; Nares, ed. Halliwell. + O. Du. plomp, 'rude, clownish, blockish, or dull'; Hexham. This is a metaphorical use, from the notion of thickness. + Swed. plump, clownish, coarse. + Dan. plump, clumsy, vulgar. + G. plump, heavy, clumsy, blunt. Der. plumpy-ly, plump-ness. Also plump-er, a vote given at elections, when a man who has a vote for two separate candidates gives a single vote to one, thus swelling out that candidate's number of votes as compared with the rest; see Todd's

Johnson. Also plump-y, as above. Also plump, sb., a cluster, as above; plump or plump out, verb, to swell out.

PLUMP (2), straight downward. (F., -L.) Formerly also plumb. 'Plumb down he falls,' Milton, P. L. ii. 933; cf. 'Which thou hast perpendicularly fell,' K. Lear, iv. 6. 54. 'They do not fall plumb down, but decline a little from the perpendicular;' Bentley, Sermon 2 (Todd). Johnson notes that it is sometimes pronounced ignorantly [and commonly] plump. Johnson also gives plump, verb, 'to fall like a stone into the water; a word formed from the sound, or rather corrupted from plumb.' Cf. 'It will give you a notion how Dulcissa plumps into a chair;' Spectator, no. 492.

β. However expressive the word may seem, a careful examination of its history will tend to shew that it is really a peculiar use of plumb, and derived from F. plomb, Lat. plumbum, lead. 'To fall like lead' must have been a favourite metaphor from the earliest times, and Diez shews, in his article on Ital. piombare, to fall like lead, that this metaphor is widely spread in the Romance languages. Cf. Ital. cadere a piombo, to fall plumb, lit. like lead; F. à plomb, 'downright;' à plomb sur, 'direct, or downright;' Cot. We even find it in M. E.; 'Hy plumten doune, as a doppe' = they dived straight down, like a diving-bird; K. Alisaunder, 5776.

γ. We also find Du. plomp, interj., plump, plompen, to plunge; Dan. plumpe, to plump, to souse; Swed. plumpa, to plump, to fall; G. plumpen, to fall plump. All of these may be suspected to owe their peculiar form to the Lat. plumbum, though easily supposed to be imitative. The word tends also to confusion with PLUMP (1), from which I believe it to be wholly distinct. See further under PLUNGE. Der. plump, verb, as above.

PLUNDER, to rob, pillage. (G.) A note in Johnson's Dict. (ed. Todd) says that 'Fuller considers the word as introduced into the language about 1642.' R. gives a quotation for it from Prynne, Treachery and Disloyalty, pt. iv. pp. 28, 29 (not dated, but after A.D. 1642, as it refers to the civil war). He also cites a quotation dated 1642, and this may be taken to be nearly the exact date when the word was borrowed. Hexham, in his Du. Dict., ed. 1658, gives O. Du. plunderen, plonderen, 'to plunder, or to pillage;' the mod. Du. spelling is plunderen. It is one of the very few G. words in English, and seems to have been introduced directly rather than through the Dutch. - G. plündern, to plunder, pillage, sack, ransack; provincially, to remove with one's baggage. Derived from the G. sb. plunder, trumpery, trash, baggage, lumber; the E. keeping the vowel of the sb.

β. Connected with Low G. plunnen, formerly also plunden, rags; Bremen Wörterbuch. The orig. sense of the sb. was 'rags,' hence, worthless household stuff; the verb meant, accordingly, to strip a household even of its least valuable contents. The Dan. plyndre, Swed. plundra, Du. plunderen, are all alike borrowed from the G. or Low G.

¶ See Trench, Eng. Past and Present. He says that 'plunder was brought back from Germany about the beginning of our Civil Wars, by the soldiers who had served under Gustavus Adolphus and his captains.' And again, 'on plunder, there are two instructive passages in Fuller's Church History, b. xi. § 4, 33; and b. ix. § 4; and one in Heylin's Animadversions thereupon, p. 196.' Der. plunder, sb., which seems to be a later word in E., though really the original word; plunder-er.

PLUNGE, to cast or fall suddenly into water or other liquid. (F., -L.) M. E. ploungen; 'and wenen [imagine] that it be ryght blisful thyng to ploungen hem in uoluptuous delit;' Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 2, l. 1784. - F. plonger, 'to plunge, dive, duck;' Cot. Formed from a Low Lat. *plumbicare, not found, but the existence of which is verified by the Picard plonger, to plunge, dive, due to the same Low Lat. form; see Diez, s.v. piombare.

β. Thus plonger is a frequentative of plomber, to cover with lead, to sound the depth of water; from F. plomb, lead; see PLUMB. Cf. Ital. piombare, 'to throw, to hurle, . . . to fall headlong as a plummet of lead;' Florio. See also PLUMP (2). Der. plunge, sb., plunger, plung-ing.

PLUPERFECT, the name of a tense in grammar. (L.) In the Grammar prefixed to Cotgrave's F. Dict. will be found the expression 'the præterpluperfect tense;' he gives 'J'avoies esté, I had been' as an example. The E. word is a curious corruption of the Lat. name for the tense, viz. plusquamperfectum. We have dropped the syllable quam, and given to plus the F. pronunciation. - Lat. plus, more; quam, than; and perfectum, perfect. See PLURAL and PERFECT.

PLURAL, containing or expressing more than one. (F., -L.) A term in grammar. In Shak. Merry Wives, iv. 1. 59. M. E. plural; 'be plural nombre;' Trevisa, ii. 171, l. 25; plurel, id. ii. 173, l. 11. - O. F. plurel (12th century, Littré); mod. F. pluriel. - Lat. pluralis, plural; because expressive of 'more' than one. - Lat. plur-, stem of plus, more, anciently spelt plous. Connected with Gk. πλε-ος, full, πλεον, more; from the base PLA = PAL, from PAR, to fill; see PLENARY, FULL. Der. plural-ly, plural-ist, plural-ism. Also plural-i-ty, M. E. pluralite, P. Plowman, C. iv. 33, from F. pluralité, 'plurality, or moreness,' Cot., which from Lat. acc. pluralitatem. And see PLURISY.

PLURISY, superabundance. (L.; misformed.) Shak. has plurisy to express 'plethora,' Hamlet, iv. 7. 118. So also in Massinger, The Picture, iv. 2 (Sophia): 'A plurisy of ill blood you must let out.' And in The Two Noble Kinsmen, v. 1. 66; and in Ford, Fancies Chaste and Noble: 'Into a plurisy of faithless impudence.' Evidently formed as if from Lat. pluri-, crude form of plus, more; by an extraordinary confusion with PLEURISY, q. v.

PLUSH, a variety of cloth-like velvet. (F., -L.) 'Waistcoats of silk plush laying by;' Chapman, tr. of Homer's Iliad, b. xxiv, l. 576. And in Cotgrave. - F. peluche, 'shag, plush;' Cot. [Thus the E. has dropped e; the word should be pelush.] Cf. Span. pelusa, down on fruit, nap on cloth; Ital. peluzzo, fine hair, soft down. All from a Low Lat. form *pilucius, hairy (not found); from Lat. pilus, hair. See PERUKE. ¶ The Du. pluis, fluff, plush, G. plüsch, are mere borrowings from French.

PLUVIAL, rainy. (F., -L.) Little used. 'Pluviall, rainie;' Minshew, ed. 1627. - F. pluvial, 'rainy;' Cot. - Lat. pluvialis, rainy. - Lat. pluvia, rain. - Lat. plu-it, it rains. - PLU, to float, swim, flow; see FLOW. Der. We also find pluviosus, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. v. c. 24, part 4, Englished from Lat. pluvius, rainy. And see POWDER.

PLY, to bend, work at steadily, urge. (F., -L.) M. E. plien, to bend, Chaucer, C. T. 9045; to mould, as wax, id. 9304. Since moulding wax, &c. requires constant and continued application of the fingers, we hence get the metaphor of toiling at; hence, to ply a task, to ply an oar. - F. plier, 'to fold, plait, ply, bend, bow, turn;' Cot. - Lat. plicare, to fold. + Gk. πλέκω, to weave. + Russ. plesti, to plait, wind. + G. flechten, strong verb, to braid, plait, twist, entwine; whence prob. G. flacks, flax, cognate with E. flax.

β. All from PLAK, to weave, plait; Fick, i. 681. Der. pli-able, spelt plyable in Fabyan's Chron. b. i. c. 147, ed. Ellis, p. 133, l. 31, from F. pliable, 'pliable;' Cot.; pliable-ly, pliability, pliable-ness; pli-ant, Oth. i. 3. 151, from F. pliant, pres. part. of plier; pliant-ly, pliant-ness or pliant-y; plier-ers or ply-ers, pincers for bending wire. From Lat. plicare we also have ap-ply, im-ply; accom-plice, ap-plic-at-ion, com-plic-ate, com-plex, ex-plic-ate, ex-plic-it, im-plic-ate, im-plic-it, in-ex-plic-able, per-plex; also de-ploy, dis-play, em-ploy. Also sim-ple, sim-plic-ity, sim-plic-ly; double, du-plic-ity, du-plic-ate; tri-ple, tri-plet, tre-ble; quadru-ple, multi-ple, multi-ply, &c. Also plag-iary, plait, pleach, plot (1). And see flax.

PNEUMATIC, relating to air. (L., -Gk.) Bacon speaks of 'pneumaticall substance in some bodies;' Nat. Hist. § 842. - Lat. pneumaticus. - Gk. πνευματικός, belonging to wind, breath, or air. - Gk. πνευματ-, stem of πνέω, wind, air. - Gk. πνέω, to blow, breathe; put for πνέω (base πνυ-). Cf. O. H. G. fnēhan, to breathe hard; Curtius, i. 348. And see NEESING. Der. pneumatic-al, -al-ly; pneumatic-s. And see pneumonia.

PNEUMONIA, inflammation of the lungs. (Gk.) Modern. Todd adds to Johnson only the word 'pneumonicks, medicines for diseases of the lungs;' but omits pneumonia. The o is short. - Gk. pneumonia, a disease of the lungs. - Gk. πνευμον-, stem of πνέω (also πλέω), a lung. - Gk. πνέω, to breathe. See PNEUMATIC and PULMONARY. Der. pneumon-ic.

POACH (1), to dress eggs. (F., -O. Low G.?) Formerly poche. 'Egges well poched are better than roasted. They be moste hole-some when they be poched;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 13. Spelt poich in Palsgrave; Levins; Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 53; and in Cotgrave. - F. pocher; Cotgrave gives 'Poché, poched, thrust or digged out with the fingers; œuf poché, a poched egge.'

β. The real origin of F. pocher in this particular sense is much disputed. I do not think we can derive the F. word from E. poke, verb, which is what Wedgwood's suggestion amounts to; see POKE (2). Littré unhesitatingly derives pocher from F. poché, a pouch, pocket; but this does not explain Cotgrave's expression 'thrust, or digged out.' Indeed, he goes on to point out that two verbs have been confused. There is (1) F. pocher, from poché; and (2) F. pocher, poucher (both forms are in Cotgrave), 'to thrust or dig out with the fingers,' which rests upon pouce, the thumb. What was the orig. sense of 'a poached egg' is a matter of dispute. It can hardly be an egg of which the inside is 'dug out' by the fingers or by the thumb; nor does 'poked egg' give any satisfactory sense. Scheler explains it very differently; he thinks that 'a poached egg' means 'eggs dressed in such a manner as to keep the yolk in a rounded form,' and that the sense rests upon that of 'pouch.' In this view, it is, in fact, 'a pouched egg.' I would explain it still more simply by supposing that the egg is likened to a pouch, because the art is to dress it in such a way as not to let the yolk escape. I incline, therefore, to Scheler's view, that pocher is here derived from poché, a pouch. See POUCH, POKE (1).

POACH (2), to intrude on another's preserves, for the purpose of stealing game. (F., -O. Low G.?) 'His greatest fault is, he hunts too much in the purlieus.' 'Would he would leave off poaching!'

Beaum. and Fletcher, Philaster, iv. 1 (Thrasiline). — F. pocher; 'pocher le labour d'autrui, to poch into, or inchoach upon, another man's imploiment, practise, or trade;' Cot. β. Just as in the case of POACH (1), there is great difficulty in assigning the right sense to F. pocher. Cotgrave gives it only as meaning 'to thrust, or dig at with the fingers,' in which sense it is also spelt poucher, and rests upon pouce, the thumb; see Littré. But Littré also assigns as an old sense of the verb, 'to put in a poke, sack, or pouch' (and certainly pocher le labour looks as if we may translate it 'to pocket the labour'); he also cites the Norman poquer, to carry fruits in one's pocket.

γ. If we give the verb the sense adduced by Cotgrave, we may derive it from pouce = Lat. pollicem, acc. of pollex, the thumb. δ. It seems simpler to derive it directly from pocher, the pocket, in which case pocher may mean either to put into one's own pocket, or, possibly, to put one's hand in the pocket of another. See Pouch. And see Poke (1), Poke (2), for further discussion of these words. Der. poach-er.

POCK, a small pustule. (E.; perhaps C.) We generally speak of 'the small pox'; but the spelling pox is absurd, since it stands for pocks, the pl. of pock, a word seldom used in the singular. We might as well write sow as the pl. of sock; indeed, I have seen that spelling used for abbreviation. The word pock is best preserved in the adj. pocky, Hamlet, v. 1. 181. The term small pox in Beaum. and Fletcher, Fair Maid of the Inn, ii. 2 (Clown), is spelt pocks in the old edition, according to Richardson. Cotgrave explains F. morbille by 'the small pox,' but in Sherwood's Index it is 'the small pockes;' and in fact, the spelling pocks is extremely common. The pl. was once dissyllabic. Fabian has: 'he was vysyted with the sykenesse of pockys;' vol. ii. an. 1363, ed. Ellis, p. 653. M. E. pokke, pl. pokkes, P. Plowman, B. xx. 97. — A. S. poc, a pustule. 'Gif poc sy on eāgan' = if there be a pustule on the eye, in a MS., foll. 142, 152, described by Wanley in his Catalogue of A. S. MSS., p. 304. So also 'wip poc-dāle' = for pock-disease, meaning small pox, A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, ii. 104, l. 14. There is an accent over the o in the MS., both here and in ll. 22, 23 (same page), but it is omitted in ll. 19, 24. + Du. pok, a pock. + G. pocke, a pock. Perhaps related to Poke (1), with the notion of 'bag;' and prob. ultimately of Celtic origin. Cf. Irish pucoid, a pustule, pucadh, a swelling up, Gael. pucaid, a pimple. Der. pox (= pocks); pock-y.

POCKET, a small pouch. (F., — O Low G. or C.) M. E. poket, Prompt. Parv. 'Sered pokets' = small waxed bags; Chaucer, C. T. 16270. From a dialectal form of F. pochette, probably Norman. Métiévier gives the modern Guernsey form as pouquette, dimin. of pouque, a sack or pouch; the older spellings would be poquette and poque. He cites a Norman proverb: 'Quant il pleut le jour Saint Marc, Il ne faut ni pouque ni sac' = when it rains on St. Mark's day (April 25), one wants neither poke nor bag. It is therefore a dimin. of O. Norman poque, Parisian F. pocher. — O. Du. poke, a bag, Hexham; see Pouch, Poke (1). Der. pocket, verb, Temp. ii. 1. 67; pocket-book, pocket-money.

POD, a husk, a covering of the seed of plants. (Scand. ? or C. ?) In speaking of the furniture necessary for a cart, Tusser enumerates 'cart-ladder, and wimble, with percer, and pod;' Husbandry, ed. for E. D. S., § 17, st. 6, p. 36. Pod was explained by Mavor to mean 'a box or old leather bottle nailed to the side of the cart to hold necessary implements, and perhaps grease.' The orig. sense was merely 'bag'; and the word is the same with pad, a cushion, i. e. a stuffed bag, and related to pudding, of which the old meaning was 'sausage,' i. e. stuffed skin. β. The nearest word, in form, is Dan. pude, a cushion, pillow, Swed. dial. pude (also puda, puta), a cushion (Rietz). The word is of Celtic origin, and may have been taken from Celtic directly; cf. Gael. put, a large buoy, commonly made of an inflated sheep-skin. From the root PUT, to bulge out, be inflated, discussed under Pudding, q. v. γ. The peculiar use of pod to mean 'the husk' may have resulted from confusion with the old word cod, a husk. Thus what we now call a pea-pod is called peascod in Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 1. 191; &c. See Cod (2).

POEM, a composition in verse. (F., — L., — Gk.) In Hamlet, ii. 2. 419. — F. poème, 'a poeme;' Cot. — Lat. poema. — Gk. ποίημα, a work, piece of workmanship, composition, poem. — Gk. ποίησις, to make; see Poet.

POESY, poetry, a poem. (F., — L., — Gk.) M. E. poesis, Gower, C. A. ii. 36, l. 20. — F. poésie, 'poesie, poetry;' Cot. — Lat. poësis, acc. of poësis, poetry. — Gk. ποίησις, a making, poetic faculty, poem. — Gk. ποίησις, to make; see Poet. Der. Hence 'a posy on a ring,' Hamlet, iii. 2. 162, because such mottoes were commonly in verse; see examples in Chambers, Book of Days, i. 221. Posy stands for poesy, by contraction. See Posy.

POET, a composer in verse. (F., — L., — Gk.) M. E. poete, Wy-clif, Deeds [Acts], xvii. 28; Gower, C. A. iii. 374, note, l. 2. — F. poète, 'a poet, maker;' Cot. — Lat. poeta. — Gk. ποιητής, a maker, composer, versifier; formed with suffix -της (Aryan -ta) denoting the agent, from ποιέω, to make. Root uncertain. Der. poet-ic, Gk. ποιητικός; poetic-al, As You Like It, iii. 3. 16; poetic-al-ly; poet-iss, a coined word. 'Also poet-aster, in Ben Jonson, as the name of a drama, answering to a Lat. form *poetaster, formed from poet-a with the double suffix -as-ter (Aryan -as-tar), with which cf. O. F. poë-astre, 'an ignorant poet,' Cot. Also poet-ess, North's Plutarch, pt. ii. p. 25 (R.), formed with F. suffix -ess(e) = Lat. -issa = Gk. -ισσα. Also poet-ry, M. E. poetrye, Prompt Parv., from O. F. poëterie, 'poetry,' Cot. From the same Gk. verb, onomato-pœia, pharmaco-pœia.

POIGNANT, stinging, sharp, pungent. (F., — L.) M. E. poignant, Chaucer, C. T. Pers. Tale, Group I, 130; now conformed to the F. spelling. — F. poignant, 'pricking, stinging,' Cot.; pres. part. of F. poindre, to prick. — Lat. pungere (pt. t. pu-pug-i); to prick; base PUG. See Pungent, Point. Der. poignant-ly, poignancy. Doublet, pungent.

POINT, a sharp end, prick, small mark, &c. (F., — L.) M. E. point, Ancren Riwe, p. 178, l. 7. — F. point (pointet in Cotgrave), 'a point, a prick, a centre;' Cot. — Lat. punctum, a point; orig. neut. of pp. of pungere, to prick, pt. t. pu-pugi, from base PUG or PUK, to prick. See Pungent. Der. point, verb, M. E. pointen, P. Plowman, C. ix. 298; point-ed, point-ed-ly, point-ed-ness; point-er, a dog that points; point-ers, pl., the stars that point to the pole, Greene, Looking-glass for London, ed. Dyce, ii. 94; point-ing; point-less; point-s-man, a man who attends to the points on a railway. Also point-device, L. L. L. v. 1. 21, a shortened form of the older phrase at point device = with great nicety or exactitude, as: 'With limmes [limbs] wrought at point device;' Rom. of the Rose, l. 830; a translation of O. F. à point devis, according to a point [of exactitude] that is devised or imagined, i. e. in the best way imaginable. Also point-blank, with a certain aim, so as not to miss the centre, which was a blank or white spot in the old butts at which archers aimed, Merry Wives, iii. 2. 34.

POISE, to balance, weigh. (F., — L.) M. E. poisen, poisen, to weigh, P. Plowman, B. v. 217 (and various readings). — O. F. poiser, poiser (Burguy), later peser, 'to poise, poise, weigh;' Cot. [Cf. O. F. pois, peis, a weight; now spelt poids, by confusion with Lat. pensus, from which it is not derived.] — Lat. pensare, to weigh, weigh out. — Lat. pensum, a portion weighed out as a task for spinners, a task; Low Lat. pensum, pensa, a portion, a weight. — Lat. pensus, pp. of pendere, to weigh, weigh out; allied to pendere, to hang; see Pendent, Pensive. Der. poise, sb., used in the sense of weight, Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. end of c. 33. Also avoir-du-pois, q. v.

POISON, a deadly draught. (F., — L.) Merely 'a potion;' the bad sense is unoriginal. In early use; spelt payson, Rob. of Glouc. p. 122, l. 19; puisun, Hali Meidenhad, ed. Cockayne, p. 33, l. 16. — F. poison, 'poison;' Cot. — Lat. poisonem, acc. of potio, a drink, draught, esp. a poisonous draught. — Lat. potare, to drink; potus, drunken. β. Potus is formed with suffix -tu- (Aryan -ta) from ✓PA, to drink; cf. Skt. pā, to drink. Der. poison, verb, M. E. poisonen, K. Alisaunder, 600; poison-er, poison-ous, poison-ous-ly, -ness. Doublet, potion.

POITREL, PEITREL, armour for the breast of a horse. (F., — L.) Obsolete. Also spelt petrel; peutrel in Levins. M. E. petrel, Chaucer, C. T. 16032. — O. F. poitral, poictrai, poictrail, 'a petrel for a horse;' Cot. — Lat. pectoralis, belonging to the breast; neut. of pectoralis. See Pectoral.

POKE (1), a bag, pouch. (C.) 'Two pigges in a poke' = two pigs in a bag, Chaucer, C. T. 4276; Havelok, 555. — Irish poc, a bag; Gael. poca, a bag. β. That the word is really Celtic appears from this, that a Celtic c would be represented in A. S. by the guttural k, as in the case of Irish cead = A. S. hund, a hundred; so the A. S. form would be poha. We find poha vel posa as a gloss to peram in the Northumbrian gloss to St. Mark, vi. 8, in the Lindisfarne MS., and pohka vel posa in the Rushworth MS.; the form poca given in Bosworth being due to a misreading. Pohka also occurs in the Glossary to Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms. γ. We find also Icel. poki, a bag, O. Du. poke, 'a poke, sack,' Hexham, perhaps borrowed from Celtic; also the related Goth. puggs (= pungs), a bag, Luke, x. 4; Icel. pungr, a pouch, A. S. pung, a purse, pouch. δ. Perhaps connected with Lat. bucca, the inflated cheek; so that the orig. sense was 'that which is blown out, or inflated;' just as bag is connected with the verb to bulge. Cf. Gael. poc, to become like a bag. See Pock. Cf. Fick, iii. 167. Der. pock-et. Doublet, pouch.

POKE (2), to thrust or push, esp. with something pointed. (C.) M. E. poken, Chaucer, C. T. 4167; pukken, P. Plowman, B. v. 620, 643. [Not in A. S.] Of Celtic origin. — Irish poc, a blow, a kick; Corn. poc, a push, shove; Gael. puc, to push, jostle; whence also G. pochen, to knock. A collateral form appears in W. puwio, to push, to poke; whence prov. E. pote, to push, kick, thrust with the feet, North of England (Halliwell). Cf. Gael. put, to push, thrust. See Put. β. From the same Celtic source is O. Du. poke, a dagger, lit. 'a thruster', Hexham. — ✓ PUK, to thrust, prick, whence also Lat. pungere, to prick; see Pungent. Der. poke, sb., pok-er; and see puck-er.

POLE (1), a stake, long thick rod. (L.) M. E. pole, P. Plowman, B. xviii. 52. The E. long o presupposes an A. S. ā, as in stone from A. S. stān, &c. Thus pole = A. S. pāl. We find 'Palus, pal' in Wright's Vocab. i. 84, last line; where pal must receive an accent, and be written pāl. Merely a borrowed word, from Lat. pālus, a stake. Cf. W. pawl, a pole. See Pale (1). ¶ Similarly the G. pfahl, M. H. G. pfül, a stake, is merely borrowed from the Latin. Doublets, pale (1), pawl.

POLE (2), a pivot, axis, end of the axis of the earth. (F., — L., — Gk.) 'The north pole'; L. L. L. v. 2. 699. M. E. pol, Chaucer, on the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 14. l. 6. — F. pol, 'a pole; pol artique, the north pole; Cot. — Lat. polum, acc. of polus, a pole. — Gk. πόλος, a pivot, hinge, axis, pole. — Gk. πέλειν, to be in motion; the poles being the points of the axis round which motion takes place. Allied, by the usual substitution of initial p for κ, to κίλωμαι, κέλλω, I urge on, Lat. -cellere in percellere. — ✓ KAR, later KAL, to go, to drive. See Celerity. Der. pol-ar, Milton, P. L. v. 269, from Lat. polaris; hence polar-i-ty, polar-ise, polar-is-at-ion.

POLE-AXE, a kind of axe; see under Poll.

POLE-CAT, a kind of weasel, which emits a disagreeable odour. (Unknown). M. E. polcat, Chaucer, C. T. 12789. For the latter syllable, see Cat. But the sense of pole, M. E. pol, is unknown. The proposed etymologies are, (1) a Polish cat (Mahn); this seems very improbable, as the word is in Chaucer. (2) A cat that goes after poultry, from F. poule, a hen; this is contradicted by the vowel. (3) From O. F. puilent, stinking (Wedgwood); but this word is merely from the Lat. purulentus, and the syllable pul- alone (= Lat. purul-) would be unmeaning; besides which, this again gives the wrong vowel. (4) I shall add a possible guess, that it may be pool-cat, i. e. cat living in a hole or burrow, since the Irish poll, Gael. poll, Corn. pol, mean 'a hole' or 'pit' as well as a pool. [†]

POLEMICAL, warlike, controversial. (Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Formed with suffix -al (= Lat. -alis) from Gk. πολεμικός, warlike. — Gk. πόλεμος, war. β. Formed with suffix -ε-μος (like αν-ε-μος = Lat. an-i-mus) from πολ- = παλ- = παρ-. — ✓ PAR, to strike, fight; appearing in Zend par, to fight (Curtius, i. 345), Lithuan. per-ti, to strike; cf. Russ. prate, to resist. Perhaps to the same root belong Gk. πέλ-ευν, a battle-axe, Skt. paraçin, a hatchet. Der. polemic-al-ly; also polemic-s, from Gk. πολεμικ-ός.

POLICE, the regulation of a country with respect to the preservation of order; hence, the civil officers for preserving order. (F., — L., — Gk.) The expression the police is short for the police-force, i. e. the force required for maintaining police, or public order. The sb. is in Todd's Johnson; but we already find the expression 'so well a policed [regulated] kingdom' in Howell, Instructions for Foreign Travel, ed. Arber, p. 78, last line but one; A. D. 1642. — F. police, 'policy, politick regiment, civil government'; Cot. — Lat. politia. — Gk. πολιτεία, citizenship, polity, condition of a state. — Gk. πολίτης, a citizen. — Gk. πολις, crude form of πόλις, a city; with suffix -της (Aryan -ta). β. The orig. sense of πόλις was 'a crowd, throng'; hence, a community; 'the Skt. puri [a town] for pār = Gk. πόλις comes undoubtedly from the root PAR, to fill (Gk. πείλ, πείν), and denoted originally the idea of fulness, of a crowd, a throng, from which, later, the idea "town" is developed even without this physical conception; Curtius, i. 102. With Skt. puri cf. Indian -poor in Bhuri-poor, Futteh-poor, &c. And see Folk, Full. Der. polic-y, M. E. policie, Chaucer, C. T. 12534, answering to O. F. policie (= Lat. politia), an older form of F. police. Also polity, in Hooker, Eccl. Polity, from Lat. politia; politi-c, spelt politick in Minshew, from Lat. politicus, Gk. πολιτικός; politi-c-ly; politick-s, spelt politickes in Minshew; politi-c-al, Minshew; politi-c-al-ly; polit-ic-i-an, used as adj. in Milton, Samson, 1195. And see acro-polis, metro-polis, cosmo-polite.

POLICY, a warrant for money in the public funds, a writing containing a contract of insurance. (F., — Low Lat., — Gk.) Quite distinct from policy as connected with Police, q. v. 'A policy of insurance is a contract between A and B; Blackstone. And see Phillips' Dict., ed. 1706. The form is prob. due to confusion with policy in the other sense, or the final syllable may have been due to the Span. or Ital. form. — F. police, a policy; police d'assurance, policy of insurance; Hamilton. Cf. Span. poliza, a written order to receive a sum of money; poliza de seguro, a policy of insurance; Ital. polizza, a bill, ticket, invoice. — Late Lat. politicum, poleticum, polecticum, various corruptions of polyptychum, a register, a roll in which deeds were registered, a word of common occurrence; Ducange. — Gk. πολύπτυχον, a piece of writing folded into many leaves; hence, a long register or roll; orig. neut. of πολύπτυχος, having many folds, much folded. — Gk. πολύ, neut. of πολύς, much; and πτυχο-, crude form of πτύξ, a fold, leaf, layer, connected with πτύσσειν (= πτύε-yein), to fold, double up; and with πυκνός, close, compact. These words go back to a base pus, to make firm, whence prob. also Lat. pugnus and E. fist; Curtius, ii. 105. Cf. Diptych. [†]

POLISH, to make smooth, glossy, or elegant. (F., — L.) M. E. polischen, Chaucer, C. T. 9456; sometimes contracted to polischen, as in P. Plowman, B. v. 482. 'A marble stone polished;' Caxton, Reynard the Fox, ed. Arber, p. 11. — F. poliss-, stem of polissant, pres. part. of polir, to polish. — Lat. polire, to polish. β. Here polire prob. = po-lire, where po- is a prefix, supposed to be related to the prefix pro-, before, and to Gk. πρός, towards; whilst -lire is related to linere, to smear, and to litera, a letter; see Letter, Liniment. Thus polire = to smear upon, make glossy. Der. polish-er; also polite, in Phillips, ed. 1706, from Lat. politus, pp. of polire; polite-ly, polite-ness.

POLKA, a dance. (Bohemian?) Said to have been first danced by a Bohemian peasant-girl in 1831, and to have been named polka at Prague in 1835, from the Bohemian pulka, half; because of the half-step prevalent in it. See the account in Mahn's Webster. Cf. Russ. polovina, sb., a half.

POLL, the head, esp. the back of it, a register of heads or persons, a place where votes are taken. (O. Low G.) All the meanings are extended from poll, the rounded part of the head; hence, a head, person, &c. M. E. pol, pl. polles. 'Pol bi pol' = head by head, separately, P. Plowman, B. xi. 57. 'Bi pate ant by polle' = by pate and poll; Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 237, in a MS. of the reign of Edw. II. [Not in A. S.] An O. Low G. word, found in O. Du. polle, pol, or bol, 'the head or the pate,' Hexham; also in Low G. polle, the head, Bremen Wörterbuch; Swed. dial. pull (Rietz), Dan. puld (for pull), the crown of the head. β. As initial p and k may be interchanged, it is the same as Swed. kulle, a crown, top, O. Swed. kull, kulle, the crown of the head, kulla, to poll or shave off the hair (Ihre); Icel. koltr, top, shaven crown, kollótr, having the hair polled or cut short. See Kill.

γ. These words appear to be of Celtic origin; one sense of Irish coll is 'the head, or neck;' cf. W. col, peak, summit, and perhaps Lat. corona, a crown, Gk. κορυφή, a summit, κοροφάν, a summit, κάρα, the head, κάρα, the hair of the head. Der. poll, verb, to cut off the hair, Numb. i. 2. iii. 47; poll-tax, a tax by the head, i. e. on each person. Also pole-axe, formerly pollax, Chaucer, C. T. 2546, O. Low G. pollexe, Bremen Wörterbuch, from O. Low G. polle, the poll, head, and axe, an axe; I doubt if it is the same as Icel. bolóni, which is rather an axe for lopping branches, from bolr, bulr, the trunk of a tree. Also poll-ard, used as a sb. in Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 424, and in Sir T. Browne, Cyrus Garden, c. iii. § 12, in which the use of the suffix -ard is not easy to account for, though it is, etymologically, the same as in drunk-ard, i. e. F. -ard from O. H. G. -hart, hard. [†]

POLLOCK, POLLACK, a kind of cod-fish, the whiting. (C.) In Carew (Survey of Cornwall?); Todd's Johnson. Of Celtic origin; cf. Gael. pollag, a kind of fish, the gwyniad (i. e. whiting); Irish puillog, a pollock. Perhaps from Gael. and Irish poll, a pool; cf. Gael. pollag, a little pool.

POLLEN, the powder on the anthers of flowers. (L.) In Johnson; it is also used for fine flower, in which case it is also called pollard, by corruption. — Lat. pollen, pollis, fine flour. Connected with Gk. πάλη, fine sifted meal; from πάλλειν, to shake.

POLLUTE, to defile, taint, corrupt. (L.) In Shak. Lucrece, 854, 1063, 1726. Milton has pollute as a pp., Hymn on Christ's Nativity, 41; but we already find polluted in Skelton, Ware the Hauke, 44, 161, 174. — Lat. pollutus, pp. of polluere, to defile. — Lat. pol-, a prefix, of which the older form was por- or port-, towards; and luere, to wash; see Position and Lave. The old sense is 'to wash over,' as when a river overflows, and pollutes the banks with mud; cf. Lat. lutum, mud. Der. pollut-ion, Lucrece, 1157, from Lat. acc. pollutionem. [†]

POLONÝ, a kind of sausage. (Ital.) Used by Thackeray (Webster). A corruption for Bologna sausage; which city is 'famous for sausages;' Evelyn's Diary, May 21, 1645. See Hotten's Slang Dict.

POLTROON, a dastard, coward, lazy fellow. (F., — Ital., — G.) In Shak. 3 Hen. VI. i. 1. 62. Earlier, spelt pultroune, in Skelton, The Douty Duke of Albany, l. 170. — F. poltron, 'a knave, rascal, varlet, scowndrell, dastard, sluggard;' Cot. — Ital. poltro, 'a varlet, knave, villain, raskall, base idle fellow, coward; also, a bed or couch;' Florio. He also gives poltrare, poltrire, poltraggiare, poltron-eggare, 'to play the coward, to loll or wallowe in idleness, to lie idlie a bed.' β. The old sense is clearly a sluggard, one who lies in bed; from poltro, a bed, couch. Poltro is for polstro, and is derived from G. polster, a cushion, bolster, quilt; see Bolster. Thus 'a poltroon' is a bolster-man, one who loves his couch.

¶ The usual astounding derivation from pollice truncus, deprived of one's thumb, rendered famous by Horne Tooke, is one of those etymologies which are prized as jewels, not because they rest on any evidence, but because they are picturesque and ingenious. Der. poltron-ery, a clumsy word; it should rather be poltron-y = F. poltronie, 'knavery'; Cot.

POLY-, many; prefix. (L., -Gk.) Lat. poly-, put for Gk. πολυ-, from πολύ, crude form of πολύς, much. Cognate with Skt. puru, much; and closely allied to Gk. πλέος, full, and E. full; see Full.

POLYANTHUS, a kind of flower. (L., -Gk.) A kind of primrose bearing many flowers; lit. 'many-flowered.' In Thomson, Spring, 532. A Latinised form of Gk. πολύανθος, more commonly πολιανθής, many-flowered. -Gk. πολυ-, many; and άνθος, a flower. See Poly- and Anther.

POLYGAMY, marriage with more than one wife. (F., -L., -Gk.) Polygamie in Minshew, ed. 1627. -F. polygamie, 'poligamy, the having of many wives'; Cot. -Lat. polygamia. -Gk. πολυγαμία, a marrying of many wives. -Gk. πολυ-, much, many; and -γαμία, a marrying, from γάμος, marriage. See Poly- and Bigamy. Der. polygami-ous, polygam-ist.

POLYGLOT, written in or speaking many languages. (Gk.) Howell applies it to a man; 'A polyglot, or linguist'; Familiar Letters, b. iii. let. 8, near the end. Coined from poly- = Gk. πολυ-, many; and γλῶττα = γλῶσσα, the tongue. See Poly- and Glottis.

POLYGON, a plane figure having many angles. (L., -Gk.) Spelt polygone in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. -Lat. polygonum (White). -Gk. πολύγωνον, a polygon. -Gk. πολυ-, many; and γωνία, a corner, angle, from γωνή, the knee; see Poly- and Knee. Der. polygon-al, polygon-ous. We also find polygon-y, knot-grass, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 5. 32, from Lat. polygonium or polygonos, Gk. πολύγωνος, knot-grass; so called from its many bends or knots.

POLYHEDRON, a solid body with numerous sides. (Gk.) Mathematical; coined from poly- = Gk. πολύ-, many; and -ἔδρον, from ἔδρα, a base, from ἔδ-, cognate with E. sit. See Poly- and Sit. Der. polyhedr-al.

POLYNOMIAL, an algebraical quantity having many terms. (Hybrid; L. and Gk.) Mathematical; an ill-formed word, due to the use of binomial, which is likewise ill-formed. -Gk. πολυ-, many; and Lat. nom-en, a name. It should rather have been polynomial, and even then would be a hybrid word. See Poly- and Binomial.

POLYPUS, an animal with many feet; &c. (L., -Gk.) The pl. polypi is in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. ix. c. 30, near beginning. -Lat. polypus (gen. sing. and nom. pl. polypī), a polypus. -Gk. πολύπους, lit. many-footed. -Gk. πολυ-, many; and πούς, cognate with E. foot. See Poly- and Foot. ¶ More correctly polypode, from ποδ-, stem of πούς. Cf. poly-podi-um, a fern.

POLYSYLLABLE, a word of many syllables. (Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. A coined word; ultimately of Gk. origin. The spelling syllable is due to French. See Poly- and Syllable. Der. polysyllab-ic, from Lat. polysyllabus = Gk. πολυσύλλαβος, having many syllables.

POLYTHEISM, the doctrine of a plurality of gods. (Gk.) In Johnson's Dict. Coined from Gk. πολυ-, much, many; and θεός, a god; with suffix -ism = Gk. -ισμος. See Poly- and Theism. Der. polythe-ist, polythe-ist-ic-al.

POMADE, POMMADE, a composition for dressing the hair. (F., -Ital., -L.) Properly with two m's. 'Pommade, an ointment used by ladies'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. -F. pommade, 'pomatum, or pomata, an ointment'; Cot. So called because orig. made with apples; cf. F. pomme, an apple. -Ital. pomada, pomata, 'a pomado to supple ones lips, lip-salve'; Florio. Formed with participial suffix -ata from pom-o, an apple. -Lat. pomum, an apple, the fruit of a tree. Root uncertain. Doublet, potatum, Tatler, no. 246 (R.), which is a Latinised form. And see pome-granate, pomm-el.

POMEGRANATE, a kind of fruit. (F., -L.) 'Of pomegranates'; Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 7. M.E. pomgarnet, Trevisa, i. 107, l. 7. -O. F. pome granate, which was turned into pome de grenate by some confusion or misunderstanding of the sense. In Li Contes del Graal, a poem of the 12th century, we find 'Dates, figues, et noiz mugates, Girofle et pomes de grenates'; see Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, col. 172, ll. 4, 5. Cf. Ital. pomo granato, a pomegranate; Florio. -Lat. potum, an apple; and granatum, used also alone to signify a pomegranate. β. Granatum is neut. from granatus, filled with grains or seeds; the fruit abounding in hard seeds. Granatus is formed, with pp. suffix -atus, from gran-um, a grain, seed. See Grain.

POMMEL, a knob, the knob on a sword-hilt, a projection on a saddle-bow. (F., -L.) M.E. pomel, a boss; P. Plowman's Crede, l. 562. -O. F. potel (Burguy), later pommeau, 'the pommel of a sword, &c.'; Cot. Formed with dim. suffix -el (Lat. -ellus) from potum, an apple. Root uncertain. Der. pommel, verb, to beat with the handle of a sword or any blunt instrument or with the fists.

POMP, great display, ostentation. (F., -L., -Gk.) M.E. pompe, & in Chaucer, C. T. 527. -F. pompe, 'pomp'; Cot. -Lat. pompa, a solemn procession, pomp. -Gk. πομπή, a sending, escorting, solemn procession. -Gk. πέμπεω, to send. Root uncertain. Der. pomp-ous, from F. pompueux, Lat. pompousus, full of pomp; pompous-ly, -ness; pomp-os-i-ty.

POND, a pool of water. (E.) M.E. pond, ponde, Trevisa, i. 69, l. 4; pl. pondus, id. i. 61, l. 5. Pond is a pool of standing water; strictly, one caused by damming water up. It is a variant of pond, an inclosure. Thus the Irish pond means both 'a pound for cattle' and 'a pond.' See Pound (2).

PONDER, to weigh in the mind, consider. (L.) 'In balance of unegall [unequal] weight he [Love] pondereth by ayme'; Surrey, Description of the Fickle Affections, l. 8; in Tottell's Miscellany, 1557, ed. Arber, p. 6; and see Skelton, ed. Dyce, i. 132, l. 1. -Lat. ponderare, to weigh. -Lat. ponder-, stem of pondus, a weight; see Pound (1). Der. ponder-er. From the stem ponder- we also have ponder-ous, Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 1, from F. ponderueux, Lat. ponderosus; ponder-ous-ly, -ness; ponderos-i-ty, from F. ponderosité, 'ponderosity'; Cot., from Lat. acc. ponderositate. Also ponder-able, in Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 27, part 12, from Lat. ponderabilis, that can be weighed; ponderabil-i-ty; im-ponderable.

PONENT, western. (F., -L.) In Levins; and in Milton, P. L. x. 704. -F. ponent, 'the west'; Cot. -Lat. ponent, stem of pres. part. of ponere, to lay, abate; with reference to sunset. See Position. PONIARD, a small dagger. (F., -L.; with G. suffix.) In Hamlet, v. 2. 157. -F. poignard, 'a poinadoe, or poniard'; Cot. Formed with suffix -ard = O. H. G. hart (lit. hard), from F. poing, the fist. Similarly, Ital. pugnale, a poniard, is from pugno, the fist. Cf. also Span. puño, fist, handful, hilt, puñal, a poniard, puñada, a blow with the fist. β. The F. poing, Ital. pugno, Span. puño, are from Lat. pugnus, the fist; see Pugnacious.

PONTIFF, a Roman high-priest, the Pope. (F., -L.) The pl. pontifes is in Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 771. -F. pontif, pontife, 'a chief bishop'; Cot. -Lat. pontificem, acc. of pontifex, pontufex, a Roman high-priest; in eccl. Lat., a bishop. -Lat. ponti-, crude form of pons, orig. a path, way, later a bridge; and -fex (stem -fic), a maker, from facere, to make. See Path and Fact. ¶ The reason for the name is not known; the lit. sense is 'path-maker'; hence, perhaps, one who leads to the temple, or conducts to the gods, or one who leads the way in a procession. Der. pontific-al, in Levins, from F. pontifical, Lat. pontificalis, from the stem pontific-; pontific-ate, from F. pontificat, 'a prelature'; Cot., from Lat. pontificatus. And see pontoon.

PONTOON, a buoyant vessel, for the quick construction of bridges. (F., -Ital., -L.) Formerly ponton. 'Ponton, a floating bridge'; Phillips, ed. 1706. -F. ponton, 'a wherry, or ferry-boat'; Cot. -Ital. pontone, 'a great broad bridge'; Florio. β. Formed, with augmentative suffix -one, from Lat. pont-, stem of pons, a bridge, orig. a way, path. A nasalised form from ✓ PAT, to go; cf. Skt. path, panth, to go, patha, a path; see Path. Der. from the same base, pont-iff, q.v.

PONY, a small horse. (C.) In Johnson. Explained as 'a little Scotch horse' in Boyer's Dict., A.D. 1727 (Wedgwood). Highland ponies are famous, and the word is Gaelic. -Gael. ponaidh, a little horse, a pony. Cf. Irish poni, a pony, marked as a vulgar word, and doubtless borrowed from E. Origin doubtful.

POODLE, a small dog with silky hair. (G.) One of the very few G. words in English. Modern; not in Johnson. It occurs in Miss Swanwick's tr. of Goethe's Faust, 1864, p. 37. -G. pudel (Goethe), a poodle; Low G. pudel, pudel-hund, so called because he waddles after his master, or looks fat and clumsy on account of his thick hair; allied to Low G. pudeln, to waddle, used of fat persons and short-legged animals; cf. Low G. pudel-dikk, unsteady on the feet, puddig, thick; Bremen Wörterbuch. See Pudding.

POOH, an interjection of disdain. (Scand.) From Icel. pú, pooh! Cf. puf. 'Puf, said the foxe'; Caxton, tr. of Reynard the Fox, ed. Arber, p. 59. So also buf! Chaucer, C. T. 7516; baw! P. Plowman, B. xi. 135. Due to blowing away from one. See Puff.

POOL (1), a pond, small body of water. (C.) M.E. pol, pool; dat. pole, Layamon, 21748; pl. poles, Havelok, 2101. -A. S. pól, Elfrid, tr. of Gregory's Pastoral Care, ed. Sweet, p. 278, l. 17. Certainly of Celtic origin, being common to all Celtic tongues. -Irish poll, pull, a hole, pit, mire, dirt; Gael. poll, a hole, pit, mire, bog, pond, pool; W. pull, a pool; Corn. pol, a pool, pond, mire, pit; Manx. poyl; Bret. poull; see Williams, Corn. Dict. [Hence also G. pfuhl, a pool, &c.] + Lat. pālus, a marsh, pool. + Gk. πηλός, mud. But see Addenda. [*]

POOL (2), the receptacle for the stakes at cards. (F., -L.) Formerly also spelt poule, as in Todd's Johnson. -F. poule, (1) a hen, (2) a pool, at various games; Hamilton. It seems to be so named, because the stakes are regarded as eggs, to be gained from the hen.

—Low Lat. pulla, a hen (Ducange); fem. of pullus, a young animal, cognate with Gk. πῶλος, and E. foal; see Foal, Pony. β. From ✓PU, to beget; whence Lat. pu-er, a boy, Skt. pu-tra, a son, po-ta, the young of any animal, Gk. πῶ-λος, a foal; &c.

POOP, the stern of a ship; a deck above the ordinary deck in the after-part of a ship. (F.,—L.) In Shak. i Hen. IV, iii, 3. 29. Surrey has poupe to translate Lat. puppi in Virgil, Æn. iv. 554.—F. poupe, poupe, 'the poop or hinder part of a ship.'—Lat. puppim, acc. of puppis, the hinder part of a ship, a ship. Root uncertain. Der. poop, verb, to strike a ship in the stern, to sink it, Pericles, iv. 2. 25.

POOR, possessed of little, needy, weak. (F.,—L.) In early use. M. E. poure (perhaps = povre), O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, 2nd Ser. p. 47, l. 18; Ancrén Riwe, p. 260, l. 3.—O. F. povre, poure, povere, poor.—Lat. pauperem, acc. of pauper, poor. β. Lat. pau-per means 'providing little,' or 'preparing little for oneself;' from pau-, little, few, as seen in Lat. pau-cus, Gk. παῖ-πος, E. few; and -per, providing, connected with Lat. par-are, to provide, prepare, Gk. παρ-εῖν, to impart, furnish, Skt. pri, to fill, satisfy, from ✓PAR, to fill. We thus get back to the sense 'full of few things;' see Few and Full. Der. poor-ly, poor-ness, poor-house, -lawis, -rate, -spirited. [†]

POP, to make a sharp, quick, sound; to thrust suddenly, move quickly, dart. (E.) 'Popped in between th' election and my hopes;' Hamlet, v. 2. 65. 'A pops me out from 500 pound;' K. John, i. 68. 'To poppe, coniectare;' Levins. Chaucer has 'A joly popper,' i.e. thruster, dagger; C. T. 3929. The word is of imitative origin; and merely another form of M. E. poupen, to make a loud sound, as in blowing a horn; see Chaucer, C. T. 15405. Hence poupe in the sense of 'pop-gun;' Prompt. Parv. Allied to Puff, q. v. Der. pop, sb.

POPE, the father of a church, the bishop of Rome. (L.,—Gk.) M. E. pope, Owl and Nightingale, 746. In Layamon, 14886, the older version has the dat. papen, where the later version has pope. These forms shew that the word was not taken from the F. pape, but from A. S. pāpa (dat. pāpan), which was borrowed immediately from the Latin. The A. S. homily on the Birthday of S. Gregory (ed. Elstob) begins with the words 'Gregorius se hālgā pāpa' = Gregory, the holy pope.—Lat. papa.—Gk. πάππa, πάππa, voc. of πάππas, πάππas, papa, father. See Papa. Der. pope-dom, A. S. pāpédóm, A. S. Chron., an. 1124; pop-ish, Titus Andron., v. i. 76; pop-ery.

POPINJAY, a parrot; a mark like a parrot, put on a pole to be shot at; a cockcomb. (F.,—G.; with modified suffix.) M. E. popinjay, Chaucer, C. T. 13299; where the Ellesmere and Hengwrt MSS. have papejay (= papejay); Six-text ed., Group E, l. 2322. The pl. papeyases occurs in Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1465. Thus the n is extraneous, as in other words before a j-sound; cf. messenger for messager, passenger for passager, &c.—O. F. papegai, papegay, 'a parrot or popinjay; also a wooden parrot, . . . whereat there is a general shooting once every year;' Cot. Mod. F. papegai, papegaut; the latter spelling has a needless suffixed t, and is due to O. F. papegau, found in the 13th century (Littré). Cf. Span. papagayo, Port. papagaio, Ital. papagallo, a parrot. β. It is clear that we have here two distinct forms; (1) F. papegai, Span. papagayo, papagaio, in which the base papa- is modified by the addition of F. -gai, Span. -gayo, due to a popular etymology which regarded the bird as having gay plumage, or as chattering like the jay (it matters little which, since gay and jay are one and the same); and (2) O. F. papegau, Ital. papagallo, in which the bird is regarded as a kind of cock, Lat. gallus; and the latter form appears to be the older. These modifications of the suffix are not of great consequence; it is of more importance to tell what is meant by the prefix papa-. γ. Respecting this there is much dispute; it has been suggested (as in Littré) that the word is Arabic; but the late Arab. babaghá, a parrot, appears to be merely borrowed from the Span. papagayo, by the usual weakening of p to b (Diez). δ. There remains only the suggestion of Wedgwood, that the syllables pa-pa- are imitative, and were suggested by the Bavarian pappeln, pappelen, or pappern, to chatter, whence the sb. pappel, a parrot, lit. a babbler; Schmeller, i. 398. 399. Wedgwood adds: 'So also Skt. vach, to speak; vacha, a parrot. The change in the last element from Ital. gallo, Fr. gau, a cock, to Fr. gai, geai, a jay, probably arose from the fact that the jay, being remarkable both for its bright-coloured plumage and chattering voice, seemed to come nearer than the cock to the nature of the parrot.'

ε. We may conclude that F. papegai, a talking jay, was modified from the older O. F. papegau, a talking cock; see Jay and Gallinaceous. Also, Bavar. pappeln is cognate with E. Babble, q. v. Cf. bubblycock (i. e. babble-jack), the Lowland Scotch name for a turkey-cock; so named from the gobbling sound which it makes. [†]

POPLAR, a kind of tall tree. (F.,—L.) M. E. poplere, Chaucer, C. T. 2923; popler, Palladius on Husbandry, b. iii. l. 194.—O. F. poplier (13th cent.), mod. F. peuplier, a poplar; Littré. Formed with suffix -ier (Lat. -arius) from O. F. *pople (not recorded), later form peuple, 'the poplar;' Cot. Cf. prov. E. popple, a poplar; Nares, ed. Halliwell.—Lat. populum, acc. of pōpulus, a poplar. β. Origin uncertain, but probably from its trembling leaves; pōpulus = pal-pal-us, by reduplication of the base pal-, to vibrate, shake, seen in Gk. πάλλειν, to shake, vibrate, brandish; similarly we have Lat. pal-pitare, to palpitate, tremble, pal-pe-bra, the quivering eye-lid. See Palpitate.

POPLIN, a fabric made of silk and worsted. (F.) Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict.—F. popeline, of which an older form was papeline, first mentioned in A. D. 1667 (Littré). β. Origin unknown; it has been supposed to be connected with F. papal, papal, because it may have been first made at Avignon, where there was once a papal court, A. D. 1309–1408. The chronology does not bear out this suggestion. Cf. Span. popolens, populina, poplin. γ. I shall record my guess, that popelin, not papelina, is the right form; and that it is connected with O. F. popelin, 'a little finical darling,' Cot.; popin, 'spruce, neat, trimme, fine,' id.; se popiner, 'to trimme or tricke up himself.' In this view, popelin means 'spruce stuff for dresses,' or 'stuff fit for finical people,' an easy solution. These words are related to Low Lat. popula, pupula, a young girl of light demeanour (Ducange); Ital. pupina, a doll (Florio), and to E. puppet; see Puppet. But see Addenda. [*]

POPPY, the name of a flower with narcotic properties. (L.) M. E. poppy (with one p), Gower, C. A. ii. 102, l. 21.—A. S. popig; 'Papaver, popig,' Wright's Vocab. i. 31, col. 1. Merely borrowed from Lat. papauer, a poppy, by change of u (w) to g, and loss of -er. β. Root uncertain; perhaps named from its 'swollen' globular capsule; cf. Lat. papula, a swelling, pustule. See Pimple.

POPULACE, the common people. (F.,—Ital.,—L.) 'And calm the peers, and please the populace;' Daniel, Civil Wars, b. vii (R.).—F. populace, 'the rascall people;' Cot.—Ital. popolazzo, popolaccio, 'the grosse, base, vile, common people;' Florio. Formed with the depreciatory suffix -azzo, -accio, from Ital. popol-o, the people.—Lat. populum, acc. of populus, the people; see People.

POPULAR, belonging to, or liked by the people. (F.,—L.) In Temp. i. 2. 92.—F. populaire, 'popular;' Cot.—Lat. popularis, adj., from populus, the people; see People. Der. popular-ly, -ity, -ise.

POPULATE, to people. (L.) In Levins, ed. 1570. 'Greate shoales of people, which goe on to populate;' Bacon, Essay 58.—Low Lat. populatus, pp. of populare, to people; whereas the classical Lat. populari means to ravage, destroy.—Lat. populus, people; see People. Der. populat-ion, in Bacon, Essay 29, § 5, from late Lat. populationem, acc. of populatio, a population (White). Also popul-ous. Rich. II, v. 5. 3, from F. populeux, 'populous,' Cot., which from Lat. populosus, full of people; popul-ous-ly, -ness.

PORCELAIN, a fine kind of earthenware. (F.,—Ital.,—L.) In Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, st. 29; spelt porcellan, Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, pp. 391, 396; and see extract from Florio below. Porcelain was so named from the resemblance of its finely polished surface to that of the univalve shell of the same name, called in English the Venus' shell; as applied to the shell, the name goes back to the 13th century, when it occurs in the F. version of Marco Polo in place of the Ital. name (Littré). Cotgrave gives porcelaine, porcelaine, 'the purple fish, also, the sea-snail, or Venus shell.'—Ital. porcellana, 'a purple fish, a kind of fine earth called porcelane, wherof they make fine China dishes, called porcellan dishes;' Florio, ed. 1598.

β. Again, the shell derived its name from the curved shape of its upper surface, which was thought to resemble the raised back of a little hog. [It is very easy to make a toy-pig with a Venus' shell and some putty; and such toys are often for sale.]—Ital. porcella, 'a sow-pig, a porkelin;' Florio. Cf. porcello, 'a yong hog, or pig, a porkelin;' id. Dimin. of Ital. porco, a hog.—Lat. porcum, acc. of porcus, a pig; see Pork.

PORCH, a portico, covered way or entrance. (F.,—L.) M. E. porche, Rob. of Glouc., p. 271, l. 6.—F. porche, a porch.—Lat. porticum, acc. of porticus, a gallery, arcade, porch; for the letter-changes, see Brachet. β. Formed with suffix -us (Aryan -ka) from porti, put for porta, a gate, door; see Port (3). Cf. E. perch from F. perche, Lat. pertica. Doublet, portico.

PORCINE, relating to swine. (L.) In Todd's Johnson, who quotes an extract dated 1660.—Lat. porcinus, adj., formed from porcus, a pig; see Pork.

PORCUPINE, a rodent quadruped, covered with spines or quills. (F.,—L.) α. In Shakespeare, old edd. have porpentine; a spelling which also occurs in Ascham, Toxophilus, ed. Arber, p. 31. Levins has porpin. Huloet has: 'Porpyn, beaste, havinge prickes on his backe.' The Prompt. Parv. has: 'Poork-poynt, porpoynte, porpoynt, beste, Histrix;' p. 409. 'Porkepyn, a beest, porc espin;' Palsgrave.

β. We thus see that the animal had two very similar names, (1) porkepyn, shortly porpin, easily lengthened to porpint by the usual excrescent t after n, and finally altered to porpentine as a by-form of porkepyne; and (2) pork-point, porpoint; the latter of which forms would also readily yield porpentine.

γ. We conclude that porpentine is late; that porkpoint was little used, and simply meant a 'pork' or pig furnished with points or sharp quills; and that the modern porcupine is due (by substitution of obscure u for obscure e) to the M. E. form porkepyn, pronounced in three syllables and with the y long.

δ. The M. E. porkepyn is obviously derived from O. F. porc espin, a word known to Palsgrave, A.D. 1530, but now obsolete, and supplanted by porcépine, in the 13th century porc espi (Littre), a form which is also given by Cotgrave, who has: 'Porc-espi, a porcupine.'

ε. Thus the O. F. names for the animal were also double; (1) porc-espi = porc-espic, the pig with spikes (see SPIKE); and (2) porc-espin, the pig with spines. The English has only to do with the latter, which, though obsolete in French, is preserved in Span. puerco espin, Port. porco espinho, Ital. porco spinoso (Meadows, Eng. Ital. section).

ζ. Finally, the F. porc is from Lat. porcus; and O. F. espin is a by-form of O. F. espine (F. épine), from Lat. spina, a thorn. See PORK and SPINE.

¶ It is easier to see the etymology than to prove it; I do not think it has been formally proved before. Holland, in his tr. of Pliny, b. viii. c. 35, has pork-pen, where pen, i. e. quill, is an ingenious substitution for -spine.

PORE (1), a minute hole in the skin. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. poire, Prompt. Parv. p. 409. The pl. poirus (= pores) is in Trevisa, i. 53. -F. poire, 'a pore'; Cot. -Lat. porum, acc. of porus, a pore. -Gk. πόρος, a ford, passage, way, pore. -✓ PAR, to fare; see FARE.

Der. por-ous from F. poroux, 'pory'; Cot.; porous-ly, -ness; por-os-ity, pori-form.

PORE (2), to look steadily, gaze long. (Scand., -C.) M. E. poiren, Chaucer, C. T. 185, 5877, 16138. [Perhaps also puren; 'Abute for to pure' = to peer or pore about; K. Horn, ed. Lumby, l. 1092. But this example may belong to the verb to peer, which may have been confused with poire; though I believe there is no real connection between the words.] -Swed. dial. pora, pura, påra, to work slowly and gradually, to do anything slowly; Rietz. Cf. Low G. purren, to poke about; wut purren, to clean out a hole by poking about with a pointed instrument; Du. porren, to poke, thrust, instigate.

β. The idea seems to be that of poking or thrusting about in a slow and toilsome way, as in the case of clearing out a stopped-up hole; hence to pore over a job, to be a long while about it. Much in the same way we use the expression to potter about, or to potter over a thing; where potter is the frequentative of prov. E. poie, to thrust, from W. putio, to thrust.

γ. As most Scand. words beginning with p are unoriginal, the word may be ultimately Celtic; cf. Gael. purrr, to push, thrust, drive, urge, jerk, butt; Irish purraim, I push, jerk, thrust. [†]

PORK, the flesh of swine. (F., -L.) M. E. pork, Rich. C.uer de Lion, 3049. -F. porc, 'a pork, hog; also pork, or swines flesh'; Cot. -Lat. porcum, acc. of porcus, a pig. + Lithuan. parzas, a pig (Nesselmann). + W. porch. + Irish orc, by the usual loss of initial p. + A. S. feorh, a pig; whence E. farrow. β. All from a European base PARKA, a pig; Fick, iii. 669. See FARROW. Der. pork-er, a young pig, Pope, tr. of Homer, Od. xvii. 201; lit. an animal that supplies pork; substituted for the older term pork-et, from O. F. porquet, 'a young pork,' Cot., dimin. of porc. Also porc-ine, q. v. And see porc-u-pine, por-poise, porc-el-ain.

PORPHYRY, a hard, variegated rock, of purple and white colour. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. porphurie, Chaucer, C. T. 16243. -O. F. porphyrie (?) (not found; Cotgrave has only porphyre, 'porphyry'; but the E. form appears fuller and older. Abbreviated from Lat. porphyrites, porphyry. -Gk. πορφύρεος, porphyry; so named from its purple colour. Formed with suffix -της, signifying 'resemblance,' from πορφυρ, πορφύρα, the purple-fish, purple-dye; cf. πορφύρεος, purple; see PURPLE. Der. porphyrit-ic, from Lat. porphyrit-ic.

PORPOISE, PORPESS, the hog-fish. (F., -L.) Spelt porpess in Ray, On the Creation, pt. i (R.); porpaise, porpui, in Minshew; porpice, Spenser, Colin Clout, l. 249. M. E. porpeys, Prompt. Parv. -O. F. porpeis, a porpoise (Roquefort), spelt porpeys, A.D. 1410 (Ducange); a term utterly obsolete, and supplanted by the name marouin (lit. mere-swine), borrowed from G. meerschwein. Put for porc-peis. -Lat. porcum, acc. of porcus, a pig; and piscem, acc. of piscis, a fish, cognate with E. fish. See PORK and FISH. So also O. Ital. pesce-porca, 'a sea-hogge, a hogge-fish'; Florio. The mod. Ital. name is porco marino, marine pig; Span. puerco marino.

PORRIDGE, a kind of broth. (F., -L.) In Shak. Temp. ii. 1. 10. The M. E. name was porree, or poré, sometimes puree; the suffix -idge (= -age) is clearly due to confusion with pottage, M. E. potage, for which see POTTAGE. We find, 'Porré, or purré, potage,' Prompt. Parv.; and Way's note gives the spelling porray. Way adds: 'this term implies generally pease-pottage, still called in French purée; . . according to the Ortus, it seems to have denoted a pottage of leeks, poratum est cibus de poris factus, Anglice porray;' he also notes the Low Lat. form porrata. -O. F. porée, porrée, 'beets, also pot-herbs, and thence also, pottage made of beets or with other herbs'; Cot. -Low Lat. porrata (also porrecta), broth made with leeks; Ducange. Cf. Ital. porrata, leek-soup. Formed, with Lat. pp. fem. suffix -ata, from Lat. porrum or porr-us, a leek. β. Porrum stands for an older form porsum (parsum), as shewn by the cognate Gk. πάσσω, a leek. Der. porring-er, q. v. [†]

PORRINGER, a small dish for porridge. (F., -L.; with E. suffix.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, iv. 3. 64; Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 31. Formed from porridge (= porridge), with suffix -er, and inserted n before soft g, as in messenger for messager, passenger for passager. Cf. pottanger (Palsgrave), a dish for pottage. See PORRIDGE. [†]

PORT (1), demeanour, carriage of the body. (F., -L.) M. E. port, Chaucer, C. T. 69, 138. -F. port, 'the carriage, behaviour, or demeanor of a man'; Cot. Cf. Ital. porto, carriage; Span. porte, deportment. A sb. due to the verb porter, to carry. -Lat. portare, to carry. -✓ PAR, to bring over; cf. Vedic Skt. pri, to bring over; whence also E. fare, to travel; see FARE. Der. port, verb, to carry, little used except in the phr. 'to port arms,' and in Milton's expression 'ported spears,' P. L. iv. 980. Also port-able, Mach. iv. 3. 89, from Lat. portabilis, that can be carried or borne; port-able-ness; port-age, Prompt. Parv., from F. portage, 'portage, carriage,' Cot. Also port-er, in the sense of 'carrier of a burden' (Phillips, ed. 1706), substituted for M. E. portour (Prompt. Parv.), from F. porteur, 'a carrier,' Cot. And hence porter, the name of malt-liquor, so called because it was a favourite drink with London porters, supposed to be not older than A.D. 1750, see Todd's Johnson; also porter-age, a coined word. Port-folio, a case large enough to carry folio paper in, a coined word, with which cf. F. portefeuille. Port-manteau, from F. portmanteau (Cot.), lit. that which carries a mantle (see MANTLE); but we also find port-mantua, Dryden, Kind Keeper, Act i. sc. 1, and portmantue, used by Cot. to translate F. portmanteau; the latter is not quite the same word, but is derived from F. port-er and Man-tua, q. v. Also port-ly, Merch. of Ven. i. 1. 9; port-li-ness. From the Lat. portare we also have com-port, de-port, de-port-ment, dis-port (and sport), ex-port, im-port, im-port-ant, pur-port, re-port, sup-port, trans-port. And see port (2), port (3), port-cullis, porch, portico, &c.

PORT (2), a harbour, haven. (L.) M. E. port; Rob. of Glouc. speaks of 'the fif portes,' now called the Cinque Ports, p. 51, l. 3. The pl. porz (for ports) occurs in Layamon, 24413. -A. S. port; 'to ðám porte' = to the haven, Ælfred, tr. of Bede, b. iv. c. 1, near the end. And still preserved in Portsmouth (mouth of the port), Portchester (Port-chester), &c.; so that the word was in very early use. -Lat. portus, a harbour.

β. Closely allied to Lat. porta, a gate; see PORT (3). Der. (from Lat. portus), im-port-une, op-port-une.

PORT (3), a gate, entrance, port-hole. (F., -L.) 'So, let the ports be guarded;' Cor. i. 7. 1. -F. porte, 'a port or gate'; Cot. -Lat. porta, a gate.

β. Formed with suffix -ia from the base por-see in Gk. πόρος, a ford, way; from ✓ PAR, to pass through, fare, travel; see FARE.

¶ Though port does not seem to be used in M. E., there is an A. S. form porte (Grein), borrowed directly from Lat. porta. Der. port-er, M. E. porter, Floriz and Blauncheffur, ed. Lumby, l. 138, from O. F. portier, Lat. portarius (White); whence (with fem. suffix -ess = F. -esse = Lat. -issa, Gk. -ισσα), porter-ess, or shortly port-r-ess, Milton, P. L. ii. 746. Also port-al, Hamlet, iii. 4. 136, from O. F. portal (Burguy), Lat. portale, a vestibule, porch. Also port-hole, Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, st. 188. Also port-cullis, q. v., port-ico, q. v., porch, q. v. And see port (1), port (2), port (4), and porce.

PORT (4), a dark purple wine. (Port., -L.) So called from Oporto, in Portugal; port being merely an abbreviation from Oporto wine. -Port. o porto, the port; where o is the def. art. = Span. lo = -Lat. illum; and porto is from Lat. portum, acc. of portus, a port. See PORT (2).

PORTCULLIS, a sliding door of cross timbers pointed with iron, let down to protect a gateway. (F., -L.) M. E. portcullise, portcolise, Rom. of the Rose, 4163. -O. F. porte coleice (13th. cent., Littre), later porte coulisse, or simply coulisse, 'a portcullis'; Cot. -F. porte, from Lat. porta, a gate; and O. F. coleice, answering to a Low Lat. adj. *colaticius (not found), with the sense of flowing, gliding, or sliding, regularly formed from colatus, pp. of colare, to flow, orig. to strain through a sieve. See PORT (3) and COLANDER.

PORTE, the Turkish government. (F., -L.) The Turkish government is 'officially called the Sublime Porte, from the port (gate) of the sultan's palace, where justice was administered;' Webster. See PORT (3). It is 'a perverted F. translation of Babi Ali, lit. the high gate, the chief office of the Ottoman government;' Wedgwood. Cf. Arab. bāb, a gate, 'āly, high; Rich. Dict. pp. 224. 1027.

PORTEND, to betoken, presage, signify. (L.) In K. Lear, i. 2. 113; Spenser, F. Q. v. 7. 4. — Lat. portendere, to foretell, predict. — Lat. por-, for O. Lat. port, towards; and tendere, to stretch forth; so that portend is 'to stretch out towards,' or point to. See Position and Tend. Der. portent, Oth. v. 2. 45, F. portente, 'a prodigious or monstrous thing,' Cot., which from Lat. portentum, a sign, token; formed from portentus, pp. of portendere. Hence portent-ous, from F. portentouse, 'prodigious,' Cot., which from Lat. portentus.

PORTER (1), a carrier. (F., —L.) See Port (1).

PORTER (2), a gate-keeper. (F., —L.) See Port (3).

PORTER (3), a dark kind of beer, orig. porter's beer (Wedgwood); see Port (1).

PORTESSE, PORTOS, PORTOUS, a breviary. (F., —L.) Spelt portesse in Spenser, F. Q. i. 4. 19. 'Poorios, booke, portiforium, breviary,' Prompt. Parv. M. E. portous, portos, portios, portors, P. Plowman, B. xv. 122, and footnotes; and see note to the line for further examples. All various corruptions of O. F. porte-hors, i.e. that which one carries abroad, a word compounded as the F. equivalent of Lat. portiforium, a breviary. I cannot give a quotation for F. portehors, but the M. E. spelling portors is sufficient evidence. Compounded of F. porter, from Lat. portare, to carry; and F. hors, older form fors, out of doors, abroad, from Lat. foris, abroad, adv., due to sb. pl. fores, doors. See Port (1) and Door.

PORTICO, a porch. (Ital., —L.) In Chapman, tr. of Homer, Od. iv. 405, 410. — Ital. portico. — Lat. porticum, acc. of porticus, a porch; see Porch. Doublet, porch.

PORTION, a part, share. (F., —L.) M. E. portion, portoun, porcioun, Wyclif, Luke, xv. 12. — F. portion. — Lat. portionem, acc. of portio, a share; closely allied to parti-, crude form of pars, a part; see Part. Der. portion, vb.; portion-ed, portion-er, portion-less; and see apportion.

PORTLY, orig. of good demeanour; see Port (1).

POURTRAIT, a picture of a person. (F., —L.) In Shak. Merch. of Ven. ii. 9. 54; spelt pourtraict, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 1. 39. — O. F. pourtraict, 'a pourtrait'; Cot. — O. F. pourtraict, pourtrait, pp. of pourtraire, to portray; see Portray.

PORTRAY, to draw, depict. (F., —L.) M. E. pourtraien, Chaucer, C. T. 96; purtreien, King Alisaunder, l. 1520. — O. F. portraire, later pourtraire, 'to portray, draw,' Cot.; mod. F. portraire. — Low Lat. protrahere, to paint, depict; Lat. protrahere, to drag or bring forward, expose, reveal. — Lat. pro-, forward; and trahere, to draw; see Pro- and Trace. Der. portrait, q. v.; whence portraiture, M. E. portreture, Gower, C. A. ii. 83, from O. F. pourtraicture, 'a pourtraiture,' Cot., as if from Lat. protractura. And see protract.

POSE (1), a position, attitude. (F., —L., —Gk.) We speak of 'the pose of an actor'; see Webster. Quite modern; not in Todd's Johnson; but the word is of importance. — F. pose, 'attitude, posture,' Hamilton; O. F. pose, 'a pause, intermission, stop, ceasing, repose, resting'; Cot. — F. poser, 'to place, set, put,' Hamilton; 'to put, pitch, place, to seat, settle, plant, to stay, or lean on, to set, or lay down'; Cot. — Low Lat. posare, to cease; also, to cause to rest, and hence used in the sense of Lat. ponere, to place (Ducange); Lat. posare, to halt, cease, pause, to repose (in the grave), as in the phr. posat in pace = (here) rests in peace (White). — Lat. posua, a pause; a word of Greek origin; see Pause. Cf. Ital. posare, to put, lay down, rest, from posa, rest; Span. posar, to lodge, posada, an inn. ¶ One of the most remarkable facts in F. etymology is the extraordinary substitution whereby the Low Lat. posare came to mean 'to make to rest, to set,' and so usurped the place of the Lat. ponere, to place, set, with which it has no etymological connection. And this it did so effectually as to restrict the F. pondre, the true equivalent of Lat. ponere, to the sense of 'laying eggs'; whilst in all compounds it completely thrust it aside, so that composare (i. e. F. composer) took the place of Lat. componere, and so on throughout. 2. Hence the extraordinary result, that whilst the E. verbs compose, depose, impose, propose, &c. exactly represent in sense the Lat. componere, deponere, imponere, proponere, &c., we cannot derive the E. verbs from the Lat. ones, since they have (as was said) no real etymological connection. Indeed, these words are not even of Lat. origin, but Greek. 3. The true derivatives from the Lat. ponere appear in the substantives, such as position, composition, deposition; see under Position. Der. pose, verb, to assume an attitude, merely an E. formation from the sb. pose, an attitude, and quite modern. Also (from F. poser) the compounds ap-pose, com-pose, de-pose, dis-pose, ex-pose, im-pose, inter-pose, op-pose, pro-pose, pur-pose, re-pose (in which the sense of Lat. posua appears), sup-pose, trans-pose.

¶ Under compose, depose, the F. pose is, by inadvertence, derived from Lat. ponere. [†]

POSE (2), to puzzle, perplex by questions. (F., —L. and Gk.) 'Say you so? then I shall pose you quickly;' Meas. for Meas. ii. 4. 51. Here, as in the case of peal, the prefixed syllable ap- has dropped off; the older form of the verb was commonly to appose. M. E. apposen, aposen; see examples in Richardson, s. v. Appose. To appose was to question, esp. in a puzzling way, to examine. 'When Nicholas Clifforde sawe himselfe so sore aposed [posed, questioned], he was shamfast;' Berners, Froissart's Chron. c. 373 (R.) 'She would appose mee touching my learning and lesson;' Stow's Chronicle, an. 1043. And see Chaucer, C. T. 7179, 15831; P. Plowman, B. i. 47, iii. 5, vii. 138, xv. 376. β. The word appears at first sight to answer to F. apposer, but that verb is not used in any such sense; and it is really nothing but a corruption of oppose, which was used convertibly with it. Thus we find 'Aposen, or oposyn, Opponere,' Prompt. Parv., p. 13. 'I oppose one, I make a tryall of his lemyng, or I laye a thyng to his charge, le apose. I am nat to lerne nowe to oppose a felowe, & apposer vng gallant;' Palsgrave. [Here the O. F. aposer, apposer, is, in the same way, a corruption of F. opposer.] 'But she, whiche al honour supposeth, The falsē prestēs than opposeth [questions], And axeth [asks], &c.;' Gower, C. A. i. 71, l. 21. See another example in Halliwell.

γ. The word arose in the schools; the method of examination was by argument, and the examiner was the umpire as to questions put by an opponent; hence to examine was also to oppose, or pose. 'Opponere, in philosophicis vel theologicis disputationibus contra argumentari; argumententer contre quelqu'un;' Ducange, ed. Migne. For the etymology, see Oppose. δ. Lastly, the confusion can be accounted for, viz. by confusion of opponere, to question, argue, with the word opposite, applied to a neat answer; see Apposite, which really answers to Lat. oppositus. Der. pos-er, Bacon, Essay 32; on which Mr. Aldis Wright says: 'an examiner, one who poses or puts questions; still in use at Eton and Winchester.' Hence also M. E. posen, to put a case, Chaucer, C. T. 1164. Der. puzzle, q. v.

POSE (3), a cold in the head. (E.?) Probably obsolete. M. E. pose, Chaucer, C. T. 4150, 17011. — A. S. ge-posu, a cough, 'wid geposu, ad tussim gravem;' A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, i. 148. [†]

POSITION, a situation, attitude, state, place. (F., —L.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. ii. 5. 130. [In Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. v. pr. 4, l. 4685, the right reading seems to be possession, not position.] — F. position, 'a position;' Cot. — Lat. positionem, acc. of positio, a putting, placing. — Lat. positus, pp. of ponere, to place, put. β. Lat. ponere (pp. positus) is generally thought to stand for po-sinere, where po- is a variation of what appears to be an old prep. (port); and sinere (pp. situs) is to let, allow, on which see Sit. γ. Following Corssen's explanation (Beiträge, 87) we may regard port (Umbrian pur) as the Latin representative of Gk. πορτί (ῥῥῥῥ), Skt. prati, against, occurring with different phonetic modifications in pol-ingo, por-ricio, posideo, po-no for posino; Curtius, i. 355. Der. com-position, de-position, dis-position, im-position, inter-position, op-position, pro-position, sup-position, trans-position. Also (from Lat. ponere) pon-ent, com-ponent, de-ponent, ex-ponent, op-ponent; com-pound, ex-pound, post-pon. And see ap-posite, com-posite, de-posit, ex-posit-or; also post, positive, post-ure, com-post, im-postor, pro-vost, &c. ¶ And see remarks under Pose (1).

POSITIVE, actual, undoubted, decisive, certain. (F., —L.) The lit. sense is 'settled;' hence, certain. M. E. positif, Chaucer, C. T. 1169. — F. positif, omitted by Cotgrave, but in use in the 14th century (Littre). — Lat. positivus, settled, esp. by agreement. — Lat. positus, pp. of ponere, to place; see Position. Der. positive-ly, -ness. Also positiv-ism, due to Comte, born about 1795, died 1852 (Haydn).

POSSE, power. (L.) 'Posse comitatus, or power of the county;' Blount's Nomo-lexicon, ed. 1691. — Lat. posse, to be able; used as sb. See Power.

POSSESS, to own, seize, have, hold. (L.) The verb is probably due to the sb. possession, which was in earlier use, occurring in Chaucer, C. T. 2244, and in Robert of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 239, l. 19. Possess is extremely common in Shak.; see L. L. L. v. 2. 383, &c. — Lat. possessus, pp. of possidere, to possess, to have in possession. β. Prob. derived from Lat. port- or portit-, towards, a conjectural form of the prefix; and sedere, to sit, remain, continue; as if the sense were 'to remain near,' hence to have in possession. See Position, § γ, and Sit. Der. possession-ed, Much Ado, i. 1. 193; possession-or, Merch. Ven. i. 3. 75, from Lat. possessor; possession-ive, from Lat. possessivus; possession-ive-ly. Also possession-ion, M. E. possessioniun, possession, as above, from F. possession, 'possession,' Cot., from Lat. acc. possessionem. Also M. E. possession-er, P. Plowman, B. v. 144.

POSSET, a drink composed of hot milk, curdled by some strong infusion. (C.) In Shak. Merry Wives, i. 4. 8; v. 8. 180; Macb. ii. 2. 6. M. E. possy, Wright's Vocab. i. 202, col. 2. One of the homely words of Celtic origin. Cf. W. posel, curdled milk, posset; Irish pusoid, a posset. Der. posset, vb., to curdle, Hamlet, i. 5. 68.

POSSIBLE, that may be done, that may happen. (F., —L.) M. E. possible, Chaucer, C. T. 8832. — F. possible, 'likely, possible, Cot. = Lat. possibilis, that may be done, possible. β. Not well formed; it should rather have been *potibilis; the form possibilis is due to the influence of possum, I am able. Both *poti-bilis and possum (short for potis-sum or poti-sum) are due to poti-, crude form of potis, powerful, properly 'a lord,' cognate with Skt. pāti, a master, owner, governor, lord, husband, Lithuan. patis, a husband (Nesselmann), Russ. -pode as seen in gos-pode, the Lord. γ. Skt. pāti is lit. 'a feeder,' from √PA, to feed; see Father, to which it is nearly related. See Potent. And see Host (1). Der. possibil-y; possibil-i-ty, M. E. possibilittee, Chaucer, C. T. 1293, from F. possibilité (Cot.), which from Lat. acc. possibilitatem.

POST (1), a stake set in the ground, a pillar. (L.) M. E. post, a pillar; see Chaucer, C. T. 214. In very early use; see Layamon, 28032. = A. S. post; 'Basis, post,' Wright's Vocab. i. 41, col. 1; and see Ælfric, tr. of Judges, xvi. 3. = Lat. postis, a post, a door-post. β. The orig. sense was 'something firmly fixed'; cf. Lat. positus, a form used by Lucretius for positus, pp. of ponere, to place, set; see Position, and see Post (2).

POST (2), a military station, a public letter-carrier, a stage on a road, &c. (F., -L.) Shak. has post, a messenger, Temp. ii. 1. 248; a post-horse, Romeo, v. 1. 21. 'A post, runner, Veredarius;' Levins, ed. 1570. Post 'originally signified a fixed place, as a military post; then, a fixed place on a line of road where horses are kept for travelling, a stage, or station; thence it was transferred to the person who travelled in this way, using relays of horses, and finally to any quick traveller;' Eastwood and Wright, Bible Wordbook. See Job, ix. 25; Jer. li. 31. = F. poste, masc. 'a post, carrier, speedy messenger,' Cot.; fem. 'post, posting, the riding post, as also, the furniture that belongs unto posting;' id. Cf. Ital. posta, a post, station; Span. posta, post, sentinel, post-house, post-horses. = Low Lat. posta, a station, site; fem. of positus, a shortened form (used by Lucretius) of positus, placed, pp. of ponere, to place. See Position, and Post (1). Der. post, vb., L. L. L. iv. 3. 188; post, adv., in the phr. 'to travel post;' post-boy, -chaise, -haste, -horse, -man, -mark, -master, -office, -paid, -town. Also post-al, a modern coined word, from F. postal, also modern. Also post-age, an E. coinage, not used in French, but used by Dryden, according to Todd's Johnson, where no reference is given. And see post-ilion.

POST-, prefix, after, behind. (L.) Lat. post, prep., after, behind. Allied to Skt. paścāt, behind, abl. sing. of the Vedic. adj. paścā, behind; see Benfey, p. 535.

POST-DATE, to date a thing after the right time. (L.) 'Those, whose post-dated loyalty now consists only in decrying that action;' South, vol. iii. ser. 2 (R.) From Post- and Date. Similarly are formed post-diluvial, post-diluvian, &c.

POSTERIOR, hinder, later, coming after. (L.) In Shak. L. L. v. 1. 94, 96, 126. = Lat. posterior, comp. of posterus, coming after, following. = Lat. post, after; see Post-, prefix. ¶ Bacon, Nat. Hist., end of § 115, has posterior, answering to F. postérieur, 'posterior, hinder,' Cot., from the Lat. acc. posteriorem. Der. posterior-s, s. pl., put for posterior parts; posterior-ly, posterior-i-ty. And see posteriority, postern, posthumous, postil.

POSTERITY, succeeding generations, future race of people. (F., -L.) Spelt posteritē, Spenser, Ruines of Rome, 434. = F. posterité, 'posterity;' Cot. = Lat. posteritatem, acc. of posteritas, futurity, posterity. = Lat. posteri- = postero-, crude form of posterus, following after; see Posterior.

POSTERN, a back-door, small private gate. (F., -L.) M. E. posterne, Rob. of Glouc. p. 19, l. 16; spelt postorne, K. Alisaunder, 4593. = O. F. posterle, also posterne (by change of l to n), Burguy; later poterne, 'a posterne, or posterne-gate, a back-door to a fort,' Cot. = Lat. posterula, a small back-door, postern; formed with dimin. suffix -la from posterus, behind; see Posterior.

POSTHUMOUS (better POSTUMOUS), born after the father's death, published after the author's decease. (L.) The spelling with h is false; see below. Shak. has Posthumus as a name in Cymb. i. 1. 41, &c. Sir T. Browne has 'posthumous memory;' Urn-burial, c. v. § 12. = Lat. postumus, the last; esp. of youngest children, the last-born; hence, late-born, and, as sb., a posthumous child. β. In accordance with a popular etymology, the word was also written posthumus, as if derived from post humum, lit. after the ground, which was forced into the meaning 'after the father is laid in the ground or buried;' and, in accordance with this notion, the sense of the word was at last chiefly confined to such a usage. Hence also the F. spelling posthume, Port. postumo; but Span. and Ital. have postumo; all in the usual sense attached to E. posthumous.

γ. The Lat. postumus = post-tu-mus, a superlative formed (with Aryan suffix -ta-ma) from post, behind. See Posterior. Der. posthumous-ly.

POSTIL, an explanatory note on the Bible, marginal note or commentary. (F., -L.) M. E. postille, Wyclif, gen. prologue to Isaiah, ed. Forshall and Madden, p. 225; the word is now obsolete, except in theological writings. = F. postille, 'a postill, glosse, compendious exposition;' Cot. [Hence, with prefix ap- (= Lat. ad before p) was formed O. F. apostille, 'an answer to a petition, set down in the margin thereof; and, generally, any small addition unto a great discourse in writing;' Cot.] = Low Lat. postilla, a marginal note in a bible, in use A.D. 1228; Ducange.

β. The usual derivation, and probably the correct one, is that of Ducange, viz. from Lat. post illa, i.e. post illa verba, after those words; because the glosses were added afterwards. Cf. Ital. and Port. postilla, Span. postila, a marginal note. Der. postil, verb, to write marginal notes, to comment on, annotate, Bacon, Life of Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 193, l. 3.

POSTILLION, a post-boy, rider of post-horses in a carriage. (F., -L.) = Ital., -L. 'Those swift postillions, my thoughts;' Howell, Famil. Letters, vol. i. let. 8; A.D. 1619. And in Cotgrave. = F. postillon, 'a postillon, guide, posts-boy;' Cot. Introduced in the 16th cent. from Ital. postiglione, 'a postilion,' Florio (and see Brachet). Formed with suffix -iglione (= Lat. -il-ionem) from Ital. posta, a messenger, post; see Post (2).

POST-MERIDIAN, POMERIDIAN, belonging to the afternoon. (L.) Howell uses the form pomeridian, speaking of his 'privat pomeridian devotions;' Famil. Letters, vol. i. sect. 6. let. 32. = Lat. pomeridianus, also postmeridianus, belonging to the afternoon. = Lat. post, after; and meridianus, belonging to midday. See Post- and Meridian.

POST-MORTEM, after death. (L.) A medical term. = Lat. post, after; and mortem, acc. of mors, death. See Post- and Mortal.

POST-OBIT, a bond by which a person receiving money undertakes to repay a larger sum after the death of the person who leaves him money. (L.) A law term. Shortened from Lat. post obitum, after death. See Post and Obit.

POSTPONE, to put off, delay. (L.) Postponed is in Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691, q. v. 'Postpone, to let behind or esteem less, to leave or neglect;' Phillips, ed. 1706. [Formerly, the form used was postpose, which occurs in Howell, Famil. Letters, vol. i. sect. 4. let. 15, cited by Richardson with the spelling postpone. This is from F. postposer, 'to set or leave behind;' Cot. He also has: 'Post-posé, postponed.'] = Lat. postponere, to put after. = Lat. post, after; and ponere, to put; see Post- and Position. Der. postpone-ment, a clumsy word, with F. suffix -ment.

POSTSCRIPT, a part added to a writing or book after it was thought to be complete. (L.) In Shak. Hamlet, iv. 7. 53. Shortened from Lat. postscriptum, that which is written after; from post, after, and scriptus, pp. of scribere, to write. See Post- and Scribe.

POSTULATE, a proposition assumed without proof, as being self-evident. (L.) 'Postulates and entreated maxims;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. vi. c. 6. § 6. = Lat. postulatum, a thing demanded; hence also, a thing granted; neut. of postulatus, pp. of postulare, to demand. β. It seems probable that postulare stands for posc-ulare, formed as a frequentative verb from *posc-um, unused supine of poscere, to ask. γ. It is further proposed to assume for poscere an older form posco-ere, thus bringing it into alliance with √PRAK, to pray, whence Skt. prachch, to ask, Lat. precari, to pray; see Pray. Der. postulate, verb, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 3 [not 4], last section; postulat-or-y, id. b. ii. c. 6. § 2.

POSTURE, position, attitude. (F., -L.) In Shak. Wint. Tale, v. 3. 23. = F. posture, 'posture;' Cot. = Lat. positura, position, arrangement; from positurus, fut. part. of ponere, to place; see Position. Der. posture-master; posture, verb.

POSY, a verse of poetry, a motto, a bouquet or nosegay. (F., -L., -Gk.) The word, in all its senses, is merely a contraction of Poesy, q. v. 1. It was usual to engrave short mottoes on knives and on rings; and as these were frequently in verse, they were called posies. Thus, in Shak. Merch. Ven. v. 148, we have: 'a ring . . . whose posy was . . . like cutler's poetry Upon a knife, Love me, and leave me not;' see note to the line in Wright's edition. So also in Hamlet, 'the posy of a ring;' iii. 2. 162. See Chambers, Book of Days, i. 221, for examples, such as 'In thee, my choice, I do rejoice;' &c. As these inscriptions were necessarily brief, any short inscription was also called a posy, even though neither in verse nor poetically expressed. Thus, Udall, on St. Luke, c. 23, speaking of the handwriting above the cross, calls it 'a superscription or poisee written on the toppe of the crosse' (R.) So also in the following: 'And the tente was replenysht and decked with this posie, After busie labour commeth victorious rest;' Hall's Chron. Hen. V, an. 7. [The still older name for a motto was a reason; see Fabyan's Chron. Hen. V, an. 8, ed. Ellis, p. 587.] 2. Mr. Wedgwood well accounts for posy in the sense of bouquet, as follows: 'A nosegay was probably called by this name from flowers being used enigmatically, as is still common in the East. Among the tracts mentioned in the Catalogue of Heber's MSS., no. 1442, is "A new yeares guifte, or a posie made upon certain flowers presented to the Countess of Pembroke; by the author of Chloris, &c.;" see Notes and Queries, Dec. 19, 1868 (4 S. ii. 577). So also in Beaumont and Fletcher, Philaster, Act i. sc. 1 [sc. 2 in Darley's ed.]; "Then took he up his garland, and did shew What every flower, as country people hold Did signify;" and see Hamlet, iv. 5. 175. To this I may add, that a posy was even sometimes expressed by precious stones; see Chambers, as above. The line 'And a thousand fragrant posies' is by Marlowe; The Passionate Shepherd, st. 3. Doublet, posies.

POT, a vessel for cooking, or drinking from. (C.) This is one of the homely Celtic words. M. E. pot, Ancren Riwe, p. 368, l. 21. — Irish potá, potadh, a pot, vessel; Gael. poit; W. pot; Bret. pōd. Hence were borrowed E. pot, Du. pot, F. pot, &c. β. Allied to Irish potaim, I drink, Gael. poit, to drink, Lat. potare, to drink. All from ✓PA, to drink; see POTABLE. ¶ The phrase 'to go to pot' means to be put into the pot, i. e. the melting-pot, from the melting down of old metal; see Cor. i. 4. 47, and Mr. Wright's note. Der. pot-ash, i. e. ash obtained from the pot, so called because the alkaline salt was obtained by burning vegetable substances; Chaucer mentions fern-ashes, as used for making glass; C. T. 10569; 'Pot-ashes (anno 12 Car. 2. cap. 4) are made of the best wood or fern-ashes,' Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691; similarly Du. potasch (from pot and asch, ashes), G. potasche (from asche, ashes); Latinised in the form potassa, whence potass-ium. Also pot-herb, pot-hook, pot-sherd (see SHERD). Also pot, verb; potter; M. E. potter, Cursor Mundi, 16536 (cf. Irish potair, a potter); potter-y, from F. poterie (Cot.). And see pot-age, pot-let, pot-walloper. [†]

POTABLE, that may be drunk. (F., — L.) In Shak. 2 Hen. IV. iv. 5. 163. — F. potable, 'potable, drinkable'; Cot. — Lat. potabilis, drinkable; formed with suffix -bilis from potare, to drink. — Lat. potus, drunken; formed with suffix -us (Aryan -ta) from ✓PA, to drink; cf. Skt. pá, to drink, Gk. πóτος, a drinking, Irish potaim, I drink, Lithuan. potá, a drinking-bout. Der. potable-ness; and see potation, potion; also pot, pot-ash.

POTASH, POTASSIUM; see under Pot.

POTATION, a draught. (L.) Not a F. word. In Shak. Oth. ii. 3. 56. — Lat. potationem, acc. of potatio, a drinking. — Lat. potatus, pp. of potare, to drink. — Lat. potus, drunken; see POTABLE. Der. (from the same ✓PA) bib, im-bibe, im-bue, im-brue. [†]

POTATO, a tuber of a plant much cultivated for food; the plant itself. (Span., — Hayti.) In Shak. Merry Wives, v. 5. 21. 'Potatoes, natives of Chili and Peru, originally brought to England from Santa Fé, in America, by Sir John Hawkins, 1563; others ascribe their introduction to Sir Francis Drake, in 1586; while their general culture is mentioned by many writers as occurring in 1592;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. They are also mentioned by Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, Act ii. sc. 1. — Span. patata, a potato; also batata, which is the true form. — Hayti batata. 'Peter Martyr, speaking of Haiti, says (in Decad. 2. c. 9), "Effodiunt etiam e tellure suapte naturā nascentes radices, indigenæ batatas appellant, quas ut vidi insubres napos existimavi, aut magna terræ tubera." ... Navagerio, who was in the Indies at the same time, writes in 1526, "Io ho vedute molte cose dell' Indie ed ho avuto di quelle radice che chiamano batatas, e le ho mangiate; sono di sapor di castagno." Doubtless these were sweet potatoes or yams, which are still known by this name in Spanish.'—Wedgwood.

POTCH, to thrust, poke. (C.) In Shak. Cor. i. 10. 15. Merely a weakened form of poke, just as pitch is of pick, stitch of stick, &c. See POKE (2).

POTENT, powerful. (L.) In Shak. Temp. i. 2. 275. Rich. gives a quotation from Wyatt, shewing that the word was used in 1539. — Lat. potent-, stem of potens, powerful, pres. part. of possum, I am able; see POSSIBLE. Der. potency, Hamlet, iii. 4. 170, a coined word, due to Lat. potentia, power; potent-ial, M. E. potencial, Chaucer, House of Fame, b. iii. l. 5, from F. potentiel, 'strong, forcible,' Cot., which from Lat. potentialis, forcible (only found in the derived adverb potentialiter), formed with suffix -alis from the sb. potentia; whence potent-ial, potent-ial-ty. Also potent-ate, L. L. v. 2. 684, from F. potentat, 'a potentate, great lord,' Cot., which from Low Lat. potentatus, a supreme prince (Ducange), from potentare, to exercise authority (id.). Also omni-potent, q. v.; and armi-potent, Chaucer, C. T. 1984. Doublet, puissant, q. v.

POTHER, bustle, confusion, constant excitement. (C.) In Pope, Horace, Sat. ii. 2. 45. 'To make a potther, to make a noise or bustle;' Bailey's Dict. vol. i. ed. 1735. Older form pudder. 'Pudder, noise, bustle; to keep a pudder about trifles;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Spelt poother in old edd. of Shak. Cor. ii. 1. 234; pudder in K. Lear, iii. 2. 50. M. E. puðeren, apparently in the sense 'to poke about;' see Ancren Riwe, p. 214, note c. Another form is potter; 'To potter, to stir or disorder anything;' Bailey, vol. i. 'Potter, to stir, poke, confuse, do anything inefficiently;' also 'Potther, to shake, to poke, West;' Halliwell.

β. All these are frequentative verbs from the verb to pote, 'to push, or kick,' Halliwell; M. E. puten, to put, push; whence E. Put, q. v. The word occurs also in Dutch as poteren, 'to search one thoroughly,' Hexham; puteren, to fumble, lit. to poke about; words of Celtic origin. See POTTER and POKE (2). The sense 'to stir about' seems the orig. one; hence that of 'turmoil' as the result of stirring. ¶ Not connected with potther, though perhaps some confusion with Irish buidhirt changed the M. E. form puteren into puðeren. See BOTHER.

POTION, a drink. (F., — L.) In Shak. Romeo, v. 3. 244. M. E. poçion, K. Alisaunder, 3509. — F. poçion, 'a potion'; Cot. — Lat. potiōnem, acc. of potio, a drink; see POISON. Doublet, poison.

POTTAGE, broth, thick soup. (F., — C.) M. E. potage, Ancren Riwe, p. 412, l. 27. — F. potage, 'pottage, porridge'; Cot. Formed, with suffix -age (Lat. -aticum), from F. pot, which is from a Celtic source; see Pot.

POTTER, to go about doing nothing. (C.) A provincial word, but in common use. 'Potter, to go about doing nothing, to saunter idly; to work badly, do anything inefficiently; also, to stir, poke, North; also, to confuse, disturb, Yorksh.;' Halliwell. 'To stir or disorder anything;' Bailey's Dict., vol. i. ed. 1735. It is the frequentative form, with the usual suffix -er, of pote, to poke about, explained 'push, kick,' in Halliwell. — W. putio, to push, poke, Gael. put, Corn. poot; see further under Put. From the same Celtic source is Swed. dial. påta, to poke, esp. with a stick (Rietz); O. Du. poteren, 'to search one thoroughly' (Hexham), from the notion of poking a stick into every corner; also Cleveland paut, pote, to push at anything; &c. See Potther.

POTTLE, a small measure, basket for fruit. (F., — C.) M. E. potel, to translate Lat. laguncula; Wyclif, Isaiah, x. 33. — O. F. potel, a small pot, a small measure (Roquefort). Dimin. of F. pot; see Pot.

POTWALLOPER, lit. one who boils a pot. (Hybrid; C. and O. Low G.) 'Potwalloper, a voter in certain boroughs in England, where all who boil (wallop) a pot are entitled to vote;' Webster. Corrupted to pot-wabblers (Halliwell); also found as pot-walliners, given as a Somersetshire word in Upton's MS. additions to Junius (Halliwell). See Pot and Gallop.

POUCH, a poke, or bag. (F., — C.) M. E. pouche, Chaucer, C. T. 3929 (A. 3931). — O. F. pouche, found in the 14th cent. as a variant of poche, 'a pocket, pouch, or poke;' Cot. See Littre. Rather of Celtic than of Teut. origin; see POKE (1). Der. pouch, verb. Doublet, poke (1).

POULT, a chicken, fowl. (F., — L.) Poult is used by W. King (died A. D. 1712), in a poem on The Art of Cookery (R.) Also in Chapman, Revenge for Honour, i. 1. 21. M. E. pulte, Prompt. Parv. — F. poulet, 'a chicken;' Cot. Dimin. of poule, a hen. — Low Lat. pulla, a hen; fem. of pultus, a young animal, cognate with E. Foal, q. v. Der. poult-er, one who deals in fowls, i. Hen. IV. ii. 4. 480. M. E. pulter, Prompt. Parv.; whence the later form poult-er-er (Dekker, Honest Whore, pt. ii), by the unnecessary reduplication of the suffix -er, denoting the agent. Also poult-r-y, M. E. pultris, Prompt. Parv., formed with F. suffix -er-ie, as in the case of pant-r-y, &c. And see Pullet. Doublet, pullet. [†]

POULTICE, a soft plaster applied to sores. (L.) In Shak. Romeo, ii. 5. 65. Gascoigne, Steel Glas, 997 (ed. Arber, p. 77), has the pl. form pultesses. The F. word is pulte, and it would appear that the word was not taken from the F., but (being a medical term) directly from the Latin; the spelling with -ce being given to it to make it look like French. The F. pulte is from Lat. acc. pultem, but the E. pultesses is a double plural, from a form pultes which is simply the Latin plural. — Lat. pultes, pl. of puls, a thick pap, or pap-like substance. — Gk. πόλτος, porridge. ¶ Otherwise poultice (if a F. form) must answer to a Low Lat. form *pulticius; I find no trace of it. Der. poultice, verb.

POUNCE (1), to seize with the claws, as a bird, to dart upon suddenly. (F., — L.) Orig. a term in hawking. A hawk's claws were called pounces, as in Spenser, F. Q. i. 11. 19; hence to pounce upon, to seize with the claws, strike or pierce with the talons. The orig. sense of the verb was 'to pierce,' to prick, to adorn with pierced work. A pounce is also a punch, or stamp; see Nares. In Chaucer, Pers. Tale, De Ira, Group I, l. 421, we read of 'pounsoned and dagged clothynge' in three MSS., whilst two others have 'pounsed and dagged clothynge.' β. Here pounsoned has the same sense, but is a derivative word, being made from the sb. pounson or punsoun, a bodkin or dagger; for which see Barbour's Bruce, i. 545, and my note on the line. The form pounson answers to Low Lat. acc. punctionem, whence the mod. F. poinçon, a punch or puncheon for piercing holes. We must refer the verb pounsen to an O. F. *pincer, to pierce, now lost, and perhaps not recorded. [The mod. F. poncer is related to POUNCE (2).] γ. We have, however, parallel forms in other languages, viz. Span. punchar, to prick, punch, puncha, a thorn, prick, sharp point, exactly equivalent to the pounce or talon of the hawk; Ital. punzecchiare, to prick slightly (which presupposes a form punzare, to prick); punzone, a pincer. δ. The O. F. *poncer, Span. punchar, Ital. *punzare, answer to a Low Lat. *punctiare, to prick, not found, but readily formed from punctus, pp. of pungere, to prick. See Point, Pungent. Doublet, punch (1), q. v. [†]

POUNCE (2), fine powder. (F.,—L.) Merely a doublet of pumice, and orig. used for powdered pumice-stone, but afterwards extended to other kinds of fine powder, and to various uses of it. 'Long effeminate pouldred [powdered] pounced haire,' Prynn, Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act vi [iv?] sc. 5 (R.) 'Pounce, a sort of powder strew'd upon paper to bear ink, or to soak up a blot,' Phillips, ed. 1706. = F. ponce; 'pierre ponce, a pumice stone,' Cot. 'Ponce, pumice,' Hamilton. — Lat. pumicem, acc. of pumex, pumice; whence ponce (= pomice) is regularly formed. β. There is little doubt that pumex stands for spumex, and that the stone is named from its lightness and general remarkable resemblance to foam; from Lat. spuma, foam; which from Lat. spuere, to spit, throw up; see Spume, Spew. Der. pounce, to sprinkle with pounce (F. poncer); pounce-box; pounce-et-box, i Hen. IV. i. 3. 38. Doublet, pumice.

POUND (1), a weight, a sovereign. (L.) The sense of 'weight' is the orig. one. M. E. pund, later pound, frequently with the pl. the same as the singular, whence the mod. phrase 'a five-pound note.' 'An hundred pund' = a hundred pounds, Havelok, 1633. = A. S. pund, pl. pund, a weight, a pound; see Luke, xix. 16, John, xii. 3. = Lat. pondo, a pound, used as an indeclinable sb., though orig. meaning 'by weight'; allied to pondus, a weight. Hence also were borrowed G. pfund, &c. = Lat. pendere, to weigh; closely allied to pendere, to hang; see Pendant. Der. pound-age; see Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691. And see pounder.

POUND (2), an enclosure for strayed animals. (E.) The same word as pond. 'Which thus in pound was pent;' Gascoigne, A. Deuise for Viscount Mountacute; see Gascoigne's Works, ed. Hazlitt, i. 84, l. 1. Rich. has the reading pond. M. E. pond; in the comp. pond-folde (other readings ponfolde, punfolde, pounfolde, tyndfold), P. Plowman, B. v. 633; with the sense 'pinfold' or 'pound.' = A. S. pund, an enclosure; the compound pund-breche, explained by infrastructura parci = the breaking into an enclosure, occurs in the Laws of Hen. I., c. 40; see Thorpe's Ancient Laws, vol. i. p. 540. Hence A. S. forpyndan, to shut in, repress; Grein, i. 320. Cf. Icel. pynda, to shut in, torment; O. H. G. piunta, an enclosure, cited by Grein, ii. 362; Irish pond, a pound for cattle, a pond. Der. pound, verb, Cor. i. 4. 17; im-pound. Also pin-fold, K. Lear, ii. 2. 9, for pind-fold = pound-fold, as shewn by M. E. pyndfold cited above, the vowel i being due to the y in the derived A. S. pyndan; as also in pind-ar, q. v. Doublet, pond.

POUND (3), to beat, bruise in a mortar. (E.) Here the d is excrement; it stands for poun, from an older form pun. Cf. soun-d for M. E. soun, goun-d, vulgar form of gown. M. E. pounen, to bruise, Wyclif, Matt. xxi. 44, earlier version. = A. S. punian, to pound; the pp. gepunod occurs as a various reading for gecnuod (= knocked, pounded) in Cockayne's Leechdoms, i. 176, footnote 4. Der. pound-er.

POUR, to cause to flow, send forth, utter, flow. (C.) M. E. pouren, P. Plowman, B. v. 220; often used with out, Gower, C. A. i. 302, l. 9. The orig. sense was prob. 'to jerk' or 'throw' water out of a vessel, and it is almost certainly of Celtic origin. It is commonly referred to W. buru, to cast, to throw, to strike, to rain; whence buru gwlaw, to cast rain, i. e. to rain (from gwlaw, rain). I suspect that an older and truer form occurs in Irish purraim, I push, jerk, thrust; Gael. purrr, to push, thrust, drive, urge. ¶ Not improbably ultimately identical with Pore (2), q. v. [†]

POURTRAY, the same as Portray, q. v.

POUT (1), to look sulky or displeased, to puff out the lips or cheeks. (C.) In Shak. Cor. v. i. 52. M. E. pouten, in Reliquiae Antiquae, ii. 211 (Stratmann). Of Celtic origin; cf. W. pwdu, to pout, to be sullen, which I suppose to stand for an older form putu. Cf. W. cad, battle, where the O. Welsh form is cat (Rhys); and cf. W. pwdr, rotten, with Lat. putris. β. Perhaps further related to W. putio, to push, thrust; see Put. Cf. also W. poten, a paunch; potenu, to form a paunch. ¶ May not the W. pwdu account for F. bouder, to pout? See Boudoir. Der. pout (2), pout-er, pout-ing. And see pudding.

POUT (2), a kind of fish. (C.) 'It has the power of inflating a membrane which covers the eyes and neighboring parts of the head;' Webster. 'Pout, or eel-pout;' Minshen. We find A. S. alepūtan, eel-pouts, in Ælfric's Colloquy (Fisherman), in Wright's Vocab. i. 6, l. 5. Of Celtic origin; see Pout (1); from its pouting out the membrane. ¶ The Sc. pout, chicken (Jamieson) = poult, q. v. &

POVERTY, the state of being poor. (F.,—L.) In early use. M. E. pouertē (with u = v), O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 143, last line. = O. F. pouerte, later poureté, 'poverty,' Cot. Mod. F. pauvreté, = Lat. paupertatem, acc. of paupertas, poverty; see Poor.

POWDER, dust. (F.,—L.) M. E. poudre, Rob. of Glouc. p. 345, l. 9. = F. poudre, 'powder,' Cot., who also gives the spelling pouldre. O. F. poldre, puldre, in Burguy. Formed with excrement d after l, so that puldre stands for pulre. = Lat. puluerem, acc. of pulvis, dust. Allied to pollen, fine meal, palea, chaff; lit. 'that which is shaken about;' cf. πάλλειν, to shake. See Pollen. Der. powder, verb. M. E. pouderen, Rich. Redeles, Pass. i. l. 46; powder-y.

POWER, might, ability, strength, rule. (F.,—L.) M. E. poër, Popular Treatises on Science, ed. Wright, p. 133, l. 36; also poër, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1654. Hence power, where the w is used to avoid the appearance of an hiatus; Prick of Conscience, 5884. = O. F. poër, also pooir, and (in order to avoid hiatus) pouvoir, power; mod. F. pouvoir. The O. F. poër stands for poter, as shewn by Ital. potere, power; cf. also Span. poter, power. β. The word is merely due to a substantival use of an infinitive mood, as in the case of leisure, pleasure; the Ital. potere, Span. poter, are both infinitives as well as sbs., with the sense 'to be able.' = Low Lat. potere, to be able, which (as shewn by Diez) took the place of Lat. posse in the 8th century. The Lat. posse is itself a contraction for pot-esse, used by Plautus and Lucretius; and pot-esse, again, stands for potis esse, to be powerful; from potis, powerful, and esse, to be. See Possible and Essence. Der. power-ful, Spenser, F. Q. iv. 10. 36; power-ful-ly, power-ful-ness; power-less, power-less-ly, power-less-ness. Doublet, posse.

POX, an eruptive disease. Written for pocks, pl. of pock, a pustule; see Pock. PRACTICE, a habit of doing things, performance. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) A weakened form of the older form praktike, by change of ke to ce (for che). M. E. praktike, Chaucer, C. T. 5769; practique, Gower, C. A. ii. 89. = F. pratique, 'practise, experience,' Cot. = Lat. practica, fem. of practicus. = Gk. πρακτικός, fit for business, practical; whence ἡ πρακτική (ἐπιστήμη), practical science, practice. = Gk. πρακτός, to be done; verbal adj. of πράσσειν (= πρακεῖν), to do, to accomplish. β. From base PARK, extension from PAR, to go through; whence Gk. περάω, I pass through; and E.fare; see Fare. Der. practise, verb, K. John, i. 214 (cf. practisour = practis-er, in Chaucer, C. T. 424); practis-er. Also practic-able, used by Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. ser. 2 (R.), formed from F. practiquer, 'to practise,' Cot.; hence practic-abil-y, practic-abil-ity; also practic-al, North's Plutarch, pt. ii. p. 18 (R.), practic-al-ly, -ness. Also practition-er, formed with a needless suffixed -er from the older term practician, with the same sense (both practician and practitioner are in Minshen), from F. praticien, 'a practitioner or practitioner in law,' Cot. And see pragmatic.

PRÆTOR, PRETOR, a Roman magistrate. (L.) In Shak. Jul. Cæs. i. 3. 143. = Lat. prætor, lit. a goer before, a leader; contracted form of præ-itor. = Lat. præ, before; and itor, a goer, from ire, to go, which from PAR, to go. See Pre and Itinerant. Der. prætor-ium, the prætor's hall, Mark, xv. 16; prætor-i-an; prætorship. PRAGMATIC, well-practised, fit for business, active. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) 'These pragmatic young men;' Ben Jonson, The Devil is an Ass, Act i. sc. 3, end of Fitzdottrel's long speech. 'Pragmaticall, practised in many matters;' Minshen, ed. 1627. = F. pragmaticque; chiefly in the phrase la pragmatique sanction, 'a confirmation of a decree made in the council of Basil,' &c., Cot. = Lat. pragmaticus. = Gk. πραγματικός, skilled in business. = Gk. πραγματ-, stem of πράγμα (= πρακε-), a deed, thing done. = Gk. πράσσειν (= πρακεῖν), to do; see Practice. Der. pragmatic-al, -al-ly. Note also praxis, an example for exercise, from Gk. πράξις, a deed, action.

PRAIRIE, an extensive meadow or tract of grass. (F.,—L.) A word imported from America in modern times. 'The wondrous, beautiful prairies;' Longfellow, Evangeline, iv. 12. = F. prairie, 'a meadow, or meadow ground;' Cot. = Low Lat. prat-aria, meadowland; used A. D. 832; Ducange. = Lat. prat-um, a meadow; with adj. fem. suffix -aria. Perhaps connected with Gk. πλωρίς, broad, Skt. prihu, large; from PRAT, to spread; cf. Skt. prath, to spread, extend.

PRaise, commendation, tribute of gratitude. (F.,—L.) M. E. preis, Chaucer, C. T. 8902. [The verb preisen, to praise, is found much earlier, in the Ancien Riwe, p. 64, l. 22.] = O. F. preis, price, value, merit. = Lat. pretium, price, value; see Price. Der. praise, verb, M. E. preisen, O. F. preiser (= Lat. pretiare); prais-er; praise-worthy, Much Ado, v. 2. 90; praise-worthi-ness. Also ap-praise, dis-praise, ap-prec-i-ate, de-prec-i-ate; prec-i-ous. Doublets, price, prize (2).

PRANCE, to strut about; in mod. E., to bound gaily, as a horse. (E.) Spelt prauce in Spenser, where it is used of a giant stalking along; F. Q. i. 7. 11. In Shak. it is used of a young man, i Hen. VI. ii. 1. 24. The old sense is to strut about, as if for display; and the word is a mere variant of prank. Used of a horse, Skelton, Bowge of Courte, l. 411. M.E. prauuncen; 'the horse may pryke and prauunce', Lydgate, Horse, Sheep, and Goose, l. 29. Also prancen, Gower, C.A. iii. 41. Cf. O. Du. pronken, 'to make a fine shew, to brag, strut; langs straat gaan pronken, to strut along, to walk proudly along the streets'; Sewel. See PRANK. Der. pranc-ing.

PRANK (1), to deck, to adorn. (E.) The old senses are to display gaudily, set out ostentatiously, to deck, dress up. 'Some pranche their ruffes'; Spenser, F. Q. i. 4. 14. M.E. pranken; 'Prankyde, as clothes, plicacio,' Prompt. Parv. 'I pranke ones gowne, I set the plyghtes [pleats] in order, ie mets les plies dune robe à poynt. Se yonder olde man, his gowne is pranked as if he were but a yonge man'; Palsgrave. 'Pranked with pletes'; Skelton, Elinour Rummyng, 69. It appears to be an E. word.

β. Closely connected with prink, used in the same sense; see examples in Nares. 'But marke his plumes, The whiche to princke he dayes and nights consumes'; Gascoigne, Weeds, Farewell with a Mischief, st. 6, ed. Hazlitt. [Here Rich. reads pranke.] Prink is a nasalised form of prick; cf. Lowland Scot. preek (lit. to prick), to be spruce; 'a bit preekin bodie, one attached to dress, self-conceited'; Jamieson; prick-me-dainty, finical; prink, primp, to deck, to prick. See PRICK.

γ. Allied words are O. Du. pronek, 'shewe, or ostentation', Hexham; pronen, to display one's dress, pronckepinken, pronckepinken, to glitter in a fine dress, Oudemans. Without the nasal, we have O. Du. pryken, 'to make a proud shew'; Sewel. Cf. also Low G. prunken, to make a fine show, prunk, show, display, Bremen Wörterbuch; G. prunk, show, parade; Dan. and Swed. prunk, show, parade; and perhaps G. prangen, Dan. prange, to make a shew.

δ. The notion of trimming by means of pricking or making small holes comes out also in the verb to prick, 2 Hen. IV, iii. 2. 122, 156 (and see Halliwell); note also the phrase point-device. Accordingly I regard prank and prink as formed from prick, just as pink is from pick; see PINK (1) and PINK (2). Der. prank (2), prance.

PRANK (2), a trick, mischievous action. (E.) In Shak. Hamlet, iii. 4. 2; K. Lear, i. 4. 259. Oth. ii. 1. 143; Skelton, Why Come Ye Nat to Courte, 365. Mr. Wedgwood well says: 'A prank is usually taken in a bad sense, and signifies something done in the face of others that makes them stare with amazement.' It is, in fact, an act done 'to shew off'; and is the same word as prank, show; see above.

PRATE, to talk idly. (Scand.) M.E. praten, Lidgate, Minor Poems, ed. Halliwell, 155; Coventry Plays, ed. Halliwell, 353 (Stratmann).—O. Swed. prata, to talk (Ihre); Dan. prate, to prate; also Swed. prat, Dan. prat, talk, prattle. + O. Du. praten, 'to prate', Hexham; mod. Du. praat, tattle; Low G. praten, to prate, praat, tattle, Bremen Wörterbuch. Perhaps of imitative origin; cf. G. grasseln, to crackle, which answers in form to E. prattle. Der. prate, sb., prat-er, prat-ing. Also prati-le, Temp. iii. 1. 57, the frequentative form, with the usual suffix -le; prattle, sb., Rich. II, v. 2. 26; prattler.

PRAWN, a small crustacean animal, like the shrimp. (Unknown.) M.E. prane, Prompt. Parv. Of unknown origin. ¶ Florio has: 'Parnocchie, a fish called shrimps or prauues.' This can hardly be other than a dimin. form of Lat. perna, a sea-mussel (lit. a ham), whence O. Ital. perna, 'a shell-fish called a nakre or narre' Florio; also Span. perna, flat shell-fish. From Gk. πέπρω, a ham; see BARNACLE. If prawn is from Lat. perna, there must have been an O. F. form *parne or *perne.

PRAY, to entreat, ask earnestly. (F.,—L.) In early use. M.E. preien, preyen; O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 287, l. 9; Havelok, 1440.—O. F. preier, later prier, 'to pray', Cot.—Lat. precari, to pray.—Lat. prec-, stem of prex, a prayer (base PRAK).—✓ PARK, to ask, beg; whence also Skt. prackh, to ask, G. fragen, &c. Der. prayer, M.E. preiere, preyere, Chaucer, C. T. 231, 1206, from O. F. preiere, proiere, mod. F. prière (Ital. pregaria), from Lat. precaria, fem. of precarius; see PRECARIOUS. Hence prayer-ful, prayer-less.

PRE-, prefix, beforehand. (L.; or F.,—L.) Used both as a F. and Lat. prefix; F. pre-, Lat. pre- (in pre-hendere), usually præ-—Lat. præ, prep., before; put for prai, a locative case. Closely connected with pro; see PRO-. Also allied to the prefixes per-, para-, pur-.

PREACH, to pronounce a public discourse on sacred matters. (F.,—L.) M.E. prechen, Ancren Riwle, p. 70, ll. 22, 24.—O. F. precher (prescher in Cot.), mod. F. prêcher.—Lat. prædicare, to make known in public, declare publicly.—Lat. præ, before, before men, publicly; and dicare, to proclaim, allied to dicere, to say. See PRE- and DICTION. Der. preach-er, preach-ing; preach-ment, 3 Hen. VI, i. 4. 72. Doublet, predicate.

PREAMBLE, an introduction, preface. (F.,—L.) M.E. pre-ample, Chaucer, C. T. 6413.—F. preamble, 'a preamble, preface, prologue'; Cot.—Lat. præambulus, adj., formed from præambulare, to walk before.—Lat. præ, before; and ambulare, to walk; see PRE- and AMBLE. Der. preambul-at-ion, Chaucer, C. T. 6419.

PREBEND, a portion received for maintenance by a member of a cathedral church. (F.,—L.) Defined in Minshew, ed. 1627.—O. F. prebende, 'a prebendry', Cot.; mod. F. prébende, a prebend.—Lat. præbenda, a payment to a private person from a public source; fem. of præbendus, fut. pass. part. of præbere, to afford, supply, give.—Lat. præ, before; and habere, to have; whence præhibere, to hold forth, proffer, offer, contracted to præbere. See PRE- and HABIT. Der. prebend-al; prebend-ary, Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale, 422. And see pledge.

PRECARIOUS, uncertain, held by a doubtful tenure. (L.) 'Powers which he but precariously obeys'; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. i. c. 10, near end of § 10. Formed (by change from -us to -ous, as in numerous instances) from Lat. precarius, obtained by prayer, obtained as a favour, doubtful, precarious.—Lat. precari, to pray; see PRAY. Der. precariously, -ness.

PRECAUTION, a caution taken beforehand. (F.,—L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627.—O. F. precaution, 'a precaution', Cot. Mod. F. précaution.—Lat. præcautionem, acc. of præcautio, comp. of præ, before, and cautio, a caution; see PRE- and CAUTION. Der. precaution-ary.

PRECEDE, to go before. (F.,—L.) In Hamlet, i. 1. 122.—O. F. preceder, 'to precede', Cot.; mod. F. préceder.—Lat. præcedere, to go before; comp. of præ, before, and cedere, to go; see PRE- and CEDE. Der. preced-ence, L. L. L. iii. 83, from O. F. precedences, 'precedence', Cot., which from Lat. præcedentia, a going forward, an advance; preced-enc-y. Also preced-ent, adj., Hamlet, iii. 4. 98 (spelt presidents, Skelton, ed. Dyce, i. 7. l. 23), from O. F. precedent, 'precedent, foregoing', Cot.; preced-ent-ly. Hence, with a change of accent, preced-ent, sb., Temp. ii. 1. 291; preced-ent-ed, un-preced-ent-ed; preced-ing. Also precess-ion, q. v.

PRECENTOR, the leader of a choir. (L.) In Todd's Johnson, with a quotation dated A. D. 1622.—Lat. præcentor, a leader in music, precentor.—Lat. præ, before; and cantor, a singer, from cantare, to sing, chant; see PRE- and CHANT.

PRECEPT, a rule of action, commandment, maxim. (F.,—L.) M.E. precept, Wyclif, Acts, xvi. 24.—O. F. precepte, 'a precept', Cot.; mod. F. précepte.—Lat. præceptum, a precept, rule; orig. neut. of præceptus, pp. of præcipere, to take beforehand, also, to give rules.—Lat. præ, before; and capere, to take; see PRE- and CAPTURE. Der. precept-ive; precept-ial, Much Ado, v. 1. 24; precept-or, from Lat. præceptor, a teacher; precept-or-ial, precept-or-y, precept-r-ess.

PRECESSION, a going forward. (L.) Chiefly in the phrase precession of the equinoxes, defined in Phillips, ed. 1706. From Lat. præcessionem, acc. of *præcessio, a coined word; from præcessus, pp. of præcedere; see PRECEDE.

PRECINCT, a territorial district. (L.) Spelt precinct in Fabyan, Chron. vol. i. c. 172; ed. Ellis, p. 168, l. 27.—Low Lat. præcinctum, a boundary; Ducange.—Lat. præcinctum, neut. of præcinctus, pp. of præcingere, to enclose, surround, gird about.—Lat. præ, before, used as an augmentative, with the sense of 'fully'; and cingere, to gird; see PRE- and CINCTURE. [†]

PRECIOUS, valuable, costly, dear. (F.,—L.) M.E. precious, P. Plowman, A. ii. 12 (footnote); Wyclif, 1 Pet. ii. 6.—O. F. precios, precieus, mod. F. prétieux, precious.—Lat. pretiosus, valuable.—Lat. pretium, a price, value; see PRICE. Der. preciously, -ness.

PRECIPICE, a very steep place, an abrupt descent. (F.,—L.) In Minshew, and in Shak. Hen. VIII, v. 1. 140.—O. F. precipice, mod. F. précepice (Littre).—Lat. præcipitium, a falling headlong down; also, a precipice.—Lat. præcipiti-, crude form of præceps, head-foremost.—Lat. præ, before; and capiti-, crude form of caput, the head, cognate with E. head; see PRE- and HEAD. Der. precipit-ous, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 6. last §, from O. F. precipiteus, 'headlong', Cot.; precipit-ous-ly, -ness. Also precipit-ate, adj., properly a pp., from Lat. præcipitare, to cast headlong; used as a verb in Minshew, and in Shak. K. Lear, iv. 6. 50; precipit-ate-ly; precipit-ant; precipit-ance, precipit-anc-y; also precipit-at-ion, from O. F. precipitation, 'precipitation', Cot.

PRECISE, definite, exact. (F.,—L.) We find presysely, adv., in Fabyan, Chron. vol. i. c. 245; ed. Ellis, p. 287, l. 44.—O. F. precis, fem. precise, 'strict, precise'; Cot. Mod. F. précis.—Lat. præcisus, cut off, shortened, brief, concise; the sense of 'strict' arose from that of 'concise', because an abstract is precise, to the exclusion of irrelevant matter.—Lat. præcidere, to cut off near the end.—Lat. præ, before, hence, near the end; and cadere, to cut. See PRE- and CASURE. Der. precise-ly, -ness; precis-ion, a late word. Also precis-ian, a precise person; a coined word; see Nares.

PRECLUDE, to hinder by anticipation, shut out beforehand. (L.) A late word; used by Pope and Burke; see Todd's Johnson and Richardson.—Lat. præcludere, to close, shut up, hinder from access.—Lat. præ, in front; and cludere, to shut; see PRE- and CLAUDE. Der. præ-clusion, præclus-ion.

PRECOCIOUS, premature, forward. (L.) 'Many precocious trees; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 6. part 4. [Evelyn, as cited in R., uses precoce, answering to mod. F. précoce.] A coined word; from præcoci, crude form of præcox, ripe before its time, premature; also spelt præcocius, præcocius.—Lat. præ, before; and coquere, to cook, to ripen; see Pre- and Cook. Der. præcocius-ly, -ness; præcoci-ly.

PRECONCEIVE, to conceive beforehand. (F.,—L.) Used by Bacon (R.); but no reference is given. Coined from Pre- and Conceive. Der. præconception; from Pre- and Conception.

PRECONCERT, to concert or plan beforehand. (F.,—Ital.,—L.) 'Some præconcerted stratagem;' Warton, Hist. of E. Poetry, iii. 138, ed. 1840. Coined from Pre- and Concert.

PRECURSOR, a forerunner. (L.) In Shak. Temp. i. 2. 201. —Lat. præcursor, a forerunner. —Lat. præ, before; and cursor, a runner, from currere, to run; see Pre- and Course. Der. præcursor-y; note also præcurse, a forerunning, Hamlet, i. 1. 121.

PREDATORY, given to plundering. (L.) Rich. gives a quotation from Reliquie Wottonianæ, p. 455. Englished from prædatorius, plundering; from prædator, a plunderer. —Lat. prædatus, pp. of prædari, to plunder, get booty. —Lat. præda, prey, booty; see Prey.

PREDECESSOR, one who has preceded another in an office. (L.) In Shak. Hen. V. i. 1. 181; also an ancestor, Hen. V. i. 2. 248. —Lat. prædecessor, a predecessor. —Lat. præ, before; and decessor, one who retires from an office, from decessum, sup. of decidere, to depart, which is compounded of de, from, away, and cedere, to go. See Pre-, De-, and Cede.

PREDESTINE, to destine by fate. (F.,—L.) [We find M. E. prædestinacioun in Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. 6, l. 3844. Prædestinate is well used as a pp. in: 'They were prædestinate to suffice yet more plagues,' Hall's Chron. Hen. IV. an. 4.] 'From our prædestin'd plagues that privileged be;' Drayton, Polyolbion, song 1. Prædestin'd is Englished from O. F. prædestiné, 'predestined, predestinated;' Cot. —Lat. prædestinatus, pp. of prædestinare, to determine beforehand. —Lat. præ, before; and destinare, to destine; see Pre- and Destine. Der. prædestinate, as above, from Lat. prædestinatus; prædestin-at-or, prædestin-at-ion, as above, from O. F. prædestination. Also prædestin-ar-i-an, a coined word.

PREDETERMINE, to determine beforehand. (F.,—L.) 'But he did not prædetermine him to any evil;' Bp. Taylor, vol. i. ser. 9 (R.) Coined from Pre- and Determine. Der. prædeterminate, prædetermin-at-ion.

PREDICATE, to affirm one thing concerning another. (L.) A term in logic. 'Which may as truly be predicated of the English play-haunters now, as of the Romans then;' Fyenne, Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act vi. sc. 2 (R.). —Lat. prædicatus, pp. of prædicare, to publish, proclaim; see Preach. Der. prædication, prædicable, prædicative. Also prædica-ment, one of the most general classes into which things can be distributed; see Tyndale, Obedience of a Christian Man (1528), in Specimens of English, ed. Skeat, p. 176, l. 317, from Low Lat. prædicamentum. Doublet, preach.

PREDICT, to tell beforehand, prophesy. (L.) In Milton, P. R. iii. 356. Shak. has predict as a sb., with the sense of 'prediction;' Sonnet xiv. 8. —Lat. prædictus, pp. of prædicere, to tell beforehand. —Lat. præ, before; and dicere, to say; see Pre- and Diction. Der. prædiction, Macb. i. 3. 55, from O. F. prædiction, 'a prediction;' Cot.; and this sb. probably suggested the verb to predict, as it is in early use. Also prædictive, from Lat. prædictivus.

PREDILECTION, a choosing beforehand, partiality, choice. (L.) A late word, added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. Coined from Lat. præ, before, beforehand; and dilectio, choice, love, from diligere, to choose out from others, to love. Diligere is compounded of dis, put for dis, apart; and legere, to choose. See Pre-, Dis-, and Legend.

PREDISPOSE, to dispose beforehand. (F.,—L. and Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Coined from Pre- and Dispose. Der. prædispos-it-ion (but see Pose and Position, where the difference in origin of these two words is explained).

PREDOMINATE, to rule over, reign. (L.) In Shak. Merry Wives, ii. 2. 294; Timon, iv. 3. 142. Coined from Pre- and Dominare. Der. predominant, in Minshew, ed. 1627, from dominant, stem of pres. part. of dominari, to rule; predominance; predominancy, Lord Bacon, Colours of Good and Evil, vii. 3.

PRE-EMINENCE, eminence above the rest. (F.,—L.) Spelt preheminece, Bacon, Essay ix. § 12; preemynence, Skelton, Why Come Ye Nat to Court, 406. —F. preheminece, 'preheminece;' Cot. [The insertion of h is due to a wish to avoid the hiatus.] —Lat. præminentia, a surpassing, excelling. —Lat. præ, before; and eminentia, eminence; see Pre- and Eminence. Der. præminent, from Lat. præminere, stem of the pres. part. of præminere, to excel; præminent-ly.

PRE-EMPTION, a purchasing before others. (L.) 'Right of preemption of first choice of wines in Bourdeaux;' Howell, Famil. Letters, b. ii. let. 55 [not 14]; dated 1634. Coined from Lat. præ, before; and emptio, a buying, from emptus or emtus, pp. of emere, to buy; see Pre- and Example.

PRE-ENGAGE, to engage beforehand. (F.,—L.) Todd gives two quotations for this word from Dryden, both without references. From Pre- and Engage. Der. præ-engagement.

PRE-EXIST, to exist beforehand. (L.) 'But if thy præ-existing soul;' Dryden, On Mrs. Killigrew, l. 29. From Pre- and Exist. Der. præ-exist-ent, præ-exist-ence.

PREFACE, the introduction to a book. (F.,—L.) In Shak. 1 Hen. VI. v. 5. 11. —O. F. preface, fem. 'a preface;' Cot.; mod. F. préface. Cognate with Ital. prefazio, a preface, Span. prefacio, corresponding to an O. F. preface of the masc. gender.

β. Formed from a Low Lat. *præfatum, not found, but substituted for Lat. præfatio, a preface, which produced the Ital. prefazione and Span. prefacion, and would have given a F. form præfaison. —Lat. præfatum, a preface; neut. of præfatus, pp. of præfari, to say beforehand. —Lat. præ, before; and fari, to speak. See Pre- and Fate. Der. præface, verb; præface-or-y, as if from a Lat. præfatorius.*

PREFECT, a governor, one placed in office, president. (F.,—L.) M. E. prefect, Chaucer, C. T. 15830 (where he is translating from Latin). —O. F. prefect; mod. F. préfet. —Lat. præfectus, a prefect, one set over others. —Lat. præ, before; and factus, made, set, pp. of facere, to make; see Pre- and Fact. Der. præfect-ship; also præfect-ure, borrowed from mod. F. préfecture, which from Lat. præfectura, a prefectship.

PREFER, to regard before others, esteem more highly, to advance or exalt. (F.,—L.) Common in Shak. Cor. iii. 1. 152, &c.; spelt preferre in Palsgrave. —O. F. preferre, 'to prefer, like better,' Cot. —Lat. præferre (pres. t. præfero), to carry in front; also to set in front, prefer. —Lat. præ, before; and ferre, cognate with E. bear; see Pre- and Bear. Der. prefer-able, from O. F. preferable, 'preferable,' Cot., also written præfer-ible; prefer-abl-y, prefer-able-ness; prefer-ence, from O. F. preferencia, 'preference;' Cot.; prefer-ment, Oth. i. 1. 36. [†]

PREFIGURE, to suggest by types. (F.,—L.) 'Prefigured by the temple of Solomon;' Bale, Ymage of both Churches (1550), pt. i (R.) From Pre- and Figure; but suggested by late Lat. præfigurare (White). Der. præfigure-ment, præfigurati-ion, præfigurati-ive.

PREFIX, to fix beforehand. (F.,—L.) 'I prefixe, je préfixe;' Palsgrave. Spenser has the pp. prefixed, Sonnet 46, l. 1. This is due to the O. F. præfix, 'prefixed, limited;' Cot. —Lat. præfixus, pp. of præfixere, to fix in front. —Lat. præ, before; and fixere, to fix; see Pre- and Fix. Der. præfix, sb., lit. that which is prefixed.

PREGNANT, fruitful, with child; full of significance. (F.,—L.) 'A pregnant argument;' Chaucer, Troilus, b. iv. 1179. —O. F. pregnant, 'pregnant, pithy;' Cot. —Lat. prægnantem, acc. of prægnans, pregnant. Prægnans has the form of a pres. part. from a verb *prægnare, to be before a birth, to be about to bear. —Lat. præ, before; and *gnare, to bear, of which the pp. gnatus, usually spelt natus, born, is in common use. See Pre- and Natal. Der. prægnant-ly; pregnancy, 2 Hen. IV. i. 2. 192.

PREHENSILE, adapted for grasping. (L.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. Coined with suffix -ilis from prehens-us, usually prehensus, pp. of prehendere, also prehendere, to lay hold of. —Lat. præ, before; and (obsolete) hendere, to seize, get, cognate with E. get; see Pre- and Get. Der. præison, prize (1).

PRE-HISTORIC, before history. (F.,—L.) Modern; from Pre- and Historic.

PREJUDGE, to judge beforehand. (F.,—L.) In Bacon, Life of Hen. VII. ed. Lumby, p. 8, l. 17. —O. F. præjuger, 'to prejudicate, prejudge;' Cot. —Lat. præiudicare; from præ, before; and iudicare, to judge; see Pre- and Judge. Der. præjudicate, All's Well, i. 2. 8, from Lat. præiudicatus, pp. of præiudicare; præjudicati-ion, præjudicati-ive; and see prejudice.

PREJUDICE, a prejudgment, an ill opinion formed beforehand. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Hen. VIII. i. 1. 182, ii. 4. 154. M. E. prejudice, Shoreham's Poems (Percy Soc.), p. 36, l. 21. —O. F. prejudice, 'a prejudice,' Cot. —Lat. præiudicium, a judicial examination previous to a trial; also, a damage, prejudice. —Lat. præ, before; and iudicium, a judgement. See Prejudge; also Pre- and Judicial. Der. præjudice, verb, 1 Hen. VI. iii. 3. 91; præjudicial, 3 Hen. VI. i. 1. 144; præjudicial-ly.

PRELATE, a bishop, church dignitary. (F.,—L.) In early use; in Layamon, 24502; pl. prelaz (put for prelats), Ancren Riwe, p. 10, l. 8. —O. F. prelat, 'a prelate,' Cot. —Lat. prælatius, set above, used as pp. of the verb præferre, to prefer, advance, but from a different root. —Lat. præ, before; and latus, put for ilatus (= Gk. ἵλαριος), from ✓ TAL, to lift; see Pre- and Elate. Der. prelat-ic, little used; prelat-ic-al, Milton, Reason of Church Government, b. ii. sect. 3 (R.); prelat-ic-al-ly; prelat-ist; prelac-y, Skelton, Why Come Ye Nat to Courte, 500.

PRELIMINARY, introductory. (F., -L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'Some preliminary considerations,' Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. ser. 3 (R.) Coined from Pre-, q. v., and O. F. liminaire, 'set before the entry, or at the beginning of, dedicatory,' Cot. From Lat. liminarem, acc. of liminaris, of or belonging to a threshold, coming at the beginning. - Lat. limin-, stem of limen, a threshold, allied to limes, a boundary; see Limit. Der. preliminari-ly.

PRELUDE, an introduction to a piece of music, a preface. (F., -L.) The Lat. form preludium was once used, and is the form given in Minshew, Cotgrave, and Blount. In Dryden, Britannia Rediviva, 187, it seems to be used as a verb. - O. F. prelude, 'a pre-ludium, preface, preamble,' Cot. - Late Lat. *preludium, *preludium, a prelude, perhaps a coined word; it is not in Ducange. - Lat. præludere, to play beforehand, also, to give a prelude beforehand, which is just Dryden's use of it. - Lat. præ, before; and ludere, to play; see Pre- and Ludicrous. Der. prelude, verb; prelus-ive, from pp. prælus-us, with suffix -ive.

PREMATURE, mature before the right time, happening before the proper time. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Not F., but Englished from Lat. præmaturus, too early, untimely, premature. - Lat. præ, before; and maturus, ripe; see Pre- and Mature. ¶ Cotgrave only gives the O. F. sb. prématurité, 'prematurity.' Der. prématur-ly, prématur-i-ty, prématur-ness.

PREMEDIATE, to meditate beforehand. (L.) In Shak. Hen. V. iv. 1. 170. - Lat. præmeditatus, pp. of præmeditari; see Pre- and Meditate. Der. præmeditat-ion, in Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. ii. c. 1 (R.), from F. præmeditation, 'premeditation,' Cot., from Lat. acc. præmeditationem.

PREMIER, chief or first, a chief, a prime minister. (F., -L.) The law-phrase premier seisin, first possession, was in use in common law; Minshew notes this use of it, A.D. 1627. Rich. quotes 'the Spaniard challengeth the premier place' from Camden's Remains. - F. premier, 'prime, first,' Cot. - Lat. primarius, acc. of primarius, chief, principal; formed with suffix -arius from prim-us, first. See Prime. Der. premier-ship.

PREMISE, PREMISES, a proposition, in logic, proved or assumed for the sake of drawing conclusions; one of the two propositions in a syllogism from which the conclusion is drawn. (F., -L.) The spelling premise stands for premiss, the true F. spelling; the spelling premiss is perhaps due to the Lat. form, but may also be for premiss. Minshew has 'the premisses;' but the correct pl. premisses is in Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 10, l. 2588. - O. F. premiss (mod. F. prémisse), omitted by Cotgrave, but in use in the 14th century (Littre). - Lat. præmissa (sententia being understood), a premiss, lit. that which is sent or put before. - Lat. præ, before; and mittere, to send; see Pre- and Mission. Der. premise, verb, orig. 'to send before,' as in Shak. 2 Hen. VI. v. 2. 41, from F. præ (= Lat. præ), before; and mis (fem. misse), pp. of mettre (= Lat. mittere), to send, to put. Also premises, s. pl., the adjuncts of a building, a sense due to the custom of beginning leases with the premises setting forth the names of the grantor and grantee of the deed; the sense was transferred from the description of these to the thing leased, and came to be used in the present vague way; see Blount's Nomolexicon, 1691. Wedgwood explains it more simply 'from the use of the term in legal language, where the appurtenances of a thing sold are mentioned at full in the first place, and subsequently referred to as the premises,' i. e. the things premised or mentioned above. [†]

PREMIUM, profit, bounty, reward, payment for a loan, &c. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., where he not only explains it by 'recompence,' but notes the mercantile use of it in insurances. - Lat. præmium, profit, lit. 'a taking before;' put for præ-inium (= præ-eminium). - Lat. præ, before; and emere, to take, also to buy; see Pre- and Example.

PREMONISH, to warn beforehand. (F., -L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. A coined word, from præ, before; and monish, a corrupted form of M. E. monesten, to warn, Wyclif, 2 Cor. vi. 1; just as admonish is corrupted from M. E. amonesten. See Pre-, Admonish, and Monition. Der. premonit-ion, Chapman, tr. of Homer, Od. ii. 321, coined from præ- and monition. Also premonit-ive; premonit-or, from Lat. præmonitor; premonit-or-y, premonit-or-i-ly. Also premonish-men (obsolete), used by Bale (R.)

PRENTICE; short for Apprentice, q. v.

PREOCCUPY, to occupy beforehand. (F., -L.) In Shak. Cor. ii. 3. 240. - O. F. preoccuper, 'to preoccupate, anticipate,' Cot. - Lat. præoccupare; from præ, before, and occupare, to occupy; see Pre- and Occupy. ¶ The peculiar ending of occupy is discussed under that word. Der. preoccupat-ion, from O. F. preoccupation (Minshew), 'a preoccupation,' Cot.; also preoccup-anc-y.

PREORDAIN, to ordain beforehand. (F., -L.) In Milton P. R. i. 127. From Pre- and Ordain; cf. O. F. preordonner, 'to preordinate, or fore-ordain,' Cot. ¶ The adj. preordinate (Lat. præordinatus) occurs in Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. ii. c. 12 (R.); and see Palsgrave. Der. preordinat-ion, used by Bale (R.); coined from præ- and ordination.

PREPARE, to make ready beforehand, arrange, provide. (F., -L.) In the Bible of 1551, Luke, iii. 4; and in Palsgrave. - O. F. preparer, 'to prepare,' Cot. - Lat. præparare, comp. of præ, beforehand, and parare, to get ready; see Pre- and Parade. Der. prepar-er, prepar-ed, prepar-ed-ly, -ness. Also prepar-at-ion, Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. ii. c. 1 (R.), from O. F. præparation, 'a preparation,' Cot.; prepar-at-ive, from O. F. præparatif, 'a preparative, or preparation,' Cot.; prepar-at-ive-ly; prepar-at-or-y, suggested by O. F. præparatoire, 'a preparatory,' Cot. Also prepare, sb., 3 Hen. VI. iv. 1. 131.

PREPAY, to pay beforehand. (F., -L.) Quite modern; not in Todd's Johnson. From Pre- and Pay. Der. prepai-d, prepay-ment.

PREPENSE, premeditated, intentional. (F., -L.) Chiefly in the phrase 'malice præpense;' formerly commonly written 'malice præpensed.' The expression 'præpensed murder' occurs in the Stat. 12 Hen. VII. cap. 7; see Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691. 'Malice præpensed is malice forethought;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - F. præ (= Lat. præ), beforehand; and penser, to think; see Pre- and Pansy. Der. præpense-ly.

PREPONDERATE, to outweigh, exceed in weight or influence. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. præponderatus, pp. of præponderare, to outweigh. - Lat. præ, before, hence, in excess; and ponderare, to weigh, from ponder, stem of pondus, a weight; see Pre- and Ponder. Der. præponder-at-ion; præponder-ant, præponder-ance.

PREPOSITION, a part of speech expressing the relation between objects, and governing a case. (F., -L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. - O. F. preposition, 'a preposition, in grammar,' Cot. - Lat. præpositionem, acc. of præpositio, a putting before; in grammar, a preposition. - Lat. præ, before; and positio, a putting, placing; see Pre- and Position. Der. præposition-al.

PREPOSSESS, to possess beforehand, preoccupy. (L.) 'Prepossesses the hearts of His servants;' Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. ser. 10 (R.) From Pre- and Possess. Der. prepossess-ing, prepossess-ion.

PREPOSTEROUS, contrary to nature or reason, absurd. (L.) 'Preposterouse, preposterus;' Levins, ed. 1570. - Lat. præposterus, reversed, inverted; lit. the last part forwards, hind side before. - Lat. præ, before, in front; and posterus, latter, coming after; see Pre- and Posterior. Der. preposterous-ly, -ness.

PREROGATIVE, an exclusive privilege. (F., -L.) In Spenser, F. Q. iv. 12. 31. - O. F. prerogative, 'a prerogative, privilege,' Cot. - Lat. prærogatiua, a previous choice or election, preference, privilege. Orig. fem. of prærogatus, one who is asked for an opinion before others. - Lat. præ, before; and -rogatus, formed from rogatus, pp. of rogare, to ask. See Pre- and Rogation.

PRESAGE, an omen. (F., -L.) In Shak. King John, l. 28; as a verb, Merch. Ven. iii. 2. 175. - O. F. præsaige, 'a presage, divining;' Cot. - Lat. præsaigium, a presage. - Lat. præsaigire, to perceive beforehand. - Lat. præ, before; and saigire, to perceive quickly, prob. allied to sagus, presaging, predicting. See Pre-, Sagacious. Der. præsaige, verb, answering to O. F. præsaigier; præsaig-er, Shak. Sonn. 23.

PRESBYTER, a priest, elder of the church. (L., - Gk.) 'Presbyters, or fatherly guides;' Hooker, Eccl. Polity, b. v. s. 78 (R.) - Lat. presbyter. - Gk. πρεσβύτερος, elder; comp. of πρεσβύς, old; see 1 Pet. v. 1. See Priest. Der. Presbyter-ian, a term applied to tenets embodied in a formula A.D. 1560, Haydn, Dict. of Dates, which see; Presbyter-ian-ism. Also presbyter-y, 1 Tim. iv. 14, where the Vulgate has presbyterium, from Gk. πρεσβυτήριον.

PRESCIENCE, foreknowledge. (F., -L.) In Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. v. pr. 3, l. 4478. - O. F. prescience, 'a prescience,' Cot. - Lat. præscientia, foreknowledge. - Lat. præ, before; and scientia, knowledge; see Pre- and Science. Der. prescient, Bacon (see R.), a later word, from præscient, stem of pres. part. of præscire, to know beforehand.

PRESCRIBE, to give directions, appoint by way of direction. (L.) In Levins, ed. 1570. - Lat. prescribere, to write beforehand, appoint, prescribe. - Lat. præ, before; and scribere, to write; see Pre- and Scribe. Der. prescrib-er; prescript (= prescribed), More's Utopia (English version), b. ii. c. 5, ed. Arber, p. 89, from Lat. pp. prescript-us; hence also prescript, sb., prescript-ible. Also prescript-ion, Cor. ii. 1. 127, from O. F. prescription, 'a prescription,' from Lat. acc. præscriptionem, from nom. præscriptio, a prescribing, precept, whence the medical use readily follows. Also prescript-ive, from Lat. præscriptivus.

PRESENCE, a being present or within view, mien, personal appearance, readiness. (F., -L.) M.E. presence, Chaucer, C. T. 5095. = O.F. presence. = Lat. praesentia, presence. = Lat. praesent-, stem of praesens, present; see Present. Der. presence-chamber.

PRESENT (1), near at hand, in view, at this time. (F., -L.) M.E. present, Wyclif, 1 Cor. iii. 22. = O.F. present. = Lat. praesent-, stem of praesens, present, lit. being in front, hence, being in sight. = Lat. prae, before, in front; and sens, being, cognate with Skt. sant, being; see Pre-, Absent, and Sooth. Der. present-ly, Temp. i. 2. 125; presence, q. v.; present (2), q. v.

PRESENT (2), to give, offer, exhibit to view. (F., -L.) M.E. presenten, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 63, l. 21, Chaucer, C. T. 12190. = O.F. presenter, 'to present,' Cot. = Lat. praesentare, to place before, hold out, present; lit. 'to make present.' = Lat. praesent-, stem of praesens, present; see Present (1). Der. present-er, present-able, present-ation, As You Like It, iv. 4. 112, from O.F. presentation, 'a presentation,' Cot., from Lat. acc. praesentationem; present-ee, one who is presented to a benefice, from O.F. pp. praesenté (Cot.); present-ment, Hamlet, iii. 4. 54, and (as a law-term) in Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691. Also present, sb., M.E. present, Ancrén Riwe, p. 114, l. 2, p. 152, l. 12, from O.F. présent, 'a present, gift,' Cot.

PRESENTIMENT, a perceiving beforehand, a conviction of some future event. (F., -L.) 'A presentiment of what is to be hereafter;' Butler, Analogy of Religion, pt. i. c. 6. § 11. = O.F. présentiment, 'a fore-feeling,' Cot.; suggested by Lat. praesentire, to perceive beforehand; see Pre- and Sentiment.

PRESERVE, to guard, keep, save. (F., -L.) M.E. preserven (with u = v), Gower, C. A. ii. 82, l. 28. = O.F. preserver, 'to preserve,' Cot. = Lat. prae, beforehand; and servare, to keep; see Pre- and Serve. Der. preserve, sb.; preserver-er; preserv-ation, Temp. ii. 1. 7, from O.F. préservation, omitted by Cotgrave, but in use in the 14th century (Littré); preserv-at-ive, Sir T. Elyot, The Governor, b. iii. c. 4 (R.), from O.F. préservatif, 'preservative,' Cot.; preserv-at-ory.

PRESIDE, to superintend, have authority over others. (F., -L.) In Cotgrave. = O.F. presider, 'to preside, govern,' Cot. = Lat. praesidere, to sit before or above, to preside over. = Lat. prae, before; and sedere, to sit, cognate with E. sit; see Pre- and Sit. Der. president, Wyclif, Deeds [Acts], xxiv. 23, 26, from O.F. président, 'a president,' Cot., from Lat. praesident-, stem of pres. part. of praesidere; president-ship; presidency; presidential.

PRESS (1), to crush strongly, squeeze, drive forcibly, urge, push. (F., -L.) M.E. pressen, pressen (with hard s), Chaucer, C. T. 2582. = F. presser, 'to press, strain,' Cot. = Lat. pressare, to press; frequentative formed from pressus, pp. of premere, to press; from a base PRAM, to press. Root unknown. Cf. Goth. anapraggan (= ana-prang-an), to harass, 2 Cor. vii. 5. Der. press, sb., M.E. pres, press, presse, Chaucer, C. T. 3212, 6104, Ancrén Riwe, p. 168, last line, from F. presse, 'a press, throng,' Cot.; press-er, press-ing, press-ing-ly; press-ure, Prompt. Parv., from O.F. pressure, 'pressure,' Cot., from Lat. pressura, orig. fem. of fut. part. of premere. Also press-fat, a pressing-vat, Haggai, ii. 16; see Fat (2) and Vat. Also print, im-print.

PRESS (2), to hire men for service, to engage men by earnest-money for the public service, to carry men off forcibly to become sailors or soldiers. (F., -L.) The Dictionaries do not explain this word at all well; the only adequate explanation is in Wedgwood. It is quite certain, as he shews, that press is here a corruption of the old word prest, ready, because it was customary to give earnest-money to a soldier on entering service, just as to this day a recruit receives a shilling. This earnest-money was called prest-money, i.e. ready money advanced, and to give a man such money was to imprest him, now corruptly written impress. 'At a later period, the practice of taking men for the public service by compulsion made the word to be understood as if it signified to force men into the service, and the original reference to earnest-money was quite lost sight of;' Wedgwood. β. Prest was once a common word for ready money advanced, or ready money on loan. 'And he sent thyder iii. somers [sumpter-horses] laden with nobles of Castel [Castile] and floreyms, to gyve in prest [as ready money] to knyghtes and squyers, for he knewe well otherwyse he sholde not have them come out of theyr houses;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 64 (R.) 'Requiring of the city a prest [an advance] of 6000 marks;' Bacon, Life of Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 18, l. 28. See also Skelton, Colin Clout, 350-354, and Dyce's note; North's Plutarch, ed. 1594, p. 638. Both prest-money and imprest-money are in Minshew, ed. 1627; and Cotgrave explains O.F. imprestance by 'prest, or imprest money, received and to be employed for another.' = O.F. prester, 'to lend, also, to trust out [advance] or sell unto daies' [unto an appointed time], Cot. Cf. O.F. prest, 'prest, ready, full dight, furnished, . . . prompt, nere at hand,' id. Ital. prestare, 'to lend,' Florio; imprestare, 'to lend or give to lene,' id. (Mod. F. prêter.) = Lat. præstare, to come forward or stand before, surpass, to become surety for, give, offer, furnish, provide. = Lat. prae, before; and stare, cognate with E. stand; see Pre- and Stand. Der. im-press, im-press-ment; also press-gang, q. v.

PRESS-GANG, a gang of men employed to 'press' sailors into the public service. (F., -L.; and E.) In Johnson's Dict. This word seems to be of rather late formation, and also to be associated with the notion of compulsion or pressing; at the same time, it certainly took its origin from the verb press, in the sense of 'to hire men for service;' see therefore Press (2), as orig. quite distinct from Press (1). And see Gang.

PRESTIGE, a delusion; also, influence due to former fame or excellence. (F., -L.) This word is in the very rare position of having achieved a good meaning in place of a bad one; the reverse is more usual, as noted in Trench, Study of Words. Cf. mod. F. prestige, 'fascination, magic spell, magic power, prestige,' Hamilton. In some authors, it had a bad sense, in E. as well as in F., but it is not an old word with us. 'Prestiges, illusions, impostures, juggling tricks;' Phillips, ed. 1706. = F. prestige; Cot. gives pl. prestiges, 'deceits, impostures, juggling tricks.' = Lat. praestigium, a deceiving by juggling tricks, a delusion, illusion; we also find Lat. pl. praestigia, tricks, deception, trickery. β. From the base praestig- of Lat. praestinguere, to darken, obscure, hence, to weaken, and so to deceive. = Lat. prae, before; and stig, base of stinguere, to extinguish, orig. to mark out by expunction; allied to Gk. στρίγειν (= strigēiv), to prick, puncture, brand; from √ STIG, to prick, whence also E. stick, to pierce. See Pre- and Stick.

PRESUME, to take for granted, suppose, to act forwardly. (F., -L.) 'When she presumed to taste of the tree;' Occleve, Letter of Cupid, st. 51 (A. D. 1402); in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 398, back. [Presumption, M.E. presumcioun, occurs earlier, spelt presumciun, Ancrén Riwe, p. 208, l. 20.] = O.F. presumer, 'to presume, or think too well of himselfe, . . . to presume, think, ween, imagine;' Cot. = Lat. presumere, to take beforehand, anticipate, presume, imagine. = Lat. prae, before; and sumere, to take; where sumere = sub-merere, from sub, under, and emere, to take, buy. See Pre-, Sub-, and Example. Der. presum-ing, presum-able, presum-ably; presumpt-ion (as above), from O.F. presumpcion (13th cent., Littré), later presomption, 'presumption,' Cot., from Lat. praesumptionem, acc. of praesumptio, formed from praesumptus, pp. of presumere. Also presumpt-ive, Daniel, Civil Wars, b. ii (R.), from O.F. presomptif, 'likely,' Cot.; presumpt-ive-ly; presumpt-u-ous, Skelton, ed. Dyce, l. 131, l. 160, Goldinge, tr. of Caesar, fol. 11 (R.), spelt presumptuous in Levins, from O.F. presomptueux (13th cent. presumptuose, 14th cent. presumptueux, Littré), which from Lat. praesumptuosus, praesumptuosus. Hence presumptuous-ly, ness.

PRESUPPOSE, to suppose beforehand. (F., -L. and Gk.) 'Wherefore it is to presuppose;' Fabyan, Chron. an. 1284-5, ed. Ellis, p. 389. = O.F. presupposer, 'to presuppose;' Cot. See Pre- and Suppose. Der. presuppos-it-ion (really from a different root; see Pose, Position).

PRETEND, to affect to feel, to feign. (F., -L.) M.E. pretenden, to lay claim, Chaucer, Troilus, b. iv. l. 922. = O.F. pretendre, 'to pretend, lay claim to;' Cot. = Lat. pretendere, to spread before, hold out as an excuse, allege, pretend. = Lat. prae, before; and tendere, to stretch, spread; see Pre- and Tend. Der. pretend-er, esp. used of the Old and Young Pretenders, so called because they laid claim to the crown. Also pretence, Macb. ii. 3. 137 (first folio), a mistaken spelling for pretense, from late Lat. pretensius, pp. of pretendere (the usual Lat. pp. is praetentum, but tendere gives both tensum and tentum); the right spelling pretense is in Spenser, F. Q. iv. 5. 23, with which cf. pretensed, i.e. intended, in Robinson's tr. of More's Utopia, ed. Arber, p. 20, l. 7. Also pretension, Bacon, Of a War with Spain (R.), formed as if from Lat. praetensio *.

PRETER, prefix, beyond. (L.; or F., -L.) O.F. preter, prefix, from Lat. praeter, beyond, which is a compar. form of prae, before, with Aryan suffix -TAR. See Pre- and Trans-.

PRETERIT, PRETERITE, past; the past tense. (F., -L.) M.E. preterit, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. v. pr. 6, l. 4990. = O.F. preterit, m. preterite, fem. 'past, overpast,' Cot. = Lat. praeteritus, pp. of praeterire, to pass by. = Lat. praeter, beyond; and ire, to go, from √ I, to go.

PRETERMIT, to omit. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. = Lat. praetermittere, to allow to go past, let slip. = Lat. praeter, past, beyond; and mittere, to let go, send; see Preter- and Mission. Der. pretermis-sion, from O.F. pretermis-sion, 'a pretermis-sion,' Cot., from Lat. acc. praetermissionem.

PRETERNATURAL, supernatural, extraordinary. (L.) 'Simple aire, being preternaturally attenuated;' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 30. From Preter- and Natural. ¶ So also preter-perfect, preter-imperfect, preter-pluperfect.

PRETEXT, a pretence, false reason. (F., -L.) In Shak. Cor. v. 6. 20. -O. F. pretexte, m. 'a pretext,' Cot. -Lat. prætextum, a pretext; orig. neut. of prætextus, pp. of prætexere, lit. 'to weave in front.' -Lat. præ, before; and texere, to weave; see Pre- and Text.

PRETOR, PRETORIAL; see Prætor.

PRETTY, pleasing, tasteful, neat, beautiful. (C.) Spelt pretie in Minshew and Levins. M. E. prati, praty, Prompt. Parv.; Destruction of Troy, ed. Panton and Donaldson, 2622, 10815, 13634. The old senses are 'comely' and 'clever,' as used in the above passages; but the true sense was rather 'tricky,' 'cunning,' or 'full of wiles,' though the word has acquired a better sense, it has never quite lost a sort of association with pettiness. -A. S. prætig, prætig, tricky, deceitful; 'Wille ge beon prætige,' tr. of Lat. 'Vultis esse versipelles;' Ælfric's Colloquy, in Wright's Voc. i. 12. A rare word; formed with the usual suffix -ig (as in stán-ig, E. ston-y) from a sb. prat, prætt, deceit, trickery; see prattas, as a gloss to Lat. artes (in a bad sense), Mone, Quellen, p. 347, col. 1. So also we have Lowland Scotch pratty, pretty, tricky, from prat, a trick, used by G. Douglas (Jamieson). + Icel. prettugr, tricky; from prett, a trick, prettla, to cheat, deceive. + Norweg. pretten, prettevis, tricky, roguish; from pretta, a trick, piece of roguery, pretta, to play a trick (Aasen). β. The word is probably of Celtic origin; as appears from O. Corn. prat, an act or deed, a cunning trick, connected (according to Williams) with W. prait, an act, deed. ¶ Certainly not connected with G. *prächt*ig, showy, as is clear from the absence of the guttural in the E., Icel., Dan., and Cornish forms, and by the difference in sense. Der. pretti-ly, spelt pretily, Court of Love, 420; pretti-ness, Hamlet, iv. 5. 189; also pretty, adv. [†]

PREVAIL, to overcome, effect, have influence over. (F., -L.) Spelt prevaille in Levins; preuaile in Minshew. -O. F. prevaloire, 'to prevail,' Cot. -Lat. prævalere, to have great power. -Lat. præ, before, hence expressive of excess; and valere, to be strong, have power; see Pre- and Valiant. Der. prevail-ing; prevail-ent, Milton, P. L. vi. 411, from Lat. prævalens, stem of pres. part. of prævalere; prevail-ence, from O. F. prevaleance (Cot.), from late Lat. prævalentia, superior force; prevalenc-y. Also prevail-mant, Mids. Nt. Dr. i. 1. 35.

PREVARICATE, to shift about, to quibble. (L.) 'When any of us hath prevaricated our part of the covenant,' i.e. swerved from it, Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. ser. 3 (R.) [Prevaricator and prevarication are both in Minshew's Dict.; but not the verb.] -Lat. prævaricatus, pp. of prævaricare, to spread the legs apart in walking, to straddle, to walk crookedly; hence to swerve, shuffle, &c. -Lat. præ, before, here used as an intensive prefix; and varicus, straddling, extended (with suffix -ic-) from varus, bent, stretched outwards, straddling. Cf. Lat. Uarus as a proper name, orig. a nickname. β. It is supposed by some that Lat. varus is cognate with G. quer, transverse; see Queer. Der. prevaricat-or; prevaricat-ion, from O. F. prevarication, 'prevarication,' Cot.

PREVENT, to hinder, obviate. (L.) The old sense is 'to go before, anticipate;' Tw. Nt. iii. 1. 94, Hamlet, ii. 2. 305; Spenser, F. Q. vi. 1. 38, vi. 8. 15; and in Palsgrave. Cf. O. F. prevenir, 'to prevent, outstrip, anticipate, forestall;' Cot. -Lat. prævenire, pp. of prævenire, to come or go before. -Lat. præ, before; and venire, cognate with E. come; see Pre- and Come. Der. prevent-ion, from O. F. prevention, 'a prevention, anticipation,' Cot. Also prevent-ive, adj., Phillips, ed. 1706, a coined word; prevent-ive, sb.

PREVIOUS, going before, former. (L.) 'Som previous meditations;' Howell, Famil. Letters, vol. i. sect. 6. let. 32, A. D. 1635. Englished (by change of -us to -ous, as in arduous, &c.) from Lat. prævious, on the way before, going before. -Lat. præ, before; and via, a way; see Pre- and Voyage. Der. previous-ly.

PREWARN, to warn beforehand. (Hybrid; L. and E.) 'Comets prewarn,' Two Noble Kinsmen, v. 1. 51. A coined word; see Pre- and Warn.

PREY, booty, spoil, plunder. (F., -L.) M. E. preis, preye, Rob. of Glouc. p. 270, l. 3, p. 303, l. 6; praie, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 273, l. 6. -O. F. praie, preis; mod. F. proie, prey. -Lat. præda, booty.

β. Præda is thought to stand for præ-hed-a, that which is got or seized beforehand; from præ, before, and hed-, base of hendere, to seize, cognate with E. get. Similarly prehendere is short for prehendere, as is well known. See Pre- and Get.

γ. But if Lat. præda be the same word with W. pradd, flock, herd, booty, prey, Gael. and Irish spreidh, cattle of any kind, then there has been a loss of initial s. Der. prey, vb., Rich. III. i. 1. 133. Also pred-at-or, q. v.

PRIAL, three of a sort, at cards. (F., -L.) An unmeaning corruption of pair-royal. See Pair-royal in Nares, who fully illustrates it.

PRICE, value, excellence, recompence. (F., -L.) M. E. pris, q.

Havelok, 283; Ancren Riwe, p. 392, l. 15. -O. F. pris, preis; mod. F. pris. -Lat. pretium, price. β. Lat. præ-tium is formed with suffix -tium (from Aryan suffix -ti, Schleicher, Compend. § 226) as in servit-tium, service; the base being præ = par = par-. Cf. Lithuan. prekia, prekius, price, from perku, I sell (Nesselmann), from the same stem per-, but with a different suffix; also Gk. πρό-τιμι, I sell, πρί-αυα, I buy. In the Skt. pama, wages, hire, reward, expense, price, the lingual n marks the loss of r, so that pama = par-na; Curtius, i. 339. -✓ PAR, to buy; whence Skt. pan (= par-nā), to buy. Der. price-less; price-i-ous, prize (2), verb. Doublet, praise.

PRICK, a sharp point, puncture, sting, remorse. (E.) M. E. prike, pricke, prikke, Ancren Riwe, p. 228, last line. -A. S. pricu, a point, dot, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 7, cap. xviii. § 1; prica, a point, jot, tittle, Matt. v. 18. + O. Du. prick, a prick, whence mod. Du. prikkel; see Kilian. + Dan. prik, a dot; whence prikke, to mark with dots. + Swed. prick, a point, dot, prick, tittle; whence pricka, to point, to mark with pricks. Cf. also W. pric, a stick, a broach; Irish pricadh, a goad, prioca, a sting; Skt. prigni, of variegated colour (spotted, dotted), Gk. πρηνός, spotted.

β. It is clear that the orig. sense is 'a dot' or 'spot'; and there is very little doubt that an initial s has been lost, which appears in Irish sprichar, a sting. Cf. also Skt. prish, to sprinkle, prishata, speckled, also a spot, drop; all related to a ✓ SPARK, to sprinkle, whence Lat. spargere (for spar-ere), to scatter, sprinkle, Irish spreighim, I scatter, M. H. G. sprengen, to sprinkle, and E. sprinkle (nasalised form of sprinkle or sprickle); see Sprinkle. Curtius, i. 340; Fick, i. 669.

γ. The notion of 'puncturing' or 'goad' is unoriginal, and the verb to prick is a mere derivative from the sb., as shown by the forms. Der. prick, verb, M. E. priken, priken, Havelok, 2639, P. Plowman, B. xviii. 11 (the A. S. prician being unauthorised); hence prick-er. Also prick-le, O. Northumb. pricle, Matt. v. 18 (Lindisfarne MS.), a dimin. form, with the orig. sense 'a little dot' or 'speck.' Hence prick-ly, which seems to be formed from prickle rather than from prick with suffix -ly; prick-li-ness. [†]

PRIDE, the feeling of being proud. (E.) M. E. pride, pryde, P. Plowman, B. v. 15; spelt pruide, id. A. v. 15; prude, id. C. vi. 118, Ancren Riwe, p. 140, l. 6. -A. S. prýde, prýde, Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 220, l. 32. (Thus pride is a weakened form of pride.) β. The A. S. prýde is regularly formed from the adj. prút, proud, by the change of ú to ý; see Proud. We find also A. S. prútmung, pride; Mone, Quellen, p. 355, col. 1. Cf. Icel. prýði, an ornament, from prúdr, proud; both borrowed from E., but they exhibit the length of the vowel. Der. pride, vb. reflexive.

PRIEST, a presbyter, one in holy orders, above a deacon and below a bishop. (L., -Gk.) M. E. preest, Chaucer, C. T. 505; preost, Ancren Riwe, p. 16, l. 25. -A. S. preost, Laws of K. Edgar, i. 2 (see Thorpe's Ancient Laws, p. 263); and, earlier, in the Laws of Ethelbert, § 1 (id. p. 3). Contracted from Lat. presbyter (= Gk. πρεσβύτερος), as clearly shown by the O. F. prestre (13th cent.), mod. F. prêtre. Cf. Prester John in Mandeville's Travels, where prester = pres(b)iter.

β. Πρεσβύτερος is comp. of πρεσ-βυς, Doric πρεσ-βυς, old; where πρεσ- = pris- in Lat. pris-cus, pris-tinus, old, and -βυς is (probably) from ✓ GA, to beget, produce; Curtius, ii. 82. See Pristine. Der. priest-ess (with F. suffix); priest-hood, A. S. preost-hād, Ælfred, tr. of Bede, b. i. c. 7 (near beginning); priest-craft; priest-ly, Pericles, iii. 1. 70; priest-li-ness; priest-ridden. Doublet, presbyter.

PRIM, precise, affectedly neat or nice. (F., -L.) Bailey (vol. i. ed. 1735) has: 'to prim, to set the mouth conceitedly, to be full of affected ways.' Phillips, ed. 1706, has: 'to prim, to be full of affected ways, to be much conceited.' The oldest example is prym, sb. a neat girl, in Barclay's Fifth Eclogue, cited by Nares. [From the E. word are derived the Lowland Scotch primp (with excrescent p), to assume prudish or self-important airs, to deck oneself in a stiff and affected manner (Jamieson); and primzie, demure, in Burns, Hallow'en, st. 9.] Halliwell also cites the word prim as meaning 'prim, affectedly neat,' but in the quotation adduced from Fletcher's Poems, p. 140, the word obviously means 'thin, gaunt, slender,' &c.

β. The sense of 'slender' or 'delicate' is the orig. one, as shown in Cotgrave. -O. F. prim, masc., prime, fem., 'prime, forward;' also prim, 'thin, subtil, piercing, sharp;' also prime, both masc. and fem., 'thin, slender, exile, small; as cheveux primes, smooth or delicate hair;' Cot. This last example comes sufficiently near to the E. use.

γ. The O. F. prim (corrupter form prin) is from the Lat. masc. acc. primum; the form prime answers to the Lat. fem. prima. The nom. case is primus, first, chief; see Prime (1). Cf. also prov. E. prime, to trim trees; and the phrase 'to prime a gun;' see Prime (2).

¶ The sense of 'thin' as derived from that of 'first' or 'foremost' is hard to account for; perhaps there is an allusion to the growth of newly grown shoots and buds; cf. filer prim, 'to run thin, or by little and little;' Cot. In E. it is probable that the sense of prim was affected by some confusion with the old verb prink, to adorn, dress well, be smart and gay, to be pert or forward (Halliwell); which is merely a nasalised form of the verb to prick, used in the sense of 'to trim' by Palsgrave and others; cf. Lowland Scotch prickmaleerie, stiff and precise, prickmedainty, finical (Jamieson). Der. prim-ly, prim-ness.

PRIME (1), first, chief, excellent. (F., -L.) M. E. prime, properly an adj. (as in Temp. i. 2. 72), but almost always used of 'prime,' the first canonical hour, as in Ancrén Riwe, p. 20, Chaucer, C. T. 12596, &c. = F. prime, 'the first hour of the day,' Cot. [A fem. form, the O. F. masc. being prim.] = Lat. prima, i. e. prima hora, the first hour; fem. of primus, first. β. Prī-mus is a superl. form, and stands for prō-i-mus, whence the long i. The suffix is the same as in min-i-mus (where -mus is the Aryan superl. suffix -ma, appearing also in A. S. for-ma, Goth. fru-ma, first, which are cognate words); Curtius, i. 354. The Skt. pra-ta-ma, first, exhibits a double suffix; cf. also Gk. πρῶ-τος. See Prior, Former, and Pro-. Der. prime, sb., as already explained; prime-number, prime-minister; prim-ar-y, Phillips, ed. 1706, from Lat. primarius; prim-ar-i-ly. Also prim-ale, M. E. primat, Layamon, 29736, from O. F. primat, 'a primat or metropolitan,' Cot., which from Lat. primatus, acc. of primas, a principal or chief man; primat-ship; prim-ac-y, from O. F. primace, 'primacy,' Cot. Also prim-er, F. Plowman, C. vi. 46, formed (apparently) from E. prime by help of the E. suffix -er, and meaning 'a book of prime,' i. e. a book of 'hours;' and hence, an elementary book. Also prima-donna, from Ital. prima, first, chief, and donna, lady, Lat. domina; see Dame. Also prim-al, Hamlet, iii. 3. 37; prim-y, id. i. 3. 7; prim-er-o, q. v. And see prim-eval, prim-iv-ite, primogeniture, prim-ordial, prim-rose, prince, prior, pristine, priest, presbyter, premier, and prime (2). [†]

PRIME (2), to put powder on the nipple of a fire-arm, to make a gun quite ready. (F., -L.) 'Neither had any [of us] one piece of ordinance primed;' Hackluyt's Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 61. It is not quite clear how the word came into use; the F. prime sometimes means 'the first position in fencing' (Littre), which may have suggested the use of the word in preparing a gun. Or, again, we may look upon prime as expressing 'to put into prime order,' to make quite ready; from prime in the sense of 'ready;' see Nares. But whatever the exact history may be, we may be sure that the etymology is from the E. adj. prime. Cf. prov. E. prime, to trim trees (Halliwell). See Prime (1), and Prim. Der. prim-ing, prim-age, an allowance to the captain of a vessel for loading the same.

PRIMERO, an old game at cards. (Span., -L.) Cotgrave translates O. F. prime by 'primero at cards,' &c.; and see Shak. Merry Wives, iv. 5. 104. = Span. primero, first; the Span. primera (fem. form) is still given as the name of a game at cards. But the game is obsolete, and little is known about it; it probably derives its name from some chief or principal card. = Lat. primarius, primary; from primus, first; see Prime (1).

PRIMEVAL, original, lit. belonging to the first age. (L.) Also spelt primæval. In Pope, Dunciad, iv. 630. A coined word; the older form was primevous, in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = Lat. primævus, primeval. = Lat. prim-, for primus, first, and ævum, an age. See Prime (1) and Age.

PRIMITIVE, original, antiquated. (F., -L.) In Shak. Troil. v. 1. 60. = F. primitif, masc., primitive, fem., 'primitive,' Cot. = Lat. primitivus, earliest of its kind; extended from primus, first. See Prime (1). Der. primitive-ly, -ness.

PRIMOGENITURE, a being born first, the right of inheritance of the eldest-born. (F., -L.) Blount, in his Gloss., ed. 1674, says that the word is used by Sir T. Browne. = O. F. primogeniture, 'the being eldest, the title of the eldest,' Cot. Formed as if from a Lat. primogenitura *. = Lat. primogenitus, first-born. = Lat. prim-, crude form of primus, first; and genitus, pp. of gignere (base gan), to beget, produce. See Prime (1) and Genus or Kin.

PRIMORDIAL, original. (F., -L.) Used as a sb., with the sense of 'beginning,' by Skelton, Why Come Ye Nat to Courte, l. 486. = F. primordial, 'originall,' Cot. = Lat. primordialis, original. = Lat. primordium, an origin. = Lat. prim-, for primus, first; and ordiri, to begin, allied to ordo, order. See Prime (1) and Order.

PRIMROSE, the name of a spring flower. (F., -L.) A. 'Two noble primeroses;' Ascham, Scholemaster, pt. i., ed. Arber, p. 66. Cf. 'Frymerose, primula;' Prompt. Parv. = F. prime rose, lit. first rose, so called because it comes early in the spring. = Lat. prima rosa; see Prime (1) and Rose. B. The above is the popular and obvious etymology of the word as it stands; but primrose is, historically, a corruption (due to popular etymology) of M. E. primerole, a primrose, Chaucer, C. T. 3268. This answers to a Low Lat. form primerula *, a regular dimin. of Low Lat. primula, a primrose (see Prompt. Parv.), still preserved in Span. primula. Again, primula is a dimin. form from primus; see Prime (1), as before. [†]

PRINCE, a chief, sovereign, son of a king. (F., -L.) M. E. prince, St. Marharete, ed. Cockayne, p. 2, l. 15. = F. prince. Cf. Ital. principe, = Lat. principem, acc. of princeps, taking the first place, hence, a principal person. = Lat. prin- (for prim- before c), from primus, first; and capere, to take. See Prime (1) and Capital. Der. prince-dom; prince-ly, Temp. i. 2. 86, prince-ly, adv., prince-li-ness. Also princ-ess, M. E. princesse, Prompt. Parv., from F. princesse, Cot. And see Principal, Principle.

PRINCIPAL, chief. (F., -L.) M. E. principal, pryncypal, Rob. of Glouc., p. 446. = F. principal, 'principall,' Cot. = Lat. principalis, chief; formed, with suffix -alis, from princip-, stem of princeps; see Prince. Der. principal-ly; principal-ity, M. E. principalitee, Prompt. Parv., from O. F. principalite, which from Lat. acc. principalitatem, orig. meaning 'excellence.'

PRINCIPLE, a fundamental truth or law, a tenet, a settled rule of action. (F., -L.) Used by Spenser with the sense of 'beginning;' F. Q. v. 11. 2. The l is an E. addition to the word, prob. due to confusion with principal; but cf. E. syllable. = F. principe, 'a principle, maxime; also, a beginning,' Cot. = Lat. principium, a beginning. = Lat. principi-, crude form of princeps, chief; see Prince. Der. principle-ed, un-principl-ed.

PRINT, an impression, engraving, impression of type on paper. (F., -L.) Under Imprint, I have said that imprint is a compound from im- and print; and such is, historically, the case. But it will appear that print is itself short for emprint, or rather for the F. form empreinte. The use of the word is much older than the invention of printing. M. E. printe, prente. In Chaucer, C. T. 6186, Six-text, D. 604, the Wife of Bath says: 'I had the printe of seinte Venus sele.' In two MSS. it is spelt prente; in one MS. it is preente. It is also spelt preente, preynte in the Prompt. Parv. 'And to a badde peny, with a good preynte;' Plowman, C. xviii. 73. Formed, by loss of the first syllable, from O. F. empreinte, 'a stamp, a print,' Cot., in use in the 13th century (Littre). = O. F. empreinte, fem. of emprint, pp. of empreindre, 'to print, stamp,' Cot. = Lat. imprimere, to impress. = Lat. im-, for in before p, upon; and primere, to press. See Im- (1) and Press. ¶ The O. Du. print, a print, was prob. borrowed from English rather than from French. Der. print, verb, M. E. preenten, Prompt. Parv., later printe, Surrey, in Tottel's Miscellany, ed. Arber, p. 7, l. 14. Also print-er, print-ing, im-print. [†]

PRIOR (1), former, coming before in time. (L.) The use of prior as an adj. is quite modern; see example in Todd's Johnson. = Lat. prior, sooner, former. β. It stands for pro-ior or pra-ior, a comparative form from a positive pro- or pra-; cf. Skt. pra-ta-ma, first; and see Pro-, Prime. Der. prior-i-ty, Cor. i. 1. 251, from F. priorité, 'priority,' Cot., from Low Lat. acc. prioritatem. And see Prior (2), Pristine.

PRIOR (2), the head of a priory or convent. (F., -L.) Now conformed to the Lat. spelling. M. E. priour, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 333, l. 10. = O. F. priour, later prieur, 'a prior,' Cot. = Lat. priorem, acc. of prior, former, hence, a superior; see Prior (1). Der. prior-ess, Chaucer, C. T. 118, from O. F. prieoresse, given by Littre, s. v. prieure. Also prior-y, M. E. priorie, Havelok, 2552; prior-ship.

PRISE, PRIZE, a lever. (F., -L.) 'Prise, a lever;' Halliwell. Hence 'to prise open a box,' or, corruptly, 'to pry open.' This seems to be nothing but F. prise in the sense of a grasp, or hold; cf. prise, 'a lock or hold in wrestling, any advantage,' Cot. See Prize (1).

PRISM, a solid figure whose ends are equal and parallel planes, and whose sides are parallelograms. (L., -Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = Lat. prisma. = Gk. πρίσμα (stem πρίσμαι-), a prism, lit. a thing sawn off. = Gk. πρίειν, to saw; extended form of πρίειν, to saw. Der. prism-at-ic, Pope, Essay on Criticism, 311; prism-at-ic-all, Blount; prism-at-ic-al-ly.

PRISON, a gaol, a place of confinement. (F., -L.) M. E. prison, prison, Rob. of Glouc., p. 37, l. 19; prison, Ancrén Riwe, p. 126, l. 1; A. S. Chron. an. 1137. = O. F. prison, prison; F. prison, 'a prison,' Cot. Cf. O. Prov. preizos (Bartsch); Span. prisión, a seizure, prison; Ital. prigione. = Lat. acc. prisionem, acc. of prisio, a seizing; by regular loss of s before s. β. Prisio is short for prehensio, formed from prehensus, pp. of prehendere, to seize; see Prehensible. Der. prison-er, Will. of Palerne, 1267; in Gen. and Exod., ed. Morris, 2042, it means 'the keeper of a prison,' a gaoler.

PRISTINE, ancient, former. (F., -L.) In Mach. v. 3. 52. [Formerly, the word pristinatus was also in use; Sir T. Elyot, The Governor, b. i. c. 2.] = O. F. pristine, 'former, old, ancient,' Cot. = Lat. pristinus, ancient, former.

β. The syllable pris- occurs also in pris-cus; it stands for praius * or pruis, neut. of prior, former. γ. The suffix -tinus is for -tenuis, i. e. extending, and occurs again in pro-tinus; from ✓ TAN, to stretch. See Prior and Tend.

PRIVATE, apart, retired, secret, not publicly known. (L.) Common in Shak.; and see Minshew and Levins. = Lat. privatus, H h 2 apart; pp. of privare, to bereave, make single or apart. — Lat. privus, & single; lit. put forward, hence sundered.

β. It stands for prai-us, from prai = prae, before; see Pre-. Der. private-ly, private-ness, privat-ive, causing privation, in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, from F. privatif, or directly from Lat. privatius; privat-ive-ly, privacy, Minshew, a coined word, the O. F. word being privauté (Cot.) Also privat-ion, from F. privation, 'privation', Cot. Also privat-er, in Phillips, ed. 1706, an armed private vessel, a coined word. And see privilege, de-privé. Doublet, privy, q. v.

PRIVET, a half-evergreen shrub. (F., ? — L. ?) Also called primprint, prim, and primet. 'Mondihout, privet, prime-print, or white-withbinde;' Hexham's Du. Dict. 'Priuet or primprint;' Holland's Pliny, Index to vol. ii. 'Privet or primprint;' Topsell's Hist. of Serpents, p. 103 (Halliwell). 'Priuet or primprint [misprinted primprint] tree;' Minshew, ed. 1627. Cotgrave explains O. F. fresillon and troesne by 'privet, primprint.' Florio, ed. 1598, explains Ital. ligustro by 'the priuet or primeprint tree.' In Tusser's Husbandry, ed. Herrtage (E. D. S.), § 15. st. 42, we find the forms pruiue and prim. In the Grete Herball (as cited in Prior, Popular Names of British Plants), we find the form primet applied to the primrose; the confusion being due to the fact that the Lat. ligustrum was applied to both plants. 'Hoc ligustrum, a primerolle;' Wright's Voc. i. 190, col. 2 [not p. 192].

β. It thus appears that the orig. short name was prim, whence the dimin. prim-et, corruptly priv-et, or (by elision of the e) prim't or print. The form prim-print (= prim-prim-et) is a reduplicated one. γ. Prob. so named from its being formally cut and trimmed; cf. prov. E. prime, to trim trees; see Prim. ¶ I cannot believe in a connection with the river called Pryfetes-flod, A. S. Chron. an. 755, or with Privet, near Petersfield, Hants.

PRIVILEGE, a prerogative, peculiar advantage. (F., — L.) M. E. privilege (with u = v); earliest form privilegie, A. S. Chron. an. 1137. — O. F. privilege, 'a privilege'; Cot. — Lat. privilegium, (1) a bill against a person, (2) an ordinance in favour of a person, a privilege.

β. Properly a law relating to a single person. — Lat. privus = privo-, crude form of privus, single; and legi-, crude form of lex, a law. See Private and Legal.

PRIVY, private. (F., — L.) M. E. prive, privee (with u = v), Layamon, 6877, later text. — O. F. prive, privy (mod. F. prive); a pp. form. — Lat. privatus, private; see Private. Der. privy-council, privy-council-lor, privy-purse, privy-seal. Also privy, sb., M. E. privee, privee, Chaucer, C. T. 9828; privily; privy-ty, M. E. pruiue (= privitee), Ancren Riwle, p. 162, l. 14.

PRIZE (1), that which is captured from an enemy, that which is won in a lottery or acquired by competition. (F., — L.) 'As his owne prize;' Spenser, F. Q. iv. 4. 8. — F. prise, 'a taking, a seizing, . . . a booty, or prize;' Cot. Orig. fem. of pris, pp. of prendre, to take. — Lat. prendere, prehendere, to take, seize; see Prehensile. Der. prize-court, fighter, money.

PRIZE (2), to value highly. (F., — L.) In Shak. Temp. i. 2. 168. M. E. prise, to set a price on, Prompt. Parv. — F. priser, 'to prize, esteem, . . . to set a price on.' — O. F. pris, 'a price, rate,' id.; mod. F. prix. — Lat. pretium; see Price. Der. prize, sb., Cymb. iii. 6. 77.

PRIZE (3), to open a box; see Prise.

PRO-, prefix, before, forward, in front. (L.; or Gk.; or F., — L.) This prefix may be either F., Lat., or Gk. If F., it is from Latin. — Lat. pro-, prefix, before; whence prō (= prōd), an ablative form, used as a preposition. + Gk. πο-, prefix, and πρό, prep., before. + Skt. pra-, prefix; pra, before, away. All cognate with E. for, prep.; see For (1). Der. pro-, prefix; pr-ior, pr-ime, pr-i-s-tine, pro-ne, private, pri-vy, prow, provost, &c.

PROA, a small vessel or ship. (Malay.) Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, p. 385, notes praw as a Malay word. It is gen. spelt proa in mod. books of travel. — Malay prau, prau, 'a general term for all vessels between the sampan or canoe, and the kapal or square-rigged vessel;' Marsden's Dict., p. 222.

PROBABLE, that may be proved, likely. (F., — L.) In Shak. As You Like It, iii. 5. 11. — F. probable, 'probable, proveable;' Cot. — Lat. probabilem, acc. of probabilis, that may be proved; formed with suffix -bilis from proba-re, to prove; see Prove. Der. probabl-y; probabili-ty, from F. probabilité, 'probability;' Cot. And see probation.

PROBATION, a trial, time of trial or of proof. (F., — L.) In Shak. even used with the sense of 'proof;' Macb. iii. 1. 80. — F. probation, 'a probation, proof;' Cot. — Lat. probationem, acc. of probatio, a trial, proof. — Lat. probatus, pp. of probare, to prove; see Prove. Der. probation-al, probation-ary, probation-er. Also proba'te, proof of a will; 'probates of testaments,' Hall's Chron., Hen. VIII, an. 17, from Lat. probatus. Also probat-ive, probat-ory. And see probable, probe, probit.

PROBE, an instrument for examining a wound. (L.) 'Probe, a chirurgians prooffe,' &c.; Minshew, ed. 1627. Apparently a coined word; cf. Lat. proba, a proof. — Lat. probare, to prove; see Prove. ¶ Similarly, Span. tienta, a probe, is from Lat. tentare, to search into. Der. probe, verb, Dryden, Hind and Panther, iii. 80.

PROBITY, uprightness, honesty. (F., — L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — F. probité, 'honesty;' Cot. — Lat. probitatem, acc. of probitas, honesty. — Lat. probi- = probo-, crude form of probus, honest; with suffix -itas. Root uncertain. See Prove.

PROBLEM, a question proposed for solution, esp. a difficult one. (F., — L., — Gk.) M. E. probleme, Chaucer, C. T. 7800. — O. F. probleme, 'a problem,' Cot. Mod. F. problème. — Lat. problema. — Gk. πρόβλημα, anything thrown forward, a question put forward for discussion. — Gk. πρό, forward; and βλήμα, a casting, formed with suffix -μα from βλη- = βαλ-, as seen in βάλλειν, to cast. See Pro- and Belemnite. Der. problematic, from the stem πρόβλημα-; problematic-al, -ly.

PROBOSCIS, the trunk of an elephant. (L., — Gk.) 'Their long snoute or trunk, which the Latins call a proboscis;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. viii. c. 7. — Lat. proboscis. — Gk. προβόσκis, an elephant's trunk; lit. 'a front-feeder.' — Gk. πρό, before, in front; and βόσκειν, to feed. See Pro- and Botany.

PROCEED, to advance. (F., — L.) M. E. proceden, Gower, C. A. i. 17, l. 13. — O. F. proceder, 'to proceed,' Cot. — Lat. procedere. — Lat. pro-, before; and cedere, to go; see Pro- and Cede. Der. proceed-ing, Two Gent. ii. 6. 41; proceed-ure, from O. F. procedure, 'a procedure,' Cot.; proceed-s, sb. pl. Also process, M. E. processse, Chaucer, C. T. 2969, from O. F. proces (14th cent.), later proeés (mod. F. procès), 'a proces or sute,' Cot., from Lat. processum, acc. of processus, a progress, which from processus, pp. of procedere. Also process-ion, M. E. processioun, processium, Layamon, 18223, from F. procession = Lat. acc. processionem, an advance. Hence process-ion-al.

PROCLAIM, to publish, announce aloud. (F., — L.) M. E. proclamen, Gower, C. A. i. 6, l. 10. — F. proclamer, 'to proclaim,' Cot. — Lat. proclamare. — Lat. pro-, before; and clamare, to cry aloud; see Pro- and Claim. Der. proclaim-er; proclam-at-ion, All's Well, i. 3. 180, from F. proclamation = Lat. acc. proclamationem.

PROCLIVITY, a tendency, propensity. (L.) Spelt proclivitate in Minshew, ed. 1627; he also has the obsolete adj. procline = proclive. Engliſhed directly from Lat. proclivitas, a declivity, propensity. — Lat. proclivus, sloping forward or downward. — Lat. pro-, before; and clinus, a slope, hill, allied to clinare, to bend, incline, which is allied to E. lean. See Pro-, Declivity, and Lean (1).

PROCONSUL, orig. the deputy of a consul. (L.) In Cymb. iii. 7. 8. — Lat. proconsul. — Lat. pro-, in place of; and consul; see Pro- and Consul. ¶ Similarly, pro-prator. Der. proconsul-ate, pro-consul-ary.

PROCRASTINATE, to postpone, delay. (L.) In Shak. Com. Errors, i. 1. 159. — Lat. procrastinatus, pp. of procrastinare, to put off till the morrow, delay. — Lat. pro-, forward, hence, off; and crastinus, put off till the morrow, belonging to the morrow. β. Crastinus is compounded of cras, tomorrow (of uncertain origin); and tenuis, lit. stretching or reaching onward, from ✓ TAN, to stretch, for which see Tend. Der. procrastinatio, from F. procrastination, 'a procrastination, delay,' Cot. = Lat. acc. procrastinationem; procrastin-ary.

PROCREATE, to generate, propagate. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. — Lat. procreatus, pp. of procreare, to generate, produce. — Lat. pro-, forth; and creare, to create, produce; see Pro- and Create. Der. procreat-ion, Chaucer, C. T. 9322, from O. F. procreation = Lat. acc. procreationem. Also procreat-or, procreat-ive; procreat, Mach. i. 6. 8, from procreant, stem of pres. part. of Lat. procreare.

PROCTOR, a procurator, an attorney in the spiritual courts, an officer who superintends university discipline. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. M. E. proketour, spelt proketoure in Prompt. Parv., where it is explained by Lat. procurator. And, whilst proctor is a shortened form of prokētōur (in three syllables), the latter is in its turn an abbreviated form of procurator. See further under Procure. Der. proctor-ship; proctor-i-al; proxy. Doublet, procurator.

PROCUMBENT, prostrate, lying on the ground. (L.) Kersey, ed. 1715, gives procumbent leaves as a botanical term. — Lat. procumbent, stem of pres. part. of procumbere, to incline forward. — Lat. pro-, forward; and -cumbere, to lean or lie upon (only used in compounds), a nasalised form of cubare, to lie down. See Pro- and Inebus.

PROCURE, to obtain, cause, get. (F., — L.) M. E. procuren, Rob. of Brunne, p. 257, l. 20. — F. procurer, to procure, get. — Lat. procurare, to take care of, attend to, manage. — Lat. pro-, for, in behalf of; and curare, to take care of, from cura, care. See Pro- and Cure. Der. procur-able, procur-er, procur-ess, procur-ment. Also procur-al-or, M. E. procuratour, Chaucer, C. T. 7178, from O. F. procurator, in use in the 13th century (Littre), mod. F. procurateur, from Lat. procuratorem, acc. of procurator, a manager, agent, deputy, viceroi, administrator; the more usual F. form is procureur (see Cotgrave), and the more usual E. form is the much abbreviated proctor, q. v. Also procurat-ion, Minshew, ed. 1627, from F. procurat-ion, 'a procurat-ion, a warrant or letter of attorney,' Cot. Also proxy, q. v.

PRODIGAL, wasteful, lavish. (F., -L.) Spelt prodigall in Levins, ed. 1570. 'Some prodigallie spend and waste all their goodes;' Golden Boke, c. 45 (R.) [The sb. prodegalite (so spelt) occurs in Gower, C. A. iii. 153, l. 18.] - F. prodigal, 'prodigall,' Cot. - Low Lat. *prodigalis, not found, though the sb. prodigalitas occurs; see Ducange. - Lat. prodigus, wasteful. - Lat. prodigere, to drive forth or away, squander, waste. - Lat. prōd, forth, oldest form of prō, allied to prō, prefix; and agere, to drive. See Pro- and Agent. Der. prodigal-ly; prodigal-i-ty, from F. prodigalité, 'prodigality,' from Lat. acc. prodigalitem.

PRODIGY, a portent, wonder. (F., -L.) In Shak. Jul. Cæs. i. 3. 28, ii. 1. 198. Formed from F. prodige, 'a prodigy, wonder,' Cot.; by the addition of the -y so often appearing in words borrowed from French; thus we have continency, excellency, fragrancy as well as continence, excellence, fragrance; the E. form answering to a possible O. F. form *prodigie. - Lat. prodigium, a shewing beforehand, sign, token, portent. β. Of uncertain origin; but prob. for prod-āgum, where prōd, forth, before, is an old form of pro, before; and *agium means 'a saying,' as in the compound ad-agium, a saying, adage. In this case, the orig. sense is 'a saying beforehand,' hence a sign, prophecy, or token. See Pro- and Adage. Der. prodigi-ous, Spenser, F. Q. iv. 1. 13, from F. prodigieux, 'prodigious,' Cot., which from Lat. prodigiosus; prodigious-ly, ness.

PRODUCE, to lead or bring forward, bear, yield, cause. (L.) In Shak. All's Well, iv. 1. 6; and in Palsgrave. - Lat. producere, to bring forward. - Lat. pro-, forward; and ducere, to lead, cognate with E. tug. See Pro, Duke, Tug. Der. produc-er; produce, sb., formerly prodūce, as shewn by an extract from Dryden, Ep. to John Dryden, 118, in Todd's Johnson. [The sb. produce is not wanted; product is better.] Also produc-ible, produc-ible-ness. Also product, sb., Pope, Messiah, 94, accented product, Milton, P. L. xi. 683, from productus, pp. of producere. Also product-ion, from F. production, 'a production, proof, evidence,' Cot., which from Lat. acc. productionem, orig. a lengthening, but in late Lat. the production of a document and even the document or proof itself. Also product-ive, product-ive-ly, product-ive-ness.

PROEM, a prelude, preface. (F., -L., -Gk.) Chaucer has the spelling proheme, C. T. 7919, where the h is merely inserted to keep the vowels apart. - O. F. proēme, 'a proem, preface,' Cot.; mod. F. proème. - Lat. proemium. - Gk. πρόημα, an introduction, prelude. - Gk. πρό, before; and οἶμος, a way, path, from pro, to go, with suffix -MA. See Pro and Itinerant.

PROFANE, unholy, impious. (F., -L.) Commonly spelt profane in the 16th century; see Rich. II, v. i. 25 (first folio); and Robinson's tr. of More's Utopia, ed. Arber, p. 145, l. 6. - F. profane, 'profane,' Cot. - Lat. profanus, unholy, profane. β. The orig. sense seems to have been 'before the temple,' hence, outside of the temple, secular, not sacred. - Lat. pro-, before; and fanum, a fane, temple. See Pro- and Fane. Der. profane, verb, Rich. II, iii. 3. 81; profane-ly, profane-ness; profan-at-ion, Meas. for Meas. ii. 2. 128, from F. profanation, 'a profanation or profaning,' Cot., from Lat. acc. profanationem. Also profan-i-ty, Englished from Lat. profanitas.

PROFESS, to own freely, declare openly, undertake to do. (F., -L.) Not derived from F. professer, as stated in Webster; for this is a late form, in Palsgrave. The M. E. word is professed, used as a pp.; 'Whiche in hir ordre was professed,' Gower, C. A. ii. 157, l. 10. This is Englished from O. F. profes, masc., professe, fem., applied in the same way; 'Qui devant iert nonain professe' - who was before a professed nun; Rom. de la Rose, 8844 (Littre). - Lat. professus, manifest, confessed, avowed; pp. of profiteri, to profess, avow. - Lat. pro-, before all, publicly; and fateri, to acknowledge. See Pro- and Confess. Der. profess-ed (see above); profess-ed-ly; profess-ion, M. E. professioun, professioun, Ancræn Riwe, p. 6, l. 22, from F. profession; profess-ion-al, profess-ion-al-ly; profess-or, 1 Hen. VI, v. 1. 14, from Lat. professor, a public teacher; profess-or-ial, profess-or-ship.

PROFFER, to offer, propose for acceptance. (F., -L.) M. E. proffen (with one f), Chaucer, C. T. 8028; profferen, K. Alisaunder, 3539. - O. F. proferer, 'to produce, alledge,' Cot. Mod. F. proferer. - Lat. proferre, to bring forward. - Lat. pro-, forward; and ferre, to bring, cognate with E. bear. See Pro and Bear. Der. proffer-er. PROFICIENT, competent, thoroughly qualified. (L.) In Shak. 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 19. - Lat. proficient, stem of pres. part. of proficere, to make progress, advance. - Lat. pro-, forward; and facere, to make; see Pro-, Fact, and Profit. Der. proficiency, proficiency-y.

PROFILE, an outline, the side-face. (Ital., -L.) [Not a F., but an Ital. word. The F. word was formerly spelt porfil or pourfil, which forms see in Cotgrave; hence M. E. purfiled, bordered, Chaucer, C. T. 193.] 'Draw it in profile;' Dryden, Parallel of Poetry and Painting (R.) 'Profile (Ital. profilo) that design which shews the side, . . . a term in painting;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Ital. profilo, 'a border, a limning or drawing of any picture;' Florio. Hence profilare, 'to draw, to limne, to paint;' id. - Ital. pro-, before (= Lat. pro-); and filo, 'a thread, a line, a strike' [stroke], Florio, from Lat. filum, a thread. Thus the sense is a 'front-line' or outline. See Pro- and File (1). ¶ The mod. F. profil is (like the E. word) from the Italian. Der. profile, vb.; and see purl (3).

PROFIT, gain, benefit. (F., -L.) M. E. profit, P. Plowman, B. prol. 169. - F. profit, 'profit;' Cot. [Cf. Ital. profitto.] - Lat. profectum, acc. of profectus, advance, progress. - Lat. profectus, pp. of proficere, to make progress, advance, be profitable. - Lat. pro-, before; and facere, to make; see Pro- and Fact. Der. profit, vb., M. E. profiten, Wyclif, Heb. iv. 2, from F. profiter; profit-able, Wyclif, 2 Tim. iii. 16; profit-able-ly, profit-able-ness; profit-ing, profit-less.

PROFLIGATE, dissolute. (L.) Minshew gives: 'to profligate, to overthrow, to vndoe, to put to flight;' ed. 1627. But it is properly a pp. used as an adj. - Lat. profligatus, pp. of profligare, to dash to the ground, overthrow; whence profligatus, cast down, abandoned, dissolute. - Lat. pro-, forward; and fligare, to strike, dash, from pro- and fligh, to strike, whence also E. blow. See Pro- and Blow (3). Der. profligate-ly, ness, profligac-y.

PROFOUND, deep, low, abstruse, occult. (F., -L.) In Early Eng. Poems and Lives of Saints, ed. Furnivall (Phil. Soc.), xvii. 221 (Stratmann); and in Fisher's Works, ed. Mayor, p. 37, l. 12, 16. - F. profond, 'profound,' Cot. - Lat. profundum, acc. of profundus, deep. - Lat. pro-, forward, hence, downward, far, deep; and fundus, the ground, bottom, cognate with E. bottom. See Pro-, Found (1), and Bottom. Der. profound-ly, profound-ness; also profound-i-ty, formerly profoundite (according to R., whose reference to Fisher seems to be inaccurate), from F. profondité, 'profundity,' Cot.

PROFUSE, liberal to excess, lavish. (L.) 'A rhetoric so profuse;' Chapman, tr. of Homer, Od. iii. 172. - Lat. profusus, pp. of profundere, to pour out. - Lat. pro-, forth; and fundere, to pour; see Pro- and Fuse. Der. profuse-ly, profuse-ness; profus-ion, from Lat. profusio.

PROG, to search for provisions; as sb., provisions. (Scand.) The sb. is from the verb. M. E. prokken, to beg; see further under Prowl.

PROGENITOR, a forefather, ancestor. (F., -L.) Now conformed to the Lat. spelling; but formerly progenytour, Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 14, b. iii. c. 7; Fabyan, Chron. an. 1336-7. - F. progeniteur, 'a progenitor,' Cot. - Lat. progenitorem, acc. of progenitor, an ancestor. - Lat. pro-, forth; and genitor, a parent, from pro- and GAN, to beget, with Aryan suffix TAR, denoting the agent; see Pro- and Genus. See Progeny. [†]

PROGENY, descendants, a race, offspring. (F., -L.) M. E. progenie, Gower, C. A. ii. 166, l. 11; progenye, Wyclif, Gen. xliii. 7. - O. F. progenie, 'a progeny;' Cot. - Lat. progeniem, acc. of progenies, lineage, progeny. - Lat. pro-, forth; and stem geni-, allied to gen-us, kin, from pro- and GAN, to beget. See Progenitor.

PROGNOSTIC, a foreshewing, indication, presage. (F., -L., -Gk.) 'The whiche . . . they adjudged for prognostikykyk and tokens of the kynges deth;' Fabyan, Chron. b. i. c. 246. - O. F. pronostique (14th cent.), prognostique, Cot.; mod. F. pronostic (Littre). - Lat. prognosticon. - Gk. προγνωστικόν, a sign or token of the future. - Gk. πρό, before; and γνωστικόν, neut. of γνωστικός, good at knowing, which from γνωστός, γνωτός, known, γνῶναι, to know. See Pro- and Gnostic. Der. prognostic, adj., from Gk. προγνωστικός; prognostic-ale, spelt pronostycate in Palsgrave; prognostic-at-ion, spelt pronosticacyon in Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 4, from O. F. pronostication or prognostication, 'a prognostication,' Cot.; prognostic-at-or.

PROGRAMME, PROGRAM, a public notice in writing, a sketch of proceedings. (F., -L., -Gk.) The etymological spelling is programme, according to F. programme; but it is quite a modern word. We find the Lat. form programma in Phillips, ed. 1706, and in Todd's Johnson. - Gk. πρόγραμμα, a public notice in writing. - Gk. προγράφειν, to give public notice in writing. - Gk. πρό, before, publicly; and γράφειν, to write. See Pro- and Grave (1).

PROGRESS, advancement. (F., -L.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 11. 20; Court of Love, 1067. - O. F. progrez, 'a progression, going forward,' Cot. Mod. F. progrès. - Lat. progressum, acc. of progressus, an advance. - Lat. progressus, pp. of progredi, to advance. - Lat. pro-, forward; and gradi, to walk, step, go. See Pro- and Grade. Der. progress, vb., accented progress, K. John, v. 2. 46; progress-ion, Chaucer, C. T. 3015, from F. progression (not in Cotgrave, and marked as '16th cent.' in Littré, but prob. older), from Lat. acc. progress-ionem; progress-ion-al, Blount, ed. 1674; progress-ive, Phillips, ed. 1706; progress-ive-ly, -ness.

PROHIBIT, to hinder, check, forbid. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627, and in Palsgrave. — Lat. prohibitus, pp. of prohibere, to prohibit; lit. to hold before or in one's way. — Lat. pro-, before; and habere, to have, hold; see Pro- and Habit. Der. prohibition, Cymb. iii. 4. 79, from F. prohibition, 'a prohibition', from Lat. acc. prohibitionem; prohibit-ive; prohibit-or-y, from Lat. prohibitorius.

PROJECT, sb., a plan, purpose, scheme. (F., — L.) In Shak. Much Ado, iii. 1. 55. — O. F. project, 'a project, purpose', Cot. Mod. F. projet. — Lat. proiectum, acc. of proiectus, pp. of proicere (projicere), to fling forth, cast out, hold out, extend; whence the sense to set forth, plan, not found in classical Latin. — Lat. pro-, forward; and iacere, to throw; see Pro- and Jet (1). Der. project, verb, to cast forward, Spenser, F. Q. vi. 1. 45; also, to plan, accented project, Antony, v. 2. 121; project-ion, also in the sense of 'plan' in Hen. V, ii. 4. 46, from F. projection, 'a projection, . . . extending out', Cot.; project-or; project-ile, in Phillips, ed. 1706, a coined word.

PROLATE, extended, elongated in the direction of the polar axis. (L.) Chiefly in the phrase 'prolate spheroid', Bailey's Dict., vol. i. ed. 1735. [Prolate is used as a verb by Howell; see Rich. and Todd's Johnson.] — Lat. prolatus, lengthened, extended. — Lat. pro-, forward; and latus (for status), borne, from ✓ TAL, to lift, bear; see Pro- and Oblate.

PROLEPSIS, anticipation. (L., — Gk.) A rhetorical term; in Phillips, ed. 1706. [Blount, ed. 1674, gives prolepsis, from O. F. prolepsis in Cotgrave.] — Lat. prolepsis. — Gk. πρόληψις, an anticipation or anticipatory allusion. — Gk. πρό, before; and λήψις, a seizing, catching, taking, from λήψ-ομαι, fut. of λαμβάνειν, to seize. See Pro- and Catalepsy. Der. prolep-tic, as in 'proleptic disease', a disease that always anticipates, as if an ague come today at 4 o'clock, tomorrow an hour sooner', Phillips, ed. 1706, from Gk. πρόληπτικός, anticipating; prolep-tic-al, Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; prolep-tic-al-ly.

PROLIFIC, fruitful. (F., — L.) Spelt prolifick in Phillips, ed. 1706, and in Bp. Taylor, vol. i. ser. 23 (R.). — F. prolifique, 'fruitful', Cot. — Low Lat. prolificus, not recorded, though DuCange gives the derivatives prolificatio and prolificatus; it means 'producing offspring'. — Lat. proli-, crude form of proles, offspring; and -ficus, making, from facere, to make; see Fact. β. Lat. proles = prō-ōles, from pro-, before; and *ōlēre, to grow, whence the inceptive form ōlescere, appearing in ad-ōlescere, to grow up; see Adolescent, Adult. Der. prolific-al, Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.

PROLIX, tedious, lengthy. (F., — L.) 'A long and prolix exhortation', Hall's Chron., Hen. VII, an. 5. G. Douglas has the corrupt form prolixt, Palace of Honour, pt. ii. st. 18, ed. Small. [The sb. prolixity, M. E. prolixitee, is in Chaucer, C. T. 10719, and Troilus, b. ii. l. 1564.] — F. prolix, 'prolix', Cot. — Lat. prolixus, extended, prolix.

β. The usual derivation from pro- and laxus cannot be sustained; the verb laxare shews that laxus keeps its vowel in derivatives; and the change of vowel from a to i has no support. Prolixus must be compared with elixis, soaked, boiled, allied to O. Lat. lixa, water, and liqui, liquere, to flow. We then get the true sense; prolixus means 'that which has flowed beyond its bounds', and the usual sense of 'broad' or 'extended' is clearly due to the common phenomenon of the enlargement of a pond by rain. — Lat. pro-, forward; and *lixus, supplying the place of the unrecorded pp. of liqui, to flow. See Pro- and Liquid. Der. prolix-i-ty (see above), from O. F. prolixite, not in Cotgrave, but in use in the 13th cent. (Littré); from Lat. acc. prolixitatem.

PROLOCUTOR, the speaker, or chairman of a convocation. (L.) 'Prolocutor of the Convocation house, is an officer chosen by persons ecclesiastical, publicly assembled by the Kings Writ at every Parliament', Minshew, ed. 1627. — Lat. prolocutor, an advocate. — Lat. pro-, before, publicly; and locutor, a speaker, from locutus, pp. of loqui, to speak. See Pro- and Loquacious.

PROLOGUE, a preface, introductory verses to a play. (F., — L., — Gk.) M. E. prologue, Gower, C. A. prol.; see p. 4, footnote, l. 4 from end. And see MSS. of the Cant. Tales. — F. prologue, 'a prologue, or fore-speech', Cot. — Lat. prologus. — Gk. πρόλογος, a fore-speech. — Gk. πρό, before; and λόγος, a speech; see Pro- and Logie.

PROLONG, to continue, lengthen out. (F., — L.) M. E. prolongen. 'Purlongyn, or purlongyn, or put fer a-wey'; Prompt. Parv. p. 417. — F. prolonger, 'to prolong, protract', Cot. — Lat. prolongare, to prolong. — Lat. pro-, forward, onward; and longus, long. See Pro- and Long. Der. prolong-at-ion, from F. prolongation, 'a prolongation', Cot., from Lat. pp. prolongatus. Doublet, purloin.

PROMENADE, a walk, place for walking. (F., — L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, we find both promenade and pourmenade. — F. promenade, formerly pourmenade; Cot. gives only the latter form.

Formed from O. F. pourmener or promener, to walk, both of which forms are given in Cotgrave, the prefix being really the same (Lat. pro-) in either case. The suffix -ade is borrowed from the Prov. suffix -ada = Lat. -ata, the fem. form of -atus, the pp. suffix of the 1st conjugation. — Lat. prominare, to drive forwards, orig. to drive on by threats. — Lat. pro-, forward; and minare, to drive on, allied to minari, to threaten. See Pro- and Menace. Der. promenade, verb.

PROMINENT, projecting, conspicuous, eminent. (F., — L.) 'Some prominent rock', Chapman, tr. of Homer, Iliad, xvi. 389. — F. prominent, 'prominent'; Cot. — Lat. prominent-, stem of pres. part. of prominere, to project. — Lat. pro-, forth; and minere, to jut, project. Root uncertain. Der. prominent-ly; prominence, from F. prominence, 'a prominence', Cot.

PROMISCUOUS, mixed, confused. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; and in Cotgrave, to translate F. promiscuë. — Lat. promiscuus, mixed. — Lat. pro-, lit. forward, but here of slight force; and miscere, to mix, allied to E. mix. See Pro-, Miscellaneous, and Mix. Der. promiscuous-ly, -ness.

PROMISE, an engagement to do a thing, an expectation. (F., — L.) Put for promes or promesse. 'And this is the promes that he hath promised vs'; Bible, 1551, 1 John, ii. 25. 'Fayre behestis and promysys'; Fabyan, Chron. an. 1336-7. — F. promesse, 'a promise', Cot. Cf. Span. promesa, Ital. promessa, a promise. — Lat. promissa, fem. of promissus, pp. of promittere, to send or put forth, to promise. — Lat. pro-, forth; and mittere, to send; see Pro- and Mission. Der. promise, verb (as above); promis-er, promis-ing, promis-ing-ly; promis-or-y, formed with suffix -y (= Lat. -ius) from the (rare) Lat. promissor, a promiser.

PROMONTORY, a headland, cape. (L.) In Shak. Temp. v. 46. Englished from Lat. promontorium, a mountain-ridge, headland; cf. F. promontoire (Cot.) — Lat. pro-, forward; mont-, crude form of mons, a mountain; and the adj. neut. suffix -orium. See Pro- and Mountain.

PROMOTE, to further, advance, elevate. (L.) 'A great furtherer or promoter'; Fabyan, Chron. an. 1336-7, ed. Ellis, p. 445. 'He was promoted to so high an office'; Grafton, Chron. Hen. VI, an. 14 (R.). — Lat. promotus, pp. of promovere, to promote, further. — Lat. pro-, forward; and movere, to move; see Pro- and Move. Der. promot-er; promot-ion, M. E. promociion, Prompt. Parv., from F. promotion, from Lat. acc. promotionem.

PROMPT, prepared, ready, acting with alacrity. (F., — L.) 'She that was prompte and redy to all euyl'; Fabyan, Chron. vol. i. c. 116; ed. Ellis, p. 91, l. 1. Cf. 'Promptyd, Promptus'; Prompt. Parv. — F. prompt, 'prompt'; Cot. — Lat. promptum, acc. of promptus, promptus, brought to light, at hand, ready, pp. of promere, to take or bring forward. — Lat. pro-, forward; and emere, to take; whence promere = pro-inere. See Pro- and Example. Der. prompt-ly, prompt-ness; prompt, verb, M. E. prompten, Prompt. Parv.; prompt-er, M. E. promptiare, Prompt. Parv.; prompt-ing; prompt-i-tude (Levins), from F. promptitude, 'promptness', Cot., from Low Lat. promptitudo, which occurs a. d. 1261 (DuCange).

PROMULGATE, to publish. (L.) In Shak. Oth. i. 2. 21; and both as vb. and pp. in Palsgrave. — Lat. promulgatus, pp. of promulgare, to publish. β. Of unknown origin; the prefix is pro-, as usual. Some have supposed promulgare to stand for prouulgare, to put before the uulgus or common people, by change of u to m; this is not very likely. Others propose a connection with multus, many, pl. of multus. Others refer it to O. Lat. promellere, 'litem promouere', or connect it with promulcum, a tow-rope. Der. promulgat-or, promulgat-ion.

PRONE, with the face downward, headlong, inclined, eagerly, ready. (F., — L.) In Shak. Wint. Tale, ii. 1. 108. — F. prone, 'prone, ready', Cot. — Lat. pronus, acc. of pronus, inclined towards. β. Prōnus prob. stands for prōvōnus (prōvōnus), formed with suffixes -va and -na from prō-, before, forward; see Pro-. † Gk. πρῶνυς, Doric πρῶνος (= πρῶφῶνος), headlong. † Skt. pravana, declining, inclined to, ready, prone; this form illustrates the Gk. and Lat. forms. Der. prone-ly, prone-ness.

PRONG, the spike of a fork. (C.) 'Iron teeth of rakes and prongs'; Dryden, tr. of Virgil, Georg. ii. 487. 'A prong or pitch-fork'; Minshew, ed. 1627. 'A prongue, hwa furcata'; Levins, 166. 47, ed. 1570. Prob. of Celtic origin; cf. W. procio, to thrust, stab, poke; procyr, a poker; Gael. brog, to spur, stimulate, goad, brog, a shoemaker's awl; see Brooch. β. We also find Sussex sprong, spronk, a root of a tree or prong of a tooth (Parish); which may be compared with Gael. spreangan, a cloven stick, used to close the orifice of the wound when cattle are bled. γ. The word prong is thus merely a nasalised form of prov. E. prog, to prick, thrust, from W. procio.

¶ We may note also Low G. prange, a stake; but this seems to be connected with G. prangen, to crowd, pranger, a pillory, and so can hardly be a related word. The M. E. prong, however, means a pang, throe, sharp pain, and is clearly a different application of the same E. word, from the same W. source. 'Throue [throe], womannys pronge, sekens [sickness], Erumpna; Prompt. Parv. p. 493. This explains the line 'The prange of loue so straineth them to crie;' Court of Love, ed. 1561, fol. 353, back, last line, needlessly altered, in modern reprints, to 'The pange of love.' See PANG.

PRONOUN, a word used in place of a noun, to denote a person. (F., -L.) In Ben Jonson, Eng. Grammar, c. xv; Shak. Merry Wives, iv. 1. 41. Compounded of PRO and NOUN; and suggested by Lat. pronomen, a pronoun. It answers to F. pronom, but there is nothing to shew that the F. compound is earlier than the E. word. Cf. Span. pronombre, Ital. pronome. Der. pronominal, from pronomin, stem of Lat. pronomen.

PRONOUNCE, to utter, express, speak distinctly. (F., -L.) M. E. pronouncen, Chaucer, C. T. 16766. = F. prononcer, 'to pronounce,' Cot. = Lat. pronunciare, to pronounce. = Lat. pro, forth; and nunciare, to tell. See PRO and ANNOUNCE. Der. pronounce, pronounce-able, pronounce-ing; pronunci-at-ion, from F. prononciation, 'pronunciation,' Cot., from Lat. acc. pronuntiatiōnem.

PROOF, a test, demonstration, evidence. (F., -L.) The vowel has undergone some alteration; we find the spelling profe in the Bible of 1551, 2 Cor. ii. 9. M. E. proef, in many MSS. of Wyclif, 2 Cor. ii. 9, later text, where the reading of the text itself is preuynge. Earliest spelling preoue, Ancrén Riwe, p. 52, l. 13; where eo is put for F. eu, as in E. people for F. peuple. = F. preuve, 'a proove, tryall,' Cot. = Late Lat. proba, a proof (White); which seems to be merely formed from the verb probare, to prove; see PROVE. Cf. Port. and Ital. prova, Span. prueba, a proof.

PROP, a support, stay. (C.) The sb. appears earlier than the verb. M. E. proppe, a long staff; Prompt. Parv. As the letter p is frequently found to lead to a Celtic origin, the double p in this word points to the same very clearly. = Irish propa, a prop; propadh, propping; Gael. prop, a prop, support, prop, to prop, pp. propta, propped. Hence also O. Du. proppe, 'an yron branch, proppe, to prop, stay, or beare up,' Hexham; and with a change of meaning, to fastening or stopping up, Dan. prop, Swed. propp, G. pfropf, a cork, stopple, G. pfropfen, to cram, stuff, or thrust into. Der. prop, verb.

PROPAGATE, to multiply plants by layers, extend, produce. (L.) In Shak. Per. i. 2. 73; and in Levins, ed. 1570. = Lat. propagatus, pp. of propagare, to peg down, propagate by layers, produce, beget; allied to propages, propago, a layer, and from the same source as com-pages, a joining together, structure. = Lat. pro, forward; and -pag-es, a fastening, pegging, from PAK, to fasten; see PRO and PACT. Der. propagat-or; propagat-ion, Minshew; propagand-ism, propagand-ist, coined words from the name of the society entitled Congregatio de Propaganda Fide, constituted at Rome, A.D. 1622 (Haydn). And see prune (1).

PROPEL, to drive forward, urge on. (L.) 'The blood . . . that is propelled out of a vein of the breast;' Harvey (died 1657); cited in Todd's Johnson, without a reference. [But the word propulse was formerly used instead of it; see Richardson.] = Lat. propellere (pp. propulsus), to propel. = Lat. pro, forward; and pellere, to drive; see PRO and PULSATE. Der. propell-er; propuls-ion, propuls-ive, from the pp. propulsus.

PROPENSITY, an inclination. (L.) 'Propension or Propensity,' Phillips, ed. 1706. [The old word was propension, as in Minshew, and in Shak. Troil. ii. 2. 133, from F. propension, 'a propension or proneness,' Cot.] A coined word, from Lat. propens-us, hanging forward, inclining towards, prone to; pp. of propendere, to hang forwards. = Lat. pro, forwards; and pendere, to hang; see PRO and PENDENT. [†]

PROPER, one's own, belonging to, peculiar, suitable, just, comely. (F., -L.) M. E. propre, whence propermen = proper man, Ancrén Riwe, p. 196, l. 15; proprelliche = properly, id. p. 98, l. 11. = F. propre, 'proper,' Cot. = Lat. proprius, acc. of proprius, one's own. β. Etym. doubtful; perhaps akin to prope, near; see PROPINQUITY. Der. properly; also proper-ty, M. E. propreté, Gower, C. A. ii. 239, l. 19, from O. F. propreté, explained as 'fitness' by Cotgrave, but found in old texts with the sense of 'property' (Littre), from Lat. acc. propriatētem; see PROPRIETY.

PROPHECY, a prediction. (F., -L., -Gk.) The distinction in spelling between prophecy, sb., and prophecy, verb, is unoriginal, arbitrary, and absurd; both should be prophecy. M. E. prophecie, Ancrén Riwe, p. 158, l. 15. = O. F. prophecie, variant of prophetie, 'a prophesie,' Cot. = Lat. prophetia. = Gk. προφητεία, a prediction. = Gk. προφήτης, a prophet; see PROPHET. Der. prophecy, verb, M. E. propheciē, Trevisa, i. 421, l. 33.

PROPHET, one who predicts, an inspired teacher. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. prophete, Rob. of Glouc. p. 38, l. 17; Ormulum, 5195. = O. F. prophete. = Lat. propheta. = Gk. προφήτης, one who declares things, an expounder, prophet. = Gk. πρό, publicly, before all; also, πρό, before; and φη, base of φημί, I say, speak; with suffix -της, Aryan -ta, denoting the agent. From PH, to speak; see PRO and FAME. Der. prophet-ess, prophet-ic, prophet-ic-al, prophet-ic-al-ly; also prophetic-y, q. v.

PROPINQUITY, nearness. (L.) M. E. propinquitee, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 3, l. 943. Englished from Lat. propinquitas, nearness, by analogy with sbs. in -ity of F. origin. = Lat. propinquus = propinguo, crude form of propinquus, near, with suffix -itas. β. Propinquus = propi-n-cus, extended from prope, near. Root uncertain.

Der. from the same source, proper, ap-proach, re-proach, prox-imity. PROFITIOUS, favourable. (L.) The old adj. was propice, from O. F. propice, 'propitious;' see exx. in R. in Minshew, ed. 1627. Englished, by change of -us to -ous, as in arduous, &c., from Lat. propitius, favourable. β. Prob. a term of augury; it seems to mean 'flying forwards;' the form shews the derivation from pro, forwards, and petere, orig. to fly, from PH, to fly. See PRO and FEATHER. Der. propitious-ly, -ness. Also propiti-ate, orig. used as a pp., as in a quotation from Bp. Gardner, Explication of the Sacrament, 1551, fol. 150, cited by R.; from Lat. propitius, pp. of propitiare, to render favourable. Hence propitiat-ion, Minshew, from F. propitiation, 'a propitiation,' Cot.; propitiat-or-y, M. E. propiciatorie, Wyclif, Heb. ix. 5, from Lat. propitiatorium, Heb. ix. 5.

PROPORTION, relation of parts, equality of ratios, analogy, symmetry. (F., -L.) M. E. proportion, Chaucer, C. T. 11598. = F. proportion, 'proportion,' Cot. = Lat. proportionem, acc. of proportio, comparative relation. = Lat. pro, before, here used to signify as regards or in relation to; and portio, a portion, part; see PRO and PORTION. Der. proportion, vb.; proportion-able, proportion-ably, proportion-al, -al-ly, -ate, -ate-ly.

PROPOSE, to offer for consideration. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, v. 2. 69. [We also find propone, whence proponing in Sir T. More, Works, p. 1107 g; this is from Lat. proponere, and is really a different word; see PROFOUND.] = F. proposer, 'to purpose, also, to propose,' Cot. Compounded of pro, prefix; and F. poser, which is not from Lat. ponere, but is of Gk. origin, as shewn under pose; see PRO and POSE. Littre remarks that in this word, as in other derivatives of F. poser, there has been confusion with Lat. ponere. Der. propos-er; propos-al, spelt propossal in Minshew, a coined word, like bestow-al, refus-al, &c. Doublet, purpose (1), q. v. But propound, proposition, are unrelated.

PROPOSITION, an offer of terms, statement of a subject, theorem, or problem. (F., -L.) M. E. proposicioun, in the phrase looses of proposicioun, to translate Lat. panes propositionis, Wyclif, Luke, vi. 4. = F. proposition, 'a proposition,' Cot. = Lat. propositionem, acc. of propositio, a statement. = Lat. propositus, pp. of proponere, to propound; see PROFOUND. Der. proposition-al.

PROFOUND, to offer for consideration, exhibit. (L.) Used as equivalent to propose, but really distinct, and of different origin. Formed with excrement d from the old verb proponere, Sir T. More, Works, p. 1107 g. 'Artificially propounded and opugned;' Hall's Chron. Hen. VII, an. 5 (R.). 'The glorie of God propounded;' Bale, Image, pt. iii (R.). = Lat. proponere, to set forth. = Lat. pro, forth; and ponere, to put, set, pp. positus; see PRO and POSITION. Der. propound-er; proposit-ion, q. v. Also purpose (2), q. v.

PROPRIETY, fitness. (F., -L.) 'Propriety, owing, specialtie, qualitie, a just and absolute power over a free-hold;' Minshew. I.e. it had formerly the sense of property, of which it is a doublet; see Robinson, tr. of More's Utopia, ed. Lumby, p. 62, l. 32. = F. propriété, 'a property, propriety, . . . a freehold in; also, a handsome or comely assortment, &c.,' Cot. = Lat. propriatētem, acc. of proprietas, a property, ownership; also proper signification of words, whence the mod. sense. = Lat. proprius, one's own. See PROPER. Der. propriet-or, an incorrect substitute for proprietary, from O. F. proprietaire, 'a proprietary, an owner,' Cot., from Lat. proprietaryus, an owner. Cf. also O. F. proprietaire, adj. 'proprietary,' Cot. Doublet, property.

PROPULSION, PROPULSIVE; see PROPEL. PROROGUE, to continue from one session to another, defer. (F., -L.) Spelt prorogue in Minshew, ed. 1627; earlier spelling proroge, Levins, ed. 1570. = F. proroger, 'to prorogue,' Cot. = Lat. prorogare, to propose a further extension of office, lit. 'to ask publicly;' hence to prorogue, defer. = Lat. pro, publicly; and rogare, to ask; see PRO and ROGATION. Der. prorog-at-ion, from F. prorogation, 'a prorogation,' Cot.; from Lat. acc. prorogationem.

PROS-, prefix, to, towards. (Gk.) Properly Gk., but also appearing in F. and Lat. words borrowed from Gk. = Gk. πρός, towards; fuller form πρός, extended from πρό, before. + Skt. prati, towards; extended from pra, before, forward, away. See PRO-. Der. pros-elyte, pros-ody, pros-opo-poia.

PROSCENIUM, the front part of a stage. (L., -Gk.) Not in Todd's Johnson; merely Lat. proscenium. = Gk. προσκήνιον, the place before the scene where the actors appeared. — Gk. πρό, before; and σκήνη, a scene; see Pro- and Scene.

PROSCRIBE, to publish the name of a person to be punished, to outlaw or banish, prohibit. (L.) In Levins, ed. 1570. — Lat. proscribere, pp. proscriptus, lit. 'to write publicly.' — Lat. pro, forth, publicly; and scribere, to write; see Pro- and Scribe. Der. proscription, Jul. Cæs. iv. 1. 17, from F. proscriptio, 'a proscription,' Cot., from Lat. acc. proscriptionem; proscriptive.

PROSE, straightforward speech, not poetically arranged. (F., — L.) M. E. prose, Chaucer, C. T. 4516. — F. prose, 'prose,' Cot. — Lat. prōsa, put for prorsa, in the phr. prorsa oratio, straightforward (or unimbellished) speech; fem. of prorsus, forward, a contracted form of proversus, lit. turned forward. — Lat. pro, forward; and versus, pp. of vertere, to turn. See Pro- and Verse. ¶ The result, that prose is derived from Lat. versus, whence E. verse, is remarkable. Der. prose, vb., proser, pros-y, pros-i-ly, pros-i-ness; pros-a-ic, from Lat. prosaicus, relating to prose.

PROSECUTE, to pursue, continue, follow after, sue. (L.) In Levins, ed. 1570. Spelt prosequute, Robinson's tr. of More's Utopia, ed. Lumby, p. 132, l. 17, p. 133, l. 32. — Lat. prosecutus, prosequutus, pp. of prosequi, to pursue; see Pursue. Der. prosecution, Antony, iv. 14, 65, from Lat. acc. prosecutionem; prosecut-or = Lat. prosecutor; prosecut-r-in, formed with suffixes -r (= -or) and -in, as in Lat. testat-r-in. Doublet, pursue.

PROSELYTE, a convert. (F., — L., — Gk.) M. E. proselite, Wyclif, Deeds [Acts], ii. 10; afterwards conformed to the Lat. spelling with y. — O. F. proselite, 'a proselite,' Cot. — Lat. proselitum, acc. of proselitus. — Gk. προσέλυτος, one who has come to a place, hence, as sb. a stranger, esp. one who has come over to Judaism, a convert, Acts, ii. 10. — Gk. προσέρχομαι, I come to, approach, perf. tense προσελήλυθα, 2nd aor. προσέλθων (= προσ-ηλυθον). — Gk. πρός, to; and έρχομαι, I come; see Pros-. β. On the relation between έρχομαι and ήλ-υθον, see Curtius, i. 81; and both are from ✓ AR, to go; cf. Skt. ri, to go. Der. proselyt-ise, proselyt-ism.

PROSODY, the part of grammar that treats of the laws of verse. (F., — L., — Gk.) In Ben Jonson, Eng. Grammar, c. 1. Spelt prosodie in Minsheu, ed. 1627. — F. prosodie, in use in the 16th cent. (Littre). — Lat. prosodia. — Gk. προσῳδία, a song sung to an instrument, a tone, accent, prosody. — Gk. πρός, to, accompanying; and ᾠδή, an ode, song; see Pros- and Ode. Der. prosod-i-al, prosodi-c-al, prosodi-an, prosodi-ist. [†]

PROSOPŌPEIA, personification. (L., — Gk.) Spelt prosopoeia, Sir P. Sidney, Apology for Poetry, ed. Arber, p. 24. — Lat. prosopoeia. — Gk. προσωποποιία, personification. — Gk. προσωποποιεῖν, to personify. — Gk. προσωπο-, crude form of πρόσωπον, a face, person; and ποιεῖν, to make. β. Gk. πρόσωπον is from πρός, towards; and ὤψ, stem of ὤψ, face, appearance. See Pros-, Optic, and Poet.

PROSPECT, a view, scene, expectation. (L.) In Shak. Much Ado, iv. 1. 231; and in Levins. — Lat. prospect-us, a look out, distant view, prospect. — Lat. prospectus, pp. of prospicere, to look forward. — Lat. pro, before; and specere, to look; see Pro- and Spy. Der. prospect, vb., in Levins; prospect-ive, M. E. prospectiue, Chaucer, C. T. 10458, from F. prospective, 'the prospective, perspective, or optick, art,' Cot., from Lat. adj. prospectivus; prospect-ive-ly; prospect-ion; also prospectus (modern), = Lat. prospectus.

PROSPEROUS, according to hope, successful. (L.) In Levins; and in Surrey, tr. of Virgil, Æn. iv. 579 (Lat. text). Englished, by change of -us to -ous, as in arduous, &c., from Lat. prosperus, also spelt prosper, according to one's hope, favourable. — Lat. pro, for, according to; and spes (as in spere-are), put for spes, hope. β. Spes is prob. from ✓ SPA, to draw out, whence also space and speed; Fick, i. 251. See Pro- and Despair. Der. prosperous-ly; prosper, verb, Bible of 1551, 3 John, 2, and in Palsgrave, from O. F. prosperer, 'to prosper,' Cot., which from Lat. prosperare, from prosper, adj. Also prosper-i-ly, in early use, M. E. prosperite, Ancrén Riwe, p. 194, l. 14, from O. F. prosperite = Lat. acc. prosperitatem.

PROSTITUTE, to expose for sale lewdly, to sell to lewdness, devote to shameful purposes. (L.) Minsheu, ed. 1627, has prostitute, verb, and prostitution. The verb is in Shak. Per. iv. 6. 201; and in Palsgrave. — Lat. prostitut-us, pp. of prostituere, to set forth, expose openly, prostitute. — Lat. pro, forth; and statuere, to place, set; see Pro- and Statute. Der. prostitute, sb. = Lat. prostituta, fem.; prostitut-ion, from F. prostitution, 'a prostitution,' Cot., from Lat. acc. prostitutionem; prostitut-or = Lat. prostitutor.

PROSTRATE, lying on the ground, bent forward on the ground. (L.) 'It is good to slepe prostrate on their bealies;' Sir T. Eliot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 30 (R.). — Lat. prostratus, pp. of prostrare, to throw forward on the ground. — Lat. pro, forward; and sternere, to throw on the ground. See Pro- and Stratum. Der. prostrate, vb., Spenser, F. Q. i. 12. 6; prostrat-ion, from F. prostration, 'a prostrating,' Cot., from Lat. acc. prostrationem.

PROTEAN, readily assuming different shapes. (L., — Gk.) 'The Protean transformations of nature;' Cudworth, Intellectual System, p. 32 (R.). Coined, with suffix -an (= Lat. -anus), from Lat. Proteus, a sea-god who often changed his form. — Gk. Πρωτεύς, a sea-god.

PROTECT, to cover over, defend, shelter. (L.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. ii. 4. 75. [We find M. E. protectour, Henryson, Complaint of Creseide, l. 140; protection, Chaucer, C. T. 2365, 4876.] — Lat. protect-us, pp. of prolegere, to protect. — Lat. pro, before; and legere, to cover; see Pro- and Tegument. Der. protection, from F. protection, 'protection,' Cot., from Lat. acc. protectionem; protection-ist; protect-ive; protect-or, formerly protecteur, from F. protecteur, 'a protector,' from Lat. acc. protectorem; protect-or-al, protect-orship, protect-or-ate; protect-r-ess, M. E. protectrice, A Ballad in Commendation of Our Ladie, st. 9, in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 329, back, from F. protectrice, 'a protectrix,' Cot., formed from the acc. case of a Lat. *protectrix, a fem. form similar to testatrix. Also protégé, borrowed from mod. F. protégé, pp. of protéger, to protect, from Lat. prolegere; fem. form protégée.

PROTEST, to bear public witness, declare solemnly. (F., — L.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 10. 28; the sb. protest occurs in The Tale of Beryn, ed. Furnivall, l. 3905. — F. protester, 'to protest,' Cot. — Lat. protestare, protestari, to protest. — Lat. pro, publicly; and testari, to bear witness, from testis, a witness. See Pro- and Testify. Der. protest, sb., protest-er; Protest-ant, from F. protestant, pres. part. of protestare; Protest-ant-ism; protest-at-ion, Chaucer, C. T. 3139, from F. protestation, 'a protestation,' from Lat. acc. protestationem.

PROTHALMIUM, a song written on the occasion of a marriage. (L., — Gk.) See the Prothalamion written by Spenser. — Late Lat. prothalamium, or prothalamion. — Gk. προθαλάμιον, a song written before a marriage; not in Liddell and Scott, but coined (with prefix pro-) as a companion word to Epithalamium, q. v.

PROTOCOL, the first draught or copy of a document. (F., — L., — Gk.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. — O. F. protocole, also protocole, 'the first draught or copy of a deed,' Cot. [Cf. Ital. protocollo, 'a booke wherein scribes register all their writings, anything that is first made, and needeth correction,' Florio.] — Low Lat. protocolum. — Late Gk. πρωτόκολλον, not in Liddell and Scott, but explained by Scheler. It meant, in Byzantine authors, orig. the first leaf glued on to MSS., in order to register under whose administration, and by whom, the MS. was written; it was afterwards particularly applied to documents drawn up by notaries, because, by a decree of Justinian, such documents were always to be accompanied by such a first leaf or fly-leaf. It means 'first glued-on,' i.e. glued on at the beginning. — Gk. πρώτο-, crude form of πρώτος, first; and κόλλα, to glue, from Gk. κόλλα, glue. β. Gk. πρώτος is a superl. form from πρός, before; see Pro-. The root of κόλλα is unknown; cf. Russ. klei, glue.

PROTOMARTYR, the first martyr. (F., — L., — Gk.) 'The holy protomartyr seynt Alboon;' Fabyan, Chron. vol. i. c. 151. — F. protomartyre, 'the first martyr,' Cot. — Late Lat. protomartyr. — Gk. πρωτόμαρτυρ; coined from πρώτο-, crude form of πρώτος, first, superl. of πρός, before; and μάρτυρ, a martyr, later form of μάρτυς, a witness. See Pro- and Martyr.

PROTOTYPE, the original type or model. (F., — L., — Gk.) 'There, great exemplar, prototype of kings;' Daniel, at Panegyric to the King's Majesty (R.). And in Minsheu. — F. prototype, 'the first form, type, or pattern of,' Cot. — Lat. prototypum, neut. of prototypus, adj., original. — Gk. πρωτότυπον, a prototype; neut. of πρωτότυπος, according to the first form. — Gk. πρώτο-, crude form of πρώτος, first, superl. of πρός, before; and τύπος, a type. See Pro- and Type.

¶ So also, with the same prefix, we have proto-plasm, proto-phyte, &c. PROTRACT, to prolong. (L.) 'Without longer protracting of tyme;' Hall's Chron., Hen. VI. an. 38 (R.); and in Shak. — Lat. protract-us, pp. of protrahere, to draw forth, prolong. — Lat. pro, forth; and trahere, to draw; see Pro- and Trace. Der. protract-ion (not F.); protract-ive, Shak. Troil. i. 3. 20; protract-or.

PROTRUDE, to push forward, put out. (L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 20, § 4. — Lat. protrudere, to thrust forth. — Lat. pro, forth; and trudere, to thrust, allied to E. threat; see Pro- and Threat. Der. protrus-ion, coined from Lat. pp. protrusus; protrus-ive.

PROTUBERANT, prominent, bulging out. (L.) 'Protuberant, swelling or puffing up;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Phillips, ed. 1706, has both protuberant and protuberance. The rare verb protuberare sometimes occurs; see Rich. — Lat. protuberant-, stem of pres. part. of protuberare, to bulge out. — Lat. pro, forward; and tuber, a swelling; see Pro- and Tuber. Der. protuberance.

PROUD, haughty, arrogant. (E.) M. E. prud (with long u), Havelok, 302; Ancrén Riwe, p. 176, l. 17; later proud, P. Plowman, B. iii. 178. Older form prut (with long u), Ancrén Riwe, p. 276, l. 19; Layamon, 8828 (earlier text; later text, prout). — A. S. prūt, proud; a word of which the traces are slight; the various reading prúne for rancne in the A.S. Chron. an. 1006, is only found in MS. F. of the 12th century; see Earle, Two A.S. Chronicles, notes, p. 336. Yet its earlier existence may be safely inferred from the occurrence of the derived words prútung, pride, Mone, Quellen, p. 355, and prýte in Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 220, formed by the usual vowel-change from ú to ý; see Pride. β. Moreover, we find Icel. prúðr, proud, borrowed from A.S.; with which cf. Dan. prud, stately, magnificent. Root unknown. Der. proud-ly; also pride, q. v.

PROVE, to test, demonstrate, experience. (F., -L.) In old authors, it commonly means 'to test,' as in the proverb, 'the exception proves the rule' = Lat. 'exceptio probat regulam'; a phrase often foolishly used to signify that 'an exception demonstrates a rule,' which is plainly absurd. M. E. prouen, preuen (with u for v), P. Plowman, B. viii. 120, A. ix. 115. Older spelling preouen, Ancren Riwle, p. 390, l. 22. - O. F. prover, pruver, later prover, 'to prove, try, essay, verify, approve, assure,' &c.; Cot. = Lat. probare, to test, try, examine, orig. to judge of the goodness of a thing. = Lat. probus, good, excellent. Root uncertain. β. From the Lat. probare are also derived, not only Port. provar, Span. probar, Ital. provare, but also A.S. prófan, Laws of Ine, § 20, in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, i. 116, Du. proeven, Icel. prófa, Swed. prófa, Dan. prøve, G. proben, probieren. The mod. E. prove seems to have been taken from the F. rather than from Lat. directly. Der. prov-able, prov-ably, provable-ness; and see proof, probable, probation, probe, probity, ap-prove, dis-prove, dis-prove, im-prove, re-prove, re-probate.

PROVENDER, dry food for beasts, as hay and corn. (F., -L.) In Shak. Hen. V. iv. 2. 58; Oth. i. 1. 48. The final r is an E. addition, just as in lavender; it seems to be due to the preservation of the final e in M. E. prouendē, provendē, which was orig. a trisyllabic word. Shak. has also the shorter form provand, Cor. ii. 1. 267, which is, strictly, a better form. The M. E. prouende also meant 'prebend,' as in: 'Prouendē, rent, or dignité;' Rom. of the Rose, 6031. According to Stratmann, provende occurs in the sense of 'provender' in Robert Manning's Hist. of England (unpublished), ed. Furnivall, i. 11188. - F. provende, 'provender, also, a prebendary;' Cot. [In O. F. it also has the sense of 'prebend;' see Litttré.] - Lat. præbenda, a payment; in late Lat. a daily allowance of provisions, also a prebend; Ducange. Fem. of præbendus, pass. fut. part. of præbere, to afford, give; see Prebend. ¶ We might also explain the mod. form as due to confusion with M. E. prouendre, which meant 'a prebendary,' or person enjoying a prebend, where the suffix answers to mod. E. -er, so that prouendre = prebend-er. See the passages quoted in Richardson, esp. from Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 81, l. 2, p. 210, l. 27. 'Now is steward for his achates [purchases] . . . personer and prouendre alone,' i.e. sole partner and prebendary; Test. of Love, b. iii. fol. 296, col. 2, ed. 1651.

PROVERB, a short familiar sentence, an adage, a maxim. (F., -L.) M. E. prouerbe (with u = v), Wyclif, John, xvi. 29. - F. proverbe, 'a proverb.' - Lat. prouerbiū, a common saying, proverb. - Lat. pro, publicly; and verbum, a word. See Pro- and Verb-. Der. proverb-i-al, from Lat. prouerbialis, formed from prouerbi-um with suffix -alis; proverb-i-al-ly.

PROVIDE, to make ready beforehand, prepare, supply. (L.) In Shak. Com. Errors, i. 1. 81; and in Palsgrave. - Lat. providere, to act with foresight, lit. to foresee. - Lat. pro-, before; and uidere, to see. See Pro- and Vision. Der. provid-er, Cymb. iii. 6. 53. Also provid-ent, Skelton, ed. Dyce, i. 11, l. 139, from Lat. provident-, stem of pres. part. of providere; provid-ent-ly; also provid-ence, M. E. providence, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. v. pr. 6, l. 5068, from F. providence = Lat. providentia; whence providenti-al, providenti-al-ly. Also (from Lat. pp. provis-us) provis-ion, Sir T. Elyot, The Governor, b. ii. c. 12, from F. provision = Lat. acc. provisionem; provis-ion, verb, provis-ion-al, provis-ion-al-ly; provis-or, M. E. provisour, P. Plowman, B. iv. 133, from F. provisieur, 'a provider,' Cot., = Lat. acc. provisorem; provis-or-y, provis-or-i-ly. Also provis-o, 1 Hen. IV. i. 3. 78, from the Lat. law-phrase provisio quod = it being provided that, in use A.D. 1350 (Ducange); pl. provisos. Doublet, purvey; doublet of provident, prudent.

PROVINCE, a business or duty, a portion of an empire or state, a region, district, department. (F., -L.) M. E. proynce, province (with u = v), Wyclif, Deeds [Acts], xxiii. 34. - F. province, 'a province,' Cot. = Lat. provincia, a territory, conquest. β. Of unknown origin; the various explanations are unfounded and unsatisfactory. Der. provinci-al, Meas. for Meas. v. 318; provinci-al-ly, provinci-al-ism.

PROVISION, PROVIDO; see under Provide.

PROVOKE, to call forth, excite to action or anger, offend, challenge. (F., -L.) M. E. prouoken, Prompt. Parv. - F. provoquer, 'to provoke,' Cot. - Lat. provocare, to call forth, challenge, incite, provoke. - Lat. pro-, forth; and vocare, to call, from uoc-, stem of uox, the voice. See Pro- and Vocal. Der. provok-ing, provok-ing-ly; provocat-ion, in Fabyan's Chron. vol. i. c. 64, from F. provocation, 'a provocation,' Cot., from Lat. acc. provocationem; provocat-ive, Henry-soun, Test. of Creside, st. 33; provocat-ive-ness.

PROVOST, a principal or chief, esp. a principal of a college or chief magistrate of a Scottish town, a prefect. (F., -L.) M. E. provost (with u = v), Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. 4. l. 293; provest, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 268, l. 7. - O. F. provost (Burguy), variant of prevost, 'the provost or president of a college;' Cot. = Lat. præpositus, acc. of præpositus, a prefect; lit. 'one who is set over,' pp. of præponere, to set over. - Lat. præ, before; and ponere, to place. See Pre- and Position. β. Ducange gives propositior as equivalent to præpositus; it is certain that the prefix pro- is due to confusion of the Lat. prefix pro- with præ; the mod. F. prévôt keeps the correct form. ¶ The A. S. præfost is formed directly from the Latin. In Italian we find both prevosto and preposto; shewing that v is due to the older p. Der. provost-marshal, provost-ship.

PROW, the fore-part of a ship. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. - O. F. prouë (mod. F. proue), 'the prow, or forepart of a ship;' Cot. Cf. Ital. proda, prua. - Lat. prōra, the prow of a ship; the second r disappearing in order to avoid the double trill. - Gk. πρῶρα (for πρῶ-ρα), the prow; extended from πρῶτ, in front (usually early), an old locative form connected with πρῶ, before; see Pro-.

PROWESS, bravery, valour. (F., -L.) Originally 'excellence.' M. E. prowes, prowesse, Rob. of Glouc. p. 12, l. 20; p. 112, l. 2; prouesse, King Horn, ed. Lumby, l. 556. - O. F. prouesse, 'prowesse,' Cot.; formed with suffix -esse (= Lat. -itia) from O. F. prou, brave, mod. F. proux, 'hardy, doughty, valiant, full of prowess;' Cot.

β. The etym. of O. F. prou is much disputed; it occurs also in the forms prod, prud, pros, proz, &c., fem. prode, prude; we also find Prov. proz, Ital. prode.

γ. But, besides the adj. prou, we also find a sb. prou, formerly prod, in the sense of 'advantage;' thus bon prou leur face = much good may it do them. This is the common M. E. prou, meaning profit, advantage, benefit, as in Chaucer, C. T. 12234, 13338.

δ. It is certain that prouesse was used to translate Lat. probitas, and that prou was used to translate probus, but the sense of the words was, nevertheless, not quite the same, and they seem to have been drawn together by the influence of a popular etymology which supposed prou to represent probus, but which is prob. wrong. For example, we cannot explain the fem. prode or prude as = Lat. proba, which would rather have given a form prove. The d is very persistent; we still find the fem. prude even in mod. E., and we must observe that Ital. prode means both 'advantage' and 'valiant,' whilst the F. prud 'homme simply meant, at first, 'brave man.'

ε. It seems best to accept the suggestion that the word is due to the Lat. prep. pro, often used in the sense of 'in favour of' or 'for the benefit of;' and to explain (with Scheler) the d as due to the occasional form prod-, appearing in Lat. prod-esse, to be useful to, to do good, to benefit.

ς. This would also explain the use of O. F. prod, prou, as an adverb. Cot. has: 'Prou, much, greatly, enough;' which seems to be nothing but the Lat. prod- (without its accompanying -esse) in the sense of 'sufficient.' See Pro-, and Prude.

PROWL, to rove in search of plunder or prey. (C.?) 'To proule for fishe, percontari; To proule for riches, omnia appetere;' Levins. M. E. prollen, to search about; Chaucer, C. T. 16880. 'Prollyn, as rathys [dogs that hunt by scent], Scrutor,' Prompt. Parv. 'Prol-lynge, or sekyng, Perscrutacio, investigacio, scrutinium;' id. 'Pur-lyng, idem quod Prollyn;' id. 'I prolle, I go here and there to seke a thyng, ie tracasse. Prollyn for a promocyon, ambition;' Palsgrave.

Wedgwood well says: 'The derivation from a supposed F. *proieler, to seek one's prey, is extremely doubtful.' I will go further, and say that it is impossible; there is no such F. word, nor any reason why there should be; if there were, it would surely have given us a form preyle rather than prolle; and lastly, the notion of 'prey' is by no means inseparably connected with the use of M. E. prollen.

β. It means rather 'to keep poking about,' and I suspect it to be a contracted frequentative form, standing for progle, weakened form of prokle; where progle is the frequentative of progue or prog, to search about, esp. for provisions, and proke is an old verb meaning to thrust or poke. See prog or progue, to go a-begging, to procure by a beggarly trick, in Todd's Johnson and Nares. 'And that man in the gown, in my opinion, Looks like a proguing [1st ed. proaging] knave;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Span. Curate, iii. 3 (Ascanio). 'We travel sea and soil, we pry, we prowl, We progress and we prog from pole to pole;' Quarles, Emblems (Nares).

'Proke, to stir or poke about; proking about, a familiar term applied to a person who is busily looking for something, and examining, as we say, every hole and corner; prolle, to search or prowl about, to rob, poll, or steal, to plunder;' Halliwell. See two more exx. of proke, to poke, in Nares, ed. Halliwell. 'Proker, a poker;' Jamieson.

γ. If this be right, the derivation is plainly from W. procio, to thrust, to stab, to poke, to 'proke;' and the sense of 'begging' seems to have been suggested by confusion with M. E. prokken, to beg. Thus we have: 'Proklyn, or stily askyn, Procor, Procito;'² Prompt. Parv. This last form is related to Dan. prakke, explained by 'to prog' in Ferrall and Repp, though probably of a different origin; also to Swed. pracka, to go begging, G. prachern, prachen, to solicit earnestly, to beg. Moreover, the Dan. and G. words may be mere adaptations from Lat. procare, to ask, rather than cognate forms from the same root PARK, to pray, to ask, noticed under PRAY. But the whole of the words here noticed are somewhat obscure. ¶ The common vulgar word prog, provisions, is a mere derivative of the verb to prog, to search for odds and ends.

PROXIMITY, nearness. (F., -L.) Spelt proximitie in Minshew, ed. 1627. - F. proximité, 'proximity'; Cot. - Lat. proximitatem, acc. of proximatus; formed with suffix -tas from proximi = proximo, crude form of proximus, very near, which is a superl. form from prope, near; see Propinquity. Der. Also proxim-ate, rather a late word, see exx. in R. and Todd's Johnson, from Lat. proximatus, pp. of proximare, to approach, from proximus, very near; proxim-ate-ly.

PROXY, the agency of one who acts for another; also an agent. (Low Lat., -L.) 'Vnles the King would send a proxie;' Fox, Martyrs, p. 978, an. 1536 (R.) Proxie is merely a vulgar contraction for procuracy, which is properly an agency, not an agent. 'Procurator, is used for him that gathereth the fruits of a benefice for another man; An. 3 Rich. II, stat. i. cap. 2. And procuracy is used for the specialtie whereby he is authorized, ibid; Minshew, ed. 1627. Procuracy is Englished from Low Lat. procuratia, a late form used as equivalent to Lat. procuratio, a management. Similarly, proctor is a contraction for procurator, a manager; see Proctor, Procure. The contracted forms, proctor and proxy, seem to have come into use at the close of the 14th century. Cf. 'Prokecy, procuracia; Proketowre, Procurator;' Prompt. Parv. Also prockesy, Palsgrave. It thus appears that the syllable -ra was dropped, whilst u was first weakened to e and afterwards disappeared. [†]

PRUDE, a woman of affected modesty. (F., -L.) In Pope, Rape of the Lock, i. 63, iv. 74, v. 36; Tatler, no. 102, Dec. 3, 1709. - F. prude, orig. used in a good sense, excellent, as in 'prude femme, a chaste, honest, modest matron,' Cot. O.F. prude; fem. form of O.F. prod, prud, excellent; the etymology of which is discussed under Prowess, q. v. Der. prud-ish; prud-ish-ly, Pope, Dunciad, iv. 194; prud-e-ry, Pope, Answer to Mrs. Howe, l. i, from F. pruderie.

PRUDENT, discreet, sagacious, frugal. (F., -L.) M.E. prudent, Chaucer, C. T. 1244. - F. prudent, 'prudent,' Cot. - Lat. prudent-em, acc. of prudens, prudent. β. Prudens is a contracted form of prouidens; see Provident. Der. prudent-ly; prudence, M.E. prudence, Wyclif, 1 Cor. i. 19, from F. prudence = Lat. prudentia; prudenti-al, Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, coined from Lat. prudentia.

PRUNE (1), to trim trees, divest of what is superfluous. (F., -L.) The old form is proine, proin; see exx. of proin in Nares and Jamieson. In Chaucer, C. T. 9885, it is said of Damian, when dressing himself up smartly: 'He kembeth him [combs himself], he proineth him and piketh,' where the Harl. MS. has pruneth. It here means to trim, trick out, adorn. Gascoigne speaks of imps, i. e. scions of trees, which 'growe crookt, bycause they be not proyned,' i. e. pruned; Steel Glas, 458. It was esp. used of birds, in the sense 'to pick out damaged feathers and arrange the plumage with the bill' (Schmidt), Cymb. v. 4. 118; cf. L. L. L. iv. 3. 183. β. Tyrwhitt, with reference to proinen in Chaucer, says: 'It seems to have signified, originally, to take cuttings from vines, in order to plant them out. From hence it has been used for the cutting away of the superfluous shoots of all trees, which we now call pruning; and for that operation, which birds, and particularly hawks, perform upon themselves, of picking out their superfluous or damaged feathers. Gower, speaking of an eagle, says: "For there he pruneth him and piketh As doth an hauke, whan him wel liketh;" Conf. Amant, iii. 75.'

γ. If this be right, the etymology is from F. provigner, 'to plant or set a stocke, staulke, slip, or sucker, for increase; hence to propagate, multiply,' &c.; Cot. This may have been shortened to pro'gner, thus giving M.E. proinen; and, in fact, Littré gives the Berry forms of provigner as preugner, prognier, prominer. This verb is from the F. sb. provin, 'a slip or sucker planted,' Cot.; O.F. provain; cf. Ital. propagaine, a vine-sucker laid in the ground, - Lat. propaginem, acc. of propago, a layer, sucker. See Propagate. ¶ There is a slight difficulty, owing to the want of full proof of the transfer of sense from 'setting suckers' to that of 'trimming trees.' Hence Wedgwood, noting the occasional form preen, to dress feathers, used of a bird, refers us to Gael. prin, a pin, Icel. prjón. But the Icel. word seems to be merely borrowed from Gaelic, and the change of vowel from i in prin to u in prune is not explained. Der. prun-er.

PRUNE (2), a plum. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 7. - F. prune, 'a plum,' Cot. - Lat. prunum, a plum. - Gk. πρῖνον, shorter form of πρῖνον, a plum; πρῖνος, shorter form of πρῖνον, a plum-tree. Root unknown. Der. prun-ella, or prun-ello, Pope, Essay on Man, iv. 204, the name of a strong woollen stuff of a dark colour, so named from prunella, the Latinised form of F. prunelle, a sloe, dimin. of prune. Doublet, plum.

PRURIENT, itching. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. pruriens, stem of pruriens, pres. part. of prurire, to itch, orig. to burn; cognate with E. freeze; see Freeze. Der. prurience, pruriency.

PRY, to peer, to gaze. (O. Low G.) M.E. pryen, prien, Chaucer, C. T. 3458; P. Plowman, B. xvi. 168; Will. of Palerne, 5019; Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 222, l. 11. It is merely the same word as M.E. piren, to peer, used in precisely the same sense; we have numerous instances of a shifting of the letter r, as in bride, M.E. burd, and in bird, M.E. brid. See Peer (2), which is a doublet.

PSALM, a sacred song. (L., -Gk.) M.E. psalm, frequently salm, in very early use, Layamon, 23754. A.S. sealm; see Sweet's A.S. Reader. - Lat. psalmus. - Gk. ψαλμός, a touching, a feeling, esp. the twitching of the strings of a harp; hence, the sound of the harp, a song, psalm. - Gk. ψάλλειν, to touch, twitch, twang; from base PSAL, put for SPAL. - ✓ SPAR, to struggle, throb; whence also Skt. spur, sphar, to tremble, throb, struggle, Gk. ἀσπαίρειν, to pant, G. sich sperren, to struggle. Der. psalm-ist, Levins, F. psalmiste (Cot.), from Lat. psalmista, late Gk. ψαλμστής; psalm-ody, spelt psalmodie in Minshew, F. psalmodie (Cot.), from late Lat. psalmodia, from Gk. ψαλμῳδία, a singing to the harp, which from ψαλμ, stem of ψαλμός, and ὄδῃ, a song, ode (see Ode); psalmodi-c-al, psalmod-ist. Also psaltary, q. v.

PSALTERY, a kind of stringed instrument. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Shak. Cor. v. 4. 52. M.E. sautrie, Chaucer, C. T. 3213. - O.F. psalterie, in use in the 12th cent.; see Littré, s. v. psalterion, which is the mod. F. form. - Lat. psalterium. - Gk. ψαλτήριον, a stringed instrument. - Gk. ψαλτήρ, a harper; formed from ψαλ, base of ψάλλειν, to harp; with suffix answering to Aryan -tar, and denoting the agent. See Psalm. Der. psalter, M.E. sauter, Holi Meidenhad, ed. Cockayne, p. 3, from O.F. psaltier, 'a psalter, book of psalms,' Cot., from Lat. psalterium, (1) a psalter, (2) a song sung to the psalter, the Psalter.

PSEUDONYM, a fictitious name. (F., -Gk.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. Borrowed from F. pseudonyme, used by Voltaire, A.D. 1772 (Littré). - Gk. ψευδώνυμος, adj., called by a false name. - Gk. ψεύδο, put for ψεύδος, a falsehood (cf. ψεύδης, false); and ὄνομα, a name. [The ω results from the coalescence of the double ο.] β. The Gk. ψεύδος is allied to ψυδρός, ψυδρός (base ψυδ-), false; and to ψύβω, a lie, orig. a whisper; cf. ψυβίσειν, to whisper. This is from a base ψυβ- = SPUT, an extension of the imitative ✓SPU, to blow, whence also ψύχων, to blow, and Skt. phūt, the imitative sound of blowing. γ. For the Gk. ὄνομα, see Name. Der. pseudonym-bus.

PSHAW, interjection of disdain. (E.) 'A peevish fellow . . . disturbs all with psishes and pschaws;' Spectator (cited by Todd). An imitative word, like pisk; from the sound of blowing. Cf. also pooh.

PSYCHICAL, pertaining to the soul. (L., -Gk.) Modern; formed with suffix -al from psychic-us, the Latinised form of Gk. ψυχικός, belonging to the soul or life. - Gk. ψυχή, the soul, life, orig. breath. - Gk. ψύχ-ειν, to blow; extended from the base ψν- = ✓SPU, to blow; see Pseudonym. Der. psycho-logy, where the suffix -logy = Gk. suffix -λογία, from λόγος, discourse, which from λέγειν, to speak; hence, psycholog-i-c-al, -al-ly; psycholog-ist. Also met-em-psychosis, q. v.

PTARMIGAN, a species of grouse. (Gaelic.) 'The ptarmigan grouse' is mentioned in an E. translation of Buffon's Nat. Hist., London, 1792, vol. ii. p. 48. The singular spelling ptarmigan, with a needless initial p, seems to be French, and appears in Littré's Dict. - Gael. tarmachan, 'the bird ptarmigan'; Irish tarmochan, 'the bird called the termagant (1)'. I do not know the sense of the word; the Gael. verb tarmaich means 'to originate, be the source of, gather, collect, dwell, settle, produce, beget.' [†]

PUBERTY, the age of full development, early manhood. (F., -L.) Spelt pubertie in Minshew, ed. 1627. - F. puberté, 'youth,' Cot. - Lat. pubertatem, acc. of pubertas, the age of maturity. - Lat. pubes, the signs of manhood, hair.

β. Allied to pu-pus, a boy, pu-pa, a girl; from ✓PU, to beget; see Puppet, Pupil. Der. pub-esc-ent, arriving at puberty, from pubescent-, pres. part. of pubescere, inceptive verb formed from sb. pub-es; pubescence.

PUBLIC, belonging to the people, general, common to all. (F., -L.) 'Publyke toke his [its] begynnynge of people;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 1. And in Palsgrave. - F. public, masc., publique, fem., 'publick,' Cot. - Lat. publicus, public; O. Lat. publicus, poplicus.

β. A contracted form of Lat. *populi-cus, formed from populus, people; see People. Der. public-ly, public-house, public-ist, one skilled in public law; public-i-ty, a modern word, from F. publicité, coined as if from a Lat. acc. publicitatem *. And see public-an, public-at-ion, publicish.

PUBLICAN, a tax-gatherer; inn-keeper. (L.) M. E. publican, Ormulum, 10147; spelt pupplian in Wyclif, Luke, iii. 12, where it is used to translate Lat. publicanus, with the sense of tax-gatherer. [The sense of 'inn-keeper' is modern.]—Lat. publicanus, a farmer of the public revenue, from publicanus, adj., belonging to the public revenue. Extended from publicus, public; see Public.

PUBLICATION, a publishing, that which is published. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Troil. i. 3. 326.—F. publication, 'a publication,' Cot.—Lat. publicationem, acc. of publicatio.—Lat. publicatus, pp. of publicare, to make public.—Lat. publicus, public; see Public.

PUBLISH, to make public. (F.,—L.) M. E. publischen, puplischen. 'He was rijtful, and wolde not puplische hir;' Wyclif, Matt. i. 19. Also publischen, Chaucer, C. T. 8291. This is a quite irregular formation, due perhaps to some confusion with O. F. peupler, to people, and conformed to other E. verbs in -ish, which are usually formed from F. verbs in -ir making the pres. part. in -issant. It is founded on F. publier, 'to publish,' Cot.—Lat. publicare, to make public.—Lat. publicus, public. See Public. Der. publish-er.

PUCE, the name of a colour. (F.,—L.) 'Puce, of a dark brown colour;' Todd's Johnson.—F. puce, a flea; couleur puce, puce-coloured; Hamilton. Thus it is lit. 'flea-coloured.' The O. F. spelling of puce is pulse (Cotgrave).—Lat. pulicem, acc. of pulex, a flea. + Gk. ψύλλα (= ψυλ-ja), a flea. β. Hence Gk. ψυλ-λα (= σπυλ-ja) and Lat. pul-ex (= spul-ex) are to be connected with Skt. spuhr, to move quickly, from √SPAR, to throb. The orig. sense is 'quick jumper' or 'jerker,' from its motion. ¶ Todd says that E. puce is the same as E. puke, an old word occurring in Shak. in the phrase puke-stocking, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 78. Todd also cites 'Cloths . . . puke, brown-blue, blacks' from Stat. 5 and 6 Edw. VI, c. vi. But the true sense of puke is uncertain, and the origin of the word unknown. It cannot be the same word as puce.

PUCK, a goblin, mischievous sprite. (C.) In Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 40. M. E. pouke, P. Plowman, c. xvi. 164, on which passage see my note. It first appears in Richard Coeur de Lion, l. 566, in Weber, Met. Romances, ii. 25. Of Celtic origin.—Irish púca, an elf, sprite, hobgoblin; W. puca, pucci, a hobgoblin. Cf. Gael. and Irish bocan, a spectre, apparition; Corn. bucca, a hobgoblin, bugbear, scare-crow; W. bug, a hobgoblin. + Icel. púki, a wee devil, an imp. + G. spuk, an apparition, hobgoblin, ghost. β. The G. form shows that an initial s has been lost; and the root takes the form SPU, possibly to blow, inflate; but this is doubtful. The Dan. pog, Swed. pojke, a boy, are unrelated; cf. Finn. poika, a son (E. Müller).

γ. It is clear that E. bug, as in bug-bear, hum-bug, is nothing but a weakened form of puck; see Bug (1). Thus puck is a more original form, and it is not possible to connect bug with Lithuan. baugis, terrific, as erroneously suggested under Bug (1). The whole of section β in that article is wrong. Doublets, pug, bug.

PUCKER, to gather into folds, to wrinkle. (C.) 'Pucker, to shrink up or lie uneven, as some clothes are apt to do;' Phillips, ed. 1706. 'Saccolare, to pucker, or gather, or cockle, as some stuffs do being wet;' Florio, ed. 1598. 'He fell down; and not being able to rise again, had his belly puckered together like a sachel, before the chamberlain could come to help him;' Junius, Sin Stigmatised (1639), p. 19; in Todd's Johnson. The allusion is here to the top of a poke or bag, when drawn closely together by means of the string; cf. 'to purse up the brows,' from purse, sb., and Ital. saccolare from sacco. It is a frequentative form from the base puck, which appears to be of Celtic origin. Cf. Irish pucadh, a swelling or puffing up; Gael. póc, to put up in a bag or sack, to become like a bag; connected with Gael. poca, a bag. See Poke (1), Pock. Der. pucker, sb.

PUDDING, an intestine filled with meat, a sausage; a soft kind of meat, of flour, milk, eggs, &c. (C. ?) M. E. pudding, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 106. It is probable that this word belongs to that class of homely domestic words which are of Celtic origin. The suffix -ing is probably an E. substitute for an older suffix which was not understood.—Irish putog, a pudding, the nuckles of a deer; Gael. putag, a pudding; W. poten, a paunch, a pudding; Corn. pot, a bag, a pudding.

β. The older sense was doubtless 'bag,' and these words point back to a root PUT, 'to swell out, be inflated,' preserved in Swed. dial. puta, to be inflated, bulge out (Rietz). Though this root has not been noted, it will explain several other words, such as prov. E. puddle, short and fat, poddy, round and stout in the belly, pod, a large protuberant belly (Halliwell); W. putyn, a short round body, putian, a squat female; Gael. put, a large buoy, an inflated skin, put, the cheek (from its inflated appearance). Cf. also E. pad, pod; see Pad, Pod.

γ. Perhaps the same root appears in Lat. botulus, a sausage, which certainly seems to be a closely related word, and in F. boudin, a black-pudding. δ. The Low G. pudding has much the same sense as E. pudding; and is clearly related to Low G. puddewurst, a thick black-pudding, and to puddig, thick, stumpy; see Poodle. And perhaps Pout and Put belong to the same family.

PUDDLE (1), a small pool of muddy water. (C.) M. E. podel, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 54, l. 5. Like pool, it is of Celtic origin; but this is obscured by the loss of l after p, as in the case of patch. M. E. podel stands for plodel, and the loss of l was due to the recurrence of the letter in the suffix; just as in the case of bubble, put for bubble, the dimin. of blob; see Bubble. β. Again, the suffix -el is an E. suffix, put in place of the Celtic suffix -an or -ach, which was not so well understood.—Irish plodach, puddle, mire; plodan, a small pool; Gael. plodan, a small pool. Dimin. of Irish and Gael. plod, a pool, standing water. Cf. Skt. pluta, bathed, wet; Irish plodaim, I float. The orig. sense of plod is 'flooded water.'

✓ PLU, to swim; see Plod, Flood, Float. Der. puddle (2). [†] PUDDLE (2), to make muddy; to make thick or close with clay, so as to render impervious to water; to work iron. (C.) Shak. has puddle, to make muddy or thick, Com. Err. v. 173; Oth. iii. 4. 143. Hence the various technical uses. From Puddle (1). Cf. Irish and Gael. plodanachd, paddling in water; from plodan, a small pool. Der. puddl-er, puddl-ing.

PUERILE, childish. (F.,—L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. [The sb. puerility is in much earlier use, occurring in Minshew, ed. 1627.]—O. F. pueril, omitted by Cotgrave, but in use in the 16th cent. (Littre); mod. F. puéril.—Lat. puerilis, boyish.—Lat. puer, a boy, lit. 'one begotten.'—✓ PU, to beget; cf. Skt. pota, the young of any animal, putra, a son. And see Foal. Der. pueril-ity, from F. puerilité, 'puerility,' Cot. So also puer-peral, relating to child-birth, from Lat. puerpera, fem. adj., child-bearing; from puer, stem of puer, a child, and parere, to bear, produce, for which see Parent.

PUFF, to blow. (E.) M. E. puffen, Ancrén Riwele, p. 272, l. 1. Not found in A. S., but of imitative origin, and may be claimed as E. It occurs not only in G. puffen, to puff, pop, strike, Dan. puffe, to pop, Swed. puffa, to crack, to push, but in W. puff, a puff, a sharp blast, puffio, to come in puffs. Cf. G. puff, a puff; puff! interjection, &c. β. All from a base PU or BU, expressive of the act of blowing, which is variously expanded in Skt. bukh, to sound, to bark, Lithuan. pukszti, to pant, &c. And see Buffer (1), Buffet (1).

γ. The form pop is a mere variant; see Pop. And see Pooh. Der. puffer, puffer-y, puff-y, puff-i-ly, puff-i-ness. Also puff-in, q. v.

PUFFIN, the name of a bird. (E.) 'Puffin, a fowle so called;' Minshew, ed. 1627. 'Puffin, a sort of coot or sea-gull, a bird supposed to be so called from its round belly, as it were swelling and puffing out;' Phillips, ed. 1706. And in Skelton, Phylip Sparowe, 454. (The F. puffin is borrowed from E.) Puffin Island, near Anglesea, abounds with these birds, or formerly did so; but the W. name for the bird is pal. The reason assigned by Phillips is prob. the right one; Webster thinks it is named from its peculiar swelling beak, which somewhat resembles that of the parrot. But it comes to the same thing. Thus the etym. is from Puff, q. v. The suffix is diminutival, answering to E. -en in kitt-en, chick-en.

PUG, a monkey, small kind of dog. (C.) The orig. sense is 'imp' or 'little demon,' as in Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3, l. 635, and in Ben Jonson's play The Devil is an Ass, in which 'Pug, the lesser devil' is one of the characters. A weakened form of Puck, q. v. 'A pug-dog is a dog with a short monkey-like face;' Wedgwood.

PUGILISM, the art of boxing. (L.) Pugilism and pugilist are late words, added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. Coined from Lat. pugil, a boxer. From the base PUG, weakened form of PUK, with the sense of 'close;' cf. Gk. πυγ-μή, the fist, πυγνός, close, compact. Perhaps allied to ✓PAK, to fasten; see Paot. β. Allied to E. fist; see Fist. And see pugnacious.

PUGNACIOUS, combative, fond of fighting. (L.) Rather a late word. R. quotes 'a furious, pugnacious pope like Julius II,' from Barrow, On the Pope's Supremacy. [The sb. pugnacity is earlier, occurring in Minshew, ed. 1627.] A coined word (with suffix -ous = Lat. -osus) from Lat. pugnaci, crude form of pugnax, combative.—Lat. pugna-re, to fight.—Lat. pugnus, the fist; allied to E. Fist, q. v. Der. pugnacious-ly; also pugnacity, from Lat. acc. pugnacitatem. And see ex-pugn, im-pugn, op-pugn, re-pugn-ant, pug-il-ist, poni-ard. [†]

PUISNE, inferior in rank, applied to certain judges in England. (F.,—L.) A law term. 'Puisne or punie, vsd in our common law-books . . . for the younger; as in Oxford and Cambridge they call Junior and Senior, so at Innes of Court they say Puisne and Ancient;' Minshew, ed. 1627. The same word as Puny, q. v.

PUISSANT, powerful, strong. (F.,—L.) In Skelton, ed. Dyce, i. 203, l. 3 from bottom. 'This is so puissant an enemy to nature;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 12.—F. puissant, 'puissant, mighty,' Cot. Cf. Ital. possente, powerful. β. The Ital. form (like the F.) shows that the word is formed from a barbarous Latin *possens (stem possent-), substituted for the true form potens, powerful;

see Potent. γ. This barbarism is due to confusion between the pres. part. potens and the infin. posse, to be able, have power; see Possible. Der. puissant-ly; puissance, Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 40, from F. puissance, power. Doublet, potent. [†]

PUKE (1), to vomit. (E.?) In Shak. As You Like It, ii. 7. 144. As an initial s occasionally is lost before p, it is most likely that puke stands for spuke or spew, an extension from the verb to spew, with the same meaning. Cf. G. spucken, to spit. See Spew.

PUKE (2), the name of a colour; obsolete. (Unknown.) Explained by Baret as a colour between russet and black. See Nares and Halliwell, and see further under Puce, which must be a different word, since puke could never have come out of puce, and indeed it occurs earlier. Origin unknown.

PULE, to chirp as a bird, whine like an infant, whimper. (F.—L.) In Shak. Cor. iv. 2. 52; Romeo, iii. 5. 185. — F. piauler, 'to peep, or cheep, as a young bird; also, to pule or howle, as a young whelp;' Cot. Cf. Ital. pigolare, to chirp, moan, complain. These are imitative words; and are formed, like Lat. pipilare, to chirp, from the imitative PI, to chirp, appearing in Lat. pipare, to chirp. See Peep (1), and Pipe.

PULL, to draw, try to draw forcibly, to pluck. (E.) M. E. pullen, P. Plowman, B. xvi. 73; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 68. 'And let him there-in pulle'—and caused him to be thrust into it; lit. and caused (men) to thrust him into it; Legends of the Holy Rood, ed. Morris, p. 60. Prob. an E. word; the A. S. pullian and the pp. ápulled, given in Somner's Dict., are correct forms; ápulled is in A. S. Leechdoms, i. 362, l. 10. β. We find, also, Low G. pulen, to pick, pinch, pluck, pull, tear, which is the same word; Brem. Wörterb. iii. 372.

γ. And, if we suppose a loss of an initial s, we may compare it with Irish spioladh, a snatching, Gael. spiol, to pluck, snatch, G. sich sperren, to struggle against; also with Lat. pellere (for spellere), to drive, pt. t. pe-pul-i, Gk. πάλλειν (for σπάλλειν), to brandish, cast; all from SPAR, to tremble, throb, struggle, of which the Skt. forms are sphar and spkur, the latter containing the same vowel as the E. word. ¶ We also find O. Du. pullen, to drink; this agrees with the E. phrase 'to take a long pull at a cup' in drinking. Der. pull, sb., Chaucer, Parl. of Fowls, l. 164. And see pulsate.

PULLET, a young hen. (F.,—L.) M. E. polete (with one l), P. Plowman, B. vi. 282. — O. F. polete (13th cent., Littré), later poulette, 'a young hen,' Cot. Fem. form of F. poulet, a chicken, dimin. of poule, a hen. — Low Lat. pulla, a hen; fem. of pullus, a young animal, cognate with E. foal, q. v. Doublet, poult, q. v.

PULLEY, a wheel turning on an axis, over which a cord is passed for raising weights. (F.,—L.; or F.,—O. Low G.) Spelt pulley in Minshew, ed. 1627; polley in Caxton, tr. of Reynard the Fox, ed. Arber, p. 96, l. 6 from bottom. But, in the Prompt. Parv., we have the form poleyne; and in Chaucer, C. T. 10498, we find polivè (polivè), riming with drivè (drivè). The last form is difficult to explain; but we may derive poleyne from F. poulain, 'a foal, or colt, also the rope wherewith wine is let down into a seller, a pulley-rope,' Cot. 'Par le poulain on descend le vin en cave;' Rabelais, Garg. i. 5 (Littré). The mod. E. pulley answers to F. poulie, 'a pulley,' Cot. β. If we take F. poulain to be the origin of the E. word, the derivation is from Low Lat. pullanus, a colt, extended from Lat. pullus, the young of any animal, cognate with E. foal, q. v.

γ. The transference of sense causes no difficulty, as the words for 'horse' or 'goat' are applied in other cases to contrivances for the exertion of force or bearing a strain; thus F. poutre, a filly, also means 'a beam' (Cot.); and F. chèvre, a goat, also means a kind of crane. The Low Lat. words for 'colt' are remarkably numerous, including (besides pullanus) the forms pullinus, pullenus, pullitrum, polassus, poledrus, polenus, poletus; also poleria, polina, a filly.

δ. The Low Lat. forms polea, polegia, polegium, a pulley, do not much help us, since these may have been adapted from F.; as may also be the case with O. Du. poleye, 'a pullie' (Hexham), Span. polea, Ital. puleggia. We may note, however, Low Lat. polanus, a pulley or a pulley-rope, which also has the sense of 'sledge.' ε. Diez, however, derives E. pulley from F. poulie, but F. poulie from the E. verb to pull, though I would rather take it from the Low G. pulen, with the same sense; see Pull.

PULMONARY, affecting the lungs. (L.) Blount, Gloss., ed. 1674, has pulmonarius, diseased in the lungs. Englished from Lat. pulmonarius, belonging to the lungs, diseased in the lungs. — Lat. pulmon-, stem of pulmo, a lung.

β. The Lat. pulmo is cognate with Gk. πνεύμων, more commonly πνεύμων, a lung; and is derived from a base PLU=PNV (Gk. πνυ-), to breathe hard; see Pneumonia, Pneumatic. Der. pulmon-i-c, from Lat. pulmoni-, crude form of pulmo.

PULP, the soft fleshy part of bodies, any soft mass. (F.,—L.) 'The pulpa or pith of plants;' Minshew.—F. pulpe, 'the pulp or pith of plants;' Cot.—Lat. pulpa, the fleshy portion of animal bodies, pulp of fruit, pith of wood.

β. Prob. named from the feel, and connected with palpare, to touch softly; see Palpable. Der. pulp-y, pulp-i-ness; pulp-ous, pulp-ous-ness.

PULPIT, a platform for speaking from. (F.,—L.) M. E. pulpit, P. Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, l. 661; pulpit, Chaucer, C. T. 12325. — O. F. pulpite, 'a pulpit,' Cot. — Lat. pulpitum, a scaffold, platform, esp. a stage for actors. Root unknown.

PULSATE, to throb. (L.) A modern word, directly from Lat. pulsatus, pp. of pulsare, to beat. It is no doubt due to the use of the sb. pulsation, in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, from F. pulsation = Lat. pulsationem, acc. of pulsatio, a beating; from the same verb. β. The orig. sense of pulsare was simply 'to beat;' it is a frequentative verb, formed from puls-us, pp. of pellere, to drive, which is prob. from the SPAR, to vibrate, throb, struggle; cf. Skt. sphar, spkur, to throb; see Pull. Der. pulsat-ion, as above; pulsat-ive, pulsat-or-y; pulse (1), q. v. From the Lat. pellere we have also ap-peal, peal, com-pel, dis-pel, ex-pel, im-pel, inter-pell-at-ion, pro-pel, im-pulse, re-pulse; and see pell, pull, pal-estra, pal-p-able, psalm, poplar, ball, &c.

PULSE (1), a throb, vibration. (F.,—L.) M. E. pous (in which the l is dropped), P. Plowman, B. xvii. 66. — F. pouls, 'the pulse,' Cot. — Lat. pulsus, acc. of pulsus, a beating; also the beating of the pulse, a pulse. — Lat. pulsus, pp. of pellere, to drive; see Pulsate.

PULSE (2), grain or seed of beans, pease, &c. (L.) M. E. puls. 'All maner puls is goode, the fitche outetake' = every kind of pulse is good, except the vetch; Palladius on Husbandry, b. i. l. 723. — Lat. puls, a thick pap or pottage made of meal, pulse, &c., the primitive food of the Romans before they became acquainted with bread (White). Cf. Gk. πόλτος, porridge. ¶ I think this etymology is sufficient and satisfactory. Wedgwood takes it to be the pl. of a form pull, a husk, supposed to be connected with O. Du. peule, 'a shale, a husk, or a pill [peel];' Hexham. But pulse is rather the contents of the husks than the husks themselves. Cf. pulls, husks of oats; Holderness Glossary (E. D. S.). Der. poultice, q. v.

PULVERISE, to pound to dust. (F.,—L.) 'To pulverate or to pulverize, to beate into dust;' Minshew, ed. 1627. — F. pulverizer, 'to pulverize,' Cot. — Late Lat. puluerizare, to pulverise; Lat. puluerare, to scatter dust, also to pulverise. — Lat. puluer-, stem of pulsus, dust. β. Prob. connected with pul-sus, pp. of pellere, to beat, drive; from the notion of beating to dust, or of driving about as dust; see Pulsate. The suffix -ize answers to the usual F. -iser (occasional -izer), late Lat. -izare, imitated from Gk. -ίζειν. Der. pulveris-at-ion.

PUMA, a large carnivorous animal. (Peruvian.) 'The American animal, which the natives of Peru call puma, and to which the Europeans have given the denomination of lion, has no mane;' tr. of Buffon's Nat. Hist., London, 1792. — Peruvian puma.

PUMICE, a hard, spongy, volcanic mineral. (L.) M. E. pomeys, pomyce, Prompt. Parv. — A. S. pumic-stán, pumice-stone; Wright's Vocab., i. 38, col. 1. Thus pumice is directly from Lat. pumice-, stem of pumex, pumice; not from the F. form ponce. β. So named from its light, spongy nature, resembling sea-foam. Put for *spumex; from Lat. spuma, foam; see Spume. Doublet, ponce (2).

PUMMEL, the same as Pommel, q. v.

PUMP (1), a machine for raising water. (F.,—Teut.,—L.?) M. E. pumpe, Prompt. Parv. — F. pompe, 'a pump;' Cot. Of Teut. origin. — G. pumpe, a pump; of which a fuller form is plumpe, shewing that an l has been lost. Cf. prov. G. plumpen, to pump. The G. plumpen also means to plump, to fall plump, to move suddenly but clumsily, to blunder out with a thing; so that the sense of 'pumping' arose from the plunging action of the piston or, as it is sometimes called, the plunger, esp. when made solid, as in the force-pump. β. But I have shewn, s. v. Plump, that the word plump, however expressive as an imitative word, probably took its form from the Lat. plumbum, lead; so that 'to fall plump' meant to fall like lead. Hence I would refer pump (or plump) to the same Lat. origin. γ. Even in English, we find prov. E. plump, a pump, plumpy, to pump (Cornwall), which appears to be taken directly from F. pomber, 'to lead, to soulder, . . . also to sound the depth of a place with a plummet;' the change of idea from 'sounding with a plummet' to that of 'letting down a piston into water' is not a violent one. ¶ The word is one of some difficulty. The Span. and Port. bomba, a pump, appear to be weakened forms from pompa, borrowed from F. pompe; we can hardly (with Webster) regard them as the oldest forms. We find also Du. pomp, Swed. pump, Dan. pompe, and even Russ. pompa, a pump; all borrowed words. Der. pump, verb.

PUMP (2), a thin-soled shoe. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) In Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. iv. 2. 37; explained by Schmidt to mean 'a light shoe, often worn with ribbons formed into the shape of flowers.' So called (as suggested in Webster) because worn for 'pomp' or ornament, by persons in full dress. — F. pompe, 'pomp, state, solemnity, magnificence, ostentation; à pied de plomb et de pompe, with a slow and stately gate'

[gait]; Cot. The use of this O. F. proverb connects the word particularly with the foot and its ornament. See further under Pomp.

PUMPTION, PUMPKIN, a kind of gourd. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) The mod. form pumpkin is a corruption from the older word pompon or pumpion, in which the suffix, not being understood, has been replaced by the E. dimin. suffix -kin. Pumpion is in Shak. Merry Wives, iii. 3. 43. Better pompon, as in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xix. c. 5.—F. pompon, 'a pumpion, or melon'; Cot. Formed, with inserted m, from Lat. peponem, acc. of pepo, a large melon, pumpkin.—Gk. πέπων, a kind of melon, not eaten till quite ripe.—Gk. πέπων, cooked by the sun, ripe, mellow; from the base περ-, seen in πέτρειν, to cook; see Cook, and Pip (2).

PUN, to play upon words. (E.) 'A corporation of dull punning drolls'; Dryden, Art of Poetry, l. 358. The older sense of pun was to pound, to beat; hence to pun is to pound words, to beat them into new senses, to hammer at forced similes. 'He would pun thee into shivers with his fist'; Shak. Troil. ii. 1. 42; and see Nares. Pun is an older form of pound, to bruise; see Pound (3). Der. pun, sb., Spectator, no. 61; pun-ning; pun-ster, a coined word, like trick-ster.

PUNCH (1), to pierce or perforate with a sharp instrument. (F.,—L.) 'Punch, or Punching-iron, a shoemaker's tool to make holes with'; Phillips, ed. 1706. In Shak. Rich. III, v. 3. 125. M. E. punchen, to prick; see Prompt. Parv. This verb is a mere coinage from the older sb. punchion or punchon, spelt punchon in Prompt. Parv., denoting the kind of awl used for punching or perforating. See further under Puncheon (1). Der. punch, a kind of awl, as above.

Distinct from punch (2), q. v.

PUNCH (2), to beat, bruise. (F.,—L.) In the phrase 'to punch one's head,' the word is not the same as punch (1), but is a mere abbreviation of punish. In fact, 'to punish a man about the head' has still the same meaning. This is clearly shewn by the entries in the Prompt. Parv., p. 416. 'Punchyn, or chastysyn, punysshen, Punio, castigo'; and again, 'Punchynge, punysshinge, Punicio.' See Punish. ¶ For the suppression of the i in punish, cf. M. E. pulshen, to polish, P. Plowman, A. v. 257, foot-notes; and vanshen, to vanish, id. C. xv. 217. In the present instance, punchen was readily suggested by the like-sounding word bunchen, with much the same sense. Hence the entry: 'Punchyn, or bunchyn, Trudo, tundo'; Prompt. Parv. [†]

PUNCH (3), a beverage composed of spirit, water, lemon-juice, sugar, and spice. (Hindi,—Skt.) 'Punch, a strong drink made of brandy, water, lime-juice, sugar, spice, &c.'; Phillips, ed. 1706. Wedgwood cites two most interesting quotations. 'At Nerule is made the best arrack or Nepo da Goa, with which the English on this coast make that enervating liquor called pouche (which is Hindostan for five) from five ingredients'; Fryer, New Account of East India and Persia, 1697. 'Or to drink palepuniz (at Goa) which is a kind of drink consisting of aqua-vitæ, rose-water, juice of citrons, and sugar'; Olearius, Travels to the Grand Duke of Muscovy and Persia, 1669. It was introduced from India, and apparently by the way of Goa; and is named from consisting of five ingredients.—Hindi panch, five; Bate's Dict., 1875, p. 394.—Skt. pañchan, five, cognate with E. five; see Five. ¶ Perhaps it is interesting to observe that, whereas we used to speak of four elements, the number of elements in Sanskrit is five; see Benfey, p. 658, col. 2, l. 5; cf. Skt. pañchatva, the five elements; pañchaka, consisting of five. It is, at any rate, necessary to add that the Hindi and Skt. short a is pronounced like E. u in mud or punch; hence the E. spelling. [†]

PUNCH (4), a short, hump-backed fellow in a puppet-show. (Ital.,—L.) In this sense, Punch is a contraction of Punchinello. In the Spectator, no. 14, the puppet is first called Punchinello, and afterwards Punch. 'Punch, or Punchinello, a fellow of a short and thick size, a fool in a play, a stage-puppet'; Phillips, ed. 1706. The pl. Punchinello occurs twice in Butler, Sat. on our Imitation of the French, ll. 26, 99; it occurs as early as A. D. 1666 (Nares). β. Punchinello is a corruption of Ital. pulcinello, by the change of l to n (cf. Palermo from Lat. Pavormus); and the E. sound of chi corresponds to Ital. ci. Pulcinello was a character in Neapolitan comedy representing a foolish peasant who utters droll truths (Scheler); Meadows only gives the fem. pulcinella, 'punch, buffoon of a puppet-show.' These are dimin. forms of Ital. pulcino, 'a young chicken'; Florio; fem. pulcina. The latter form is a mere variant (with a different suffix) of Ital. pulcella, a girl, maiden (F. pucelle), and all the words are from Lat. pullus, the young of any animal, whence also F. poule (=Low Lat. pulla), a young hen. The change in sense from 'chicken' to 'little child' is due to the common habit of using the word 'chicken' as a term of endearment. Thus the lit. sense of Ital. pulcinello is 'little chicken'; whence it meant (2) a little boy, and (3) a puppet. See further under Pullet. ¶ It is clear that the E. form is due to confusion with prov. E. punch, short, fat, punchy, pot-bellied (Halliwell); words which are prob. closely connected with Bunch, q. v. 'Did hear them call their fat child Punch, . . . a word of common use for all that is thick and short;' Pepys' Diary, Apr. 30, 1669. In the phrase 'Punch and Judy,' I suppose Judy to be the usual abbreviation from Judith, once common as a female name. Judy no more stands for Judæi or Judas than Punch for Pontius!

PUNCHEON (1), a steel tool for stamping or perforating; a punch. (F.,—L.) Our mod. sb. punch is a familiar contraction of puncheon, which occurs rather early. M. E. punchon, Prompt. Parv. Puncheon, a dagger, occurs in Barbour's Bruce, i. 545; see my note on the line.—O. F. poinson, 'a bodkin, also a puncheon, also a stamp, mark, print, or seale; also a wine-vessel'; Cot. Mod. F. poignon; cf. Span. punzon, a punch; Ital. punzione, 'a bodkin, or any sharp pointed thing, also a piece [wine-vessel], a barell'; Florio.—Lat. punctionem, acc. of punctio, a pricking, puncture; Diez remarks that this sb., which in Lat. is feminine, changes its gender to masc. in F., &c., whilst changing its sense from 'pricking' to the concrete 'pricking-instrument.'—Lat. punctus, pp. of pungere, to prick; see Pungent. Der. punch (1).

PUNCHEON (2), a cask, a liquid measure of 84 gallons. (F.,—L.?) 'Butte, pipe, puncheon, whole barell, halfe barell, firken, or any other caske'; Hackluyt's Voyages, vol. i. p. 273.—O. F. poinson, 'a bodkin, also a puncheon [steel tool]; also, a stamp, mark, print, or seale; also a wine-vessel'; Cot. β. It is certain that the E. puncheon, a cask, is the O. F. poinson, mod. F. poignon, a wine-vessel. But it is not certain that O. F. poinson, a bodkin, and poinson, a cask, are the same word. It is gen. supposed that they are quite distinct, owing to the wide difference in sense. For the latter, we also find the O. F. form ponçon, explained by Cot. to mean 'half a tunne, or the same as poinson'; and this latter form comes still closer to E. puncheon.

γ. Cot. also has O. F. poson, posson, 'the quarter of a chopine [large half-pint], a little measure for milk, verjuice, and vinegar, not altogether so big as the quarter of our pint.' These forms are regarded by Scheler as variants of poinson or ponçon, and the etymology is admitted to be doubtful.

δ. It seems to me that it is not necessary to take posson into account, as the content of that small vessel is so widely different; and, at the same time, I am inclined to think that O. F. poinson remains the same word in all its senses, the wine-vessel being so named from the 'stamp, mark, print, or seale' upon it, the stamp being produced by a puncheon or stamping-instrument. That is, I regard Puncheon (2) as identical with Puncheon (1). Cf. O. Ital. punzione, 'a bodkin, barell, goldsmiths pouncer, little stamp'; Florio. In the same way, our word hog's-head (formerly ox-head, as shewn under the word) must orig. have meant a mark or brand, though now only used in the sense of cask. ε. The Bavarian punzen, ponzen, a cask (Schmeller), may be of F. origin.

PUNCHINELLO, the same as Punch (4), q. v.

PUNCTATE, PUNCTATED, punctured. (L.) A botanical term. Coined with suffix -ate (=Lat. -atus) from Lat. punctum, a point, dot. See Puncture, Pungent.

PUNCTILIO, a nice point in behaviour. (Span.,—L.) 'Your courtier practis, is he that is yet in his path, his course, his way, and hath not touched the punctilio or point of his hopes'; Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, Act ii. sc. 1 (Amorphus). Rather from Span. puntillo, a nice point of honour, than from the equivalent Ital. puntiglio. In fact, the word is spelt punctillo in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. The c is an E. insertion, due to confusion with punctuate, &c. The ll represents the sound of the Span. ll. β. Span. puntillo is a dimin. of punto, a point.—Lat. punctum, a point; see Point. Der. punctili-ous, -ly, -ness.

PUNCTUAL, exact in observing appointed times. (F.,—L.) Minshen, ed. 1627, has punctuall and the sb. punctualitis. See Trench, Select Glossary.—F. punctuel, 'punctuall'; Cot.—Low Lat. *punctualis, not recorded; but the adv. punctualiter, exactly, occurs A. D. 1440; Ducange.—Lat. punctu-, for punctum, a point; with suffix -alis. (Perhaps punctalis, from the stem punct-, would have been more correct.) See Point. Der. punctual-ly, punctual-ity.

PUNCTUATE, to divide sentences by marks. (L.) A modern word; added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. Suggested by F. punctuer, 'to point, . . . mark, or distinguish by points'; Cot.—Low Lat. punctuare, to determine, define. Formed from Lat. punctu-, for punctum, a point; see Point. (Perhaps punctate, from the stem punct-, would have been a more correct form.) Der. punctuat-ion, from F. punctuation, 'a pointing'; Cot.

PUNCTURE, a prick, small hole made with a sharp point. (L.) 'Wounds and punctures'; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 3. § 28.—Lat. punctura, a prick, puncture; like punctura, fem. of puncturus, fut. part. of pungere, to prick; see Pungent, Point. Der. puncture, verb.

PUNDIT, a learned man. (Skt.) Not in Todd's Johnson.—Skt. pandita (with cerebral n and d), adj., learned; sb. a wise man, scholar.—Skt. pand, to heap up or together. ¶ The E. n represents Skt. short a, as in Punch (3).

PUNGENT, acrid to taste or smell, keen, sarcastic. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Pungency occurs earlier, in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. pungent-, stem of pres. part. of pungere, to prick, pt. t. pu-pug-i, pp. punctus; from the base PUG or PUK, to prick. See Point. Der. pungent-ly, pungency. From the Lat. pungere we also have point, with its derivatives; also punct-ilio, q. v., punct-u-al, q. v., punct-u-ate, q. v., punct-ure, q. v. Also com-punct-ion, ex-punge, pounce (1), punch (1), punchon (1). Doublet, poignant.

PUNISH, to chasten, chastise. (F., — L.) M. E. punischen, P. Plowman, B. iii. 78. — F. puniss-, stem of pres. part. of punire, to punish. — Lat. punire, to punish, exact a penalty; O. Lat. pānire. — Lat. pāna, a penalty; whence E. Pain, q. v. Der. punish-able, from F. punissable, 'punishable,' Cot.; punish-ment, L. L. L. iv. 3. 63, a coined word, substituted for M. E. punicion (spelt punysson in Berners, tr. of Froissart, v. ii. c. 39), which is from F. punition, 'a punishment,' Cot. — Lat. acc. punitiōnem. Also punish-er; and (from Lat. punire) im-punity. And see penance, penitence, punch (2).

PUNKAH, a large fan. (Hindi, — Skt.) Hind. pankhā, a fan; allied to pankha, a wing, feather, paksha, a wing; Bate's Dict., 1875, pp. 394, 397. — Skt. paksha, a wing. Cf. Pers. pankan, 'a sieve, a fan;' Rich. Dict. p. 338.

PUNT (1), a ferry-boat, a flat-bottomed boat. (L.) Added by Todd to Johnson. I find no modern quotation; yet it is in very early use. — A. S. punt; 'Caudex, punt,' Wright's Vocab. i. 56, col. 1. (Caudex means a boat hollowed out of a tree.) Abbreviated from Lat. ponto, a punt, Caesar, Bellum Civile, iii. 29; also, a pontoon. See Pontoon.

PUNT (2), to play at the game of cards called basset. (F., — Span., — L.) 'Punter, a term used at the game of cards called basset;' Phillips, ed. 1706. — F. ponte, 'a punter; a punt;' also, pontier, 'to punt;' Hamilton. — Span. punto, a point, also, a pip at cards. — Lat. punctum, a point; see Point.

PUNY, small, feeble, inferior in size or strength. (F., — L.) In Shak. Rich. II, iii. 2. 86; also puisny, As You Like It, iii. 4. 46. And see Trench, Select Glossary. — O. F. puisé, 'puny, younger, born after,' Cot. Mod. F. puiné, younger. Thus the lit. sense is 'born after;' hence, younger, junior, inferior. — Lat. post natus, born after. See Posterior and Natal. Doublet, puisne, q. v. [+]

PUPA, a chrysalis. (L.) A scientific term. — Lat. pupa, a girl, doll, puppet; hence, the sense of undeveloped insect. Fem. of pupus, a boy, child. Allied to pustus, pus-sus, pus-er, a boy; from ✓ PU, to beget; see Puerile. Der. pup-il, pupp-et, pupp-y.

PUPIL (1), a scholar, a ward. (F., — L.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 8. 7. — O. F. pupile, 'a pupill, ward;' Cot. Mod. F. pupille. Properly a masc. sb. — Lat. pupillus, an orphan-boy, orphan, a ward; dimin. from pupus, a boy; see Pupa. Der. pup-il-age, Spenser, Verses to Lord Grey, l. 2; pupill-ar-y, from F. pupilaire, 'pupillary,' Cot., Lat. pupillaris, belonging to a pupil. Also pupil (2).

PUPIL (2), the central spot of the eye. (F., — L.) Spelt pupill in Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 868. — F. pupille, the pupil (not in Cotgrave). A fem. sb.; which distinguishes it from the word above. — Lat. pupilla, a little girl; also, the apple of the eye, or pupil. Fem. of pupillus; see Pupil (1). ¶ The name seems to be due to the small images seen in the pupil; cf. the old E. phrase 'to look babies in the eyes.'

PUPPET, a small doll, little image. (F., — L.) M. E. popet, King Alisaunder, l. 335; Chaucer, C. T. 13631. — O. F. poupette, 'a little baby, puppet;' Cot. Dimin. from Lat. pupa; see Pupa.

PUPPY, (1) a whelp; (2) a dandy. (F., — L.) 1. In Shak. Oth. i. 3. 341; a puppy-dog, K. John, ii. 460. Here (as in lew-y, jur-y) the final -y answers to F. -le. — F. poupée, 'a baby, a puppet;' Cot. Here, by 'baby,' Cotgrave means a doll; but it is clear that in E. the word was made to mean the young of an animal, esp. of a dog. The F. poupée (as if = Lat. *pupala) is due to Lat. pupa; see Pupa. 2. In the sense of 'dandy,' puppy occurs in the Guardian (Todd's Johnson). This is not quite the same word; but rather represents the O. F. poupin or popin, 'spruce, neat, trimme, fine,' Cot. Cf. se popiner, 'to trimme or trick up himself,' id.; mod. F. faire le poupin, to play the fop (Hamilton). This word answers to a Low Lat. form *pupinus (not found), and is merely a derivative from Lat. pupus, a boy. Thus the result is much the same either way. Der. puppy-ism. Also pup, which is merely an abbreviation for puppy; whence pup, verb, formerly puppy, as in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxx. c. 14. [+]

PUR-, prefix. (F., — L.) E. pur- answers to O. F. pur-, F. pour-, prefix, which is the F. prep. pour, for, a curious variation of Lat. pro, for. Thus pur- and pro- are equivalent; and words like purvey and provide are mere doublets. ¶ In the word pur-blind, the prefix has a different value.

PURBLIND, nearly blind. (Hybrid; F., — L., and E.) This word has suffered a considerable change of sense, almost parallel to the strange change in the case of Parboil, q. v. The orig. sense was wholly blind, as in Rob. of Glouc., p. 376: 'Me solde pulte oute boje is eye, and makye him pur blind' = they should put out both his eyes, and make him quite blind. See Spec. of Eng. ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 14, l. 390. Sir T. Elyot writes poreblind, The Governour, b. ii. c. 3 (R.); so also in Levins. In Wyclif, Exod. xxi. 26, the earlier version has pure blynde, where the later has oon ized (i. e. one-eyed), and the Vulgate has luscus. So also 'purbynde, luscus,' Prompt. Parv. Even in Shak. we have both senses: (1) wholly blind, L. L. L. iii. 181, Romeo, ii. 1. 12; and (2) partly blind, Venus, 679, 1 Hen. VI, ii. 4. 21. β. It is clear that 'wholly blind' is the orig. sense, and that which alone needs an etymology; whilst 'partly blind' is a secondary sense, due perhaps to some confusion with the verb to pore, as shewn by the spelling poreblind. Purblind = pure-blind, i. e. wholly blind; see Pure and Blind. For the use of pure as an adv., cf. 'pure for his love' = merely for his love, Tw. Nt. v. 86. Der. purblind-ly, purblind-ness.

PURCHASE, to acquire, obtain by labour, obtain by payment. (F., — L.) M. E. purhasen, purchacen, Rob. of Glouc. p. 16, l. 3; Chaucer, C. T. 610. The usual sense is 'to acquire.' — O. F. pur-chacer, later pourchasser, 'eagerly to pursue, . . purchase, procure,' Cot. — O. F. pur, F. pour, for; and chasser, to chase. Formed after the analogy of F. poursuivre (Scheler). See Pur- and Chase; also Pursue. Der. purchase, sb., M. E. purhas, pourchas, Chaucer, C. T. 258, from O. F. purhas, later pourchas, 'eager pursuit,' Cot.; purchas-er, purchas-able.

PURE, unmixed, real, chaste, mere. (F., — L.) M. E. pur, Rob. of Glouc. p. 8, l. 11; where it rhymes with far = fire. Pl. puré (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 1281. — F. pur, masc., pure, fem., 'pure,' Cot. — Lat. purum, acc. of purus, pure, clean. — ✓ PU, to purify, cleanse; cf. Skt. pā, to purify; see Fire. Der. pure-ly, pure-ness; pur-ist, pur-ism (coined words); and see purge, pur-i-fy, pur-i-tan, pur-i-ty. From the same root, pit, fire, bureau, com-pute, de-pute, dis-pute, im-pute, re-pute, am-put-ate, de-put-y, count (2), &c.

PURGE, to purify, clear, carry away impurities. (F., — L.) M. E. purgen, Chaucer, C. T. 14953, 14959. — F. purger, 'to purge,' Cot. — Lat. purgare, to cleanse, purge. β. Lat. purgare = purigare (occurring in Plautus); from pur-, stem of purus, pure, and -ig-, weakened form of ag- (ag-ere), to do, make, cause. See Pure and Agent. Der. purg-at-ion, M. E. purgacioun, Wyclif, Heb. i. 3, from F. purgation = Lat. acc. purgationem, from purgatus, pp. of purigare; purgat-ive, orig. adj., Macb. v. 3. 55, from Lat. purgatius; purgat-ory, M. E. purgatorie, Ancien Riwele, p. 126, l. 8, from F. purgatoire (of which an old form was prob. purgatorie), which from Lat. purgatorius, adj., cleansing, purifying; purgat-ori-al; purg-ing, sb., expurg-ate.

PURIFY, to make pure. (F., — L.) M. E. purifien, Wyclif, Deeds [Acts], xxi. 26. — F. purifier, 'to purify,' Cot. — Lat. purificare, to make pure. — Lat. pur- = pur-, crude form of purus, pure; and -fic-, put for fac- (facere), to make. Der. purifi-er, purify-ing; also purific-at-ion, M. E. purificacioun, Wyclif, John, iii. 25, from F. purification = Lat. acc. purificationem; purific-at-ory, a coined word, as if from a Lat. adj. purificatorius.*

PURITAN, one who pretends to great purity of life. (L.) The name was first given, about A. D. 1564, to persons who aimed at greater purity of life, &c., than others (Haydn). Frequently in Shak. All's Well, i. 3. 56, 98; Tw. Nt. ii. 3. 152, 155, 159; Wint. Tale, iv. 3. 46; Pericles, iv. 6. 9. A barbarous E. formation, with suffix -an (= Lat. -anus), from the word purit-y or the Lat. puritas. See Purity. Der. Puritan-i-cal, Puritan-ism. ¶ The F. puritain is borrowed from E.

PURITY, the condition of being pure, pureness. (F., — L.) M. E. pureté, Ancien Riwele, p. 4, l. 21; and the e (after r) was afterwards altered to i, to bring the word nearer to the Lat. spelling. — F. pureté, 'purity,' Cot. — Lat. puritatem, acc. of puritas, purity; formed with suffix -tas from pur- (= pur-), crude form of purus, pure; see Pure.

PURL (1), to flow with a murmuring sound. (Scand.) 'A pipe, a little moistened, . . maketh a more solemne sound, than if the pipe were dry; but yet with a sweet degree of sibilation, or purling;' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 230. Allied to M. E. prille (also pirle), a child's whirllig; Prompt. Parv. p. 413, note 2. The word is rather Scand. than E., being preserved in O. Swed. porla (Ihre), Swed. porla, to purl, bubble as a stream. β. But it is merely a frequentative form, with the usual suffixed -i, from the imitative word purr or purrr, for which see Purr, Pirouette. Cf. Irish and Gael. bururus, a purling noise, a gurgling. ¶ Purl, to curl, Shak. Lacr. 1407, is from the rippling of a purling stream.

PURL (2), spiced or medicated beer or ale. (F., — L.) 'Purl, a sort of drink made of ale mingled with the juice of wormwood;' Phillips, ed. 1706. But I suppose the spelling to be a mistaken one, due to confusion with PURL (1). It should surely be pearl, from F. perle, a pearl; see PEARL. See perlé, adj., and perler, verb, in Litttré. The word was a term in cookery; thus sucré perlé is sugar boiled twice; bouillon perlé, jelly-broth (Hamilton). So also G. perlen, to rise in small bubbles like pearls, to pearl (Flügel); perle, a pearl, drop, bubble. Hence purl, a drink with bubbles on the surface.

PURL (3), to form an edging on lace, to form an embroidered border, to invert stitches in knitting. (F.—L.) Just as the word above should be spelt pearl, it is found, conversely, that the present word is often misspelt pearl; by the same confusion. It is a contraction of the old word to purfle, to embroider on an edge. 'Purfled with gold and pearl of rich assay;' Spenser, F. Q. i. 2. 13. M.E. purfiler, Chaucer, C. T. 193. — O.F. porfiler, later pourfiler. 'Pourfiler d'or, to purfle, tinsell, or overcast with gold thread, &c.;" Cot. — O.F. por, F. pour, from Lat. pro, from (which is often confused, as Scheler remarks, with F. par, Lat. per, throughout, and such seems to be the case here); and F. filer, to twist threads, from fil, a thread. See Pur- and File (1). ¶ Cotgrave also gives O.F. pourfil in the sense of profile; profile and purl (3) are really the same word, the difference in sense being due to the peculiar use of the F. prefix pour- as if it were = Lat. per. To purl is 'to work along an edge,' or 'to overcast all along with thread.' Doublet, profile.

PURL (4), to upset. (E.) A slang term; a huntsman who is thrown off his horse is purled or spilt. Purl should rather be pirl; from M.E. pirle, a whirling, formed by the frequentative suffix -il from the imitative word pirr, to whirl. So also O. Ital. pirila, a whipping-top; pirlare, 'to twirl round;' Florio. Allied to Purl (1).

PURLIEU, the borders or environs of any place (orig. only of a forest); esp. when used, as is usual, in the plural. (F.—L.) 'In the purlieus of this forest;' As You Like It, iv. 3. 77. 'Purlieu, or Purlue, is all that ground neere any forest, which being made forest by Henry II., Rich. I., or King John, were, by perambulations granted by Henry III., seuered again from the same; Manwood, par. 2 of his Forest Lawes, cap. 20. And he calleth this ground pourelles, i. e. perambulationem, or purlieu and purluy, which he saith, be but abusively taken for pourelles;' Minshew, ed. 1627. Manwood's definition is: 'Purlieu is a certain territorie of ground adjoining unto the forest, meared [marked] and bounded with immoveable marks, meeres, and boundaries;' Reed's note on As You Like It. 'Purlieu: land which having once been part of the royal forest has been severed from it by perambulationem (pourelle, O.F. puralee) granted by the crown. The preamble of 33 Edw. I. c. 5 runs: "Cume aucune gentz que sount mys hors de forest par la puralee . . . aient requis a cest parlement quilz soient quites . . . des choses que les foresters lour demandent." In the course of the statute mention is made of "terres et tenements deaforestes par la puralee." These [lands] would constitute the purlieu. A purlieu-man or purlie-man is a man owning land within the purlieu, licensed to hunt on his own land;" Wedgwood. β. It is thus clear that purlieu is a corruption of O.F. puralee, as if it had something to do with F. lieu (Lat. locus), a place. The intermediate form was purley, of which see examples in Nares. This O.F. puralee appears to be a mere translation of Lat. perambulationem, by that confusion whereby O.F. pur (F. pour), though really answering to Lat. pro, is made to do duty for the Lat. per, as in several instances noted by Scheler. γ. Hence the etymology is from O.F. pur = Lat. pro; and O.F. alee, a going, for which see Alley.

PURLOIN, to steal, plagiarise. (F.—L.) In Shak. Lucrece, 1651. M.E. purlongen. 'Purlongyn, or prolongyn, or put fer away, Prolongo, alieno;' Prompt. Parv. Thus the orig. sense is simply to prolong, put away, keep back, or remove. Cf. O.F. esloigner (= Lat. elongare), 'to remove, banish, drive, set, put, far away;' Cot. — O.F. porloignier, purloignier, to prolong, retard, delay; Burguy. — Lat. prolongare, to prolong; see Prolong. Der. purloin-er. Doublet, prolong.

PURPLE, a very dark red colour. (F.—L.—Gk.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 2. 7. Put for M.E. purpre, by change of r to l, as in M.E. marbre, now marble, and in Molly, Dolly, for Mary, Dorothy. The M.E. purpre is in early use, occurring in Layamon, l. 5928. — O.F. porpre (13th cent., Litttré), later pourpre, 'purple,' Cot. Cf. Ital. porpora, Span. purpura. — Lat. purpura, the purple-fish, purple dye. — Gk. πορφύρα, the purple-fish; cf. Gk. πορφύρεος, purple. β. The orig. sense of Gk. πορφύρεος, as an epithet of the sea, seems to have been 'troubled' or 'raging,' hence dark, and lastly purple. The sea dark with storms was also called olvoφ, wine-coloured, wine-dark; apparently from the dark shade of brooding clouds. Hence the etymology is from Gk. πορφύρεω, to grow dark, used of the surging sea; a reduplicated form (= φορ-φύρ-ειν = φύρ-φύρ-ειν) of Gk. φύρειν, to mix up, mingle, confound, orig. to stir violently. — ✓ BHUR, to move about quickly; whence also Skt. buranya, to be active, Lat. furere, to rage; see Fury. ¶ The A.S. purpur is borrowed* directly from Latin. So also G. purpur, &c. Der. purple, adj., purple, verb. And see porphyry.

PURPORT, to imply, mean, intend. (F.—L.) In Bacon, Life of Hen. VII., ed. Lumby, p. 146, l. 27. (And prob. a much older word.) — O.F. purporter, pourporter, to intend, whence the sb. purport, tenour. A rare verb, not in Cotgrave; but Roquefort gives the verb pourporter, to declare, inform, and the sb. purport, tenour; and notes the phrase selon le purport, according to the purport. — O.F. pur, F. pour, from Lat. pro, according to; and F. porter, to bear, carry, from Lat. portare, to carry. A similar application of F. porter occurs in E. import. See Pur- and Port (1). Der. purport, sb., used by Spenser with the sense of 'disguise,' F. Q. iii. 1. 52, the lit. sense being rather 'declaration' or 'pretext.'

PURPOSE (1), to intend. (F.—L.—Gk.; with F. prefix.) M.E. purposen, Gower, C. A. i. 5. l. 5. — O.F. purposer (Burguy), a variant of proposer, to propose. Thus purpose and propose are doublets; see Propose, which is strictly from Lat. pausare, of Gk. origin, though there has been confusion with Lat. ponere. ¶ Distinct in origin from Purpose (2), though completely confounded with it in association. Doublet, propose.

PURPOSE (2), intention. (F.—L.) Though from a different origin, this sb. has become altogether associated with the verb to purpose, owing to the extraordinary confusion, in French, of the derivatives of pausare and ponere. M.E. purpos, Chaucer, C. T. 3979; spelt porpos, Rob. of Glouc. p. 121, l. 6. — O.F. pourpos (of which another form would have been purpos), a resolution, design (Roquefort); a variant of F. propos, 'a purpose, drift, end,' Cot. — Lat. propositum, a thing proposed, design, resolution. — Lat. propositus, pp. of proponere, to propose; see Propound. Der. purpose-ly, purpose-less; also a-propos, q. v.

PURR, PUR, to utter a murmuring sound, as a cat. (E.) 'A pur . . . of fortune's cat;' All's Well, v. 2. 20; 'Pur, the cat is gray;' King Lear, iii. 6. 47. An imitative word, not unlike buzz. Cf. Scotch pirr, a gentle wind, Icel. byrr, wind; see Pirouette. Cf. also Irish and Gael. burburus, a gurgling sound; Gk. βα-βράς-ειν, to chirp as a grass-hopper. Intended to imitate the sound of gentle blowing. Der. pur-l (1), a frequentative form.

PURSE, a small bag for money. (F.—L.—Gk.) M.E. purs, burs; Prompt. Parv. p. 417. Spelt por, P. Plowman, A. v. 110. In early use; the pl. porres occurs in the later text of Layamon, l. 5927. — O.F. borse (Burguy), later bourse, 'a purse,' Cot. — Low Lat. bursa, a purse; Ducange. — Gk. βύρρα, a hide, skin; of which purses were made. Root unknown. ¶ The change from initial b to p is rare and contrary to the usual change (from p to b); still we find peat = (Devonshire) beat, and somewhat similar examples in E. apricot as compared with F. abricot, and mod. E. gossip as compared with M.E. gossib, Chaucer, C. T. 5825. Der. purs-er (doublet, burs-ar, q. v.); purs-er-ship; purse-proud; purse-bearer, Tw. Nt. iii. 3. 47. Also purse, verb, to wrinkle like a bag drawn together, Oth. iii. 3. 113. [†]

PURSLAIN, PURSLANE, an annual plant, sometimes used in salads. (F.—L.) Spelt purseleine, Hackluyt's Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 109, l. 43; pourslane, Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 15; purslane, id. b. ii. c. 8. M.E. purslane, to translate Lat. portulaca, Prompt. Parv., p. 417. Cf. Ital. porcellana, 'the hearbe called purcelane;' Florio. Formed from Lat. portulaca, purslain, Pliny, b. xx. c. 20; the usual form of the word being portulaca. [†]

PURSUE, to follow after, chase, prosecute. (F.—L.) M.E. pursuen, Wyclif, John, xv. 20, where the A. V. has persecute; also in P. Plowman, B. xix. 158. — O.F. poirsuir, poursuir; mod. F. poursuivre, 'to pursue, prosecute, persecute,' Cot. Cotgrave gives the spellings poursuir, poursuyn, and poursuivre. — O.F. pur, por, mod. F. pour, answering to Lat. pro; and sequi, to follow; so that poursuir = Lat. prosequi, to prosecute. See Prosecute; also Pur- and Sue. β. Owing to the confusion between the F. prefixes pour (pro) and par (per), the verb poursuivre also had the sense of persecute; we even find in O.F. (11th cent.) the expression à persuir son apel = to pursue his appeal (Litttré). See Persecute. Der. pursu-er, which in Scots law means 'a plaintiff,' lit. a prosecutor. Also pursu-ant, 'following, according, or agreeable to,' Phillips, ed. 1706, formed with the F. pres. part. suffix -ant from O.F. pursu-ir, though the usual form of the pres. part. was pursuivant or poursuivant (see below); pursu-ance, Phillips, ed. 1706, apparently coined from the adj. pursuant. Also pursuit, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 4. 1, from F. poursuite, fem. sb., a participial form answering to Lat. fem. pp. prosecuta; pursuiv-ant, an attendant on heralds, lit. 'one who is following,' Rich. III. iii. 4. 90, from F. poursuivani d'armes, 'a herald extraordinary, or young herald,' Cot., from F. poursuivant, pres. part. of poursuivre. [†]

PURSY, short-winded. (F.—L.) In Shak. Timon, v. 4. 12. Spelt purisy and purisif in Levins. M.E. purcy (for pursy), Prompt. Parv. 'Purcyf, shorte-wynded, or stuffed aboute the stomacke, pourcif;' Falsgrave. — O.F. pourcif, in Falsgrave, as just cited; which is a variant (by change of l to r) of O. F. poulsif, 'pursie, short-winded,' Cot. Mod. F. poussif. Formed with suffix -if (= Lat. -ius), from O. F. poulsier (mod. F. poussier), 'to push,' Cot. Cotgrave also gives the form poussier, which he explains not only by 'to push,' but also by 'to breathe or fetch wind.'—Lat. pulsare, to beat, push; see PUSH. The word has reference to the pantings or quick pulsations of breath made by a pury person. Der. pursi-ness.

PURTENANCE, that which belongs to; the intestines of a beast. (F.,—L.) In Exod. xii. 9; the usual translation of the same Heb. word being 'inwards.' Spelt pertenance in Coverdale's translation. 'Portenance of a beast, fresseure;' Palsgrave. In P. Plowman, B. ii. 103, where most MSS. have purtenaunces, MS. W. has appurtenaunces. Thus purtenance is merely an abbreviation of appurtenance, from O. F. apurtenance, variant of apartenance (Burguy), from O. F. apartenir, to appertain. Cotgrave has: 'appartenance, an appurtenance, an appendant.' β. The variation in the syllable pur, par, is due to the frequent confusion between O. F. pur (Lat. pro), and par (Lat. per). In the present case, the syllable is due to Lat. per. See APPURTENANCE, APPERTAIN. [†]

PURULENT, PURULENCE; see PUS.

PURVEY, to provide. (F.,—L.) A doublet of provide. M. E. purueien; porueien (with u=v), Rob. of Glouc. p. 39, l. 9; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 74.—O. F. porvoir (Burguy), mod. F. pourvoir, to provide.—Lat. provideere; see PROVIDE. β. The F. voir, to see, has numerous forms in O. F., such as veoir, veor, veir, veer, veir, veier, &c.; see Burguy. The E. spelling -vey answers to O. F. veier; cf. E. sur-vey. Der. purvey-ance, M. E. porueance, Rob. of Glouc. p. 457, l. 18, from an O. F. form answering to later pourvoyance, 'providence, forecast,' Cot.; and therefore a doublet of providence. Also purvey-or, M. E. purveour, P. Plowman, B. xix. 255, footnote, from an O. F. form answering to later F. pourvoyeur, 'a provider or purveyor,' Cot. Doublet, provide. [†]

PUS, white matter issuing from a sore. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. [The adj. purulent is in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.]—Lat. pus (gen. pur-is), matter. + Gk. πύον, matter. + Skt. pūya, pus; from pūy, to stink.—✓ PU, to be corrupt, stink; whence also pu-trid, &c. Der. pur-u-lent, from F. purulent, 'mattary, corrupt,' Cot., from Lat. purulentus, full of matter, from the stem pur- and suffix -lentus. Hence purulence.

PUSH, to thrust against, urge, drive forward. (F.,—L.) M. E. possen, pussen; infin. posse, K. Horn, ed. Lumby, l. 1011; pt. t. puste, K. Horn, ed. Ritson, l. 1079; possed, P. Plowman, B. prol. 151. At a later time push became push, by change of final double s to sh, as in anguish from anguisse, brush from F. brosse, embellish from F. embelliss, &c.—O. F. poussier, poulsier, 'to push, thrust,' Cot.—Lat. pulsare, to beat, strike, thrust; frequentative form of pellere (pp. pulsus), to drive. See PULSE (1), PULSATE. Der. push, sb., Spenser, F. Q. i. 3. 35; push-ing; push-pin, L. L. L. iv. 3. 169. ¶ The prov. E. push, a pustule, is prob. from F. pouche, with the same sense (Hamilton). See POUCH.

PUSILLANIMOUS, mean-spirited. (L.) 'Womanish and pusillanimous,' Chapman, tr. of Homer, b. i. Commentary, note 7. From Lat. pusillanimus, mean-spirited, by change of -us to -ous, as frequently; the more usual form is pusillanimis.—Lat. pusill-, stem of pusillus, very small; and animus, mind, soul.

β. Pusillus is a dimin. of pusus, small, an adjectival use of sb. pu-sus, a little boy, allied to pu-er, a boy; see PUERILE. For Lat. animus, see ANIMOSITY. Der. pusillanimous-ly, -ness. Also pusillanim-i-ty, M. E. pusillanimitee, Gower, C. A. ii. 12, from F. pusillanimité=Lat. acc. pusillanimitatem.

PUSS, a cat, a hare. (E.) Spelt pusse in Minshew, ed. 1627. This may be called an E. word, though it is widely spread. Prob. imitative, from the sound made by a cat spitting (Wedgwood). So also Du. poes, Low G. pus, pus-katte, a puss, puss-cat; Swed. dial. pus, a cat (Rietz), &c.; Irish and Gael. pus, a cat.

β. That the word is imitative, appears from its occurrence in Tamil. 'Pusei, a cat, esp. in the S. Tamil idiom. In the Cashgar dialect of the Affghan, puska signifies a cat;' Caldwell, Comp. Grammar of Dravidian Languages, p. 465; cited in N. and Q. 3 S. ix. 288. Lithuan. puž, a word to call a cat.

PUSTULE, a small pimple. (F.,—L.) 'A pustule, wheale, or blister;' Minshew, ed. 1627.—F. pustule, 'a push, blain, wheale, small blister;' Cot.—Lat. pustula, longer form of pusula, a blister, pimple. Allied to Lith. puslė, a bladder, pimple; pūsti (1 pers. sing. puttu), to blow; Gk. φυσάλης, φύσκη, a bladder, pustule, φυσάω, I blow, φύχω, I blow, Skt. pupphusa, phupphusa, the lungs; all from ✓ SPU, to blow, puff, breathe hard. Hence also Dan. puse, to swell up, puste, to blow, puff; and see PSYCHICAL. The root SPU is obviously of imitative origin. ¶ Note that pustule has nothing to do with pus, with which it is associated by Richardson, and even in White. Der. pustul-ous, pustul-ate, pustul-ar.

PUT, to push, thrust, cast, set, lay, place, &c. (C.) M. E. putten, pt. t. putte, pp. put, i-put; P. Plowman, A. iii. 75, B. iii. 84; Havelok, 1033, 1051; the pt. t. putte occurs in Layamon, 18092. A. S. potian, to thrust; Ælfric's Homilies, i. 422, l. 25; but of Celtic origin.—Gael. put, to push, thrust; W. putio, to push, to poke; Corn. put, to kick like a horse. The orig. sense seems to have been to push, cast, cf. 'to put a stone,' the sense of laying or placing occurs also in Dan. putte, to put, which is of similar origin. β. Apparently a collateral form with Gael. puce, to push, jostle; cf. Irish poc, a blow, kick; Corn. poc, a push, shove; see POKE (2). ¶ Stratmann further cites Bret. pouta, bouta, to push, but I cannot find the word in Legonidec's Dict. Diez derives F. bouler, to thrust, from M. H. G. bózen, to beat, see BUTT (1); it would seem simpler to suppose bouter to be from the same Celtic source as E. put. In that case, E. bouter (1) is also of Celtic origin, which would further affect the origin of buttock, button, and abut. Der. put-er, verb, q. v.

PUTATIVE, reputed, supposed. (F.,—L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627.—F. putatif, 'putative,' Cot.—Lat. putativus, imaginary, presumptive. Formed with suffix -ivus from Lat. putatus, pp. of putare, to think, suppose; for which see COMPUTE.

PUTREFY, to make or become corrupt. (F.,—L.) 'Grosse meate . . . makyth putrified matter;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 1. 'Apt to receive putrifaction;' id. b. ii. c. 1. (The spelling with i was prob. due to confusion with putrid).—F. putrefier, 'to putrify,' Cot. Formed by analogy with other verbs in -fier as if from Lat. *putrificare; but the true Lat. forms are putrefacere, to make putrid; and putrefieri, to become putrid.—Lat. putre, as seen in putere, to be rotten, with which cf. puter, putris, rotten; and facere, to make, or fieri, to become. See PUTRID. Der. putrefact-ion, from F. putrefaction=Lat. acc. *putrefactionem, not in White's Dict., but regularly formed from the pp. putrefactus. Also putrefact-ive. Also putrescent, becoming putrid, from Lat. putrescent-, stem of pres. part. of putrescere, inceptive form of putrere; whence putrescence.

PUTRID, stinking, rotten, corrupt. (F.,—L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; and in Cotgrave.—F. putride, 'putride,' Cot.—Lat. putridus, putrid. Extended from Lat. putri-, crude form of put-er, put-ris, rotten; allied to putrere, to be rotten. Formed (with suffix -ra) from put-ere, to stink; from ✓ PU, to stink. Cf. Skt. pūy, to stink; see PUS and FOUL.

PUTTOCK, a kite, kind of hawk. (F.,—L.; and E.) In Shak. Cymb. i. 1. 140; see Nares and Palsgrave. Just as a sparrow-hawk is named from sparrows, I suppose that the puttock is named from the pools or pouts, i. e. small birds on which it preys. 'Poot, a chicken, or pullet, Cheshire' (Halliwell); and again, 'Pout, the young of a pheasant; Florio, s. v. fasanello, has a phasani-pout;' id. β. Pout stands for poult=pullet; the Gael. put, the young of moor-fowl, a young grouse, is merely from Lowland Sc. pout, a young partridge or moor-fowl; see Jamieson, and see POULT. γ. The suffix -ock may be the usual E. dimin. suffix -ock, used adjectivally, or, if we should suppose puttock to be a corruption of poot-hawk, this is not a violent nor unlikely change. [†]

PUTTY, an oxide of tin, or lead and tin, for polishing glass; more commonly a cement of whiting and oil, for windows. (F.,—C.) 'Putty, a powder made of calcin'd tin;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'Putty, pottain, and pot-brass . . . seem all to mean the same thing;' Rich. Dict.; this opinion is supported by extracts from Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxiv. c. 9, and Boyle, Works, i. 721. Pliny explains that in brass-founding, it was often found desirable to add to the ore collectaneum, i. e. bits of old vessels, called by Holland 'pottain or old metall,' or ollaria, called by Holland 'pot-brasse;' shewing that pottain simply means the metal of old pots. Similarly, putty simply means potty, or belonging to old pots. β. The difficulty is in the history of the word rather than in its etymology. The old sense of it was 'powder made of calcin'd tin,' as in Blount, resembling what is now called putty powder. 'Putty powder, a pulverised oxide of tin sometimes mixed with oxide of lead; extensively used in glass and marble works, and the best kinds are used for polishing plate;' Weale's Dict. of Terms used in the Arts. 4th ed. 1873. The same work tells us that putty is 'composed of whiting and linseed oil, with or without white lead.' It thus appears that the successive senses are (1) calcin'd tin or oxide of tin, (2) oxide of lead, (3) white lead, (4) a preparation containing white lead, the name being continued even after the white lead was omitted. The result is that the mixture now called putty is remarkable for frequently containing nothing that could be called putty in the older sense. γ. This once perceived, the etymology is easy.—O. F. potée, 'brasse, copper, tin, pewter, &c., burnt or calcinated; also, a pot-full of anything;' Cot. The mod. F. potée means 'putty,' shewing a similar change of meaning. 'Potée d'étain, tin-putty;' Hamilton. The mod. F. potée also means (as formerly), a potful. Cf. also O. F. potteine, 'broken pieces of metall, or of old vessels, mingled one with another;' Cot. Also O. F. potin, 'solder of metall;' id. β. Potée is formed with suffix -ée (= Lat.

-ata), from F. pot, a pot, of Celtic origin; see Pot. Der. putty, vb.

PUZZLE, a difficult question, embarrassment, problem, perplexity. (F., -L. and Gk.) As a verb in Shak. Hamlet, iii. 1. 80; and it was prob. regarded as a frequentative form of pose, with suffix -le. But this was not at all the way in which the word arose; and, in fact, the suffix -le is not usually added to words of F. origin. It was orig. a sb., and stands for opposal, which is used in the ordinary sense of 'opposition' in Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 81 (R.). It has been shewn, s. v. Pose, that pose is short for oppose, which again is a corruption of oppose. From the F. opposer was formed M. E. opposaille, a question for solution; whence mod. E. puzzle. 'And to pouert she put this opposayle' [question], Lydgate, Fall of Princes, ed. Wayland, sig. B. iii, leaf lxvi; cited in Dyce's Skelton, ii. 304. Hence corruptly, opposaille. 'Made vnto her this vncouth opposayle, Why wepe ye so?' id., sig. B. v, leaf cxviii (Dyce). 'Madame, your opposelle is wele inferrid,' i. e. your question is well put; Skelton, Carl. of Laurel, l. 141; where the MS. copy has opposelle (Dyce). The M. E. opposaille seems to have been a coined word, like deni-al, refus-al, &c. The loss of the first syllable is due to the loss of the same in pose. For the etymology, see Oppose, Pose. Der. puzzle, verb.

PYGMY, a very diminutive person or thing. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. pygmy, Trevisa, i. 11, l. 7. - F. pygmé, adj., 'dwarfie, short, low, of a small stature'; Cot. - Lat. pygmæus, adj., dwarfish, pygmy-like; from pl. Pymæi, the race of Pygmies. - Gk. Πυγμαῖος, the race of Pygmies, fabulous dwarfs of the length of a πυγμή, which was reckoned from the elbow to the fist or knuckles, containing about 13½ inches. - Gk. πυγμή, the fist; cognate with Lat. pugnis; see Pugnacious.

PYLORUS, the lower orifice of the stomach. (L., -Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. - Lat. pylorus. - Gk. πυλῶρ, a gate-keeper; also the pylorus, because it is gate-keeper to the intestines, or at the entrance to them. - Gk. πύλη, a gate; and οἶκος, a keeper, watcher. β. The Gk. πύλη is perhaps allied to Gk. πόρος, a way, passage through, from √PAR, to fare, whence also Lat. porta, a gate; see Fare. γ. The Gk. οἶκος is from ὄρομαι (= φόρομαι), I heed, guard, from √WAR, to guard; see Wary. Der. pyloric.

PYRAMID, a solid figure with triangular sides meeting in an apex, upon a triangular, square, or polygonal base. (L., -Gk.) The word was rather taken directly from the Latin than from the French. Thus Shak. has the sing. pyramis, 1 Hen. VI. i. 6. 21; pl. pyramides (four syllables). Antony, v. 2. 61; as well as pyramide, Macb. iv. 1. 57. Cotgrave strangely translates F. pyramide by 'a pyramides.' - Lat. pyramis, stem of pyramis. - Gk. πυραμῖς (gen. πυραμίδος), a pyramid. Root unknown; no doubt of Egyptian origin. Der. pyramidal, pyramidalic. [†]

PYRE, a pile of wood for burning a body. (L., -Gk.) In Sir T. Brown, Urn Burial, cap. v. § 13. - Lat. pyra. - Gk. πυρά, a pyre. - Gk. πῦρ, fire; cognate with E. Fire, q. v. And see pyrites, pyrotechnics, &c.

PYRITES, a stone which gives out sparks when struck with steel. (L., -Gk.) 'Pyrites, a marcasite or fire-stone;' Phillips, ed. 1706. - Lat. pyrites. - Gk. πυρίτης, a flint, pyrites; orig. an adj., belonging to fire. - Gk. πῦρ, fire; cognate with E. Fire, q. v. Der. pyritic.

PYROTECHNIC, pertaining to fireworks. (Gk.) Pyrotechnick, adj., and pyrotechny are given in Phillips, ed. 1706. Coined from Gk. πυρο, used in compounds in place of the crude form of πῦρ, fire, cognate with E. fire; and τεχνικός, artistic, technical, from τέχνη, an art, craft. See Fire and Technical. Der. pyrotechnic-s, pyrotechny (short for pyrotechnic art); pyro-technist. So also pyro-meter, a fire-measurer (see Metro); pyro-gen-ous, produced by fire, from Gk. base γεν, to produce (see Genus).

PYX, the sacred box in which the host is kept after consecration; at the mint, the box containing sample coins. (L., -Gk.) Spelt pixe in Minshew, ed. 1627. Abbreviated from Lat. pyxis, a box. - Gk. πύξις, a box; so called because orig. made of box-wood. - Gk. πύξος, box-wood; so called from its dense, close grain. - Gk. πυκνός, dense; from √PAK, to fasten, make firm; see Pact. Doublet, box (2), q. v.

Q.

QUACK (1), to make a noise like a duck. (E.) An imitative word. 'The goos, the duk, and the cuckow also So cried "keke! keke!" "cuckow!" "queke, queke!" hye;' Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, 499. Here the cry keke! keke! is assigned to the cackling goose, and queke! queke! to the quacking duck. In Ch. C. T. 4150, the

dat. case quakke is used to mean 'hoarseness.' + Du. kwaken, to croak, quack, chat. + G. quaken, to quack, croak. + Icel. kvaka, to twitter. + Dan. qvække, to croak, quack, cackle. Cf. Lat. coaxare, to croak, Gk. κωάε, a croaking; Lithuan. kwakėti, to croak; kwakėti, to cackle. β. A mere variant of the base KAK seen in Cackle, q. v.

Der. quack (2), q. v. Also quail (2), q. v.

QUACK (2), to cry up pretended nostrums. (E.) Merely a particular use of Quack (1). It means to chatter about, cackle or prate of, hence, to sing the praises of a nostrum, to pretend to medical skill. 'To quack off universal cures;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 1. l. 330. Der. quack-salver, Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, i. e. a quack who puffs up his salves or ointments, borrowed from Du. kwakzalver, a quack, charlatan, cf. Du. kwakzalven, to quack, puff up salves (see Salve); quack-doctor, a later word which took the place of quack-salver, Pope, note to Dunciad, iii. 192. Hence also quack = quack-doctor; quack-er-y.

QUADRAGESIMA, the forty days of Lent. (L.) 'Quadragesima Sunday is six weeks before Easter;' Tables in the Book of Common Prayer. [Hence quadragesimal, adj., = Lenten, Milton, Areopagitica, ed. Hales, p. 5, l. 8.] - Lat. quadragesima, lit. 'fortieth,' fem. of quadragesimus, fortieth; in late authors used to mean 'Lent.' Older form quadragesimus (= quadragesimi-mus). - Lat. quadragesima, forty. - Lat. quadr-us, square, fourfold, put for *quadr-us, *quater-us, from quater, four times, quatuor, four; and -ginta, put for da-kanta, tenth, from decem, ten. See Four and Ten; and Forty. Der. quadragesimal.

QUADRANGLE, a square figure, or plot of ground. (F., -L.) In Shak. 2 Hen. VI. i. 3. 156; and in Levins. - F. quadrangle, 'a quadrangle;' Cot. - Lat. quadrangulum, sb.; neut. of quadrangulus, four-cornered. - Lat. quadr-us, square, put for *quater-us, *quater-us, from quater, four; and angulus, an angle. See Four and Angle. Der. quadrangul-ar. Also quad, quod, a court (in Oxford), short for quadrangle.

QUADRANT, the fourth part of a circle. (L.) Chiefly used of an instrument for measuring angles (like a sextant), graduated with degrees along the arc. M. E. quadrant, Prompt. Parv. - Lat. quadrant, stem of quadrans, sb., a fourth part. Extended from Lat. quadr-us, square, which is put for *quater-us, *quater-us, from quater; see Four. Der. quadrant-al. From the same source are quarrel (2), quarry (1), squad, squadron, square.

QUADRATE, squared, well-fitted. (L.) Used as a vb. in Levins; as adj. and vb. in Minshew; as sb. in Milton, P. L. vi. 62, to mean 'square phalanx.' - Lat. quadratus, squared, pp. of quadrare, to make or be square. - Lat. quadrus, square; see Quadrant. Der. quadrat-ic; quadrat-ure, Milton, P. L. x. 381.

QUADRENNIAL, once in four years. (L.) More correctly quadiennialis, as in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Formed with adj. suffix -al (Lat. -alis) from quadienni-um, a space of four years. - Lat. quadri = quadro, crude form of quadrus, square, fourfold; and annus, a year. See Quadrant, Four; also Biennial, Annual.

QUADRILATERAL, having four sides. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. quadrilater-us, four-sided; with suffix -al (= Lat. -alis). - Lat. quadr-i, for quadro, crude form of quadrus, square; and later, stem of latus, a side. See Quadrant and Lateral.

QUADRILLE, 1. the name of a game at cards; 2. the name of a dance. (F., -Span., -L.) The name of the dance is late; it is added by Todd to Johnson; so called because danced by 4 persons, or by sets of four. Not improbably suggested by the game at cards, which was a game for 4 persons with 40 cards; see Pope, Moral Essays, iii. 76; Sat. i. 38. β. I dissent from Littré's arrangement of the F. word quadrille; he gives quadrille (1), fem. a troop of horses for a tournament; also masc. a dance. And again, quadrille (2), masc. a game at cards. Obviously the right arrangement is: quadrille (1), fem. a troop of horses; and quadrille (2), masc. a game at cards, a dance. This brings the genders together, and accords with chronology. γ. And it makes a difference; for quadrille, fem., is of Italian origin, from Ital. quadriglia, short for O. Ital. squadriglia, 'a route, a troop, a crue, a band of men,' Florio; which is connected with Squadron, q. v. δ. On the other hand, the game at cards, like ombre, is prob. of Span. origin. - Span. cuadrillo, a small square, allied to cuadrilla, 'a meeting of four or more persons,' Neuman. - Span. cuadra, a square. - Lat. quadra, fem. of quadrus, fourfold; see Quadrant. Cf. Lat. quadrula, a little square.

QUADRILLION, a million raised to the fourth power. (L.) An oddly coined word; made by prefixing quadr- (short for quadrus, square, fourfold) to -illion, which is the word million with the m left out. See Billion and Quadrant.

QUADROON, the child of a mulatto and a white person.

(Span., = L.) Better quartermoon or quartrmoon. So called because of black blood only in a fourth part. Modern; and imported from America. — Span. cvarteron, the child of a creole and Spaniard (Neuman); also, a fourth part. Formed with suffixes -er and -on from cuarto, a fourth part. — Lat. quartum, acc. of quartus, fourth. See Quart, Quartern.

QUADRUPED, a four-footed animal. (L.) The adj. quadruped is in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; quadruped, sb., is in Phillips, ed. 1706. — Lat. quadrupedus, having four feet. — Lat. quadruped, stem of quadrupes, quadrupes, four-footed. — Lat. quadrup, fourfold, four times; and pes, a foot. See Quadrant and Foot. Der. quadruped-al.

QUADRUPLE, fourfold. (F., = L.) As a verb in Chapman, tr. of Homer, Iliad, i. 129. As adj. in Minsheu, ed. 1627. — F. quadruple, 'quadruple'; Cot. = Lat. quadruplum, acc. of quadruplus, fourfold. — Lat. quadrup, four times; and -plus, signifying 'fold', from PAR, to fill. See Quadrant and Double. Der. quadruple, verb. Also quadruplic-ate, from Lat. quadruplicatus, pp. of quadruplicare, to multiply by four; for the force of the suffix, see Complicate.

QUAFF, to drink in large draughts. (C.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 3. 14; &c. And in Levins. The double f stands for a guttural. The true form is quack (ck as in German), meaning to drink out of a quack or cup, called quack, quack, or quack in Lowland Scotch; see quack in Jamieson. 'I quaght, I drink all out;' Palsgrave. Thus to quaff is to cup; 'Cup us till the world go round;' Antony, iii. 7. 124. — Irish and Gael. cuach, a cup, bowl, milking-pail. Cf. W. cuch, a round concavity, hive, crown of a hat, boat. Perhaps from KU, to contain; see Cave. Der. quaff-er. [†] QUAGGA, a quadruped of the horse tribe. (Hottentot.) The name is said to be Hottentot; and is supposed to be imitative, from the barking noise made by the animal.

QUAGMIRE, boggy, yielding ground. (E.) In Shak. K. Lear, iii. 4. 54. Put for quake-mire; see Quake and Mire. 'It is spelt quake-mire in Stanhurst's Descr. of Ireland, p. 20; quave-myre, in Palsgrave;' Halliwell, s. v. quave-mire, q. v. Cf. M. E. quaven (= quaven), to quake; P. Plowman, B. xviii. 61. So also quaggy (i. e. quak-y), adj., used of boggy ground.

QUAIL (1), to cower, shrink, fail in spirit. (E.) The old meaning of quail was 'to suffer torment, pine, die;' hence to faint, esp. used of the spirits. 'My false spirits quail,' Cymb. v. 5. 149; 'their quailing breasts;' 3 Hen. VI. iii. 3. 54. 'The braunch once dead, the budde eke nedes must quaille,' i. e. die; Spenser, Shep. Kal. November, 91. [The spelling is not quite exact, it should rather have been quell or quail; but it was prob. affected by some confusion with the word quail, to curdle, used of milk; for which see Prompt. Parv. p. 418, and Way's note. We also find confusion between quail, to die, and quell, to kill, as in 'to quail and shake the orb,' Antony, v. 2. 85. Cf. Devonshire quail, to faint away; Halliwell.] M. E. quelen, to die; not common. A strong verb, with pt. t. qual, pl. quelen; the pl. quelen = they died, occurs 10 times in Layamon, li. 31825 to 31834. 'Men quelað on hunger' = men die of hunger, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 111, l. 10. — A. S. cwelan, to die, in comp. cwelan, to die utterly, Exod. vii. 18. + Du. quelen, to pine away. + O. H. G. quelan, to suffer torment. β. From a Teut. base KWAL, to suffer torment or pain, to choke; whence also A. S. cwalu, destruction (Grein), Icel. kval, Dan. and Swed. qual, G. qual, torment, agony; cognate with Lithuan. gela, torment, anguish. Fick, iii. 54. So also M. E. querken, to choke, is from the equivalent base KWAR. Der. quell, q. v., qualm, q. v. The M. E. quailen, to curdle, coagulate, is from O. F. coailier, later cailler, to curdle (see Littre); from Lat. coagulare; see Coagulate.

QUAIL (2), a migratory bird. (F., = Low Lat., = Low G.) M. E. quaille, Chaucer, C. T. 9082; quayle, Wright's Vocab. i. 177, l. 13. — O. F. quaille (13th cent., Littre), mod. F. caille. Cf. Ital. quaglia, a quail. — Low Lat. quaquila, a quail. — O. Du. quackel, 'a quaille;' Hexham. Lit. 'a quacker.' — O. Du. quacken, 'to croake,' id.; cognate with E. Quack (1), q. v.

QUAINT, neat, odd, whimsical. (F., = L.) M. E. quaint, Chaucer, C. T. 10553; commonly with the sense of 'famous, excellent.' Also spelt quoynt, Rob. of Glouc. p. 72, l. 18; p. 157, l. 14. Also cwoynt, Ancrén Riwe, p. 140, l. 21; coint, coynt, Will. of Palerne, 653, 1081; koynt, 4090. — O. F. coint, 'quaint, compt, neat, fine, spruce, brisk, trim;' Cot. Cf. Ital. conto, 'known, noted, counted;' Florio. Certainly derived from Lat. cognitus, known, well-known, famous; though confused (more in F. than in E.) with Lat. comptus, neat, adorned, pp. of cômere, to arrange, adorn. β. Cognitus is used as the pp. of cognoscere, to know, and is compounded of co- (for com = cum, with) and -gnitus (for -gnôtus = gnôtus), known, used as pp. of gnoscere, noscere, to know; see Cognition. γ. I may add that Lat. cômere = co-inere, comp. of co- (= com = cum), and emere, to take, &

¶ In F. the word took the sense of 'trim,' as noted; in E. it meant famous, remarkable, curious, strange, &c. Der. quaint-ly, quaint-ness, ac-quaint. [†]

QUAKE, to shake, tremble. (E.) M. E. quaken, Chaucer, C. T. 11172; earlier cwakien, Ancrén Riwe, p. 116, l. 20. — A. S. cwacian, to quake; Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, b. ii. c. 6. § 3. Cf. A. S. cweccan, to wag, Mark, xv. 29. β. The orig. sense is 'to give life to,' to set in motion; the verb being derived from a base KWAK, allied to KWIK, alive; see Quick. The author of P. Plowman has the right idea when, in describing an earth-quake, he says that the earth 'quok [quaked] as hit guyke were,' i. e. as if it were alive, P. Pl. C. xxi. 64. Der. quak-er, q. v.

QUAKER, one of the Society of Friends. (E.) 'Quakers, orig. called Seekers, from their seeking the truth, afterward Friends. Justice Bennet, of Derby, gave the Society the name of Quakers in 1650, because G. Fox (the founder) admonished him, and those present, to quake at the word of the Lord;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. Others take Quaker, like Shaker, to be a name given in derision, from the quaking which is supposed to exhibit their enthusiasm. Either way, the etym. is the same; see Quake. Der. Quaker-ism.

QUALIFY, to render suitable, limit, abate. (F., = L.) Frequent in Shak. Meas. i. 1. 66, &c.; and in Levins. — F. qualifier, 'to qualify;' Cot. — Low Lat. qualificare, to endue with a quality. — Lat. quali-, crude form of qualis, of what sort; and fio, for fac-ers, to make. See Quality and Fact. Der. qualific-ation, due to Low Lat. qualificatus, pp. of qualificare.

QUALITY, property, condition, sort, title. (F., = L.) M. E. qualite, qualitee, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 153, l. 11. — F. qualité, 'a quality;' Cot. — Lat. qualitatem, acc. of qualitas, sort, kind. — Lat. quali-, crude form of qualis, of what sort, cognate with E. Which, q. v. Der. qualit-ative, a coined word.

QUALM, a sudden attack of illness, prick of conscience. (E.) M. E. qualm, often in the sense of pestilence, mortal illness; Chaucer, C. T. 2016. — A. S. cwealm (for cwalm), pestilence, Luke, xxi. 11. + Du. kwal, only in the sense 'thick vapour,' from its suffocating properties. + Dan. qualm, suffocating air; qualme, qualm, nausea. + Swed. qualm, sultriness. + G. qualm, vapour. β. All from the Teut. base KWAL, to suffer pain, to choke; see Quail (1); with suffix -ma. Der. qualm-ish.

QUANDARY, an evil plight. (Scand.) In Beaum. and Fletcher, Knight of the Burning Pestle, Act i. sc. 1 (Humphrey). This curious word is almost certainly a corruption of the M. E. wandreth, wandrette, used in just the same sense of evil plight, peril, adversity. The use of qu for w is not confined to this word; we find such spellings as squete for swete (sweet), squilke for swilke (such); Cursor Mundi, 76, 372; and the confusion of quh, wh, qu, and w, at the beginning of words is well known. Thus Halliwell gives quarf for whereof; and quhar for where (where) is the usual Scottish form, whilst the same word is also written war or wer. β. Examples are: 'welthe or wandret' = prosperity or adversity; Religious Pieces, ed. Perry, E. E. T. S., p. 11, l. 5. 'Al thair *wandret*h and their wrake' = all their perplexity and misery; Spec. of English, ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 91, l. 59. So also wondrede, Ancrén Riwe, p. 214, l. 2, p. 310, l. 25, p. 362, l. 19; &c. Spelt wondrade, Hali Meidenhad, ed. Cockayne, p. 9, l. 5; see further in Cockayne's note to St. Margaret, p. 112. — Icel. vandrædi; difficulty, trouble. — Icel. vand-r, difficult; with suffix -rædi = E. -red in kind-red, hat-red. Allied to wanda, to elaborate; from vann, pt. t. of vinna, to toil; see Win. + O. Swed. wandræde, difficulty; from vand, difficult, and the like suffix. Ithre gives an example in O. Swedish: 'Ther eigh äru i wandrædom' = who are not in peril, i. e. who are not in a quandary.

QUANTITY, size, bulk, large portion. (F., = L.) M. E. quantite, quantitee; Chaucer, C. T. 4662. — F. quantité, 'quantity;' Cot. — Lat. quantitatem, acc. of quantitas, quantity. — Lat. quant-, for quanto, crude form of quantus, how much; with suffix -tas. β. Quantus is cognate with Gk. πόσος (Ionic κόςος), how much, from the base KA, who, what; see Who. Der. quantit-ative.

QUARANTINE, a space of forty days. (F., = L.) Spelt quarentine in Minsheu, who gives it the old legal sense, viz. a space of forty days during which a widow might dwell unmolested in her husband's house after his decease. Blount gives this form and sense, and derives it from O. F. quarantine. He also gives quarantain, meaning (1) Lent, (2) a forty days' truce or indulgence, (3) 'the forty days which a merchant, coming from an infected port, stays on shipboard for clearing himself;' the last sense being the usual one in mod. E. — O. F. quarantine (Roquefort), usually quarantaine, 'Lent, a term of forty days,' &c.; Cot. — Low Lat. *quarantina, *quarantana, *quarentena (all of which prob. were in use, though Ducange only mentions quarantenum), a space of forty days, formed as if from *quaranta, forty, answering to F. quarante; this quaranta being nothing but a shortened form of Lat. quadragesima, forty. See Quadragesima.

Cf. Ital. quaranta, forty; fare la quarantana, 'to keepe lent, . . . to keepe fortie daies from company, nameiy if one come from infected places, as they vse in Italy'; Florio. Thus the mod. sense seems to be of Ital. origin.

QUARREL (1), a dispute, brawl. (F., -L.) It should rather be querrel, but has been assimilated in spelling to the word below. M. E. querle (with one r), Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii, pr. 3, l. 1032. - O. F. querelle, later querelle, 'a quarrel'; Cot. (He gives both forms.) - Lat. querela, a complaint. - Lat. queri, to complain, lament. See Querulous. Der. quarrel, verb, Romeo, i. 1. 39, 59, &c.; quarrel-er; quarrel-some, As You Like It, v. 4. 85; quarrel-some-ness; quarrel-ous, Cymb. iii. 4. 162. [†]

QUARREL (2), a square-headed cross-bow bolt. (F., -L.) Obsolete. In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 11. 24. M. E. quarel, King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 1504, 2781. - O. F. quarrel, later quarreau, 'a diamond at cardes, a square tile, a quarrell or boulit for a crossebow'; Cot. Mod. F. carreau. - Low Lat. quadrellum, acc. of quadrellus, a quarrel, a square tile. - Lat. quadr-us, square; with dimin. suffix. See Quadrant.

QUARRY (1), a place where stones are dug, esp. for building purposes. (F., -L.) In Shak. Oth. i. 3. 141. The proper sense is a place where stones are squared for building purposes; hence, a place where stones are procured which are afterwards squared for building; lastly, a place where stones are dug, without any reference to squaring. Again, the proper form should be quarrer, but it was altered to quarry; perhaps by confusion with quarry, sometimes used as a variant of quarrel, a square pane of glass (Halliwell). M. E. quarriere, quarrer, Will. of Palerne, 2232, 2281, 2319, 4692; spelt quarere, quarer, quarry, quar in Prompt. Parv. - O. F. quarriere, 'a quarry of stone'; Cot. Mod. F. carrière. - Low Lat. quadraria, a quarry for squared stones. - Lat. quadrare, to square. - Lat. quadr-us, square; see Quadrant. ¶ The sense was suggested by Lat. quadratarius, a stone-squarer, a stone-cutter; from the same source. Der. quarry, vb., quarry-man, quarri-er.

QUARRY (2), a heap of slaughtered game. (F., -L.) In Shak. Cor. i. 1. 202; Hamlet, v. 2. 375. M. E. querré, Sir Gawain and the Grene Knight, 1324. Corrupted from O. F. corée, curee, the intestines of a slain animal (Burguy); the part which was given to the hounds. Cotgrave has: 'Curée, a dogs reward, the hounds fees of, or part in, the game they have killed'; also: 'Corée, a swines gullet, or a hogs haslet'. - Low Lat. corata, the intestines of a slain animal. Cf. O. Ital. corada, 'the plucke, hasset, or midriff of any beast'; Florio. β. It was a general term for the inwards of the slain animal, and so called from containing the heart. - Lat. cor, the heart; cognate with E. Heart, q. v. ¶ The change of spelling from initial c to qu is easily illustrated by the use of O. F. quer, cuer, the heart (Burguy). But see Addenda. [✱]

QUART, the fourth part of a gallon. (F., -L.) M. E. quart, quarte, Chaucer, C. T. 651. - F. quarte, 'a French quart, almost our pottle'; Cot. - Lat. quarta (i. e. pars), a fourth part; fem. of quartus, fourth. Apparently short for quaturn-tus; from Lat. quatuor, cognate with E. Four, q. v. Der. quart-an, quart-er, quart-ern, quart-ette, quart-i; and see quatern-ary, quatern-ion, quatraine.

QUARTAN, recurring on the fourth day. (F., -L.) Said of an ague or fever. 'Quarteyne, fevyr, Quartana'; Prompt. Parv. - F. quartaine, quartan, only used of a fever; in use in the 13th cent.; Littre. - Lat. quartana (febris), a quartan fever; fem. of quartanus, belonging to the fourth; formed with suffix -anus from quart-us, fourth; see Quart.

QUARTER, a fourth part. (F., -L.) M. E. quarter, Rob. of Glouc. p. 528, l. 20. - O. F. quartier (12th cent., Littre), also quartier, as in mod. F. - Lat. quartarius, a fourth part, quarter of a measure of anything; formed with suffix -arius from quart-us, fourth; see Quart. Der. quarter-day, -deck, -ly, -master, -sessions, -staff. Also quarten-er.

QUARTERN, a fourth of a pint, a gill. (F., -L.) Short for quateron. M. E. quateroun, quartroun, quariron, P. Plowman, B. v. 217, and footnotes. - O. F. quateron, 'a quarter of a pound, also a quaterne'; Cot. - Low Lat. quateronem, acc. of quatero, a fourth part of a pound; extended from Low Lat. quater-us, which from quartus; see Quarter.

QUARTET, QUARTETTE, a musical composition of four parts. (Ital., -L.) Modern; the spelling quartette is F., but the word is really Italian. - Ital. quartetto, a dimin. form from quarto, fourth; see Quart, Duet.

QUARTO, having the sheet folded into four leaves. (L.) In Johnson. The word is due to the Lat. phr. in quarto, i. e. in a fourth part of the orig. size; where quarto is the abl. case of quartus, fourth; see Quart. And see Folio. Der. quarto, sb.

QUARTZ, a mineral composed of silica. (G.) Added by Todd to Johnson. - G. quarz, rock-crystal; the G. z being sounded as ts.

β. Supposed to stand for gewarz = warz, a wart; from the excrescences upon it (E. Müller). See Wart.

QUASH, to crush, annihilate, annul. (F., -L.) M. E. quaschen; see 'Quaschyn, quasso' in Prompt. Parv. Properly transitive; but used intransitively in P. Plowman, C. xxi. 64. And see Owl and Nightingale, 1388. - O. F. quasser, later casser, 'to breake, . . . quash asunder'; Cot. (He gives both spellings.) - Lat. quassare, to shatter; frequentative of quater (supine quassum), to shake. Root uncertain. ¶ The O. F. quasser also means 'to abrogate, annul' (Cot.), as in E. 'to quash an indictment.' The slight likeness to A. S. cwisan, to break, is accidental; see Queasy. Der. (from Lat. quater) casque, cash, con-cuss-ion, dis-cuss, per-cuss-ion. [†]

QUASSIA, a South-American tree. (Personal name.) Added by Todd to Johnson. Botanical names in -ia are formed by adding the Lat. suffix -ia to a personal name, as in dahl-ia, fuchs-ia. Quassia was named by Linnæus after a negro named Quassi, who first pointed out the use of the bark as a tonic and who was alive in 1755. A negro named Daddy Quashi is mentioned in Waterton's Wanderings in S. America, Journeys 3 and 4. Waterton also quotes a Barbadoes song in Journey 4, cap. ii: 'Quashi scrapes the fiddle-string, And Venus plays the flute;' these lines are altered from the finale to G. Colman's Inkle and Yarico. Quassi is, in fact, quite a common negro name. See Notes and Queries, 6 S. i. 104, 141, 166.

QUATERNARY, consisting of fours. (F., -L.) Rare; see exx. in Richardson. - F. quaternaire, 'every fourth day'; Cot. - Lat. quaternarius, consisting of four each. - Lat. quaterni, pl., four at a time; from quatuor, four; see Four.

QUATERNION, a band of four soldiers, a band of four. (L.) In Acts, xii. 4 (A. V.); Milton, P. L. v. 181. - Lat. quaternion-, stem of quaternio, used in Acts, xii. 4 (Vulgate); it means 'the number four,' or 'a band of four men.' - Lat. quaterni, pl.; see Quaternary.

QUATRAIN, a stanza of four lines. (F., -L.) Used by Dryden, in his letter to Sir R. Howard, prefixed to Annus Mirabilis, which is written in quatrains. - F. quatrain, 'a staffe or stanza of 4 verses'; Cot. Formed with suffix -ain (Lat. -anus) from F. quatre = Lat. quatuor, four. See Four.

QUAVER, to shake, to speak or sing tremulously. (E.) In Levins; and in Minshew, ed. 1627. It is the frequentative form, with suffix -er, of quave. M. E. quauen (with u=v), to tremble; Prompt. Parv. And see P. Plowman, B. xviii. 61. It first occurs as a various reading in St. Marharette, ed. Cockayne, p. 48, l. 3 from bottom. Allied to Low G. quabbeln, to tremble (Brem. Wört.), Dan. dial. kveppa, to be shaken (Aasen). Also to M. E. quappen, to palpitate, Chaucer, Troil. iii. 57, Legend of Good Women, 865. β. From a base KWAP, to throb, which is a mere variant of KWAK, to quake; see Quake. Der. quaver, sb., lit. a vibration, hence a note in music. Also quiver (1), q. v.

QUAY, a wharf for vessels. (F., -C.) Spelt quay and kay in Phillips, ed. 1706; key in Cotgrave; keie in Minshew, ed. 1627. M. E. key, spelt keye, Eng. Gilds, ed. Toulmin Smith, p. 374, l. 23; and see Prompt. Parv. - O. F. quay (F. quai), 'the key of a haven'; Cot. The orig. sense is 'enclosure', a space set apart for unloading goods. Of Celtic origin. - Bret. kaé, an enclosure; W. cae, an enclosure, hedge, field, of which the old spelling was cai (Rhys). ¶ Spelman confuses it with E. key, for which there appears to be no reason. [†]

QUEAN, a contemptible woman, a hussy. (E.) In Shak. Merry Wives, iv. 2. 180. Absolutely the same word as queen; the orig. sense being 'woman.' The difference in spelling is unoriginal, but may have marked some variation of pronunciation. The best passage to illustrate this word is in P. Plowman, C. ix. 46, where the author says that in the grave all are alike; you cannot there tell a knight from a knave, or a queen from a quean. The MSS. have queyne, queene, quene, in the former case, and queene, quene, in the latter; i. e. they make no distinction, none being possible. See Queen.

QUEASY, sickly, squeamish, causing or feeling nausea. (Scand.) 'His queasy stomach'; Much Ado, ii. 1. 399. 'A queysy mete'; Skelton, Magnificence, 2995. 'Quaisy as meate or drinke is, dangerous'; Palsgrave. Quaisy is used as a sb., in the sense of 'nausea,' in Polit., Religious, and Love Poems, ed. Furnivall, p. 215, l. 22. Formed as adj. from a Scand. source. - Norw. kveis, sickness after a debauch (Aasen); Icel. kveisa, a whitlow, boil; idra-kveisa, bowel-pains, colic; Swed. dial. kvesa, a pimple, soreness, blister. Cf. Swed. kväsa, to bruise, wound; A. S. tócwisian, to crush, Sweet's A. S. Reader. β. The orig. sense appears to be 'sore,' as if from a wound or bruise. Allied to Goth. kweistjan, to destroy; perhaps to Skt. ji, to overpower; Fick, iii. 55; i. 570. Der. queasi-ness, 2 Hen. IV. i. 1. 106.

QUEEN, a woman, a female sovereign. (E.) M. E. queen, queene; P. Plowman, C. ix. 46. - A. S. cwén (common). + Du. kween, a barren woman, barren cow (cf. E. quean as a term of contempt). + Icel.

kván, a wife; kona, a woman. + Dan. quinde, a woman; kone, a wife. + Swed. quinna, a female; kona, a queen, strumpet. + Goth. kwens, kwains, a woman, wife; also kwino. + M. H. G. kone, O. H. G. quend, a woman. + Gk. γυνή, + Russ. žená (with j as in French), a wife. + Skt. jáni, used in the latter part of compound adjectives; jani, a wife.

β. All from ✓ GAN, to produce; cf. Goth. keinan, to germinate; see Curtius, and Fick, iii. 39. See Genus, Kin. Der. quert-ly, queen-mother. Doublet, quean.

QUEER, strange, odd. (O. Low G.) 'A queer fellow;' Spectator (in Todd; no reference). A cant word; and prob. introduced rather from Low than High German. — Low G. queer, across; quere, obliquity. In Awdley's Fraternity of Vagabonds, ed. Furnivall, p. 4, 'a quire fellow' is one who has just come out of prison; cf. the slang phrase 'to be in queer street'; and Low G. in der quere ligen, to lie across, lie queerly. + G. quer, transverse; querkopf, a queer fellow. Prob. allied to the curious Lat. uarius, crooked; see Prevaricate. Der. queer-ly, queer-ness.

QUELL, to crush, subdue, allay. (E.) The causal of quail. M. E. quellen, to kill; Chaucer, C. T. 12788. — A. S. cwellan, to kill, Grein, i. 174. + O. Sax. quellian, to torment; causal of quulan, to suffer martyrdom; Du. kwellen, to plague, vex. + Icel. kwelja, to torment. + Swed. quälja, to torment. + Dan. quæle, to strangle, choke; to plague, torment. β. The orig. sense was probably 'to choke;' from the primitive KWAL; for which see Quail (1). ¶ Frequently said to be a doublet of kill, but the evidence is strongly against this unlikely identification; the two words have different vowel-sounds, and have nothing but the final ll in common. The sense of quell is 'to choke,' to torture; that of kill, to 'knock on the head.'

QUENCH, to extinguish, check, put out. (E.) M. E. quenchen, Wyclif, Matt. iii. 12. Quench is formed from an obsolete verb quink, to be put out, to be extinguished; just as drench is from drink. — A. S. cwencan, in the comp. acwencan, to extinguish utterly, Mark, ix. 44. Causal of A. S. cwincan; the pt. t. ð-cwanc (= was extinguished) occurs in a various reading in Elfred, tr. of Beda, b. ii. c. 9, ed. Wheelock. β. Further, the verb cwincan is an extension of a shorter form cwinan, to be extinguished (which is a strong verb, with pt. t. cwin, pp. cwinen); hence 'ðæt fyr cwinen wæs and adwæsed' = the fire was put out and extinguished; Beda, ii. 9 (as above). Cf. O. Fries. kwinka, to be extinguished. Perhaps allied to Skt. ji, to overpower; Fick, i. 570. Der. quench-able, less.

QUERIMONIOUS, fretful, discontented. (L.) 'Most querimoniously confessing;' Denham, A Dialogue (R.) Formed with suffix -ous (= F. -eux, Lat. -osus) from querimonia, a complaint. — Lat. queri, to complain; with Aryan suffixes -man-ya. See Querulous. Der. querimonious-ly, ness.

QUERN, a handmill for grinding grain. (E.) M. E. querne, Chaucer, C. T. 14080. — A. S. cwernn, cwyrn, Matt. xxiv. 41. + Du. kwærn. + Icel. kwærn. + Dan. quærn. + Swed. quærn. + Goth. kwairnus. Cf. Gk. γῆπις, fine meal. Orig. 'that which grinds.' — ✓ GAR, to grind; whence also Corn, q. v. ¶ The word churn is related, but only very remotely; see Churn.

QUERULOUS, fretful. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Engliſhed from Lat. querulus, full of complaints. — Lat. queri, to complain. The pt. t. questus sum points to an older form quesi. + Skt. qvas, to pant, to hiss, to sigh. — ✓ KWAS, to wheeze; whence also E. Wheeze, q. v. Evidently of imitative origin. Der. querulous-ly, ness. And see quarrel (1), querimonious, cry.

QUERY, an enquiry, question. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Formerly quere, as used by Warner, Albion's England, b. vi. c. 30 (R.) Put for quære, seek thou, enquire thou, a p. imp. of Lat. quærere, to seek.

β. Quærere is for quæsere (= quai-sere); cf. Lat. quæso, I beg. Allied to Skt. chi, to search. — ✓ KI, to search; Fick, i. 532. Der. query, verb; quer-ist; also quest, q. v., quest-ion, quest-or. Also (from quærere), ac-quire, con-quer, dis-quis-it-ion, ex-quis-ite, in-quire, in-quis-it-ive, per-quis-ite, re-quest, re-quire, re-quis-ite.

QUEST, a search. (F., — L.) In Levins. M. E. queste, Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 648. — O. F. queste, 'a quest, inquiry, search;' Cot. F. quête. — Lat. questita, a thing sought; fem. of quæsitus, pp. of quærere, to seek; see Query.

QUESTION, an inquiry. (F., — L.) M. E. questioun, Wyclif, John, iii. 25. — F. question. — Lat. questionem, acc. of questio, a seeking, a question; formed with suffix -tio from quæs, base of quæsere, old form of quærere, to seek; see Query. Der. question, verb, Hamlet, ii. 2. 244; question-able, id. i. 4. 43; question-able-ness; question-less, Merch. Ven. i. 1. 176; question-ist (Levins). Also questor (Levins), from Lat. quæstor; questor-ship (id.).

QUEUE, a twist of hair formerly worn at the back of the head. (F., — L.) In late use. Added by Todd to Johnson. — F. queue, 'a tail;' Cot. See Cue.

QUIBBLE, an evasion, shift. (C.) 'This is some trick; come, leave your quibblings, Dorothy;' Ben Jonson, Alchemist, iv. 4 (Face, & to Dol). A dimin. of quib, with suffix -le. 'Quib, a taunt or mock,' Coles (Halliwell); but the word is not in ed. 1684 of Coles' Dict. However, quib is merely a weakened form of quip, and quibble = quibble, a slight quip or taunt, hence an evasive remark. See Quip, which appears to be of Celtic origin. β. The peculiar sense of evasion is prob. due to some confusion with quiddity and quillet; see those words. Der. quibble, verb; quibbl-er.

QUICK, living, moving, lively. (E.) M. E. quik, Chaucer, C. T. 1017. — A. S. cwic, sometimes cuc, Grein, i. 175. + Du. kwik. + Icel. kvikr, kykr. + Dan. quik. + Swed. quick. + Prov. G. queck, quick, quick, lively (Flügel). β. All from a Teut. base KWIK, lively, which took the place of an older form KWIWA; this older form occurs in Goth. kwius, living, cognate with Lat. uiuus, Lith. gywas, Russ. jivoi, alive, living. — ✓ GIW (GIU, GIV), to live; whence Skt. jiv, to live, Lat. uiuere, and Gk. βίος, life. See Vivid. Der. quick, sb., quick-ly, quick-ness; quick-time; quick-sand, 3 Hen. VI, v. 4. 26, quick-silver, Chaucer, C. T. 16240; quick-set, i. e. set or planted alive; quick-sighted. And see quick-en. ¶ The prov. E. quich-grass = quick-grass; it is also spelt couch-grass, where couch answers to the occasional A. S. cuc. [†]

QUICKEN, to make alive. (E.) M. E. quikenen, quiknen, Wycliffe, John, vi. 64; Chaucer, C. T. 15949. The true form is quik-nen, and the suffix -nen = Goth. -nan, which was used only to form intransitive verbs; so that the true sense of quiknen is rather 'to become alive,' as in King Lear, iii. 7. 39. But this distinction was early lost, and the suffixes -ien, -nen were used as convertible. The Goth. keeps them distinct, having gakiu-jan, to make alive, gakiu-nan, to become alive. From A. S. cwic, alive; see Quick.

QUID, a mouthful of tobacco. (E.) A Kentish variety of cud; 'Quid, the cud' (Halliwell). See Cud. It occurs in Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731; and see E. D. S. Gloss. C. 3.

QUIDDITY, a trifling, nicety, cavil. (L.) A term of the schools. 'Their predicaments, . . quiddities, hecseities, and relatives' Tyndal, Works, p. 104, col. 1, l. 8 (and in Spec. of Eng., ed. Skeat, p. 176, l. 318). Engliſhed from Low Lat. quidditas, the essence or nature of a thing, concerning which we have to investigate what it is (quid est). — Lat. quid, what, neuter of quis, who; see Who.

QUIESCENT, still, at rest. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. quiescent, stem of pres. part. of quiescere, to be at rest. See Quiet. Der. quiescence.

QUIET, still, at rest, tranquil. (L.) 'A quyet and a pesible lijf,' Wycliffe, 1 Tim. ii. 2; where the Vulgate has quietam. [Rather from Lat. than from F.; the F. form is Coy, q. v.] — Lat. quietus, quiet; orig. pp. of *quiere, only used in the inceptive form quiescere, to rest.

β. From a base hi-á, extended from ✓ KI, to lie, to rest, whence Skt. śi, to lie still, Gk. κείμαι, I lie still, rest. See Cemetery, Coy. Der. quiet, sb., M. E. quiete, Chaucer, C. T. 9269; quiet, verb, 1 Hen. VI, iv. 1. 115; quiet-ly, quiet-ness; quiet-ude, from Late Lat. quietudo (White), a contraction for *quiescitudo. Also quiet-us, a final settlement, from Lat. quietus, adj.; quiet-ism, quiet-ist. From Lat. quiescere we also have ac-quiet-ise; and see re-quiem, quit, quite, re-quite, ac-quit, dis-quiet. Doublet, coy.

QUILL (1), a feather of a bird, a pen. (F., — O. H. G.) M. E. quille, quylle. 'Quylle, a stalke, Calamus;' Prompt. Parv. Halliwell gives: 'Quill, the stalk of a cane or reed, the faucet of a barrel.' This is a difficult and doubtful word; it is most likely that the sense of 'faucet' or 'stalk' is an old one, and that the bird's quill was so named from its tapering shape, like that of the conical-shaped peg or pin used in the old game of nails or kayles. — F. quille, 'a keyle, a big peg or pin of wood, used at ninepins or keyles;' Cot. In use in the 15th cent. (Littre.) [A distinct word from F. quille, a keel.] — O. H. G. kegil (Littre), or chegil (Scheler), mod. G. kegel, a nine-pin, skittle, cone, bobbin. See Nails. β. There may have been some confusion with O. Du. kiel, a wedge (Kilian); cf. G. keil, a wedge, bolt. Mahn refers quill to Irish cuille, a quill (prob. borrowed from E.), or to Irish cuille, a reed, which is not very likely. γ. Any connection with Lat. calamus, a reed, or caulis, a stalk, is out of the question; see Haulm, Cole.

QUILL (2), to pleat a ruff. (F., — O. H. G. or L.) 'What they called his cravat, was a little piece of white linen quilled with great exactness;' Tatler, no. 257, Nov. 30, 1710. 1. Supposed to be so called from being folded as if over quills; perhaps the quills used were rounded splinters of wood. See Quill (1). 2. Wedgwood quotes from Métiévier the Guernsey word enquiller, to pleat, gather, wrinkle, which Métiévier derives from O. F. cuillir, to gather, collect, cull; whence also E. Cull, q. v. I do not know which is right.

QUILLET, a sly trick in argument. (L.) 'His quiddities, his quilllets;' Hamlet, v. i. 108. Certainly a contraction of quidlibet, notwithstanding the assertion of Nares that quodlibet was the [usual] term in the schools. Wedgwood quotes from a late edition of Florio [it is not in ed. 1598] the O. Ital. quilibetto, 'a quidlibet.' And Cotgrave has: 'Quolibet, a quirk, or quiddity;' evidently from quodlibet. A quiddlibet was probably the same as quodlibet, which Wedgwood explains by 'a question in the schools where the person challenged might choose his side.' Quiddity is a word of the same class. — Lat. quid libet, which do you choose? lit. which pleases you? See Quiddity and Liberal.

QUILT, a bed-cover, a case filled with feathers, &c. (F., — L.) M. E. quilt, quylte. 'Quylte of a bedde, Culcitra;' Prompt. Parv. — O. F. cuilt (12th cent., Littré, s. v. couette), also spelt cotre (Burguy), and coudre, as in coutrepointier, to quilt (Cotgrave). — Lat. culcita (also culcitra, giving O. F. cotre), a cushion, mattress, pillow, quilt. Root uncertain. Der. quilt, verb. And see Counterpane (1). [†]

QUINARARY, consisting of or arranged in fives. (L.) The Lat. form quinarius, as a sb., is in Phillips, ed. 1706; quinary is in Cudworth's Intellectual System, p. 625 (R.) — Lat. quinarius, arranged by fives. — Lat. quini, pl. adj., five each. Put for *quino-ni, where quino = quinque, five, which is cognate with E. Five, q. v. See Quinquagesima.

QUINCE, a fruit with an acid taste. (F., — L., — Gk.) In Romeo, iv. 4. 2. Spelt quince in Prompt. Parv. Probably from O. F. coignasse, 'a female quince, or pear-quince, the greatest kind of quince;' Cot. Cf. O. F. coignacier, 'the great, or pear, quince-tree;' id. In any case the word is certainly an extension of quyne = M. E. coine, or coin, a quince, Rom. of the Rose, 1374. 'Quyne-able tre, coingz;' Palsgrave, p. 914; he also gives quynce, p. 260. — O. F. coin, mod. F. coing, a quince. Cf. Prov. codoing, Ital. cologna (Littré). The Ital. form (says Littré) is from Lat. cydonia, the Prov. and F. forms from Lat. cydonium. — Gk. κυδωνία, a quince-tree; κυδωνιον μήλον, a quince, lit. a Cydonian apple. — Gk. Κυδωνία, Κυδωνία, Cydonia, one of the chief cities of Crete, named from the Κυδωνες (Cydones), a Cretan race. See Smith's Classical Dict. [†]

QUINCUNX, an arrangement by fives. (L.) Applied to trees, &c., arranged like the five spots on the side of a die marked 5. See Sir T. Browne, Garden of Cyrus, c. 5. § 12. — Lat. quincunx, an arrangement like five spots on a die. — Lat. *quinc, for quinque, five, cognate with E. Five; and uncia, an ounce, hence a small mark, spot on a die; see OUNCE (1).

QUININE, extract of Peruvian bark. (F., — Peruvian.) Borrowed from F. quinine, an extension (with suffix -ine = Lat. -ina) from F. quina. — Peruvian kina, or kina-kina, or quina-quina. Near Loxa, S. of Quito, the tree is called quina-quina, or bark of barks; Peruvian Bark, by C. R. Markham.

QUINQUAGESIMA, the second Sunday before Lent. (L.) So called because about 50 days before Easter. — Lat. quinquagesima (dies), fiftieth day; fem. of quinquagesimus, fiftieth. — Lat. *quinqua, for quinque, five; and -gesimus, for *-gensimus, *-censimus, *-centimus, contracted form of *de-centimus, tenth, from decem, ten. See Five and Ten.

QUINQUANGULAR, having five angles. (L.) Formed from quinque, five, just as quadrangular is from quadrus, fourfold. See Quadrangular.

QUINQUIENNIAL, lasting five years, recurring in five years.

(L.) Formed from quinque, five, and annus, a year; see Biennial.

QUINSEY, inflammatory sore throat. (F., — Gk.) 'The throting quinsy;' Dryden, Palamon, 1682. A contraction of quinancy, spelt quinancie in Minshew, ed. 1627. — O. F. quinancie (16th cent., Littré), mod. F. esquinacie. Cot. gives esquinacie, 'the squincy or squinancy,' and squinance, 'the squinancy or squinzie.'

β. Formed with prefixed s from Gk. κυνόγχοι, lit. 'a dog-throttling,' applied to a bad kind of sore throat. — Gk. *κυν, stem of κύων, a dog, cognate with E. Hound; and *γχο, to choke, throttle, from ANGH, nasalised form of AGH, to choke; see Awe. [†]

QUINTAIN, a post with arms, set up for beginners in tilting to run at. (F., — L.?) In As You Like It, i. 2. 263. 'When, if neede were, they could at quintain run;' Sidney, Arcadia, b. i (Lamon, l. 55). — F. quintaine, 'a quintane, or whintane, for country youths to run at;' Cot. Cf. Prov. quintana, Ital. quintana (Littré). Origin uncertain; but we find Low Lat. quintana, a quintain, also a certain measure of land, also a part of a street where carriages could pass (Ducange). β. The form of the word is so explicit that I cannot see why we should hesitate to connect it with Lat. quintana, a street in the camp, which intersected the tents of the two legions in such a way as to separate the fifth manipule from the sixth, and the fifth turma from the sixth; here was the market and business-place of the camp (White). We can hardly doubt that this public place in the camp was sometimes the scene of athletic exercises and trials of skill, whence it is an easy step to the restriction of the term to one particular kind of exhibition of martial activity. It is further certain that quintana is the fem. of quintanus, formed with suffix -anus from quintus, fifth, which is for *quinc-tus, from quinque, five. See Five.

QUINTAL, a hundredweight. (F., — Span., — Arab., — L.)

'Twelve pence upon euerie quintall of copper;' Hackluyt's Voyages, i. 137, l. 18. Spelt quyntall, Palsgrave. — F. quintal, 'a quintal or hundred-weight;' Cot. — Span. quintal, a quintal, hundred-weight — Arab. qintār, a weight of 100 pounds of twelve ounces each; Rich. Dict. pp. 1150, 737. — Lat. centum, a hundred; see Cent.

QUINTESSENCE, the pure essence of anything. (F., — L.) 'Aristoteles . . . hath put down . . . for elements, foure; and for the fifth, quintessence, the heavenly body which is immutable;' Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 662 (R.) And see The Book of Quinte Essence or the Fifth Being, about A. D. 1460, ed. Furnivall, 1866 (E. E. T. S.). — F. quintessence, 'a quintessence, the vertue, force, or spirit of a thing extracted;' Cot. — Lat. quinta essentia, fifth essence or nature. — Lat. quinta, fem. of quintus (put for *quinc-tus), from quinque, five; see Five. And see Essence. ¶ The idea is older than Aristotle; cf. the five Skt. bhūta's, or elements, which were earth, air, fire, water, and æther. Thus the fifth essence is æther, the most subtle and highest; see Benfey, Skt. Dict. p. 658, col. 1.

QUINTILLION, the fifth power of a million. (L.) Coined from Lat. quint-us, fifth; and -illion, part of the word million; see Quadrillion, Billion.

QUINTUPLE, fivefold. (F., — L.) In Sir T. Browne, Cyrus' Garden, c. 5. § 3. — F. quintuple, in use in the 16th cent. (Littré). — Lat. *quintuplus, a coined word; formed from quintus, fifth, just as duplus is from duo, two. See Quintessence and Double. Der. quintuple, verb.

QUIP, a taunt, cavil. (C.) 'This was a good quip that he gave unto the Jewes;' Latimer, Sermon on Rom. xiii. an. 1552 (R.) Levins has quip in the sense of whip. Like quirk, the word is of Celtic origin. — W. chwiip, a quick flirt or turn; cf. chwiipyn, a quick turn; chwiipio, to whip. To move briskly. Cf. Gael. cuip, to whip. β. From a Celtic base KWIP, answering to Teut. HWIP, to whip. See Whip. Der. quibb-le, q. v.

QUIRE (1), a collection of so many sheets of paper, often 24. (F., — L.) In the Ancien Riwe, p. 248, last line but 1, we find the curious form cuaer, in the sense of a small book or pamphlet. — O. F. quaier (13th cent., Littré); spelt quayer, cayer, in Cotgrave, who explains it 'a quire of written paper, a peece of a written booke.' Mod. F. cahier. β. Of uncertain origin, but probably Latin. Diez derives it from *codicarium, a dimin. form from *codic, stem of codex, a codex, book; see Code. γ. But it is more usually derived from Low Lat. quaternum, a collection of four leaves, a small quire, from Lat. quaterni, nom. pl., four each, which from quatuor, four, cognate with E. Four. We actually find the O. F. quaer as a gloss to Low Lat. quaternus, Wright's Vocab. i. 116; Ital. quaderno, a quire of paper; and the instance of F. enfer from Lat. infernum shews that the suffix -num might easily be lost. ¶ Not from Lat. quaternio, which could never suffer a loss of the latter syllables.

QUIRE (2), a band of singers. (F., — L., — Gk.) Another spelling of Choir, q. v. Der. quir-ister (for chorister); Nares.

QUIRK, a cavil, subtle question. (C.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. The orig. sense seems to have been 'a quick turn.' Formed, with a suffix -k (as in stal-k, verb, from steal, smir-k from smile), from a base quir-. This base is rather Celtic than E., appearing in W. chwiori, to turn briskly, chwyr, strong impulse, chwyrnu, to whirl, whiz, hum; whence chwiured, a quirk, a piece of craft, chwiuredu, to be crafty, to play tricks. Cf. Gael. cuireid, a turn, wile, trick, referred by Macleod to car, to turn.

β. I suspect the word to be really of imitative origin, from a Celtic base KWIR, answering to Teut. HWIR, as seen in E. whir. See Whir. And see Quip. Der. quirk-ish. ¶ This word is sometimes derived from quer, but it appears to have been in use much earlier, and therefore could not have been suggested by it.

QUIT, freed, released, discharged from. (F., — L.) In the phr. 'to be quit,' the word is really an adj., though with the force of a pp. The verb to quit is derived from it, not vice versa; as is easily seen by comparing the F. quitter (O. F. quiter), with F. quitter (O. F. quite). In the phrases 'quit rent' and 'quit claim,' the old adjectival use is retained, and it is unnecessary to insert a hyphen, as in writing quit-claim. Moreover, the adj. was introduced into E. before the verb, appearing as cuite in the Ancien Riwe, p. 6, l. 12. Cf. 'Tho was Wyllam our kyng all quyt of thulke fon,' i. e. all free of those foes; Rob. of Glouc. p. 392. [Hence was derived the verb quyten, to satisfy a claim, pay for. 'He mai quiten hire ale' = he will pay for her ale, Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 190, l. 77; and see Chaucer, C. T. 772.] — O. F. quite, 'discharged, quit, freed, released;' Cot. Mod. F. quitter; Span. quito, quit. — Lat. quietum, acc. of quietus, at rest, hence free, satisfied. Thus quit is a shorter form of quiet. See Quiet. Der. quit, verb, from O. F. quiter, 'to quit,' Cot. (mod. F. quitter). And hence quitt-ance, M. E. quitaunce, spelt cuitaunce in Ancien Riwe, p. 126, l. 7, from O. F. quittance, 'an acquittance,' Cot., = Low Lat. quietantia. And see quite.

QUITE, entirely. (F., -L.) M. E. quite, quyte. 'And chaced him out of Norweie quyte and clene;' Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 50. This is merely an adverbial use of the M. E. adj. quyte, now spelt quit. Thus the sense is 'freely,' hence 'entirely.' See Quit.

QUIVER (1), to tremble, shiver. (E.) Possibly allied to quaver, q. v. It does not appear very early, yet is probably old. 'A quiver-ing dart;' Spenser, F. Q. iii. 5. 19. 'I quyver, I shake;' Palsgrave. Allied to the obsolete adj. quiver, full of motion, brisk, Shak. 2 Hen. IV. iii. 2. 301; which occurs, spelt cwiver (= cwiver) in the Ancien Riwle, p. 140, l. 21; also as A. S. cwifer, in the comp. adv. cwiferlice, anxiously, eagerly (Bosworth). β. The base is KWIF, answering to Aryan GIP, perhaps from ✓ GI, to quicken (Fick, i. 570), and thus ultimately related to Quick; and see Quaver, Quake. Cf. O. Du. kuiven, kuiveren, to quiver (Kilian).

QUIVER (2), a case for arrows. (F., -O. H. G.) 'Quyver, Pharetra;' Prompt. Parv. -O. F. cuiure, cuevre, older form couire, a quiver (Burguy). And see Diez, s. v. couire. -O. H. G. kohhar (cited by Diez), mod. G. köcher, a quiver. Cognate with A. S. cocer, cocer, Gen. xxvii. 3. Root unknown. Der. quiver-ed.

QUIXOTIC, absurdly chivalrous. (Spanish.) Formed as adj., with suffix -ic, from the name Don Quixote, or Quijote, the hero of the famous novel by Cervantes. (The O. Span. x is now commonly written as j; the sound of the letter is guttural, something like that of G. ch.)

QUOIF, a cap or hood. (F., -M. H. G.) In Shak. Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 226. The same word as Coif, q. v.

QUOIN, a technical term, orig. a wedge. Used in architecture, gunnery, and printing. (F., -L.) The orig. sense is 'wedge;' and, as a verb, 'to wedge up.' 'A printers quoin, Cuneus;' Levins, 215. 17. Merely another spelling of Coin, q. v. A like change of c to qu occurs in quait. Der. quoin, verb.

QUOIT, COIT, a ring of iron for throwing at a mark in sport. (F., -L.?) The older spelling is coit. 'Coyte, Petreluda; Coyter, or caster of a coyte, Petreludus;' Prompt. Parv. 'Casting of coitis, Pecoock's Repressor (A. D. 1449); in Spec. of Eng., ed. Skeat, p. 51, l. 70. Of uncertain origin. β. We find W. coetan, a quoit (where W. oe = E. o nearly); but this is prob. borrowed from E., having no radical, and therefore does not help us.

γ. But it is clear, on the other hand, that the Lowland Scotch coit, to juggle or push about, occurring in Fordun's Scotichronicon, ii. 376, is exactly the O. F. coiter. We there read of a woman who 'Gangis coitand in the curt, homit like a gait' [goat].

δ. The spelling coit suggests a F. origin; and the word is prob. connected with the curious O. F. coiter, to press, to push, to hasten, incite, instigate (Burguy); the Span. coitar is to hurry oneself, to hasten. If the O. F. coiter could have had the sense 'to drive,' as seems probable, we may look on a quoit as being a thing driven or whirled.

ε. The origin of O. F. coiter is very doubtful; perhaps from Lat. coactare, to force, from coactus, pp. of cogere; see Cogent. ζ. The O. Du. kote, 'a huckle-bone' (Hexham), can hardly be related, on account of the diphthong. Der. quoit, verb, 2 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 206.

QUORUM, a number of members of any body sufficient to transact business. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. It was usual to enumerate the members forming a committee, of whom (in Lat. quorum) a certain number must be present at a meeting. Lat. quorum is the gen. pl. of qui, cognate with E. who; see Who.

QUOTA, a part or share assigned to each member of a company. (Ital., -L.) Used by Addison (Todd; no reference). -Ital. quota, a share. -Lat. quota (pars), how great (a part), how much; fem. of quotus, how many. -Lat. quot, how many; extended from quo-, crude form of qui, cognate with E. Who; with suffix -ta. Der. (from Lat. quotus) quote, q. v., quoti-dian; (from Lat. quot) quot-ient.

QUOTE, to cite, repeat the words of any one. (F., -L.) In Shak. Hamlet, ii. 1. 112. Sometimes written cote (Schmidt). -O. F. quoter, 'to quote;' Cot. Mod. F. coter, which is also in Cotgrave. -Low Lat. quotare, to mark off into chapters and verses; thus the real sense of quote is to give a reference. The lit. sense of quotare is 'to say how many,' with reference to the numbering of chapters. -Lat. quotus, how much, how many; see Quota. Der. quot-able, quot-er, quot-at-ion.

QUOTH, he says, he said. (E.) Properly a pt. t., though sometimes used as a present. The form of the infin. is quæth, only used in the comp. bequeath. M. E. quoth, quod; Chaucer, C. T. 790; and common in both forms. -A. S. cwæðan, to speak, say; pt. t. cwæð, pl. cwædon; pp. cweden; Grein, i. 173. + Icel. kveða; pt. t. kvað, pp. kveðinn. + O. Sax. quæðan. + M. H. G. queden, quoden; pt. t. quat, quot.

β. All from a Teut. base KWATHI, as if from an Aryan base GAT; but we only find Skt. gad, to speak, Lith. žadas, speech, žadeti, to speak, žodis, a word; all from a common ✓ GA, to make a noise; cf. Skt. gai, to sing.

QUOTIDIAN, daily. (F., -L.) M. E. quotidian, spelt cotidian, &

Gower, C. A. ii. 142, last line. -O. F. cotidian (13th cent., Littré); later quotidien, 'daily;' Cot. -Lat. quotidianus, daily. -Lat. quoti-, from quotus, how many; and di-es, a day; with suffix -anus. Hence quotidianus = on however many a day, on any day, daily. See Quota and Diurnal.

QUOTIENT, the result in arithmetical division. (F., -L.; or L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. [Perhaps directly from Latin.] -F. quotient, 'the part which, in the division of a thing among many, falls unto every man's share;' Cot. -Lat. quotiens-, the imaginary stem of Lat. quotiens, which is really an adv., and indeclinable; it means 'how many times.' -Lat. quoi, how many; see Quota.

R.

RABBET, to cut the edges of boards so that they overlap and can be joined together. (F., -L. and G.) M. E. rabet; see Prompt. Parv. 'Many deep rabbotted incisions;' Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 902 (R.) The Halifax gibbet, in Harrison's Descr. of England, b. ii. c. 11, ed. Furnivall, p. 227, is described as having a block of wood 'which dooth ride vp and downe in a slot, rabet, or regall betwene two peeces of timber.' -F. raboter, 'to plane, levell, or laye even;' Cot. He also gives: 'rabot, a joyners plane, a plaisterers beater.' The F. adj. raboteux means 'rugged, knotty, rough.' Littré refers these words to O. F. rabouter, to thrust back, compounded of Lat. re, F. a (= Lat. ad), and boter (later bouter), to thrust. This O. F. verb is, in fact, equivalent to E. re-abut.

β. The notion of abutting or projecting gives the sense of rugged to the adj. raboteux; whilst the notion of removing the roughness is in the verb. See Re- and Abut. γ. At the same time, it is certain that F. rabot, as shewn by Cotgrave's definition, was confused with F. rabat, a beater, connected with rabatre (mod. F. rabatre), lit. to re-abate; for which see Re- and Abate. Even in E., the word rabbit is sometimes spelt rebate.

RABBI, RABBIN, sir, a Jewish title. (L., -Gk., -Heb.) 'Rabi, that is to seye maister;' Wyclif, John, i. 38. -Lat. rabbī (Vulgate). -Gk. ῥαββί; John, i. 38. -Heb. rabbī, lit. my master; from rab, great, or as sb. master, and i, my. We also find Rabboni, John, xx. 16; of similar import. Rabbi was considered a higher title than Rab; and Rabban higher than Rabbi; Smith, Dict. of the Bible, q. v. -Heb. root rábáb, to be great. Cf. Arab. rabb, being great; or, as sb., a master; rabbī, my lord; Rich. Dict. p. 719. The form rabbīn is French. Der. rabbīn-ic-al, rabbīn-ist.

RABBIT, a small rodent quadruped. (O. Low G.?) M. E. rabet, Prompt. Parv. The proper E. word is cony. It is a dimin. form from an older word which is only found in O. Du. robbe, 'a rabet;' Hexham. Perhaps cf. F. rière, the back of a rabbit; Span. and Port. rabo, tail, hind quarters, rebar, to wag the tail.

RABBLE, a noisy crowd, mob. (O. Low G.) Levins has rabil, rable, rablement. Halliwell has: 'rabble, to speak confusedly,' with an example of M. E. rablen used in the same sense; also: 'rabblement, a crowd, or mob.' So named from the noise which they make; cf. O. Du. rabbelen, 'to chatter, trifle, toy;' Hexham. So also prov. G. rabbeln, to chatter, prattle; Flügel. So also Gk. ῥαβδάζειν, to make a noise; whence ῥαπάβα, a dancer, a brawler. -✓ RABH, to make a noise; whence Skt. rambh, to sound, rambhā, the lowing of a cow. The suffix -le gives a frequentative force; a rabble is 'that which keeps on making a noise.' And see Rapparee. Der. rabble-ment (with F. suffix), Jul. César, i. 2. 245.

RABID, mad, furious. (L.) 'All the rabid flight Of winds that ruin ships;' Chapman, tr. of Homer, Odys. b. xii. l. 418. -Lat. rabidus, furious. -Lat. rabere, to rage; see Rage. Der. rabid-ly, -ness.

RACA, a term of reproach. (Chaldee.) Matt. v. 22. 'Critics are agreed in deriving it from the Chaldee rékâ, with the sense of worthless;' Smith, Dict. of the Bible.

RACCOON, RACON, a carnivorous animal of N. America. (N. American.) It occurs in a tr. of Buffon, London, 1792. The name of the animal in Buffon is raton; but this is only a F. corruption of the native name, just as raccoon is an E. corruption. Spelt rackoon in Bailey, 1735. 'Arathkone, a beast like a fox;' in a glossary of Indian words at the end of A Historie of Travaile into Virginia, by Wm. Strachey; ab. 1610-12; published by the Hackluyt Society in 1849. The F. raton is assimilated to F. raton, a rat. (Communicated.)

RACE (1), a trial of speed, swift course, swift current. (E.) M. E. rees, res (with long e), Gower, C. A. i. 335, l. 19; Tale of Gamelyn, l. 543 (Wright), or l. 547 (Six-text); spelt rase, Pricke of Conscience, l. 8938. -A. S. ræs, a rush, swift course; Luke, viii. 33.

+ Icel. rás, a race, running. β. The form of the root is RAS, convertible with ARS, whence Skt. riśh, to flow; the orig. sense seems to be 'current' of a stream, as in E. mill-race. Der. race, verb, A.S. rēsan; race-course, race-horse, rac-er.

RACE (2), a lineage, family, breed. (F.—O. H. G.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 10. 60.—F. race, 'a race, lineage, family'; Cot. Cf. Port. raça, Span. raza, Ital. razza.—O. H. G. reiza, a line, stroke, mark; the notion of 'descent' being represented by that of 'direct line,' as in E. See Diez, who shows that the Romance forms cannot come out of Lat. radix, though it is quite possible that some confusion with radix may have influenced race in some of its usages; see Race (3). β. This O. H. G. reiza is cited by Fick, iii. 309; and is cognate with Icel. reitr, of which the orig. sense was 'a scratch,' der. from rita, to scratch, cognate with E. Write. Der. rac-y, q. v.

RACE (3), a root. (F.,—L.) 'A race of ginger'; Wint. Tale, iv. 3. 50; spelt raze, 1 Hen. IV., ii. 1. 27.—O. F. rais, raiz, a root (Burguy); cf. Span. raiz, a root.—Lat. radicem, acc. of radix, a root; see Radix.

RACEME, a cluster. (F.,—L.) A botanical term; borrowed from F. racème, a cluster, in botany.—Lat. racemum, acc. of racēmus, a cluster of grapes; allied to Gk. ράϊς (gen. pay-ōs), a berry, esp. a grape. Der. racem-ed, Doublet, raisin.

RACK (1), a grating above a manger for hay, an instrument of torture; as a verb, to extend on a rack, to torture. (E.?) The word rack is used in a great many senses, see Rack (2), &c., below; and, in several of these, the origin is quite different. The word rack, to torture, is prob. E., but it is remarkable that it is scarcely to be found in early literature, either in that or any other sense. The oldest E. word etymologically connected with rack (1) is Reach, q. v.

β. The radical sense of rack is to extend, stretch out; hence, as a sb., that which is extended or straight, a straight bar (cf. G. rack, a rail, bar); hence, a frame-work, such as the bars in a grating above a manger, a frame-work used as an instrument of torture, a straight bar with teeth in which a cog-wheel can work. Figuratively, to be on the rack is to be in great anxiety; and to rack is to exaggerate (Halliwell). Also a rack-rent is a rent stretched to its full value, or nearly so.

γ. For examples, see 'As though I had been rack-ed,' i. e. tortured; Skelton, Phillip Sparrow, l. 97. 'Galows and racke;' Caxton, tr. of Reynard the Fox, ed. Arber, p. 24. 'A rekke, Præsepe,' i. e. a rack for hay; Prompt. Parv. 'Rekke and manger' = rack and manger; Romance of Partenay, l. 913.

δ. The verb is found in O. Du. racken, 'to rack, to torture'; Hexham. Related words are Icel. rekja, to stretch, trace, rekjja, to strain, rakkr, straight; O. Du. recken, 'to stretch, reach out, also to rack'; Hexham; Swed. rak, straight; G. rack, a rack, rail, prov. G. reck, a scaffold, wooden horse, reckbank, a rack for torture, recke, a stretcher, recken, to stretch; and esp. Low G. rakk, a shelf, as in E. plate-rack, &c.

¶ The great dearth of early quotations suggests that rack (for torture) may have been borrowed from Holland; but the word may, in some senses at least, have been English. For the root, see Bank (2). Doublet, rack. [†]

RACK (2), light vapoury clouds, the clouds generally. (Scand.) 'Still in use in the Northern counties, and sometimes there applied to a mist;' Halliwell. Used in Shak. of floating vapour; see Hamlet, ii. 2. 506, Antony, iv. 14. 10, Sonnet 33, l. 6. So also (probably) in the disputed passage in the Tempest, iv. 156; where Halliwell hesitates, though he gives instances of its use in earlier English. Thus we find: 'As Phebus doeth at mydday in the southe, Whan every rak and every cloudy sky Is voide clene;' Lydgate, MS. Ashmole 39, fol. 51. 'The rac dryuez' = the storm-cloud drives; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 433; a most decisive passage. 'A rak [driving storm] and a roydre wynde;' Destruction of Troy, 1985. 'The windes in the vpper region, which move the clouds above (which we call the racke) and are not perceived below;' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 115. [Frequently confused with reek, but this is quite a different word.] It is rather the same word with wrack, and allied to wreck; but wrack is to be taken in the sense of 'drift,' as rightly explained in Wedgwood.—Icel. rek, drift, motion; given in Vigfusson only in the sense 'a thing drifted ashore;' but Wedgwood cites ísinn er í reki, the ice is driving; skýrek, the rack or drifting clouds; cf. 'racking clouds' = drifting clouds, 3 Hen. VI., ii. 1. 27. From Icel. reka, to drive, toss, thrust, cognate with Swed. vräka, to reject, and E. wreak; see Wreak. Cf. Swed. sheppet vräker, the ship drifts.

RACK (3), to pour off liquor, to subject it to a fermenting process. (F.,—L.?) See Halliwell. In Minshew, ed. 1627, who speaks of 'racket wines, i. e. wines cleansed and purged'.—O. F. raqué; Cotgrave explains vin raqué as 'small, or corse wine, squeezed from the dregs of the grapes, already drained of all their best moisture.' Perhaps from Latin; I suppose raquer = *rasquer, cognate with Span. rascar, to scrape; see Rascal. Cf. Span. rascon, sour. [†]

RACK (4), another spelling of wrack, i. e. wreck. 'To go to rack and ruin,' i. e. to go to wrack; see Milton, P. L. iv. 994. See Wreck.

RACK (5), a short form of Arrack, q. v. Cf. Span. raque, arrack.

RACK (6), &c. We find (6) prov. E. rack, a neck of mutton; from A. S. hracca, neck, according to Somner. Also (7) rack, for reck, to care; see Reck. Also (8) rack, to relate, from A. S. reccan; see Reckon. Also (9) rack, a pace of a horse, (Falsgrave), i. e. a rocking pace; see Rock (2). Also (10) rack, a track, cart-rut; cf. Icel. reka, to drive; see Rack (2).

RACKET (1), RAQUET, a bat with net-work in place of a wooden blade. (F.,—Span.,—Arab.) M. E. racket, in the phrase plain racket, to play at rackets, Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 461. The game of 'fives,' with the hands, preceded rackets; to this day, tennis is called in French paume = game of the palm of the hand.—Span. raqueta, a racket, battle-dore.—Arab. rāhat, the palm of the hand; pl. rāh, the palms; Rich. Dict. p. 714. See Devic, in Supp. to Littre.

RACKET (2), a noise. (C.) One of those homely words which often prove to be of Celtic origin. Lowland Scotch racket, a disturbance, uproar (Jamieson).—Gael. racaid, a noise, disturbance; Irish racan, noise, riot.—Gael. rac, to make a noise like geese or ducks. Of imitative origin. Cf. prov. E. rackle, noisy talk; also rattle, rabble, rapparee.

RACCOON; see Raccoon.

RACY, of strong flavour, spirited, rich. (F.,—O. H. G.; with E. suffix.) Racy undoubtedly means indicative of its origin, due to its breed, full of the spirit of its race; and so is a derivative from Race (2). 'Fraught with brisk racy verses, in which we The soil from whence they came taste, smell, and see;' Cowley, An Answer to a Copy of Verses sent me from Jersey, ll. 7, 8. With respect to a pipe of Canary wine, Greedy asks 'Is it of the right race?'; Massinger, New Way to pay Old Debts, i. 3. 10. Der. raci-ness. ¶ Probably sometimes used with some notion of reference to Lat. radix; but race (2) is not derived from radix, which appears only in Race (3).

RADIAL, RADIANT; see Radius.

RADICAL, RADISH; see Radix.

RADIUS, a ray. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1710. Chiefly used in mathematics.—Lat. radius, a ray; see Ray. Der. radi-al, from F. radial, 'of, or belonging to, the upper and bigger bone of the arme,' Cot., formed with suffix -alis from Lat. radius, sometimes used to mean the exterior bone of the fore-arm. Also radi-ant, spelt radiyunt in Fisher, on the Seven Psalms, Ps. 130, ed. Mayor, p. 231, last line, from radiant, stem of pres. part. of Lat. radiare, to radiate, from radius; and hence radi-ant-ly, radi-ance. Also radi-ate, from Lat. radiatus, pp. of radiare. Also radiat-ion, in Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 125, near the end, from F. radiation, 'a radiant brightness,' Cot., which from Lat. radiationem, acc. of radiatio, a shining, from pp. radiatus.

RADIX, a root, a primitive word, base of a system of logarithms. (L.) Lat. radix (stem radic-), a root; chiefly used as a scientific term. + Gk. ῥαδιξ, a branch, rod. Cognate with E. Wort, q. v. Der. radic-al, spelt radicall in Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 4 (R.), and in his Castle of Helth, b. iii. c. 3, from F. radical, 'radical,' Cot., formed with suffix -al (=Lat. -alis) from radic-, stem of radix; radic-al-ly, radic-al-ness; also radic-le, a little root, a dimin. form from the stem radic-. Also radish, called 'radish roots' by Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 16, from F. radis, 'a raddish root,' Cot.; not a true F. word, but borrowed from Prov. raditz (Littre), from Lat. radicem, acc. of radix. From Lat. radix we also have e-radic-ate and rash (3). Doublets, radish, race (3).

RAFFLE, a kind of lottery. (F.,—G.) M. E. raffe (a game at dice), Chaucer, C. T. Pers. Tale, De Avaritia; Group I., l. 793 (Six-text).—F. raffe (spelt raffle in Cotgrave), 'a game at three dice, wherein he that throwes all three alike, winnes whatsoever is set; also, a rifting,' Cot.—F. raffer, 'to catch, or seize on violently,' Cot.—G. raffeln, to snatch up; frequentative of raffen, 'to raff, sweep, snatch away, carry off hastily,' Flügel. Cognate with Icel. krapa, to hurry; see Rape (1), Rap (2). Der. raffle, verb.

RAFT, a collection of spars or planks, tied together to serve as a boat. (Scand.) M. E. raft; spelt rafte, and used in the sense of 'spar' or 'rough beam'; Avowing of Arthur, st. 25, in Robson's Met. Rom. p. 69. The orig. sense is 'rafter'.—Icel. rafr (pron. rafr, in which r is merely the sign of the nom. case), a rafter; Dan. raft, a rafter; see Rafter.

RAFTER, a beam to support a roof. (E.) M. E. rafter, Chaucer, C. T. 992.—A. S. rafter, Ælfred, tr. of Beda, b. iii. c. 16. An extension (with Aryan suffix -RA) from the base RAFT appearing in Dan. raft, Icel. rafr (rafr), a rafter, beam. Again, Dan. raft is an extension (with suffix -ia) from the base RAF appearing in Icel. ráf, rafr, a roof, which is cognate with O. H. G. ráfo, M. H. G. rávo, a spar, a rafter. The orig. sense is 'that which covers.'—✓ RAP, to cover; whence Gk. ῥοφος, a roof; see Fick, i. 741, iii. 251. Der. rafter, verb. And see raft. It does not seem to be allied to roof, which has an initial h; A. S. hrōf.

RAG, a shred of cloth. (E.) M. E. ragge, Gower, C. A. i. 100, l. 7. 'A ragged colt' = a shaggy colt. King Alisaunder, 684. We only find A. S. raggie, adj. rough, shaggy; 'Setosa, raggie,' Mone, Quellen, p. 436. + Swed. ragg, rough hair; cf. raggig, shaggy; Swed. dial. raggi, having rough hair, slovenly; Dan. dial. ragg, rough, uneven hair (Aasen), also raggad, shaggy; Icel. rögg, shagginess; raggaðr, shaggy. Thus the orig. sense is that of shagginess, hence of untidiness. Root unknown. ¶ 1. There is no reason for connecting it with A. S. hracod, torn, which is one of Somner's unauthorised words. 2. The Gael. rag, a rag, may be borrowed; for the true sense of Gael. and Irish rag is straight, rigid, cognate with Swed. rak, straight, upright, and allied to E. Rigid. 3. The resemblance to Gk. ῥάκος, a shred of cloth (from ✓ WARK, WRAK, to tear), is also accidental, and proves nothing. Der. ragg-ed, as above, also applied by Gower to a tree, Conf. Amant. ii. 177; ragg-ed-ly, ragg-ed-ness; rag-stone (a rugged stone); rag-wort, spelt rag-wrote in Levins and in a Glossary (in Cockayne's Leechdoms) apparently of the 15th century.

RAGE, fury, violent anger. (F.,—L.) M. E. rage, King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 980.—F. rage.—Lat. rabies, acc. of rabies, madness, rage.—Lat. rabere, to rave, to be mad. + Skt. rabh, to desire vehemently, to act inconsiderately; in Vedic Skt., to seize.—✓ RABH, to seize. Der. rage, verb, rag-ing, rag-ing-ly. Also en-rage, rave.

RAGOUT, a dish of meat highly seasoned. (F.,—L.) Spelt ragoo in Phillips and Kersey, to imitate the F. pronunciation.—F. ragout, a seasoned dish.—F. ragoûter, to bring back to one's appetite, with reference to one who has been ill.—Lat. re-, back; F. a = Lat. ad, to; and gout, taste; see Re-, A- (5), and Gout (2).

RAID, a hostile invasion, inroad. (Scand.) A Northern border word; and merely a doublet of the Southern E. road. Cf. 'That, when they heard my name in any road,' i. e. raid; Greene, George-a-Greene, ed. Dyce, vol. ii. p. 169.—Icel. reið, a riding, a raid; cf. Dan. red, Swed. redd, a road. See Road, Ride. Doublet, road.

RAIL (1), a bar of timber, an iron bar for railways. (O. Low G.) M. E. rail; dat. raile, Gower, C. A. iii. 75, l. 11. Not found in A. S., but regularly contracted from a Low G. form regel; for the loss of g between two vowels, cf. hail (1), rain.—Low G. regel, a rail, a cross-bar; Brem. Wörterbuch; Swed. regel, a bar, bolt; cf. O. Du. richel, rijchel, 'a barre, a let, or a stop, that shutteth a door;' Hexham. + G. riegel, O. H. G. rigil, a rail, bar, bolt, by which a door is fastened. β. This G. sb. is from O. H. G. rihan, to fasten, mod. G. reihen, to put into a row, stitch, string together, connect; the primitive bar of a door was prob. a mere latch. The O. Du. rijchel means 'a line or stroke' as well as a bar (Hexham); and is therefore the dimin. of the sb. which appears as G. reihe, a row, stroke. This G. reihe is connected by Fick with Skt. lekha (for rekha), a line, stroke, mark, from likh (= rikh), to scratch, to write.—✓ RIK, to scratch; Fick, i. 742. Der. rail, verb, rail-ing, rail-road, rail-way.

RAIL (2), to brawl, to use reviling language. (F.,—L.) In Skelton. Poems Against Ganesche; see Skelton, ed. Dyce, i. 130, ll. 119, 137. 'Rayler, a jester, raillour;' Palsgrave.—F. railler, 'to jest, deride, mock;' Cot. Cf. Span. rallar, to grate, scrape, molest, vex; Port. ralar, to scrape. The change of sense from scraping to vexing is in accordance with the usual course of metaphors. Cf. Lat. rallum, an instrument for scraping earth from a plough, which is a contraction for an older form radulum *. The F. railler answers to a low Lat. type radulare *, formed as a dimin. from radere, to scrape. See Rase. (See Littré and Scheler.) Der. raill-er-y = F. raillerie, 'jeasting, merriment, a flowt, or scoff,' Cot. Also rally (2). [†]

RAIL (3), a genus of wading birds. (F.,—Teut.) Given by Phillips, ed. 1710, as 'a sort of bird.' Spelt rayle in Levins, and in the Catholicon Anglican (cited by Wheatley).—O. F. rasle, 'a rattling in the throat; also, the fowle called a rayle;' Cot. Mod. F. rale. Littré notes raale as the 14th cent. spelling; also that the Picard form is reille, shewing that the E. word agrees rather with the Picard than the usual F. form. β. No doubt the bird was named from its cry; cf. O. F. raller, 'to rattle in the throat,' Cot.; mod. F. raler. Of Teut. origin; cf. O. Du. ratelen, 'to rattle, or make a noise,' Hexham; see Rattle. γ. So also O. Du. rallen, rellen, 'to make a noise;' een rel, 'a noise, a cracking, or a rustling,' Hexham; the verb is merely a contracted form of ratelen, as in Dan. ralle, Norw. radla, to rattle. Cf. G. ralle, a rail, land-rail, corn-crake; Swed. ralla, to chatter, rallfägel, a landrail. [†]

RAIL (4), part of a woman's night-dress. (E.) Put for hrail. Obsolete; see Halliwell. 'Rayle for a woman's necke, creveschief, en quartire doubles;' Palsgrave. M. E. rezel, Owl and Nightingale, 562; see hræzel in Stratmann.—A. S. hrægl, hregl, swaddling-clothes, Luke, ii. 12. + O. Fries. hreil, reil, a garment. + O. H. G. hregil, a garment, dress. Root unknown.

RAIMENT, clothing. (F.,—L. and Scand.; with F. suffix.) 'With ruffled rayments;' Spenser, F. Q. i. 6. 9. M. E. raiment, Plowman's Tale, pt. iii. st. 30 (before A. D. 1400). Short for arraiment, of which the M. E. form was araiment, and the initial a easily fell away. 'Rayment, or arayment, Ornatus;' Prompt. Parv. Cf. O. F. arrèment, 'good array, order, equipage;' Cot. We find also array as a sb., Chaucer, C. T. 6509, with the shorter form ray, as in 'Hoc stragulum, ray,' in a list of Nomina Vestimentorum; Wright's Vocab. i. 238, col. 1. See Array.

RAIN, water from the clouds. (E.) M. E. rein; spelt reyne, P. Plowman, B. xiv. 66.—A. S. regn, frequently contracted to ren, Grein, i. 371. + Du. regen. + Icel., Dan., and Swed. regn. + G. regen. + Goth. riqn. β. All from a Teut. type REGNA, rain; Fick, iii. 259. Curtius connects Goth. riqn with Lat. rigare, to moisten, Gk. ῥίγειν, to wet. The root is uncertain. Der. rain, verb, A. S. hregnian, regnian, Matt. v. 45 (Northumb. version); rain-y, A. S. renig, Grein, i. 372; rain-bow, A. S. renboga, Gen. ix. 13; rain-guage. And see ir-rig-ate, em-broc-a-tion.

RAINDEER, the same as Reindeer, q. v.

RAISE, to lift up, exalt. (Scand.) A Scand. word; the E. form is rear. M. E. reisen, Wyclif, John, xi. 11; spelt reissen, Ormulum, 15599.—Icel. reisa, to raise, make to rise; causal of risa, to rise. So also Dan. reise, Swed. resa, to raise, though these languages do not employ the simple verb. + Goth. raisjan, causal of reisan. See Rise. Doublet, rear. [†]

RAISIN, a dried grape. (F.,—L.) M. E. reisin; spelt reysin, Wyclif, Judges, viii. 2 (later version); King Alisaunder, 5193.—O. F. raisin, 'a grape, raisin, bunch, or cluster of grapes;' Cot. Cf. Span. racimo, a bunch of grapes.—Lat. racemum, acc. of racemus, a bunch of grapes; see Raceme. Doublet, raceme.

RAJAH, a king, prince. (Skt.) In Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 53, ed. 1665. Of Skt. origin; from Skt. rájan, a king. In compounds rája is substituted for rájan; as in ádirája, primeval king. The Skt. rájan is allied to Lat. rex; see Regal.

RAKE (1), an instrument for scraping things together, smoothing earth, &c. (E.) M. E. rake, Chaucer, C. T. 289.—A. S. raca, to translate Lat. rastrum in Ælfric's Gloss., l. 9. + Du. rakel, a dimin. form. + Icel. reka, a shovel. + Dan. rage, a poker. + Swed. raka, an oven-rake. + G. rechen, a rake. Cf. Lat. ligo, a mattock. β. From the notion of collecting or heaping up. The root appears in Goth. rikan (pt. t. rak), to collect, heap up, Rom. xii. 20; cognate with Lat. legere, Gk. λέγειν, to collect.—✓ RAG, to collect. See Legend. Der. rake, verb, A. S. racian (Somner).

RAKE (2), a wild, dissolute fellow. (Scand.) M. E. rakel, rash, Chaucer, C. T. 17238; Allit. Poems, C. 526. [This word was corrupted into rake-hell; see Trench, Eng. Past and Present, and 4 examples in the additions to Nares by Halliwell and Wright. And it was finally shortened to rake, as at present. Levins has both rakyl, adj. rascally, and the corrupted form rakehell. Rakehell was sometimes arbitrarily altered to rake-shame. 'Rake, or Rake-shame, a base rascally fellow;' Phillips, ed. 1710.] β. The same word as Swed. dial. rakkel, a vagabond, connected with rakla, to wander, rove, frequent. form of raka, to run hastily (Rietz). Cf. O. Swed. racka, to run about; whence also O. Swed. racka, a kind of dog, M. E. rache. So also Icel. reikall, wandering, unsettled, from reika, to wander; prov. E. rake, to wander. Der. rak-ish, rak-ish-ly.

RAKE (3), the projection of the extremities of a ship beyond the keel; the inclination of a mast from the perpendicular. (Scand.) 'In sea-language, the rake of a ship is so much of her hull or main body, as hangs over both the ends of her keel;' Phillips, ed. 1710. Evidently from rake, to reach; Halliwell. Of Scand. origin; preserved in Swed. dial. raka, to reach; raka fram, to reach over, project, like Dan. rage, to project, protrude, jut out; see raka (3) in Rietz. Rake is a doublet of E. reach, sb. See Reach. Doublet, reach.

RAKEHELL, a rascal. (Scand.) See Rake (2).

RALLY (1), to gather together again, reassemble. (F.,—L.) Properly a trans. verb; also used as intransitive. Spelt rallie in Cotgrave. It stands for re-alley; and Spenser uses re-allie nearly in the same sense as rally; F. Q. vii. 6. 23.—F. rallier, 'to rallie;' Cot.—Lat. re-, again; ad, to; and ligere, to bind; see Re- and Ally. ¶ The form rely in Barbour's Bruce, iii. 34, &c., is used in the same sense; and is the same word, with the omission of Lat. ad.

RALLY (2), to banter. (F.,—Teut.) 'Rally, to play and droll upon; to banter or jeer;' Phillips, ed. 1710. He also gives: 'Rallery, pleasant drolling.' Here rallery is another form of railery, and to rally is merely another form of to rail, in later use, and due to an attempt to bring the E. word closer to F. rallier. See Rail (2).

RAM, a male sheep. (E.) M. E. ram, Chaucer, C. T. 550.—A. S. ram, rom; Grein. + Du. ram. + G. ramm. Cf. Skt. ram, to sport,

&c.; rafi, passion. Der. ram, verb, to butt as a ram, hence to thrust violently forward, M. E. rammen, Prompt. Parv., p. 422. Also ramm-ish, fetid, Chaucer, C. T. 16355. Also ram-rod, ramm-er.

65 The Icel. ramr, strong, shews merely a derived sense.

RAMBLE, to stray, rove, roam. (E.) The frequentative form of roam, or rather of the prov. E. rame, which is its equivalent. 'Rame, to gad about, to sprawl, to spread out too much;' Holderness Glossary (E.D.S.) It does not occur very early, and was prob. a dialectal (Northern) word, taken up into the literary language. 'Nor is this lower world but a huge Inn, And men the rambling passengers;' Howell, Poema, prefixed to his Familiar Epistles, and dated Jan. 1, 1641. And in Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3 (ed. Bell, vol. ii. p. 161, l. 34). The b is excrement; and ram-b-le is for ramm-le. 'Rammle, to ramble;' Whitby Glossary. See ROAM. ¶ Perhaps it has been somewhat influenced by the words ram and romp; the metaphorical sense 'to rave,' i. e. to wander, presents no difficulty. Der. ramble, sb., rambl-er, rambl-ing.

RAMIFY, to divide into branches. (F., -L.) 'To ramify and send forth branches;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 5. part 6. - F. ramifier, 'to branch, put out branches;' Cot. Formed as if from Lat. *ramificare; from rami = ramo, crude form of ramus, a branch; and -ficare, due to facere, to make. β. Probably ramus = rad-mus; allied to Gk. ῥάδαμος, a young branch, ῥάδις, a branch, and to Lat. radix. See RADIX. Der. ramificat-ion (as if from Lat. *pp. ramificatus, whence sb. ramificatio-io). Also (from Lat. ram-us) ram-ous, ram-ose, ram-e-ous.

RAMP, to leap or bound, properly, to climb, scramble, rear. (F., -Teut.) 'Ramp, to rove, frisk or jump about, to play gambols or wanton tricks;' Phillips, ed. 1706; and in Palsgrave. Not much used, except in the deriv. rampant. M. E. rampen, used by Chaucer in the sense 'to rage, be furious with anger;' C. T. 13910; cf. mod. E. romp, which is the same word. Gower uses rampend, rearing, said of a dragon, in the same way as the F. pp. rampant; C. A. iii. 74, l. 22. Cf. Prick of Conscience, 2225. - F. ramper, 'to creep, run, crawl, or traile itself along the ground; also, to climb;' Cot. β. From a Teut. source. Cf. Bavarian rampfen, explained by Schmeller, ii. 96, by the G. raffen, to snatch. Scheler, following Diez, says that the old sense of F. ramper was to clamber, preserved in mod. F. rampe, a flight of steps; and that it is allied to Ital. rampa, a claw, gripe, rampare, to claw, and rampo, a grappling-iron. γ. The Ital. rampare (appearing in Prov. in the form rapar) is, in fact, a nasalised form of rappare, only used in the comp. arrappare, to snatch up, carry off, seize upon; and the base is Teut. RAP, to be in haste, found in Low G. rappen, to snatch hastily (Bremen Wörterbuch), Dan. rappe, to hasten, make haste, Dan. rap, quick, Swed. rappa, to snatch, rapp, brisk, G. raffen, to snatch. δ. Probably an initial h has been lost; cf. Icel. hrapaðr, hurry, hrapa, to rush headlong, to hurry. See RAP (2). Der. ramp-ant, chiefly used of a lion rampant, as in Skelton, Against the Scottes, 135, from F. rampant, pres. part. of ramper; hence rampant-ly, rampant-y.

RAMPART, a mound surrounding a fortified place. (F., -L.) We frequently find also rampire, rampier, or ramper. Spelt rampyre, Tottell's Miscellany, ed. Arber, p. 172, l. 18 (Assault of Cupid, st. 5); rampart, Gascoigne, Fruites of Warre, st. 45. Rampire stands for rampar (without the final t). - O. F. remparier, rempar, 'a rampier, the wall of a fortress;' Cot. Cf. remparer, 'to fortifie, enclose with a rampier;' id. β. The F. rempar is the true form; in rempart, the t is excrement. Rempar corresponds (nearly) to Ital. riparo, a defence, and is a verbal sb. from remparer, to defend, answering (nearly) to Ital. riparare, to defend. γ. F. remparer is 'to put again into a state of defence;' from re-, again, em- for en, in, and parer, to defend, borrowed from Ital. parare, which from Lat. parare, to prepare, make ready. The Ital. riparare is the same word, with the omission of the preposition. See RE-, EM-, and PARAPET or Parry.

RAMSONS, broad-leaved garlic. (E.) Put for hramsons. 'Allium ursinum, broad-leaved garlic, ramsons;' Johns, Flowers of the Field. Ramsons = rams-en-s, a double pl. form, where -en represents the old A. S. plural, as in E. ow-en, and -s is the usual E. plural-ending. We also find M. E. ramsis, ramzys, ramseys, Prompt. Parv. p. 422; and Way says that Gerard calls the Allium ursinum by the names 'ramsis, ramsons, or buckrams.' Here again, the suffixes -is, -eys, -ies are pl. endings. - A. S. hramsan, ramsons; Gloss. to Cockayne, A. S. Leechdoms; a pl. form, from sing. hramsa. + Swed. rams-lök (lök = leek), bear-garlic. + Dan. rams, or rams-lög (lög = leek). + Bavarian ramsen, ramsel (Schmeller). + Lithuan. kremusze, kremuszi, wild garlic (Nesselmann). Further allied to Gk. ῥάδαμος, an onion, Irish creamh, garlic; Fick, iii. 83. All from an Aryan form KARMA, whence KARMUSA, an onion, or garlic.

RANCID, sour, having a rank smell. (L.) A late word; in Bailey, vol. i. ed. 1735. - Lat. rancidus, rancid. - Lat. rancere, to stink; only used in the pres. part. rancens, stinking. ¶ This word has influenced the sense of the E. adj. rank; see RANK (2). Der. rancid-ly, -ness; also ranc-our, q. v.

RANCOUR, spite, deep-seated enmity. (F., -L.) M. E. rancour, Chaucer, C. T. 2786. - F. rancour, 'rankor, hatred;' Cot. - Lat. rancorem, acc. of rancor, spite, orig. rancidness. - Lat. rancere, to be rancid; see RANCID. Der. rancor-ous, rancor-ous-ly.

RANDOM, done or said at hazard, left to chance. (F., -Teut.) The older form is randon, or randoun; and the older sense is 'force,' impetuosity, &c., the word being used as a sb. It was often used with respect to the rush of a battle-charge, and the like. 'Kyng and duyck, eorl and baroun Prikid the stedis with gret randoun;' King Alisaunder, l. 2483. It often formed part of an adverbial phrase, such as in a randoun, in a furious course, Barbour's Bruce, vi. 139, xvii. 694, xviii. 130; intill a randoun, id. xix. 596; in randoun richt, with downright force, id. v. 632. So also at randon, orig. with rushing force, hence, left without guidance, left to its own force, astray, &c. 'The gentle lady, loose at randon lefte, The greene-wood long did walke, and wander wide At wilde adventure, like a forlorne wester;' Spenser, F. Q. iii. 10. 36. [The change from final -n to -m may have been due to the influence of whilom, seldom; so also ransom.] - O. F. randon, 'the swiftnesse and force of a strong and violent stream; whence aller à grand randon, to goe very fast, or with a great and forced pace;' Cot. Thus the E. adv. at random answers to F. à randon. β. A difficult word; Diez compares O. F. randir, to press on, Span. de rondon, de rondon, rashly, intrepidly, abruptly (nearly like E. at random), O. F. randonner, 'to run swiftly, violently,' Cot., and refers them all to G. rand, an edge, rim, brim, margin. Hence also Ital. a randa, near, with difficulty, exactly; of which the lit. sense is 'close to the edge or brim,' Span. randa, lace, border of a dress. γ. The difficulty is in the connection of ideas; but Cotgrave really gives the solution, viz. that randon refers to the force of a brimming river. Whoever has to cross a mountain-stream must feel much anxiety as to whether it is full or not; at one time it is a mere rill, a few hours later its force sweeps all before it. This common and natural solution is, I suspect, the right one. Cf. G. bis am rande voll, full to the brim; am rande des Todes, on the brink of death, at death's door; eine sache zu rando bringen, to bring a thing to the brim, to fulfil or accomplish it. So also O. F. sang respandus à gros randons, blood shed 'by great gushes, or in great quantity,' Cot.; lit. in brimming streams. δ. We find also Ital. randello, 'a hurling, whirling, or hissing noise in the aire; a randello, at random, carelessly, furiously, hurlingly;' Florio. Here randello is a dimin. corresponding form, and may be merely taken from the same image; but since rand means the rim or verge of a circular shield as well as the brink of a river, it may equally well refer to circular motion. A whirled stone keeps to the utmost verge (as it were) of its circular path, with a tendency to fly beyond it with great force.

ε. The G. rand is cognate with A. S. rand, rim, rim of a shield, verge (Grein), Icel. rönd, a rim, border, Dan. rand, a rim, streak, Swed. rand, a stripe; all from a Teut. form RANDA, a rim; Fick, iii. 246. Root uncertain.

RANGE, to rank, or set in a row, to set in order, to rove. (F., -O. H. G.) The sense of 'to rove' arose from the scouring of a country by troops or ranks of armed men; the orig. sense is 'to set in a rank, to array.' M. E. rengen (corresponding to O. F. renger, the form used in the 14th cent., according to Littré), Rob. of Brunne, p. 40, l. 26. 'The helle liun rengeth euer abuten' = the lion of hell is always ranging (roving) about; Ancrén Riwe, p. 164. - F. ranger (O. F. renger), 'to range, rank, order, array;' Cot. - F. rang, 'a ranke,' id. See RANK (1). Der. range, sb., Antony, iii. 13. 5. Also, rang-er, esp. one who ranges a forest, Minsheu, ed. 1627 (see his explanation); rang-er-ship.

RANK (1), row or line of soldiers, class, order, grade, station. (F., -O. H. G.) Spelt rank, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 6. 35 (the verb to rank is in the same stanza). The M. E. form is reng, Chaucer, C. T. 2506; also renk, St. Brandan, ed. Wright, 12 (Stratmann); see reng in Stratmann. Reng became renk, altered afterwards to rank in accordance with a similar change made in the F. original. - O. F. reng, later rang, 'a ranke, row, list, range;' Cot. He gives both forms. Scheler gives the Picard form as ringue, Prov. renc. - O. H. G. hring or hrinc, a ring; cognate with E. RING, q. v. And see HARANGUE. The sense changed from 'ring' of men to a 'row' of men, or a file irrespective of the shape in which they were ranged. The Bret. renk is borrowed from O. F., and the other Celtic forms from F. or E. The G. rang is borrowed back again from F. rang. Der. rank, verb (Spenser, as above); also range, q. v.; also ar-range, de-range. [†]

RANK (2), adj., coarse in growth, very fertile, rancid, strong-scented. (E.) The sense 'rancid' or 'strong-scented' is late, and merely due to confusion with Lat. rancidus, E. rancid, or rather with

O. F. rance, 'musty, fusty, stale,' Cot.; which comes to the same thing. 'As rank as a fox;' Tw. Night, ii. 5. 136. M. E. rank, ronk. 'Ronk and ryf;' Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 843 (or 844). Often with the sense of 'proud' or 'strong'; thus ronke is a various reading for stronge, Ancr. Riwle, p. 268, note c. = A. S. ranc, strong, proud, forward; Grein, ii. 363. + Du. rank, lank, slender (like things of quick growth). + Icel. rakkr (for rækr), straight, slender. + Swed. rank, long and thin. + Dan. rank, erect. β. A nasalised form of Teut. base RAK, to make straight, to stretch; Hexham gives rancken as equivalent to recken, to rack, to stretch. From ✓ RAG, to stretch, make straight; whence also Rack (1), Right, Rich. Der. rank-ly, -ness; also rank-le, q. v.

RANKLE, to fester. (E.) In Levins; spelt rankyll in Palsgrave. Lit. to grow rank; but, being derived from rank only in the M. E. period, it took up the later sense of rank, after it had been confused with F. rance or ranci, 'musty, fusty, stale, putrified,' Cot.; as noticed under RANK (2). It is rare in M. E., but appears, according to Stratmann, in Sir Beves of Hampton, ed. Turnbull, l. 2656. Formed from RANK (2) by the addition of the frequentative suffix -le. Hence the sense is 'to keep on being rank,' to fester continually. But see Addenda. [x]

RANSACK, to search thoroughly. (Scand.) M. E. ransaken, Chaucer, C. T. 1007; Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 2323. = Icel. ransaka, to search a house, to ransack; Swed. ransaka, Dan. rangsage. = Icel. rann, a house, abode; and sak, base of sækja, to seek. β. The Icel. rann stands for rasn, by the assimilation so common in Icelandic; and is cognate with A. S. ræsn, a plank, beam (Bosworth), Goth. razu, a house; the root of which is unknown. Icel. sækja is cognate with A. S. sécan, to seek; see Seek. ¶ Not connected with A. S. rán, Icel. rán, plunder, which is quite different from Icel. rann.

RANSOM, redemption, price paid for redemption, release. (F., = L.) M. E. ransoun, ransoun, Chaucer, C. T. 1178. The change from final n to final m is not uncommon; cf. ransom. Spelt raunsun, Ancr. Riwle, p. 124, l. 24. = O. F. raenson (12th cent., Littré), later ranson, 'a ransom,' Cot. = Lat. redemptionem, acc. of redemptio, redemption, by the usual loss of d between two vowels. See Redemption. Der. ransom, vb.; ransom-er. Doublet, redemption.

RANT, to use violent language. (Du.) In Hamlet, v. i. 307. = O. Du. ranten; 'randen, or ranten, to dote, or to be enraged;' Hexham. Cf. Low G. randen, to attack any one, to call out to one. + G. ranzen, to toss about, to make a noise, to couple (as animals). Perhaps allied to O. H. G. rāzi, M. H. G. rāze, wild, violent. Root uncertain. Der. rant-er.

RANUNCULUS, a genus of plants, including the buttercup. (L.) Botanical. = Lat. ranunculus, a little frog; also, a medicinal plant. Formed with double dimin. suffix -cu-lu-s from ran-un-, extended from rana, a frog. β. The Lat. rāna stands for rac-na, and means 'croaker;' from RAK, extension of ✓ RA, to bellow, make a noise. Cf. Lat. raccare, to make a noise as a tiger, loqui, to speak. See Rennet (2).

RAP (1), to strike smartly, knock; as sb., a smart stroke. (Scand.) 'Rappe, a stroke;' Palsgrave. M. E. rap, sb., rappen, vb., Prompt. Parv. The verb is formed from the sb. = Dan. rap, a rap, tap; Swed. rapp, a stroke, blow, whence rappa, to beat. From a base RAP, allied to RAT, the base of ratt-le; of imitative origin. Cf. rat-a-tat-tat, a knocking at a door. Der. rapp-er.

RAP (2), to snatch, seize hastily. (Scand.) Perhaps for hrap, an initial h being lost. M. E. rapen (for hrapen), to hasten, act hastily, Gower, C. A. i. 335, l. 26; P. Plowman, B. v. 399; &c. The mod. E. phrase to rape and rend, to seize all one can get, is a corrupted phrase due to the collocation of the Icel. hrapa, to rush, hurry, seize, with rana, to plunder, a verb formed from rán, plunder; the true sense is 'to seize and plunder,' to plunder quickly. It appears in Chaucer as rape and renne, C. T. Group G, l. 1422; on which see my note and the Glossary. A similar phrase is rap and reave, seize and spoil, in Fox's Martyrs, p. 781, an. 1521 (R.). So also 'to rap out oaths,' to hurry them out; Ascham, Scholemaster, b. i. ed. Arber, p. 57. Palsgrave has: 'I rappe, I ravysshe;' also, 'I rape or rende, je rapine.' 'What, dear sir, thus raps you?' Cymb. i. 6. 51. 'Sure he would rap me into something now suddenly;' Beaumont and Fletcher, Island Princess, iii. 1. 23. β. Hence the pp. rapit = rapped. 'How our partner's rapit!' Macb. i. 3. 142. [But it is certain that this pp. was soon and easily confused with Lat. raptus, pp. of rapere, to seize, with which it had no orig. connection, and very soon the Latin word, being better known, caused the E. word to be entirely lost sight of, so that it is now obsolete. Cf. F. rapé, 'a ravishing, a violent snatching;' Cot. See Rapt, Rapture.] = Icel. hrapa, to fall, tumble, rush headlong, hurry, be in haste; cf. hrapaðr, a hurry; Swed. rappa, to snatch, seize, cf. rapp, brisk; Dan. rappe, & to make haste, cf. rap, quick, brisk. + G. raffen, to snatch. Der. rap-t, at least in the 16th century, see above. Also raff-le, q. v.; rape (1); ramp, romp. [†]

RAPACIOUS, ravenous, greedy of plunder. (L.) In Milton, P. L. xi. 258. A coined word, formed with suffix -ous from Lat. rapaci-, crude form of rapax, grasping. = Lat. rapere, to seize, grasp; see Rapid. Der. rapacious-ly, -ness; also rapaci-ty, from F. rapacité, 'rapacity,' Cot., which from Lat. acc. rapacitatem.

RAPE (1), a seizing by force, violation. (Scand.) Levins has: 'a rape, raptura, rapina;' and 'to rape, rapere.' The word is certainly Scandinavian, and the same as M. E. rape, haste, hurry; but has obviously been affected by confusion with a supposed derivation from Lat. rapere, to seize, with which it has really nothing to do; cf. F. rapt, 'a violent snatching,' Cot. The sb. really derived from Lat. rapere is Rapine, q. v. β. The M. E. rape, haste, is common enough, occurring in the old proverb 'ofte rap reweth' = haste often repents, Proverbs of Hendyng, l. 256, in Spec. of Eng. ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 42. Chaucer accused Adam Scrivener of 'negligence and rape,' i. e. haste. And see King Horn, ed. Lumby, 1418; P. Plowman, B. v. 333; Gower, C. A. i. 296, l. 27. = Icel. hrap, ruin, falling down (probably also haste, as the vb. hrapa often means to hasten), hrapaðr, a hurry; Swed. rapp, Dan. rap, brisk, quick. See Rap (2). Der. rape, verb. [†]

RAPE (2), a plant nearly allied to the turnip. (F., = L.; or L.) M. E. rape, Prompt. Parv. = O. F. rape, later rave, 'a rape, or turnep,' Cot. The M. E. rape is either derived from a still older F. form, viz. rape, or else has been accommodated to the spelling of the Lat. word. = Lat. rapa, a turnip, rape; also spelt rapum. + Russ. ricpa, a turnip. + Gk. ῥάπυς, a turnip; cf. ῥάπαις, a radish. Root unknown. Der. rape-oil, rape-cake.

RAPE (3), a division of a county, used in Sussex. (Scand.) Still in use; of Scand. origin. = Icel. hreppr, a district; see remarks in the Icel. Dict. Prob. the orig. sense was 'share' or allotment; the deriv. being from Icel. hreppa, to catch, hence to obtain. This verb is cognate with A. S. hrepian, hrepian, to touch, take hold of, Gen. iii. 3; Swed. repa, to scratch. [†]

RAPID, swift. (F., = L.; or L.) In Milton, P. L. ii. 532, iv. 227. = F. rapide, 'violent;' Cot. [Or directly from Latin.] = Lat. rapidum, acc. of rapidus, rapid, quick; lit. snatching away. = Lat. rapere, to snatch. Cf. Gk. ῥάπιδευ, to seize, from a base API = PAII. β. From a base RAP, perhaps allied to ✓ RUP, to break, for which see Rupture. Der. rapid-ly, -ness; rapid-i-ty, from F. rapidité = Lat. acc. rapiditatem. And see harty, rap-ins, rav-age, rav-en (2), rav-ine, rav-ish, rapt-or-i-al, rapt-ure.

RAPIER, a light, narrow sword. (F., = Span., = O. H. G.) In Shak. Temp. v. 84. In A. D. 1579, 'the long foining rapier' is described in Bullein's Dialogue between Sorenesse and Chirurge as 'a new kynd of instrument;' see note in Ben Jonson's Every Man, ed. Wheatly, introd. pp. xlv, xlv. = F. rapierre (mod. F. rapière), 'an old rusty rapier;' Cot. β. Of unknown origin, see Scheler and Littré; but Mr. Wheatly's note shows that, in 1530, la rapiere was 'the spanische sworde,' and Palsgrave has 'rapierre, Spanische sworde.' This makes it probable that Diez's solution (rejected by Littré) is right, and that rapierre is for raspiere, a name given in contempt, meaning a rasper or poker. Hence also 'a proking-spit of Spaine' means a Spanish rapier (Nares). Cf. Span. raspadera, a raker (Neuman), from raspar, to rasp, scrape, file, scratch; see Rasp.

RAPINE, plunder, violence. (F., = L.) In Shak. Titus, v. 2. 59. = F. rapine, 'rapine, ravine,' Cot. = Lat. rapina, plunder, robbery. = Lat. rapere, to seize; see Rapid. Doublet, ravine.

RAPPAREE, an Irish robber. (Irish.) 'The Irish formed themselves into many bodies . . . called rapparees;' &c.; Burnet, Hist. of Own Time, b. v. an. 1690 (R.). 'Rapparees and banditti;' Bolingbroke, A Letter on Archbp. Tillotson's Sermon (R.) = Irish rapaire, a noisy fellow, sloven, robber, thief; cf. rapal, noise, rapack, noisy. So also Gael. rapair, a noisy fellow. See Rabble.

RAPPEE, a kind of snuff. (F., = Teut.) Not in Todd's Johnson. = F. rapé, lit. rasped; Littré quotes: 'J'ai du bon tabac . . . j'ai du fin et du rapé;' Lattaignant, Chanson. Pp. of rapier, to rasp, of Teut. origin. See Rasp.

RAPT, carried away. (E.; confused with L.) Orig. an E. word, the pp. of rap, to hurry; see Rap (2). But when Milton writes: 'Rapi in a chariot drawn by fiery steeds,' P. L. iii. 522, he was probably thinking of Lat. raptus, pp. of rapere, to seize, snatch away; see Rapid. ¶ The question as to which word is meant depends on chronology; the Latin sense is the later. [†]

RAPTORIAL, in the habit of seizing. (L.) Used of birds of prey. Formed with suffix -al (= Lat. -alis) from raptor, crude form of raptor, one who seizes. = Lat. raptus, pp. of rapere, to seize; see Rapture, Rapid.

RAPTURE, transport, ecstasy. (L.) In Shak. Troil. ii. 2. 122;

iii. 2. 138. The word seems to be a pure coinage; there is no F. rapture, nor Low Lat. raptura. Formed with suffix -ure (as in conject-ure, &c.) from rapt-us, pp. of rapere, to seize; see Rapid. Der. raptur-ous, raptur-ous-ly.

RARE, thin, scarce, excellent. (F., = L.) In Levins, ed. 1570. = F. rare, 'rare'; Cot. = Lat. rarum, acc. of rarus, rare. Root unknown. Der. rare-ly, rare-ness. Also rari-fy, from F. rarefier, 'to rarify'; Cot., as if from Lat. *rareficare, but the classical Lat. word is rarefacere, from facere, to make. Also rarefac-ion, from F. rarefaction, 'a making thin'; Cot. = Lat. acc. *rarefactionem, from rarefactus, pp. of rarefacere. Also rari-ty, Temp. ii. 1. 58, from F. rarité, 'rareness, rarity'; Cot., from Lat. acc. raritatem.

RASCAL, a knave, villain. (F., = L.?) M. E. raskaille, used collectively, 'the common herd,' Morte Arthur, ed. Brock, 1281. See Prompt. Parv., and Way's note. 'Certain animals, not accounted as beasts of chase, were so termed; . . . the hart, until he was six years old, was accounted rascayle;' Way. He also cites: 'plebecula, lytell folke or raskalle;' plebs, folk or raskalle.' Cf. 'Rascall, refuse beast'; Palsgrave.

β. As the word was a term of the chase, and as it has the F. suffix -aille, it must needs be of F. origin; no other origin is conceivable, the word not being English. Nor can it, I think, be doubted that the E. raskaille stands for an O. F. *rascaille, which is clearly the same word as mod. F. rascaille, 'the rascality or base and rascal sort, the scumme, dregs, offals, outcasts, of any company,' Cot.

γ. The lit. sense is 'scrapings;' for I take O. F. *rascaille to stand for *rascaille (which would have been unpronounceable), from O. F. rascier, mod. F. racier, 'to scrape, raspe'; Cot. Or perhaps there was an O. F. rasquer, to scrape, whence may be derived O. F. ragué, small or coarse wine, squeezed from the dregs of the grapes,' Cot.

δ. Or, in any case, we find Prov., Span., and Port. rascar, to scrape, O. Ital. rascare, 'to burnish, to rub, to furbish' (Florio); all formed from a Low Lat. type *rasciare, a frequentative form from rasum, supine of radere, to scrape; see Rase.

ε. The above view is, practically, that taken by Scheler. Perhaps it will also explain Port. rascão, a mean page or servant, a dish of minced meat; i. e. scrapings. Moreover, from Ital. raspare, to scrape, rasp, we have O. Ital. raspato, 'a kind of raspise [raspish, harsh] wine' (Florio); which seems a similar formation to O. F. ragué, coarse wine. ¶ The A. S. rascal, is unauthorised, and prob. a fiction. Der. rascal-ly, rascal-i-ty. [†]

RASE, to scrape, efface, demolish, ruin. (F., = L.) Often spelt raze, esp. in the sense to demolish; but it makes no real difference. See Raze. M. E. rasen, to scrape; Prompt. Parv. = F. raser, 'to shave, sheere, raze, or lay levell, to touch or grate on a thing in passing by it,' Cot. = Low Lat. rasare, to demolish, graze; frequentative verb formed from rasum, supine of Lat. radere, to scrape. Allied to rodere, to gnaw. = ✓ RAD, to scratch; cf. Skt. rad, to split, divide. Fick, i. 739. Der. ras-ure, from F. rasure, 'a razing out,' Cot.; ab-rade; e-rase, q. v., e-ras-ure; ras-or-i-al, q. v.; raz-or, q. v.; rail (2), q. v.; rascal, q. v., rash (2), q. v. And see rodent, rat. Doublet, raze.

RASH (1), hasty, headstrong. (Scand.) M. E. rash, rasch, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 1166 (or 1167): The final -sch stands for -sk, as usual. = Dan. and Swed. rask, brisk, quick, rash; Icel. rösk, vigorous. + Du. rasch, quick. + G. rasch, quick, vigorous, scold. Cf. Skt. ricch, to go, to attack.

β. An adjectival form, from ✓ AR, to raise, drive; cf. Skt. ri, to rise, raise, attack; Gk. ῥι-ννυμι, I excite. The orig. sense is excitable, prompt to attack. Der. rash-ly, -ness; perhaps rash-er.

RASH (2), a slight eruption on the body. (F., = L.) In Johnson's Dict. = O. F. rasche, 'a scald, or a running scurfe, or sore; a Languedoc word,' Cot.; also spelt rasque. F. rasche, an eruption on the head, scurf (Litttré). Cf. Prov. rasca, the itch (Litttré). So called from the wish to scratch it; cf. Prov. rascar, Span. rascar, to scratch, scrape, formed from a Low Lat. type *rasciare, to scratch, due to Lat. rasum, supine of radere, to scrape. See Rascal, Rase.

RASH (3), to pull, or tear violently. (F., = L.) 'Rash, to snatch or seize, to tear or rend;' Halliwell. 'The second he took in his arms, and rashed him out of the saddle;' Arthur of Little Britain, ed. 1814, p. 83 (R.) 'And shields did share, and mailles did rash, and helms did hew;' Spenser, F. Q. iv. 2. 17. 'Rashing off helmes, and riving plates asunder;' id. v. 3. 8. M. E. aracen, afterwards shortened to racen. 'The children from hire arm they gan arace,' i. e. tore away; Chaucer, C. T. 8979. 'Hur heere of can she race?' she tore off her hair (Halliwell, s. v. race). [The change from the sound of final -s (voiceless) to -sk is regular, as in flourish from the stem fleuriss-, &c.] = O. F. eracer, mod. F. arracher, 'to root up, to pull away by violence,' Cot. = Lat. extradicare = eradicare, to root up; see Eradicate, Radix. [†]

RASHER, a thin slice of broiled bacon. (Scand.?) In Shak. Merch. Ven. iii. 5. 28. 'Rasher on the coales, quasi rashly or hastily roasted;' Minshew, ed. 1627. This etymology is prob. the right one; cf. 'rashed, burnt in cooking, by being too hastily dressed,' Halliwell; and see his examples. 'In my former edition of Acts and Monuments, so hastily rashed vp at that present, in such shortness of time;' Fox, Martyrs, p. 645, an. 1439 (R.) See Rash (1). ¶ The W. rhass, a slice, does not suit the evidence.

RASORIAL, the name of a family of birds. (L.) It includes birds which, like hens, scrape the ground for food. Coined with suffix -al (= Lat. -alis) from rasori-, crude form of rasor, one who scrapes; see Razor.

RASP, to scrape, rub with a coarse file. (F., = O. H. G.) M. E. raspen, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1545. = O. F. rasper, mod. F. raïper, to rasp. = O. H. G. raspôn, whence mod. G. raspeln, to rasp, a frequentative form. Cf. O. H. G. hrespan, M. H. G. respen, to rake together. Der. rasper; and perhaps rapier. Also rasp-berry, q. v.

RASP-BERRY, a kind of fruit. (F., = O. H. G.; and E.) The word berry is E.; see Berry. The old name was raspis-berry or raspise-berry; see Richardson. 'Raspo, a fruit or berie called raspise;' Florio. 'The raspis is called in Latin Rubus Idæus;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxiv. c. 14; the chapter is headed: 'Of Cynobatos, and the raspice.' 'Ampe, raspises;' Cot.

β. Raspice, raspise are corruptions of raspis (= raspès), which is nothing more than the old plural form, so that raspis = rasps, the word being at first used without berry, as shewn by the examples. Indeed, the prov. E. name is rasps, to this day; and raspes is used by Bacon, Essay 46. The word kex, q. v., is in a similar predicament. γ. The Ital. raspo also means a rasp; and the name was given to the fruit from some supposed similarity to a rasp, prob. from the look of it, which is remarkably rough. See Rasp. ¶ The goose-berry is named for a like reason; see Gooseberry.

RAT, a rodent quadruped. (E.) M. E. rat, or ratte, P. Plowman, B. prol. 200. = A. S. ræt, Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Ferarum; in Wright's Voc. p. 22, col. 2. + O. Du. ratte, 'a ratt'; Hexham; Du. rat. + Dan. rotte. + Swed. rätta. + G. ratte, ratz. Cf. also Low Lat. ratus, rato, Ital. ratto, Span. rato, F. rat. Also Irish and Gael. radan, Bret. raz. β. Perhaps from ✓ RAD, to scratch; see Rodent. Cf. Skt. rada, a tooth, elephant; vajra-rada, a hog. Der. rat, verb, to desert one's party, as rats are said to leave a falling house. Also rat's-bane, ratten.

RATAFIA, the name of a liquor. (F., = Malay.) 'Ratafia, a delicious liquor made of apricocks, cherries, or other fruit, with their kernels bruised and steeped in brandy;' Phillips, ed. 1710. = F. ratafia, the same; cf. F. tafia, rum-arack. The right etymology is clearly that pointed out in Mahn's Webster. = Malay arag, 'arrack, a distilled spirit,' Marsden's Dict., p. 5; and táfia, 'a spirit distilled from molasses, (the French name for rum); arag bram táfia, three kinds of spirit, enumerated in an old Malayan writing,' id. p. 65. Again, at p. 39 of the same we find arag, bram, táfia, arrack, bram, and rum. Omitting bram, we have arag táfia, whence ratafia is an easy corruption, esp. when it is remembered that arag is also called raq, in Spanish raque, or in English rack; see Rack (5). β. The use of both words together is explicable from the consideration that arag is a very general term, and is not a true Malay word, being borrowed from Arabic; see Arrack. Thus ratafia means 'the rack (spirit) called táfia.' See also Rum, sb.

RATCH, a rack or bar with teeth. (E.) 'Ratch, in clock-work, a wheel with twelve large fangs,' &c.; Phillips, ed. 1710. It is the wheel which makes the clock strike. The word is merely a weakened form of rack, in the sense of a bar with teeth, as in what is called 'the rack and pinion movement;' hence it came to mean also a kind of toothed wheel. See Rack (1). Hence also the dimin. ratch-et, in watch-work, 'the small teeth at the bottom of the fusee or barrel that stop it in winding up.' Doublet, ratch (1).

RATE (1), a proportion, allowance, standard, price, tax. (F., = L.) In Spenser, F. Q. iv. 8. 19. = O. F. rate, price, value (Roquefort); not in Cotgrave. = Lat. ratum, neut., or rata, fem. of ratus, determined, fixed, settled, pp. of reor, I think, judge, deem. Both ratum and rata occur as sbs. in Low Latin. β. The root appears to be RA, to fix, identical with ✓ AR, to fit; see Art (2). Der. rate, verb; rat-able, rat-abi-y, rat-able-ness, rate-payer. And see ratio, ration, reason, rat-i-fy.

RATE (2), to scold, chide. (Scand.?) In Shak. Merch. Ven. i. 3. 108. Usually supposed to be a peculiar use of the word above, as though to rate meant to tax, and so to chide. Observe the use of tax in the sense of 'to take to task.' But, if this were so, we should expect to find rate, to value, in earlier use; whereas, on the contrary, the present word seems to be the older of the two, being found in the 14th century. Palsgrave distinguishes between 'I rate one, I set one to his porcyon or stynte,' and 'I rate or chide one.' M. E. raten, to chide; 'He shal be rated of his studying' = he shall be scolded for his studying. Chaucer, C. T. 3463. Moreover, we find the compound verb araten, to reprove; see P. Plowman, B. xi. 98; 'rebuked and arated,' id. xiv. 163. — Swed. rata, to reject, refuse, slight, find fault with; whence ratgods, refuse of goods. So also Norw. rata, to reject, cast aside as rubbish; rat, rubbish, rata, adj. bad (Aasen.) Allied to Icel. hrat, hrati, rubbish, trash. Of obscure origin.

RATH, early, RATHER, sooner. (E.) Rather, sooner, earlier, is the comp. form of rath, soon, now obsolete. We also find rathest, soonest. M.E. rath, early, ready, quick, swift, rathe, adv., soon; comp. rather; superl. rathest, soonest. 'Why rise ye so rathe' = why rise ye so early, Chaucer, C. T. 3766. The word has lost an initial h, and stands for hrath. — A.S. hræðe, adv., quickly, comp. hræðor, superl. hræðost; from the adj. hræð, hræð, also written hræd, hred, quick, swift, Grein, ii. 99, 100. + Icel. hræðr, swift, fleet. + M. H. G. rad, hrad, quick. All from the Teut. base HRATHA, quick; Fick, iii. 82. Root uncertain; see Curtius, i. 188.

RATIFY, to sanction, confirm. (F., — L.) In Levins; and in Skelton, Colin Clout, 716. — F. ratifier, 'to ratify'; Cot. — Low Lat. ratificare, to confirm. — Lat. rati-, for rato-, crude form of ratus, fixed; and -ficare, for facere, to make. See Rate (1) and Fact. Der. ratificatio-ion.

RATIO, the relation of one thing to another. (L.) Mathematical; in Phillips, ed. 1706. — Lat. ratio, calculation, relation. — Lat. ratus, determined, pp. of reor, I think, deem. See Rate (1). Doublets, ration, reason.

RATION, rate or allowance of provisions. (F., — L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. — F. ration, a ration; see Littré. — Lat. rationem, acc. of ratio, a calculation, reckoning; so that a ration is a computed share for soldiers, &c., according to the reckoning of their number. — Lat. ratus, determined; see Rate (1). Der. ration-al, reasonable, Minshew, ed. 1627, from F. rational, 'reasonable'; Cot.; hence, ration-al-ly, ration-al-ise, -ism, -ist, -ist-ic; ration-al-i-ty. Also ratio-cinatio-ion, Minshew, from F. ratiocination, 'a discoursing, discussion,' from Lat. ratiocinationem, acc. of ratiocinatio, which from the pp. of ratiocinari, to reckon, compute, a verb formed from the sb. ratiocinium, a computation = ratio-ci-ni-um, formed by various suffixes from the base of ratio. Doublets, ratio, reason.

RATLINES, RATLINS, RATTLINGS, the small transverse ropes traversing the shrouds of a ship and forming a ladder. (Hybrid; E. and F., — L.) 'Rare-lines or Ratlins, in a ship, those lines with which are made the steps ladderwise to get up the shrouds,' &c.; Phillips, ed. 1710. The origin is uncertain, but as the word appears to be truly English, it probably means rat-lines, a seaman's jocular name, as if forming ladders for the rats to climb by. See Rat and Line.

β. The Du. word is weeflijn, i. e. weaving line or web-line, prob. because they cross the shrouds as if interwoven with them. There is a Dan. word ratline, but it means a tiller-rope, lit. a wheel-line, from Dan. rat, a wheel, and can hardly be connected. Rare-lines, i. e. thin lines, is obviously a corruption.

RATTAN, a Malacca cane. (Malay.) In Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, p. 95. Spelt ratán in Todd's Johnson. — Malay rotán, 'the rattan-cane, Calamus rotang,' Marsden's Dict., p. 152.

RATTEN, to take away a workman's tools for not paying his contribution to the trades' union, or for having offended the union. (F., — Low Lat., — Teut.) Modern; in Halliwell, and in Chambers' Dict., where the etymology is said to be unknown. But it is simple enough. The word is frequently heard in connection with Sheffield, where ratten is the local word for a rat. 'Ratten, a rat;' Hunter's Hallamshire Glossary. Hence to ratten is to rat, in connection with which we find, in Webster, 'ratting, the act of deserting one's former party, and going over to the opposite; also, the act of working for less than the established prices, a term used among printers.' But the usual sense is 'to do secret mischief,' which is afterwards attributed to the rattens or rats. 'I have been rattened; I had just put a new cat-gut band upon my lathe, and last night the rats have carried it off;' Notes and Queries, 3 S. xii. 192; q. v. β. The prov. E. ratten is the same as M. E. raton, ratoun, a rat, P. Plowman, B. prol. 158. — F. raton, 'a little rat;' Cot. — Low Lat. ratonem, acc. of rato, the same as ratus, a rat; a word of Teut. origin. See Rat.

RATTLE, to clatter, to make a din. (E.) Put for hrattle, initial h being lost. M. E. ratelen, Arthur and Merlin, 7858 (Stratmann). — A.S. *hratelan, only preserved in A.S. hratele, hratele, or hratelwyrt, rattle-wort, a plant which derives its name from the rattling of the seeds in the capsules; A.S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, iii. 333. + Du. ratelen, to rattle; ratel, a rattle. + G. rasseln, to rattle; rassel, a rattle.

β. The form of the word is frequentative; and the sense is 'to keep on making a noise represented by the syllable hrat,' this syllable being of imitative origin. Cf. rat-a-tat-tat as the imitation of a knock at a door. So also Gk. κρότος, a loud knock, κροτέειν, to knock, make to rattle, κροταλίειν, to rattle. All from a ✓KRAT, to knock; allied to ✓Krag, KLAG, to make a noise, as in Gk. κράζειν (= κράγ-yeiv), Lat. clangor, and prov. E. rackle, to rattle; and to ✓KRAP, to make a noise, as in Lat. crepare, to rattle. See Fick, i. 538. Der. rattle, sb.; rattle-snake, a snake with a rattle at the end of its tail. Also rattle-traps, small knickknacks, from traps = goods; see Trap (2). Also rail (3).

RAUGHT, pt. t. and pp. of Reach, q. v.

RAVAGE, plunder, devastation, ruin. (F., — L.) The sb. is the more orig. word. Both sb. and verb are in Minshew, ed. 1627. — F. ravage, 'ravage, havoc, spoil;' Cot. Formed, with the usual suffix -age (= Lat. -aticum), from rav-ir, to bear away suddenly; the sb. rav-age was esp. used of the devastation caused by storms and torrents; see Littré. — Lat. rapere, to seize, snatch, bear away; see Ravish. Der. ravage, vb., from F. ravager, 'to ravage,' Cot.; ravag-er.

RAVE, to be mad, talk like a madman. (F., — L.) M. E. raven, Chaucer, C. T. 16427. — O. F. râver, cited by Diez (s. v. réver), as a Lorraine word; the derivative ravasser, 'to rave, to talk idly,' is given in Cotgrave, who also explains resver (F. réver) by 'to rave, dote, speak idly.' β. The word presents great difficulties; see réver in Diez and Scheler; but the solution offered by Diez is satisfactory, viz. that O. F. râver answers to Span. rabiar, to rave, both verbs being formed from the Low Lat. and Span. rabia, rage, allied to Lat. rabies, rage. Thus râver = Low Lat. *rabiare, from rabia. — Lat. rabere, to rage. See Rage.

RAVEL, to untwist, unweave, entangle. (O. Du.) The orig. sense has reference to the untwisting of a string or woven texture, the ends of the threads of which become entangled together in a confused mass. To unravel is to disentangle, to separate the confused threads. 'The ravelled sleeve [the entangled floss-silk] of care;' Mach. ii. 2. 37. To ravel out is not exactly to disentangle (as in Schmidt), but to unweave. 'Must I ravel out My weaved-up folly;' Rich. II, iv. 228; cf. Hamlet. iii. 4. 186; and see examples in Richardson. 'To ravell or untwist;' Minshew, ed. 1627. Cf. 'I ryvell out, as sylke dothe, je riule;' Palsgrave. — O. Du. ravelen, 'to ravell, or cadgell,' Hexham; he also explains ververren by 'to embroile, to entangle, to bring into confusion or disorder, or to cadgill.' The same as mod. Du. rafelen, to fray out, to unweave; Low G. reffeln, to fray out, ravel, pronounced rebeln or rebbeln in Hanover and Brunswick (Bremen Wörterbuch). β. Of unknown origin; possibly connected with G. raffen, to snatch; cf. G. raffel, an iron rake, grate of flax; see Raffle. ¶ The O. Du. ravelen, Du. revelen, to dote, from O. F. râver (see Rave), cannot be the same word. Der. un-ravel.

RAVELIN, a detached work in fortification, with two embankments raised before the counterscarp. (F., — Ital.) 'In bulwarks, rav'ins, ramparts of defence;' Ben Jonson, Underwoods, xiii. On the Poems of Sir J. Beaumont, l. 4. — F. ravelin, 'a ravelin;' Cot. Cf. Span. rebellin, Port. rebelim, Ital. riellino, a ravelin. β. It is supposed that the Ital. word is the original, as seems indicated by the old spelling in that language. — O. Ital. ravellino, revellino, 'a ravelin, a wicket, or a postern-gate; also the uttermost bounds of the wals of a castle, or sconces without the wals;' Florio. γ. But the origin of the Ital. word is unknown. The suggestion, from Lat. re-, back, and uallum, a rampart, is not quite satisfactory, as the old sense seems to be postern-gate; but it may be right.

RAVEN (1), a well-known bird. (E.) For kraven, an initial k being lost. M. E. raven, Chaucer, C. T. 2146. — A.S. kræfn, hrefn, a raven, Grein, ii. 100. + Du. raaf, raven. + Icel. kráfn. + Dan. ravn. + G. rabe, O. H. G. hraban.

β. No doubt named from its cry. — ✓KRAP, to make a noise; whence also Lat. crepare, to rattle. ¶ The crow is similarly named.

RAVEN (2), to plunder with violence, to devour voraciously. (F., — L.) Quite unconnected with the word above, and differently pronounced. The verb is made from an obsolete sb., viz. M. E. ravine, plunder, which accounts for the spelling ravin in Shak. Meas. for Meas. i. 2. 133. 'Foules of ravine' = birds of prey, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, l. 323. So also rauyne, plunder, Ch. tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. 4. l. 302; raviner, a plunderer, id. b. i. pr. 3. l. 228. — O. F. ravine, rapidity, impetuosity (Burguy); mod. F. ravine; see Ravine. This O. F. ravine must orig. have had the sense of plunder, as in Latin. — Lat. rapina, plunder, pillage; see Rapine. Der. raven-ing; raven-ous, in Levins, from F. ravineux, 'ravenous, violent, impetuous, like a forcible stream,' Cot.; raven-ous-ly, -ness. Note that M. E. ravine, mod. E. ravine, and E. rapine are all one and the same. [†]

RAVINE, a hollow gorge among mountains. (F., — L.) Modern; added by Todd to Johnson. — F. ravine, a hollow worn away by floods; explained by Cotgrave to mean 'a great floud, a ravine or inundation of waters;' shewing that, even in E., a ravine was a flood. In still older French, it means impetuosity, violence. — Lat. rapina, plunder, hence violence; see Rapine. And see Raven (2).

RAVISH, to seize with violence, fill with ecstasy. (F., — L.) M. E. rauischen (with u for v), Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. 3. l. 190; rauisen, id. b. iv. pr. 5. l. 3774; b. i. met. 5. l. 504. — F. raviss-, stem of pres. part. of ravir, to ravish, snatch away hastily. Cf. Ital. rapire.—Lat. rapere, to snatch; but with a change of conjugation; see Rapine, Rapid. Der. ravish-er, ravish-ing, Macb. ii. 1. 55; ravish-ment, All's Well, iv. 3. 281, from F. ravissement, 'a ravishing, a ravishment,' Cot.

RAW, uncooked, unprepared, sore. (E.) For hraw, an initial h being lost. M. E. raw, K. Alisaunder, 4932.—A. S. hræw; spelt hræw, Cockayne's Leechdoms, i. 254, l. 4.—Du. rauw.—Icel. hrár. + Dan. raa, raw, crude. + Swed. rå, raw, green. + O. H. G. rāo (declined as rāwer, rouwer), M. H. G. rou, G. roh. β. Allied to Lat. crudus, raw, and to Skt. krūra, sore, cruel, hard.—✓ KRU, of which the fundamental notion is 'to be hard;' Curtius, i. 191. See Crude. Der. raw-ly, raw-ness, raw-boned.

RAY (1), a beam of light or heat. (F.,—L.) The M. E. ray is used of striped cloth; see note to P. Plowman, C. vii. 217. The pl. 'rayes or beames' occurs in Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. ii. c. 12 (R.).—O. F. raye, 'a ray, line,' Cot.; mod. F. rai. Cf. Span. rayo, Ital. raggio.—Lat. radium, acc. of radius, a ray, radius. Root uncertain. Doublet, radius.

RAY (2), a class of fishes, such as the skate. (F.,—L.) M. E. raye. 'Hec ragadia, raye;' Wright's Vocab. i. 222, col. 2, l. 2.—O. F. raye, 'a ray, skate,' Cot.; mod. F. rais.—Lat. raia, a ray; Pliny, ix. 24. β. The Lat. raia=ragya, cognate with G. roche, and E. roach. The G. roche means (1) a roach, (2) a ray. See Roach.

RAYAH, a person, not a Mahometan, who pays the capitation-tax; a word in use in Turkey. (Arab.) It may be explained as 'subject,' though the real meaning is 'a flock,' or pastured cattle.—Arab. rā'iyat (also rā'iyah), a flock; from rā'i, feeding, guarding, pasturing, ra'y, pasturing, feeding, tending flocks; Rich. Dict. pp. 716, 739. Doublet, ryot, from the form rā'iyat. [†]

RAZE, to lay level with the ground, destroy. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Meas. ii. 2. 171. Also 'to graze, strike on the surface,' Rich. III. 3. 2. 11. Also 'to erase,' K. Lear, i. 4. 4. All various uses of the verb which is also spelt rase; see Rase. Der. raz-or, q. v., ras-ori-al, q. v.

RAZOR, a knife for shaving. (F.,—L.) M. E. rasour, Chaucer, C. T. 2419.—F. rasoir, 'a rasour,' Cot. Lit. 'a shaver;' from F. raser, to shave; see Rase, Raze. Der. razor-strop.

RE, RED, prefix, again. (F.,—L.; or L.) F. re, red; from Lat. re, red, again. The form re is most common, and is prefixed even to E. words, as in re-bellow, re-word (Shak.), but this is unusual; remarkable words of this class are re-ly (=rely), re-mind, re-new. The form red occurs in red-ent, red-olent, red-dition. The true etymology of this prefix is still unsolved. ¶ As this prefix can be arbitrarily set before almost any verb, it is unnecessary to give all the words which are found with it. For the etymology of re-address, re-adjust, re-arrange, re-bellow, &c., &c., see the simple forms address, adjust, arrange, &c.

REACH (1), to attain, extend to, arrive at, gain. (E.) M. E. rechen, pt. t. raghte, raughte, pp. raught; P. Plowman, B. xi. 353; Chaucer, C. T. 136. We even find raught in Shak. L. L. L. iv. 2. 41, &c.—A. S. ræcan, ræcean, to reach; pt. t. ræhte; Grein, ii. 364.—O. Friesic reka, retsia, resza. + G. reichen. β. The A. S. ræcan (= raikan) seems to mean 'to get into one's power,' and is connected with the sb. rice, power, answering to Goth. reiki, power, authority, and is from the same root as Rich, Regal, Right, &c. γ. It still more closely connected with the rare sb. ge-ræc, occasion, due time, occurring in Ps. ix. 9, ed. Spelman. This would give the orig. sense 'to seize the opportunity' or 'to attain to;' it comes to much the same thing. We may thus trace ræcan to the sb. ræc (geræc), occasion, allied to rice, sb., power, and to the adj. rice, powerful; from Teut. base RAK=✓ RAG, to rule. See Regal. Der. reach, sb., Oth. iii. 3. 219; also a 'stretch' of a river. And see rack (1), rack (2), rake (3).

REACH (2), to try to vomit; see Retch.

READ, to interpret, esp. to interpret written words. (E.) M. E. reden, pt. t. redde, radde, pp. red, rad; P. Plowman, B. iii. 334; Chaucer, C. T. 6371, 6373.—A. S. rædan, to discern, advise, read; a weak verb, pt. t. rædde, pp. geræd, Grein, ii. 366.—A. S. ræd, counsel, advice, id. 365.—A. S. rædan, to advise, persuade; a strong verb, with the remarkable reduplicated pt. t. reord. β. This strong verb answers to Goth. redan, in comp. garedan, to provide, a strong verb; also to Icel. ráða, to advise, pt. t. réd, pp. ráðinn; also to G. raihen, pt. t. rieth, pp. gerathen. Observe also G. berathen, to assist. γ. All from Teut. base RAD, to assist, be favourable to. —✓ RADH, to be favourable to, assist; whence also Skt. rādh, to make favourable, propitiate, to be favourable to, Russ. rade, ready, willing to help, Lithuan. rodas, willing, also as sb. counsel. See Fick, i. 170. Der. read-able, read-able-ness; read-er, read-ing, read-ing-book, read-ing-room. Also ridd-le.

READY, dressed, prepared, prompt, near. (E.) M. E. redi, redy; spelt rædi, Layamon, 8651 (later text readi); rædi, Ormulum, 2527. β.

—A. S. ræde, ready, Grein, ii. 366. [In this instance the suffix -e was turned into -i by confusion with the A. S. suffix -ig (answering to M. E. -i, -y, E. -y); this may have been due to the influence of O. Swed. redig, plain, evident, clear, though this word is really from a different root, viz. from O. Swed. reda (=E. read), to explain. The O. Swed. adj. reda, ready, is the right cognate word, connected with reda, to prepare. So also Dan. rede, ready.] + O. H. G. reiti, ready; mod. G. bereit.

β. The Icel. greiðr (= ga-reiðr), ready, only differs in the prefix and suffix; so also Goth. garaiðs, commanded. γ. These adjectives are closely related to Icel. reiði, harness, outfit, implements, gear, and to O. H. G. reita, Icel. reið, a raid. We may look upon ready as expressing either 'prepared for a raid' or 'prepared for riding, equipped.' All from a Teut. base RID (RAID), to ride; see Ride, Raid. ¶ The use of ready in the sense of 'dressed' is found as late as the beginning of the 17th century. 'Is she ready?' = is she dressed; Cymb. ii. 3. 86. Der. readi-ly, readi-ness, ready-made.

REAL (1), actual, true, genuine. (F.,—L.; or L.) Spelt reall in Levins; and in Tyndall's Works, p. 104, col. 1, l. 5, where it is opposed to nominall. M. E. real; Prompt. Parv. The famous disputes between Realists and the Nominalists render it probable that the word was taken immediately from the familiar Low Lat. realis rather than the O. F. real, 'reall,' given by Cotgrave. The mod. F. form is réel, also given by Cotgrave. β. The Low Lat. realis, 'belonging to the thing itself,' is formed from re, stem of res, a thing, with suffix -alis. γ. The etymology of res, property, substance, a thing, is by no means clear; it may be related to Skt. rā, to give. Der. real-ly; real-ise, from O. F. realiser, 'to realize,' Cot.; real-is-able; real-is-ation, from O. F. realisation, 'a realization, a making real,' Cot.; real-ism, real-ist, real-ist-ic; real-ity, from F. réalité (Littre).

REAL (2), a small Spanish coin. (Span.,—L.) In Swinburne's Travels through Spain (1779), letter 9, p. 56.—Span. real, lit. 'a royal' coin.—Lat. regalis, royal. See Regal.

REALGAR, red ornament. (F.,—Span.,—Arab.) A term in chemistry and alchemy. Spelt realgar, Chaucer, C. T. Group G, l. 814 (l. 16283).—F. réalgar, of which there was prob. an O. F. form *realgar, answering to the Low Lat. risigallum.—Span. rejalgar.—Arab. raḡ al-ghār, powder of the mine, mineral powder.—Arab. raḡ, dust, powder; al, the; and ghār, a cavern, hence a mine. See Rich. Dict., pp. 759, 1040. This etymology is due to Dozy; and see Devic, supp. to Littre.

REALM, a kingdom. (F.,—L.) M. E. roialme, Gower, C. A. iii. 199, l. 3; ryalme, Sir Gawain and the Grene Knight, l. 691; reaume, Will. of Palerne, 1964; realme, Rom. of the Rose, 495.—O. F. realme, reaume, roialme (Burguy); mod. F. royaume, a kingdom; answering to a Low Lat. form *regalimen, not found.—O. F. real, roial, mod. F. royal, royal; see Royal.

REAM, a bundle of paper, usually twenty quires. (F.,—Span.,—Arab.) In Skelton, Works, i. 131, l. 174; spelt reme. Spelt reame, in Minshew, ed. 1627, and in Levins. We even find M. E. reeme in Prompt. Parv. p. 429.—O. F. raime, rayme (Littre), a ream; mod. F. rame. Palsgrave has: 'Reame of paper, ramme de papier.'—Span. resma, 'a reame of paper;' Minshew. (Cf. Ital. risma.)—Arab. rizmat (pl. rizam), a bundle, esp. a bundle of clothes; Rich. Dict. p. 731. See Littre, Devic's supp. to Littre, and Scheler's note on Diez; all agree that this etymology has been completely established by Dozy. Devic remarks that we even find the F. expression 'coton en rame', cotton in a bundle, and that it is hopeless to connect this, as Diez proposes, with the Gk. ἀριθμός, number. Cotton paper was manufactured in Spain, where it was introduced by the Moors.

REAP, to cut, as grain, gather a crop. (E.) M. E. repen, sometimes a strong verb; pt. t. rep, pl. ropen, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 374; pp. ropen, Chaucer, Leg. of Good Women, 74.—A. S. ripan, rypan (with the possible form rēpan); see Sweet's A. S. Reader, Glossary, and introduction; í or ý is put for é, when é is a mutation of éú (éó). Cf. A. S. riþ, ryþ, a reaping, harvest; id. Allied to Du. rapen, to gather, reap, glean; G. raufen, to pluck; Goth. raupjan, to pluck, Mark, ii. 23; Luke, vi. 1.

β. Allied to words from a base RUP, which appears to be a variant of the Teut. base RUB, to break, and an unchanged form of ✓ RUP, to break; see Rupture, Reave. Der. reap-er, ripe.

REAR (1), to raise. (E.) M. E. rerem, Rob. of Glouc. p. 28, l. 5.—A. S. ræran, to rear, Deut. xxviii. 30. The form ræran stands for ræsan, with the common substitution of r for s, and is cognate with Icel. reisa (mod. E. raise). It is the causal of rise; and means 'to make to rise.' Thus ræran=ræsan=raisan, causal of risan. See Rise. Doublet, raise.

REAR (2), the back part, last part, esp. of an army. (F.,—L.) 'To the abject rear;' Troil. iii. 3. 162. But usually in phr. 'in the rear,' Hamlet, i. 3. 34. M. E. rear, but perhaps only in the compounds rereward (see Rearward) and arere, adv., also spelt arriere, P. Plowman, B. v. 354.—O. F. riere, 'backward, behind,' Cot. & Ital. ribuffo, a reproof; ribuffare, to repulse.—Ital. ri (=Lat. re), back; and buffo, a puff, a word of imitative origin, like E. puff. See Re and Puff. Der. rebuff, verb.

REBUKE, to reprove, chide. (F.,—L.) M. E. rebuken, P. Plowman, B. xi. 419.—O. F. rebouquer (13th cent., Littré), later reboucher, 'to dull, to blunt,' Cot. It was used of armour that turned back a weapon; hence, metaphorically, of refusing or turning aside a request (see an example in Littré, who adds that, in Normandy, they say rebouquer for to reject).—F. re, back; and bouque, Picard form of F. bouche, the mouth, whence bouquer = F. boucher, 'to stop, obstruct, shut up, also to hoodwinke,' Cot.—Lat. re, back; and bucca, the cheek, esp. the puffed cheek (hence, the mouth), which Fick (i. 151) connects with buccina, a trumpet, and Skt. bukk, to sound.—✓ BUK, to puff, of imitative origin; from the sound of blowing. ¶ It will be seen that the sense of rebuke depends on that of boucher, to stop one's mouth, to obstruct; hence, to reject. But it is remarkable that the radical sense is 'to puff or blow back,' which is just the sense of rebuff. Thus, to rebuke and to rebuff are, radically, much the same. Der. rebuke, sb., Sir Degrevant, 863; rebuk-er. [†]

REBUS, an enigmatical representation of words by pictures of things. (L.) 'As round as Gyges' ring, which, say the ancients, Was a hoop-ring, and that is, round as a hoop. Lowell. You will have your rebus still, mine host;' Ben Jonson, New Inn, Act i. sc. 1. 'Excellent have beene the conceipt[s] of some citizens, who, wanting armes, have coined themselves certaine devices as neere as may be alluding to their names, which we call rebus;' Henry Peacham (1634), The Gentleman's Exercise, p. 155, § 2, B. 3. It refers to representing names, &c., by things; thus a bolt and sun expresses Bolton; and so on.—Lat. rebus, by things, by means of things; abl. pl. of res, a thing; see Real. ¶ Cf. omnibus.

REBUT, to oppose by argument or proof. (F.,—M. H. G.; with L. prefix.) 'Rebutit of the prey'—driven away from the prey, repulsed; Dunbar, The Golden Targe, st. 20; Poems, ed. 1788.—O. F. rebouter, 'to repulse, foyle, drive back, reject,' &c.; Cot.—F. re (=Lat. re), back; and bouter, to thrust. See Re and Butt (1). Der. rebut-er, a plaintiff's answer to a defendant's rejoinder, a law term.

RECALL, to call back. (Scand.; with L. prefix.) In Shak. Locrine, 1671. From Re and Call. Der. recall, Milton, P. L. v. 885.

REBATE, to blunt the edge of a sword. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Meas. i. 4. 60. M. E. rebate = abate, Coventry Mysteries, p. 76.—O. F. rebatre, 'to repel, repulse, beat or drive back again.'—F. re (=Lat. re), back; and batre (mod. F. battre), to beat, from Lat. battere, popular form of battere, to beat. Der. (from O. F. batre) a-bate, q. v. Also rebate, sb., discount; rebate-ment, a diminution, narrowing, 1 Kings, vi. 6, margin, where the A. V. has 'narrowed rests.' Cf. also rebato, rabato, a kind of ruff, Much Ado, iii. 4. 6, where the final -o seems to be an E. addition, as the word is not Span. or Ital., but French; from F. rabat, 'a rebate for a woman's ruff' (Cot.), which from rabattre, to turn back, put for re-abattre.

REBECK, a three-stringed fiddle. (F.,—Ital.,—Pers.) 'And the jocund rebecks sound;' Milton, L'Allegro, 94. Hugh Rebeck is a proper name in Romeo, iv. 5. 135. 'An old woman is called "an old rebecke," and again, "an old ribibe," in Chaucer, C. T. 7155, 6959.—O. F. rebec, 'the fiddle teamed a rebeck;' Cot. Also spelt rebebe (Roquefort).—Ital. ribecca, also ribebba, 'a rebeck, a croud, or a kit;' Florio.—Pers. rubāb, a rebeck, an instrument struck with a bow; Rich. Dict. p. 719. The Span. form is rabel. [†]

REBEL, adj., rebellious, opposing or renouncing authority. (F.,—L.) The verb is from the sb., and the sb. was orig. an adj. M. E. rebel, rebellious, Rob. of Glouc. p. 72, l. 8. 'And alle that he rebel founde;' King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, l. 3033. 'Avaunt! rebel!' Lydgate, Minor Poems, Percy Soc., p. 35.—F. rebelle, adj., rebellious, wilful.—Lat. rebellis, acc. of rebellis, rebellious, lit. renewing war.—Lat. re, again; and bell-um, war. See Re, Belligerent, and Duel. Der. rebel, verb, Barbour, Bruce, x. 129 (Edinburgh MS.); rebell-ion, Wyclif, 3 Kings, xi. 27, from F. rebellion, 'rebellion,' Cot.; rebell-i-ous, Rich. II, v. i. 5; rebell-i-ous-ly, -ness.

REBOUND, to bound back. (F.,—L.) 'I rebounde, as a ball dothe, je bondays;' Palsgrave. And in Surrey, The Lover describes his state, l. 19; in Tottell's Misc., ed. Arber, p. 24.—F. rebondir, 'to rebound, or leap back;' Cot.—F. re, back; and bondir, to leap, bound. See Re and Bound (1). Der. rebound, sb., Antony, v. 2. 104; and in Palsgrave.

REBUFF, a sudden check or resistance, repulse. (Ital.) 'The strong rebuff of some tumultuous cloud;' Milton, P. L. xi. 936.—Ital. ribuffo, ribuffo, 'a check, a chiding, a taunt, a skoulding, a rating;' connected with Ital. ribuffare, 'to check, to chide;' Florio. Mod. &

Ital. ribuffo, a reproof; ribuffare, to repulse.—Ital. ri (=Lat. re), back; and buffo, a puff, a word of imitative origin, like E. puff. See Re and Puff. Der. rebuff, verb.

REBUKE, to reprove, chide. (F.,—L.) M. E. rebuken, P. Plowman, B. xi. 419.—O. F. rebouquer (13th cent., Littré), later reboucher, 'to dull, to blunt,' Cot. It was used of armour that turned back a weapon; hence, metaphorically, of refusing or turning aside a request (see an example in Littré, who adds that, in Normandy, they say rebouquer for to reject).—F. re, back; and bouque, Picard form of F. bouche, the mouth, whence bouquer = F. boucher, 'to stop, obstruct, shut up, also to hoodwinke,' Cot.—Lat. re, back; and bucca, the cheek, esp. the puffed cheek (hence, the mouth), which Fick (i. 151) connects with buccina, a trumpet, and Skt. bukk, to sound.—✓ BUK, to puff, of imitative origin; from the sound of blowing. ¶ It will be seen that the sense of rebuke depends on that of boucher, to stop one's mouth, to obstruct; hence, to reject. But it is remarkable that the radical sense is 'to puff or blow back,' which is just the sense of rebuff. Thus, to rebuke and to rebuff are, radically, much the same. Der. rebuke, sb., Sir Degrevant, 863; rebuk-er. [†]

REBUS, an enigmatical representation of words by pictures of things. (L.) 'As round as Gyges' ring, which, say the ancients, Was a hoop-ring, and that is, round as a hoop. Lowell. You will have your rebus still, mine host;' Ben Jonson, New Inn, Act i. sc. 1. 'Excellent have beene the conceipt[s] of some citizens, who, wanting armes, have coined themselves certaine devices as neere as may be alluding to their names, which we call rebus;' Henry Peacham (1634), The Gentleman's Exercise, p. 155, § 2, B. 3. It refers to representing names, &c., by things; thus a bolt and sun expresses Bolton; and so on.—Lat. rebus, by things, by means of things; abl. pl. of res, a thing; see Real. ¶ Cf. omnibus.

REBUT, to oppose by argument or proof. (F.,—M. H. G.; with L. prefix.) 'Rebutit of the prey'—driven away from the prey, repulsed; Dunbar, The Golden Targe, st. 20; Poems, ed. 1788.—O. F. rebouter, 'to repulse, foyle, drive back, reject,' &c.; Cot.—F. re (=Lat. re), back; and bouter, to thrust. See Re and Butt (1). Der. rebut-er, a plaintiff's answer to a defendant's rejoinder, a law term.

RECALL, to call back. (Scand.; with L. prefix.) In Shak. Locrine, 1671. From Re and Call. Der. recall, Milton, P. L. v. 885.

RECENT, to retract an opinion. (L.) 'Which duke . . . did recent his former life;' Contin. of Fabian's Chron., an. 1553; ed. Ellis, p. 712.—Lat. recentare, to sing back, re-echo, also to recent, recall (Horace, Od. i. 16. 27); the orig. sense was perhaps to reverse a charm.—Lat. re, back; and cantare, to sing; see Re and Chant. Der. recent-er, recent-al-ion. ¶ This throws some light on the word cant, and renders the derivation of cant from Lat. cantare more easy and probable; recent seems to have been the older word, and it was one of the commonest of words in the time of Mary.

RECAST, to cast or mould anew. (Scand.; with L. prefix.) Also, to throw back again; 'they would cast and recast themselves from one to another horse;' Florio, tr. of Montaigne, p. 155 (R.) From Re and Cast.

RECEDE, to retreat. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706.—Lat. recedere, to give ground, retreat. See Re and Cede. Der. recess, in Hall, Hen. VIII, an. 34 (R.), from Lat. recessus, a retreat, which from recessus, pp. of recedere. Also recession, from Lat. recessio.

RECEIVE, to accept, admit, entertain. (F.,—L.) M. E. receiven, receyuen (with u for v). 'He that *receyue*th other receteth hire ys recetor of gyle;' P. Plowman, C. iv. 501.—O. F. recever, recevoir, mod. F. recevoir.—Lat. recipere (pp. receptus), to receive.—Lat. re, back; and capere, to take; with the usual vowel-change from a to i in composition. See Re and Capacious. Der. receiv-er. Also receipt, M. E. receit, Chaucer, C. T. 16821, from O. F. recete, recepte, recoite (Littré), recepte, 'a receipt,' Cot., mod. F. recette = Lat. recepta, a thing received, fem. of receptus. And see receptacle, recipe.

RECENT, new, fresh, modern. (F.,—L.) In Minshew.—O. F. recent (F. recent), 'recent, fresh.'—Lat. recent, stem of recens, fresh, new; formed with prefix re from a base -cen-t, which is probably allied to Skt. kanyāms, very small, kanyā, a young girl, W. cynt, first, earliest, and Russ. po-cinate, to begin; see Fick, i. 517. The orig. sense is 'beginning,' young. Der. recent-ly, -ness.

RECEPTACLE, a place in which to store things away. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Romeo, iv. 3. 39.—F. receptacle, 'a receptacle, storehouse,' Cot.—Lat. receptaculum, a receptacle; formed with dimin. suffixes -cu-lo from receptare, frequentative form of recipere, to receive; see Receive. Der. (from pp. receptus) reception, formerly a term in astrology, Gower, C. A. iii. 67, l. 12, from F. reception, 'a reception,' Cot., from Lat. acc. receptionem; also recept-ive, as if from

F. réceptif, not in use; hence recept-iv-ity, from mod. F. réceptivité, a coined word.

RECESS, RECESSION; see Recede.

RECIPE, a medical prescription. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706; he rightly explains that it is so called because it begins with the word recipe, i. e. take so and so. — Lat. recipe, imp. sing. of recipere, to take. See Receive. So also recipi-ent, one who receives, from the stem of the pres. part. of recipere.

RECIPROCAL, acting in return, mutual. (L.) In King Lear, iv. 6. 267. Formed by adding -al to Lat. reciproce-us, returning, alternating, reciprocal; whence also O. F. reciproque, and obsolete E. reciproque, of which see examples in R. Of unknown origin. Der. reciprocal-ly; also reciproce-ate, given in Phillips as a grammatical term, from reciproceatus, pp. of reciprocare, to go backwards and forwards, to reciprocate; reciproce-at-ion, from F. reciprocation, 'a reciprocation, returning,' Cot.; reciproce-i-ty, from mod. F. reciprocité.

RECITE, to repeat aloud, narrate. (F., — L.) In Levins, ed. 1570. — F. reciter, 'to recite, repeat,' Cot. — Lat. recitare, to recite; see Re- and Cite. Der. recit-al, North's Plutarch, p. 14 (R.), recit-er; recit-at-ion, from F. recitation, in use in the 15th cent. (Littre), though omitted by Cotgrave; recit-at-ive, mod. F. récitatif, prob. from Ital. recitativo, recitative in music.

RECK, to regard. (E.) M. E. rekken, frequently weakened to recchen, Chaucer, C. T. 1400, 2259; P. Plowman, B. iv. 65. The vowel has been shortened, being orig. long. — A. S. reccan (put for reccian); 'þu ne reccst' = thou carest not, Mark, xii. 14. — O. Sax. rökian. — M. H. G. ruochen, O. H. G. rökhjan, ruohhjan, to reckon, heed, have a care for. β. The A. S. reccan easily became reccan, whence M. E. rekken. The ö results, as usual, from o followed by i in the next syllable. The verb is a denominative, i. e. from a sb. The sb. exists in M. H. G. ruoch, O. H. G. ruah, ruoh, care, heed, answering to a Teut. type RÖKA, care, heed; Fick, iii. 249. From Teut. base RAK = Aryan RAG, occurring in Gk. ἀρέειν (for ἀρέειν), to have a care, heed, reckon. Der. reck-less, A. S. reccelés, Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Pastoral Care, ed. Sweet, p. 4, l. 23, spelt reccelés, id. p. 5, l. 23; cf. Du. roekeloos; reck-less-ly, reck-less-ness.

RECKON, to count, account, esteem. (E.) M. E. rekenen, rekenen; Chaucer, C. T. 1956; P. Plowman, B. ii. 61. — A. S. reccenian, to explain, Grein, i. 440; the prefixed ge-, readily added or dropped, makes no real difference. A derivative verb; allied to A. S. ge-reccan, reccan, to rule, direct, order, explain, ordain, tell; Grein, i. 440, ii. 369. — Du. rekenen. — Icel. reikna (for rekna?), to reckon; allied to reikja, to unfold, trace, track out; — Dan. regne. — Swed. räkna. — G. rechnen, M. H. G. rechenen, O. H. G. rekhonon; allied to M. H. G. rechen, O. H. G. rachjan, to declare, tell. And cf. Goth. rahnjan, to reckon. β. The Icel. reikja is to be referred to the sb. rök, neut. pl., a reason, ground, origin, cognate with M. H. G. racha, O. H. G. rahha, a thing, subject; and prob. with Gk. λόγος, discourse. γ. From Teut. base RAK, to collect, whence E. Bake (i), q. v. From Aryan ✓ RAG, to collect; cf. Gk. ἀρέειν, and see Legend; Fick, iii. 249. But it is quite possible that some meanings of the various words above are due to the similar ✓ RAG, to rule, whence Regal, Right. Der. reckon-er; also reck-on-ing, cognate with G. rechnung.

RECLAIM, to tame, bring into a cultivated state, reform. (F., — L.) M. E. reclimen, reclimen, esp. as a term in hawking; Chaucer, C. T. 17021. — O. F. reclamer, 'to call often or earnestly, exclaim upon, sue, claim,' Cot. Mod. F. réclamer. — Lat. reclamare, to cry out against. — Lat. re-, back, again; and clamare, to cry out. See Re- and Claim. Der. reclaim-able; also reclam-at-ion, from O. F. reclamation, 'a contradiction, gainsaying,' Cot., from Lat. acc. reclamationem, a cry of opposition.

RECLINE, to lean back, lie down. (L.) In Milton, P. L. iv. 333. — Lat. reclinare, to lean back. — Lat. re-, back; and clinare, to lean, cognate with E. Lean (1).

RECLUSE, secluded, retired. (F., — L.) The form recluse is properly feminine, and it first appears with reference to female anchorites. M. E. recluse, Ancren Riwle (Rule of Female Anchorites), p. 10, l. 5. — O. F. reclus, masc., recluse, fem., 'closely kept in, or shut up as a monk or nun,' Cot. Pp. of O. F. reclorre, 'to shut or close up again,' Cot. — Lat. recludere, to uncloset, but in late Lat. to shut up. — Lat. re-, back; and cludere, to shut. See Re- and Clause. [†]

RECOGNISE, to know again, acknowledge. (F., — L.) In Levins. The O. F. verb is recognostre in Cot., mod. F. reconnaître. The E. verb is not immediately derived from this, but is merely made out of the sb. recognisance, which was in rather early use, and occurs in Chaucer as a legal term, C. T. 13260. — O. F. recognisance (13th cent., Littre), later recognissance, 'a recognizing, also an acknowledgement of tenure,' Cot. — O. F. recognissant (Cot.), pres. part. of recognostre (F. reconnaître). — Lat. recognoscere. — Lat. re-, again; and cognoscere, to know. See Re- and Cognisance. Der. recognis-able; also recognit-ion, in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, from Lat. acc. recognitionem, nom. recognitio, from recognit-us, pp. of recognoscere. And see reconnoître.

RECOIL, to start back, rebound. (F., — L.) M. E. recoilen, used transitively, to drive back, Ancren Riwle, p. 294, l. 6. — F. reculer (or rather, perhaps, from some dialectal form of it), 'to recoil, retire, defer, drive off,' Cot. Lit. to go backwards. — F. re- (= Lat. re-), back; and cul, the hinder part, from Lat. culum, acc. of culus, the hinder part, the posteriors. We find also Gael. cul, the hinder part, W. cil, back, a retreat. Root unknown. Der. recoil, sb., Milton, P. L. ii. 880. [†]

RECOLLECT, to remember. (F., — L.) Used in Shak. in the lit. sense 'to gather,' to collect again, Per. ii. 1. 54. From Re- and Collect. Der. recollection-ion.

RECOMMEND, to commend to another. (F., — L.) M. E. recomenden, Chaucer, C. T. 4608. From Re- and Commend; in imitation of F. recommander, 'to recommend,' Cot. Der. recommend-able, recommend-at-ion, recommend-at-or-y.

RECOMPENSE, to reward, remunerate. (F., — L.) M. E. recompensen, Gower, C. A. ii. 278, l. 9. — O. F. recompenser (F. récompenser), 'to recompence,' Cot. — Lat. re-, again; and compensare; see Re- and Compensate. Der. recompense, sb., Timon, v. 1. 153.

RECONCILE, to restore to friendship, cause to agree. (F., — L.) M. E. reconcilen, Gower, C. A. iii. 128, l. 8. — O. F. reconcilier, 'to reconcile,' Cot. — Lat. reconciliare, to reconcile. lit. to bring into counsel again. See Re- and Conciliate. Der. reconcil-er, reconcil-able; reconciliat-ion, from O. F. reconciliation (Cot.) = Lat. acc. reconciliationem.

RECONDITE, secret, profound. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. — Lat. reconditus, put away, hidden, secret; pp. of recondere, to put back again. — Lat. re-, again; and condere, to put together. β. The Lat. condere (in which the prefix is con-, for com- = cum, with), is often referred to the ✓ DHA, to put; but this root is represented in Latin by fac-ere. We must rather refer condere (pt. t. condidi) to dare (pt. t. dedi), to give; just as edere (pt. t. edidi) and addere (pt. t. addidi) may be referred to the same root, viz. DA, to give. Some confusion of the senses of the roots DA and DHA seems to have taken place in Latin; see Curtius, i. 316. ¶ The root of Abscond requires amendment accordingly.

RECONNOITRE, to survey, examine from a military point of view. (F., — L.) 'She reconnoitres fancy's airy band,' Young, Night Thoughts, Nt. ii. l. 265. — O. F. reconnoître (Cot.), reconnoître (Littre), mod. F. reconnaître, 'to recognise; . . also, to take a precise view of,' Cot. See Recognise. Der. reconnaissance-ance, from mod. F. reconnaissance; of which recognisance is a doublet.

RECORD, to register, enrol, celebrate. (F., — L.) M. E. recorden, to repeat, remind, Ancren Riwle, p. 256, l. 10; Chaucer, C. T. 831. — O. F. recorder, 'to repeat, recite, report,' Cot. — Lat. recordare, more usually recordari, to call a thing to mind. — Lat. re-, again; and cord-, stem of cor, the heart, cognate with E. heart. See Re- and Heart. Der. record, sb., Chaucer, C. T. 7631, from O. F. record, 'a record, witness,' Cot.; record-er, record-er-ship.

RECOUNT, to tell again, narrate. (F., — L.) In Skelton, Philip Sparowe, l. 613. A modified spelling; put for racount. — F. raconter, 'to tell, relate, report, rehearse,' Cotgrave. — F. re-, again; a, lit. to; and conter, to relate. Thus it is from Re-, a- (5), and Count.

RECOURP, to diminish a loss by keeping back a part as a claim for damages. (F., — L., — Gk.) Spelt recoupe in Phillips, ed. 1706; whom see. It means lit. to secure a piece or shred. — F. recoupe, 'a shred,' Cot. — F. recouper, to cut again. — F. re- (= Lat. re-), again; and couper, to cut, a word of Gk. origin. See Re- and Coppice.

RECOURSE, a going to or resorting to for aid. (F., — L.) M. E. recours, Chaucer, C. T. 10389. — F. recours, 'a recourse, refuge,' Cot. — Lat. recursum, acc. of recursum, a running back, return, retreat. — Lat. recursum, pp. of recurere. See Recur; and see Re- and Course.

RECOVER, to get again, regain. (F., — L.) M. E. recouren (with u for o), P. Plowman, B. xix. 239; also recouren, rekeuren, id. C. xxii. 245; King Alisaunder, 5835. — O. F. recouver, recouvrer (Burguy), F. recouvrer, 'to recover,' Cot. — Lat. recuperare, to recover; also to recruit oneself. β. A difficult word; Vaniček connects it with Sabine cuprus, good; so that recuperare is 'to make good again,' again, he takes the orig. sense of cuprus to be 'desirable,' from cupere, to desire; see Cupid. Der. recover-able; recover-y, All's Well, iv. 1. 38, a coined word.

RECREANT, cowardly, apostate. (F., — L.) M. E. recreant, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 9, l. 24; recreant, P. Plowman, B. xviii. 100. — O. F. recreant, 'tired, toyed, faint-hearted,' Cot.; properly the pres. part. of recoire, 'to believe again; also, to restore, deliver, or give back; id. And cf. O. F. recreu, 'tired, wearie, faint-hearted,' id.

β. The pres. part. recreant and pp. recreu partook of the sense of Low Lat. recedere, from which F. recroire is derived. This verb, lit. to believe again, or to alter one's faith, was also used in the phrase se recedere, to own oneself beaten in a duel or judicial combat. The same sense reappears in Ital. ricreduto, 'a miscreant, recreant, or unbelieving wretch;' Florio. — Lat. re-, again; and credere, to believe; see Re- and Creed. Der. recreant-y. And see miscreant.

RECREATION, amusement. (F., — L.) M. E. recreation, Gower, C. A. iii. 100, l. 21. — F. recreation, 'recreation, pastime;' Cot. — Lat. recreationem, acc. of recreatio, recovery from illness (Pliny). — Lat. recreatus, pp. of recreare, to refresh, revive; whence the sense of to amuse by way of invigorating the system or mind. Lit. 'to create anew.' See Re- and Create. Der. recreate, in Palsgrave, from Lat. pp. recreatus; but really suggested by the older sb. Also recreat-ive.

RECRIMINATE, to accuse in return. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. — Lat. re-, again; and criminatus, pp. of criminari, to accuse of crime. — Lat. crimen, stem of crimen; see Crime. Der. recrimination, from F. recrimination, 'a recrimination,' Cot.; recriminat-or-y, recriminat-ive.

RECRUIT, to enlist new soldiers. (F., — L.) 'To recrute and maintain their army when raised;' Prynne, Treachery and Disloyalty, pt. iv. p. 33 (R.). 'A recruit [supply] of new people;' Howell, Famil. Letters, vol. i. pt. i. let. 38, § 7. — F. recruter, not given in Cotgrave, but explained by Littré by 'to levy troops.' He tells us that it is an ill-formed word, first found in the 17th century. Formed from recrute, a mistaken or provincial form for recrue, fem. of recrû, pp. of recroître, to grow again. β. The word recrue is used as a sb., and means 'a levy of troops.' The i appears in O. F. recroître, 'a re-increase, a new or second growth,' Cot.; cf. recroître, 'to re-increase,' id. — F. re-, again; and croître (O. F. croistre), to grow. — Lat. re-, again; and crecere, to grow; see Re- and Crescent.

Der. recruit, sb.; recruit-er, recruit-ing.

RECTANGLE, a four-sided figure, of which all the angles are right angles. (F., — L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706; he says it was also used to denote a right angle. — F. rectangle, 'a strait or even angle;' Cot. — Lat. rectangulus, having a right angle. — Lat. rect-us, right; and angulus, an angle; see Rectify and Angle. Der. rectangl-ed, rectangul-ar.

RECTITUDE, uprightness. (F., — L.) 'By the rectitude of his justice;' Golden Book, let. 11 (R.). — F. rectitude, omitted by Cotgrave, but used in the 14th cent. (Littré). — Lat. rectitudo, straightness, uprightness; formed with suffix -tudo from recti = recto, crude form of rectus, straight, cognate with E. Right, q. v. ¶ So also rect-or, lit. a ruler, All's Well, iv. 3. 69, from Lat. rector, a ruler; which from rectus, pp. of regere, to rule; see Regiment. Hence rector-ship, Cor. ii. 3. 213; rector-ate, rector-al, rector-y.

RECUMBENT, lying back or upon, reclining. (L.) Recumbency is in Phillips, ed. 1710. Recumbent seems later; it is in Cowper, The Needless Alarm, l. 47. — Lat. recumbent-, stem of pres. part. of recumbere, to recline. — Lat. re-, back; and see Incumbent. Der. recumbent-y.

RECUPERATIVE, tending to recovery. (L.) Recuperable, i. e. recoverable, is in Levins, but is now disused. Recuperator is in Phillips, ed. 1706. Recuperative appears to be quite modern. — Lat. recuperativus, (properly) recoverable. — Lat. recuperatus, pp. of recuperare, to recover; see Recover.

RECUR, to resort, return to the mind, happen again at stated intervals. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Recurrent is in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. recurrere, to run back, return, recur. — Lat. re-, back; and currere, to run; see Re- and Current. Der. recur-ent, from the stem of the pres. part.; whence recur-ence; also recourse, q. v.

RECUSANT, opposing an opinion, refusing to acknowledge supremacy. (F., — L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. — F. recusant, 'rejecting, refusing,' Cot.; pres. part. of recuser. — Lat. recusare, to reject; properly, to oppose a cause or opinion. — Lat. re-, back, hence, withdrawing from; and causa, a cause; see Re- and Cause. β. The same change takes place in accuse (accusare), also from Lat. causa. Der. recusant-y.

RED, one of the primary colours. (E.) M. E. reed (with long vowel), sometimes rede, red; Chaucer, C. T. 637. — A. S. reðð, red; Grein, ii. 373. + Du. rood. + Icel. raudr. + Dan. rød. + Swed. röd. + G. roth. + Goth. rauds. β. All from Teut. base RAUDA, red (Fick, iii. 257); the Lat. rufus, red, being a cognate form. From the base RUD, to redder, esp. with blood; appearing in the Icel. strong verb rjóða (pt. t. rauð), to redder. This base answers to Aryan ✓ RUDH, to redder, perhaps orig. to smear with blood; whence Skt. rudhira, blood, Gk. ῥοδῖν, to redder, ῥοδῖος, red, Irish and Gael. ruadh, W. rhudd, Lat. ruber, red, robigo, rust, &c. Der. red-ly, red-ness; redd-en (with -en as in strength-en, length-en); redd-ish, redd-ish-ness; red-breast (a bird with red breast), Skelton, Phillip Sparrow, 399, Lydgate, Floure of Curteisie, st. 9, in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, p. 348; red-shank (a bird with red shanks or legs); red-start (a bird with a red tail, from A. S. steort, a tail, Exod. iv. 4), in Levins; red-hot, red-heat, red-lead, red-letter, red-tape. Allied words are ruby, rubescens, rubric, ruddy, russet.

REDDITION, a rendering, restoring. (F., — L.) In Cotgrave; and Minshew, ed. 1627. — F. reddition, 'a reddition;' Cot. — Lat. redditionem, acc. of reddito, a rendering. — Lat. redditus, pp. of reddere, to restore; see Render. Der. reddit-ive.

REDEEM, to ransom, atone for. (F., — L.) Lit. to buy back. Latimer has redemed and redeming, sb., Seven Sermons, ed. Arber, p. 202. Wyclif has redemption, Luke, i. 68. — F. redimer, 'to redeem, ransom,' Cot. [But the change of vowel is remarkable; perhaps partly due to accent, or to the influence of the sb. redemption.] — Lat. redimere, to buy back, redeem. — Lat. red-, back; and emere, to buy, orig. to take, from ✓ AM, to take. See Re- and Example. Der. redeem-er, redeem-able; redempt-ion, from F. redemption = Lat. acc. redemptionem, nom. redemptio, from redempt-us, pp. of redimere; redempt-ive, redempt-or-y. Doublet (of redemption), ransom.

REDINTEGRATION, renovation. (L.) Minshew has redintegration and redintegrate, verb. — Lat. redintegratio, sb. — Lat. redintegratus, pp. of redintegrare, to restore, renovate. — Lat. red-, again; and integrare, to renew, from integr-, stem of integer, whole. See Re- and Integer.

REDOLENT, fragrant. (F., — L.) In the Tale of Beryn, ed. Furnivall, l. 2765. — F. redolent, 'redolent;' Cot. — Lat. redolent-, stem of pres. part. of redolere, to emit odour. — Lat. red-, again; and olere, to be odorous. See Re- and Olfactory. Der. redolence, redolenc-y.

REDOUBLE, to double again. (F., — L.) 'I redoubyll, I doubyll agayne, je redouble;' Palsgrave. — F. redoubler; from re- and doubler. See Re- and Double.

REDOUBT, an intrenched place of retreat. (Ital., — L.) Used by Bacon, according to Todd's Johnson, but no reference is given. Phillips, ed. 1706, gives the spellings reduit (which is the F. form) and reduct (which is Latin). — Ital. ridotto, 'a withdrawing place;' Florio. Formed as sb. from ridotto, 'reduced, brought or led vnto, brought back safe and sound again;' Florio. This is the same word as ridotto, pp. of ridurre, to bring back, bring home. — Lat. reducere, to bring back; see Reduce. ¶ The spelling redoubt is due to confusion with O. F. redoubter, to dread, as if a redoubt were a place into which men retire out of fear! See Redoubtable. [†]

REDOUBTABLE, terrible. (F., — L.) In Cotgrave; the verb to redoubt, to fear, was formerly in use, as in Minshew. M. E. redoutable, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iv. pr. 5, l. 3763. — O. F. redoubtable, 'redoubtable,' Cot. — O. F. redoubter, to fear; orig. form redouter. See Re- and Doubt.

REDOUND, to abound, be replete with, result. (F., — L.) 'Re-dounding teares;' Spenser, F. Q. i. 3. 8. 'I redounde, je redonde;' Palsgrave. — F. redonder, 'to redound;' Cot. — Lat. redundare, to overflow, abound. — Lat. red-, again, back, hence over; and undare, to surge, flow, abound, from unda, a wave. See Re- and Undulate. Der. redund-ant, from the stem of the pres. part. of redundare; redund-ant-ly, redund-ance, redund-anc-y.

REDRESS, to set right again. (F., — L.) M. E. redressen, Chaucer, C. T. 8307. — F. redresser, 'to redress, straighten,' Cot. — F. re- (= Lat. re-) again; and dresser; see Re- and Dress. Der. redress, sb., Skelton, Magnificence, 2438; redress-ible, redress-ive.

REDUCE, to bring down, subdue, arrange. (L.) In Palsgrave. Used in the sense 'to bring back;' Rich. III, v. 5. 36. — Lat. reducere, to bring back, restore, reduce. — Lat. re-, back; and ducere, to lead, bring. See Re- and Duct, Duke. Der. reduc-ible, spelt reducable in Levins; also reduct-ion, from F. reduction, 'a reduction, reducing,' Cot. = Lat. acc. reductionem, from nom. reductio, which from reduct-us, pp. of reducere.

REDUNDANT; see under Redound.

REDUPLICATE, to multiply, repeat. (L.) In Levins. — Lat. reduplicatus, pp. of obsolete reduplicare, to redouble. See Re- and Duplicate.

RE-ECHO, to echo back. (L. and Gk.) In Spenser's Fairie Queene, Mutability, c. vi. st. 52. From Re- and Echo.

REECHY, dirty. (E.) Lit. 'smoky'; a weakened form of reeky. In Shak. Cor. ii. 1. 225, Hamlet, iii. 4. 184; Much Ado, iii. 3. 143. Cf. 'Auld reekie' as a name for Edinburgh. See Reek.

REED, a common name for certain grasses. (E.) M. E. reed, Wyclif, Matt. xii. 7. — A. S. hrood, Matt. xii. 7. + Du. riet. + G. riet, ried. Root unknown. Der. reed-ed, reed-y.

REEF (1), a ridge of rocks. (Du.) Formerly riff. 'A riff or ridge of rocks;' Dampier's Voyages, vol. i. an. 1681 (R.) Of late introduction. — Du. riff, a reef, riff, sand. Sewel (ed. 1754) explains it by 'a flat in sea, a riff.' Hexham has rif, riffe, 'a foard, or a shallow place.' + Icel. rif, a reef in the sea; cf. rifa, a rift, rent, fissure. + Dan. rev, a reef, bank; cf. revle, a shoal; revne, to crack, split. Note also Swed. refva, a strip, cleft, gap, refvel, a sand-bank. The G. riff, a reef, is prob. borrowed from Dutch. β. The orig. notion seems to be either 'strip' or 'rift'; it seems to be connected with Icel. rifa, to rive, and to be derived from the pl. of the past tense, of which the base is rif. See Rift, Rive. Der. reef-y.

REEF (2), a portion of a sail that can be drawn close together. (Du.) Fully explained in Phillips, ed. 1706. 'Up, aloft, lads; come, reef both topsails;' Dryden, Enchanted Island, Act i. sc. 1 (R.) M. E. riff, Gower, C. A. iii. 341, l. 21. — Du. reef, 'a riff in a sail;' Sewel, ed. 1754. O. Du. rif, also rif (Kilian). 'Een rif van een zeyl inbinden, to binde up a peece of a saile when the wind blows too hard;' Hexham. Hence is formed Du. reven, to reeve. + Low G. reff, riff, a little sail, which is added to a large one when there is little wind; cf. reffen, to reeve. + Swed. ref, a reef; refva, to reeve. + Dan. reb, a reef; rebe, to reeve. + Icel. rif, a reef in a sail. β. Of uncertain origin; it is usual to compare A. S. ryft, a veil, Levit. iv. 17; but Ettmüller accents this word as ryft, and connects it with E. reave. It seems simpler to connect it with rif, with the orig. notion of strip. The Icel. rif means (1) a rib, (2) a reef or rock, (3) a reef in a sail; cf. also rifriði, a shred. γ. I suppose reef (1) and reef (2) to be the same word, in the sense of 'rift' or 'strip'; and that both are to be connected with rive. Surrey writes ryft for reef (of a sail); Praise of Meane Estate, last line, in Tottell's Misc., ed. Arber, p. 28, l. 4; cf. O. Du. rif above. See Rive. Der. reef, verb; also reeve, verb, q. v.

REEK, vapour, smoke. (E.) M. E. reke, Cursor Mundi, 2744; where the Trinity MS. has reek. — A. S. reô, vapour; Grein, i. 369. + Du. rook. + Icel. reykr. + Swed. rök. + Dan. røg. + G. rauch; O. H. G. rouh. β. From the Teut. base RUK, to smoke, reek, appearing in the strong A. S. verb reôcan, to reek (pt. t. reôc, pl. rucon, Lye); as also in the Icel. verb rjúka (pt. t. rauð, pl. ruku), and in the G. riechen, O. H. G. riokhan. γ. This Teut. base answers to an Aryan base RUG, prob. allied to ✓RAG, to dye, to colour, whence Skt. raja, rajas, dimness, sky, dust, pollen, rajani, night, and the verb rañj, to dye, as well as Goth. rikwis, darkness, and Icel. rökr, twilight. If so, the orig. sense of reek is 'that which dims,' mist. See Fick, iii. 256, i. 738. Der. reek, verb = A. S. reôcan, weak verb (Grein); reek-y; also reech-y, q. v. And see lac (1), lac (2).

REEL (1), a small spindle for winding yarn. (E.) M. E. rele. 'Hoc alabrum, a reele;' Wright's Voc., p. 269, col. i. At p. 180 of the same vol., alabrum is again glossed by rele. — A. S. hroel; 'alibrum (sic), hroel;' Wright's Voc. p. 59, col. i. Ducange explains the Low Lat. alabrum as a reel. Cf. Icel. hræll or ræll, a weaver's rod or sley. It is doubtful whether the A. S. and Icel. forms should have an initial h. Root unknown. Der. reel, verb, M. E. relien, relen, orig. to wind on a reel (P. Plowman, C. x. 81, Prompt. Parv.), hence to turn round and round (Allit. Poems, C. 147), and so to stagger, Temp. v. 279. Not allied to roll.

REEL (2), a Highland dance. (Gaelic.) Commonly called 'a Scotch reel.' Todd gives the following: 'Geilles Duncane did goe before them, playing this reill or dance upon a small trump;' News from Scotland (1591), sig. B. iii. — Gael. righil, a reel, a Scottish dance.

RE-ELECT, RE-EMBARK, RE-ENACT, RE-ENFORCE, RE-ENTER, RE-ESTABLISH, RE-EXAMINE; see Elect, Embark, &c.

REEVE (1), to pass the end of a rope through a hole or ring. (Du.) A nautical word; not in Todd's Johnson. — Du. reven, to reeve. — Du. reef, a reef; because a reeved rope is used for reefing. See Reef (2). ¶ The pt. t. is usually rove; but this is a mere invention, as the verb, like all other verbs derived from sbs., is properly a weak one.

REEVE (2), an officer, steward, governor. (E.) See Chaucer's Reve's Tale. — A. S. geréfa, an officer, governor; Grein, i. 441. The orig. sense is simply 'excellent' or 'famous;' formed (by the usual change from ó to é or long ö) from A. S. róf, active, excellent, famous. Cf. O. Sax. róf, famous. Root unknown. Der. borough-reeve, port-reeve; sheriff, q. v. Not to be connected with G. graf.

REFECTION, refreshment, a repast. (F., — L.) 'Wyth a lytell refection;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 21 (R.) = F. refection, 'a refection, repast;' Cot. — Lat. refectionem, a restoring, refreshment; lit. a remaking. — Lat. refectus, pp. of reficere, to remake, restore. — Lat. re-, again, and facere, to make. See Re- and Fact. Der. refect-or-y, Dryden, Hind and Panther, iii. 530, spelt refectorie in Minshew, from Low Lat. refectorium, a hall for meals in a convent.

REFEL, to refute. (L.) In Shak. Meas. v. 94; and Palsgrave. — Lat. refellere, to shew to be false, refute. — Lat. re-, back again, in reply; and fallere, to deceive, &c. See Re- and Fall, False.

REFER, to reduce, assign, direct to an umpire. (F., — L.) 'Referre you' = betake yourself; Henrysoun, Test. of Creseide, st. 43. — O. F. referer (14th cent., Littré), F. référer, to refer. — Lat. referre, to bear back, relate, refer. — Lat. re-, back; and ferre, cognate with E. bear. See Re- and Bear (1). Der. refer-able, also spelt referr-ible (see exx. in Richardson); refer-ee, in which the suffix answers to F. pp. suffix -é, as in other cases; refer-ence, Oth. i. 3. 238; refer-end-ary, i. e. a referee, Bacon, Essay 49, from F. referendaire, which see in Cotgrave.

REFINE, to purify, make elegant. (F., — L.) In Spenser, Hymn 2, l. 47. Coined from re- and fine, but imitated from F. raffiner, 'to refine,' Cot. The F. raffiner is from re- and affiner, 'to refine, to fine as metals,' Cot.; where af- = Lat. af-, put for ad, to before f following; also -finer is due to F. fin, fine. The E. word ignores the second element. See Re- and Fine (1). Der. refin-er, refin-er-y; also refine-ment, imitated from F. raffinement, 'a refining,' Cot.

REFLECT, to throw or bend back, to ponder, think. (L.) In Shak. Rich. III. i. 4. 31. 'I reflecte, as the sonne beames do;' Palsgrave. [The sb. reflexion is in Chaucer, C. T. 10544.] — Lat. reflectere, to bend backwards. — Lat. re-, back; and flectere, to bend. See Re- and Flexible. Der. reflect-ing; reflect-or; reflect-ive, also reflex-ive, from F. reflexif, 'reflexive, reflexing,' Cot.; reflect-ive-ly, -ness; reflex, adj., from Lat. reflexus, pp. of reflectere; reflex-ible, reflex-ibil-ity.

REFLUENT, flowing back. (L.) Rare; a late word, not in Phillips. — Lat. refluent-, stem of pres. part. of refluere, to flow back. — Lat. re-, back; and fluere, to flow; see Re- and Fluent. Der. reflux, sb., in Phillips, ed. 1706, from F. reflux, 'the ebbe of the sea,' Cot.; see Flux.

REFORM, to shape anew, amend. (F., — L.) M. E. reformen, Gower, C. A. i. 273, last line. — F. reformier, 'to reforme,' Cot. — Lat. re-, again; and formare, to form, from forma, form; see Re- and Form. Der. reform-er; reform-ation, Skelton, Garland of Laurel, 411, from F. reformation, 'reformation,' Cot. = Lat. acc. reformationem, from reformatus, pp. of reformare; reform-at-ive, reform-at-or-y.

REFRACT, to bend aside rays of light. (L.) 'Visual beams refracted through another's eye;' Selden, Introduct. to Drayton's Polyolbion (R.) — Lat. refractus, pp. of refringere, to break back, hence, to turn aside. — Lat. re-, back; and frangere, to break, cognate with E. break; see Re- and Break. Der. refract-ion, Chapman, Monsieur D'Olive, Act ii. sc. 1 (Vandome's 6th speech), from F. refraction, 'a rebound,' Cot.; refract-ive, refract-ive-ness. Also refract-or-y, Troil. ii. 2. 182, a mistaken form for refractory, from F. refractaire, 'refractory,' Cot. = Lat. refractorius, stubborn, obstinate. Hence refract-or-ily, refract-or-i-ness. Also refrang-ible, a mistaken form for refring-ible, from Lat. refringere; refrang-ibil-ity, Phillips, ed. 1706; cf. mod. F. réfrangible, réfrangibilité; but it is quite possible that the F. words were borrowed from English works on optics. And see refrain (2).

REFRAIN (1), to restrain, forbear. (F., — L.) M. E. refreinen, refreyne; Wyclif, James, i. 26. — F. refrénier, 'to bridle, repress;' Cot. [Cf. E. ordain = F. ordener.] — Lat. refrenare, to bridle, hold in with a bit. — Lat. re-, back; and frēnum, a bit, curb, pl. frēna, curb and reins, a bridle. β. The Lat. frēnum is from ✓DHAR, to support, maintain, whence also Skt. dātri, to support, maintain, and Lat. firmus, firm. The sense is 'holder' or 'keeper,' from its restraint upon the horse. See Re- and Firm. ¶ As Littré well remarks, Cotgrave also has O. F. refreindre, 'to bridle, restrain, hold in;' this is from Lat. refringere, to break back, and it seems probable that refrenar and refreindre were sometimes confused; see Refract and Refrain (2).

REFRAIN (2), the burden of a song. (F., — L.) M. E. refraigne, Chaucer, Troil. ii. 1571. The sb. refraining, i. e. singing of the burden of a song, occurs in the Rom. of the Rose, 749. — F. refrain; 'refrain d'une balade, the refret, or burden of a ballade,' Cot. Cf. Prov. refranks, a refrain, refranher, to repeat (Bartsch); Port. refrão. Span. refran, a proverb, short saying in common use. So called from frequent repetition; the O. F. refreindre, to hold in, pull back (Cot-grave), is the same word as Prov. refrenker, to repeat; both are from Lat. refringere, to break back, hence, to pull back (and so to come back to, to repeat). β . So also the O. F. refret, used in the same sense (whence E. refret as in Cotgrave above), is from the Lat. refractus, pp. of refringere; see Refract. γ . It is probable that F. refrain was borrowed from Provençal rather than from Lat. directly.

REFRESH, to enliven, revive. (F., = L. and G.) M. E. refreschen, refreschen; Chaucer, C. T. 5630; Gower, C. A. iii. 25, l. 16. — O. F. refreschir, 'to refresh, cool'; Cot. — F. re (= Lat. re), again; and O. F. frez (fem. fresche), 'new, fresh, recent,' Cot. β . The O. F. frez, mod. F. frais, is from O. H. G. frisc (G. frisch), cognate with E. fresh, q. v. γ . The element fresh is, in fact, also native English; but the compound refresh was nevertheless borrowed from French, as shewn further by the early use of the derived sb. refreshment. Der. refreshment, in the Testament of Love, pt. ii (according to Richardson), shortened from O. F. refreschissement, 'a refreshment,' Cot.

REFRIGERATE, to cool. (L.) 'Their fury was asswaged and refrigerate'; Hall, Chronicle, Henry VII, an. 4; where it is used as a pp. — Lat. refrigeratus, pp. of refrigerare, to make cool again. — Lat. re, again; and frigerare, to cool, from friger = frigor, stem of frigus, sb., cold. See Re and Frigid. Der. refrigerator, refrigerat-ion, refrigerat-ive, refrigerat-ory; also refriger-ant, from the stem of the pres. part. of refrigerare.

REFT, pt. t. and pp. of Reave, q. v.

REFUGE, a shelter, retreat. (F., = L.) M. E. refuge, Chaucer, C. T. 1722. — F. refuge, 'a refuge,' Cot. — Lat. refugium, an escape, a refuge. — Lat. refugere, to flee back, retreat. — Lat. re, back; and fugere, to flee. See Re and Fugitive. Der. refug-ee, Dryden, tr. of Juvenal, Sat. iii. 129, from F. refugié, pp. of se refugier, to take shelter.

REFULGENT, shining, brilliant. (L.) In Minshen, ed. 1627. — Lat. refulgent, stem of pres. part. of refulgere, to shine back, glitter. — Lat. re, back; and fulgere, to shine. See Re and Fulgent. Der. refulgent-ly, refulgence.

REFUND, to repay. (L.) 'Refund, to melt again, reflow, cast out again, pay back'; Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. [The sense answers to that of O. F. refonder, 'to restore, pay back,' Cot. It was, not improbably, borrowed from French, and accommodated to the Lat. spelling.] — Lat. refundere, to pour back, restore. — Lat. re, back; and funderere, to pour. See Re and Fuse (1). Perhaps allied to refuse, q. v.

REFUSE, to reject, deny a request. (F., = L.) M. E. refusen, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 103, l. 21. — F. refuser, 'to refuse,' Cot. Cf. Port. refusar, Span. rehusar (for refusar), Ital. rifusare. β . Of disputed origin. Diez supposes it to have arisen as another form of refute (Lat. refutare), by confusion with Lat. recusare, to refuse, which passed into French in the form reüser, afterwards shortened to ruser; see Ruse. γ . But Scheler well suggests that F. refuser may answer to a Low Lat. form *refusare, a frequentative form of refundere (pp. refusus). The Lat. refundere meant to pour back, repay, restore, give back; and the sense of 'refusing' may have arisen from giving back a present. δ . Or again, since F. refus meant not only 'a refusal' but also 'refuse, outcasts, leavings' (Cotgrave), it may be that refuse, as a sb., meant what was rejected in fusing metals, and was used for being re-fused or fused again. It is remarkable that Florio gives no verb rifusare, but only the sb. rifuso, 'a refusall,' with the adverb a rifuso, 'carelessly, refusingly, heedlessly.' ϵ . For the origin of refute, see that word. For the etymology of refundere, see Refund. Either way, the root is \checkmark GHU, to pour. Der. refuse, sb. (Levins), M. E. refuse, Prompt. Parv., from F. refus, as above. Also refus-al (Levins), in which the suffix was added by analogy with propos-al, &c.

REFUTE, to oppose, disprove. (F., = L.) In Minshen, ed. 1627. — F. refuter, 'to refute, confute,' Cot. — Lat. refutare, to repel, repress, rebut, refute. The orig. sense was probably 'to pour back.' See Re and Confute; also Futile. Der. refut-able; refut-at-ion, from F. refutation, 'a refutation,' Cot.; refut-at-ory, from Lat. adj. refutatorius.

REGAIN, to gain back. (F., = L., and O. H. G.) In Hall's Chron. Hen. VI, an. 15 (R.) — O. F. regaigner, 'to regaine,' Cot. — F. re (= Lat. re, again); and O. F. gaigner (F. gagner), to gain, a word of German origin, as shewn under Gain (2). γ . It is clear that regain is merely the O. F. regaigner; and hence regain is not a compound of re with gain in the orig. sense of 'profit.' The latter is a Scand. word, as explained under Gain (1).

REGAL, royal, kingly. (F., = L.) Regal occurs as a sb. in The Ploverman's Tale, st. 19; but as an adj. not (perhaps) much earlier than in Levins, ed. 1570. — O. F. regal, 'regall, royal,' Cot. — Lat. regalis, royal, kingly. — Lat. reg-, stem of rex, a king, with suffix

ϕ -alis. — Lat. regere, to rule. — \checkmark RAG, to stretch, to govern; Fick, i. 739; whence Skt. ráj, to govern, ráj, to stretch, Gk. ῥάγειν, to stretch, Goth. uf-rahjan, to stretch out, &c. Cf. Skt. rájan, a king. Der. regal-ly, regal-ity; also regal-ia, q. v. From the same root are numerous words, such as cor-rect, di-rect, e-rect, rect-itude, rect-ify, rect-or; rajak; reach, right, rack (1); rig-id, reg-ent, regi-cide, regi-men, regi-ment, reg-ion, reg-ular, reign, rule; also dress, drake, bishop-ric (as relates to the suffix), &c. Doublet, royal.

REGALE, to entertain, refresh. (F., = L.?) In Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. — F. regaler, to entertain; see Littré. Cotgrave only gives se regaler, 'to make as much account of himself as if he were a king;' evidently in order to connect the word with F. regal, regal, royal; but the word was in use in F. in the 14th century as a transitive verb; see Littré.

β . The connection with regal is almost certainly wrong; but the word offers great difficulties. Minshen's Span. Dict. gives regalar, 'to cocker, to make much of, to melt.' Diez takes the sense 'to melt' to be the orig. one; whence to warm, cherish, entertain. He makes the Span. regalar = Lat. regulare, to thaw, to melt, supposing that it was a very old word, adopted at a time when g had the same sound before both a and e. γ . The Lat. regulare is from re, again, back, and gelare, to freeze; the orig. sense being 'to unfreeze,' i. e. to thaw. See Re and Gelatin. δ . But Scheler inclines to connect regale with O. F. galer, to rejoice; cf. Span. gala, parade; see Gala. This seems the simpler solution. See further in Diez and Littré. Der. regale-ment.

REGALIA, insignia of a king. (L.) Merely Lat. regalia, lit. royal things, neut. pl. of regalis, royal; see Regal.

REGARD, to observe, respect, consider. (F., = L. and O. H. G.) In Palsgrave, spelt regarde. The sb. regard seems to be in earlier use in E., occurring in Chaucer, in the phr. at regard of Pers. Tale, (Six-text, Group I, 788); but the verb is the orig. word in French. — F. regarder, 'to look, eye, see, view,' Cot. — F. re, again; and garder, 'to keep, heed, mark,' Cot. See Re and Guard. Der. regard, sb., as above; regard-er; regard-ful; regard-ful-ly, Timon, iv. 3, 81; regard-less, regard-less-ly, ness. Doublet, reward, vb.

REGATTA, a rowing or sailing match. (Ital.) Properly a rowing match; a Venetian word, as explained in the quotation from Drummond's Travels, p. 84, in Todd's Johnson; a book which Todd dates A.D. 1744, but Lowndes in 1754. — Ital. regatta, rigatta, 'a strife or contention for the maistrice,' Florio. Cf. O. Ital. rigattare, 'to wrangle, sell by retail as hucksters do, to contend, to cope or fight,' Florio. This is allied to Span. regatear, to haggle, retail provisions, also to rival in sailing (Neuman); Span. regaleo, a haggling, a regatta.

β . Referred in Mahn's Webster to Ital. riga, a line; but I do not see any connection. Rather, O. Ital. rigattare is put for Ital. recattare, to retail. So also Span. regatear is for recatear, to haggle, to proceed slowly; prob. allied to recatar, to take care, be cautious, compounded of re, again, and catar, to taste, try, view = Lat. captare. See Re and Cater.

REGENERATE, to renew, produce anew. (L.) In Levins. — Lat. regeneratus, pp. of regenerare, to generate again. — Lat. re, again; and generare; see Re and Generate. Der. regenerat-ion, M. E. regeneracioun, Wyclif, Matt. xix. 28, from O. F. regeneration (14th cent., Littré) = Lat. acc. regenerationem; regenerat-ive.

REGENT, invested with authority for an interim period. (F., = L.) In Skelton, Against the Scottes, l. 114. — F. regent, 'a regent, protector, vice-gerent,' Cot. — Lat. regent, stem of pres. part. of regere, to rule. See Regal. Der. regent-ship; also regenc-y, formed with suffix -y from F. regence, 'the regency,' Cot.

REGICIDE, the slayer of a king; or, the slaying of a king. (F., = L.) 1. The former is the older sense. 'Regicide, a king-killer;' Minshen. — F. regicide, omitted by Cotgrave, but cited by Minshen. Coined from Lat. regi-, crude form of rex, a king; and -cida, a slayer, as in fratri-cida, matri-cida. See Fratricide, Matricide, Paricide. 2. The latter answers to a word coined from Lat. regi- and -cidium, a slaying. Der. regicid-al.

REGIMEN, a prescribed rule, rule of diet. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. — Lat. regimen, guidance; formed with suffix -men from regere, to rule; see Regal.

REGIMENT, a body of soldiers commanded by a colonel. (F., = L.) Shak. has it in this sense, All's Well, ii. 1. 42; and also in the sense of 'government,' or sway; Antony, iii. 6. 95. In the latter sense, the word is old, and occurs in Gower, C. A. i. 218, l. 9. — F. regiment, 'a regiment of souldiers,' Cot. In older F., it meant 'government,' see Littré. — Lat. regimentum, rule, government; formed with suffixes -men-to- (Aryan -man-ta) from regere, to rule; see Regimen, Regal. Der. regiment-al.

REGION, a district, country. (F., = L.) M. E. region, King Alisaunder, l. 82. — F. region, 'a region,' Cot. — Lat. regionem, acc. of regio, a direction, line, boundary, territory. — Lat. regere, to rule, direct. See Regal.

REGISTER, a written record of past events. (F.,—L.) M. E. registre, P. Plowman, B. xx. 269.—F. registre, 'a record, register'; Cot. Cf. Ital. and Span. registro, Port. registro, registro, the last being the best form.—Low Lat. registrum, more correctly registum, a book in which things are recorded (regeruntur); see Ducange.—Lat. registum, neut. of regestus, pp. of regerere, to record, lit. to bring back.—Lat. re-, back; and gerere, to bring; see Re- and Jest. Der. register, verb, L. L. L. i. 1. 2, and in Palsgrave; registr-ar, M. E. registrere, P. Plowman, B. xix. 254; registr-ar-ship; registr-ar-y (Low Lat. registrarius); registr-y; registr-at-ion.

REGNANT, reigning. (L.) Mere Latin.—Lat. regnant, stem of pres. pt. of regnare, to reign.—Lat. regnum, a kingdom; see Reign. Der. regnancy.

REGRESS, return. (L.) In Shak. Merry Wives, ii. i. 226; and in Minshew, ed. 1627.—Lat. regressus, a return.—Lat. regressus, pp. of regredi, to go back.—Lat. re-, back; and gradi, to go. See Re- and Grade. Der. regress, verb; regress-ion (Lat. regressio); regress-ive.

REGRET, sorrow, grief. (F.,—L. and O. Low G.) As a verb, the word is late; it is used by Cotton (R.), and occurs in Pope, Epitaph on Fenton, l. 8. In old authors, it is only used as a sb., as in Spenser, F. Q. i. 7. 20. 'Hie regrate And still mourning;' Henrysoun, Test. of Creside, st. 57.—F. regret, 'desire, wille, also grieve, sorrow'; Cot. He also gives: à regret, 'loathly, unwillingly, with an ill stomach, hardly, mauer his head, full sore against his will'; Cot. Cf. regretter, 'to desire, affect, wish for, bewaile, bemoane, lament'; id. The F. regretter corresponds to an O. F. regrater, of which Scheler cites two examples. β. The etymology is much disputed; but, as the word occurs in no other Romance language, it is prob. of Teut. origin, the prefix re- being, of course, Latin. Perhaps from the verb which appears in Goth. grētan, to weep, Icel. gráta, to weep, bewail, mourn, Swed. gráta, Dan. grade, A. S. grátan, M. E. greten, Lowland Sc. greit. See Greet (2). Wedgwood well cites from Palsgrave: 'I mone as a chylde doth for the wantyng of his nourse or mother, je regrette.' γ. This is approved by Diez and Scheler; Littré suggests a Lat. form regradus, the return (of a disease), to suit the Walloon expression li r'gret d'an mau—the return of a disease. Mahn suggests Lat. re- and gratus, pleasing. Others suggest Lat. requiritari, but quiritari became F. crier; see Cry. See the whole discussion in Scheler. Der. regret, verb, as above; regret-ful, regret-ful-ly. [†]

REGULAR, according to rule. (L.) 'And as these canons regulæ,' i.e. regular canons; Rom. of the Rose, 6696. Rather directly from Lat. regularis than from O. F. regulier.—Lat. regula, a rule.—Lat. reg-ere, to rule, govern; see Regal. Der. regular-ly; regular-i-ty, from O. F. regularité (14th cent., Littré); regul-ate, from Lat. regulatus, pp. of regulare; regul-at-ion, regul-at-ive, regul-at-or.

REHEARSE, to repeat what has been said. (F.,—L.) M. E. rehercen, rehercen; P. Plowman, C. xviii. 25; A. i. 22.—O. F. reherser, 'to harrow over again,' Cot.; better spelt rehercer. From the sense of harrowing again we easily pass to the sense of 'going again over the same ground,' and hence to that of repetition. Cf. the phrase 'to rake up an old story.'—F. re- (= Lat. re-), again; and hercer, 'to harrow,' Cot., from herce, a harrow. The sb. herce, whence E. hearse, changed its meaning far more than the present word did; see Re- and Hearse. Der. rehears-al, spelt rehearsall in Palsgrave.

REIGN, rule, dominion. (F.,—L.) M. E. regne, Chaucer, C. T. 1638; spelt rengne, King Horn, ed. Lumby, 901, 908.—F. regne, 'a realm,' Cot.—Lat. regnum, a kingdom.—Lat. reg-ere, to rule; see Regal. Der. reign, verb, M. E. regnen, Havelok, 2586, from F. regner=Lat. regnare. And see regnant.

REIMBURSE, to refund, repay for a loss. (F.,—L. and Gk.) In Cotgrave; and in Phillips, ed. 1706. An adaptation of F. rembourser, made more full in order to be more explicit; the F. prefix rem- answering to Lat. re-im-, where im- stands for in before b following. 'Rembourser, to re-imburse, to restore money spent;' Cot. For the rest of the word, see Purse. Der. reimburse-ment, from F. remboursement, 'a re-imbursement;' Cot.

REIN, the strap of a bridle. (F.,—L.) M. E. reine, reynne, King Alisaunder, 786.—O. F. reine, 'the reign of a bridle;' Cot. Mod. F. réne. The O. F. also has resne, resgne, corresponding to Ital. redina, and to Span. rienda (a transposed form, put for redina); and these further correspond to a Low Lat. type *retina, not found, but easily evolved from Lat. retinere, to hold back, restrain, whence was formed the classical Lat. retinaculum, a tether, halter, rein. See Retain. Der. rein, verb, rein-less.

REINDEER, RAINDEER, a kind of deer. (Scand.,—Lapp; and E.) Spelt raynedere, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 922. Perhaps the obscure word ron, in An Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 92, l. 71, means a reindeer, as suggested by Stratmann. Formed by adding deer (an E. word) to Icel. hreinn, a reindeer, answering to

A. S. hrán, in Ælfred's tr. of Orosius, i. 1. § 15. [The A. S. hrán would give a form rón, just as stán gives E. stone.] Cf. O. Swed. ren, a reindeer. We find also Dan. rensdyr, Du. renndier, G. rennthier, in all of which, as in E. and Scand., the main part of the word is borrowed from Lapp, with a change of meaning.

β. Diez refers us to the Lapp and Finnish word raingo, but this is a mere misspelling of Swed. renko, lit. 'rein-cow,' the female of the reindeer. The true Lapp word for reindeer is pátsa, but it happens to be continually associated with reino, pasturage or herding of cattle, or with derivatives of reino; so that reino was wrongly applied by the Swedes to the animal itself. For proof of this, see Ihre, Lexicon Lapponicum, p. 374; where we find reino, pasturage; reinohet, to pasture; reino-hatte, frequentative of reinohet; reinohem piädnak, a dog kept for the purpose of collecting reindeer together. Hence such sentences as the following. Lapp reinoon läh mija pátsah, Swed. våra renar äro i herdarnes skötsel, our herdsmen are taking care of the reindeer, or, our reindeer are in charge of the herdsmen. Lapp pátsait warin reinohet, to pasture reindeer on the fells. Lapp reinohatte suainasebi pátsaitat, Swed. låt din dräng valla din renar, let thy servant pasture thy reindeer. This is the solution of a difficulty of long standing.

REINS, the lower part of the back. (F.,—L.) M. E. reines; spelt reynes in Wyclif, Wisdom, i. 6, later version; reenus, earlier version.—O. F. reins, 'the reines;' Cot.—Lat. renes, s. pl., the kidneys, reins, loins. Allied to Gk. φῆν, the midriff; pl. φῆνες, the parts about the heart, or about the liver. See Frenzy. Der. ren-al.

REINSTATE, REINVEST, REINVIGORATE, RE-ISSUE, REITERATE; see Instate, Invest, &c.

REJECT, to throw away or aside. (F.,—L.) 'I rejecte, I caste away, je rejecte;' Palsgrave, ed. 1530.—O. F. rejecter; mod. F. rejeter. The F. word was spelt rejecter in the 16th century, and our word seems to have been borrowed from it rather than from Latin directly; the still older spelling in O. F. was regeter.—O. F. re- (= Lat. re-), back; and O. F. geter, getter, mod. F. jeter, to throw, from Lat. iactare. See Re- and Jet (1). Cf. Lat. rejection, pp. of reicere, to reject, compounded of re- and iacere, to throw. Der. reject-ion, from F. rejection, 'a rejection;' Cot.

REJOICE, to feel glad, exult. (F.,—L.) M. E. reioisen, reioicen (with i=j), to rejoice; Chaucer, C. T. 9867; P. Plowman, C. xviii. 198.—O. F. resjois, stem of pres. part. of resjoir, mod. F. réjoir, to gladden, rejoice.—O. F. re- (= Lat. re-), again; and esjoir (mod. F. éjoir), to rejoice, used reflexively. β. Again, the O. F. esjoir is from Lat. ex-, and the vb. joir (mod. F. joir), derived, like Ital. godere, from Lat. gaudere, to rejoice. See Re-, Ex-, and Joy. Der. rejoice-ing, rejoice-ing-ly.

REJOIN, to join again. (F.,—L.) Esp. used in the legal sense 'to answer to a reply.' 'I rejoyne, as men do that answer to the lawe and make answer to the byll that is put up agaynst them;' Palsgrave.—F. rejoindre, 'to rejoin;' Cot. See Re- and Join. Der. rejoinder, Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 14, which appears to be the F. infin. mood used substantively, like attainder, remainder.

RELAPSE, to slide back into a former state. (L.) As sb. in Minshew, ed. 1627, and in Shak. Per. iii. 2. 110. Cotgrave translates the O. F. relaps by 'relapsed.' [There is no classical Lat. sb. relapsus.]—Lat. relapsus, pp. of relabi, to slide back. See Re- and Lapse. Der. relapse, sb.

RELATE, to describe, tell. (F.,—L.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 8. 51; and in Palsgrave.—F. relater, 'to relate;' Cot.—Low Lat. relatare, to relate.—Lat. relatum, used as supine of referre, to relate; which is, however, from a different root.—Lat. re-, back; and latum, supine, latus, pp., put for ilatus, from √TAL, to lift. See Re-; and see Elate. Der. relat-ed; relat-ion, P. Plowman, C. iv. 363, from F. relation, 'a relation,' Cot.; relat-ive, M. E. relatif, P. Plowman, C. iv. 391, from F. relatif; relat-ive-ly.

RELAX, to slacken, loosen. (L.) In Milton, P. L. vi. 599. [Bacon has relax as an adj., Nat. Hist. § 381.]—Lat. relaxare, to relax.—Lat. re-, back; and laxare, to loosen, from laxus, loose; see Re- and Lax. Der. relax-at-ion, in Minshew, from F. relaxation, a relaxation, Cot. Doublet, release.

RELAY (1), a set of fresh dogs or horses, a fresh supply. (F.,—L.?) Orig. used of dogs. 'What relays set you? None at all, we laid not in one fresh dog;' Ben Jonson, Sad Shepherd, Act i. sc. 2. M. E. relays, in the same sense, Chaucer, Book of the Duchess, 362.—F. relais, a relay; par relais, 'by turns,' i.e. by relays, Cot. He also gives: 'chiens de relais, 'dogs layd for a backset,' i.e. kept in reserve; chevaux de relais, 'horses layed in certain places on the highway, for the more haste making.' He explains relais as 'a seat or standing for such as hold chiens de relais,' i.e. a station.

β. The word presents much difficulty. Mr. Wedgwood quotes from a late edition of Florio: 'Cani di rilasso, fresh hounds laid for a supply set upon a deer already hunted by other dogs.' Unless this be an accommodation of the F. word, it links it to Ital. rilasciare (from Lat. relaxare), and E. Relax, q. v. The difficulty lies in explaining the O. F. laier, leier, common in the same sense as F. laisser; see Burguy. This form answers rather to Du. laten (E. let), and it would seem difficult to derive it from laxare; but Diez suggests that the future tense laisserai (of laisser) may have been contracted into lairai, which might have influenced the form of the infinitive. He cites gerrai for gesirai as the future of O. F. gesir. γ. We are thus left in some uncertainty as to whether the latter syllable of the word is due to Lat. laxare or to Du. laten, Goth. letan, words of similar meaning; see Let (1). The sense is clearly 'a rest,' and a relay of dogs is a set of fresh dogs kept at rest and in readiness. Cf. à relais, 'spared, at rest, that is not used,' Cot.; relayer, 'to succeed in the place of the weary, to refresh, relieve,' id.

RELAY (2), to lay again. (Hybrid; L. and E.) Simply compounded of Re- and Lay; and distinct from the word above.
RELEASE, to set free, relieve, let go. (F., = L.) M. E. relessen, P. Plowman, B. iii. 58; relesen, Chaucer, C. T. 8029. — O. F. relessier, F. relaisser, 'to release,' Cot. — Lat. relaxare, to relax; see Relax. Der. release, sb. Doublet, relax.

RELEGATE, to consign to exile. (L.) 'To relegate, or exile,' Minshew, ed. 1627. — Lat. relegatus, pp. of relegare, to send away, dispatch, remove. — Lat. re-, back, away; and legare, to send. See Re- and Legate. Der. relegation, from F. relegation, 'a relevation,' Cot.

RELENT, to grow tender, feel compassion. (F., = L.) In The Lamentation of Mary Magdalene, ct. 70. Altered from F. relentir, 'to slacken, . . . to relent in,' Cot. Cf. Lat. relentescere, to slacken. — F. re- and a (shortened to ra-), from Lat. re- and ad-; and lentus, slack, slow, also tenacious, pliant, akin to lenis, gentle, and E. lithe; see Lenity, Lithe. The Lat. relentescere is simply from re- and lentus, omitting ad. Der. relentless, -ly, -ness.

RELEVANT, relating to the matter in hand. (F., = L.) 'To make our probations and arguments relevant,' King Chas. I. Letter to A. Henderson (R.) It means 'assisting' or helpful. — F. relevant, pres. part. of relever, 'to raise up, also to assist,' Cot. — Lat. relevare, to lift up again. — Lat. re-, again; and levare, to lift; see Re- and Levant, Lever; also Relieve. Der. relevance, relevancy; irrelevant.

RELIC, a memorial, remnant, esp. a memorial of a saint. (F., = L.) Chiefly in the plural; M. E. relykes, s. pl., Rob. of Glouc. p. 177, last line; Chaucer, C. T. 703. — F. reliques, s. pl., 'reliques,' Cot. — Lat. reliquias, acc. of reliquia, pl., remains, relics. — Lat. relinquere (pt. t. reliqui, pp. relictus), to leave behind. — Lat. re-, back, behind; and linquere, to leave, allied to licere, to be allowable. See Re- and Licence. And see Relinquish, Relict. Der. reliquary, q. v.

RELICT, a widow. (L.) A late word; accented relict in a quotation from Garth, in Johnson's Dict. — Lat. relictus, fem. of relictus, left behind, pp. of relinquere; see Relic, Relinquish.

RELIEVE, to ease, help, free from oppression. (F., = L.) M. E. releuen (with u = v), P. Plowman, B. vii. 32; Chaucer, C. T. 4180. — F. relever, 'to raise up, relieve,' Cot. — Lat. relevare, to lift up. — Lat. re-, again; and levare, to lift; see Re- and Lever. Der. relief, M. E. relefe, Gower, C. A. iii. 23, l. 4, from O. F. relief, mod. F. relief, a sb. due to the verb relever; hence bas-relief; also rilievo, from Ital. rilievo, the relief or projection of a sculptured figure. And see relevant.

RELIGION, piety, the performance of duties to God and man. (F., = L.) In early use. Spelt religium, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 49, l. 13; Ancren Riwele, p. 8. — F. religion. — Lat. religionem, acc. of religio, piety. Allied to religens, fearing the gods, pious. [And therefore not derived from religare, to bind; as often suggested, contrary to grammatical order.] β. 'It is clear that ἀλέγω is the opposite of Lat. neg-lego [neglego, negligo], and θεῶν ἔκιν οὐκ ἀλέγομαι (Homer, II. xvi. 388) is the exact counterpart of Lat. religens and religio;' Curtius, i. 454. Thus religion and neglect are from the same root LAG; but it is a little uncertain in what sense. They seem to be connected with E. reck rather than with legend. See Reck, Neglect. Der. religionist; religions, from F. religieux, 'religious,' Cot., which from Lat. religiosus; religions-ly. [†]

RELINQUISH, to leave, abandon. (F., = L.) In Levins, ed. 1570. — O. F. relinquis, stem of pres. part. of relinquir (Burguy). — Lat. relinquere, to leave; by a change of conjugation, of which there are several other examples. See Relic. Der. relinquishment. [†]

RELIQUARY, a casket for holding relics. (F., = L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — F. reliquaire, 'a casket wherein reliques be kept,' Cot. — Low Lat. reliquiare, neut. sb., or reliquarium, a reliquary; Ducange. — Lat. reliquia, crude form of reliquia, relics. See Relic.

RELIQUE, the same as Relic, q. v.

RELISH, to have a pleasing taste, to taste with pleasure. (F., = L. and G.) In Shak. Temp. v. 23; Wint. Tale, v. 2. 132. As sb., Tw. Nt. iv. 1. 64; and in Palsgrave. — O. F. relecher, 'to lick over again,' Cot. — Lat. re-, again; and O. F. lecher, mod. F. lécher, to lick, from O. H. G. lecchôn, lechôn (G. lecken), cognate with E. Lick. See Re- and Lecher. Der. relish, sb.

RELUCTANT, striving against, unwilling. (L.) In Milton, P. L. iv. 311. — Lat. reluctant, stem of pres. part. of reluctare, reluctari, to struggle against. — Lat. re-, back, against; and luctari, to struggle, wrestle, from lucia, a wrestling. β. Lucia stands for lug-ta; cf. Gk. λυγ-ίσειν, to bend, twist, writhe in wrestling, overmaster. — ✓ RUG, to break; as in Skt. ruj, to break, bend, hurt. Der. reluctant-ly, reluctance, Milton, P. L. ii. 337; reluctancy.

RELY, to rest or repose on, trust fully. (Hybrid; L. and E.) A barbarous word, compounded of Lat. re- and E. lie, verb, to rest. [A similar compound is re-mind.] Shakespeare is an early authority for it, and he always uses it with the prep. on (five times) or upon (once). He also has reliance, followed by on, Timon, ii. 1. 22. So also to rely on, Drayton, Miseries of Q. Margaret (R.); Dryden, Epistle to J. Dryden, 130; relying in, Fletcher, Eliza, An Elegy (R.); reliers on, Beaumont and Fletcher, Woman's Prize, i. 3 (Petruchio's 24th speech). Thus to rely on is to lie back on, to lean on. See Re- and Lie (1). ¶ Not from O. F. relayer, 'to succeed to in the place of the weary, to refresh, relieve, or ease another by an undertaking of his task,' Cot.; as suggested by Wedgwood. This suits neither in sound nor sense, and certainly could not be followed by on.

Der. reli-able, a compound adj. which has completely established itself, and is by no means a new word, to which many frivolous and ignorant objections have been made; it was used by Coleridge in 1800, in the Morning Post of Feb. 18; see F. Hall, On Eng. Adjectives in -able, with special reference to Reliable, p. 29. Hence reliabil-ity, used by Coleridge in 1817; reli-able-ness, also used by the same writer. Also reli-ance, in Shak., as above, a doubly barbarous word, since both prefix and suffix are F., formed by analogy with appliance, compliance, &c. Also reli-er, as above. [†]

REMAIN, to stay or be left behind. (F., = L.) Spelt remayne in Palsgrave. Due to the O. F. impers. verb il remaint, as in the proverb 'beaucoup remaint de ce que fol pense, much is behind of that a fool accounts of, a fooler comes ever short of his intentions,' Cot. The infin. remaindre is preserved in our sb. remainder; cf. E. rejoinder from F. rejoindre, E. attainder from F. atteindre. — Lat. remanet, it remains; remanere, to remain. — Lat. re-, behind; and manere, to remain; see Re- and Manor. Der. remains, s. pl., Titus Andron., i. 81; remain-der, Temp. v. 13, see above. And see remnant.

REMAND, to send back. (F., = L.) 'Whereupon he was remanded,' Berners, tr. of Froissart, v. ii. c. 206 (R.). — F. remander, 'to send for back again,' Cot. — Lat. remandare, to send back word. — Lat. re-, back; and mandare, to enjoin, send word; see Re- and Mandate.

REMARK, to take notice of. (F., = L. and Teut.) Shak. has remark'd, Hen. VIII. 5. i. 33; and remarkable, Antony, iv. 15. 67. — F. remarquer, 'to mark, note, heed,' Cot. — Lat. re-, again; and marquer, to mark, from marque, sb., a mark, which is from G. mark, cognate with E. mark; see Re- and Mark. Der. remark-able, from F. remarquable, 'remarkable,' Cot.; remark-ably; remark-able-ness.

REMEDY, that which restores, repairs, or heals. (F., = L.) M. E. remedie, Chaucer, C. T. 1276; Ancren Riwele, p. 124, l. 22. — O. F. *remédie, not recorded, only found as remede, mod. F. remède, a remedy. Cf. O. F. remedier, verb, to remedy. — Lat. remedium, a remedy; lit. that which heals again. — Lat. re-, again; and mederi, to heal; see Re- and Medical. Der. remedy, verb (Levins, Palsgrave), from F. remedier; remedi-able (Levins); remedi-al, a coined word; remedi-al-ly.

REMEMBER, to recall to mind. (F., = L.) M. E. remembren, Chaucer, C. T. 1503. — O. F. remembrer, used reflexively, 'to remember,' Cot. Formed, with excrement b after m, due to stress, from Lat. rememorari, to remember. — Lat. re-, again; and memorare, to make mention of, from memor, mindful. See Re- and Memory. Der. remembrance, Chaucer, C. T. 8799, from F. remembrance; remembrance-er, Mach. iii. 4. 37.

REMIND, to bring to the mind again. (Hybrid; L. and E.) A barbarous compound (like rely) from Lat. re-, again, and E. mind. Rather a late word; in Bailey's Dict. vol. ii. ed. 1731. See Re- and Mind.

REMINISCENCE, recollection. (F., = L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — F. reminiscence, 'remembrance of things,' Cot. — Lat. reminiscentia, remembrance. — Lat. reminiscenti-, crude form of pres. part. of reminisci, to remember, an inceptive verb, with suffix -sci. — Lat. re-, again; and min-, base of me-min-i, I remember, think over again, from ✓ MAN, to think. See Re- and Mental.

REMIT, to pardon, abate. (L.) 'Whether the consayle be good, I remytte [leave] it to the wyse reders,' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 26 (R.). 'Remittynge [referring] them . . . to the workes of Galene; id., Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 1. — Lat. remittere, to send back, slacken, abate. — Lat. re-, back; and mittere, to send; see Re- and Mission. Der. remit-er, remitt-ance, remitt-ent; remiss, adj., from Lat. remissus, pp. of remittere; remiss-ly, remiss-ness; remiss-ible, from Lat. remissibilis; remiss-ibil-i-ty; remiss-ive. Also remiss-ion, M. E. remission, Ancren Riwle, p. 346, l. 21, from F. remission (Cot.) = Lat. acc. remissionem, from nom. remissio.

REMNANT, a remainder, fragment. (F., — L.) M. E. remanant, remanaunt, King Alisaunder, 5707. = O. F. remanant, remanant, 'a remnant, residue;' Cot. = Lat. remanenti-, stem of pres. part. of remanere, to remain; see Remain.

REMONSTRATE, to adduce strong reasons against. (L.) See Trench, Select Glossary. See Milton, Animadversions upon the Remonstrant's Defence. The sb. remonstrance is in Shak. Meas. v. 397. — Low Lat. remonstratus, pp. of remonstrare, to expose, exhibit; used A. D. 1482 (Ducange); hence, to produce arguments. — Lat. re-, again; and monstrare, to shew, exhibit; see Re- and Monster. Der. remonstrant, from the stem of the pres. part.; remonstrance, from F. remonstrance, 'a remonstrance,' Cot. = Low Lat. remonstrancia.

REMORSE, pain or anguish for guilt. (F., — L.) M. E. remors, 'But for she had a maner remors;' Lydgate, Storie of Thebes, pt. iii (Of the wife of Amphiorax). = O. F. remors, 'remorse;' Cot. = Low Lat. remorsus (also remorsio), remorse; Ducange. — Lat. remorsus, pp. of remordere, to bite again, vex. = Lat. re-, again; and mordere, to bite; see Re- and Mordacious. ¶ Chaucer has the verb remord (= O. F. remordere), tr. of Boethius, b. 4, pr. 6, l. 4030. Der. remorse-ful, Rich. III. i. 2. 156; remorse-ful-ly; remorse-less, Hamlet, ii. 2. 609; remorse-less-ly, -ness.

REMOTE, distant. (F., — L.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 4. 6. — O. F. remot, m., remote, f., 'remote, removed;' Cot. Or directly, from Lat. remotus, pp. of removere, to remove; see Remove. Der. remote-ly, -ness; also remot-ion = removal, Timon, iv. 3. 346.

REMOUNT, to mount again. (F., — L.) Also transitively, to cause to rise again, as in M. E. remounten, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. i. l. 1706. — F. remonter, 'to remount,' Cot. = F. re-, again; and monter, to mount; see Re- and Mount (2).

REMOVE, to move away, withdraw. (F., — L.) M. E. remeuen (remeven), Chaucer, Troil. i. 691, where remeve rhymes with preve, a proof. Just as we find M. E. removen for mod. E. remove, so we find M. E. preven for mod. E. prove, preve for proof. Palsgrave uses remeve and remove convertibly: 'I remeve, as an armye . . . removeth from one place to an other.' — O. F. remouvoir, 'to remove, retire;' Cot. = F. re-, again; and mouvoir, to move; see Re- and Move. ¶ The M. E. remeuen, to remove, Chaucer, C. T. 10495, though it has nearly the same sense, is quite a different word, answering to O. F. remuër, 'to move, stir,' Cot., from Lat. re- and mutare, to change. Richardson confuses the matter. Der. remov-able (Levins), remov-abil-i-ty; remov-al, a coined word; remov-er, Shak. Sonn. 116, remov-ed-ness, Wint. Tale, iv. 2. 41. Also remote, q. v.

REMNUNERATE, to recompense. (L.) In Shak. Titus, i. 398. — Lat. remuneratus, pp. of remunerare, remunerari, to reward. — Lat. re-, again; and munerare, munerari, to discharge an office, also to give, from muner, stem of munus, a gift. See Re- and Munificent. Der. remuner-able, remunerat-ion, L. L. L. iii. 133, from F. remuneration, 'a remuneration,' Cot. = Lat. remunerationem, acc. of remuneratio; remunerat-ive.

RENAL, pertaining to the reins. (F., — L.) Medical. — F. renal, 'belonging to the kidneys;' Cot. = Lat. renalis, adj., formed from ren-es, the reins; see Reins.

RENARD, a fox; see Reynard.

RENASCENT, from Re- and Nascent.

RENCOUNTER, RENCONTRE, a meeting, collision, chance combat. (F., — L.) Now commonly rencontre; formerly rencounter, used as a verb by Spenser, F. Q. i. 4. 39, ii. i. 36. = F. rencontre, 'a meeting, or incounter . . . by chance;' Cot. Cf. rencontrer, verb, 'to incounter, meet;' id. Contracted forms for reïncontrer, reïncontrer. = F. re- (= Lat. re-), again; and encontrer, to meet; see Re- and Encounter. ¶ Hence the spelling reencounter in Berners, tr. of Froissart, v. ii. c. 29 (R.).

REND, to tear, split. (E.) M. E. renden, pt. t. rente, pp. rent; Chaucer, C. T. 6217. = A. S. hrendan, rendan, not common. In the O. Northumb. versions of Luke, xiii. 7, succidite [cut it down] is glossed by hrendas vel scearfað in the Lindisfarne MS., and by ceorfas vel rendas in the Rushworth MS. Again, in Mark, xi. 8, the Lat. caedebant [they cut down] is glossed by gebugun vel rendon. Thus the orig. sense seems to be to cut or tear down. + O. Fries. renda, randa, to tear, break. β. The A. S. hrendan answers to a theoretical form *hrandian, which may be connected with hrand, the pt. t. of the Icel. strong verb hrinda, to push, kick, throw, which Fick (iii. 83) refers to ✓ KART, to cut. γ. The meaning suits exactly, and we may therefore prob. connect E. rend with Skt. krit, to cut, cut down (base of the present tense, krinta); Lithuan. kirsti, to cut, hew (see kertu in Nesselmann); and cf. Lat. crēna (= cret-na), whence E. cranny.

8. If this be right, we have a remarkable connection between the words rent and cranny, both implying 'cut' or 'slit;' see Cranny. Der. rent, sb., Jul. Caesar, iii. 2. 179; apparently quite a late word, obviously formed from the pp. rent.

RENDER, to restore, give up. (F., — L.) M. E. rendren, P. Plowman, B. xv. 601. = F. rendre, 'to render, yield;' Cot. = Low Lat. rendere, nasalized form of Lat. reddere, to restore, give back. — Lat. red-, back; and dare, to give. See Re-, Red-, and Date (1). Der. render-ing. Also rent (2), q. v. Also redd-it-ion, q. v. Also rendez-vous, q. v.

RENDEZVOUS, an appointed place of meeting. (F., — L.) In Hamlet, iv. 4. 4. = F. rendezvous, 'a rendezvous, a place appointed for the assemble of souldiers;' Cot. A substantival use of the phrase rendezvous, i. e. render yourselves, or assemble yourselves, viz. at the place appointed. β. Rendez is the imperative plural, 2nd person, of rendre, to render; and vous (= Lat. vos) is the pl. of the 2nd pers. pronoun. See Render.

RENEGADE, RENEGADO, an apostate, vagabond. (Span., — L.) Massinger's play called The Renegade was first acted in 1624. In Shak. Tw. Nt. iii. 2. 74, the first folio has 'a verie Renegatho;' a spelling which represents the sound of the Spanish d. The word was at first renegado, and afterwards renegade by loss of the final syllable. — Span. renegado, 'an apostata,' Minsheu; lit. one who has denied the faith; pp. of renegar, 'to forsake the faith,' id. = Low Lat. renegare, to deny again. = Lat. re-, again; and negare, to deny; see Re- and Negative. ¶ 1. The word was not really new to the language, as it appears in M. E. as renegat; but the M. E. renegat having been corrupted into runagate, the way was cleared for introducing the word over again; see Runagate. 2. The odd word renege (with g hard), in King Lear, ii. 2. 84, = Low Lat. renegare; so also M. E. reneye, P. Plowman, B. xi. 120. Doublet, runagate.

RENEW, to make new again. (Hybrid; L. and E.) M. E. renewen, Wyclif, 2 Cor. iv. 16; where the Lat. renovatur is translated by is renewid. From Re- and New. Der. renew-al, a coined word; renew-able, also coined. Doublet, renovate.

RENNET (1), the prepared inner membrane of a calf's stomach, used to make milk coagulate. (E.) 'Renet, for chese, coagulum;' Levins. The word is found with various suffixes, but is in each case formed from M. E. rennen, A. S. rinnan, rennan, to run, because rennet causes milk to run, i. e. to coagulate or congeal. This singular use of E. run in the sense 'to congeal' does not seem to be noticed in the Dictionaries. Pegge, in his Kentisms (E. D. S. Gloss. C. 3) uses it; he says: 'Runnet, the herb gallium [Galium verum], called in Derbyshire erning, Anglice cheese-runnet; it runs the milk together, i. e. makes it curdle.' 'Earn, Yearn, to coagulate milk; earning, yearning, cheese-rennet, or that which curdles milk;' Brockett. Here earn (better ern) is put, by shifting of r, for ren; just as A. S. gyran (irnan) is another form of rinnan, to run. Cf. Gloucestershire running, rennet (E. D. S. Gloss. B. 4). 'Renlys, or rendlys, for mylke, [also] renels, Coagulum;' Prompt. Parv. 'As nourishing milk, when runnet is put in, Runs all in heaps of tough thick curd, though in his nature thin;' Chapman, tr. of Homer, II. v, near the end. So also A. S. 'rynnig, coagulum; gerunnen, coagulated;' Wright's Vocab. i. 27; last line, i. 28, first line. All from A. S. rinnan, to run; also found as rennan, A. S. Chron. an. 656, in the late MS. E.; see Thorpe's edition, p. 52, l. 7 from bottom. See Run. + O. Du. rinsel, runsel, or renninge, 'curds, or milk-runnet,' Hexham; from rinnen, 'to presse, curdle;' id. Cf. geronnen melck, 'curded or rennet milke;' id. Cf. G. rinnen, to run, curdle, coagulate.

RENNET (2), a sweet kind of apple. (F., — L.) Formerly spelt renat or renate, from a mistaken notion that it was derived from Lat. renatus, renewed or born again. 'The renat, which though first it from the pippin came. Grown through his pureness nice, assumes that curious name;' Drayton, Polyolbion, song 18. = F. reinette, rainette, a pippin, rennet; Hamilton. Scheler and Littré agree to connect it with O. F. rainette, 'a little frog' (Cot.), the dimin. of raïne, a frog, because the apple is speckled like the skin of a frog. In this case, it is derived from Lat. rana, a frog. See Ranunculus.

RENOUCE, to give up, reject, disown. (F., — L.) M. E. renoucen, Gower, C. A. i. 258, l. 3. = F. renoncer, 'to renounce;' Cot. = Lat. renunciare, better renuntiare, to bring back a report, also, to disclaim, renounce. — Lat. re-, back; and nuntiare, to bring a message, from nuntius, a messenger; see Re- and Nuncio. Der. renounce-ment, Meas. for Meas. i. 4. 35; also renunciation, q. v.

RENOVATE, to renew. (L.) A late word; in Thomson's Seasons, Winter, 704. But the sb. renovation is in Bacon, Life of Henry VII, ed. Lumby, p. 203, l. 33. — Lat. renovatus, pp. of renovare, to renew. = Lat. re-, again; and nous, new, cognate with

E. new; see Re- and New. Der. renovat-ion, from F. renovation, 'a renovation,' Cot.; renovat-or. Doublet, renew.

RENOWN, celebrity, fame. (F., -L.) Put for renowm; by the influence of the former n, which assimilated the final letter to itself. M. E. renoun, Chaucer, C. T. 14553; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 131, l. 5; King Alisaunder, 1448. [But also renomé, renommé, in three syllables, with final e as F. é; Gower, C. A. ii. 43, l. 26; Barbour's Bruce, iv. 774; renounee, Barbour's Bruce, viii. 290.] In Bruce, ix. 503, one MS. has the pp. renounit, spelt renommit in the other. -F. renom [also renommée], 'renowne, fame;' Cot. Cf. renommé, 'renowned, famous;' Cot. And observe that renon occurs in O. F. of the 12th and 13th centuries (Littre), so that the change to final n is rather F. than E. Cf. Port. renome, renown; Span. renombre, renown, also a surname; and Span. renombrar, to renown. -F. re- (=Lat. re-), again; and nom, a name; hence renown=a renaming, repetition or celebration of a name. See Re- and Noun. Der. renoun, verb, in Barbour, as above.

RENT (1), a tear, fissure, breach. (E.) See Rend.

RENT (2), annual payment for land, &c. (F., -L.) In very early use; occurring, spelt rente, in the A. S. Chron. an. 1137; see Thorpe's edition, p. 383, l. 12. -F. rente, 'rent, revenue;' Cot. Cf. Ital. rendita, rent; which shews the full form of the word. From a nasalised form (rendita) of Lat. reddita, i. e. reddita pecunia, money paid; fem. of redditus, pp. of reddere, to give back, whence F. rendre, and E. render. Rent=that which is rendered; see Render. Der. rent-er, rent-roll; also rent-al, P. Ploverman, B. vi. 92.

RENUNCIATION, a renouncing. (F., -L.) In Cotgrave. It is neither true F. nor true Lat., but prob. taken from F., and modified by a knowledge of the Lat. word. -F. renonciation, 'a renunciation;' Cot. -Lat. renuntiatio, acc. of renuntiatio, a renouncing. -Lat. renuntiatus, pp. of renuntiare; see Renounce.

REPAIR (1), to restore, fill up anew, amend. (F., -L.) 'The fishes flete with new repaired scale;' Lord Surrey, Description of Spring, l. 8. -F. reparer, 'to repaire, mend;' Cot. -Lat. reparare, to get again, recover, repair. -Lat. re-, again; and parare, to get, prepare; see Re- and Parade. Der. repair, sb., repair-er; reparable, in Levins, from F. reparable, 'reparable,' Cot., from Lat. reparabilis; repar-abil-y; repar-at-ion, Palsgrave, from F. reparation, 'a reparation,' Cot.; repar-at-ive.

REPAIR (2), to resort, go to. (F., -L.) M. E. repairen, Chaucer, C. T. 5387. -F. repairen, 'to haunt, frequent, lodge in;' Cot. Older form reparier (Burguy); cf. Span. repariar, Ital. ripariare, to return to one's country. -Lat. repariare, to return to one's country. -Lat. re-, back; and patria, one's native land, from patri-, crude form of pater, a father, cognate with E. father. See Re- and Father. Der. repair, sb., Hamlet, v. 2. 238.

REPARTEE, a witty reply. (F., -L.) A misspelling for repartie or reparty. 'Some reparty, some witty strain;' Howell, Famil. Letters, b. i. sect. 1. let. 18. -F. repartie, 'a reply;' Cot. Orig. fem. of repartir, pp. of repartir, 'to redivide, to answer a thrust with a thrust, to reply;' Cot. -F. re- (=Lat. re-), again; and partir, to part, divide, also to dart off, rush, burst out laughing = Lat. partire, partiri, to share, from part-, stem of pars, a part. See Re- and Part.

REPAST, a taking of food; the food taken. (F., -L.) M. E. repast, P. Ploverman, C. x. 148; Gower, C. A. iii. 25, l. 4. -O. F. repast (Littre), later repas, 'a repast, meal;' Cot. -F. re- (=Lat. re-), again; and past, 'a meal, repast,' Cot., from Lat. pastum, acc. of pasus, food, orig. pp. of pasce, to feed. See Re- and Pasture. Der. repast, vb., Hamlet, iv. 5. 157.

REPAY, to pay back, recompense. (F., -L.) Spelt repaye in Palsgrave. -O. F. repayer, to pay back; given in Palsgrave and in use in the 15th cent. (Littre); obsolete. See Re- and Pay. Der. repay-able, repay-ment.

REPEAL, to abrogate, revoke. (F., -L.) 'That it might not be repealed;' Chaucer's Dream (a 15th-century imitation), l. 1365. Altered (by a substitution of the common prefix re- for F. ra-) from O. F. rapeler, F. rappeler, 'to repeale, revoke,' Cot. -F. re-, for re- (=Lat. re-), again, back; and O. F. apeler, later appeler, to appeal. Thus repeal is a substitution for re-appeal; see Re- and Appeal. Der. repeal, sb., Cor. iv. 1. 41; repeal-er, repeal-able.

REPEAT, to say or do again, rehearse. (F., -L.) 'I repete, I rehere my lesson, je repete;' Palsgrave. -F. repeter, 'to repeat;' Cot. -Lat. repetere, to attack again, reseek, resume, repeat; pp. repetitus. -Lat. re-, again; and petere, to seek; see Re- and Petition. Der. repeat-ed-ly, repeat-er; repeat-it-ion, from F. repetition, 'a repetition,' Cot., from Lat. acc. repetitionem.

REPEL, to drive back, check. (L.) 'I repelle, I put backe (Lydgat);' Palsgrave, who thus refers us to Lydgat. -Lat. repellere, to drive back; pp. repulsus. -Lat. re-, back; and pellere, to drive; see Re- and Pulse. Der. repell-ent, from the stem of the pres. part.; repell-er; and see repulse.

REPENT, to feel sorrow for what one has done, to rue. (F., -L.) M. E. repenten, King Alisaunder, 4224. -F. repentir, reflexive verb, 'to repent;' Cot. -Lat. re-, again; and penitere, used impersonally in the sense 'to repent;' see Re- and Penitent. Der. repent-ant, M. E. repentant, Rob. of Glouc., p. 291, l. 12, from F. repentant, pres. part. of repentir; repent-ance, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 55, from F. repentance.

REPERCUSSION, reverberation. (F., -L.) 'That, with the repercussion of the air;' Drayton, Man in the Moon (R.) 'Salute me with thy repercussive voice;' Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, Act. i. sc. 1 (Mercury). -F. repercussion, 'repercussion;' Cot. -Lat. acc. repercussione; see Re- and Percussion. Der. repercuss-ive, from F. repercussif, 'repercussive,' Cot.

REPATORY, a treasury, magazine. (F., -L.) Formerly also a list, index. 'A repatorie or index;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxx. c. 1 (Of Hermippus). -O. F. *repatorie, not found, later repertoire, 'a repertory, list, roll;' Cot. -Lat. repertorium, an inventory. -Lat. repertor, a discoverer, inventor. -Lat. repertus, pp. of reperire, to find out, invent. -Lat. re-, again; and parire (Ennius), usually parere, to produce; see Re- and Parent.

REPETITION; see under Repeat.

REPINE, to be discontented. (L.) Spelt repyne in Palsgrave; compounded of re- (again) and pine, to fret. No doubt pine was, at the time, supposed to be a true E. word, its derivation from the Latin having been forgotten. But, by a fortunate accident, the word is not a hybrid one, but wholly Latin. See Re- and Pine. (For hybrid words, see re-mind, re-new, re-ly.)

REPLACE, to put back. (F., -L.) 'To chase th' usurper, and replace the king;' Daniel, Civil Wars, b. iii (R.) From Re- and Place. Suggested by F. remplacer, 'to re-implace;' Cot. Der. replace-ment.

REPLENISH, to fill completely, stock. (F., -L.) M. E. replenissen. 'Replenished and fulfilled;' Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. 4, l. 469. -O. F. repleniss-, stem of pres. part. of replenir, to fill up again (Burguy); now obsolete. -Lat. re-, again; and a Lat. type *plenus, formed as a verb from plenus, full. See Re- and Plenitude. Der. replenish-ment. And see replete.

REPLETE, quite full. (F., -L.) Chaucer has replete, C. T. 14963; repletion, id. 14929. -F. replet, m., replete, f., 'repleat;' Cot. -Lat. repletum, acc. of repletus, filled up, pp. of replere, to fill again. -Lat. re-, again; and plere, to fill, from PAR, to fill; see Replenish. Der. replet-ion, from F. repletion, 'a repletion,' Cot.

REPLEVY, to get back, or return, goods detained for debt, on a pledge to try the right in a law-suit. (F., -L.) 'Replevie, to redeliver to the owner upon pledges or surety; it is also used for the bailing a man;' Blount, Nomolexicon, ed. 1691. Spelt replevie, Spenser, F. Q., iv. 12. 21. Butler has replevin as a verb, Hudibras, The Lady's Answer, l. 4. -F. re- (=Lat. re-), again; and plevir, 'to warrant, be surety, give pledges,' Cot. The E. word follows the form of the pp. plevi.

β. The suggestion of Diez, that O. F. plevir is due to Lat. præbere, to afford (hence, to offer a pledge), is the most likely solution. See Re- and Pledge. Der. replev-in, properly a sb., from F. re- and O. F. plevine, 'a warranty,' Cot. [†]

REPLY, to answer. (F., -L.) M. E. replen, replen; Chaucer, Prol. to Legend of Good Women, 343. -O. F. replier, the true old form which was afterwards replaced by the 'learned' form repliquer, to reply. -Lat. replicare (pp. replicatus), to fold back; as a law term, to reply. -Lat. re-, back; and plicare, to fold. See Re- and Ply. Der. reply, sb., Hamlet, i. 2. 121; reply-at-ion, Chaucer, C. T. 1848, =Lat. acc. replicationem, from nom. replicatio, a reply, a law-term, as at first introduced. Also replica, lit. a repetition, from Ital. replica, a sb. due to replicare, to repeat, reply.

REPORT, to relate, recount. (F., -L.) M. E. reporten, Chaucer, C. T. 4572. -F. reporter, 'to recarre, bear back;' Cot. -Lat. reportare, to carry back. See Re- and Port (1). Der. report, sb., Chaucer, Troilus, i. 593; report-er.

REPOSE, to lay at rest, to rest. (F., -L. and Gk.) 'A mynde With vertue fraught, reposed, voyd of gile;' Surrey, Epitaph on Sir T. W., l. 24; Tottell's Misc., ed. Arber, p. 29. -F. reposer, 'to repose, pause, rest, or stay,' Cot. Cf. Ital. riposare, Span. reposar, Port. repousar, Prov. repausar (Bartsch); all answering to Low Lat. repausare, whence repausatio, a pausing, pause (White). -Lat. re-, again; and pausare, to pause, from pausa, a pause, of Greek origin; see Re- and Pause. ¶ This word is of great importance, as it appears to be the oldest compound of pausare, and gave rise to the later confusion between Lat. pausare (of Gk. origin), and the pp. positus of Lat. ponere. See Pose. Der. repose, sb., Spenser, F. Q. iii. 4. 6, from F. repos, 'repose,' Cot.; repos-al, King Lear, ii. 1. 70.

REPOSITORY, a place in which things are stored up, storehouse. (F., -L.) Spelt repositorie in Levins and Minshew. -O. F. *repositorie, (not found), later repositoire, 'a store-house,' Cot. -Lat.

repositorium, a repository. Formed with suffix -or-i-um from reposit-us, pp. of reponere, to lay up. See Re- and Position.

REPREHEND, to blame, reprove. (L.) M. E. reprehenden, Chaucer, Troilus, i. 510. It must have been taken from Lat., as the O. F. form was reprendre in the 12th century. — Lat. reprehendere (pp. reprehensus), to hold back, check, blame. — Lat. re-, back; and prehendere, to hold, seize. See Re- and Comprehend. Der. reprehension, Chaucer, Troil. i. 684, prob. direct from Lat. acc. reprehensionem, as the O. F. reprehension does not seem to be older than the 16th century; reprehens-ive; reprehens-ible, from Lat. reprehensibilis; reprehens-ibl-y. And see repraisal.

REPRESENT, to describe, express, exhibit the image of, act the part of. (F., — L.) M. E. representen, Rom. of the Rose, 7404. — O. F. representier, 'to represent, express'; Cot. — Lat. representare, to bring before one again, exhibit. — Lat. re-, again; and presentare, to present, hold out, from presens, stem of presens, present. See Re- and Present (1). Der. represent-able, represent-at-ion, represent-at-ive.

REPRESS, to restrain, check. (F., — L.) M. E. repressen, Gower, C. A. iii. 166, l. 26. Coined from Re- and Press (1), with the sense of Lat. reprimere. The F. represser merely means to press again. Der. repress-ion, repress-ive. And see reprimand.

REPRIVE, to delay the execution of a criminal. (F., — L.) In Spenser, F. Q. iv. 12. 21. It is really the same word as reprove, of which the M. E. form was commonly repreuen (= reproven), with the sense to reject, put aside, disallow. To reprive a sentence is to disallow or reject it. Palsgrave has repreue for reprove. 'The stoon which men bilydnye repreuden' = the stone which the builders rejected; Wyclif, Luke, xx. 17. See Reprove. Der. reprive, sb., Cor. v. 2. 53. Doublet, reprove.

REPRIMAND, a reproof, rebuke. (F., — L.) In the Spectator, no. 112. — F. reprimande, formerly reprimende, 'a check, reprehension, reproof'; Cot. — Lat. reprimenda, a thing that ought to be repressed; fem. of fut. part. pass. of reprimere, to repress; see Re- and Press (1). Der. reprimand, verb.

REPRINT, to print again. (F., — L.) Prynne refers to a book 'printed 1599, and now reprinted 1629'; Histrio-mastix, part i. p. 358 (R.). From Re- and Print. Der. reprint, sb.

REPRISAL, anything seized in return, retaliation. (F., — Ital., — L.) It means 'a prize' in Shak. i Hen. IV, iv. i. 118. Spelt reprisels, pl., in Minshew, ed. 1627. — O. F. represaille, 'a taking or seizing on, a prise, or a reprisal'; Cot. [The change of vowel is due to the obsolete verb repriser, to seize in return, Spenser, F. Q. iv. 4. 8, from the pp. repris of O. F. reprindere = Lat. reprehendere.] — Ital. ripresaglia, 'booties, preyes, prisals, or anything gotten by prize, bribing, or bootie'; Florio. — Ital. ripresa, 'a reprisal or taking again'; id. Fem. of ripreso, pp. of riprendere, 'to reprehend, also to take again, retake'; id. — Lat. reprehendere; see Reprehend. And see Prize (1).

REPROACH, to upbraid, revile, rebuke. (F., — L.) In Shak. Meas. for Meas. v. 426. [But it is tolerably certain that the sb. reproach was in use, in E., before the verb; it occurs, spelt reproche, in Skelton, Bowge of Courte, l. 26.] — F. reprocher, 'to reproach, . . object or impute unto'; Cot.; whence the sb. reproche, 'a reproach, imputation, or casting in the teeth'; id. Cf. Span. reprochar, vb., reprocha, sb.; Prov. repropchar, to reproach (cited by Diez). We also find Prov. repropchiers, reprojers, sb., a proverb (Bartsch). β. The etymology is disputed, yet it is not doubtful; the late Lat. appropiare became O. F. aprocher and E. approach, so that reproach answers to a Lat. type *repropiare, not found, to bring near to, hence to cast in one's teeth, impute, object. See Diez, who shews that other proposed solutions of the word are phonetically impossible. γ. Scheler well explains the matter, when he suggests that *repropiare is, in fact, a mere translation or equivalent of Lat. obicere (objicere), to cast before one, to bring under one's notice, to reproach. So also the G. woruerfen, to cast before, to reproach. δ. And hence we can explain the Prov. repropchiers, lit. a bringing under one's notice, a hint, a proverb. ε. The form *repropiare is from re-, again, and propi-us, adv., nearer, comp. of prope, near; see Propinquity and Approach. Der. reproach, sb.; reproach-able, reproach-abl-y; reproach-ful, Titus Andron. i. 308; reproach-ful-ly.

REPROBATE, depraved, vile, base. (L.) Properly an adj., as in L. L. L. i. 2. 64; also as sb., Meas. iv. 3. 78. — Lat. reprobatus, censured, reprov'd, pp. of reprobare; see Reprove. Der. reprobation, a reading in the quarto editions for reprobance, Oth. v. 2. 209, from O. F. reprobation, omitted by Cotgrave, but in use in the 16th cent. (Littre) = Lat. acc. reprobationem.

REPRODUCE, to produce again. (L.) In Cotgrave, to translate F. reproduire. From Re- and Produce. Der. reproduct-ion, reproduct-ive.

REPROVE, to condemn, chide. (F., — L.) M. E. repreuen (reproven), P. Plowman, C. iv. 389. [Also spelt repreuen; see Reprove.] — O. F. reprover, mod. F. réprouver, to reprove; Littre. — Lat. reprobare, to disapprove, condemn. — Lat. re-, again; and probare, to test, prove; hence 'to reprove' is to reject on a second trial, to condemn. See Re- and Prove. Der. reprov-er; reprov-able, reprov-abl-y. Also reproof, M. E. reprove, reproof, Gower, C. A. iii. 230, l. 2, i. 20, l. 8; see Proof. And see reprob-ate. Doublet, reprove.

REPTILE, crawling, creeping. (F., — L.) In Cotgrave. — F. reptile, 'reptile, creeping, crawling'; Cot. — Lat. reptilem, acc. of reptilis, creeping; formed with suffix -ilis from rept-us, pp. of repere, to creep. + Lithuan. reptoti, to creep (Nesselmann). β. From ✓ RAP, to creep, which is a mere variant of the ✓ SARP, to creep; see Serpent. Der. reptil-i-an.

REPUBLIC, a commonwealth. (F., — L.) Spelt republique in Minshew, ed. 1627. — F. republique, 'the commonwealth'; Cot. — Lat. respublica, a commonwealth; put for res publica, lit. a public affair. See Real and Public. Der. republic-an, republic-an-ism.

REPUDIATE, to reject, disavow. (L.) In Levins. — Lat. repudiatus, pp. of repudiare, to put away, reject. — Lat. repudium, a casting off, divorce, lit. a rejection of what one is ashamed of. — Lat. re-, away, back; and pu-, base of pu-dere, to feel shame, pu-dor, shame (of doubtful origin). Der. repudiat-or; repudiat-ion, from F. repudiation, 'a refusall', Cot.

REPUGNANT, hostile, adverse. (F., — L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; and in Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. ii. c. 11 (R.). The word is rather F. than Lat.; the sb. repugnance is in Levins, ed. 1570, and occurs, spelt repugnance, in Skelton, Garland of Laurell, 311. The verb to repugn was in rather early use, occurring in Wyclif, Acts, v. 39; but appears to be obsolete. — F. repugnant, pres. part. of repugner, 'to repugne, crosse, thwart'; Cot. — Lat. repugnare, lit. to fight against. — Lat. re-, back, hence against; and pugnare, to fight; see Re- and Pugnacious. Der. repugnance, from O. F. repugnance, 'repugnancy', Cot.

REPULSE, to repel, beat off. (L.) Surrey translates Lat. repulsi in Virgil, Æn. ii. 13, by repulst. 'Oftentymes the repulse from promoyce is cause of dyscomforte'; Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 12. — Lat. repulsus, pp. of repellere, to repel; see Repel. β. The sb. answers to Lat. repulsa, a refusal, repulse; orig. fem. of the pp. repulsus. Der. repulse, sb., as above; repuls-ive, -ly, -ness; repuls-ion.

REPUTE, to estimate, account. (F., — L.) 'I repute, I estyme, or judge, Je repute'; Palsgrave. The sb. reputation is in Chaucer, C. T. 12536, 12560. — O. F. reputer, 'to repute'; Cot. — Lat. reputare, to repute, esteem. — Lat. re-, again; and putare, to think; see Re- and Putative. Der. reput-able, reput-abl-y, reput-able-ness; reput-ed-ly; reput-at-ion, from F. reputation, 'reputation, esteem', Cot. [+]

REQUEST, an entreaty, petition. (F., — L.) M. E. requeste, Chaucer, C. T. 2687. — O. F. requeste, 'a request'; Cot. — Lat. requisita, a thing asked, fem. of pp. of requirere, to ask; see Re- and Quest; and see Require. Der. request, verb, Two Gent. i. 3. 13.

REQUIEM, a mass for the repose of the dead. (L.) 'The requiem-masse to synge'; Skelton, Phylp Sparowe, 401. The Mass for the Dead was called the requiem, because the anthem or officium began with the words 'Requiem eternam dona eis, Domine', &c.; see Procter, On the Common Prayer. — Lat. requiem, acc. of requies, rest. — Lat. re-, again; and quies, rest; see Re- and Quiet. And see Dirge.

REQUIRE, to ask, demand. (F., — L.) Spelt requyre in Palsgrave. M. E. requiren, Chaucer, C. T. 8306; in l. 6634, we find requere, rhiming with there. The word was taken from F., but influenced by the Lat. spelling. — O. F. requerir, 'to request, intreat'; Cot. — Lat. requirere, lit. to seek again (pp. requisitus). — Lat. re-, again; and querere, to seek; see Re- and Quest. Der. requir-able; require-ment, a coined word; requis-ite, adj., Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 687, from Lat. pp. requisitus; requis-ite, sb., Oth. ii. i. 251; requis-it-ion, from F. requisition, 'a requisition', Cot.; requis-it-ion-ist.

REQUITE, to repay. (F., — L.) In Shak. Temp. v. 169. Surrey translates si magna rependam (Æn. ii. 161) by 'requite thee large amendes'. The word ought rather to be requit; cf. 'hath requit it', Temp. iii. 3. 71. But just as quite occurs as a variant of quit, so requite is put for requit; see Re- and Quit. Der. requit-al, Merry Wives, iv. 2. 3.

REREDOS, a screen at the back of an altar. (F., — L.) 'A reredosse in the hall'; Harrison, Desc. of Eng. b. ii. c. 12; ed. Furnivall, p. 240. Hall, in his Chronicle (Henry VIII, an. 12) enumerates 'harths, reredorses, chinnayes, ranges'; Richardson. Compounded of rear, i. e. at the back, and F. dos (= Lat. dorsum), the back; so that the sense is repeated. See Rear (2) and Dorsal. REREMOUSE, REARMOUSE, a bat. (E.) Still in use in the West of England; Halliwell. The pl. reremys occurs in Rich.

the Redeles, ed. Skeat, iii. 272. = A.S. hræmús, a bat; Wright's Vocab., p. 77, col. 1, last line. β. Most likely named (like prov. E. flutter-mouse, a bat) from the flapping of the wings; from A.S. hræran, to agitate, a derivative of hrór, motion (with the usual change from ó to o), allied to hrór, adj., active, quick; see Grein, ii. 102, 108. Cf. Icel. hræra, G. rühren, to stir; Icel. hræra tungu, to wag the tongue. And see Mouse.

REReward, the same as Rearward, q. v.

RESCIND, to repeal, annul. (F., = L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = F. rescinder, 'to cut or pare off, to cancell'; Cot. = Lat. rescindere, to cut off, annul. = Lat. re-, back; and scindere (pp. scissus), to cut; see Re and Schism. Der. rescission, from O. F. rescision, 'a rescision, a cancelling'; Cot., from Lat. acc. rescisionem.

RESCRIPT, an official answer, edict. (F., = L.) In Cotgrave. = O. F. rescript, 'a rescript, a writing back, an answer given in writing'; Cot. = Lat. rescriptum, a rescript, reply; neut. of rescriptus, pp. of rescribere, to write back; see Re and Scribe.

RESCUE, to free from danger, deliver from violence. (F., = L.) M. E. rescoven, rescoven, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iv. met. 5, l. 3809. = O. F. rescourre, 'to rescue'; Cot. The same word as Ital. riscuotere. = Low Lat. rescutere, which occurs A. D. 1308 (Ducange); which stands for rexcutere. So also the O. F. rescoussu, a rescue, answers to Low Lat. rescussa = Lat. rexcussa, fem. pp. of the same verb; and mod. F. rescousse = Low Lat. recussa, the same sb. with the omission of ex. β. From Lat. re-, again; and excute (pp. excussus), to shake off, drive away, comp. of ex, off, and quater, to shake; see Re, Ex, and Quash. Der. rescue, sb., M. E. rescou, Chaucer, C. T. 2645, from the O. F. rescoussu, 'rescue'; Cot. [†]

RESEARCH, a careful search. (F., = L.) 'Research, a strict inquiry'; Phillips, ed. 1706. From Re and Search. Cf. O. F. recherche, 'a diligent search'; Cot.; mod. F. recherche.

RESEMBLE, to be like. (F., = L.) M. E. resemblen, Gower, C. A. iii. 117, l. 20. = O. F. resembler, 'to resemble'; Cot. Mod. F. resembler. = F. re-, again; and sembler, 'to seem, also to resemble'; id. = Lat. re-, again; and simulare, more generally simulare, to imitate, copy, make like, from similis, like; see Re and Similar. Der. resemblance, M. E. resemblance, Gower, C. A. i. 83, l. 4, from O. F. resemblance, 'a resemblance'; Cot.

RESENT, to take ill, be indignant at. (F., = L.) Orig. merely to be sensible of a thing done to one; see Trench, Select Glossary. In Beaumont, Psyche, canto iv. st. 156. 'To resent, to be sensible of, or to stomach an affront'; Phillips, ed. 1706. Blount's Gloss. has only the sb. resentment, also spelt resentment. = O. F. resentir, resentir. 'Se ressentir, to taste fully, have a sensible apprehension of; se ressentir de iniure, to remember, to be sensible or desire a revenge of, to find himself aggrieved at a thing'; Cot. Thus the orig. sense was merely 'to be fully sensible of, without any sinister meaning.' = F. re-, again; and sentir, to feel, from Lat. sentire, to feel; see Re and Sense. Der. resentment, from F. ressentiment; resentful, -ly.

RESERVE, to keep back, retain. (F., = L.) M. E. reserven (with u = y), Chaucer, C. T. 188. = O. F. reserver, 'to reserve'; Cot. = Lat. reservare, to keep back. = Lat. re-, back; and servare, to keep; see Re and Serve. Der. reserve, sb., from O. F. reserve, 'store, a reservation'; Cot.; reserv-ed, reserv-ed-ly, -ness; reserv-al-ion; also reserv-air, a place where any thing (esp. water) is stored up, Swinburne's Trav. in Spain, p. 199, from F. reservoir, 'a store-house', Cot., which from Low Lat. reservatorium (Ducange).

RESIDE, to dwell, abide, inhere. (F., = L.) See Trench, Select Glossary. In Shak. Temp. iii. 1. 65. [The sb. residence is much earlier, in Chaucer, C. T. 16128.] = O. F. resider, 'to reside, stay'; Cot. = Lat. residere, to remain behind, reside. = Lat. re-, back; and sedere, to sit, cognate with E. sit; see Re and Sit. Der. residence, as above, from F. residence, 'a residence, abode'; Cot.; residence, Bemers, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 210, and c. 219 (R.); residence, residence; residence-y. And see reside-us.

RESIDUE, the remainder. (F., = L.) M. E. residue, P. Plowman, B. vi. 102. = O. F. residu, 'the residue, overplus'; Cot. = Lat. residuum, a remainder; neut. of residuum, remaining. = Lat. resid-ere, to remain, also to reside; see Reside. Der. residual, residu-ary. Doublet, residuum, which is the Lat. form. [†]

RESIGN, to yield up. (F., = L.) M. E. resignen, Chaucer, C. T. 5200. = F. resigner, 'to resigne, surrender'; Cot. = Lat. resignare, to unseal, annul, assign back, resign. Lit. 'to sign back or again.' See Re and Sign. Der. resign-al-ion, from F. resignation, 'a resignation'; Cot.

RESILIENT, rebounding. (L.) 'Whether there be any such resilience in Echo's'; Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 245. = Lat. resiliens, stem of pres. part. of resilire, to leap back, rebound. = Lat. re-, back; and salire, to leap; see Re and Salient. Der. resilience. Also resili, q. v.

RESIN, ROSIN, an inflammable substance, which flows from trees. (F., = L., = Gk.) Resin is the better and older form. 'Great abundance of rosin;' Holland, tr. of Plutarch, b. xvi. c. 10. M. E. recyn, recyne, Wyclif, Jer. li. 8. = O. F. resine, 'rosin'; Cot. Mod. F. résine. = Lat. resina, Jer. li. 8 (Vulgate). β. Prob. not a Lat. word, but borrowed from Gk. ῥητίνα (with long i), resin, gum from trees. For the change from r to s, cf. Doric ῥαί as compared with Attic ῥαί, he says, and Gk. ῥύ for Lat. tu, thou. Moreover, there is a place called Retina, of which the mod. name is Resina (White). γ. The etymology sometimes given from Gk. ῥέω, to flow (root ῥω), can hardly be right, as it does not give the right vowel. The η corresponds to Skt. ā; we may therefore compare Skt. rāla, 'the resinous exudation of the Shorea robusta'; Benfey. Der. resin-ous, from O. F. resineux, 'full of rosin'; Cot.; resin-y.

RESIST, to stand against, oppose. (F., = L.) Spelt resyste in Palsgrave; resyst in Skelton, On the Death of Edw. IV, l. 11. = O. F. resister, 'to resist'; Cot. = Lat. resistere, to stand back, stand still, withstand. = Lat. re-, back; and sistere, to make to stand, set, also to stand fast, a causal verb formed from stare, to stand, cognate with E. stand. See Re and Stand. Der. resistance, M. E. resistance, Chaucer, C. T. 16377, from O. F. resistance (later resistance, as in Cotgrave, mod. F. résistance), which from Lat. resistenti, crude form of pres. part. of resistere; resist-ible, resist-ibil-i-ty, resist-less, resist-less-ly, resist-less-ness.

RESOLVE, to separate into parts, analyse, decide. (L.) Chaucer has resolved (with u = v) in the sense of 'thawed'; tr. of Boethius, b. iv. met. 5, l. 3814. = Lat. resolvere, to untie, loosen, melt, thaw. = Lat. re-, again; and soluere, to loosen; see Re and Solve. Der. resolv-able; resolv-ed; resolv-ed-ly, All's Well, v. 3. 332; resolv-ed-ness. Also resolute, L. L. L. v. 2. 705, from the pp. resolutus; resolute-ly, resolute-ness; resolut-ion, Macb. v. 5. 42, from F. resolution, 'a resolution'; Cot.

RESONANT, resounding. (L.) In Milton, P. L. xi. 563. = Lat. resonant, stem of pres. part. of resonare, to resound. Cf. O. F. resonant, 'resounding'; Cot. See Resound. Der. resonance, suggested by O. F. resonnance, 'a resounding'; Cot.

RESORT, to go to, betake oneself, have recourse to. (F., = L.) 'Al I refuse, but that I might resorte Unto my loue'; Lamentation of Mary Magdalene, st. 43. The sb. resort is in Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 135. = O. F. resortir, later ressortir, 'to issue, goe forth againe, resort, recourse, repaire, be referred unto, for a full tryal, . . . to appeale unto; and to be removeable out of an inferior into a superior court'; Cot. (It was thus a law term.) Hence the sb. resort, later ressort, 'the authority, prerogative, or jurisdiction of a sovereign court'; Cot. Littré explains that, the sense of ressort, sb., being a refuge or place of refuge (hence, a court of appeal), the verb means to seek refuge (hence, to appeal). = Low Lat. resortire, to be subject to a tribunal; cf. resortiri, to return to any one. = Lat. re-, again; and sortiri, to obtain; so that resortiri would mean to re-obtain, gain by appeal, hence to appeal, resort to a higher tribunal, or to resort generally. Cf. Ital. risorto, royal power, jurisdiction; quite distinct from risorto, resuscitated, which is the pp. of risorgere = Lat. resurgere, to rise again. β. The Lat. sortiri is lit. 'to obtain by lot'; from sorti, crude form of sors, a lot. See Re and Sort. Der. resort, sb., as above.

RESOUND, to echo, sound again. (F., = L.) The final d is ex-crescent after n, as in the sb. sound, a noise. M. E. resounen, Chaucer, C. T. 1280. = O. F. resonner, resoner, omitted by Cotgrave, but in use in the 12th cent. (Littré); mod. F. résonner. = Lat. resonare. = Lat. re-; and sonare, to sound, from sonus, a sound; see Re and Sound (3). Der. reson-ant, q. v.

RESOURCE, a supply, support, expedient. (F., = L.) In Cotgrave, to translate F. ressource; he also gives the older form resource, 'a new source, or spring, a recovery.' The sense is 'new source, fresh spring'; hence, a new supply or fresh expedient. Compounded of Re and Source.

RESPECT, regard, esteem. (F., = L.) In The Court of Love (perhaps not earlier than A. D. 1500), l. 155. = F. respect, 'respect, regard'; Cot. = Lat. respectum, acc. of respicere, a looking at, respect, regard. = Lat. respicere, pp. of respicere, to look at, look back upon. = Lat. re-, back; and specere, to see, spy. See Re and Spy. Der. respect, verb, Cor. iii. 1. 307, and very common in Shak.; respect-able, from F. respectable, 'respectable'; Cot.; respect-abil-y, respect-abil-i-ty; respect-ful, respect-fully; respect-ive, from F. respectif, 'respective'; Cot.; respect-ive-ly. Doublet, respice.

RESPIRE, to breathe, take rest. (F., = L.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 3. 36. = F. respirer, 'to breathe, vent, gaspe'; Cot. = Lat. respirare, to breathe. = Lat. re-, again; and spirare, to blow; see Re and Spirit. Der. respir-able, respir-abil-i-ty; respir-al-ion, from F. respiration, 'a respiration'; Cot.; respir-al-or, respir-at-or-y.

RESPITE, a delay, pause, temporary reprieve. (F., = L.) 'Three dayes haf respite'; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 275, l. 2. Better spelt respit (with short i). = O. F. respit (12th cent.), 'a respit, a delay, a time or term of forbearance; a protection of one, three, or five years granted by the prince unto a debtor, &c.; Cot. The true orig. sense is regard, respect had to a suit on the part of a prince or judge, and it is a mere doublet of respect. — Lat. acc. respectum; see Respect. Der. respite, verb, Chaucer, C. T. 11886. Doublet, respect.

RESPLENDENT, very bright. (L.) (Not from O. F., which has the form resplendissant; see Cotgrave.) 'Resplendens with glory;' Craft of Lovers, st. 5, l. 3; in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 391. — Lat. resplendent-, stem of pres. part. of resplendere, to shine brightly, lit. to shine again. — Lat. re-, again; and splendere, to shine; see Re- and Splendour. Der. resplendent-ly, resplendence.

RESPOND, to answer, reply. (F., — L.) 'For his great deeds respond his speeches great,' i. e. answer to them; Fairfax, tr. of Tasso, b. x. c. 40. — O. F. respondre, 'to answer; also, to match, hold correspondence with;' Cot. — Lat. respondere (pp. responsus), to answer. — Lat. re-, back, in return; and spondere, to promise; see Re- and Sponsor. Der. respond-ent, Tyndal, Works, p. 171, col. 2, l. 47, from Lat. respondent-, stem of pres. part. of respondere; response, M. E. response, spelt respon in Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 98, l. 14, from O. F. response, 'an answer,' Cot., = Lat. responsum, neut. of pp. responsus; respons-ible, respons-ibl-y, respons-ibil-ity; respons-ive, Hamlet, v. 2. 159, from O. F. responsif, 'responsive, answerable,' Cot.; respons-ive-ly. Also cor-respond, q. v.

REST (1), repose, quiet, pause. (E.) M. E. reste (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 9729, 9736. The final e is due to the form of the oblique cases of the A. S. sb. — A. S. rest, ræst, fem. sb., rest, quiet; but the gen., dat., and acc. sing. take final -e, making reste, ræste; see Grein, ii. 372. + Du. rust. + Dan. and Swed. rast. + Icel. röst, the distance between two resting-places, a mile. + Goth. rasta, a stage of a journey, a mile. + O. H. G. rasta, rest; also, a measure of distance.

β. All from the Teut. type RASTA, Fick, iii. 246; to be divided as RA-STA. And just as we have bla-st from blow, so here the root is ✓ RA, to rest, whence Skt. ram, to rest, rejoice at, sport, and the sb. ra-ti, pleasure, as also the Gk. ῥαπή, rest, and prob. ῥωσ, love; see Ram, Erotic. Der. rest, verb, A. S. restan, Grein, ii. 373; rest-less, rest-less-ly, rest-less-ness.

REST (2), to remain, be left over. (F., — L.) Perhaps obsolete; but common in Shak. 'Nought rests for me but to make open proclamation;' 1 Hen. VI. i. 3. 70. The sb. rest, remainder, is still common; it occurs in Surrey, tr. of Virgil, Æn. ii. 651 (Lat. text); see Richardson. — F. rester, 'to rest, remaine;' Cot. — Lat. restare, to stop behind, stand still, remain. — Lat. re-, behind, back; and stare, to stand, cognate with E. stand; see Re- and Stand. Der. rest, sb., as above, from F. reste, 'a rest, residue, remnant;' Cot. And see rest-ive, ar-rest. Rest-harrow = arrest-harrow (Fr. arrêlé-boeuf).

RESTAURANT, a place for refreshment. (F., — L.) Borrowed from mod. F. restaurant, lit. 'restoring;' pres. part. of restaurer, to restore, refresh; see Restore. Cot. has: 'restaurant, a restorative.'

RESTITUTION, the act of restoring. (F., — L.) M. E. restitution, P. Plowman, B. v. 235, 238. — F. restitution, 'a restitution.' — Lat. restitutionem, acc. of restitutio, a restoring. — Lat. restitutus, pp. of restituere, to restore. — Lat. re-, back; and statuere, to place; see Re- and Statute, Stand. Der. restituere, verb, in P. Plowman, B. v. 281 (obsolete); from F. restituer.

RESTIVE, unwilling to go forward, obstinate. (F., — L.) Sometimes confused with restless, though the orig. sense is very different. In old authors, it is sometimes confused with resty, adj., as if from rest (1); but properly resty or restie stands for O. F. restif. 'Grow restie, nor go on;' Chapman, tr. of Homer, Iliad, v. 234. 'When there be not stonds, nor restiveness in a man's nature;' Bacon, Essay 40, Of Fortune. See further in Trench, Select Glossary. — F. restif, 'restie, stubborn, drawing backward, that will not go forward;' Cot. Mod. F. rétif. — F. rester, 'to rest, remain;' Cot. See Rest (2). ¶ Thus the true sense of restive is stubborn in keeping one's place; a restive horse is, properly, one that will not move for whipping; the shorter form resty is preserved in prov. E. rusty, restive, unruly (Halliwell); to turn rusty is to be stubborn. Der. restive-ness.

RESTORE, to repair, replace, return. (F., — L.) M. E. restoren, Rob. of Glouc., p. 500, l. 10. — O. F. restorer (Burguy), also restaurer, 'to restore,' Cot. — Lat. restaurare, to restore. — Lat. re-, again; and *staurare (not used), to establish, make firm, a verb derived from an adj. *staurus = Gk. σταυρός, that which is firmly fixed, a stake = Skt. sthāvara, fixed, stable, which is derived from ✓ STA, to stand, with suffix -vara. See Re- and Stand; also Store. Der. restor-al-ion, M. E. restauracion, Gower, C. A. iii. 23, l. 1, from F. restauration = Lat. acc. restaurationem; restor-at-ive, M. E. restauratif, Gower, C. A. iii. 30, l. 15. Also restaur-ant, q. v.

RESTRAIN, to hold back, check, limit. (F., — L.) M. E. restrainen, restraignen, Gower, C. A. iii. 206, l. 10; Chaucer, C. T. 14595. — F. restraindre, 'to restrain,' Cot.; mod. F. restrindre. — Lat. stringere, to draw back tightly, bind back. — Lat. re-, back; and stringere, to draw tight; see Re- and Stringent. Der. restraint, Surrey, Prisoned in Windsor, l. 52, from O. F. restrainte, 'a restraint,' Cot., fem. of restraint, old pp. of restrindre. Also restrict, in Foxe's Acts and Monuments, p. 1173 (R.), from Lat. restrictus, pp. of restringere; restrict-ion, tr. of More's Utopia, ed. Arber, b. ii (Of their journeynge), p. 105, l. 9, from F. restriction, 'a restriction,' Cot.; restrict-ive, restrict-ive-ly.

RESULT, to ensue, follow as a consequence. (F., — L.) In Levins, ed. 1570. — O. F. resulter, 'to rebound, or leap back; also, to rise of, come out of;' Cot. — Lat. resulare, to spring back, rebound; frequentative of resilire, to leap back; formed from a pp. resultus, not in use. See Resilient. Der. result, sb., a late word; result-ant, a mathematical term, from the stem of the pres. part.

RESUME, to take up again after interruption. (F., — L.) 'I resume, I take agayne;' Palsgrave. — O. F. resumer, 'to resume;' Cot. — Lat. resumere, to take again. — Lat. re-, again; and sumere, to take. β. The Lat. sumere is a compound of sub, under, up; and emere, to take, buy. See Redeem. Der. resum-able, resumpt-ion, formed from Lat. resumptio, which is from the pp. resumptus.

RESURRECTION, a rising again from the dead. (F., — L.) M. E. resurrectionis, resurexiom; P. Plowman, B. xviii. 425. — O. F. resurrection, 'a resurrection,' Cot. — Lat. acc. resurrectionem, from nom. resurrectio. — Lat. resurrectus, pp. of resurgere, to rise again. — Lat. re-, again; and urgere, to rise; see Re- and Source.

RESUSCITATE, to revive. (L.) Orig. a pp., as in: 'our mortall bodies shal be resuscitate;' Bp. Gardner, Expositio, On the Presence, p. 65 (R.) = Lat. resuscitatus, pp. of resuscitare, to raise up again. — Lat. re-, again; and suscitare, to raise up, put for sub-citare, compounded of sub, up, under, and citare, to summon, rouse. See Re-, Sub-, and Cite. Der. resuscitat-ion; resuscitat-ive, from O. F. resuscitativ, 'resuscitative,' Cot.

RETAIL, to sell in small portions. (F., — L.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 317. Due to the phrase to sell by retail. 'Sell by whole-sale and not by retail;' Hackluyt, Voyages, vol. i. p. 506, l. 34. To sell by retail is to sell by 'the shred,' or small portion. — O. F. retail, 'a shred, paring, or small pece cut from a thing;' Cot. — O. F. retailer, 'to shred, pare, clip;' id. — F. re- (= Lat. re-), again; and tailer, to cut; see Re- and Tailor. Der. retail, sb. (which is really the more orig. word); see above. Cf. de-tail. [†]

RETAIN, to hold back, detain. (F., — L.) In Skelton, Phylipp Sparrow, l. 1126. 'Of them that list all uice for to retaine;' Wyatt, Sat. ii. l. 21. Spelt retayne in Palsgrave. — F. retenir, 'to retaine, withhold;' Cot. — Lat. retinere, to hold back. — Lat. re-, back; and tenere, to hold; see Re- and Tenable. Der. retain-able; retain-er, Hen. VIII. ii. 4. 113; retent-ion, q. v., retin-ue, q. v.

RETALIATE, to repay. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. retaliatus, pp. of retaliare, to requite, allied to talio, retaliation in kind. Cf. Lat. lex talionis, the law of retaliation. β. It is usual to connect these words with Lat. talis, such, like; but this is by no means certain. Vanicek connects them with Skt. tal, to lift, weigh, compare, equal; cf. Skt. tulā, a balance, equality, tulya, equal; these words are from ✓ TAL, to lift, weigh, make equal, for which see Tolerate. Der. retaliat-ion, a coined word; retaliat-ive, retali-at-or-y.

RETARD, to make slow, delay, defer. (F., — L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. — O. F. retarder, 'to foreshow, hinder;' Cot. — Lat. retardare, to delay. — Lat. re-, back; and tardare, to make slow, from tardus, slow. See Re- and Tardy. Der. retard-al-ion.

RETCH, REACH, to try to vomit. (E.) Sometimes spelt reach, but quite distinct from the ordinary verb reach. In Todd's Johnson; without an example. 'Reach, to retch, to strive to vomit;' Peacock, Gloss. of words used in Manley and Corringham (Lincoln). — A. S. hræcan, to try to vomit, Ælfric's Glos. 26 (Bosworth); whence: 'Phthisis, wrys-hræcing, vel wrys-út-spiung;' Wright's Vocab. i. 19, col. 2, l. 12. — A. S. hræc, a cough, or spittle; in hræc-gebræc, sear throat, id. l. 2; cf. hræcan, the throat (= G. rachen), Ps. cxiii. 15. + Icel. hræhja, to retch; from hráki, spittle. Allied to Gk. ῥάγειν (= ραγ-yeiv), to croak.

RETENTION, power to retain, or act of retaining. (F., — L.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. ii. 4. 99; v. 84. — F. retention, 'a retention;' Cot. — Lat. retentionem, acc. of retentio, a retaining. — Lat. retentus, pp. of retinere; see Retain. Der. retent-ive, retent-ive-ly, ness.

RETICENT, very silent. (L.) Modern; the sb. reticence is in Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 841 (R.) = Lat. reticent-, stem of pres. part. of reticere, to be very silent. — Lat. re-, again, hence, very much; and tacere, to be silent; see Re- and Tacit. Der. reticence, from F. reticence, 'silence,' Cot., from Lat. reticentia.

RETICULE, a little bag to be carried in the hand. (F., — L.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. Borrowed from F. réticule, a net for the hair, a reticule; Littré. — Lat. reticulum, a little net, a reticule; double dimin. (with suffix -en-lu) from reti-, crude form of rete, a net.

Root uncertain. Der. reticul-ar, reticul-ate, reticul-at-ed; also reti-ar-y, i. e. net-like; reti-form, in the form of a net; also reti-na, q. v.

RETINA, the innermost coating of the eye. (L.) Called 'Retiformis tunica, or Retina,' in Phillips, ed. 1706. So called because it forms a fine network. Apparently a coined word; from reti-, crude form of rete, a net; see Reticule.

RETINUE, a suite or body of retainers. (F., -L.) M. E. retenue, Chaucer, C. T. 2504, 6975. - O. F. retenue, 'a retinue;' Cot.; fem. of retenus, pp. of retenir, to retain; see Retain.

RETIRE, to retreat, recede, draw back. (F., -L.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 161. - O. F. retirer, 'to retire, withdraw;' Cot. - F. re-, back; and tirer, to draw, pull, pluck, a word of Teut. origin. See Re- and Tirade. Der. retire-ment, Meas. for Meas. v. 130, from F. retirement, 'a retiring,' Cot.

RETOUR, a censure returned; a tube used in distillation. (F., -L.) In both senses, it is the same word. The chemical retort is so called from its 'twisted' or bent tube; a retort is a sharp reply 'twisted' back or returned to an assailant. 'The retort courteous;' As You Like It, v. 4. 76. 'She wolde retorte in me and my mother;' Henrysoun, Test. of Creseide, st. 41. - F. retorte, 'a retort, or crooked body,' Cot.; fem. of retort, 'twisted, twined, . . . retorted, violently returned,' id.; pp. of retordre, 'to wrest back, retort;' id. - Lat. retorque-re (pp. retortus), to twist back. - Lat. re-, back; and torquere, to twist; see Re- and Torsion.

RETOUCH, RETRACE; from Re- and Touch, Trace.

RETRACT, to revoke. (F., -L.) In Levins, ed. 1570. [The remark in Trench, Study of Words, lect. iii, that the primary meaning is 'to reconsider,' is not borne out by the etymology; 'to draw back' is the older sense.] - O. F. retracter, 'to recant, revoke,' Cot. - Lat. retractare, to retract; frequentative of retrahere (pp. retractus), to draw back. - Lat. re-, back; and trahere, to draw; see Re- and Trace. Der. retract-ion, from O. F. retraction, 'a retraction,' Cot.; retract-ive, retract-ive-ly; also retract-ile, i. e. that can be drawn back, a coined word. And see retract.

RETREAT, a drawing back, a place of retirement. (F., -L.) Spelt retreit in Levins. 'Bet is to maken beau retrete' = it is better to make a good retreat; Gower, C. A. iii. 356. - O. F. retrete (Littre), later traite, spelt traicte in Cotgrave, 'a retreat, a place of refuge;' fem. of retret, retreit, pp. of rettraire, 'to withdraw;' Cot. - Lat. retrahere, to draw back; see Retract. Der. retreat, verb, Milton, P. L. ii. 547.

RETRENCH, to curtail expenses. (F., -L.?) In Phillips, ed. 1706. - O. F. retrencher, 'to cut, strike, or chop off, to curtail, diminish;' Cot. Mod. F. retrencher. - F. re- (= Lat. re-), back; and O. F. trencher, 'to cut;' Cot. See Re- and Trench. Der. retrench-ment, Phillips.

RETRIBUTION, requital, reward or punishment. (F., -L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. - F. retribution, 'a retribution, requital;' Cot. - Lat. retributionem, acc. of retributio, recompense. - Lat. retributus, pp. of retribuere, to restore, repay. - Lat. re-, back; and tribuere, to assign, give; see Re- and Tribute. Der. retribut-ive.

RETRIEVE, to recover, bring back to a former state. (F., -L.) 'I retrieve, I fynde agayne, as houndes do their game, je retriouue;' Palsgrave. Levins has: 'retriue, retrudere;' he must mean the same word. Prob. in still earlier use as a term of the chase. Just as in the case of contrive, the spelling has been altered; probably retrieve was meant to represent the occasional form retrieuer of the O. F. retrover, later retrouver. - F. retrover, 'to find again;' Cot. - F. re-, again; and trouver, to find. See Contrive and Trover. Thus the successive spellings are retrieve (for retriue), retriue, retriue. Der. retriev-er, retriev-able. [†]

RETRO-, backwards, prefix. (L.; or F., -L.) Lat. retro-, backwards. A comparative form, with comp. suffix -tro (from Aryan -tar), as in ul-tro, ci-tro, in-tro; from red- or re-, back. Thus the sense is 'more backward.' See Re-.

RETROCESSION, a going back. (L.) A coined word, and not common; see an example in Richardson. As a math. term, in Phillips, ed. 1706. Formed with suffix -ion (= F. -ion, Lat. -ionem) from retrocessus, pp. of retrocedere, to go backwards; see Retro- and Cede. ¶ The classical Lat. sb. is retrocession.

RETROGRADE, going backwards, from better to worse. (L.) In early astronomical use, with respect to a planet's apparent backward motion. M. E. retrograd, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, ed. Skeat, pt. ii. § 4, l. 31; § 35, l. 12. - Lat. retrogradus, going backward; used of a planet. - Lat. retrogradi, to go backward. - Lat. retro-, backward; and gradi, to go, from gradus, a step; see Retro- and Grade. Der. retrograde, verb, from O. F. retrograder, 'to recoyle, retire,' Cot.; retrogress-ion, in Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. vi. c. 3, last section, as if from Lat. *retrogressio (but the classical form is retrogressus), from retrogressus, pp. of retrogradi. Hence retrogress-ive, -ly. Also retrograd-at-ion, Holland, tr. of Plinie, b. ii.

c. 17, from F. retrogradation, 'a retrogradation,' Cot., formed from retrogradatus, pp. of retrogradare, collateral form of retrogradi.

RETROSPECT, a contemplation of the past. (L.) Used by Addison in The Freeholder (Todd; no reference). Pope has retrospective, adj., Moral Essays, Ep. i. l. 99. Swift has retrospection (Todd; no reference). 'Retrospect, or Retrospection, looking back;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Coined from Lat. retrospectus, unused pp. of retrospicere, to look back. - Lat. retro-, backward; and specere, to look; see Retro- and Spy.

RETURN, to come back to the same place, answer, retort. (F., -L.) M. E. returnen, retournen, Chaucer, C. T. 2097; Rom. of the Rose, 382, 384. - F. retourner, 'to return;' Cot. - F. re-, back; and tourner, to turn; see Re- and Turn. Der. return, sb., King Alisaunder, l. 600. Der. return-able.

REUNION, REUNITE; see Re- and Unit.

REVEAL, to unveil, make known. (F., -L.) Spelt revele, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 2. 48. - F. revele, 'to reveal;' Cot. - Lat. revelare, to unveil, draw back a veil. - Lat. re-, back; and velare, to veil, from velum, a veil; see Re- and Veil. Der. revel-at-ion, M. E. reuelacioun, Wyclif, Rom. xvi. 25, from F. revelation, 'a revelation,' Cot. - Lat. reuelationem, acc. of reuelatio, formed from revelatus, pp. of revelare.

REVEILLE, an alarm at break of day. (F., -L.) 'Sound a reveille, sound, sound;' Dryden, A Secular Masque, 61. 'Save where the fife its shrill reveillé screams;' Campbell, Gertrude, pt. iii, st. 7. Now a trisyllabic word. The last syllable is difficult of explanation, as the F. word is réveil, an awaking, reveille; as in battre le réveil, sonner le réveil, to beat, to sound the reveille (Hamilton). It is perhaps due to some misconception by Englishmen with respect to the F. word rather than to a derivation from réveill, pp. of réveiller, to rouse, which is the allied verb. β. The sb. réveil = O. F. resveil, 'a hunt's-up or morning-song for a new married wife, the day after the marriage.' The verb réveiller = O. F. resveiller, 'to awake;' Cot. - F. re- (= Lat. re-), again; and O. F. esveiller, to waken (Cot.), from Low Lat. *exuigilare, not found, but a mere compound of ex, out, and uigilare, to wake, watch, from uigil, wakeful. See Re-, Ex-, and Vigil. [†]

REVEL, a carouse, noisy feast, riotous or luxurious banquet. (F., -L.) The sb. is older than the verb in English. M. E. revel (= revel), Chaucer, C. T. 2719, 4400, Legend of Good Women, 2251; P. Plowman, B. xiii. 442; Will. of Paleme, 1953. [On the strength of Chaucer's expression, 'And made revel al the longe night' (C. T. 2719), Tyrwhitt explained revel as 'an entertainment, properly during the night.' This is an attempt at forcing an etymology from F. réveiller, to wake, which is almost certainly wrong; and a little research shews that the dictum is entirely groundless. In Will. of Paleme, 1953, the revels are distinctly said to have taken place in the forenoon; and in Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, 2251, we read that 'This revel, full of song and full of daunce, Lasted a fourtenight, or little lasse,' which quite precludes a special reference to the night.] - O. F. revel, which Roquefort explains by 'pride, rebellion, sport, jest, disturbance, disorder, delay.' 'Plains est de joie et de revel' = is full of joy and revelry; Le Vair Palefroy, l. 760; id. 'La douçours de tens novel Fait changer ire en revel' = the sweetness of the fresh season changes anger into sport; Bartsch, Chrestomathie, col. 323, l. 28. According to Diez, it also appears as riuel. β. The word presents great difficulty. The opinion of Diez seems best, viz. that it is connected with O. F. reveler, to rebel, revolt (Roquefort); so that the orig. sense would be 'revolt, uproar, riot, tumult.' Cf. also O. F. revelé, proud, i. e. orig. rebellious. See the passage in the Roman de la Rose, 8615, cited by Roquefort and in Bartsch, col. 382, l. 35: 'Quil vous fust avis que la terre Vouist enprendre estrif ou guerre Au ciel destre miex estelee; Tant ert par ses fleurs revelée' = that you would have thought that the earth wished to enter into a strife or war with heaven as to being better adorned with stars; so greatly was it puffed up by its flowers. Here revelée = rendered rebellious, made conceited. The adj. revelous (Roquefort) meant blustering, riotous; from which it is an easy step to the sense of 'indulging in revelry.' γ. The word also occurs in Provençal; in Bartsch, Chrest. Prov., col. 133, l. 19, we have: 'e rics hom ab pauc de revel' = and a rich man with but little hospitality, i. e. little given to revelry. δ. If this view be right, the sb. revel is from the verb reveler = Lat. rebellare, to rebel; see Rebel. α. Scheler opposes this solution, and links revel to F. réver, to dream; but the e in réver seems to have been long, and the form riuel (noted above as a variant of revel) can hardly be explained except by supposing that re- (= ri-) is the ordinary prefix; just as Florio gives both rebellare and ribellare as the Ital. verb 'to rebel.' See Scheler's article on F. réver. Der. revel, verb, M. E. revelen, Poems and Lives of Saints, ed. Furnivall, xxx. 15 (Stratmann), from O. F. reveler, to rebel, be riotous, as above; revel-er, M. E. revelour, Chaucer, C. T. 4389; revel-ry, M. E. revelrie, Rom. of the Rose, 720. ¶ Note also M. E. revelous, full of revelry, full of jest, Chaucer, C. T. 12934. = O. F. reveleux (as above); which furnishes one more link in the evidence.

REVENGE, to injure in return, avenge. (F., = L.) In Palsgrave. 'To revenge the dethe of our fathers'; Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 240 (R.) = O. F. revenger (Palsgrave), later revengeur, 'to wreak, or revenge himself,' Cot., who gives the form revengé for the pp. Mod. F. revancher; whence the phrase en revanche, in return, to make amends; by a bettering of the sense. — F. re-, again; and venger, older form vengier, to take vengeance, from Lat. vindicare. See Re- and Vengeance; also Avenge, Vindicate. Der. revenger, sb., Spenser, F. Q. i. 6. 44; revenge-ful, Hamlet, iii. 1. 126; revenge-ful-ly; revenge-ment, 1 Hen. IV, iii. 2. 7. Doublet, revindicate.

REVENUE, income. (F., = L.) Lit. 'that which comes back or is returned to one.' Often accented revenue; Temp. i. 2. 98. — O. F. revenué, 'revenue, rent'; Cot. Fem. of revenu, pp. of revenir, to return, come back. — F. re-, back; and venir, to come. — Lat. re-, back; and venire, to come, cognate with E. come. See Re- and Come.

REVERBERATE, to re-echo, reflect sound. (L.) In Levins, ed. 1570. — Lat. reuerberatus, pp. of reuerberare, to beat back. — Lat. re-, back; and uerberare, to beat, from uerber, a scourge, lash, whip, of uncertain origin. Der. reuerberat-ion, M. E. reuerberacioun, Chaucer, C. T. 7815, from F. reverberation, 'a reverberation,' Cot. = Lat. acc. reuerberationem. Also reuerberat-or-y; and reverb (a coined word, by contraction), K. Lear, i. 1. 156.

REVERE, to venerate, regard with awe. (F., = L.) Not an early word, to reuerence being used instead. In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — O. F. reuerer (mod. révérier), 'to reverence,' Cot. — Lat. reuereri, to revere, stand in awe of. — Lat. re-, again (here intensive); and uereri, to fear, feel awe (corresponding to the E. phrase to be wary, to beware), from the same root as wary. See Re- and Wary. Der. reuer-ence, in early use, M. E. reuerence, Rob. of Glouc., p. 553, l. 18, King Alisaunder, 793, from O. F. reuerence, 'reverence,' Cot. = Lat. reuerentia, respect. Hence reuerence, vb., Minshew, ed. 1627, P. Plowman, c. xiv. 248, from O. F. reuerencer, 'to reverence,' Cot.; reuerenti-al, from F. reuerential, 'reverent,' Cot. Also reuer-ent, Chaucer, C. T. 8063, from O. F. reuerent (14th century, see Littré, s. v. révérend), which from Lat. reuerendus, fut. pass. part. of reuereri: later form reuer-end, Frith's Works, p. 105, col. 2, l. 40.

REVERIE, REVERY, a dreaming, irregular train of thought. (F., = L.) 'When ideas float in the mind without any reflection or regard of the understanding, it is that which the French call resvery; our language has scarce a name for it'; Locke, Human Understanding, b. ii. c. 19 (R.) = F. réverie, formerly resverie, 'a raving, idle talking, doting, vain fancy, fond imagination'; Cot. = F. réver, formerly resver, 'to rave, dote, speak idly, talk like an ass'; id. β. The F. réver is the same word as the Lorraine râver, whence E. rave; see Rave. Cotgrave's explanation of réver by the E. rave is thus justified. [†]

REVERSE, opposite, contrary, having an opposite direction. (F., = L.) The adj. use seems to be the oldest in E.; it precedes the other uses etymologically. M. E. reuers (= revers). 'A vice reuers unto this' = a vice opposite this; Gower, C. A. i. 167, l. 2. 'Al the reuers sayn' = say just the contrary; Chaucer, C. T. 14983. — O. F. revers, 'strange, uncouth, crosse'; Cot. = Lat. reversus, lit. turned back, reversed, pp. of reuertere, to turn backward, return. — Lat. re-, back; and uertere, to turn; see Re- and Verse. Der. reverse, verb, Gower, C. A. i. 3, l. 7; reverse, sb., Merry Wives, ii. 3. 27, from F. revers, 'a back blow,' Cot. Cf. F. les revers de fortune, 'the crosses [reverses] of fortune'; id. Also revers-ion, Levins, from F. reversion, 'a reverting,' Cot.; hence revers-ion-ary. Also revers-al, Bacon, Life of Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 15, l. 26; revers-ible. And see revert.

REVERT, to return, fall back, reverse. (F., = L.) In Spenser, F. Q. iv. 6. 43. — O. F. revertir, 'to revert, returne'; Cot. = Lat. reuertere, to return; see Reverse. Der. revert-ible.

REVIEW, to view again, look back on, examine carefully. (F., = L.) 'To review, to recognise, or revise'; Minshew, ed. 1627. And see Shak. Sonn. 74; Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 680. From Re- and View. Der. review, sb., review-er, review-al.

REVILE, to calumniate, reproach. (F., = L.) M. E. revilen (with u = v), Gower, C. A. iii. 247, l. 23; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 161, l. 11. There is no O. F. reviler, nor viler; the word was coined by prefixing F. re- (= Lat. re-, again) to O. F. aviler, thus producing a form *reviler, easily weakened into reviler, just as in the case of Repeal, q. v. β. The O. F. aviler (mod. F. avilir) is 'to disprize, disesteem, imbase, make vile or cheap.' &c.; Cot. — F. a = Lat. ad, to; and vil, vile, from Lat. vilis. See Vile. Der. revil-er.

REVISE, to review and amend. (F., = L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. — F. reviser, to revise; omitted by Cotgrave, but in early use (Littré). — Lat. revisere, to look back on, to revisit. — Lat. re-, again; and uisere, to survey, frequent. form of uidere (supine uisum), to see. See Re- and Vision. Der. revise, sb., revis-al, revis-er; revis-ion, from F. revision, 'a revision, revise, review,' Cot.

REVISIT, to visit again. (F., = L.) In Hamlet, i. 4. 53. From Re- and Visit.

REVIVE, to return to life, consciousness, or vigour, recover. (F., = L.) In Palsgrave; and in K. Lear, iv. 6. 47. Also used actively, as: 'to revive the ded' = to reanimate the dead; Spenser, F. Q. ii. 3. 22. — F. revivre, 'to revive, recover, return unto life,' Cot. — Lat. revivere, to live again. — Lat. re-, again; and vivere, to live; see Re- and Vivid. Der. reviv-al, revival-ist, reviv-er. Also reviv-ify, from re- and vivify; reviv-i-fic-at-ion.

REVOKE, to repeal, recall, reverse. (F., = L.) Levins, ed. 1570, has both revoke and revocate. 'I revoke, je reuocque'; Palsgrave. — O. F. revocquer (omitted by Cotgrave), to revoke; mod. F. révoquer. — Lat. revocare, to call back. — Lat. re-, back; and vocare, to call. See Re- and Voice. Der. revoc-at-ion, from F. revocation, 'a revocation,' Cot., from Lat. acc. revocationem; revoc-able, from F. revocable, 'revokable,' Cot. = Lat. revocabilis; revoc-ably; ir-revoc-able.

REVOLT, a turning away, rebellion. (F., = Ital., = L.) In Shak. Merry Wives, i. 3. 111. — F. revolte, 'a revolt, a rebellion,' Cot. — O. Ital. revolta (mod. rivolta), 'a revolt, turning, an overthrow'; Florio. Fem. of revolto, 'turned, revolted, overthrowne, ouerturned,' &c.; Florio. This is the pp. of revolvere, 'to revolve, ponder, turne, overthrow'; id. See Revolve. Der. revolt, verb, K. John, iii. 1. 257, from F. revolter, O. Ital. revoltare; revolt-er; revolt-ing, revolt-ing-ly.

REVOLVE, to roll round, move round a centre. (L.) 'This meditation by no waie revolveth'; Test. of Love, b. i. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 292, back, col. 1, l. 10. — Lat. revoluere, to roll back, revolve. — Lat. re-, back; and volvere (pp. volutus), to roll. See Re- and Voluble. Der. revolv-er; revolut-ion, M. E. revolucion, Gower, C. A. ii. 61, l. 21, from F. revolution = Lat. acc. revolutionem, from nom. revolutio, a revolving, due to revolutus, pp. of revolvere. Hence revolution-ary, -ise, -ist. And see revolt.

REVULSION, a tearing away, sudden forcing back. (F., = L.) Used by Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 66, to mean the withdrawal of blood from one part to another in the body. — F. revulsion, 'a revulsion, plucking away; also, the drawing or forcing of humours from one part of the body into another'; Cot. — Lat. revulsio, acc. of revulsio, a tearing away. — Lat. revulsus, pp. of revellere, to pluck back. — Lat. re-, back; and vellere, to pluck, of uncertain origin. Der. revuls-ive. And see convulse.

REWARD, to requite, recompense, give in return. (F., = L. and Teut.) M. E. rewarden, verb, P. Plowman, B. xi. 129, Wyclif, Heb. xi. 26. Also reward, sb., used exactly in the sense of regard, of which it is a mere doublet. 'Took reward of no man' = paid regard to no one, P. Plowman, C. v. 40; see Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, prol. 399; Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, 1881; Will. of Palerne, 3339. — O. F. rewarder, the same as regarder, to regard (Burguy). — O. F. re- (= Lat. re-), back; and warder, the same as garder, a word of Teut. origin. See Regard, Guard, Ward. The orig. sense is to mark or heed, as a lord who observes a vassal, and regards him as worthy of honour or punishment; hence, to requite. Der. reward, sb., O. F. reward, the same as regard. Not connected with guerdon, as suggested in Richardson. Doublet, regard. [†] REYNARD, RENARD, a fox. (F., = Teut.) In Dryden, The Cock and the Fox, 581, 663, 721, 768, 794, 805. 'Hyer [here] begynneth thystorye [the history] of reynard the foxe'; Caxton, tr. of Reynard the Fox, A.D. 1481. See the Introductory Sketch to The History of Reynard the Fox, ed. W. J. Thoms, Percy Soc., 1844. — F. renard, regnard (mod. F. renard), 'a fox,' Cot. β. Of Teut. origin; the famous epic is of Low G. origin, and was composed in Flanders in the 12th century; see the edition, by Herr Ernst Martin, Paderborn, 1874, of Willems, Gedicht von den vos Reinaerde (poem of the fox Reynard). Thus the E. and F. words are due to the Flemish name reinaerd or reinaert. This is the same as the O. H. G. reginhart, used as a Christian name, meaning literally 'strong in counsel,' an excellent name for the animal. γ. The O. H. G. ragin, ragin, counsel, is the same as Goth. ragin, an opinion, judgment, advice, decree. This is not to be connected with Lat. regere, to rule, but with Skt. rachaná, orderly arrangement, from rach, to arrange; see Fick, iii. 250. δ. The O. H. G. hart, strong, lit. hard, is cognate with E. Hard, q. v. The O. H. G. raginhart became later reinhart, a reynard, fox. We also meet with the mod. G. reinecke, a fox; this seems to be a mere corruption.

RHAPSODY, a wild, disconnected composition. (F., = L., = Gk.) Ben Jonson uses 'a rhapsody Of Homer's' to translate Iliacum carmen, Horace, Ars Poetica, l. 129. Spelt rapsodie in Minshew, ed. 1627. — F. rapsodie, 'a rapsodie,' Cot. — Lat. rhapsodia. — Gk. ῥαψῳδία, the reciting of epic poetry, a portion of an epic poem recited at a time, also, a rhapsody, tirade. — Gk. ῥαψῳδός, one who stitches or strings songs together, a reciter of epic poetry, a bard who recites his own poetry. The term merely means 'one who strings odes or songs together,' without any necessary reference to the actual stitching together of leaves. — Gk. ῥαψ, stem of fut. tense of ῥάπτω, to stitch together, fasten together; and ὄδη, an ode, for which see Ode. Der. rhapsodi-c, Gk. ῥαψωδός, adj., rhapsodi-c-al, rhapsodi-c-al-ly; rhapsodi-st, sb.

RHETORIC, the art of speaking with propriety and elegance. (F., — L., — Gk.) M. E. retorikē (4 syllables), Chaucer, C. T. 7908. — F. rhétorique, 'rhetorick,' Cot. — Lat. rhētorica, put for rhētorica ars, i. e. rhetorical art; fem. of rhētoricus, rhetorical. — Gk. ῥητορικὴ, put for ῥητορικὴ τέχνη, i. e. rhetorical art; fem. of ῥητορικός, rhetorical. — Gk. ῥητορ, crude form of ῥήτωρ, an orator. — Gk. εἰπεῖν, to say, of which the pt. t. is εἰπὼν; so that ῥήτωρ is formed from the base ῥη- with the suffix -τωρ (= Lat. -tor) of the agent; the sense being 'speaker.' β. The base of εἰπεῖν is ἔειπ = WAR, to speak; whence also the E. verb; see Verb. See Curtius, i. 428. Der. rhētoric-al, -al-ly; rhētoric-ian.

RHEUM, discharge from the lungs or nostrils caused by a cold. (F., — L., — Gk.) Frequent in Shak. Meas. iii. 1. 31; &c. 'Reumes and moystures do increase;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 24. Spelt reume, Palsgrave. — F. rheume, 'a rheume, catarrh,' Cot. — Lat. rheuma. — Gk. ῥεῦμα (stem ῥευματ-), a flow, flood, flux, rheum. — Gk. ρεῖν, occurring in ῥεῖν-σομαι, fut. t. of ῥεῖν, to flow, which stands for ῥέφειν; the base of the verb being ῥε (for ῥυ), to flow, cognate with Skt. srw, to flow. — SRU, to flow; see Ruminate and Stream. Fick, i. 837; Curtius, i. 439. Der. rheum-y, Jul. Caesar, ii. 1. 266; rheumat-ic, Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 105, from Lat. rheumaticus = Gk. ῥευματικός, adj.; rheumat-ic-al; rheumat-ism, from Lat. rheumatismus = Gk. ῥευματισμός, liability to rheum.

RHINOCEROS, a large quadruped. (L., — Gk.) In Shak. Macb. iii. 4. 101. Named from the remarkable horn (sometimes double) on the nose. — Lat. rhinoceros (Pliny). — Gk. ῥινόκερως, a rhinoceros, lit. 'nose-horn.' — Gk. ῥίνο-, crude form of ῥίς (gen. ῥίνος), the nose; and κέρως, a horn, allied to E. horn; see Horn. ⚡ See the description of the rhinoceros and monoceros, supposed to be different animals, in K. Alisaunder, 6529, 6539; cf. Wright, Popular Treatises on Science, p. 81.

RHODODENDRON, a genus of plants with evergreen leaves. (L., — Gk.) Lit. 'rose-tree.' In Phillips, ed. 1706. — Lat. rhododendron (Pliny). — Gk. ῥοδόδενδρον, lit. 'rose-tree.' — Gk. ῥόδον, crude form of ῥόδον, a rose; and δένδρον, a tree. β. As to ῥόδον, see Rose. ἄνθρον appears to be a reduplicated form, connected with δρῦς, a tree, and therefore with E. tree; see Tree.

RHODOMONTADE, the same as Rodomontade, q. v.

RHOMB, RHOMBUS, a quadrilateral figure, having all its sides equal, but not all its angles right angles. (F., — L., — Gk.; or L., — Gk.) The F. form rhomb is now less common than the Lat. form rhombus; but it appears in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, and in Milton, P. R. iii. 309. — F. rhombe, 'a spinning wheel; also, a figure that hath equal sides and unequal angles, as a quarry of glass,' &c.; Cot. — Lat. rhombus. — Gk. ῥόμβος, anything that may be spun or twirled round, a spinning-wheel; also a rhomb, or rhombus, from a certain likeness to a whirling spindle, when the adjacent angles are very unequal. — Gk. ῥέμβειν, to revolve, totter; nasalised form from ῥέμειν, to sink, fall, be unsteady, which is allied to G. werfen, to throw, and E. warp; see Warp. The root is WAR, to throw. Der. rhomb-ic; rhombo-id, i. e. rhomb-shaped, from ῥόμβος, crude form of ῥόμβος, and εἶδος, form, shape; rhombo-id-al. Doublet, rumb, q. v.

RHUBARB, the name of an edible plant. (F., — Low Lat., — Gk.) Spelt reubarbe by Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iv. c. 1 (R.); also Reubarbarum, id. b. iii. c. 5; rubarbe, Skelton, Magnificence, 2385. — O. F. reubarbe, 'rewbarb;' Cot. Mod. F. rhubarbe. Cf. Ital. reubarbaro, rhubarb; spelt rabbabarbaro in Florio. The botanical name is rhēum. — Low Lat. reubarbarum (= rheum barbarum), used by Isidore of Seville (Brachet). — Gk. ῥῆον βάραρον, rhubarb; lit. Rheum from the barbarian country. β. Gk. ῥῆον appears to be an adjectival form, from ῥῆ, the Rha or Volga, the name of a river in Pontus; so that ῥῆον means 'belonging to the Rha;' and the word reubarb means 'barbarian Rha-plant.' The word ῥῆ also denoted rhubarb, and the plant was also called Rha Ponticum, whence the Linnaean name Rheum Rhaponticum, which is tautological. 'Huic Rha uicinus est amnis, in cuius superciliis quædam uegetabilis eiusdem nominis gignitur radix, proficiens ad usus multiplices medelarum;' Ammianus Marcellinus, xxii. 8. 28; a passage which Holland translates by: 'Neere unto this is the river Rha, on the sides whereof groweth a comfortable and holsum root, so named, good for many uses in physick.' See Taylor's Words and Places, White's Lat. Dict. (s. v. rha), and Richardson. γ. As some river-names are Celtic, it is just possible that rha may be related to W. rhe, fleet, speedy, rhean, a rill. [†]

RHUMB, the same as Rumb, q. v.

RHYME, the same as Rime (1), q. v.

RHYTHM, flowing metre, true cadence of verse, harmony. (F., — L., — Gk.) Formerly spelt rithme, as in Minshew, ed. 1627. — F. rithme, 'rime, or meter;' Cot. — Lat. rhythmus, acc. of rhythmus. — Gk. ῥυθμός, measured motion, time, measure, proportion; Ionic form, ῥυθμός. Cf. Gk. ῥυαίς, a stream, ῥύμα, a stream, ῥυτός, flowing; all from the base ῥυ-; cf. ῥέειν (for ῥέφειν), to flow. — SRU, to flow; see Rheum. ¶ Quite distinct from rhyme; see Rime (1). Der. rhythm-ic, Gk. ῥυθμικός; rhythm-ic-al.

RIB, one of the bones from the back-bone encircling the chest. (E.) M. E. ribbe, Rob. of Glouc., p. 22, l. 15; P. Plowman, B. vi. 180. — A. S. ribb, Gen. ii. 21. + Du. rib. + Icel. rif. + Swed. ref-been, a rib-bone; Dan. rib-been. + O. H. G. rippi, G. rippe. + Russ. rebro. β. Root uncertain; Fick gives the theoretical Teut. base as REBYA; iii. 254. Perhaps from the base of the verb to rive; whence the orig. sense of 'stripe' or 'narrow strip;' see Rive. Der. rib, verb; ribb-ing; spare-rib; rib-wort, Palsgrave, a plantain, called simply ribbe (rib) in A. S.; see A. S. Leechdoms, Glossary.

RIBALD, a low, licentious fellow. (F., — Teut.) M. E. ribald, but almost always spelt ribaud, P. Plowman, B. xvi. 151, v. 512; King Alisaunder, 1578; pl. ribauz, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 279, last line but one. — O. F. ribald, ribaud (ribaud in Cot.), a ribald, ruffian; mod. F. ribaut. The Low Lat. form is ribaldus; see Dugange. And see a long note in Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, 1839, p. 369. We also find Low Lat. ribalda, fem., a prostitute. β. Of uncertain origin; but the suffix -ald shews the word to be Teutonic; it answers to O. H. G. walt, power, and was (1) a common suffix in Frankish proper names, and (2) a common suffix in F. words, where it is used as a masc. termination denoting character, and commonly has a depreciatory sense, as in the present instance. γ. Diez connects ribald with O. H. G. kripi, M. H. G. ribe, a prostitute, and cites from Matthew Paris: 'fures, exules, fugitiui, excommunicati, quos omnes ribaldos Francia uulgariter consuevit appellare.' Hence also O. F. riber, to toy with a female (Roquefort), which fully explains the sense. δ. Scheler suggests O. H. G. riban (G. reiben), which not only means to rub, but to paint, to put rouge on the face; see Rive. The early history of the word appears to be lost. Der. ribald-ry, M. E. ribaldrie, commonly written ribaudrie, Chaucer, C. T. 12258, P. Plowman, C. vii. 435.

RIBAND, RIBBAND, RIBBON, a narrow strip, esp. of silk. (C.) Spelt riband from a fancied connection with band, with which it has nothing to do; also ribband, Spenser, F. Q. iv. 10. 8. But the d is merely excrement and is not always found in the M. E. period, though occurring in the Prompt. Parv. M. E. riban, P. Plowman, B. ii. 16; 'with ribanes of red golde' = with golden threads. 'Ragges ribaned with gold' = rags adorned with gold thread; Rom. of the Rose, 4754. Again, in Rom. of the Rose, 1077, Riches wears a purple robe, adorned with orfreis (gold-embroidery) and ribaninges. It is thus clear that the early sense was 'embroidered work in gold,' and not so much a ribbon as a thread. Of Celtic origin. — Irish ribin, a ribbon; from ribe, a flake, a hair, a ribbon; Gael. ribean, a riband, fillet, from rib, ribe, a hair, rag, clout, tatter, gin, snare, whence also ribeag, a hair, little hair, small rag, tassel, fringe, bunch of anything hairy; W. rhabin, a streak, from rhob, a streak. Also Breton ruban, cited by Stratmann, but not in Legonidec, ed. 1821. Cf. F. ruban, spelt riban in the 15th century, ruben in Cotgrave, rubant in Palsgrave; this may have been derived from Breton. ¶ I think this etymology, given in Stratmann, is conclusive, and that the suggestions of any connection with G. ring and band, or Du. rijg (a lace) and band, may as well be given up. The second syllable is due to the common Celtic dimin. suffix, as in W. bych-an, little, dimin. of bach, little; see Spurrell, Welsh Gr. p. 93. [†]

RIBIBE, the same as Rebeck, q. v.

RICE, a kind of edible grain. (F., — Ital., — L., — Gk., — O. Pers.) In Shak. Wint. Tale, iv. 3. 41; spelt rize in Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 49; rice in Levins; ryce in Palsgrave. — O. F. ris, 'rice,' Cot.; mod. F. riz. — Ital. riso. — Lat. oryza, rice. — Gk. ῥυζα, also ῥυζον, rice; both the plant and grain. β. Doubtless borrowed from an O. Pers. word, not recorded, but related to Skt. uriki, rice, of which the root is supposed to be Skt. uridh, to grow, increase, answering to an Aryan WARDH, to grow. Curtius (ii. 199) remarks that ῥυζα 'is clearly a borrowed word; and, as is recognised by Pott, ii. 1. 168, and Benfey, i. 87 (cf. Hehn, 369), seems not so much directly to resemble the Skt. uriki in sound, as to be an attempt at reproducing a related Persian form which has a sibilant instead of h. It is worth noticing as a proof that the Greeks tried to express a foreign v by o. Pictet, i. 273, gives the Afghan urishi, which also has a vowel in the place of v.' Raverty, in his Dict. of the Pushto or Afghan language, writes urizay, urijey, pl., rice; urijza'h, a grain of rice; pp. 1019, 1017.

γ. The word passed also into Arabic, in the forms uruz, RUZZ, ARUZZ, rice, sometimes also RUZZ; Rich. Dict. pp. 56, 736; and the Span. arroz, rice, was borrowed from Arabic. [†]

RICH, wealthy, abounding in possessions. (E.) M. E. riche (12th cent.), O. Eng. Homilies, i. 53, l. 10; Ancrén Riwele, p. 66; Layamon, 128. (Not borrowed from F., but an E. word.) — A. S. rice, rich, powerful; Luke, i. 52; Mark, x. 25. The change from final e to ch is just as in Norwich from Norwiche, pitch from A. S. pic, &c.; see Mätzner, i. 145; and cf. beseek with seek, speech with speak, &c. — Du. rijk. — Icel. ríkr. — Swed. rik. — Dan. rig. — Goth. reiks. — G. reich. β. All from a Teut. type RIKA, rich, lit. powerful, ruling; Fick, iii. 248. Allied to Lat. rex, Skt. rija, a king, from √ RAG, to rule (Lat. regere). ¶ The fact that the word might have come into the language from F. riche, which is from M. H. G. riche (G. reich), does not do away with the fact that it has always existed in our language. But the deriv. riches is really of F. origin; see Riches. Der. rich-ly, A. S. riclice, Luke, xvi. 19; rich-ness, M. E. richnesse, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 155, l. 14. Also ric in bishop-ric, where -ric = A. S. rice, a kingdom, dominion; cf. Icel. ríki, Goth. reiki, G. reich, sb., dominion, allied to Lat. reg-num, and even to E. realm. And see Riches.

RICHES, wealth. (F., — O. H. G.) Now often regarded as a pl. sb. Shak. has it as a pl. sb., Timon, iv. 2. 32, Per. i. 1. 52; but usually as a sing. sb., Oth. ii. 1. 83, iii. 3. 173, Sonnet 87. M. E. richesse, a sing. sb.; 'Mykel was the richesse,' Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 30, l. 24. The pl. is richesses, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 24, l. 21; Ancrén Riwele, p. 168, l. 13. The word first appears (spelt riches) in Layamon, 8091. — F. richesse, 'riches, wealth'; Cot. Formed with suffix -esse (cf. Port. and Span. riqu-eza, Ital. ricchezza) from the adj. riche, rich. — M. H. G. riche, O. H. G. rihhi (G. reich), rich; cognate with E. Rich, q. v.

RICK, a heap or pile of hay or wheat. (E.) The vowel was formerly long, and an h has been lost; rick stands for reek, hreek. M. E. reeh, Prompt. Parv. p. 428, col. 1, last line. — A. S. hræc, to translate Lat. aceruus, a heap; Wright's Vocab. i. 74, col. 2, l. 5 from bottom. Also corn-hrycca, a corn-rick; Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 178. — Icel. hraukr, a rick, small stack. Root unknown. Doublet, prov. E. ruck, a heap, the Scand. form, from Icel. hraukr, O. Swed. ruka, ruga, a heap (Ihre).

RICKETS, a disease of children, accompanied with softness of the bones and great weakness. (E.) The name was first given to this disease, about 1620, by the country-people in Dorsetshire and Somersetshire. This we learn from a treatise by Dr. Glisson, De Rachitide, cap. 1. The pseudo-Gk. term rachitis was invented by him, as he tells us, in partial imitation of the prov. E. name, as well as to denote the fact that it is sometimes accompanied by spinal disease; the word rachitis being founded on Gk. ράχις, the spine, a word probably cognate with E. Ridge, q. v. By a singular blunder, it is now usual to derive rickets from 'Greek rachitis,' there being no such word in existence till A. D. 1650, which is the date of Glisson's treatise. See an excellent account in Rees' Encycl., 1819, vol. 30. 'Cavil 7. Hospitals generally have the rickets. . . Answer. Surely there is some other cure for a rickety body than to kill it;' Fuller, Worthies of England, 1662; repr. 1840, vol. i. p. 47. A still earlier notice of rickets is in Fuller, Meditations on the Times (first pub. 1647), xx. p. 163, in Good Thoughts, &c., Oxford, 1810; see N. and Q. 6 S. ii. 219. The prov. E. 'rickety (unsteady) table' is well known. β. Formed, with pl. suffix -ets, from E. wrick, M. E. wriken, to twist, used in the phr. 'to wrick (i. e. to twist) one's ankle.' Thus the word denotes a disease accompanied by distortion. 'The deuel wrikked her and ther,' i. e. the devil (when seized by St. Dunstan) twisted hither and thither; Spec. of Eng., ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 22, l. 82. Allied to A. S. wringan, to wring; see Wring. — Du. wriken, to stir to and fro; de bank wrikt nog, 'the bench stands tottering still' (i. e. is rickety); Sewel. See Wriggle.

RICOCHET, the rebound of a cannon-ball fired at a slight elevation. (F.) Not in Todd's Johnson. — F. ricochet, 'the sport of skimming a thin stone on the water, called a Duck and a Drake'; Cot. Rabelais (Pantagruel, iii. 10) uses the phrase chanson de ricochet, which Cot. explains: 'an idle or endless tale or song.' Littré quotes from a writer of the 15th century: 'Mais que il cede je cederai, et semblablement respond l'autre, et ainsi est la fable du ricochet.' β. There is also a F. verb ricocher, to ricochet, make ducks and drakes; and Scheler and Littré derive ricochet from ricocher. I suspect the derivation runs the other way, and that ricocher is merely a short form for *ricocheter. γ. The prefix is plainly the Lat. re-, again. The O. F. cochet is 'a cockerell, or cock-chick, also a shote or shetepig' [young pig], Cotgrave; in the former sense, it is a dimin. of cog, a cock. We cannot tell more till we know what the fable du ricochet was; the English duck and drake is more intelligible, viz. from the ducking under water and coming up again; see Duck. Der. ricochet, verb.

RID, to free, deliver, disencumber. (E.) M. E. ridden, to separate two combatants, Gawain and the Grene Knight, 2246; also to deliver, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 273; also spelt redde, id. ii. 19, l. 20. (Rid stands for red, and that for hred.) — A. S. hræddan, to snatch away, deliver; Grein, ii. 101. — O. Freisic redda. — Du. redde. — Dan. redde. — Swed. rädde. — G. retten. β. Root uncertain; it is proposed to connect A. S. hræddan with A. S. hræð, quick, and G. retten with M. H. G. krat, rad, quick; for which see Rather. If this be right, as is probable, the orig. sense is 'to be quick,' to rush to the rescue. Der. ridd-ance, Spenser, Daphnida, 364; a hybrid word, with F. suffix -ance (Lat. -antia).

RIDDLE (1), a puzzling question, enigma. (E.) Strange as it may seem, it is certain that the word has lost a final s, and stands for riddles, with a plural riddles-es, if it were rightly formed. The loss of s was easy and natural, as it must have appeared like the sign of the plural number. M. E. redels; we find F. un devinal explained by a redels in Wright's Vocab. i. 160. 'The kynge putte forth a rydels,' other MSS. redels; Trevisa, iii. 181; and see P. Plowman, B. xiii. 184. — A. S. rædelse, pl. rædelsan, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxvii. § 3 (bk. iii. pr. 4), c. xxxv. § 5 (bk. iii. pr. 12), where it means 'ambiguity.' The pl. rædelsas also occurs, Numb. xii. 8, where the A. V. has 'dark speeches.' The lit. sense is 'something requiring explanation.' Formed with suffixes -el-s (for -el-sa, March, A. S. Gram. § 228), from A. S. ræd-an, to read, interpret; we still use the phr. 'to read a riddle.' See Read. — Du. raadsel (for raad-se-la, by inversion of the suffixes); from raden, to counsel, to guess. — G. räthsel (for räth-se-la); from raihen. Der. riddle, verb.

RIDDLE (2), a large sieve. (E.) For kriddle, by loss of initial h. M. E. ridil, Prompt. Parv. p. 433. The suffixes -il (or -el) and -er being of equal force, we find the corresponding word in the A. S. hriddir, a vessel for winnowing corn; Wright's Vocab. i. 34, col. 2. Cognate forms appear in Irish creathair, Gael. criathar, Corn. croider, Bret. krouer, a sieve; see Williams, Corn. Dict. Instead of connecting these with Lat. cribrum (connected with cernere, from √ SKAR), it seems better to adopt the suggestion in Williams, that the Celtic forms are simply derived from Irish and Gael. crath, to shake, brandish; cf. W. crydio, crydu, to tremble, Bret. kridien, a trembling. The Gk. υπαδαιν, to shake, wave, brandish, presents a striking similarity to the above Celtic words. The orig. sense was perhaps 'shaker.' Der. riddle, verb; cf. A. S. hridian, to sift, Luke, xxii. 31.

RIDE, to be borne along, esp. on a horse. (E.) M. E. riden, pt. t. rood, pp. riden (with short i); Chaucer, C. T. 94, 169, 624, 782, &c. — A. S. ridan, pt. t. rād, pp. riden, Grein, ii. 378. — Du. rijden. — Icel. riða. — Dan. ride. — Swed. rida. — G. reiten. — O. H. G. rian. β. All from Teut. base RID, to ride. Cf. Lat. rheda (a Celtic word), a four-wheeled carriage. Der. ride, sb., rid-er, rid-ing; also bed-ridden, q. v., raid, q. v., ready, q. v., road, q. v.

RIDGE, anything resembling the top of a quadruped's back, an extended protuberance. (E.) M. E. rigge, a back, esp. a quadruped's back, King Alisaunder, 5722; whence mod. E. ridge by mere weakening. The true form is rig in the nom. case, and rigge in the dative; confusion of these resulted in the extension of the dat. form to all cases. We find 'upon his rig' = upon his back, Havelok, 1775. We also find rug, Ancrén Riwele, p. 264; pl. rugges, Layamon, 540. The double form is due to the A. S. y = A. S. hrycg, the back of a man or beast; Grein, ii. 109. — Du. rug, back, ridge. — Dan. ryg. — Swed. rygg. — Icel. hrygg. — G. rücken; O. H. G. hrucki. β. All from Teut. base HRUGYA, Fick, iii. 85. It seems to answer exactly to Gk. ράχις, the back, chine, ridge of a hill; the correspondence of Gk. ρ with Teut. hr shows that an initial h has been lost in the Gk. word; Curtius, i. 436. Der. ridg-y. Doublet, rig (3).

RIDICULOUS, laughable, droll. (L.) In Shak. Temp. ii. 2. 169. Englished (by the common change from -us to -ous) from Lat. ridiculus, laughable. — Lat. ridere, to laugh; see Risible. Der. ridiculous-ly, -ness. Also ridicule, orig. ridicle, as in Foxe, Acts and Monuments, pp. 132, 747 (R.), from Lat. ridiculum, a jest, neut. of ridiculus, but changed to ridicule by confusion with F. ridicule, ridiculous, which is not a sb. but an adj.

RIDING, one of the three divisions of the county of York. (Scand.) Put for thridding; the loss of the th being due to the misdivision of the compound words North-thridding, East-thridding, and West-thridding; or it may be put for triding, in a similar way, if belonging to the Norwegian dialect. — Icel. þrjújungur, the third part of a thing, the third part of a shire; see Cleasby and Vigfusson. — Icel. þrjú, third, cognate with E. Third, q. v. — Norweg. tridjung, a third part; from tridje, third; Aasen.

RIFE, abundant, prevalent. (Scand.) M. E. rif (with long i), also rife, rive, ryfe, ryue; adv. rius, ryue. 'þere was sorwe riue' = there was abundant sorrow, Will. of Palerne, 5414. 'Balu þer wes riue' = evil was abundant there; Layamon, 20079. — Icel. rifr, munificent, abundant; cf. riffigr, large, munificent; O. Swed. rif, rife. A. S. rif, abundant, is given by Ettmüller; but it is an extremely scarce word, and borrowed; his reference (Obs. xii. dierum fest. nat.) I do not understand. β. Allied to O. Du. riff, rjve, 'abundant, copious, or large,' Hexham; Low G. rive, abundant, munificent, extravagant. Cf. Icel. reifa, to bestow, reifr, a giver. Fick (iii. 254) derives this adj. from the verb to rive; if this be so, it meant 'rubbing away,' wasteful, extravagant; see Rivo. Der. rife-ly, rife-ness.

RIFF-RAFF, refuse, rubbish, the off-scourings of the populace. (F., - Teut.) 'Lines, and circles, and triangles, and rhombus, and rifferaffe;' Gosson, School of Abuse, 1579, ed. Arber, p. 49, l. 26. Due to M. E. rif and raf, every particle, things of small value. 'The Sarazins, ilk man, he slough, alle rif and raf' = He slew the Saracens, every man of them, every particle of them; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 151. And again: 'That noither he no hise suld chalange rif no raf' = That neither he nor his should claim a single bit of it; id. p. 111, l. 2. - F. rif et raf; as, 'Il ne luy lairra rif ny raf, he will strip him of all;' Cot. So also: 'On n'y a laissé ne rife, ne rafte, they have swept all away, they have left no manner of thing behind them;' id. The lit. sense of rif is 'a piece of plunder of small value'; it is closely related to F. rifler, 'to rifle, ransack, spoil, make havock or clean work, sweep all away before him;' id. So also O. F. raffler, 'to rifle, ravage, to sweep all away,' id. The connected E. words are Rifle (1) and Raffle, q. v. Cf. O. Ital. raffola ruffola, 'by riffrasse, by hooke or crooke, by pinching or scraping;' Florio.

RIFLE (1), to carry off as plunder, spoil, strip, rob. (F., - Teut.) M. E. riflen, P. Plowman, B. v. 234. - F. rifler, 'to rifle, ransack, spoil, make havock;' Cot. A word prob. due to the Norse seakings. Formed as a frequentative from Icel. hrifa, to catch, to grapple, seize, rifa (usu. spelt hrifa), to pull up, scratch, grasp; related to which are hrifsa, to rob, pillage, hrifs, sb., plunder. β. We also find Icel. hrifa, a rake, O. Du. riff, rieve, a small rake (Hexham); the form of the base would be harf, answering to Lat. carpere; so that the root is probably ✓KARP, to seize; see Harvest. γ. The F. rifler (from Icel. hrifa) and rafter (from G. raffen) may not have been connected in the first instance, but the similarity of sound drew them together, as recorded in the E. riff-raff, q. v. Der. rif-er.

RIFLE (2), a musket with a barrel spirally grooved to give the bullet a rotary motion. (Scand.) A modern word; rifle and rifleman appear in Todd's Johnson, ed. 1827. 'Rifled arms were known on the continent about the middle of the 17th century; they do not appear to have been introduced into the British service till the time of the American revolutionary war;' Engl. Cycl. β. The sb. rifle is a short form for rifled gun, and is due to the technical word rifle, to groove. This is a dimin. form from the Scand. form of the verb to rive, and means 'to tear slightly,' hence to channel, to groove. See Ripple (1). - Dan. rifle, to rifle, groove, channel, as in rifled søiler, fluted columns; cf. rifle, a groove, flute; riffel, a rifled gun; Swed. reffla, to rifle; cf. reffelböss, a rifled gun. - Dan. rive (for rife), to tear; Swed. rifva, to scratch, tear, grate, grind; Icel. rifa, to rive; see Rivo. So also G. riefe, a furrow, riefen, to rifle. ¶ The A. S. gerifian rests only on the authority of Somner, and is explained by 'rugare,' i. e. to wrinkle. If a true word, it does not correspond to E. rifle, but to the old verb rivel, to wrinkle; see Rivol. It is, however, a closely related word. Der. rifle-man.

RIFT, a fissure. (Scand.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 2. 30. M. E. refit, Rom. of the Rose, 2661; ryfte, Prompt. Parv. p. 433. - Dan. rift, a rift, rent, crevice, from rive, to rive; Norw. rift, a rift; Icel. ript, a breach of contract. Cf. Swed. refva, a rift, strip, cleft, gap; from Swed. rifva, to tear, rive. See Rivo. Der. rift, verb, Temp. v. 45, spelt ryft in Palsgrave.

RIG (1), to fit up a ship with tackle. (Scand.) Also to dress up a person, but this is merely the jocular use of the word, and not the old sense, as supposed by Johnson. In Shak., only in the nautical sense; Temp. i. 2. 146, v. 224, &c. 'High riggèd ships;' Surrey, tr. of Virgil; Lat. text, celsas naues, Æn. iv. 396. 'I rygge a shyppe, I make it redye;' Palsgrave. Of Scand. origin; the traces of the word are very slight. - Norweg. rigga, to bind up, wrap round; in some districts, to rig a ship; rigg, sb., rigging of a ship; Aasen. Cf. Swed. dial. rigga på, to harness a horse, put harness on him (which presupposes a sb. rigg, with the sense of harness or covering, just as the Swed. sela på, to harness, is from sele, sb., harness); Rietz. Perhaps related to A. S. wrikan, to cover. ¶ It is impossible that rig can be derived from A. S. wrikan, as has been suggested, because that verb became wrien in M. E., all trace of the guttural disappearing. Der. rig, sb., rigg-ing.

RIG (2), a frolic, prank. (E.?) 'Of running such a rig;' Cowper, John Gilpin. 'Rig, a frolic;' Halliwell. Riggish, wanton; Shak. Antony, ii. 2. 245. The verb rigge, to be wanton, occurs in Levins, col. 119, l. 6. Certainly connected with Rickets, and Wriggle, q. v. Cf. Du. wrikken, 'to move or stir to and fro;' wriggelen, 'to wriggle;' Sewel; Dan. wrikke, to wriggle.

RIG (3), a ridge. (E.) 'Among the rigs o' barley;' Burns. M. E. rig, a ridge; see Ridge.

RIGHT, erect, straight, correct, true, just, proper, exact. (E.) M. E. right, Wyclif, Matt. iii. 3; &c. - A. S. riht, adj., Grein, ii. 378. + Du. regt. + Icel. réttir (for rehtir). + Dan. ret. + Swed. rät. + G. recht, O. H. G. reht. + Goth. rahts. β. All from Teut. base REHTA, right; Fick, iii. 248. A participial form from the base RAK, to rule, answering to ✓RAG, to rule, direct, whence Lat. rectus (for reg-tus), right, direct, answering to the pp. of regere, to rule. See Rectitude. Der. right, adv., A. S. rihte; right, sb., A. S. riht; right-ly, right-ness, A. S. rihtnes; right, verb, A. S. rihtan; right-ful, P. Plowman, B. prol. 127; right-ful-ly, right-ful-ness. Also right-eous, well known to be a corruption of M. E. rightwis, Pricke of Conscience, 9154, A. S. rihtwis, Grein, ii. 381, a compound of riht and wis = wise, i. e. wise as to what is right. Palsgrave has the curious intermediate form ryghtuous. Hence right-eous-ly, A. S. riht-wistlice (Grein); right-eous-ness, M. E. rightwisnesse, Wyclif, Matt. vi. 1, Luke, i. 75, A. S. rihtwisnes (Grein). From the same root are rect-i-tude, rect-i-fy, rect-or, rect-angle, rect-i-lineal, as well as reg-al, reg-ent, &c.; also cor-rect, di-rect, e-rect. See regent.

RIGID, stiff, severe, strict. (L.) In Ben Jonson, Epistle to a Friend, Underwoods, lv. 17. - Lat. rigidus, stiff. - Lat. rigere, to be stiff. Perhaps the orig. sense was 'to be straight;' cf. Lat. rectus, direct, right, straight. If so, it may be referred to ✓RAG, to rule, direct. Der. rigid-ly, rigid-i-ty. Also rig-our, Chaucer, C. T. 11087, from O. F. rigour (mod. F. rigueur) = Lat. rigorem, acc. of rigor, harshness; rigor-ous, Cor. iii. 1. 267, from F. rigoureux, 'rigorous,' Cot.; rigor-ous-ly, ness.

RIGMAROLE, a long unintelligible story. (Hybrid: Scand.; and F., - L.) The word is certainly a corruption of ragman-roll, once a very common expression for a long list of names, hence a long unconnected story. See my note to P. Plowman, C. i. 73, where it occurs as rageman; Anecdota Literaria, by T. Wright, 1844, p. 83, where a poem called Ragman-roll is printed; Wright's Homes of Other Days, p. 247; Jamieson's Dict., where we learn that the Scottish nobles gave the name of ragman-rolls to the collection of deeds by which they were constrained to subscribe allegiance to Edw. I, A. D. 1296; Towneley Mysteries, p. 311, where a catalogue of sins is called a rolle of ragman; Skelton, Garl. of Laurell, l. 1490, and Dyce's note; P. Plowman's Crede, l. 180; Cowell's Law Dict., and Todd's Johnson, s. v. rigmarole. Also the long note on ragman-roll in Halliwell.

β. In the next place, ragman was a name for the devil; and ragman-roll is the devil's roll, the devil's list. For an example of ragman in this sense, see P. Plowman, C. xix. 122, and the note; it was also a contemptuous name for a coward. γ. The word roll is F.; see Roll. The word ragman is Scandinavian. Cf. Icel. ragmenni, a craven person, coward, ragmennska, cowardice; from Icel. ragr, a coward, and maðr (= mannr), a man. Swed. raggen, the devil; Rietz cites O. Icel. ragvatr, an evil spirit, lit. 'a cowardly wight,' where vatr is our E. wight = G. wicht in bösewicht, a bad spirit. To call a person ragr was to offer him the greatest possible insult. δ. The Icel. ragr is believed to be the same word as Icel. argr, effeminate, by a shifting of r, as in E. Run, q. v. For a notice of the Icel. argr, see Arch (2).

¶ The word roll was sometimes pronounced row (see Jamieson); hence we find in Levins, ed. 1570: 'Ragmanrew, series,' where rew = row.

RILE, to vex; see Boil.

RILL, a streamlet, small brook. (C.?) 'The bourns, the brooks, the becks, the rills, the rivulets;' Drayton, Polyolbion, Song 1. (He also has the dimin. rill-et in the same Song.) - W. rhil, a row, trench, drill; contracted form of rhigol, a trench, groove; dimin. of rhig, a notch, a groove. If this be right, the true sense is 'shallow trench' or 'channel;' there is no difficulty in the transference of the sense to the water in the channel, since the words channel, canal, and kennel are used in a like ambiguous manner. β. There is also a Low G. rille, used in the sense of a small channel made by rain-water running off meadows, also, a rill; see Bremen Wörterbuch. This is obviously the same word; but it may likewise be of Celtic origin, as there is no assignable Teutonic root for it. On the other hand, the W. rhil has an intelligible Celtic origin in the W. rhig above cited; and, just as W. deg (ten) is cognate with Lat. decem, we may refer rhig to the Aryan ✓RIK, to tear, hence, to score, scratch, furrow; cf. Skt. likh, to scratch, lekhā, a stroke, mark, Gk. ἐπιείκειν, to rend, Lat. rima (for ric-ma), a chink; see Fick, i. 195. Der. rill-et, rill, verb. ¶ See remarks on Drill (2).

RIM, a border, edge, verge. (E.) 1. M. E. rim, rym. 'Rym of a whole;' Prompt. Parv. - A. S. rima, rim; in the comp. se-rima, sea-shore, lit. sea-rim; A. S. Chron. an. 897; see Sweet, A. S. Reader. Cf. W. rhim, rhimp, rhimyn, a rim, edge, rhimpyn, an extremity; rhinio, to edge; rhimynu, to form a rim. Root unknown; it is possible that the E. word was borrowed from Celtic. 2. We also find rim used in the sense of peritoneum or inner membrane of the belly, as in Shak. Hen. V, iv. 4. 15; and see Pricke of Conscience, l. 520; Sir Gawain and the Green Knight, 1343; the sense may be 'border, hence envelope or integument. This is probably the same word. Otherwise, cf. A.S. hrif, the belly; see Midriff.

RIME (1), verse, poetry; the correspondence of sounds at the ends of verses. (E.) Usually spelt rhyme, in which case it is one of the worst spelt words in the language. This ridiculous spelling was probably due to confusion with the Gk. word rhythm, and it is, I believe, utterly impossible to find an instance of the spelling rhyme before A. D. 1550; perhaps not so soon. Dr. Schmidt omits to state that the first folio of Shak. has the spelling rime, Two Gent. of Verona, iii. 2. 69, Merry Wives, v. 5. 95, L. L. L. i. 2. 190; &c. It is rime in Minshew, ed. 1627, and in Cotgrave; ryme in Palsgrave. M. E. rime, ryme, Chaucer, C. T. 13639, 13852, 13853, 13856; &c. — A. S. rim, number, computation, reckoning (Grein); the present peculiar use of the word is in a secondary sense, from the numerical regularity of verses as to syllables and accents, hence at last used to denote a particular accident of verse, viz. the consonance of final syllables. + Du. rijm. + Icel. rima. + Dan. riim. + Swed. rim. + G. reim. O. H. G. rim, hrim, number (to which are due Ital. rima, F. rime, Span. and Port. rima). + Irish rimh; W. rhif, number.

β. Curtius, i. 424, shews these words to be cognate with Gk. ἀριθμός, number, in which the θ is intrusive, as in ῥοπήμος, a ferry, as compared with ῥόπος, a ferry. Irish not only has rimh, a number, but also aireamh in the same sense, which is also the Gaelic form; W. has both rhif and eirif; and these words go to shew that, in the Gk. ἀριθμός, the initial α is rather a part of the root than merely prosthetic, as supposed by Fick, i. 737. That is, the root is Aryan √AR, to fit; whence also Harmony, q. v.; and see Arithmetic, Art. γ. This ultimate connection of the words art, harmony, arithmetic, and rime is highly interesting.

¶ The root of rhythm is SRU, to flow; which is quite a different matter. Der. rime, verb (usually rhyme), M. E. rymen, rimen, Chaucer, C. T. 1461, from A. S. riman (Grein); rimeless (usually rhymeless); rim-er (usually rhym-er), spelt rim-er in the first folio ed. of Shak. Antony, v. 2. 215; rime-ster (usually rhyme-ster), the suffix of which is discussed under Spinster.

RIME (2), hoarfrost, frozen dew. (E.) Whilst the word above has no title to an h, the present word, conversely, has such a title; the word has lost initial h, and stands for hrime. M. E. rime, ryme. 'Ryme, frost, pruina;' Prompt. Parv. — A. S. hrim, to translate Lat. pruina; Ps. cxviii. 83, ed. Spelman (margin). + Du. rijm. + Icel. hrim. + Dan. riim. + Swed. rim. Cf. also G. reif, M. H. G. riefe, O. H. G. hrifo, hoar-frost; Lithuan. szarmà, hoar-frost. β. The orig. sense was prob. 'ice;' or literally, 'that which is hardened'; Curtius connects E. rime with Gk. κρύψ-ος, κρύ-ος, frost, κρύσταλλος, ice, from √KRU, to be hard; see Crystal, Crude, Crust, Raw. Der. rim-y.

RIND, the external covering, as the bark of trees, skin of fruit. (E.) M. E. rind, rinde; Ancrén Riwle, p. 150, ll. 4, 8. — A. S. rinde, the bark of a tree, Wright's Vocab. i. 285, col. 2; also, a crust (of bread), Ælfric's Hom. ii. 114, last line but one. + O. Du. rinde, 'the bark of a tree;' Hexham. + G. rinde, O. H. G. rinta. Root unknown.

RING (1), a circle. (E.) Put for hring, initial h being lost. M. E. ring, Chaucer, C. T. 10561. — A. S. hring; Grein, ii. 106. + Du. ring. + Low G. ring, rink; Bremen Wörterbuch. + Icel. hringr. + Swed. and Dan. ring. + G. ring, O. H. G. hrinc. Further allied to Lat. circus; Gk. κύκλος, κύκλος; see Circus. Also to Skt. chakra (for kakra), a wheel, a circle; Russ. krug, a ring. Der. ring, verb, K. John, iii. 4. 31; ring-dove, so named from the ring on its neck; ring-er; ring-lead-er, 2 Hen. VI, ii. 1. 170; ring-let, used to mean 'a small circle,' Temp. v. 37; ring-straked, i. e. streaked with rings, Gen. xxx. 35; ring-worm, a skin disease in which rings appear, as if formed by a worm, Levins, ed. 1570. And see rink, circus, cycle, rank, range, harangue.

RING (2), to sound a bell, to tinkle. M. E. ringen, Chaucer, C. T. 3894. — A. S. hringan, to clash, ring; byrnan hringdon, breastplates clashed, Beowulf, 327, ed. Grein; ringden þa belle, they rang the bells, A. S. Chron. an. 1131. The verb is weak, and appears to be so in all Teutonic tongues except modern E., which has pt. t. rang, pp. rung (by analogy with sing); we also find pp. rongen, rungen, in Allit. Morte Arthure, ll. 462, 976, 1587. + Du. ringen. + Icel. hringja; cf. hrang, sb., a din. + Dan. ringe. + Swed. ringa. β. Allied to Lat. clangor, a din; see Clang. Der. ring, sb., ring-er.

RINK, a space for skating on wheels, a course for the game of curling. (E.) The former use is modern; the latter is mentioned in Jamieson's Dict. It appears to be a mere variation of ring; compare the use of ring in the compound prize-ring, and the cognate Latin word circus. As to the form, we may note the Low Dutch rink used as a variant of ring; see the Bremen Wörterbuch; and cf. vulgar E. anything = anything.

RINSE, to cleanse with clean water, make quite clean. (F., — Scand.) 'He may rynse a pycher;' Skelton, Magnificence, 2194. — O. F. rinser, to reinse linnen clothes; Cot. — Icel. hreinsa, to make clean, cleanse; from hreinn, adj., clean, pure (the suffix -sa is exactly the same as in E. clean-se from clean); so also Dan. rense, to purify, from reen, clean; Swed. rensa, to purify, from ren, clean. β. The adj. is further cognate with G. rein, Goth. hrains, pure, clean; from the Teut. base HRAINYA, pure; Fick, iii. 82. Root unknown.

¶ The prov. E. rench, to rinse, a Northern word, and the form reinse, in Cotgrave, as above, are from Icel. hreinsa, directly.

RIOT, tumult, uproar. (F., — O. H. G. ?) M. E. riote, Chaucer, C. T. 4390, 4418; Ancrén Riwle, p. 198, last line. — F. riote, 'a babbling, brawling;' Cot. Cf. Prov. riota, dispute, strife (Bartsch); Ital. riotta, quarrel, dispute, riot, uproar. β. The orig. sense seems to be 'dispute;' of uncertain origin. Diez conjectures F. riote to stand for rivote; cf. O. Du. revot, ravot, 'caterua nebulonum, et lupanar, luxus, luxuria;' Kilian. And he refers it to O. H. G. riben (G. reiben), to grate, rub (orig. perhaps to rive, rend); cf. G. sich an einem reiben, to mock, attack, provoke one, lit. to rub oneself against one. The word ribald appears to be of like origin; see Ribald, Rive. Der. riot, verb, M. E. rioten, Chaucer, C. T. 4412, from F. rioter, 'to chide,' Cot.; riot-er, M. E. riotour, Chaucer, C. T. 12595; riot-ous, id. 4406, from F. rioteux; riot-ous-ly, -ness.

RIP, to divide by tearing open, cut open, tear open for searching into. (Scand.) 'Rip up grieft;' Spenser, F. Q. i. 7. 39. [It does not seem to be the same word as M. E. rippen, used in the Ormulum in the sense of 'rob;' this is a variant of M. E. ruppen, to rob, Layamon, 10584, and allied rather to Rob than to the present word.] It corresponds to M. E. ripen, used in the secondary sense of to grope, probe, search into, also used occasionally (like the mod. word) with the prep. up. 'Rypande . . the reynes and hert' = searching the reins and heart (said of God), Allit. Poems, B. 592. 'To rype vpe the Romayns' = to search out the Romans, Morte Arthure, 1877. 'The riche kinge ransakes . . and up rypes the renkes' = the rich king seeks for and searches out the men, id. 3940. 'To ripe their war' = to search their ware (where two MSS. have ransake), Cursor Mundi, 4893. 'I rype in olde maters, je foubles;' also, 'I ryppe a seame that is sowed;' Palsgrave. A Northern word, of Scand. origin. — Norweg. ripa, to scratch, score with the point of a knife (Aasen); Swed. dial. ripa, to scratch, also to pluck asunder (cf. E. rip open), Rietz; Swed. repa, to scratch, to ripple flax; repa up, to rip up; repa, sb., a scratch; Dan. orrippe, to rip up. Allied to Icel. riða, (1) to rive, tear, rend, whence riða apt, to rip up; (2) to scratch, grasp, whence riða upp, to pull up. Thus the word appears to be no more than a variant of Rive, q. v. ¶ The comparison, often made, with A. S. ripan (mod. E. reap) does not seem to be well founded; I suppose the root to be different; see Reap. Der. rip, sb.; ripp-le (1), q. v., ripple (3), q. v.

RIPE, developed, mature, arrived at perfection. (E.) M. E. ripe, rype, Chaucer, C. T. 17032. — A. S. ripe; 'and swá swá ripe yrð forðtredon' = and trod [all] down like ripe corn; Ælfred, tr. of Bede, i. 12. This adj. signifies 'fit for reaping,' and (like the sb. rip, harvest) is derived from the strong verb ripan, to reap; see Reap. + Du. rijp; whence rijpen, to ripen. + G. reif, O. H. G. rfi; whence reifen, to ripen. Der. ripe-ly, -ness; also ripen, verb, from A. S. riþian, Gen. xviii. 12.

RIPPLE (1), to pluck the seeds from stalks of flax by drawing an iron comb through them. (Scand.) A Northern word; see Jamieson. M. E. rippen, ripelen. 'Rypelynge of flax, or other lyke, Avulsio;' Prompt. Parv. 'Hoc rupestre, a repylle-stok,' i. e. an implement for cleaning flax; Wright's Vocab. i. 269, col. 2. The cleaning of flax was also termed ribbing (a weakened form of rippling); see Prompt. Parv., p. 432, note 2. β. Ripple is not to be taken as the frequentative form of rip, but as verbalised from the sb. ripple, a flax-comb (Jamieson); and this sb. is derived from rip by help of the suffix -le, sometimes used to express the instrument by which a thing is done, as in beat-le = a beater; stopp-le, used for stopping, lad-le, used for lading out, gird-le, used for girding. So ripple = an instrument for ripping off the flax-seeds, from Swed. repa, to ripple flax; see Rip. + Du. repel, a ripple, from repen, to beat flax (Hexham); whence repelen, to ripple. + Low G. repe, a ripple; in the dialect of Brunswick called repel, reppel; Bremen Wörterbuch. + G. riffel, a ripple; whence riffeln, to strip flax. See Ripple (3), Rifle (2).

RIPPLE (2), to cause or shew wrinkles on the surface, like running water. (E.) The essential idea in the rippling of water is that it shews wrinkles on the surface. It appears to be quite a modern word. The earliest quotation in Richardson and Johnson is the following: 'Left the Keswick road, and turned to the left through shady lanes along the vale of Eeman, which runs rippling over the stones;' Gray, to Dr. Wharton, Oct. 18, 1769. As pointed out by Richardson, it is a by-form or contraction of the older verb to rimple; 'As gilds the moon the rimpling of the brook,' Crabbe, Parish Register, part 1, ed. 1807; where the edition of 1834 has rippling. M. E. rimplen, to wrinkle, whence the pp. rymplyd, explained by 'Rugatus' in Prompt. Parv.; cf. 'a rimpled vecke' = a wrinkled old woman, Rom. of the Rose, 4495. This verb is from the sb. rimple or rimply; 'Rymptyl, or rympyl, or rywnkyl, Ruga,' Prompt. Parv. = A. S. hrympelle, to translate Lat. ruga, a wrinkle, in a gloss (Bosworth). See Rumple. + O. Du. rimpel, 'a wrinkle, or a folde,' Hexham; rimpelen, 'to wrinkle'; id. β. The A. S. hrympelle is derived from the strong verb hrimpan, to wrinkle, of which the only trace (in A. S.) is the pp. gerumpen (miswritten for or a late form of gehrumpen), occurring in a gloss (Bosworth). + O. H. G. hrimfan, M. H. G. rimpfen, to bend together, crook, wrinkle; cf. mod. G. rumpfen, to crook, bend, wrinkle. γ. As the verb is a strong one (pt. t. hramp), the Teut. base is HRAMP, a nasalised form of HKAP, answering to Aryan KRAP or KARP, as in Gk. náppēv, to wrinkle. The base KRAP is preserved also, in a nasalised form, in the E. Crimp, Cramp, q. v. δ. Closely allied to Rumple, as also to Crumple. Der. ripple, sb., though this (in the form rimple) is really a more orig. word than the verb.

RIPPLE (3), to scratch slightly. (Scand.) In the Whitby Glossary, by F. K. Robinson (E. D. S.). 'Having slightly rippled the skin of his left arm;' Holland, tr. of Ammianus, p. 264; see Trench, Select Glossary (where it is wrongly connected with the word above). 'Ripple, rescindere;' Levins. This is merely a dimin. form of Rip, q. v.

RISE, to ascend, go upward. (E.) M. E. risen, pt. t. roos (pl. risen), pp. risen; Chaucer, C. T. 825, 1501. = A. S. risan, pt. t. rás (pl. rison), pp. risen; Grein, ii. 382. + Du. rijzen. + Icel. risa. + O. H. G. risan, to move up, rise; also to move down, fall. + Goth. reisan, pt. t. rais (pl. risum), pp. risans; only in the comp. ur-reisan (= A. S. úr-risan, mod. E. arise). β. All from Teut. base RÍŠ, to slip away, orig. expressive of motion only; cf. Skt. ri, to distil, ooze (we speak of the rise of a river); see Rivulet. The Du. rijzen even means 'to fall'; 'het loof rijst, the leaves fall (Hexham). Der. rise, sb., Hen. V, iv. 1. 289; a-rise, q. v.; ris-ing, a tumult, also a tumour, Levit. xiii. 2; also raise, q. v., rear, q. v.

RISIBLE, laughable, amusing. (F., = L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. = F. risible, 'fit or worthy to be laughed at;' Cot. = Lat. risibilis, laughable. = Lat. risi, from ris-um, supine of ridere, to laugh; with suffix -ibilis. β. Perhaps ridere is related to Gk. ῥίσις, to creak; and is of imitative origin. Der. risibil-y, risibil-i-ty. From the same Lat. verb (pp. risus) are ar-ride (rare, = Lat. arridere, to laugh at), de-ride, de-ri-sion, de-ri-sive, ir-ri-sion, rid-ic-ul-ous.

RISK, hazard, danger, peril. (F., = Span., = L.) Spelt risque in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = F. risque, 'peril;' Cot. Cf. Ital. risico, (in Ariosto, risco), formerly risigo, as in Florio; Span. riesgo, risk; Low Lat. risigus, risicus, risk. β. A maritime word, borrowed from Spanish. = Span. risco, a steep abrupt rock; from whence the sense of 'danger' may easily have arisen among sailors. Hence Span. arriesgar (arriescar in Minshew), to venture into danger, lit. 'to go against a rock,' where the prefix ar- stands for Lat. ad- before r following, as usual; also arriscado, bold, forward (lit. venturesome); Ital. arrischarsi, to venture oneself, arrischiato, hazardous. = Lat. rescare, to cut back, to cut off short or abruptly; whence the Span. sb. risco (Ital. risico) was formed in the same way as E. scar, an abrupt rock, is formed from the root of the verb to shear or cut off. = Lat. re-, back; and secare, to cut; see Re- and Section.

γ. This suggestion, due to Diez, is satisfactory; he strongly supports it by citing mod. Prov. rezeque, risk, rezegá, to cut off; resoga, risk, also a saw, in the dialect of Como; Port. risco, risk, also a rock, crag, also a dash with the pen, riscar, to raze out with the pen (= Lat. rescare, i. e. to cut out). And cf. Ital. risico, risk, with risega, a jutting out, risegare, risecare, to cast off; &c. ¶ Devic attempts a connection with Arab. rizq, riches, good fortune, Rich. Dict. p. 731, but a risk is bad fortune; and, when he relies on the Span. arriesgar as shewing a prefix ar- = Arab. def. article al-, he forgets that this prefix really represents the Lat. ad-. Besides, the Ital. word is risico, spelt risigo in Florio. Der. risk, verb, risk-y.

RITE, a religious ceremony. (L.) 'With sacred rites;' Spenser, F. Q. i. 12. 36. = Lat. ritus, a custom, esp. a religious custom. Cf. Skt. riti, a going, also way, usage, manner; from ri, to go. = √ RI, to go, run, let flow; Fick, i. 193; see Rivulet. ¶ The F. rit or rite seems to be quite a modern word. Der. ritu-al, from F. ritual, 'ritual,' Cot., from Lat. ritu-alis, from ritu-, stem of ritus; ritu-al-ly; ritu-al-ism, ritu-al-ist.

RIVAL, a competitor. (F., = L.) For the sense, see Trench, On the Study of Words. In Shak. Two Gent. ii. 4. 174. = F. rival, sb., 'a rival, corival, competitor in love;' Cot. = Lat. riualis, sb., one who uses the same brook as another, a near neighbour, a rival. =

Lat. riualis, adj., belonging to a brook. = Lat. riu-us, a brook, stream; with suffix -alis. See Rivulet. Der. rival, adj., rival, verb, K. Lear, i. 1. 194; rival-ry, a coined word.

RIVEL, to split, tear, slit, rend. (Scand.) M. E. riuen, ryven (with u = v), Chaucer, C. T. 12762. = Icel. rifa, pt. t. rif, pp. rifinn (= E. riuen), to rise, tear; Dan. rive; Swed. rifva, to scratch, tear. + Du. rijven, to grate, to rake. + G. reiben, O. H. G. riban, to grate, rub. β. Allied to Gk. ῥίπειν, to throw or dash down, tear down; from a base RIP.

γ. Further, the form ῥίπειν appears to be parallel to ῥίπειν, to tear, break, rend, rive, from √ RÍK, to tear, whence also Skt. likh, to scratch, Lithuan. rėkti, to cut, to plough a field for the first time. Der. rif-t, q. v. And see rip, ripple (1), ripple (3), rifle (2), rivel; perhaps rib-ald, riv-er.

RIVEL, to wrinkle. (E.) 'Praise from the rivell'd lips of toothless, bald Decrepitude;' Cowper, Task, b. ii. l. 488. 'And rivell'd up with heat;' Dryden, Flower and the Leaf, 378. M. E. riuelen (with u for v); 'Al my chekes . . . So riueled;' Gower, C. A. iii. 370. = A. S. ge-rifian, to wrinkle (Somner); a frequentative form from Rive, q. v. See note to Rifle (2).

RIVER, a large stream of running water. (F., = L.) M. E. river (with u = v); Chaucer, C. T. 3026; Rob. of Glouc., p. 1, l. 14. = O. F. riviere, mod. F. rivière, a river, stream. It is the same word as Span. ribera, a shore, strand, sea-coast, Port. ribeira, a meadow near the bank of a river (whence ribeiro, a brook), Ital. riviera, the sea-shore, a bank, also a river. β. Thus the sense of 'river' is unoriginal, and was perhaps due to confusion between Low Lat. (and Ital.) riva, a bank (= Lat. ripa), and Lat. rius (Ital. riuo), a river. = Low Lat. riparia, (1) sea-shore or river-bank, (2) a river, Du-cange; fem. of riparius, adj., formed from ripa, a bank.

γ. The etymology of ripa is doubtful; Corssen derives it from RÍ, to flow, with a suffix -pa. It seems far better to consider it as equivalent to Gk. ῥίπ-ην, a broken cliff, scarp (hence, a steep edge or bank), from the base RIP, to rise, rend, tear off, seen in Gk. ῥίπειν, to tear down, and in E. rive; see Rive. Cf. E. rift, a fissure, from the same source. Der. river-horse, the hippopotamus, Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. viii. c. 25. Also (from Lat. ripa) ar-rive, q. v. Not allied to rivulet.

RIVET, an iron pin for fastening armour, &c. together. (F., = Scand.) 'The armourers, With busy hammers closing rivets up;' Hen. V, iv. chor. 13. 'With a palsy-fumbling at his gorget Shake in and out the rivet;' Troil. i. 3. 175. Ryvet, revet, Palsgrave. = F. rivet, 'the welt of a shoe,' Cot. It also meant a rivet, as in 'si la broche n'est pas riyée à deux rivets en couverture,' since it is here joined to the verb river; this, occurs in a quotation dated by Littré August, 1489. In Hamilton's F. Dict. rivet is explained by 'rivet,' and marked as a farrier's term. = F. river, 'to rivet, or clench, to fasten or turn back the point of a nail, &c.; also, to thrust the clothes of a bed in at the sides;' Cot. β. The F. etymologists give no satisfactory account of the word; Littré gives it up, and considers that the suggestion of Diez, viz. to connect the word with Icel. hrifa, a rake, does not much help us; there being no obvious connection in the sense.

γ. But the word is Scand., as shewn by the Aberdeen word riv, to rivet, clench, Shetland riv, to sew coarsely and slightly; which see in Jamieson. = Icel. rifa, to tack together, sew loosely together; rifa saman, to stitch together, an expression which occurs in the Edda, i. 346. Der. rivet, verb, Hamlet, iii. 2. 90; Palsgrave has: 'I revet a nayle, Je riue;' also: 'Ryvet this nayle, and then it wyll holde faste.'

RIVULET, a small stream. (L.) In Milton, P. L. ix. 420; Drayton, Muses' Elysium, Nymph. 6 (R.); and see quotation s. v. Bill. Not F., but an E. dimin., formed with suffix -et from Lat. riual-us, a small stream, dimin. of rius, a stream, river. (Prob. suggested by the similar word riveret, for which see Richardson, which is, however, a dimin. of River, and therefore from a different source, viz. Lat. ripa, a bank.) β. The Lat. ri-us is from √ RÍ, to distil; cf. Skt. ri, to distil, ooze, drop; whence also Liquid, q. v. Der. (from Lat. riu-us) riv-al, q. v., de-rive, q. v. And see rite.

RIX-DOLLAR, the name of a coin. (Du., = G.) 'He accepted of a rix-dollar;' Evelyn's Diary, Aug. 28, 1641; Evelyn was then at Leyden. = Du. rijks-daelder, a rix-dollar. Hexham gives rijcksdelder, 'a rix-daller, a peece of money of five schillings, or 50 stivers.' = G. reichsthaler, 'a dollar of the empire.' = G. reichs, gen. case of reich, empire, allied to reich, rich, powerful; and thaler, a dollar; see Rich and Dollar.

ROACH, a kind of fish. (E.) Allied to the carp, but confused with the ray and the skate; fish-names being very vaguely used. M. E. roche. 'Roche, fische, Roche, Roche;' Prompt. Parv. = A. S. reokhe (perhaps for rohke, as suggested by Ettmüller); we find 'Fannus, reohke' in a list of fishes, in Wright's Vocab. i. 56, col. 1; spelt reokhe, id. 77, col. 2. + Du. rog, a ray; O. Du. rock, 'a fish called a scait,' Hexham. + Dan. rokke, a ray. + Swed. rocka, a ray. thorn-back. + G. roche, a roach, ray, thorn-back. + Lat. rāia (for rag-ia), a ray; see Ray (2). Root unknown. Doublet, ray (2).

ROAD, a way for passengers. (E.) Also used of a place where ships ride at anchor; this is the same word, the F. rade being borrowed from Teutonic. Also used in the sense of raid or foray; 1 Sam. xxvii. 10. Shak. has the word in all three senses; (1) Much Ado, v. 2. 33; (2) Two Gent. i. 1. 53; (3) Cor. iii. 1. 5. M. E. roode (for ships), Prompt. Parv.; rode (for horses); Cursor Mundi, 11427. — A. S. rád, a journey, riding expedition, road; Grein, ii. 362. — A. S. rád, pt. t. of ridan, to ride; see Ride. Der. road-stead, road-way, road-ster (for the suffix, see Spinster); also in-road. Doublet, raid.

ROAM, to rove about, to ramble, wander. (E.) M. E. romen, P. Plowman, B. xi. 124; K. Alisaunder, 7207; Seven Sages, 1429 (in Weber's Met. Romances, vol. iii); Havelok, 64; Will. of Palerne, 1608. The older form is ramen, preserved in the derivative Ramble, q. v. In Layamon, 7854, in a description of a shipwreck, we are told that the ships sank, and the Romans 'rameden 3eond upen', i. e. roamed (or floated about) over the waves. Here the vowel a is long, and the corresponding A. S. vowels can only be ó, á, or æ. β. The etymology is (I think) from an A. S. (theoretical) form *ramian, to stretch out after, tend towards, spread, hence, to try to reach, go towards, and so to journey or rove about. The evidences for the existence of such a verb are considerable, as will presently appear. We still have rame, to roam, ramble, as a Yorkshire word (Halliwell); Ray, in 1691, mentions ream, to stretch out the hand to take anything, to reach after, rame, to reach; Thoresby, in 1703, mentions raume, to reach; Brockett has rame, raim, rawm, to reach anything greedily, to stretch after; the Holderness Glossary (E. D. S.) has rame, to gad about, to sprawl, to spread out too much; 'These branches is ramin all ower walk ommost [almost], we mun hev 'em cut.' Cf. Exmoor ream, to stretch (Grose). γ. In Anglo-Saxon we find the derived verb á-réman, explained by Grein 'se erigere, surgere, se levare'; but it may be better explained by the notion of spreading or stretching out; thus, in Caedmon, ed. Thorpe, p. 174, l. 10, we have 'dages þridan up ofer deóp water ord á-rémd' = 'up over the deep water the beginning of the third day extended (or spread out like a growing light)'. Again, in Caedmon, ed. Thorpe, p. 203, l. 29, we have 'up á-rémd se eorl' = 'the earl (Abraham) stretched himself up (i. e. arose)'. Again, in the same, p. 23, l. 15, we have the passage, where Satan laments the loss of heaven: 'þeah wé hine, for þám alwealdan, ágan ne moston, rómigan úres rices,' which may mean 'though we, because of the Almighty's opposition, cannot get possession of it (heaven), cannot win our kingdom (or even perhaps, cannot roam over our kingdom)'. That is, there is nothing against our taking A. S. rómigan as nearly the equivalent of mod. E. roam; it only occurs in this sole passage, but it is believed to be borrowed from the O. Sax. rómán, mentioned below. δ. In cognate languages, the word is clearer, but not too clear. We have O. Du. ramen, to stretch cloth (Hexham); Du. ramen, to hit, plan, aim; O. Sax. rómán, to aim at, strive after; O. Fries. ramia, to strive after; O. H. G. rámen, to aim at, strive after. The O. H. G. rámen (also ráman) is a weak verb, and derived from the sb. rá, an aim, object, a striving after; the orig. sb., preserved in no other language. I may add that this view, as to the source of the E. roam, agrees with that given by E. Müller; it deserves to be further worked out. Wedgwood suggests a connection with E. room, A. S. rúm; this is obviously wrong, and deals with the wrong vowel-sound, as shown by the derivative ramble; the form of the base is RÁM, not RÚM, which excludes that theory at once. B. At the same time, it can hardly be doubted, that the use of the word was largely and early influenced by the word Rome, on account of the frequent pilgrimages to it. Not only the Ital. roméo, a pilgrim, is derived from Roma, Rome, and denoted a pilgrim to Rome; but even in P. Plowman we have religious romares = religious pilgrims, B. iv. 120, which the author probably himself regarded as an equivalent to Rome-runners = runners to Rome, B. v. 128 (only 8 lines below). This is probably why the orig. sense of 'extend' or 'seek after' or 'strive after' or 'reach towards' is now utterly lost sight of, and the sense of purposeless wandering alone left. But we can still say 'a great rambling house' in the sense of a house that is spread over a considerable space of ground. Der. roam-er, as above; and ram-b-le.

ROAN, the name of a mixed colour, with a decided shade of red. (F.) 'Roen, colour of an horse, roven;' Palsgrave. In Shak. Rich. II, v. 5. 78; 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 120. Explained by Schmidt as 'dark dappled-bay.' — O. F. rouen; 'Cheval rouen, a roane horse;' Cot. Perhaps there was an O. F. form *roan, as intimated by Scheler; the mod. F. word is rouan. Cf. Span. ruano, sorrel-coloured, roan; Ital. roano, rovano, 'roane,' Florio. β. Origin unknown; the Ital. rovano looks like an extension from O. Ital. rufo, red (Florio); which is from Lat. rufus, red. Mahn (in Webster) suggests Lat. rānus, gray-yellow, which seems impossible, esp. as compared with the Span. form. ¶ Taylor (Words and Places) says: 'A curious instance of change of application in a name occurs in the case of the strong Normand horses which were imported from Rouen. They were called Rouens or Roans, a word which has now come to denote the colour of the horse rather than the breed.' He does not adduce one tittle of evidence, nor deign to name any authority. It was suggested by the fact that the name of Rouen is spelt Roan in 1 Hen. VI, i. 1. 65 (first folio), and in Minshew's Dictionary, &c. But if this be the right solution, it is strange indeed that the French dictionaries should know nothing about it. Nares mentions this 'etymology' only to declare against it. [†]

ROAN-TREE, ROWAN-TREE, the mountain-ash. (Scand.) A Northern term, and of Scand. origin. Spelt roun-tree, roan-tree, rowan-tree in Jamieson. — Swed. rönn, O. Swed. rönn, runn (Ihre), the mountain-ash; Dan. rön, the service, sorb, mountain-ash; Icel. reynir, the same. Cf. Lat. ornus, the same.

ROAR, to cry aloud, bellow. (E.) M. E. roren, Wyclif, Rev. x. 3. — A. S. rārian, Ælfric's Homilies, i. 66, l. 18; and in Sweet's A. S. Reader. + M. H. G. rēren. β. A reduplicated imitative word from ✓ RĀ, to bellow, whence Skt. rā, to bellow, Lithuan. rē-ju, I scold, chide, and Lat. latrare, to bark. Der. roar, sb.; roar-ing. But not up-roar.

ROAST, to cook meat before a fire. (F., = G. ?) M. E. rosten, Legends of the Holy Rood, ed. Morris, p. 58, l. 504; Legend of St. Christopher, l. 203; Chaucer, C. T. 385. — O. F. rostit, 'to roast, broil, tost,' Cot. Mod. F. rôtir. Prob. from G. rösten, to roast, a weak verb formed from rost, a grate, grid-iron. β. But the word may be Celtic; we find Irish roistín, a grid-iron, rosdaim, I roast, rost, roast meat; Gael. rost, roist, W. rhosio, Bret. rosta, to roast. The difficulty is to assign the root of it. Der. roast, sb.; roast-meat (= roast-ed meat).

ROB, to plunder, steal, spoil. (F., = O. H. G.) In early use. M. E. robben, Havelok, 1958; Ancren Riwe, p. 86, l. 13. — O. F. rober, 'to rob,' Cot. Usually spelt rober. The orig. sense was to despoil the slain in battle, to strip, disrobe; so that the verb is merely formed from the sb. robe, spelt robbe in Cotgrave, a robe. See Robe. ¶ The E. verb reave (usually bereave) is formed, in a precisely similar way, from the A. S. sb. reaf, clothing. Der. robb-er, M. E. robbar, Rob. of Glouc., p. 94, l. 17, from O. F. robbeur, 'a robber,' Cot.; robb-er-y, M. E. roberie, O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 61, l. 27, from F. robberie, 'robbery,' Cot. Doublet, reave.

ROBE, a garment, dress. (F., = O. H. G.) M. E. robe, Rob. of Glouc., p. 313, l. 1; P. Plowman, B. ii. 15. — F. robe, a robe; spelt robbe in Cotgrave. — M. H. G. roub, roup, O. H. G. raub (G. raub), booty, spoil; hence, a garment, because the spoils of the slain consisted chiefly of clothing. + A. S. reaf, spoil, clothing. + Icel. rauf, spoil. β. All from the Teut. base RUB, to break (use violence). — ✓ RUP, to break; see Rupture. And see Reave. Der. robe, verb; rob-ed, K. Lear, iii. 6. 38. Also rob, q. v.

ROBIN, a singing-bird, the red-breast. (F., = O. H. G.) 'Robyn redbreast;' Skelton, Phyllip Sparowe, 399. 'The most familiar of our wild birds, called Robin red-breast, from Robin (the familiar version of Robert), on the same principle that the pie and the daw are christened Mag (for Margery) and Jack. In the same way the parrot takes its name from Pierrot, the familiar version of Pierre;' Wedgwood. Robin Hood is mentioned in P. Plowman, B. v. 402. — F. Robin, a proper name (Cotgrave); a pet name for Robert, which was early known in England, because it was the name of the eldest son of Will. I. β. Robert is a Frankish name, from O. H. G. Ruodperht (G. Ruprecht, whence our Rupert), meaning 'fame-bright,' i. e. illustrious in fame. γ. The syllable perht is cognate with E. Bright, q. v. The syllable Ruod- is cognate with Icel. hróthir, praise, fame; it occurs also in Rud-olf, Rud-iger, Ro-ger. Cf. Goth. hrotheigs, victorious, triumphant, 2 Cor. ii. 14. And see Hobgoblin.

ROBUST, vigorous, in sound health. (F., = L.) 'A robust boisterous rogue knockt him down;' Howell, Famil. Letters, b. i. sect. 3. let. 21; dated 1623. — F. robuste, 'strong, tough;' Cot. — Lat. robustus, strong; formed by adding -tus (Aryan -ta) to O. Lat. robūs (later robūr), strength. β. The O. Lat. robūs is allied to Skt. rabhas, strength, force, from ✓ RABH (Skt. rabh), to seize. Der. robust-ly, robust-ness. Also (obsolete) robust-i-ous, Shak. Hamlet, iii. 2. 10, better spelt robusteous, as in Blount, directly from Lat. robustus, oaken (hence, strong), by the change of -us into -ous, as in numerous other words.

ROC, a huge bird. (Pers.) See Rook (2).

ROCHET, a surplice worn by bishops. (F., = O. H. G.) In the Rom. of the Rose, 4757. — F. rochet, 'a frock, loose gaberдине;... also, a prelates rochet;' Cot. — O. H. G. roch, hroch (G. rock), a coat, frock. Root unknown. Cf. Irish rocan, a mantle, cloak, Gael. rochall, a coverlet.

ROCK (1), a large mass of stone. (F., = C. ?) The pl. rockes or rokkes occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 11305, 11308. — O. F. roke (13th cent., Litttré), commonly roche, a rock; the masc. form roc is later, L 1 and only dates from the 16th century. Cf. Prov. roca, Span. roca, Port. roca, rocha, Ital. rocca, roccia, a rock. Perhaps (says Littré) of Celtic origin.—Irish and Gael. roc, a rock; Breton rock, pronounced with guttural ch, indicating that the word is Celtic, and not borrowed from French. That the word is lost in W. may be due to the use of craig, a crag, in preference.

β. Macleod and Dewar note that the Gael. roc, in the sense of 'rock,' is English; however, the word occurs in Irish and Breton. The Gael. and Irish roc, in the sense of 'wrinkle' (E. ruck), are certainly purely Celtic, being cognate with Lat. ruga. Whether there is any connection between these latter words and rock, I cannot say. γ. Diez suggests a theoretical Low Lat. *rupica (from rupes, a rock), to account for Ital. rocca, and a form *rupea to account for F. roche; which is hardly satisfactory. [†] ¶ The M.E. roche, in Gower, C. A. i. 314, is from F. roche. Der. rock-pigeon, -salt, -work; rock-y, rock-i-ness.

ROCK (2), to move backward and forward, to cause to totter, to totter. (Scand.) M. E. rokken, Chaucer, C. T. 4155; Ancren Riwle, p. 82, l. 19. — Dan. rokke, to rock, shake; allied to Dan. rykke, to pull, tug, from ryk, a pull, a tug; Swed. rockera, a frequentative form, to rock, allied to rycka, to pull, from ryck, a pull, jerk. Cf. Icel. rykkja, to pull roughly and hastily, from rykk, a hasty pull, also a spasm. Also G. rücken, to move by pushing; from ruck, a pull, jolt, jerk. Note also Icel. rugga, to rock a cradle. All from a Teut. base RUK, descriptive of a jolt, jerk, sudden movement. Der. rock-er, rock-ing-chair.

ROCK (3), a distaff. (Scand.) In Dryden, tr. of Ovid, Metam. b. viii., Meleager, l. 257. M. E. rokke. 'Rokke, of spyning, Colus'; Prompt. Parv. — Icel. rokkar, a distaff; Swed. rock; Dan. rok. + G. rocken, M. H. G. roche, O. H. G. rocho, a distaff. Root unknown. Perhaps from Dan. rokke, to rock; see ROCK (2). Der. rock-et (1), q. v.

ROCKET (1), a kind of fire-work. (Ital., — G.) In Skinner's Dict., ed. 1671. — O. Ital. rochetto, 'a bobbin to winde silke upon; also, any kinde of squib of wilde fier'; Florio. The rocket seems to have been named from its long thin shape, bearing some resemblance to a quill or bobbin for winding silk, and so to a distaff. The Ital. rochetto is the dimin. of rocca, 'a distaffe or rocke to spinne with'; Florio. — M. H. G. roche, a distaff; see ROCK (3).

ROCKET (2), a plant of the genus Eruca. (F., — Ital., — L.) In Levins. Spelt rokai in Sir T. Elyot, Castle of Helth, b. ii. c. 9. — F. roquette, 'the herb rocket'; Cot. — Ital. ruchetta, 'the herb called rocket'; Florio. Dimin. of ruca, garden-rocket, Meadows (omitted in Florio). — Lat. eruca, a sort of cole-wort (White); whence the Ital. ruca, by loss of e. Root unknown.

ROD, a slender stick. (E.) M. E. rod, Gower, C. A. i. 310, l. 4. The word is a mere variant of rood, by a shortening of the vowel-sound of which we have a few other examples, viz. in gosing from A. S. gósling, blossom from A. S. blōstma, shod from A. S. gescōd, fodder from A. S. fōdor; not very dissimilar are blood, mother, from A. S. blōd, mōdor. In the Owl and Nightingale, l. 1644 (or 1646), we have rod used in the sense of rood or gallows. 'Thou seist that gromes the i-foð, An heie on rodde the an-hoð' = thou (the owl) sayest that men take thee, and hang thee high on a rod (rood). See further under ROOD. Doublet, rood.

RODENT, gnawing. (L.) A scientific term. — Lat. rodent, stem of pres. part. of rodere, to gnaw. Akin to radere, to scratch; from ✓ RAD, to scratch; see Raso. Cf. Skt. rada, a tooth. Der. (from Lat. rodere) cor-rod, e-rod. And see rostrum, rat.

RODOMONTADE, vain boasting. (F., — Ital.) 'Crites. And most terribly he comes off, like your rodomontado'; Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, Act v. sc. 2. 'And triumph'd our whole nation In his rodomont fashion'; id. Masque of Owls, Owl 5. — F. rodomontade, 'a brag, boast'; Cot. — Ital. rodomontada, 'a boaste, brag'; Florio. A proverbial expression, due to the boastful character of Rodomonte, in the Orlando Furioso of Ariosto, bk. xiv; called Rodomonte by Bojardo, Orlando Innamorato, ii. 1. 56. Said to be coined from Lombard rodare (= Ital. rolare), to turn about, and monte, a mountain. See Rotary and Mount (1).

ROE (1), a female deer. (E.) M. E. ro; Chaucer, C. T. 4084, purposely gives the Northern E. ra. — A. S. rā; 'Capreus, rāh-deor'; Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Ferarum. + Icel. rā; whence rābukkr, a roe-buck. + Dan. raa; whence raabuk, a roe-buck, raadyr, roe-deer. + Swed. rå; whence råbock, roe-buck. + Du. ree; reebok, roe-buck. + G. rek; rekbock. β. Fick gives the Teut. type as RAIHA, iii. 253. Der. roe-buck, M. E. roobukke, Trevisa, i. 337; see Buck.

ROE (2), the eggs or spawn of fishes. (Scand.) The form roe is in Shak. Rom. ii. 4. 39. But it is due to a curious mistake. The true form is roan (with oa as in oak), but it seems to have been regarded as a plural, like oxen, eyne (eyes), shoon (shoes), so that the n was dropped. This is unusual (perhaps unique) in the case of apparent plurals in -en or -n, but common with plurals (or rather supposed plurals) in -s; as shewn under cherry, sherry, pea. 'Roan, the roe of a fish'; Pea-cock's Glossary (Lincoln). 'Round, roe,' Whitby Glossary; where the word has actually acquired an excrescent d. M. E. roune, Prompt. Parv. — Icel. hrogn, Dan. rogn, Swed. rom, roe, spawn. + G. rogen, roe. β. Fick gives the Teut. type as HROGNA, iii. 83. It is not improbable that the orig. sense was 'gravel'; cf. Gk. κρόκη, κροάκη, a rounded pebble, Lat. calculus, Skt. ṣarkarā, gravel.

ROGATION, supplication. (F., — L.) Particularly used in the phr. Rogation-days; see the Prayer-book, Hooker, Eccl. Polity, b. v. s. 41, Foxe, Acts and Monuments, p. 914, Hen. VIII (R.) — F. rogation; pl. rogations, 'rogation-daies'; Cot. — Lat. rogationem, acc. of rogatio, a supplication, an asking. — Lat. rogatus, pp. of rogare, to ask. Root uncertain. Der. rogation-days. Also (from rogare) ab-rogate, ar-rogate, ar-rogant, de-rogate, inter-rogate, pre-rogative, pro-rogue, super-e-rogation, sur-rogate.

ROGUE, a knave, vagabond. (F., — C.) The word sometimes meant merely a wandering mendicant; see K. Lear, iv. 7. 39, and Trench's Select Glossary. Shak. also has roguing, roguish, vagrant; Per. iv. 1. 97; K. Lear, iii. 7. 104. Cotgrave has: 'Roder, to roam, wander, vagabondize it, rogue abroad.' But the E. roguish also has the sense of arch, pert, and this can only be due to F. rogue, 'arrogant, proud, presumptuous, malapert, saucie, rude, surly'; Cot. Thus the sense of 'surly fellow' would seem to be the original one, easily transferred to beggars as a cant term; and then the verb to rogue abroad would mean 'to go about as a beggar'.

β. That a rogue was a common cant term may be seen in Harman's Caveat, ed. Furnivall; he devotes cap. iv (pp. 36-41) to the description of 'a roge', and cap. v to the description of 'a wyld roge'. He concludes by saying: 'I once rebuking a wyld roge because he went idly about, he shewed me that he was a begger by inheritance; his grandfather was a begger, his father was one, and he must needs be one by good reason.' It just corresponds to the modern tramp. γ. [The M. E. roge, cited in Halliwell, is of unknown meaning; it rhymes with dog, so that it may not be the same word; the M. E. roge, in Morte Arthure, 3272, seems to be O. Swed. roge, a crowd. I do not think these words belong here at all.] δ. The F. rogue is referred by Diez to Icel. hrókr, but this word means lit. 'a rook', and secondarily, a croaker, long-winded talker; which does not suit the sense. Littré and Scheler refer it, much more suitably, to Bret. rok, rog, arrogant, proud, haughty, brusque, which is obviously right.

ε. The Bret. form rok could not have come out of the F. form, and that the word is Celtic is borne out by Irish and Gael. ruca, pride, arrogance. Der. rogu-ish, -ly, -ness; rogu-ery.

ROIL, RILE, to vex. (F., ? — L. ?) That rile is the same word as roil, to vex, is certain; similarly toil, soil, are occasionally pronounced tile, sile. But the old word roil seems to shew two distinct meanings: (1) to disturb, vex, trouble, and (2) to wander about, to romp. I have given numerous examples in my note to P. Plowman, C. vi. 151. Mr. Atkinson suggests Icel. rugla, to disturb, as the possible origin of roil in the former sense; but this is not satisfactory, for it is difficult to see how the diphthong ai could have come out of ug. β. It occurs to me that the suggestion in Stratmann as to roil, to wander about, may perhaps serve for the word in all its senses. His suggestion is that it arose from O. F. roeler, another form of O. F. roler, whence E. roll. To roll a thing about is to disturb it; to roll oneself about is to wander. See Roll.

ROISTERING, turbulent, blustering. (F., — L.) Todd cites from Swift (no reference): 'Among a crew of roist'ring fellows.' Shak. has roisting, Troil. ii. 2. 208; and Levins has royst, vb. We have Udall's play of Roister Doister, written before 1553; and the sb. roister is in the Mirror for Magistrates (Nares). Roister, a bully, a ruffian or turbulent fellow, seems to be the orig. word which gave rise to the verb roist on the one hand, and the adj. roistering, i. e. ruffianly, on the other. — F. rustre, 'a ruffin, royster, hackster, swaggerer, sawcie fellow'; Cot. This Littré explains as being another form of O. F. ruste, a rustic, the r being 'epenthetic.' — Lat. rusticus, acc. of rusticus, rustic, hence clownish. See Rustic.

ROLL, to turn on an axis, revolve, move round and round. (F., — L.) In early use; M. E. rollen, Layamon, 22287, later text; Chaucer, C. T. 12772. — O. F. roler, later rouler, to roll. — Low Lat. rotulare, to roll, revolve. — Lat. rotula, a little wheel; dimin. of rota, a wheel. See Rotary. Der. roll, sb., M. E. rolle, Ancren Riwle, p. 344, l. 11, from O. F. rolle, later roule, 'a rowle', Cot., which from Low Lat. rotulum, acc. of rotulus, a roll (preserved in the phrase custos rotulorum). Also roll-er, roll-ing, roll-ing-pin, rolling-press. Also (from F. roule) roul-eau, roul-ette. Also cont-rol, q. v.; perhaps rol.

ROMANCE, a fictitious narrative. (F., — L.) The French originals from which some E. poems were translated or imitated are often referred to by the name of the romance. Rob. of Glouc. (p. 487, last line), in treating of the history of Rich. I, says there is more about him 'in romance'; and, in fact, the Romance of Richard Cœur de Lion is extant in E. verse; see Weber's Met. Romances. — O. F.

romans, a romance (Burguy). This peculiar form is believed to have arisen from the late Lat. adv. romance, so that romance loqui was translated into O. F. by parler romans. It then became a sb., and passed into common use. The Prov. romans occurs (1) as an adj. = Lat. Romanus, (2) as a sb., the 'Roman' language, and (3) as a sb., a romance.

β. By the 'Roman' language was meant the vulgar tongue used by the people in everyday life, as distinguished from the 'Latin' of books. We now give the name of Romance Languages to the languages which are chiefly founded on Latin, or, as they are also called, the Neo-Latin languages.

γ. The late Lat. Romanice, i. e. Roman-like, is formed from the adj. Romanus, Roman. = Lat. Roma, Rome. Der. romance, verb, romancer. Also (from Romanus) Roman, Roman-ist, Roman-ism, Roman-ise; also roman-esque, from F. romanesque, 'Romish, Roman', Cot., from Ital. Romanesco, Romanish. Also (from Roma) Rom-ish. And see ROMAUNT.

ROMAUNT, a romance. (F., = L.) The Romaunt of the Rose, usually attributed, on insufficient grounds, to Chaucer, is a well-known poem. It is a translation of the French poem Le Roman de la Rose. Thus romaunt answers to F. roman. The final t is excrement after n, as in tyrant, but is found in F. as well as E.; the O. F. form was (occasionally) romant, or even roumant, as in Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, col. 401, l. 10. Another O. F. form of the same word was romans (whence E. romance), so that romans, roman, romant are three forms of the same word; I have here mentioned them in their chronological order. See further under Romance. Der. romant-ic, spelt romantick in Phillips, ed. 1706, from mod. F. romantique, romantic, an adj. formed from romant, another form of roman, as explained above; romant-ic-al-ly.

ROMP, to play noisily. (F., = Teut.) In the Spectator, no. 187, we find 'a romping girl,' and rompishness. The older spelling was Ramp, q. v. Perhaps we may compare A. S. rempend, hasty, Ælfred, Past. Care, c. xx (p. 148, l. 10). ¶ The change from a to o before m occurs also in from (orig. fram), comb (orig. camm), womb (Scotch wame); before n, it is tolerably common. Der. romp, sb., romp-ish, romp-ish-ly, romp-ish-ness.

RONDEAU, a kind of poem. (F., = L.) Borrowed from mod. F. rondeau. The M. E. word was Roundel, q. v. Doublet, roundel.

ROOD, the holy cross; a measure of land. (E.) The same word as rod, as shewn under Rod. Hence its use as a measure of land, because measured with a measuring-rod or 'pole,' of the length of 5½ yards, giving a square rod of 30½ square yards, and a square rood of 40 square rods, or a quarter of an acre. For the sense of 'cross,' see Legends of the Holy Rood, ed. Morris. = A. S. ród, a gallows, cross, properly a rod or pole; Matt. xxvii. 40, John. xix. 17. + O. Fries. rode, O. Sax. rōda, gallows, cross. + Du. roede, a rod, perch, wand, yard. + G. ruthe, O. H. G. riuti, a rod of land. + Lat. rudis (for rudhis?), a rod, staff. Cf. Skt. nyag-rodha, the Indian fig-tree, lit. 'growing downwards,' from nyaich, downwards, and rudh, old form of ruk, to grow. 'Rudis, a staff, certainly belongs to the ✓ RUDH (also Skt. ruk), to grow; for it corresponds to A. S. rōd-(a), O. H. G. rwota, which require an ante-Teutonic dh. Add Zend. rud, grow, liudan, to grow (with l), Church Slav. roditi, parere; 'Curtius, i. 439. Der. rood-lost (Nares). [†]

ROOF, the covering of a house. (E.) Put for hroof, initial h being lost. M. E. rof, Havelok, 2082; rhof, Ormulum, 11351. = A. S. hrōf, a roof, Mark, ii. 4. + O. Fries. hrōf. + Du. roof, a cabin. + Icel. hrōf, a shed under which ships are built or kept. β. We find also Russ. hrov; a roof. Perhaps allied to Gk. κρῶν-τεiv, to hide; see Crypt. Der. roof, verb; roof-ing, roof-less.

ROOK (1), a kind of crow. (E.) M. E. rook, Prompt. Parv. = A. S. hrōc; Ps. 146, 10; ed. Spelman. + Icel. hrōkr. + Dan. raage. + Swed. roka. + Irish and Gael. rocas. + M. H. G. ruoch, O. H. G. hruch; cf. G. ruchert, a jackdaw (Flügel). β. The word means 'croaker'; cf. Goth. hrukjan, to crow as a cock; Skt. krug, to cry out; Gael. roc, to croak. A word of imitative origin; see Croak, Crow. Der. rook-er-y.

ROOK (2), a castle, at chess. (F., = Pers.) 'Roke of the chesse, roc;' Palsgrave. M. E. rook, Prompt. Parv. = F. roc, 'a rook at chesse,' Cot. = Pers. rokh, 'the rook or tower at chess;' Rich. Dict. p. 727. The remoter origin of this word is unknown; Devic cites d'Herbelot as saying that in the language of the ancient Persians, it signified a warrior who sought warlike adventures, a sort of knight-errant. The piece was orig. denoted by an elephant carrying a castle on his back; we have suppressed the elephant. There seems to be nothing to connect this with the famous bird called the roc or rukhi; except that the same word rukhi, in Persian, means 'a hero, a knight-errant (as in d'Herbelot), a rhinoceros, the name of a bird of mighty wing, a beast resembling the camel, but very fierce,' &c.; Rich. (as above). [†]

ROOM, space, a chamber. (E.) The older meaning is simply

'space;' hence a place at table, Luke, xiv. 7. M. E. roum; 'and hath roum and eek space,' Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, 1995. = A. S. rūm; 'næfdon rūm' = they had no room, Luke, ii. 7. We also find A. S. rūm, adj., spacious; 'se weg is swiðe rūm' = the way is very broad or spacious, Matt. vii. 13. + Du. ruim, adj., spacious; sb., room. + Icel. rúmr, spacious; rúm, space. + Dan. and Swed. rum, adj. and sb. + Goth. rums, adj. and sb., Matt. vii. 13; Luke, ii. 7. + G. raum, O. H. G. rūm, space. β. All from the Teut. type RŪ-MA, spacious; or, as a sb., space; Fick, iii. 258. Allied to Lat. rūs, open country, Russ. ravina, a plain, Zend ravāh, wide, free, open, ravan, a plain; Fick, i. 197. Der. room-y, Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, st. 153, l. 609, a late word, substituted for the M. E. adj. room (room); room-i-ly, room-i-ness. Also room-th (Nares), obsolete. Also rumm-age, q. v.

ROOST, a place where fowls rest at night. (E.) Frequently applied to the perch on which fowls rest; as to which see below. Most common in the phr. to go to roost, i. e. to seek a sleeping-place. 'They go to roost;' Skelton, Elynour Rummyng, 191. 'Roost for capons or hennes;' Palsgrave. = A. S. hrōst; Lye gives henna hrōst, a hen-roost, but without authority. Yet it would appear to be the correct form, as hrōst appears again in an obscure passage in the Exeter-book; see Grein. β. We also have O. S. hrōst in the Heliant, 2316, where the palsied man healed by Christ is let down through the roof; or, as in the original, thurh thes huses hrōst, through the house-top. Here Heyne prints hrōst, from a notion that the word is cognate with G. horst, which he explains by 'underwood;' but the latter is the familiar Kentish word hurst, and is a different word altogether. + O. Du. roest, or hinnen-kot, 'a hen-roost;' roesten, 'to go to roost, as hens;' Hexham. γ. In the Heliant, the sense of hrōst comes close to that of 'roof;' and I suspect that A. S. hrōst and A. S. hrōf are from the same source, and are related words. At any rate, roost is certainly related to Goth. hrat, Icel. hrót, a roof; we also find Icel. rót, the inner part of a roof of a house, where fish are hung up to dry, and this is the same as Norweg. rót, the inner part of a roof, a cock-loft (Aasen); cf. rost, a roofing (id.), Scotch roost, the inner roof of a cottage, composed of spars reaching from one wall to the other (Jamieson).

8. We may here find the explanation of the whole matter; roo-st, Goth. hro-st, and roo-f are related words; and the orig. roosting-place for fowls was on the rafters of the inner roof. This is how roost acquired the sense of perch. Der. roost, verb.

ROOT (1), the part of a plant in the earth, which draws up sap from the soil, a source, cause of a matter. (Scand.) M. E. rote, Chaucer, C. T. 2; Ancren Riwe, p. 54, l. 12. = Icel. rót, a root; Swed. rot; Dan. rod. β. Hence Icel. róta, to root up, rout up, as a swine, corresponding to prov. E. wroot, to dig up like a hog (E. D. S. Gloss. B. 7), M. E. wroten, a word used by Chaucer of a sow, Persones Tale (Six-text, Group I, 157), A. S. wrotan; see Root (2). This proves that the Icel. rót stands for wrót, it being a characteristic of that language to drop v in the (initial) combination vr.

γ. Further, wrót = wört, and is allied to Goth. warits, a root, A. S. wyrft, a wort, a root; see Wort. 8. Also E. wort is cognate with Lat. radix, W. gureiddyn, O. Corn. gruitten, a root, and with Gk. ρίζα (for φίδ-ya), a root. Fick gives the Teut. base of root as WRŌTA, and that of wort as WORTI, iii. 294; thus they are not quite the same, but come very near together. The orig. sense was perhaps 'twig;' see Curtius, i. 438. The form of the root is WRAD or WARD; we can hardly compare the above words with Skt. vidh, to grow. Der. root, verb, Wint. Tale, i. r. 25; also root, vb., in the sense 'to grub up,' see Root (2); root-less, root-let. Doublets, radix, wort.

ROOT (2), ROUT, to grub up, as a hog. (E.) In Shak. Rich. III, i. 3. 228. = A. S. wrotan, to grub up, Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 176, l. 12. + O. Du. wroeten, 'to grub or root in the earth as hogs do;' Hexham. + Icel. róta, to grub up, from rót, a root; Dan. rode, to root up, from rod, a root. See Root (1). [†]

ROPE, a thick twisted cord. (E.) M. E. rope, rovp; spelt rop, Rob. of Glouc., p. 488, l. 17. = A. S. rāp, Judges, xv. 14, xvi. 9. + Du. reep. + Icel. roip. + Swed. rep. + Dan. reb. + G. reif, a circle, hoop (of a barrel), ring, wheel, ferrule; occasionally, a rope. β. All from the Teut. base RAIPA, a rope, hoop; Fick, iii. 247. Root uncertain. Perhaps related to Gk. ραβός, bent, βέμπεv, to turn round; so that the sense may be 'twisted.' Der. rope, vb., rop-er, a rope-maker, P. Plowman, B. v. 336, rop-er-y, rope-maker, rope-walk; also rop-y, adj., stringy, glutinous, adhesive, lit. rope-like, Skelton, Elynour Rummyng, 24; rop-ing, Hen. V. iii. 5. 23.

ROSE, the name of a flower. (L., = Gk., = Arab.) M. E. rose; the old plural was rosen, as in Ancren Riwe, p. 276, l. 12. = A. S. rōse, pl. rōsan; Grein, ii. 384. = Lat. rosa, a rose. β. This is not a true Lat. word, but borrowed from Gk. ρόdon, a rose, whence a form *ρόδια (not found), which passed into Lat. rosa; cf. Lat. Clausus with Claudius. γ. Again, the Gk. ρόdon, Æolic form βρόdon, is not even an Aryan word, but of Semitic origin. — Arab. ward, a rose, flower, petal, flowering shrub; Rich. Dict. 1638. This word, in passing into Gk., became, as a matter of course, βόρδον, βρόδον, βόδον. See Curtius, i. 438; Max Müller, letter in Academy for 1874, v. 488, 576. Der. ros-ae-e-ous, from Lat. rosaceus (Pliny); ros-ar-y, M. E. rosarie, Chaucer, C. T. 16897, from O. F. *rosarie (not recorded), later form rosaire = Low Lat. rosarium, a chaplet, also the title of a treatise on alchemy by Arnoldus de Villa Nova and of other treatises; ros-e-ate, a coined word; ros-ette, from F. rosette, 'a little rose,' Cot.; rose-water, rose-wood, ros-y, ros-i-ness. [+]

ROSEMARY, a small evergreen shrub. (F., — L.) In Skelton, Garl. of Laurel, 980; and in Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 9. Gower has the form rosmarine, C. A. iii. 132, where the Lat. marginal note has rosa marina. — O. F. rosmarin, 'rosemary,' Cot.; mod. F. romarin. — Lat. rosmarinus, rosmarinum, rosemary; lit. marine dew, or sea-dew; called in Ovid ros maris, Metam. xii. 410. — Lat. ros, dew; and marinus, marine. + Russ. rosa, dew. + Lithuan. rasa, dew (Nesselmann). + Skt. rasa, juice, essence; cf. ras, to taste. And see Marine. ¶ Named from some fancied connection with 'seaspray;' in English, it seems to have been altered from rosmarine to rosemary from a popular etymology connecting it with a rose of Mary.

ROSIN, the same as Resin, q. v.

ROSTRUM, a platform for an orator to speak from. (L.) 'Rostrum, the beak of a bird, prow of a ship, nose of an alembic,' Phillips, ed. 1706. — Lat. rostrum, a beak, prow; pl. rostra, the Rostra, an erection for speakers in the forum, so called because adorned with the beaks of ships taken from the Antiates, A. U. C. 416; Livy, viii. 14 (White). Put for rod-trum, as being the organ wherewith the bird pecks. — Lat. rodere, to gnaw, peck; see Rodent. Der. rostr-ate, rostri-form.

ROT, to putrefy. (E.) A weak verb; pt. t. rotted; pp. rotted, as in Shak. Mid. Nt. Dream, ii. 1. 95. This pp. is little used, its place being supplied by rotten, a Scand. form; see Rotten. M. E. rotten, rotien, Chaucer, C. T. 4405; pt. t. rotede, Genesis and Exod., ed. Morris, 3342; pp. roted, Will. of Palerne, 4124. — A. S. rotian, pt. t. rotode, pp. rotod; Exod. xvi. 24. + Du. rotten. β. Further allied to Icel. rotna, Swed. rutna, Dan. raadne, to become rotten, verbs which are formed from the old strong pp. appearing in Icel. rotinn, Swed. rutten, Dan. raaden, rotten. See Rotten, which belongs to a more original type. Der. rot, sb., dry-rot.

ROTARY, turning like a wheel. (L.) A modern coined word; in Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. As if from a Lat. *rotarius, from rota, a wheel. + Gael. and Irish roth, W. rhod, a wheel. + Lithuan. ratas, a wheel; pl. ratiai, a cart, wheeled vehicle. + G. rad, a wheel. Cf. Skt. ratha, a car, chariot, vehicle; formed with suffix -tha from ri, to go (Benfey). — ✓ RA, for older ✓ AR, prob. in the sense to go, to run; cf. Skt. ri, to go. ¶ Fick proposes ✓ AR, to fit, and compares Gk. ῥῥα, a chariot. The sense of 'runner' seems more consistent with the idea of 'wheel.' For the metathesis of r, see Run. Der. rot-ate, from Lat. rotatus, pp. of rotare, to revolve like a wheel; rot-at-ion, from Lat. acc. rotationem; rot-at-ory, formed with suffix -y from Lat. rotator, a whirler round. And see rotund-i-ty, round-eau, round, round-el, rund-let, roué, row-el, rouleau, roulette.

ROTE (1), routine, repetition of the same words. (F., — L.) 'And every statute coude he plaine bi rote' — and he knew the whole of every statute by rote; Chaucer, C. T. 329. '[He] can nougt wel reden His rewle . . . but he pure rote' — he cannot well read the rule of his order except merely by rote; P. Plowman's Crede, 377. — O. F. rote (Burguy), mod. F. route, a road, way, beaten track. Hence the dimin. O. F. rotine, mod. F. routine, as in the proverbial expression par routine, 'by rote'; Cot. Hence by rote = along a beaten track, or with constant repetition; see Rut (1). β. The orig. sense of O. F. rote is 'a great highway in a forest,' Cot., cognate with Ital. rotta, which, however, means a breaking up, a rout, defeat. The O. F. rote is really the fem. of rot, old pp. of rompre, to break (see Burguy), and thus rote = Lat. rupta, lit. broken. As Diez says, the F. route, a street, way = uia rupta, a way broken through, just as the O. F. brisée (lit. broken) means a way. Orig. applied to a way broken or cut through a forest. — Lat. rupta, fem. of ruptus, pp. of rumpere, to break; see Rupture. ¶ By rote has nothing to do with O. F. rote, a musical instrument, as some suppose; see Rote (2). By way of further illustration, we may note that the Dict. of the French Academy (1813) gives: 'Router, habitude quelqu'un à une chose, l'y exercer. Les cartes se routent, pour dire qu'On a beau les mêler, les mêmes combinaisons, les mêmes suites de cartes reviennent souvent.' And again: 'Il ne sait point de musique, mais il chante par routine;' id. The latter passage expressly shews that to sing by rote is to sing without a musical instrument! Note also Port. rota, the course of a vessel at sea; whence the phr. rota batida, with all speed, without touching at any port. It is clear that rota batida is lit. a beaten track, not a musical instrument. Der. rot-ed, Cor. iii. 2. 55; cf. 'I roote in custome, je habitude,' Palsgrave. Doublets, route, roul (1), rut (1).

ROTE (2), the name of an old musical instrument. (F., — G., — C.) 'Wel coude he singe and plaieren on a rote'; Chaucer, C. T. 236. 'Playing on a rote'; Spenser, F. Q. iv. 9. 6. — O. F. rote, a musical instrument mentioned in Le Roman de la Rose, as cited by Roquefort. Burguy explains that there were two kinds of rotes, one a sort of psaltery or harp played with a plectrum or quill, the other much the same as the F. vielle, which Cotgrave calls 'a rude instrument of music, usually played by fiddlers and blind men,' i.e. a kind of fiddle. Roquefort absurdly connects rote with the Lat. rota, as if it were a kind of hurdy-gurdy, which it never was, and this has probably helped on the notion that E. rote in the phr. by rote must also have to do with the turning of a wheel, which is certainly not the case. — O. H. G. krota, rotā, M. H. G. rotte, a rote; spelt chrotta in Low Lat. (Ducange). Of Celtic origin; W. crwth, Gael. cruid, a harp, violin; see Crowd (2). ¶ See Lacroix, Arts of the Middle Ages, p. 217 of E. translation.

ROTTEN, putrid. (Scand.) M. E. rotten, Chaucer, C. T. 4404; Ancren Riwle, p. 84, note d, where the text has roted. — Icel. rotinn, rotten; Swed. rutten; Dan. raaden. β. Apparently Icel. rotinn is the pp. of a lost verb *rjóta, pr. t. *raut, of which the base would be RUT, to decay. Fick (iii. 255) further suggests that this base may be related to Lat. ruere; see Ruin. And see Rot. Der. rotten-ness.

ROTUNDITY, roundness. (F., — L.) In K. Lear, iii. 2. 7. Adapted from F. rotundité, Cot. — Lat. rotunditatem, acc. of rotunditas, roundness. — Lat. rotundus, round; see Round. Der. (from Lat. rotundus), rotund; rotund-a, a round building.

ROUBLE, RUBLE, a Russian coin. (Russ.) Spelt rubble, Hackluyt's Voyages, vol. i. p. 256; roble, id. i. 280, under the date Aug. 1, 1556. — Russ. ruble, a ruble, 100 copeks; worth about 3s. 4d. The orig. sense is 'a piece cut off.' — Russ. rubite, to cut.

ROUE, a profligate. (F., — L.) Merely F. roué, lit. broken on the wheel; a name given, under the regency (A. D. 1715–1723), to the companions of the duke of Orleans, men worthy of being broken on the wheel, a punishment for the greatest criminals. Pp. of rouer, lit. to turn round (Lat. rotare). — F. roue, a wheel. — Lat. rota, a wheel. See Rotary.

ROUGE, red paint. (F., — L.) Modern; added by Todd to Johnson. — F. rouge, red. — Lat. rubeus, red; whence rouge is formed like rage from Lat. rabies (Littré). Allied to ruber, rufus, red; from a stem RUBH, parallel to RUDH; the latter appears in Gk. ῥυθρός, red, cognate with E. red; see Red, Ruby. Der. rouge, verb.

ROUGH, shaggy, not smooth, uneven, violent, harsh, coarse, rugged. (E.) In Chaucer, C. T. 3736 (Six-text, A. 3738), the MSS. have rough, rogk, row. Other spellings are ruh, rugk, ru, rou, ru; see Strattmann, s. v. ruh. — A. S. rūh, rough, hairy; Gen. xxvii. 11. Cf. A. S. rūw, rough; Gen. xxvii. 23. + Du. ruig, hairy, rough, harsh, rude; O. Du. ru (Oudemans). + Dan. ru. + Low G. ruig (Bremen Wörterbuch). + O. H. G. rūh, M. H. G. rūch, hairy; cf. G. rau, rough. β. Cf. also Lithuan. raukas, a fold, wrinkle, rūkti, to wrinkle; the orig. sense may have been uneven, like a ploughed field, or newly dug up ground; as suggested by Gk. ὀρυσσειν = ὀρύειν, to dig up. ¶ In German, there is a tendency to confuse rau, rough, with roh, raw, but they are quite distinct; the latter should rather be ro, the final h being unoriginal. Moreover rau stands for hrav, with initial h (Aryan base KRU); whilst rough is A. S. rūh with final h (Aryan base RUK). Der. rough-ly, -ness; rough, verb, rough-en; rough-hew (roughheave in Palsgrave); rough-ish, rough-er. And see rug.

ROULEAU, a roll of coins in paper. (F., — L.) From F. rouleau, 'a roll of paper'; Cot. Rouleau stands for an O. F. *rouel, *role, not found, but a regular diminutive from O. F. role, later rouleau, a roll; see Roll.

ROULETTE, a game of chance. (F., — L.) From F. roulette named from the ball which rolls on a turning table; fem. of roulet, dimin. of F. roule, a roll; see Roll.

ROUN, ROWN, ROUND, to whisper. (E.) Shak. has rounded, whispered, K. John, ii. 566; but the d is excrement. M. E. rounen, Chaucer, C. T. 5823; P. Plowman, B. iv. 13. — A. S. rūnian, to whisper; rūnedon = Lat. susurrabant, Ps. xl. 8, ed. Spelman. — A. S. rūn, a rune, mystery, secret colloquy, whisper; see Rune.

ROUND, circular, globular. (F., — L.) M. E. round, Chaucer, C. T. 3932. — O. F. roünd, mod. F. round, round. — Lat. rotundus, round; formed with suffix -undus, from rot-a, a wheel; see Rotary. Der. round, sb., round, verb; round-about, in Levins; round-head, from the Puritan fashion of having the hair cut close to the head; round-house; round-ish, round-ly, round-ness. Also round-el, q. v., rond-eau, q. v., rund-let, q. v.

ROUNDEL, a kind of ballad. (F., — L.) The mod. F. form is rondeau; see Rondeau. M. E. roundel, Chaucer, C. T. 1531; rondel, Legend of Good Women, 423. — O. F. rondel, later rondeau, which Cotgrave explains as 'a rime or sonnet that ends as it begins.' For a specimen of a rondel, in which the first line recurs after the fifth, see Chaucer, ed. Morris, vi. 304. So called from the first line coming round again. Dimin. from F. rond, round; see Round. Der. rondel-ay, Spenser, Shep. Kalendar, June, 49, from F. rondellet, dimin. of O. F. rondel (Cot.); the E. spelling is prob. due to confusion with lay.

ROUSE (1), to raise up, excite, awaken, rise up. (Scand.) 'To rouse a deere' [deer]; Levins. It was a term of the chase; cf. Rich. II, ii. 3. 128. 'Some like wilde bores, new rous'd out of the brakes;' Spenser, F. Q. ii. 11. 10. But the verb was orig. intransitive; and an animal was said to rouse when it rushed out of its covert. 'At the laste This hart rused, and staal away Fro alle the boundes a prevy way' = the hart roused (rushed out) and stole away; Chaucer, Book of the Duchesse, 380. 'I rouse, I stretche myselfe;' Palsgrave. — Swed. rusa, to rush; rusa frem, to rush forward; O. Swed. rusa, to rush, go hastily (Ihre); Dan. ruse, to rush. Cognate with A. S. hrodsan, to rush, also to fall down, 'to come down with a rush;' Grein, ii. 104.

β. The base is clearly HRUS, to shake, push, Fick, iii. 84; the orig. sense was prob. to start forward suddenly, to burst out. See further under Rush (1), which is not quite the same word as the present, but an extension of it. Hence also rouse is to wake a sleeper, viz. by a sudden movement. ¶ Not connected with raise or rise; nor with the Lowland Scotch roose, to praise, from Icel. Arðsa, Swed. rosa, Dan. rose, to praise, which is rather connected with Rouse (2) below. Der. a-rouse.

ROUSE (2), a drinking-bout. (Scand.) In Shak. Hamlet, i. 2. 127; i. 4. 8; ii. 1. 58; Oth. ii. 3. 66. — Swed. rus, a drunken fit, drunkenness; rusa, to fuddle; Dan. ruus, intoxication, sove rusen ud (to sleep out one's rouse), to sleep oneself sober. We find also Du. roes, drunkenness; emen roes drinken (to drink a rouse), 'to drink till one is fuddled' (Sewel); but it does not seem to be an old word in Dutch, being omitted by Hexham. β. I have little doubt that the orig. sense was simply 'noise,' or uproar; and that it is connected with Icel. Arðsa, to praise, Swed. ros, Dan. ros, praise, fame. These words are probably allied to Icel. króðr, praise, fame, from ✓KAR, to proclaim; see Fick, i. 521, iii. 85. ¶ That we got the word from Denmark is shewn by a curious quotation in Todd's Johnson: 'Thou noblest drunkard Bacchus, teach me how to take the Danish rouza;' Brand's Pop. Antiq. ii. 228 (ed. Bohn, ii. 330). See Row (3).

ROUT, (1) a defeat, (2) a troop or crowd of people. (F., — L.) Notwithstanding the wide difference of sense, the word is but one. More than that, it is the same word as Route, q. v. 1. Shak. has rouit, i. e. disordered flight, 2 Hen. VI, v. 2. 31; Cymb. v. 3. 41; and rouit, verb, to defeat and put to disorderly flight, Cymb. v. 2. 12. This does not seem to occur much earlier. 2. M. E. route, a number of people, troop, Chaucer, C. T. 624, Will. of Palerne, 1213; Layamon, 2598, later text. — F. route, 'a rowt, overthrow, defeature; . . also, a rowt, heard, flock, troope, company, multitude of men or beasts; . . also, a rutt, way, path, street, course;' Cot. — Lat. rupta, fem. of ruptus, broken. β. The different senses may be thus explained. 1. A defeat is a breaking up of a host, a broken mass of flying men. 2. A small troop of men is a fragment or broken piece of an army; and the word is generally used in contempt, of a company in broken ranks or disorderly array. The phrase in disorder nearly expresses both these results. 3. A route was, originally, a way broken or cut out through a wood or forest. See Rote (1), Route.

¶ The G. rotte, a troop, is merely borrowed from the Romance languages. Cf. Ital. rotta, Span. rota, a rout, defeat. It is remarkable that the mod. F. route has lost the senses both of 'defeat' and 'troop.' Der. rouit, verb, as above.

ROUTE, a way, course, line of march. (F., — L.) Not much used in later authors, but it occurs very early. M. E. route, spelt rute, Ancrén Riwle, p. 350, l. 1. — F. route, 'a way, path, street, course . . also, a glade in a wood;' Cot. β. The sense of 'glade' is the earliest; it meant a way broken or cut through a forest. — Lat. rupta, fem. of ruptus, pp. of rumper, to break. See Rote (1), Route, Rapture. Der. rouit-ine. Doublets, rote (1), rouit, rut (1).

ROUTINE, a beaten track, a regular course of action. (F., — L.) Modern. — F. routine, a usual course of action; lit. a small path, pathway; dimin. of route, a route, way; see Route.

ROVER, a pirate, wanderer. (Du.) M. E. rover, rovare. 'Robare, or robbar yn the see, rovare, or thief of the see, Pirata;' Prompt. Parv. p. 437. — Du. roover, 'a rober, a pyrate, or a thief;' Hexham. — Du. rooven, to rob. — Du. roof, 'spoil;' id. β. The Du. rooven is cognate with A. S. redfian, to reave, rob; and Du. roof = A. S. reaf, spoil, plunder. See Reave, Rob. Der. rove, verb; 'To rouse, robbe, Rapere; to rouse about, Errare, vagari;' Levins. The second sense was easily developed; the sb. rover is the older word in English, though etymologically due to the verb.

ROW (1), a line, rank, series. (E.) M. E. rowe, Amis and Amiloun, 1900 (Weber's Met. Rom. vol. ii); rowe, Chaucer, C. T. 2868; raw, Barbour's Bruce, v. 590. — A. S. rāw, rāwe, or rāwe, a row; a scarce word. Leo cites: 'on þā brádan rāwe' = on the broad row, Kemble's A. S. Charters, 1246; hege-rāwe, a hedge-row, id. 272. β. Perhaps from ✓RA, to fit. ¶ Quite distinct from Du. rij, O. Du. rijge, rijge (Oudemans), Low G. rige, rege, G. reihe, a row. The G. reihe is from O. H. G. rihan, to string together, to arrange things (as beads) by passing a string or rod through them; a strong verb, from the Teut. base RIH, to pierce, string together; Fick, iii. 253.

ROW (2), to propel a boat with oars. (E.) M. E. rowen, Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 254; Wyclif, Luke, viii. 26. — A. S. rōwan, to row, sail, Luke, viii. 23, 26. + Du. roeyen. + Icel. róa. + Swed. roa. + Dan. roe. + M. H. G. ruen. β. All from a Teut. base RÖ, Fick, iii. 259, which is a strengthened form of RA or AR. — ✓AR, to push; cf. Skt. aritra, a rudder, orig. a paddle; Lithuan. irti, to row; Gk. iper-mós, a paddle, oar, Lat. remus, an oar. Der. row, sb., row-er. Also rudder, q. v. ¶ But note that row-lock (pron. rul'uk) is an accommodated spelling of oar-lock, as shewn in the Errata.

ROW (3), an uproar. (Scand.) Put for rouse, drunkenness, uproar, the older form being obsolete; see Todd's Johnson. The loss of s is as in pea, cherry, sherry, &c. See Rouse (2).

ROWAN-TREE, the same as Roan-tree, q. v.

ROWEL, a little wheel with sharp points at the end of a spur. (F., — L.) 'A payre of spurres, with a poynte without a rowell;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 245 (R.) 'Rowell of a spurre;' Palsgrave. — F. rouelle, 'a little flat ring, a wheele of plate or iron, in horses bits;' Cot. [He gives mollette as the O. F. word for a rowel; on the other hand, Spenser uses rowell for a part of a horse's bit; F. Q. i. 7. 37.] — Low Lat. rotella, a little wheel, dimin. of rota, a wheel; see Rotary.

ROYAL, kingly. (F., — L.) M. E. real, Chaucer, C. T. 1020 (Six-text, A. 1018), where some MSS. have roial. — O. F. real, roial; spelt royal in Cotgrave, and explained as 'royall, regall, kingly.' — Lat. regalis, regal, royal; see Regal. Der. royal-ist; royal-ty, M. E. realte, Gower, C. A. iii. 220, l. 4, from O. F. realte, realte, spelt royauté in Cotgrave, from Lat. acc. regalitem. And see real (2). Doublet, regal.

RUB, to move over a surface with pressure, scour, wipe. (C.) M. E. rubben, Chaucer, C. T. 3745; P. Plowman, B. xiii. 99. Of Celtic origin. — Gael. rub, to rub, Irish and Gael. rubadh, a rubbing; W. rhwbio, to rub, rhwb, a rub. Cf. Irish rubair, Gael. rubair, a rubber. (Hence also Dan. rubbe, to rub.) Der. rub, sb., Macb. iii. 1. 134; rub-er. ¶ Not connected with G. reiben, which is related to Rive.

RUBBISH, broken stones, waste matter, refuse; nonsense. (F., — O. H. G.) Prov. E. rubbage, as in Norfolk (Forby). Palsgrave has 'robriſſhe of stones, plastras;' and Cotgrave explains the F. plastras by 'rubbish, clods or pieces of old and dry plaster.' Horman, in his Vulgaria (as cited by Way, note to Prompt. Parv., p. 435) says that 'Battz [brick-bats] and great rubbrysſhe serueth to fyl yn in the myddell of the wall.' These quotations shew that rubbrish was used in the exact sense of what we now usually call rubble; and the two words, rubble and rubbish, are closely connected.

β. In the form rubbrish, the latter r is intrusive, since it disappears in earlier, as well as in later English. The M. E. form is robous, or robeux; as, 'Robous, or coldyr, Petrosa, petro;' where coldyr is an old word for rubble; Prompt. Parv. Way adds: in the Wardrobe Account of Piers Courteys, Keeper of the Wardrobe 20 Edw. IV. (1480), occurs a payment to 'John Carter, for cariage away of a grete loode of robeux, that was left in the strete after the reparacyone made uppon a hous apperteigning unto the same Wardrobe;' Harl. MS. 4780. γ. The spelling robeux furnishes the key to the solution of the word. It is a F. plural form, from a sing. *robel, dimin. of robe. Here *robel is exactly the mod. E. rubble, and the pl. robeux (or robeaux) became robous, as in the Prompt. Parv., and was easily corrupted into rubbage and rubbish, and even into rubbrish (with intrusive r). In this view, rubbrish is the pl. of rubble, and was accordingly at first used in the same sense. δ. At what time the word robeux first appeared in English we have no exact means of knowing, but I find an earlier trace of it in the fact that it was absurdly Latinised as rubiosa (as if it were a neuter plural), in accordance with its plural form, as early as A. D. 1392 or 1393. Blount, in his Nomolexicon, s. v. lastage, cites an act against throwing rubbish into the Thames, in which are the words 'aut fimos, fimaría, sterquilinia, sordes, mucos, rubiosa, lastagium, aut alia sordida;' Claus. 16 Rich. II. dors. 11. ε. The only difficulty is that the O. F. *robel is not preserved; but it must have been a dimin. of robe in the sense of 'trash' which is found in the cognate Ital. roba, though lost in French. The lit. sense is 'spoil,' hence a garment, or any odds and ends seized as booty. It may be noted that Cotgrave has the spelling robbe for robe, showing that the o was shortened, though orig. long; hence E. rob. β. The whole matter is cleared up by comparison with Italian, which has preserved the corresponding word to this day. Florio explains Ital. robba (mod. Ital. roba) by 'a gowne, a roabe, a mantle; also wealth, goods, geare; also trash, or pelfe.' Hence Ital. robaccia, old goods, stuff, filth, rubbish; robaccia, trifles, trash, rubbish. See further under Robe, Rob. ¶ It is doubtless the case that rubble and rubbish have long been associated in the popular mind with the verb to rub; but it is equally certain that the words rubble and rubbish can only be explained by French. The sense of 'broken stones' is still preserved; see examples in Todd's Johnson. [†]

RUBBLE, broken stones, rubbish. (F., — O. H. G.) 'Rubble, or rubbish;' Minshew, ed. 1627. 'Rubble, or rubbish of old houses;' also, 'carrie out rubble, as mortar, and broken stones of old buildings;' Baret's Alvearie, ed. 1580. Grammatically, rubble is the singular of robous or robous, the old form of rubbish; see the whole account, under Rubbish.

RUBRIC, a direction printed in red. (F., — L.) The rubrics in the Book of Common Prayer, and (earlier) in the Missal, &c., were so called from being usually written or printed in red letters. [M. E. rubriche, Chaucer, C. T. 5928; this is an O. F. form; cf. rubriche, 'ruble, oaker;' Cot.] — F. rubrique, 'a rubrick; a special title or sentence of the law, written or printed in red;' Cot. — Lat. rubrica, red earth; also a rubric, a title of law written in red. Formed as if from an adj. *rubricus, extended from rubro, crude form of ruber, red; see Ruby.

RUBY, a red gem. (F., — L.) M. E. ruby, P. Plowman, B. ii. 12. — O. F. rubī (13th cent., Littré), also rubis, 'a ruby,' Cot. [The s is the old sign of the nom. case, and is still preserved in writing, though not pronounced.] Cf. Span. rubī, rubin, Port. rubim, Ital. rubino, a ruby. — Low Lat. rubinum, acc. of rubinus, a ruby; named from its colour. — Lat. ruber, red; cf. rubere, to be red. β. From a base RUBH, parallel to RUDH, whence Lat. rufus, Gk. ἐρυθρός, red; see Rouge, Red. Der. (from Lat. rub-ere) rub-escere, growing red, from the pres. part. of inceptive vb. rubescere; rubicund, ruddy, from F. rubicunde, very red (Cot.), which from Lat. rubicundus, very red, with suffixes -c and -undus; rub-ic, q. v. Also e-rub-esc-ent.

RUCK (1), a fold, plait, crease. (Scand.) 'Ruck, a fold or plait, made in cloth by crushing it;' Yorksh. Gloss., A. D. 1811 (E. D. S. Glos. B. 7). — Icel. hrukka, a wrinkle on the skin, or in cloth; cf. hrökkinn, curled, wrinkled, pp. of hrökka, to recoil, give way, also to curl. Cf. Swed. rynka, Dan. rynke, a wrinkle, also to gather, wrinkle. β. Note also Du. breuk, a bend, fold, rumple, wrinkle, W. crych, a wrinkle; see Crook. ¶ The likeness to Lat. ruga, a wrinkle, appears to be accidental. Der. ruck-le, to rumple (Halliwell).

RUCK (2), a heap. (Scand.) See Rick.

RUDDER, the instrument whereby a ship is steered. (E.) Orig. a paddle, for rowing as well as steering; hence the etymology. M. E. roder, or (more usually) rother, Gower, C. A. i. 243, l. 16; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 419. — A. S. rōðer, a paddle; 'Palmula, rōðres blād' = blade of a paddle; 'Remus, steór-rōþer,' lit. a steering-paddle; Wright's Vocab. i. 48, col. 1. β. Here rōðer = rowing-implement; from A. S. rōw-an, to row, with suffix -ðer (Aryan -tar), denoting the agent or implement. + Du. roer (for roder), an oar, rudder. + Swed. roder, also contr. to ror. + Dan. ror (for roder). + G. ruder. See Row (2).

RUDDOCK, a red-breast. (E.) M. E. ruddok, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, l. 349. — A. S. rudduc; Wright's Vocab. i. 29, col. 1. β. Prob. imitated from the Celtic; cf. W. rhuddog, Corn. ruddoc, a red-breast. See Ruddy.

RUDDY, reddish. (E.) M. E. rody, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 99; rodi, Wyclif, Matt. xvi. 2. — A. S. *rudig, not found; formed with suffix -ig from rud-on, the pt. t. pl. of reōdan, to redden. [The alleged A. S. rud, red, is really rude, 3 p. s. pr. subj. of the same verb; compare Ælfred's Metres, ed. Grein, viii. 34, with Rawlinson's edition of Ælfred's tr. of Boethius, pp. 158, 159.] Allied to A. S. reōd, red; see Red. Cf. Icel. rodi, redness, allied to raubr, red. ¶ We also find A. S. rudu, i. e. redness, applied to the complexion (of the face), Wright's Vocab. i. 42, col. 2; this is M. E. rode, complexion, Chaucer, C. T. 3317. Der. ruddi-ly; ruddi-ness, Wint. Tale, v. 3. 81.

RUDE, rough, uncivil, harsh. (F., — L.) M. E. rude, Chaucer, C. T. 14814. — F. rude, 'rude;' Cot. — Lat. rudem, acc. of rudis, rough, raw, rude, wild, untitled. Root unknown. Der. rude-ly, rude-ness; also rude-ment, As You Like It, v. 4. 31 = F. rudiment (omitted by Cot., but in use in the 16th century, Littré), from Lat. rudimentum, a thing in the rough state, a first attempt; rudiment-al, rudiment-ar-y. Also e-rud-ite, e-rud-i-ion.

RUE (1), to be sorry for. (E.) For arue, initial h being lost.

M. E. rewen, Chaucer, C. T. 1865; Havelok, 967. — A. S. hrēowan, Grein, ii. 104. + O. Sax. hrewan. + O. H. G. hriuwān, G. reuen. β. A. S. hrēowan is a strong verb, with pt. t. hrēow; so also O. Sax. hrewan, pt. t. hraw; hence the Teut. base is HRU (Fick, iii. 84), whence also Icel. hryggj, grieved, afflicted, hrygð, ruth, grief, sorrow. — ✓ KRU, of which the fundamental notion is 'to be hard;' Curtius, i. 191. Cf. Lat. crudus, raw, crudelis, cruel, Gk. κρύος, ice, &c. Thus E. crude, cruel, crystal are related words. Der. rue-ful, P. Plowman, B. xiv. 148; rue-ful-ly; rue-ful-ness, M. E. reoufulnesse, Ancren Riwle, p. 368, l. 13. And see ruth.

RUE (2), a plant with bitter taste. (F., — L., — Gk.) M. E. rue, Wyclif, Luke, xi. 42. — F. rue, 'rue, herb grace;' Cot. — Lat. ruta, rue; Luke, xi. 42. — Gk. ῥύτις, rue; a Peloponnesian word. ¶ The A. S. rúte (Luke, xi. 42) is merely borrowed from Lat. ruta.

RUFF (1), a kind of frill, formerly much worn by both sexes. (E.) In Shak. Tam. of the Shrew, iv. 3. 56; Spenser, F. Q. i. 4. 14. Also as a verb: 'Whilst the proud bird, ruffling [ruffling] his feathers wyde;' F. Q. iii. 11. 32. 'Ruffe of a shirt;' Levins. β. So called from its uneven surface; the root appears in Icel. rjúfa (pt. t. rauf), to break, rip up, break a hole in, A. S. redfan (pt. t. pl. rufon), to reave, from ✓ RUP, to break. See Reave. γ. This is verified by the cognate Lithuan. rupas, adj. rough, uneven, rugged, esp. used of a rough road or a broken surface; whence ruple, the rough bark of trees, corresponding to E. ruffle (1). Cf. also Icel. rúfinn, rough, uncombed; Ital. arruffare, to disorder, ruffle the hair, a word of Teutonic origin. Der. ruff (2), ruffle (1).

RUFF (2), the name of a bird. (E.?) Said to be so named from the male having a ruff round its neck in the breeding season; see Ruff (1). The female is called a reeve, which would appear to be formed by vowel-change; this is a very remarkable form, but has not been explained.

RUFF (3), the name of a fish. (E.?) M. E. ruffe, Prompt. Parv., p. 438. Palsgrave has 'Ruffe, a fysshie;' without any French equivalent. Origin unknown.

RUFFIAN, a bully, violent, brutal fellow. (F., — Teut.) 'A commune and notable rufyan or thefe;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. ii. c. 12 (R.). — O. F. rufien, ruffien, 'a bawd, a pandar,' Cot. Cf. Ital. ruffiano, Span. rufian, a ruffian, pimp, bully. β. Formed from the base roff- of O. Du. roffen, cited under Ruffle (2), q. v.

Der. ruffian-ly, ruffian-ism.

RUFFLE (1), to wrinkle, disorder a dress. (E.) 'I ruffle clothe or sylke, I bring them out of their playne foldyng, je plionne;' Palsgrave. M. E. ruffelen; 'Ruffelyn, or snarlyf [i. e. to entangle or run into knots], Innodo, illaqueo;' Prompt. Parv. The word is probably E.; it is parallel to O. Du. ruysfelen, 'to ruffle, wrinkle, or crumple;' Hexham; cf. ruysfel, 'a wrinkle, a crumple, or a ruffle,' id. β. The Lithuan. ruple, the rough bark on old trees, is a cognate word; so also is rauple, a rough scab or blister; both of which are extensions from Lithuan. rupas, rough, uneven. See Ruff (1). A parallel form is Rumple, q. v. Der. ruffle, sb., a wrinkle, a ruff.

RUFFLE (2), to be noisy and turbulent, to bluster. (O. Du.) 'To ruffle in the commonwealth of Rome;' Titus Andron. i. 313. Cf. 'the ruffle [bustle] . . . of court;' Shak. Lover's Complaint, 58. 'Twenty or more persons were sleyn in the ruffle;' Hall's Chron. Hen. VIII. an. 19 (R.). Nares has: 'A ruffler, a cheating bully, so termed in several acts of parliament,' particularly in one of the 27th year of Hen. VIII. as explained in Harman's Caveat, ed. Furnivall, p. 29. They were highway robbers, ready to use violence; any lawless or violent person was so named. It seems to have been a cant term, not in very early use; and borrowed, like several other cant terms, from the Low Countries. — O. Du. roffelen, to pandar, of which the shorter form roffen is also found (Oudemans); so also Low G. ruffeln, to pandar, ruffeler, a pimp, a person who carries on secret intrigues (Bremen Wörterbuch); prov. G. ruffeln, to pimp (Flügel); Dan. ruffer, a pandar. β. The words ruffler and ruffian are closely related and mean much the same thing; see Ruffian. Der. ruffler, as above.

RUG, a coarse, rough woollen covering, a mat. (Scand.) 'Apparalled in diuers coloured rugs;' Hackluyt's Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 87, last line but one. — Swed. rugg, rough entangled hair. The orig. sense of Swed. rugg was, doubtless, simply 'rough,' as it is cognate with Low G. ruig, Du. ruig, rough, and so also with A. S. rūh, rough; see Rough. [In mod. Swed. rå, raw, is used also in the sense of rough, by the confusion noted under Rough.] And see Rugged. Der. rugg-ed; also rugg-headed, Rich. II. ii. 1. 156.

RUGGED, rough, shaggy. (Scand.) M. E. rugged, Prompt. Parv. Chaucer has ruggy, C. T. 2885. The latter form is from Swed. ruggig, rugged, rough, hairy; cf. rugga, to raise the nap on cloth, i. e. to roughen it. — Swed. rugg, rough entangled hair; orig. 'rough,' cognate with E. Rough, q. v. See also Rug. Der. rugged-ly, rugged-ness.

RUGOSE, full of wrinkles. (L.) The form rugosus is in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; Phillips has the sb. rugosity. — Lat. rugosus, wrinkled. — Lat. ruga, a wrinkle. + Irish and Gael. rug, a wrinkle. Root uncertain. Der. rugos-i-ty.

RUIN, destruction, overthrow. (F., — L.) M. E. ruine, Chaucer, C. T. 2465. — F. ruine, 'ruine'; Cot. — Lat. ruina, overthrow. — Lat. ruere, to fall down, tumble, sink in ruin, rush. Root uncertain. Der. ruin, verb, Rich. II, iii. 4. 45; ruin-ous, Timon, iv. 3. 465, from F. ruineux, 'ruinous'; Cot.; ruin-ous-ly. Also ruin-ate (obsolete), Titus Andron. v. 3. 204.

RULE, a maxim, state, order, government. (F., — L.) M. E. reule, Chaucer, C. T. 173. Earlier riwle, as in the Ancren Riwe = Rule of (female) Anchorites. — O. F. riule, reule, also riegle (Burguy); mod. F. règle, a rule. — Lat. regula, a rule (whence also was borrowed A. S. regol, a rule). — Lat. regere, to govern; see REGAL. Der. rule, verb, M. E. reulen, earlier riwlen, Ancren Riwe, p. 4; rul-er, rul-ing.

RUM (1), a kind of spirituous liquor. (Malay?) In Dampier's Voyages; Voyage to Campeachy, an. 1675; see quotation in R. We find also Port. rom, Span. ron, Ital. rum, F. rhum. Sometimes said to be a W. Indian or American word, for which there is not the slightest evidence. The etymology of this word has never been pointed out; I think it is obviously a corruption of the Malay brum, or bram, the loss of b being due to want of familiarity with the Malay language. — Malay bram, brum, 'an intoxicating liquor made from burnt palm-sugar or molasses, and fermented rice'; Marsden's Dict. p. 39. This is precisely what rum is, viz. a liquor made from sugar or molasses. Moreover, the probability that rum is a Malay word, is rendered almost a certainty by the fact that it is much the same as ratafia, which is certainly Malay. See RATAFIA. β. Wedgwood suggests that rum is due to the cant term rum booze, good drink, wine, noticed under RUM (2). Perhaps this cant term modified the Malay word.

RUM (2), strange, queer. (Hindi.) 'Rum, gallant; a cant word;' Bailey's Dict., vol. i. ed. 1735. I suppose that rum means no more than 'Gypsy'; and hence would mean 'good' or 'gallant' from a Gypsy point of view, and 'strange' and 'suspicious' from an outsider's point of view. Hence rome bouse, wine, Harman's Caveat, ed. Furnivall, p. 83, spelt rambooz in Phillips; rome mort, the queen, id. p. 84 (where mort = a female). Cf. rom, a husband, a Gypsy, rommani, adj. Gypsy. The Gypsy word rom answers to the Hindi word dom (with initial cerebral d); see English-Gypsy Songs, by Leland, Palmer, and Tuckey, pp. 2, 269. Cf. Skt. domba (with cerebral d), 'a man of a low caste, who gains his livelihood by singing and dancing'; Benfey. Also Hindustani dom, 'the name of a low caste, apparently one of the aboriginal races'; H. H. Wilson, Gloss. of Indian Terms, p. 147.

RUMB, RHUMB, a line for directing a ship's course on a map; a point of the compass. (F., — Span., — L., — Gk.?) This is a very difficult word, both to explain and derive. The view which I here present runs counter to that in Littre and Scheler, but is recognised as possible by Diez. 'Rumb or Rhumb, the course of a ship . . . also, one point of the mariner's compass, or 11½ degrees . . . Rumb-line, a line described by the ship's motion on the surface of the sea, steering by the compass, so as to make the same, or equal angles with every meridian. These *rumb*s are spiral lines proceeding from the point where we stand, and winding about the globe of the earth, till they come to the pole, where at last they lose themselves; but in Mercator's charts, and the plain ones, they are represented by straight lines,' &c.; Phillips, ed. 1706. These lines are called rumb-lines. See Rumb in the Engl. Encyc. (Div. Arts and Sciences), where it is said to be a Portuguese word, and where we find: 'a rumb certainly came to mean any vertical circle, meridian or not, and hence any point of the compass. . . . To sail on a rumb is to sail continually on one course. Hence a rumb-line is a line drawn in [on?] the sphere, such as would be described by a moving point which always keeps one course; it is therefore the spiral of Mercator's projection, and is that which is also called the loxodromic course.' It is spelt roomb, roumb, and roumbe in Minshew, ed. 1627. — F. rumb, 'a roomb, or point of the compasse, a line drawn directly from wind to wind in a compasse, travers-boord, or sea-card'; Cot. He adds the phr. voguer de rumb en rumb, 'to saile by travers.' — Span. rumbo, 'a course, a way; rumbo derecho, the right course'; Minshew's Span. Dict., ed. 1623; also, a point of the compass, intersection of the plane of the horizon, represented by the card of a compass, the course of a ship; Neuman. Cf. Port. rumbo, rumo, a ship's course; quarto do rumo, a point of the compass; Ital. rombo. — Lat. rhombum, acc. of rhombus, a magician's circle, a rhombus (White). — Gk. ῥόμβος, a top, a magic wheel, whirling motion of a top, swoop of an eagle; also, a rhombus; see RHOMB. β. In this view, the sense of spiral motion comes first; then the delineation of such motion on a chart; and lastly, the sense of a point of a compass; ♂ which is the simple and natural order. Milton has the very word rhomb in the sense of the revolution of the sphere; see Paradise Lost, viii. 134, and uses wheel as a synonym. That the word arose among the early Spanish and Portuguese navigators, is in the highest degree probable.

γ. The view taken by Scheler and Littre seems to me obviously wrong; they refer F. rumb (also spelt rum) to the Du. ruim, E. room, on the ground that a rumb is the 'room' or space between two winds; thus taking the last sense first. I cannot find that the Du. ruim ever had this sense; indeed Sewel, as late as 1754, can only render rumb into Dutch by een punt van't kompas; and Hexham mentions no such use of the O. Du. ruym. I therefore hold to the simple solution of the word from Gk. ῥόμβος, instead of regarding the final b (found in Ital., Span., Port., and F.) as merely excrescent.

δ. The fact seems to be that Littre and Scheler are thinking of quite another matter, viz. the O. F. rum, 'the hold of a ship'; Cot. This is certainly the Du. ruim, since Sewel gives the very phrase ruim van een schip, the hold of a ship, i. e. its room, capacity for stowage. The very fact that the Dutch used ruim as a sea-phrase in this connection renders it very improbable that they would also have used it in a totally different connection. Until at least some evidence can be shewn for the alleged use of Du. ruim, I do not see why the assertion is to be admitted.

ε. I also regard as purely fabulous the suggestion that a rumb was so named because, in old charts, the points of the compass were marked by lozenges or rhombs; the mark for the north-point, with which we are familiar, reminds one more of a fleur-de-lis than a rhombus, and there is nothing in the F., Span., Ital., or Port. words to suggest this very limited sense of them.

ζ. Finally, the spelling rumb seems better than rhumb; it is more usual, and suits the Spanish; the Greek word being only the ultimate source.

Ⓜ. Brachet derives F. rumb from E. rumb, evading the difficulty. Yet this is quite possible, as we may have taken the word immediately from the Spanish. Der. rumb-line. Doublet, rhomb. [†]

RUMBLE, to make a low and heavy sound. (E.) M. E. romblen, to mutter, Chaucer, C. T. 14453; to rumble like thunder, Legend of Good Women, 1216. Cf. prov. E. rommie, to speak low or secretly (Halliwell); rummle, to rumble; id. The word romblen likewise stands for romlen, the b being excrescent, as usual after m; and the suffix -len has the usual frequentative force. Thus the word signifies 'to repeat the sound rom or rum'; from the base RUM, significant of a low sound; which from ✓RU, to make a humming or lowing noise. Cf. Skt. ru, to hum, to bray; Lat. ad-ru-are, to make a murmuring noise (Festus); see RUMOUR. + Du. rommelen, to rumble, buzz. + Dan. rumle, to rumble. And cf. Swed. ramla, to rattle, Ital. rombare, to rumble, hum, buzz. Der. rumble, sb., rumbl-ing.

RUMINATE, to chew the cud, meditate. (L.) 'Let hym . . . ruminare it in his mynde a good space after;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. i. c. 2 (R.). — Lat. ruminatus, pp. of ruminare or ruminari, to chew the cud, ruminate. — Lat. rumin-, stem of rumen, the throat, gullet; cf. rumare, used (according to Festus) in the same sense as ruminare. β. Probably rumen = *rug-men, allied to O. Lat. erugare, to belch, rugire, to roar, bray; from ✓RU, to hum, bray. See RUMBLE, RUMOUR. Der. ruminat-ion, As You Like It, iv. 1. 19, from Lat. acc. ruminationem; also rumin-ant, from the stem of the pres. part. of ruminare.

RUMMAGE, to search thoroughly among things stowed away. (E.; with F. suffix.) 'Searcheth his pockets, and takes his keys, and so rummageth all his closets and trunks;' Howell, Famil. Letters, vol. i. sect. 5. let. last. This is altogether a secondary sense; the word is merely due to the sb. room-age, formed by suffix -age (of F. origin) from E. room, space. Roomage is a similar formation to stowage, and means much the same thing. It is an old nautical term for the close packing of things in a ship; hence was formed the verb to roomage or romage, i. e. to find room for or stow away packages; and the mariner who attended to this business was called the roomager or romager.

β. The history of the word is in Hackluyt's Voyages. 'To looke and foresee substantially to the roomaging of the shippes;' vol. i. p. 274. 'They might bring away [in their ships] a great deale more then they doe, if they would take paine in the romaging;' vol. i. p. 308. 'The master must provide a perfect mariner called a romager, to raunge and bestow all merchandize in such place as is convenient;' vol. iii. p. 862. 'To rummage (sea-term), to remove any goods or luggage from one place to another, esp. to clear the ship's hold of any goods or lading, in order to their being handsomely stowed and placed; whence the word is us'd upon other occasions, for to rake into, or to search narrowly;' Phillips, ed. 1706. See further under ROOM. Cf. Du. ruim, room, also the hold of a ship; ruimen, to empty, clear, lit. to make room. Der. prov. E. rummage, lumber, rubbish, lit. a clearance.

RUMMER, a sort of drinking-glass. (Du., — G., — L.?) 'Rummer, a sort of drinking-glass, such as Rhenish wine is usually drunk in; also, a brimmer, or glass of any liquor filled to the top; Phillips ed. 1706. 'Rhenish rummers walk the round;' Dryden, Ep. to Sir G. Etherege, l. 45. — Du. roemer, romer, a wine-glass (Sewel); römer, a sort of large wine-glass (Brem. Wörterbuch). So also G. römer; Swed. remmare. The G. römer also means 'Roman;' I am told that the glasses were so called because used in former times in the Römersaal at Frankfurt, when they drank the new emperor's health. If so, the word is really Latin, from Lat. Roma, Rome.

RUMOUR, report, current story. (F., — L.) M. E. rumour, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 7, l. 1577. — F. rumour, 'a rumor;' Cot. — Lat. acc. rumorem, from nom. rumor, a noise, rumour, murmur. Cf. Lat. rumificare, to proclaim; rumitare, to spread reports; all from the base RUM, significant of a buzzing sound. — ✓ RU, to make a humming or braying noise. See Rumble. Der. rumour, verb. Rich. III. iv. 2. 51. [†]

RUMP, the end of the backbone of an animal with the parts adjacent. (Scand.) M. E. rumpe, Prompt. Parv. — Icel. rumpur; Swed. rumpa; Dan. rump. + Du. rompe, 'the bulke of a body or corps, or a body without a head;' Hexham. Der. rump-steak.

RUMPLE, to wrinkle, crease. (E.) Cotgrave explains F. foupir by 'to rumple, or crumple.' The M. E. form is rimplen; rimple and rumple are parallel forms, like wrinkle and prov. E. runkle. Of these, rimple is derived from the A. S. arimpan, to wrinkle, and rumple from the pp. gehrumpen of the same verb; see further under Ripple (2). + Du. rompelen, or rompen, 'to wrinkle;' Hexham; rompel, or rimpel, 'a wrinkle;' id. And cf. G. rumpfen, to crook, bend, wrinkle. Der. rumple, sb.

RUN, to move swiftly, flee, flow, dart. (E.) M. E. rinnen, rennen, pt. t. ran, pp. runnen, rennen; Chaucer, C. T. 4098, 4103, 15389, 15394. The mod. E. verb has usurped the vowel of the pp. throughout, except in the pt. t. ran. By the transposition of r, we also find M. E. ernen, cornen, to run; Ancr. Riwle, pp. 42, 74, 80, 86, 332, 360. — A. S. rinnan, pt. t. ran, pp. gerunnen; Grein, ii. 382; also irnan, yrnan, pt. t. arn; id. 146. + Du. rennen. + Icel. renna; older form, rinna. + Dan. rinde (for rinne). + Swed. rinna. + Goth. rinnan. + G. rennen.

β. The Teut. base is RANN, standing for an older base ARN; Fick, iii. 251. Allied to Gk. ῥινυμι, I stir up, ῥινομαι, I go; Lat. ori-ri, to arise; Skt. rinomi, I go, rise, ri, to go. — ✓ AR, to rise, drive; Fick, i. 19. Der. run, sb., Tam. Shrew, iv. 1. 16; run-away, Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 405; runn-er, runn-ing. Also runn-el, a small stream, Collins, Ode on the Passions; run, a small stream. Also renn-et (1); old form also runn-et.

RUNAGATE, a vagabond. (F., — L.) In Ps. lxxviii. 6, Prayer-Book version; Shak. Rich. III. iv. 4. 465. 'The A. V. has rebellious, as in Isaiah xxx. 1, which is quoted by Latimer (Remains, p. 434) in this form: "Wo be unto you, runagate children;" Bible Word-book. In the Coventry Mysteries, p. 384, it is written renogat: "Vs there ony renogat among us;" id. β. It so happens that gate in many E. dialects signifies a way; whilst at the same time the M. E. verb rennen passed into the form run, as at present. Hence the M. E. renegat, a renegade, was popularly supposed to stand for renne a gate, i. e. to run on the way, and was turned into runagate accordingly; esp. as we also have the word runaway. But it is certain that the orig. sense of M. E. renegat was 'apostate' or 'villain;' see Chaucer, C. T. 5353. — O. F. renegat, 'a renegadee, one that abjures his religion;' Cot. — Low Lat. renegatus, pp. of renegare, to deny again, to deny the faith. See Renegade.

¶ It is remarkable that when renegat had been corrupted into runagate, we borrowed the word over again, in the form renegade, from Span. renegado. It is a pity we could not do without it altogether.

RUNDLET, RUNLET, a small barrel. (F., — L.) Runlet is a later form, corrupted from the older rundelet or runlet; spelt rundelet in Levins, ed. 1570. 'Rundelet, or lytle pot, oreula;' Huloet (cited by Wheatley). 'Roundlet, a certain measure of wine, oyle, &c., containing 184 gallons; An. 1. Rich. III. cap. 13; so called of his roundness;' Minshew. Formed with dimin. suffix -et from O. F. rondelle, a little tun or barrel (Roquefort); the same word as O. F. rondelle, a buckler or round target (shield), in Cotgrave. This is again formed, with dimin. suffix -elle, from ronde, a circle, or from round, round; see Round.

RUNE, one of the old characters used for cutting inscriptions on stone. (E.) M. E. run, counsel, a letter, Layamon, 25332, 25340, 30000; later roun, whence roun or round in Shakespeare; see Roun. — A. S. rūn, a rune, mystery, secret colloquy, whisper; Grein, ii. 385. The orig. sense seems to be 'whisper' or 'buzz;' hence, a low talk, secret colloquy, a mystery, and lastly a writing; because written characters were regarded as a mystery known to the few. + Icel. rún, a secret, a rune. + Goth. runa, a mystery, counsel. + O. H. G. rūna, a secret, counsel; whence G. raunen, to whisper. β. All from the Teut. base RŪ-NA, a murmur, whisper; formed (like Lat.

ru-mor, a rumour) from ✓ RU, to buzz, hum, bray; see Rumour. Der. run-ic, roun.

RUNG, one of the rounds of a ladder. (E.) Also a staff (Halliwell); one of the stakes of a cart, a spar (Webster). M. E. ronge, P. Plowman, B. xvi. 44; Chaucer, C. T. 3625 (where Tyrwhitt's edition wrongly has renge for ronge). — A. S. hrung, apparently one of the stakes of a cart; Grein, ii. 109. + O. Du. ronge, 'the beam upon which the coulter of a plough, or of a wagon rests;' Hexham. + Icel. röng, a rib in a ship. + G. runge, a short thick piece of iron or wood, a pin, bolt. + Goth. hrugga (= hrunga), a staff, Mark, vi. 8. We find also Irish ronga, a rung, joining spar, Gael. rong, a joining spar, rib of a boat, staff; these seem to be borrowed from English. Prob. connected with A. S. hring, a ring; see Ring.

RUPEE, an Indian coin, worth about two shillings. (Hind., — Skt.) 'In silver, 14 roopees make a masse;' Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, p. 46; cf. p. 67. The gold rupee is worth about 29s. — Hindustani rūpiyah, a rupee; Rich. Arab. and Pers. Dict. p. 753. — Skt. rūpya, handsome; also, as sb. silver, wrought silver, or wrought gold. — Skt. rūpa, natural state, form, beauty. Supposed to be derived from rop, in ropaya, causal of ruk, to grow (Benfey).

RUPTURE, a bursting, breach, breakage. (F., — L.) 'No peryll of obstruction or rupture;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 32 (R.) — F. rupture, 'a rupture, breach;' Cot. — Lat. ruptura, fem. of fut. part. of rumper (pt. t. rupi), to break, burst. — ✓ RUP, to break, violate, rob; cf. Lithuan. rupas, rough, A. S. reofan, to reave, Skt. rup, to confound, lup, to break, destroy, spoil; Fick, iii. 746. Der. rupture, verb. From the same root are ab-rupt, bank-rupt, cor-rupt, dis-ruption, e-ruption, inter-rupt, ir-ruption, pro-ruption, rote (1), route, roul, rut. Also loot, perhaps loop; and perhaps ruff, ruffle (1).

RURAL, belonging to the country. (F., — L.) 'In a person rurali or of a very base lymage;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 3. § 5 (R.) — F. rural, 'rural;' Cot. — Lat. ruralis, rural. — Lat. rur, stem of rus (gen. rusis), the country; see Rustic. Der. rural-ly, rural-ise.

RUSE, a trick. (F., — L.) Used by Ray (died A. D. 1705), according to Todd (no reference). Phillips, ed. 1706, gives the adj. rusy, full of tricks. — F. ruse, a stratagem. — F. ruser, 'to beguile, use tricks;' Cot.

β. This F. ruser is a contraction of O. F. reüser, to refuse, recoil, retreat, escape; hence, to use tricks for escaping (Burguy). — Lat. recusare, to refuse; whence the O. F. reüser was formed, precisely as O. F. seür, later sür (E. sure), from Lat. securus; see Scheler. — Lat. re, back; and causa, a cause, statement; so that recusare is to decline a statement. See Re and Cause.

RUSH (1), to move forward violently. (Scand.) M. E. ruschen, rushen, Chaucer, C. T. 1641; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 368; Sir Gawayn and the Grene Knight, 2204. — O. Swed. ruska, to rush; Ihre gives the example: 'Tha kommo the alle ruskande inn,' then they all came rushing in; Chron. Rhythm. p. 40. This is clearly connected with O. Swed. rusa, to rush; whence E. Rouse (1), q. v. β. The O. Swed. ruska also means to shake (cf. Swed. rusta, to stir, to make a riot); this is the same as Icel. ruska, to shake violently, Dan. ruske, to pull, shake, twitch. γ. Another sense of O. Swed. ruska (like G. rauschen) is to rustle; perhaps all three senses are connected, and the original notion may have been 'to shake with a sudden noise;' see Rustle. So also Low G. rusken, (1) to rustle, (2) to rush about; Bremen Wörterbuch. Der. rush, sb.

RUSH (2), a round-stemmed leafless plant, common in wet ground (E. or L.) M. E. rusche, rische, resche, P. Plowman, B. iii. 141. — A. S. risce, resce, Gloss. to A. S. Leechdoms. Cf. Low G. rush, risch, a rush; Brem. Wörterbuch; Du. and G. rusch, rush, reed, small brushwood.

β. It is very uncertain whether these are Teutonic words; perhaps they are merely borrowed from Lat. ruscum, butcher's broom.

¶ Not connected with Goth. raus, G. rohr, a reed. Der. rush-y. Also bul-rush, M. E. bultrysche, Prompt. Parv. p. 244; in which word the first part is prob. Icel. bolr, bulr, a stem, trunk, Dan. bul, trunk, stem, shaft of a column, Swed. bål, a trunk, so that the sense is 'stem-rush,' from its long stem; see Bulwark, Bole; cf. bull-weed (= bole-weed, ball-weed), knapweed; bulrush often means the reed-mace. Also rush-candle, Tam. Shrew, iv. 5. 14; rush-light.

RUSK, a kind of light, hard cake or bread. (Span.) 'The lady sent me divers presents of fruit, sugar, and rusk;' Raleigh, cited by Todd (no reference). — Span. rosca de mar, sea-rusks, a kind of biscuit, Meadows; rosca, a roll of bread, Minshew, ed. 1623. Minshew also has rosquite, a pancake, rosquilla, a clue of threed, a little roll of bread, also lying round like a snake. Cf. Port. rosca, the winding of a serpent, a screw; fazer rosca, to wriggle. Thus the rusk was orig. a twist, a twisted roll of bread. Origin unknown (Diez).

RUSSET, reddish-brown; a coarse country dress. (F., — L.) M. E. russet, P. Plowman, A. ix. 1; B. viii. 1. — F. rousset, 'russet, brown, ruddy;' Cot. Hence applied to a coarse brown rustic dress. Dimin. of F. roun (fem. rousse), 'reddish;' Cot. — Lat. russeus, reddish.

β. Lat. russeus = rud-tus, for rudh-tus, from the base RUDH appearing in Gk. ἐρυθρός, red; see Red, Buddy. Der. russet-ing, a russet apple. [†]

RUST, a reddish-brown coating on iron exposed to moisture. (E.) M. E. rust, Wyclif, Matt. vi. 19, 20. — A. S. rust, rust; whence rustig, rusty, Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, b. v. c. 15. § 4. + Du. roest. + Dan. rust. + Swed. rost. + G. rost. β. Probably A. S. rust stands for rud-st; at any rate, we may consider it as allied to A. S. rud-u, ruddiness, and E. ruddy and red; cf. Icel. ryð, rust, lit. redness; M. H. G. rot, rust, allied to G. roth, red. So also Lithuan. rudis, rust, ridas, reddish. See Red. Der. rust, verb; rust-y, A. S. rustig, as above; rust-i-ly, rust-i-ness.

RUSTIC, belonging to the country. (F., — L.) Spelt rustiche, Spenser, F. Q. introd. to b. iii. st. 5. — F. rustique, 'rusticall'; Cot. — Lat. rusticus, belonging to the country; formed with double suffix -i-cus from rus, the country.

β. The Lat. rūs is thought to be a contraction for *rovus or *ravus, allied to Russ. raviina, a plain, Zend ravan, a plain, and to E. room; see Room. Der. rustic-al-ly, rustic-ate, rustic-at-ion; rustic-i-ty, from F. rusticité, 'rusticity,' Cot. And see rust-al, roister-ing.

RUSTLE, to make a low whispering sound. (Scand.) In Shak. Meas. for Meas. iv. 3. 38. The form is frequentative; and it seems best to consider it as the frequentative of Swed. rusta, to stir, to make a noise. This is a mere variant of O. Swed. ruska, to rustle; cf. G. ruscheln, ruschen, to rustle, rush, G. rauschen, to rustle, rush. β. Hence rustle is, practically, little else than the frequentative of Rush (1), q. v.

γ. The A. S. hruxle, a rustling, hrustlan, to rustle, are unauthorised words, given by Sommer, but they may be related; as also Swed. rysa, to shudder, and the Icel. strong verb hrjósa, to shudder, A. S. hreósan, to fall with a rush. If so, the Teut. base is HRUS, to shake or shudder; Fick, iii. 84. Der. rustle, sb.; rustl-ing.

RUT (1), a track left by a wheel. (F., — L.) 'And as from hills rain-waters headlong fall, That all ways eat huge ruts;' Chapman, tr. of Homer, Iliad, iv. 480. The word is merely a less correct spelling of route, i. e. a track. — F. route, 'a rutt, way, path, street, . . trace, tract, or footing,' Cot. See Route. Der. rut, verb.

RUT (2), to copulate, as deer. (F., — L.) M. E. rutien, rutien; P. Plowman, C. xiv. 146; cf. in rotey tyme = in rut-time, id. B. xi. 329. Like other terms of the chase, it is of Norman-French origin. The M. E. rotey answers to O. F. ruté, spelt ruté in Cotgrave; he gives venaison rutée, venison that's killed in rut-time. The verb rutien is formed from the sb. rut. — F. rut (so spelt even in the 14th century, Littré), better spelt ruit, as in Cotgrave, who explains it by 'the rut of deer or boars, their lust, and the season wherein they ingender.' — Lat. rugitum, acc. of rugitus, the roaring of lions; hence, the noise of deer in rut-time. Cf. F. ruir, 'to roar,' Cot., from Lat. rugire, to roar. — ✓ RU, to make a noise, whence also Lithuan. ruja, rattling-time; see Rumour.

RUTH, pity, compassion. (Scand.) M. E. reuthe, reuthe, Chaucer, C. T. 916; reuthe, affliction, Ancien Riwle, p. 32, l. 8; p. 54, l. 12. Formed from the verb to ruie, but not an A. S. form, the corresponding A. S. sb. being hreúw. — Icel. hryggð, hryggð, affliction, sorrow. Cf. Icel. hrygg, grieved, sorrowful. — Teut. base HRU, to grieve, appearing in A. S. hreóðuan, to rue; see Rue (1). Der. ruth-less, Meas. for Meas. iii. 2. 121; ruth-ful, Troilus, v. 3. 48.

RYE, a kind of grain. (E.) M. E. reye, Chaucer, C. T. 7328; ryge, Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 152. — A. S. ryge, Wright's Vocab., p. 287, col. 1. + Du. rogge. + Icel. rúgr. + Dan. rug. + Swed. råg. + G. roggen, O. H. G. rocco. β. All from the Teut. type RUGA, rye, Fick, iii. 256. Further allied to Lithuan. pl sb. ruggei, rye; Russ. roje, rye. Der. rye-grass.

RYOT, a Hindoo cultivator or peasant. (Arab.) The same word as Rayah, q. v.

S.

SABAOTH, hosts, armies. (Heb.) In phr. 'the Lord of Sabaoth;' Rom. ix. 29; James, v. 4. — Heb. tsəvā'ót, armies; pl. of tsəvā', an army. — Heb. tsəvā', to go forth (as a soldier).

SABBATH, the day of rest. L., — Gk., — Heb.) M. E. sabat, Wyclif, Mark, ii. 27; Cursor Mundi, 11997. — Lat. sabbatum. — Gk. σάββατον. — Heb. shabbāth, rest, sabbath, sabbath-day. — Heb. shābāth, to rest from labour. ¶ The mod. E. word is a compromise between sabbat (the Lat. form) and shabbath (the Heb. form). Der. Sabbat-ar-i-an, sabbat-i-cal.

SABLE, an animal of the weasel kind, with dark or black fur; also, the fur. (F., — Slavonic.) M. E. sable, Chaucer, Compl. of Mars, 284; the adj. sabeline occurs much earlier, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 181, l. 362. — O. F. sable, the sable (Burguy); 'the colour sables, or black, in blazon;' Cot. Cf. Low Lat. sabelum, the sable; sabelinus, sable-fur, whence the O. F. sebelin, M. E. sabeline; the mod. F. zibeline, properly an adj., is also used for the animal itself. Of Slavonic origin. — Russ. sobole, the sable, also a boa or fur-tippet. Der. sable, sb. and adj. The best fur being black, sable also means black, as in heraldry; see Hamlet, ii. 2. 474, iii. 2. 137, iv. 7. 81.

¶ It is sometimes said that the name of the sable is taken from Siberia, where it is found. I do not believe it. The Russ. sobole, a sable, does not resemble Sibire, Siberia; nor does the adj. form sabeline (in O. F.) approach Sibirskii or Sibirsk, Siberian. [†]

SABRE, SABER, a kind of sword. (F., — G., — Hungarian.) A late word. 'Sable or Sabre, a kind of simetar, hanger, or broad sword;' Phillips, ed. 1706. — F. sabre, a sabre. — G. säbel, a sabre, falchion. β. Thus Diez, who says that at least the F. form was borrowed from German; cf. Ital. sciabla, sciabola, Span. sable.

γ. He adds that the G. word was also borrowed; and compares Hungarian szablya, Servian sablja, Wallachian săbie, a sabre. I find Hung. szablya, a sabre, szabni, to cut, szabo, a cutter, in Dankovsky, Magyar Lexicon, 1833, p. 327. At p. 862, Dankovsky considers szabni, to cut, to be of Wallachian origin. Der. sabre-tash, F. sabretache, from G. säbeltasche, a sabretash, loose pouch hanging near the sabre, worn by hussars (Flügel); from G. säbel, a sabre, and tasche, a pocket.

SACCHARINE, sugar-like. (F., — L., — Gk., — Skt.) In Todd's Johnson. — F. saccharin, 'of sugar;' Cot. Formed with suffix -in (= Lat. -inus) from Lat. saccharon, sugar (Pliny). — Gk. σάκχαρον, sugar. — Skt. çarkara, candied sugar; see Sugar.

SACERDOTAL, priestly. (F., — L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. — F. sacerdotal, 'sacerdotal;' Cot. — Lat. sacerdotalis, belonging to a priest. — Lat. sacerdot, stem of sacerdos, a priest; lit. 'presenter of offerings or sacred gifts' (Corssen). — Lat. sacer, sacred; and dare, to give; cf. Lat. dos (gen. dotis), a dowry, from the same verb. The fem. form sacerdota, a priestess, occurs in an inscription. See Sacred and Date (1). Der. sacerdotal-ly, -ism.

SACK (1), a bag. (L., — Gk., — Heb., — Egyptian?) M. E. sak, Chaucer, C. T. 4019. — A. S. sace, Gen. xlii. 25, 28. — Lat. saccus. — Gk. σάκος. — Heb. sag, stuff made of hair-cloth, sack-cloth; also, a sack for corn.

β. A borrowed word in Hebrew, and prob. of Egyptian origin; cf. Coptic sok, sack-cloth, Gen. xxxvii. 34, Matt. xi. 21; see Peyron's Coptic Lexicon. E. Müller cites sak as being the Æthiopic form. γ. This remarkable word has travelled everywhere, together (as I suppose) with the story of Joseph; the reason why it is the same in all languages is because it is, in them all, a borrowed word from Hebrew. We find Du. zak, G. sack, Icel. sekk, Swed. säkk, Dan. sæk, Goth. sakkus (sack-cloth, Matt. xi. 21), Ital. sacco, Span. and Port. saco, F. sac, Irish and Gael. sac, W. sack. And see Sack (2). Der. sack-cloth, Gen. xxxvii. 34; sack-ing, cloth of which sacks are made, coarse stuff; sack-ful. Also sack (2), q. v.; sack-el, q. v. Doublet, sac, a bag or receptacle for a liquid, borrowed from F. sac.

SACK (2), plunder; as a verb, to plunder. (F., — L., — Gk., — Heb., — Egyptian?) 'The plenteous houses sack;' Surrey, Ecclesiastes, c. v; l. 45. Formed from the sb. sack, pillage. 'And Helen, that to utter sack both Greece and Troie brought;' Turberville, Dispraise of Women (R.). — F. sac, 'a sack, waste, ruine, havock, spoile;' Cot. Cf. F. saccager, 'to sack, pillage,' Cot.; also O. F. sacquer, 'to draw hastily, to pull out speedily or apace;' Cot. We also find Low Lat. saccare, to put into a bag; a common word; and Low Lat. saccus, a garment, robe, treasure, purse.

β. There seems to be little doubt that the F. sac, pillage, is connected with, and due to, the F. sac, a sack, from Lat. saccus; see Sack (1). The simplest solution is that in Wedgwood, 'from the use of a sack in removing plunder;' though the sense is probably rather metaphorical than exact. In the same way we talk of bagging, i. e. pilfering a thing, or of pocketing it, and of baggage as a general term, whether bags be actually used or not. Thus Hexham gives O. Du. zacken, 'to put in a sack, or fill a sack;' zacken ende packen, 'to put up bagg and baggage, or to trusse up.' γ. The use of O. F. sacquer is remarkable, as it seems to express, at first sight, just the opposite to packing up; but perhaps it meant, originally, to search in a sack, to pull out of a purse; for the sacking of a town involves the two processes: (1) that of taking things out of their old receptacles, and (2) that of putting them into new ones; note the Low Lat. saccus in the senses of 'treasure' and 'purse.' Burguy notes that the O. F. desacher, lit. to draw out of a sack, was used in the same way as the simple verb.

δ. It deserves to be added that Cotgrave gives 17 proverbs involving the word sac, clearly proving its common use in phrases. One of them is: 'On luy a donné son sac et ses quilles, he hath his passport given him, he is turned out to grazing, said of a servant whom his master hath put away;' hence the E. phrase, 'to give one the sack.' And again: 'Acheter un chat en sac, to buy a pig in a poak.'

SACK (3), the name of an old Spanish wine. (F., — L.) See the account in Nares. He notices that it was also called seck, a better form: 'It is even called seck, in an article cited by bp. Percy from an old account-book of the city of Worcester: "Anno Eliz. xxxiii. Item, for a gallon of claret wine, and seck, and a pound of sugar." Other instances have been found.' By Sherris sack, Falstaff meant 'sack from Xeres,' our sherry; see Sherry. Sack was a Spanish wine of the dry or rough kind. — F. sec, dry; in the phrase vin sec; Sherwood (in his index to Cotgrave) has: 'Sack (wine), vin d'Espagne, vin sec.' Cf. Span. seco, dry. — Lat. siccum, acc. of siccus, dry. Root uncertain. ¶ We may note Du. sek, sack, a sort of wine (Sewel), as illustrating the fact that sack stands for seck; this also is from F. sec. So also G. sekt, sack; Swed. seck (Wiedgren). [†]

SACKBUT, a kind of wind-instrument. (F., — Span., — Hybrid of Heb. and Teutonic.) In Dan. iii. 5. The sack-but resembled the modern trombone, and was a wind instrument; the word is used to translate the Heb. sabbeká (with initial samech), Gk. σαμβύκη, Lat. sambuca, which was a stringed instrument. There is no connection between these words and the sackbut. — F. saguebute, a sackbut, trombone; Littré. — Span. sacabuche (nautical word), a tube or pipe which serves as a pump; also, a sackbut; Neuman. Cf. Port. sacabuxa, saguebuxo, a sackbut. β. The origin is doubtful; the first part of the word is plainly derived from Span. sacar, to draw out, with reference to the tube of the instrument; but I can find no satisfactory solution of the whole word. The Span. buche means the maw, crop, or stomach of an animal, and colloquially, the human stomach. Hence the suggestion in Webster, that sacabuche means 'that which exhausts the stomach or chest;' a name possibly given in derision from the exertion used in playing it. γ. Adopting this etymology, we may further note that sacar, to draw out, extract, empty, is the same word as the O. F. sacquer, to draw out hastily, and also has the same sense as O. F. desacher, to draw out of a sack, all of these being derived from Low Lat. saccus, a sack, of Heb. origin; see SACK (2) and SACK (1).

δ. The word buche is derived by Diez from the Teutonic, viz. from O. H. G. bôzo, a bunch, which from bôzen, to beat; see BOSS.

SACRAMENT, a solemn religious rite, the eucharist. (L.) M. E. sacrament, Chaucer, C. T. 9576. — Lat. sacramentum, an engagement, military oath; in ecclesiastical writers, a mystery, sacrament. Formed with suffix -mentum from sacrare, to dedicate, consecrate, render sacred or solemn. — Lat. sacr-, stem of sacer, sacred; see SACRED. Der. sacrament-al, sacrament-al-ly.

SACRED, made holy, religious. (F., — L.) Sacred is the pp. of M. E. sacren, to render holy, consecrate, a verb now obsolete. We find sacredh = consecrates, in Ancrén Riwle, p. 268, l. 5. The pp. i-sacred, consecrated, occurs in Rob. of Glouc. p. 330, where the prefix i- (= A. S. ge-) is merely the mark of the Southern dialect. 'He was . . . sacryd or enoynted emperoure of Rome;' Fabyan's Chron. cap. 155, last line. [Hence 'too sacring-bell, Hen. VIII. iii. 2. 295.] — O. F. sacrer, 'to consecrate;' Cot. — Lat. sacrare, to consecrate. — Lat. sacr-, stem of sacer, sacred, holy. — Lat. base SAC, appearing in a nasalised form in sancire, to render inviolable, establish, confirm; see SAINT. Der. sacred-ly, sacred-ness; and see sacra-ment, sacri-fice, sacri-lege, sacrist-an, sext-on; sacer-dotal; consecrate, de-secrate, ex-secrate, ob-secrate.

SACRIFICE, an offering to a deity. (F., — L.) M. E. sacrifise, Ancrén Riwle, p. 138, ll. 9, 11; also sacrifice. — F. sacrifice, 'a sacrifice;' Cot. — Lat. sacrificium, a sacrifice, lit. a rendering sacred; cf. sacrificare, to sacrifice. — Lat. sacri-, for sacro-, crude form of sacer, sacred; and facere, to make; see SACRED and FACT. Der. sacrifice, vb., sacrific-er; sacrific-er; sacrifici-al.

SACRILEGE, profanation of what is holy. (F., — L.) M. E. sacrilege, spelt sacrilege, Gower, C. A. ii. 374, ll. 5, 14. — F. sacrilege, 'a sacrilege, or church-robbing;' Cot. — Lat. sacrilegium, the robbing of a temple, stealing of sacred things. — Lat. sacrilegus, a sacrilegious person, one who steals from a temple. — Lat. sacri-, for sacro-, crude form of sacer, sacred; and legere, to gather, steal, purloin; see SACRED and LEGEND. Der. sacrileg-i-ous, Macb. ii. 3. 72, a coined word; sacrileg-i-ous-ly, ness.

SACRISTAN, SEXTON, an officer in a church who has charge of the sacred vessels and vestments. (F., — L.) The corruption of sacristan into sexton took place so early that it is not easy to find the spelling sacristan, though it appears in Blount's Glossographia, ed. 1674. The duties of the sacristan have suffered alteration; he is now the grave-digger rather than the keeper of the vestments. The form sextain is in Chaucer, C. T. 13942; the collateral form Saxton survives as a proper name; I find it in the Clergy List for 1873. — F. sacristain, 'a sexton, or vestry-keeper, in a church;' Cot. Formed as if from Low Lat. *sacristanus, but the usual Low Lat. word is simply sacrista, without the suffix; cf. 'Sexteyne, Sacrista,' Prompt. Parv.; and see Ducange. Formed with suffix -ista (= Gk. -ιστης) from Lat. sacr-, stem of sacer, sacred; see SACRED. Der. sacrist-y, from F. sacristie, 'a vestry, or sextry in a church,' Cot.; cf. 'Sextrye, Sacristia,' Prompt. Parv.

SAD, heavy, serious, sorrowful. (E.) 'Sadde, tristis;' Levins. M. E. sad, with very various meanings; Halliwell explains it by 'serious, discreet, sober, heavy (said of bread), dark (of colour), heavy, solid, close, firm (said of iron and stone).' The W. sad means 'firm, steady, discreet;' and may have been borrowed from E. during the M. E. period. β. But the oldest meaning is 'sated.' Thus, in Layamon, 20830, we have 'sad of mine longe' = sated, or tired, of my land. Hence seem to have resulted the senses of satisfied, fixed, firm, steadfast, &c.; see examples in Stratmann and in the Glossary to Will. of Palerne, &c. The mod. E. sad is directly from the sense of sated, tired, weary. — A. S. sæd, sated, satiated; Grein, ii. 394. + O. Sax. sad, sated. + Icel. saddr, old form sadr, sated, having got one's fill. + Goth. saths, full, filled, sated. + G. satt, satiated, full, satisfied, weary.

γ. All from the Teut. type SADA, sated, Fick, iii. 318. Cognate words are found in Lithuan. sotus, satiated; Russ. suitost, satiety; Lat. satur, sated, also deep-coloured (like E. sad-coloured), well filled, full, sat, satis, sufficiently; all from a base SAT, with the sense of 'full' or 'filled.' See SATIATE, SATISFY. ¶ In no way connected with set, which is quite a different word; nor with Lat. sedare, which is allied to E. set. Der. sad-ly, -ness. Also sadd-en, verb, from M. E. sadden, to settle, confirm, P. Plowman, B. x. 242; cf. A. S. gesadian, to fill (Grein), A. S. sadian, to feel weary or sad, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, cap. xxxix. § 4.

SADDLE, a leathern seat, put on a horse's back. (E.) M. E. sadel (with one d), Chaucer, C. T. 2164. — A. S. sadol; Grein, ii. 387. + Du. zadel. + Icel. söðull. + Swed. and Dan. sadel. + G. sattel; O. H. G. satul. + Russ. siedlo. + Lat. sella (put for sed-la). β. The form of the word is abnormal; some suppose it not to be Teutonic, but borrowed from the Lat. sedile; this we may confidently reject, as the Lat. sedile is not a saddle, but a chair, the true Lat. word being sella. Perhaps the Teutonic form was borrowed from Slavonic; it is quite clear that the Russ. siedlo, a saddle, is from the verb sidietye, to sit (or from the root of that verb); and that the Lat. sella is from sedere, to sit. γ. Hence, though we cannot derive saddle immediately from the E. verb to sit, we may safely refer it, and all its cognates (or borrowed forms) to ✓ SAD, to sit; cf. (Vedic) Skt. sad, to sit down, Skt. sadas, a seat, abode. δ. As we cannot well determine by what route the word came to us, we may call it an E. word; it is, doubtless, of great antiquity. ε. It is worth noting, that the A. S. setl, i. e. a settle, throne, appears in the Northumbrian version of Matt. xxv. 31 as seðel, and in the Mercian version as sedle, shewing a like confusion between t and d in another word from the same root. Der. saddle, verb, A. S. sadelian, Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 165, l. 10; saddl-er, saddl-er-y; saddle-bow, M. E. sadel-bowe (Stratmann).

SADDUCEE, the name of a Jewish sect. (L., — Gk., — Heb.) The M. E. pl. Saducessis is in Wyclif, Deeds [Acts], xxiii. 8; &c. — Lat. pl. Sadducei. — Gk. pl. Σαδδουκαῖοι. — Heb. pl. tsedukim, in the Mishna; see Smith, Concise Dict. of the Bible. It is the pl. of tsádóg, lit. 'the just one,' and so might mean 'the righteous;' but it is generally supposed that the sect was not named from their assumed righteousness, but from the name of their founder Tsádóg (Zadok); thus the right sense of the word is Zadokites. β. But it makes no difference to the etymology; either way we are led to Heb. tsádóg, just, from the Heb. root tsádag, to be just.

SAFE, unharmed, secure, free from danger. (F., — L.) M. E. sauf, Will. of Palerne, 868, 1329; we also find the phr. sauf and sound, id. 868, 2816. — F. sauf, 'safe;' Cot. — Lat. saluum, acc. of salvus, whole, safe; put for *sarvus, whence Lat. servare, to keep safe; see SERVE. — ✓ SAR, to keep, protect; preserved in the Zend har (for sar), to protect, Fick, i. 797. From the same root are the Skt. sarva, entire, Pers. har, every, all, every one; also Lat. solidus and solus; see SOLID, SOLE. Der. safe-ly, safe-ness; safe, sb.; safe-conduct, Hen. V. i. 2. 297, M. E. sauf conduit, Gower, C. A. ii. 160; safe-guard, Rich. III. v. 3. 259; vouch-safe, q. v. Also safe-ty, K. John, iii. 3. 16, suggested by F. sauveté, 'safety,' Cot., from Low Lat. acc. saluatatem. And see Salvation, Sage (2), Salute, Save. [†]

SAFFRON, the name of a plant. (F., — Arab.) 'Maked geleu with saffran' = made yellow with saffron; O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 163, l. 32. — F. safran, saffran, saffron; Cot. — Arab. za'farán, saffron; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 321. [†]

SAG, to droop, be depressed. (Scand.) M. E. saggen, Prompt. Parv. p. 440. — Swed. sacka, to settle, sink down; Dan. sakke (as a nautical term), to have stern-way. + G. sacken, to sink. β. The O. Swed. sacka is used of the settling of dregs; so also Low G. sakken, in the Bremen Wörterbuch. It seems to be an unanalysed form of sink, with the same sense; see SINK. The Icel. sokkning, a sinking, is from sökkuva (= sankva), to sink. ¶ We cannot well connect it with A. S. sigan, to sink; though there may have been some confusion with it.

SAGA, a tale, story. (Scand.) The E. word is saw. Saga is merely borrowed from Icel. saga, a story, tale; cognate with E. saw; see Saw (2).

SAGACIOUS. (L.) In Milton, P. L. x. 281. Coined, as if from L. *sagaciusus, from sagaci-, crude form of sāgax, of quick perception, keen, sagacious; from a base SAG, of uncertain meaning. Cf. sāgire, to perceive by the senses. ¶ Not allied to Sage (1). Der. sagacious-ly, sagaciousness. Also sagaci-ty, in Minshew, ed. 1627, formed (by analogy) from Lat. sagacitas, sagacity.

SAGE (1), discerning, wise. (F., -L.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. iii. 4. 413. -F. sage, 'sage, wise'; Cot. Cf. Span. sabio, Ital. saggio, wise. -Low Lat. *sabium, not found, put for Lat. sapium, acc. of sapius, wise; only found in comp. ne-sapius, unwise (Petronius). -Lat. sapere, to be wise; see Sapience. ¶ Not allied to Sagacious. Der. sage, sb., sage-ly, sage-ness.

SAGE (2), the name of a plant. (F., -L.) M. E. sauge, sawge; Prompt. Parv. -O. F. sauge, Wright's Vocab. i. 139, col. 2; spelt saulge in Cot. -L. salvia, sage; so called from its supposed healing virtues. -Lat. salvus, sound, in good health; see Safe.

SAGITTARIUS, the archer. (L.) The name of a zodiacal sign. -Lat. sagittarius, an archer. -Lat. sagitta, an arrow.

SAGO, a starch prepared from the pith of certain palms. (Malay.) Mentioned in the Annual Register, 1766, Chronicle, p. 110; see Notes and Queries, 3. Ser. viii. 18. -Malay sāgu, sāgu, 'sago, the farinaceous and glutinous pith of a tree of the palm kind named rumbiya'; Marsden's Malay Dict., p. 158.

SAIL, a sheet of canvas, for propelling a ship by the means of the wind. (E.) M. E. seil, seyl, Chaucer, C. T. 698; Havelok, 711. -A. S. segel, segl (Grein). + Du. zeil. + Icel. segl. + Dan. seil. + Swed. segel. + G. segel. β. All from Teut. type SEGLA, a sail (Fick, iii. 316); which Fick ingeniously connects with Teut. base SAG = SAGH, to bear up against, resist; so that the sail is that which resists or endures the force of the wind. Cf. Skt. sah, to bear, undergo, endure, be able to resist; from the same root. Der. sail, verb; sail-cloth, sail-er, sail-or (spelt saylor in Temp. i. 2. 270, doubtless by analogy with tail-or, though there the ending in -or is justifiable, whilst in sail-or it is not); sail-ing; also sail-yard, A. S. segelgyrd, Wright's Vocab. i. 74, col. 1.

SAINT, a holy man. (F., -L.) M. E. seint, saint, seinte; 'seinte paul' = Saint Paul, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 131, l. 15. -F. saint. -Lat. sanctum, acc. of sanctus, holy, consecrated. -Lat. sanctus, pp. of sancire, to render sacred, make holy. From the base SAK, prob. 'to fasten'; cf. Skt. sañj, to adhere, sakta, attached, devoted; whence also Sacred, Sacerdotal. Der. saint-ed, saint-like.

SAKE, purpose, account, cause, end. (E.) M. E. sake, purpose, cause; 'for hire sake' = for her (its) sake; Ancren Riwle, p. 4, l. 16. It also means dispute, contention, law-suit, fault. 'For desert of sum sake' = on account of some fault; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. 84. -A. S. sacu, strife, dispute, crime, law-suit, accusation (Bosworth). + Du. zaak, matter, case, cause, business, affair. + Icel. sök, a charge, guilt, crime. + Dan. sag. + Swed. sak. + G. sache. β. All from Teut. type SAKA, a contention, suit at law (Fick, iii. 314), from the base SAK, appearing in Goth. sakan (a strong verb, pt. t. sök), to contend, rebuke. Perhaps allied to Skt. sañj, sajj, to adhere. Der. seek, q. v.

SALAAM, SALAM, peace; a salutation. (Arab.) 'This low salam'; Byron, Giaour, see note 29; and in Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 142. -Arab. salām, 'saluting, wishing health or peace; a salutation; peace'; Rich. Dict. p. 842. -Arab. salām, saluting; id. p. 845. Cf. Heb. shelām, peace; from the root shālām, to be safe.

SALAD, raw herbs cut up and seasoned. (F., -Ital., -L.) M. E. salade, Flower and the Leaf, l. 412. -F. salade, 'a sallet of herbs'; Cot. -O. Ital. salata, 'a salad of herbes'; Florio. Fem. of Ital. salata, 'salt, powdered, sowed, pickled, salted'; Florio. This is the pp. of salare, 'to salt'; id. -Ital. sal, sale, salt. -L. sal, salt. See Salt. [†] SALAMANDER, a reptile. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Shak. i Hen. IV. iii. 3. 53. -F. salamandre, 'a salamander'; Cot. -L. salamandra. -Gk. σαλαμάνδρα, a kind of lizard, supposed to be an extinguisher of fire. An Eastern word; cf. Pers. samandar, a salamander; Rich. Dict. p. 850. [†]

SALARY, stipend. (F., -L.) M. E. salarye, P. Plowman, B. v. 433. -F. salair, 'a salary, stipend'; Cot. -Lat. salarium, orig. salt-money, or money given to the soldiers for salt. -Lat. salarium, neut. of salarinus, belonging to salt; adj. from sal, salt. See Salt. Der. salari-ed. [†]

SALE, a selling for money. (Scand.) M. E. sale, Prompt. Parv.; Plowman's Tale, pt. iii. st. 63. -Icel. salá, fem., sal, neut., a sale, bargain; Swed. salu; Dan. salg. See Sell. Der. sale-able, sales-man.

SALIC, SALIQUE, pertaining to the Salic tribe of the Franks. (F., -O. H. G.) In Shak. Hen. V. i. 2. 11. -F. Salique, belonging to the Salic tribe (Littre). The Salic tribe was a Frankish (High German) tribe, prob. named from the river Sala (now the Yssel, flowing into the Zuyder Zee). There are several rivers called Saale or Saar; cf. Skt. salila, sara, water, from sri, to flow.

SALIENT, springing forward. (L.) In Pope, Dunciad, ii. 162. But it really took the place of saliant (Skinner, Phillips), which was an heraldic term for animals represented as springing forward; and this was due to F. saillant, pres. part. of saillir, instead of to the corresponding Lat. salient-, pres. part. of Lat. salire, to leap, sometimes used of water. -✓SAR, to go, flow; cf. Skt. sri, to go, to flow; sari, a water-fall; Gk. ἀλλομαι, I leap. Der. salient-ly. From the same root are as-sail, as-sault, de-sult-or-y, ex-sult (for ex-sult), in-sult, re-sili-ent, re-sult, sal-mon, salt-at-ion; salt-ire, q. v.

SALINE, containing salt. (F., -L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706; and see Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. -F. salin, fem. saline, saline; Littre. -Lat. *salinus, only found in neut. salinum, a salt-cellar, and pl. salina, salt-pits. -Lat. sal, salt. See Salt.

SALIVA, spittle. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. -Lat. saliva, spittle. Cf. Gk. σάλιον, spittle; Russ. slina, spittle; and see Slime. Der. saliv-ate, saliv-at-ion; saliv-al, saliv-ar-y. Doublet, slime.

SALLET, a kind of helmet. (F., -Ital., -L.) In Shak. 2 Hen. VI. iv. 10. 12; and in Baret (1580). Palsgrave has: 'Sallet of harnesse, salade.' Sallet is a corruption of salade, due to the fact that a salad of herbs was also corrupted to sallet. 'Sallet, a helmet; Sallet oil, salad oil.' Glossary to Shakespeare's [North's] Plutarch, ed. Skeat. -O. F. salade, 'a salade, helmet, headpiece; also a sallet of herbs'; Cot. [Here the spellings salade and sallet are interchanged; however, the two words are of different origin.] -Ital. celata, a helmet. -Lat. celata, that which is engraved or ornamented; Diez cites cassid celata, an ornamented helmet, from Cicero. Cf. Span. celar, to engrave, celadura, enamel, inlaying, celada, a helmet. Lat. celata is the fem. of the pp. of celare, to engrave, ornament. -Lat. calum, a chisel, graver; perhaps allied to cadere, to cut.

SALLOW (1), SALLY, a kind of willow. (E.) M. E. salwe, Chaucer, C. T. 6237. 'Salweke, tree, Salix'; Prompt. Parv. -A. S. sealh; we find 'Amersa, sealh'; Salix, weilig mentioned together in Wright's Vocab. i. 285, col. 2. The suffix -ow = M. E. -we = A. S. -ge, suffix of the oblique cases from nom. in -h, just as E. farrow is from A. S. feorh, and the prov. E. barrow-pig from A. S. beorh. In Lowland Sc. the word became sauch, saugh, by loss of l. + Icel. selja. + Swed. sälg, sälj. + Dan. selje. + G. sahlweide (O. H. G. salahō), the round-leaved willow; see Fick, iii. 320. + Lat. salix, a willow. + Gael. seileach, a willow. + Irish sail, saileach. + W. helyg, pl. willows. + Gk. ἐλάκη. β. Named from growing near the water; cf. Skt. sarī, water, saras, a large pond, a piece of water in which the lotus grows, sarasiya, a lotus, sarī, a river. -✓SAR, to flow; cf. Skt. sri, to flow.

SALLOW (2), of a pale, yellowish colour. (E.) M. E. salow with one f; we find: 'Saluwe, salowe, of colour, Crocus'; Prompt. Parv. p. 441. -A. S. salu, sallow, Grein, ii. 388; whence the compounds saloneb, with pale beak, salupād, with pale garment, sealobrin, sallow-brown; id. + Du. saluw, tawny, sallow. + Icel. sölr, yellowish. + M. H. G. sal, O. H. G. salo, dusky (whence F. sale, dirty). Root uncertain. Der. sallow-ness.

SALLY, to rush out suddenly. (F., -L.) 'Guyon salied forth to land'; Spenser, F. Q. ii. 6. 28. M. E. salien, to dance, is the same word; Prompt. Parv. p. 441; P. Plowman, B. xiii. 233. -F. saillir, 'to go out, issue, issue forth; also to leap, jump, bound'; Cot. -Lat. salire, to leap; see Salient. Der. sally, sb., with which cf. F. saillie, 'a sally'; Cot. from the fem. of the pp. sailli. Also sally-port, a gate whence a sally may be made.

SALMAGUNDI, a seasoned hodge-podge or mixture. (F., -Ital., -L.) 'Salmagundi, or Salmigund, an Italian dish made of cold turkey, anchovies, lemons, oil, and other ingredients; also, a kind of hotch-potch or ragoo, &c.'; Phillips, ed. 1706. But the word is French. -F. salmigondis; spelt salmigondin in Cotgrave, who describes the dish. β. Etym. disputed; but probably of Ital. origin, as stated by Phillips. We may fairly explain it from Ital. salame, salt meat, and condito, seasoned. This is the more likely, because the Ital. salame would make the pl. salami, and this was once the term in use. Thus Florio has: 'Salami, any kinde of salt, pickled, or powdered meats or souze, &c.' γ. This also explains the F. salmis (not in Cotgrave), which has proved a puzzle to etymologists; I think we may take salmis (=salted meats) to be a double plural, the s being the F. plural, and the i the Ital. plural; that is, the Ital. salami became F. salmi, and then the s was added.

δ. The derivation of Ital. salami is clearly from Lat. sal, salt, though the suffix is obscure. The F. -gondi, for Ital. condito (or pl. conditi), is from Lat. conditus, seasoned, savoury, pp. of condire, to preserve, pickle, season. Thus the sense is 'savory salt meats.'

SALMON, a fish. (F., -L.) M. E. saumon, King Alisaunder, l. 5446; salmon, salmond, Barbour's Bruce, ii. 576, xix. 664. [The introduction of the l is due to our knowledge of the Lat. form; we do not pronounce it.] -O. F. saumon, spelt sautmon in Cot. -Lat.

salmonem, acc. of salmo, a salmon.

β. It has been conjectured that salmo means 'leaper'; from salire, to leap; which well accords with the fish's habits. See Salient. In any case, we may prob. refer it to ✓SAR, to go, flow, &c. Der. salmon-leap, M. E. samounlepe, Trevisa, i. 369. [†]

SALOON, a large apartment. (F., -O. H. G.) A late word; added by Todd to Johnson. = F. salon, a large room. = F. salle, a room, chamber. = O. H. G. sal (G. saal), a dwelling, house, hall, room. + Icel. salr, a hall. + A. S. sæl, sele, a house hall. The orig. sense is 'abode'; cf. Goth. saljan, to dwell; Russ. selo, a village.

SALT, a well-known substance. (E.) M. E. salt, P. Plowman, B. xv. 423. = A. S. sealt, Grein, ii. 434. + Du. zout (with u for o). + Icel. salt. + Dan. and Swed. salt. + G. salz. + Goth. salt.

β. All from Teut. type SALTA, salt; Fick, iii. 321. On comparing this with Lat. sal, salt, we see that the Teut. word is sal-ta, where -ta is the usual Aryan pp. suffix, of extreme antiquity; Schleicher, Compend. § 224. Accordingly we find that A. S. sealt (E. salt) is also used as an adj., in the sense of 'salted' or 'full of salt,' as in sealt water = salt water; Grein, ii. 434. So also Icel. saltr, adj., salt; Du. zout, adj.; Dan. and Swed. salt, adj.

γ. Removing the suffix, we find cognate words in Lat. sal, salt, Gk. ἅλς, Russ. sol, W. hal, halen, Skt. sara, salt. The Skt. sara means also the coagulum of curds or milk, lit. 'that which runs together,' from sri, to go. = ✓SAR, to go, flow. It is possible that salt was named from the 'water' from which it was obtained; but this brings us back to the same root. ¶ Curtius says: 'the Goth. sal-t, extended by a t, corresponds to the Gk. theme ἅλ, the dat. pl. of which is preserved in the proverb ἅλασιν ὄρεται; -ar is to be taken here as an individualizing suffix, by the help of which "a piece of salt" is formed from "salt." I do not think this takes account of the adjectival use of the Teutonic word salt, nor of the fact that the E. adj. salt is represented in Lat. by sal-sus, clearly a pp. form. Cf. W. hallt, salt, adj., from halen, salt, sb. Der. salt-ly, salt-ness; salt-cellar, q. v.; salt, vb., salt-er, salt-ish, salt-less, salt-mine, salt-pan; salt-petre, q. v. Also (from sal) sal-ine, sal-ary, sal-ad, sauce, sausage, salmagundi.

SALTATION, dancing. (L.) Rare; merely formed (by analogy with F. words in -ion) from Lat. saltatio, a dance, a dancing. = Lat. saltatus, pp. of saltare, to dance, frequent. of salire, to leap; see Salient. Der. saltat-or-y, from Lat. saltatorius, adj.

SALT-CELLAR, a vessel for holding salt. (E.; and F., -L.) The word salt is explained above. Cellar is an absurd corruption of saler or seller, derived from F. salière. Thus we find: 'Salière, a salt-seller;' Cot. Cf. Ital. saliera, a salt-cellar. 'Hoc selarium, a celare;' Wright's Vocab. i. 198, note 8. 'A saltsaler of sylver;' A. D. 1463, in Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 23, l. 8. Formed from Lat. sal, salt; see Salt. ¶ Hence salt-cellar = salt-salt-holder; a tautological expression. [†]

SALTIER, in heraldry, a St. Andrew's cross. (F., -L.) St. Andrew's cross is one in this position X; when charged on a shield, it is called a saltier. = F. sautoir, 'Saint Andrew's crosse, teamed so by heralds;' Cot. The old sense was stirrup (Littré, s. v. sautoir); the cross seems to have been named from the position of the side-pieces of a stirrup, formerly made in a triangle Δ. = Low Lat. saltatorium, a stirrup, a common word; Ducange. = Lat. saltatorius, belonging to dancing or leaping, suitable for mounting a horse. = Lat. saltator, a dancer, leaper. = Lat. saltare, to dance, leap; frequentative of salire; see Salient. [†]

SALT-PETRE, nitre. (E.; and F., -L., -Gk.) In Shak. i Hen. IV, i. 3. 60. For the former part of the word, see Salt. The E. word is a translation of O. F. salpestre, 'salt-petre;' Cot. Here -pestre (mod. F. -pêtre) is from Lat. pētra; and salt-petre represents Lat. sal pētra, lit. 'salt of the rock.' Lastly, Lat. pētra is from Gk. πέτρα, a rock; see Petrify.

SALUBRIOUS, healthful. (L.) A late word. In Phillips, ed. 1706. Coined as if from a Lat. *salubriosus, extended from Lat. salubris, healthful. β. Lat. salūbris appears to stand for salut-bris, where the suffix -bris prob. means 'bearing,' or bringing, as in G. frucht-bar, fruitful; this suffix generally appears as -fer in Latin, but both -ber and -fer may be referred to the root BHAR, to bring; and we find also the forms saluti-fer, salu-ber. This gives the sense of 'health-bringing.' γ. Salut- is the stem of salus, health, allied to salvus, sound, in good health, whence E. safe; see Safe. Der. salubrious-ly. Also salubri-ty, Minshew, from F. salubrité (Cot.), = Lat. acc. salubritatem.

SALUTARY, healthful, wholesome. (F., -L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = F. salutaire, 'healthful;' Cot. = Lat. salutaris, healthful. = Lat. salut-, stem of salus, health, allied to salvus; see Salubrious, Safe.

SALUTE, to wish health to, to greet. (L.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 1. 30; and in Palsgrave. = Lat. salutare, to wish health to, greet. = Lat. salut-, stem of salus, health, allied to salvus; see Safe. Der.

salut-ation, M. E. salutacioun, Wyclif, Luke, i. 41, from F. salutation (Cot.), from Lat. acc. salutationem. And see Salutary.

SALVAGE, money paid for saving ships. (F., -L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = O. F. salvage; 'droit de salvage, a tenth part of goods which were like to perish by shipwreck, due unto him who saves them;' Cot. = O. F. salver, F. sauver, to save. = Lat. saluare; see Save.

SALVATION, preservation. (F., -L.) M. E. saluacioun, saluacion, Chaucer, C. T. 7080; spelt sauacion, Ancrén Riwe, p. 242, l. 26. = F. salvation. = Lat. saluationem, acc. of saluatio, a saving. = Lat. saluatus, pp. of saluare, to save; see Save.

SALVE, ointment. (E.) M. E. salve (= salve), Chaucer, C. T. 2714; older form saife, Ormulum, 6477. = A. S. sealf, Mark, xiv. 5; John, xii. 3. + Du. zalf. + G. salbe.

β. From the Teut. type SALBA; Fick, iii. 321. The orig. sense was prob. 'oil' or 'grease'; it answers in form to the rare Gk. words ἐλαος, oil, ἐλφος, butter, in Hesychius; and to Skt. carpis, clarified butter, named from its slipperiness. = ✓SARP, to glide; see Slip. Der. salve, verb, from A. S. sealfian, cognate with Goth. salbon.

SALVER, a plate on which anything is presented. (Span., -L.) Properly salva, but misspelt salver by confusion with the old word salver in the sense of 'preserver,' or one who claims salvage for shipping. This is shewn by the following. 'Salver, from salvo, to save, is a new fashioned piece of wrought plate, broad and flat, with a foot underneath, and is used in giving beer, or other liquid thing, to save or preserve the carpit or clothes from drops;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. This invented explanation, oddly enough, does not affect the etymology. = Span. salva, a salver, a plate on which anything is presented; it also means 'pregustation, the previous tasting of viands before they are served up.' There is also the phrase hacer la salva, 'to drink to one's health;' Neuman. We also find the dimin. salvilla, a salver. = Span. salvar, 'to save, free from risk; to taste, to prove the food or drink of nobles;' Neuman. = Lat. saluare, to save; see Save, Safe. ¶ Mr. Wedgwood says: 'as salva was the tasting of meat at a great man's table, salvar, to guarantee, to taste or make the essay of meat served at table, the name of salver is in all probability from the article having been used in connection with the essay. The Ital. name of the essay was credenza, and the same term was used for a cupboard or sideboard; credentierte, credenzere, a prince's taster, cup-bearer, butler, or cupboard-keeper (Florio). F. credence d'argent, silver plate, or a cupboard of silver plate;' Cot. Thus a salver was the name of the plate or tray on which drink was presented to the taster, or to the drinker of a health.

SAME, of the like kind, identical. (E.) M. E. same, Chaucer, C. T. 16923. = A. S. same, only as adv., as in swað same swað men, the same as men, just like men; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxiii. § 4 (bk. iii. met. 9). The adjectival use is Scand.; cf. Icel. samr, Dan. and Swed. samme, the same. + O. H. G. sam, adj., sama, adv. + Goth. sama, the same; cf. samana, together. + Russ. samuii, the same. + Gk. ὁμός. + Skt. sama, even, the same.

β. The form SAMA is extended from a base SA, meaning together, like, same with; cf. Skt. sa, with, in compound nouns, as in sa-kamala, adj. with lotus flowers; also the same, like, equal, as in sa-dharmam, adj. of the same caste; Benfey, p. 981. γ. From the same base is the prep. SAM, with, appearing in Skt. sam, with (Vedic); also the Lat. simul, together, similis, like (whence E. Simultaneous, Similar); also Gk. ὁμός, like (whence E. Homœopathy). See Curtius, i. 400. Der. same-ness; and see semi, similar, simulate, semblance, as-semble, dis-semble, re-semble. Also some, -some.

SAMITE, a rich silk stuff. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. samit, spelt samyte, Ly beaus Disconus, 833 (ed. Ritson, vol. ii); King Alisaunder, 1027. And see two examples in Halliwell, who explains it by 'a very rich silk stuff, sometimes interwoven with gold or silver thread.' = O. F. samit, a silk stuff; Burguy. See samy in Cotgrave. = Low Lat. examitum, samite; Ducange. = Late Gk. ἐξάμιτον, cited by Burguy, supposed to have been a stuff woven with six threads or different kinds of thread; from Gk. ἕξ, six (cognate with E. six), and μίτρος, a thread of the woof. See Dimity, which is a word of similar origin. The mod. G. sammēt, sammī, velvet, is the same word.

SAMPHIRE, the name of a herb. (F., -L. and Gk.) Spelt sampire in K. Lear, iv. 6. 15; and in Minshew, ed. 1627; and this is a more correct spelling, representing a former pronunciation. So also Sherwood, in his index to Cotgrave, who gives herbe de S. Pierre as a F. equivalent. Spelt sampier in Baret (1580), which is still better. = F. Saint Pierre, St. Peter; Cotgrave, s. v. herbe, gives: 'Herbe de S. Pierre, sampire.' = Lat. sanctum, acc. of sanctus, holy; and Petrum, acc. of Petrus, Peter, named from Gk. πέτρα, a rock, πέτρος, a stone.

SAMPLE, an example, pattern, specimen. (F., -L.) M. E. sample, Cursor Mundi, 9514; spelt asample (for esample), Ancrén Riwe, p. 112, l. 16. = O. F. esemple, exsample. = Lat. exemplum. See Example. Doublets, ensample, example. Der. sampler. Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 205, from O. F. exemplaire (14th cent., Littré), another form of O. F. exemplaire, 'a pattern, sample, or sampler,' Cot., = Lat. exemplar. See Exemplar, which is a doublet.

SANATORY, healthful. (L.) Not in Todd's Johnson. Phillips has the allied word sanative, used of medicinal waters, now nearly obsolete. Coined as if from a Lat. *sanatorius, extended from sanator, a healer. We find also Lat. sanativus, healing. — Lat. sanatus, pp. of sanare, to heal. — Lat. sanus, in good health; see Sane.

SANCTIFY, to consecrate. (F., — L.) Spelt sanctifie, Tyndall's Works, p. 11, col. 2, l. 6; Gower, C. A. iii. 234. — F. sanctifier, 'to sanctify;' Cot. — Lat. sanctificare, to make holy. — Lat. sancti-, for sanctus, holy; and -fic-, for facere, to make. See Saint and Fact. Der. sanctificatio, from F. sanctification (Cot.); sanctifi-er.

SANCTIMONY, devoutness. (F., — L.) In Shak. Troil. v. 2. 137. — F. sanctimonie; Cot. — Lat. sanctimonia, sanctity. — Lat. sancti-, for sancto, crude form of sanctus, holy; with Aryan suffixes -man- and -ya. See Saint. Der. sanctimoni-ous, -ly, -ness.

SANCTION, ratification. (F., — L.) In Cotgrave. — F. sanction, 'sanction;' Cot. — Lat. sanctionem, acc. of sanctio, a sanction. — Lat. sanctus, pp. of sanctire, to render sacred. See Saint.

SANCTIFY, holiness. (L.) As You Like It, iii. 4. 14. Formed (by analogy) from Lat. sanctitatem, acc. of sanctitas, holiness. — Lat. sancti-, for sanctus, holy; see Saint.

SANCTUARY, a sacred place. (F., — L.) M. E. seintuarie, a shrine; Chaucer, C. T. 1287. — O. F. saintuaire, saintuaire (F. sanctuaire), a sanctuary. — Lat. sanctuarium, a shrine. — Lat. sanctu-, holy; see Saint. [†]

SAND, fine particles of stone. (E.) M. E. sand, sond, Chaucer, C. T. 4929. — A. S. sand; Grein, ii. 390. + Du. zand. + Icel. sandr. + Swed. and Dan. sand. + G. sand. β. All from the Teut. type SANDA; Fick, iii. 319. But the supposed connection with Gk. ἀμμος is untenable, since that appears to be related to ψάμμος; and to connect initial s with Gk. ψ is very forced. Der. sand-el, -glass, -heat, -martin, -paper, -piper, -stone; sand-y, A. S. sandig; sand-i-ness.

SANDAL, a kind of shoe. (F., — L., — Gk.) M. E. sandalies, pl., Wyclif, Mark, vi. 9. — F. sandale, 'a sandall, or sendall;' Cot. — Lat. sandalium. — Gk. σανδάλιον, dimin. of σάνδαλον (Æolic σαμβάλον), a wooden sole bound on to the foot with straps, a sandal. Supposed to be derived from Gr. σάβις, a board; rather from Pers. sandal, a sandal, sort of slipper, Rich. Dict. p. 853.

SANDAL-WOOD, a fragrant wood. (F., — Pers., — Skt.) 'Sandal or Saunders, a precious wood brought out of India;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Spelt sanders in Cotgrave, and in Baret (1580); this form seems to be an E. corruption. — F. sandal, 'sanders, a sweet-smelling wood brought out of the Indies;' Cot. — Pers. chandal, 'sandal-wood;' Rich. Dict., p. 544. Also spelt chandan, id. — Skt. chandana, sandal, the tree; which Benfey derives from chand, to shine, allied to Lat. candere.

SANDWICH, two slices of bread with ham between them. (E.) So called from John Montague, 4th Earl of Sandwich (born 1718, died 1792), who used to have sandwiches brought to him at the gaming-table, to enable him to go on playing without cessation. Sandwich is a town in Kent; A. S. Sandwic = sand-village.

SANE, of sound mind. (L.) A late word. In Todd's Johnson. — Lat. sanus, of sound mind, whole. Allied to Gk. σῶος, σῶς, whole, sound. Root uncertain. Der. sane-ness; san-at-ive, san-at-or-y (see Sanatory); san-i-ty, Hamlet, ii. 2. 214, formed (by analogy) from Lat. acc. sanitatem; san-i-to-ry, a coined word.

SANGUINE, ardent, hopeful. (F., — L.) The use of the word is due to the old belief in the 'four humours,' of which blood was one; the excess of this humour rendered people of a hopeful 'temperament' or 'complexion.' M. E. sanguin; 'Of his complexion he was sanguin;' Chaucer, C. T. 335. — F. sanguin, 'sanguine, bloody, of a sanguine complexion;' Cot. — Lat. sanguineum, acc. of sanguineus, bloody. — Lat. sanguin-, stem of sanguis, blood. Root uncertain. Der. sanguine-ly, -ness; sanguine-ous, Englished from Lat. sanguineus; sanguin-ar-y. Dryden, Hind and Panther, pt. iii. l. 679, from F. sanguinaire, 'bloody,' Cot. from Lat. sanguinarius.

SANHEDRIM, the highest council of the Jews. (Heb., — Gk.) In Todd's Johnson, who cites from Patrick's Commentary on Judges, iv. 5. — Late Heb. sanhedrin, not a true Heb. word (Webster). — Gk. συνέδριον, a council; lit. a sitting together, sitting in council. — Gk. σύν, together; and ἔδρα, a seat, from ἕζομαι (fut. ἔδ-ομαι), I sit, cognate with E. sit. See Syn- and Sit.

SANITARY, SANITY; see Sane.

SANS, without. (F., — L.) In Shak. As You Like It, ii. 7. 166. — F. sans (O. F. sens), without; the final s is unoriginal (see Diez). — Lat. sine, without; si ne, if not, unless, except.

SANSKRIT, lit. 'symmetrical language.' (Skt.) 'The word

Sanskrit (Skt. sanskṛita) is made up of the preposition sam, "together," and the pp. kṛita, "made," an euphonic s being inserted. The compound means "carefully constructed," "symmetrically formed" (confectus, constructus). In this sense, it is opposed to the Prakrit (Skt. prākṛita), "common," "natural," the name given to the vulgar dialects which gradually arose out of it, and from which most of the languages now spoken in upper India are more or less directly derived; Monier Williams, Skt. Grammar, p. xix. Sam is allied to E. same; and kri, to make, to Lat. creare; see Same and Create.

SAP (1), the juice of plants. (E.) M. E. sap, Kentish zep, Avenbite of Inwyt, p. 96, l. 5. — A. S. sap, sap; Grein, ii. 397. + O. Du. sap, 'sap, juice, or liquor;' Hexham. + O. H. G. saf; G. safi (with added f). + Gk. σάπος, juice, sap. β. Curtius (ii. 63) connects these with Lat. sucus, Irish sug, Russ. sok, sap; from a primary form SAKA or SWAKA; cf. Lith. sakas, gum on cherry-trees. In this view, k has become p, as in other cases; cf. Lat. coquere with Gk. πέπτεν. See Suck, Succulent. Der. sap-less, sapp-y, sapp-i-ness; sap-ling, a young succulent tree, Rich. III, iii. 4. 71.

SAP (2), to undermine. (F., — Low L., — Gk.?) 'Sapping or mining;' Howell, Famil. Letters, vol. ii. let. 4. — O. F. sapper (F. saper), 'to undermine, dig into;' Cot. — O. F. sappe (15th cent., Littré), a kind of hoe; mod. F. sape, an instrument for mining. Cf. Span. zapa, a spade; Ital. zappa, 'a mattocke to dig and delue with, a sappe;' Florio. — Low Lat. sapa, a hoe, mentioned A. D. 1183 (Ducange).

β. Diez proposes to refer these words to Gk. σκαπάνη, a digging-tool, a hoe; from σκάπτειν, to dig. He instances Ital. zolla, which he derives from O. H. G. skolla. Der. sapp-er.

SAPID, savoury. (L.) Sir T. Browne has sapidity, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 21, § 6; and sapor, id. § 8. All the words are rare. — Lat. sapidus, savoury. — Lat. sapere, to taste, also, to be wise. See Sapience. Der. sapid-i-ty; also sap-or, from Lat. sapor, taste. And see savour, in-sipid.

SAPIENCE, wisdom. (F., — L.) [The adj. sapient is a later word.] M. E. sapience, P. Plowman, B. iii. 330; Gower, C. A. ii. 167. — F. sapience, 'sapience;' Cot. — Lat. sapientia, wisdom. — Lat. sapienti-, crude form of pres. part. of sapere, to be wise, orig. to taste, discern. β. From a base SAP, prob. for SAK or SWAK, allied to Lat. sucus, juice, and E. sap; see Sap (1). Der. (from Lat. sapere) sapi-ent. K. Lear, iii. 6. 24; sapi-ent-ly, sage (1); and see sapid.

SAPONACEOUS, soapy. (L.) In Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. Coined as if from Lat. *saponaceus, soapy, from Lat. sapon-, stem of sapo, soap (Pliny).

β. It is doubtful whether sapo (Gk. σάπων) is a Lat. word; it is the same as E. soap, and may have been borrowed from Teutonic; see Soap.

SAPPHIC, a kind of metre. (L., — Gk.) 'Meter saphik;' G. Douglas, Palace of Honour, pt. ii. st. 4. — Lat. Sapphicus, Sapphic, belonging to Sappho, the poetess. — Gk. Σαπφώ, a poetess born at Mitylene in Lesbos, died about 592 B. C.

SAPPHIRE, a precious stone. (F., — L., — Gk., — Heb.) M. E. saphir, Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 96, l. 115. — F. saphir, 'a saphir stone;' Cot. — Lat. sapphirus. — Gk. σάπφειρος, a sapphire. — Heb. sappir, a sapphire (with initial samech). Cf. Pers. saffir, a sapphire; Rich. Dict., p. 836.

SARABAND, a kind of dance. (F., — Span., — Pers.) In Ben Jonson, The Devil is an Ass, iv. 1 (Wittipol). Explained as 'a Spanish dance' in Johnson. — F. sarabande (Littré). — Span. zarabanda, a dance; of Moorish origin. Supposed to be from Pers. sarband, of which the lit. sense is 'a fillet for fastening the ladies' head-dress;' Rich. Dict. p. 822. — Pers. sar, head, cognate with Gk. κάρα; and band, a band. See Cheer and Band (1).

SARACEN, one of an Eastern people. (L., — Arab.) M. E. saracen, Rich. Coeur de Lion, 2436; sarezen, 2461. — Lat. saracenus, a Saracen; lit. 'one of the eastern people.' — Arab. sharqiy, oriental, eastern; sunny; Rich. Dict. p. 889. Cf. Arab. sharq, the east, the rising sun; id. From Arab. root sharaka, it rose. Der. Saracen-ic; also sarcen-et, q. v.; sirocco, q. v. (Doubtful; much disputed).

SARCASM, a sneer. (F., — L., — Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — F. sarcasme, 'a biting taunt;' Cot. — Lat. sarcasmus, sarcasmos. — Gk. σαρκασμός, a sneer. — Gk. σαρκάζειν, to tear flesh like dogs, to bite the lips in rage, to sneer. — Gk. σαρκ-, stem of σάσθ, flesh. Der. sarcas-tic, Gk. σαρκαστικός, sneering; sarcas-tic-al-ly.

SARCENET, SARSNET, a fine thin silk. (F., — L., — Arab.) In Shak. 1 Hen. IV, iii. 1. 256. — O. F. sarcenet, a stuff made by the Saracens (Rouffort). Formed from Low Lat. saracenicum, sarcenet (Ducange). — Low Lat. Saraceni, the Saracens; see Saracen.

SARCOPHAGUS, a stone receptacle for a corpse. (L., — G.) In Holland, tr. of Plinie, b. xxvii. c. 17; it was the name of a kind of lime-stone, so called 'because that, within the space of forty daies it is knowne for certaine to consume the bodies of the dead which are bestowed therein.' — Lat. sarcophagus. — Gk. σαρκοφάγος, carnivorous, flesh-consuming; hence a name for a species of lime-stone, as above. — Gk. σαρκο-, crude form of σάρξ, flesh (see Sarcasm); and φαγεῖν, to eat, from ✓ BHAG, to eat.

SARDINE (1), a small fish. (F., — L., — Gk.) In Cotgrave. — F. sardine, also spelt sardaine in Cotgrave, and explained as 'a pilchard, or sardine.' — Lat. sardina, also sarda, a sardine. — Gk. σάρδιον, σάρδα, a kind of fish; explained as 'a kind of tunny caught near Sardinia' (Liddell). Perhaps named from Gk. Σαρδῖν, Sardinia.

SARDINE (2), a precious stone. (L., — Gk.) M. E. sardyn, Wyclif, Rev. iv. 3. — Lat. *sardinus, not in the dict., but the Lat. equivalent of Gk. σάρδιος. The Vulgate has sardinis in Rev. iv. 3 as a gen. case, from a nom. sardo. — Gk. σάρδιος, a sardine stone, Rev. iv. 3. Also σάρδω; also σάρδιον. So called from Sardis, capital of Lydia in Asia Minor, where it was first found; Pliny, b. xxxvii. c. 7. Der. sard-onyx, q. v. [+]

SARDONIC, sneering, said of a laugh or smile. (F., — L., — Gk.) Only in the phr. 'Sardonic laugh' or 'Sardonic smile.' In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, it is a 'Sardonian laughter.' So also 'Sardonian smile;' Spenser, F. Q. v. 9. 12. — F. sardonique, used in the 16th cent. (Littre); but usually sardonien. Cotgrave has: 'ris sardonien, a forced or causeless mirth.' — Lat. *Sardonius, for the more usual Sardonius, Sardinian. — Gk. σάρδιος, also σάρδιος; hence σάρδιον γελᾶν, to laugh bitterly, grimly. 'Prob. from σαίρειν (to draw back the lips and shew the teeth, grin); others write σάρδιος, deriving it from σάρδιον, a plant of Sardinia (Σαρδῖν), which was said to screw up the face of the eater, Servius, on Virg. Ecl. vii. 41, and in Latin certainly the form Sardonius has prevailed;' Liddell. 'Immo ego Sardois uideat tibi amarior herbis;' Virgil (as above).

SARDONYX, a precious stone. (L., — Gk.) In Holland, tr. of Plinie, b. xxxvii. c. 6. — Lat. sardonyx. — Gk. σάρδωνυξ, the sard-onyx, i. e. Sardinian onyx. — Gk. σάρδ-, for Σαρδεις, Sardis, the capital of Lydia; and ὄνυξ, the finger-nail, also an onyx. See Sardine (2) and Onyx.

SARSAPARILLA, the name of a plant. (Span.) 'Sarsaparilla, a plant growing in Peru and Virginia . . . commonly called prickly bind-weed;' Phillips, ed. 1706. — Span. zarzaparilla. β. The Span. zarza means 'bramble,' and is supposed to be of Basque origin, from Basque sartzia, a bramble; see Larramendi's Dict., p. 506. γ. The origin of the latter part of the name is unknown; it has been supposed that parilla stands for parrilla, a possible dimin. of parra, a vine trained against stakes or against a wall. Others have imagined a physician Parillo for it to be named after.

SARSNET; see Sarcenet.

SASH (1), a case or frame for panes of glass. (F., — L.) 'A Jezabel . . . appears constantly dressed at her sash;' Spectator, no. 175 (A. D. 1711). 'Sash, or Sash-window, a kind of window framed with large squares, and corruptly so called from the French word chassis, a frame;' Phillips, ed. 1706. — F. chassis, 'a frame of wood for a window;' Cot. Extended from O. F. chasse (F. chdsse), a shrine. — Lat. capsa, a box, case; see Chase (3), Case (2).

SASH (2), a scarf, band. (Pers.) Formerly spelt shash, with the sense of turban. 'His head was wreathed with a huge shash or tulipant [turban] of silk and gold;' Sir T. Herbert, Travels, 1638, p. 191; cited in Trench, Select Glossary. 'So much for the silk in Judaea, called shesh in Hebrew, whence haply that fine linen or silk is called shashes, worn at this day about the heads of Eastern people;' Fuller, Pisgah Sight of Palestine, b. ii. c. 14, § 24. But it does not seem to be a Hebrew word. Trench, in his Eng. Past and Present, calls it a Turkish word; which is also not the case. The solution is, that the word is Persian. — Pers. shast, 'a thumb-stall worn by archers, . . . a girdle worn by the Magi' &c., Rich. Dict. p. 891. In Vullers' Pers. Dict. ii. 425, 426, we find: shest, a thumb, archer's thumb-ring (to guard the thumb in shooting), a fish-hook, plectrum, fiddle-string, scalpel; also 'cingulum idolatrorum et ignisculorum,' i. e. a girdle worn by idolaters and fire-worshippers, thus accounting for our sash.

SASSAFRAS, a kind of laurel. (F., — Span., — L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706, where it is said to grow in Florida. — F. sassafras. — Span. sa-safras, sassafras; corrupted from O. Span. sassifragia, the herb saxifrage (Minsheu); we find also Span. salsafra, salsifra, salsifraga, saxifraga (Neuman), all various corruptions of sassifragia. 'The same virtue was attributed to sassafras as to saxifraga, of breaking up the stone in the bladder;' Wedgwood. See Saxifrage.

SATAN, the devil. (Heb.) Lit. 'the enemy.' Called Sathanas in Wyclif, Rev. xii. 9; spelt Satanas in the Vulgate; and Saravās in the Greek. — Heb. śāṭān, an enemy, Satan; from the root śāṭān (with sin and tehh), to be an enemy, persecute. Der. Satan-ic, Satan-ic-al.

SACHEL, a small bag. (F., — L., — Gk., — Heb., — Egyptian?) M. E. sachel, Wyclif, Luke, x. 4. — O. F. sachel, a little bag (Roquefort, with a citation.) — Lat. sacellum, acc. of saccus, dimin. of saccus, a sack, bag; see Sack.

SATE, SATIATE, to glut, fill full, satisfy. (L.) In Hamlet, i. 5. 56; we find sated, Oth. i. 3. 356. Sate can be nothing but a shortened form of satiare; probably the pp. sated was at first used as a substitute for satiare in a participial sense, and the verb was then evolved. The abbreviation would be assisted by the known use of Lat. sat for satis, and by the O. F. satisfier for satisfier, to satisfy; see Roquefort. Cf. 'That satiare yet unsatisfied desire;' Cymb. i. 6. 48. Or sate may have been suggested by Lat. satur, full. It comes to much the same thing. — Lat. satiatus, pp. of satiare, to sate, satiate, fill full. Cf. Lat. satur, full; sat, satis, sufficient. All from a base SAT, signifying 'full' or filled; whence also E. sad; see Sad. Der. satiat-ion; sat-i-e-ty, from F. satiété, 'satiety, fulness,' Cot., from Lat. satiētem, acc. of satiatus. Also sat-is-ty, q. v.; sat-ire, q. v., sat-ur-ate, q. v., soil (3), q. v.

SATELLITE, a follower, attendant moon. (F., — L.) 'Satellite, one retained to guard a man's person, a yeoman of the guard, sergeant, catchpoll;' Blount, ed. 1674. — F. satellite, 'a sergeant, catchpole, or yeoman of the guard;' Cot. — Lat. satellitem, acc. of satelles, an attendant, life-guard. Root uncertain.

SATIN, a glossy silk. (F., — L.) M. E. satyn, Chaucer, C. T. 4557. — F. satyn, 'satin;' Cot. Cf. Ital. setino, 'a kind of thin silke stuffe;' Florio. Also Port. setim, satin. — Low Lat. satinus, setinus, satin (Ducange). Extended from Lat. seta, a bristle; we find the Low Lat. seta in the sense of silk (Ducange); also Ital. seta, 'any kind of silke,' Florio.

β. Similarly Span. pelo, hair, also means fibre of plants, thread of wool or silk, &c.; and the Lat. seta was used of the human hair as well as of the bristles of an animal; see Diez. Root unknown. Der. sat-in-et, sat-in-y, sat-in-wood.

SATIRE, a ridiculing of vice or folly. (F., — L.) In Shak. Much Ado, v. 4. 103. — F. satire; Cotgrave has: 'Satyre, a satyr, an invective or vice-rebuking poem.' — Lat. satira, also satura, satire, a species of poetry orig. dramatic and afterwards didactic, peculiar to the Romans (White).

β. It is said that the word meant 'a medley,' and is derived from satura lanx, a full dish, a dish filled with mixed ingredients; satura being the fem. of satur, full, akin to satis, enough, and to satiare, to satiate; see Sate. Der. satir-ic-al, spelt satiricall, Skelton, ed. Dyce, i. 130, l. 139; satir-ise, satir-ist.

SATISFY, to supply or please fully. (F., — L.) 'Not al so satisfide;' Spenser, F. Q. i. 5. 15. 'I satisfye, I content, or suffice, Je satisfie;' Palsgrave. — O. F. satisfier, to satisfy (as in Palsgrave); afterwards displaced by satisfaire; see Littre. Formed as if from a Low Lat. *satisficare, substituted for Lat. satisfacere, to satisfy. — Lat. satis, enough; and facere, to make. See Sate and Fact. Der. satisfact-ion, M. E. satisfaccioun, Wyclif, 1 Pet. iii. 15, from F. satisfaction, 'satisfaction,' Cot.; satisfact-or-y, from F. satisfactoire, 'satisfactory,' Cot.; satisfact-or-ily, -ness.

SATRAP, a Persian viceroy. (F., — L., — Gk., — Pers.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. [We find M. E. satrap, Allit. Romance of Alexander, 1913, 1937.] — F. satrape, 'a great ruler;' Cot. — Lat. satrapam, acc. of satrapes; we also find nom. satraps (acc. satrapem). — Gk. σατράπης, the title of a Persian viceroy or governor of a province. β. Certainly an O. Pers. word. Littre, citing Burnouf (Yaçna, p. 545), compares the Gk. pl. ἐξαιθραπέωντες, found in inscriptions (Liddell and Scott give the form ἐξαιθραπης), and the Heb. pl. achash-darpmim, satraps. He proceeds to give the derivation from the Zend shōithrapaii, ruler of a region, from shōithra, a region, and paiti, a chief. Of these words, the former is the same as Skt. kshetra, a field, region, landed property (Benfey, p. 240); and the latter is Skt. pāti, a master, lord (id. p. 506). Fick gives the Zend words; i. 305, 306.

SATURATE, to fill to excess. (L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. — Lat. saturatus, pp. of saturare, to fill full. — Lat. satur, full; allied to satis, enough; see Sate. Der. satur-at-ion; satur-able.

SATURDAY, the seventh day of the week. (E.) M. E. Sater-day, P. Plowman, B. v. 14, 367. — A. S. Sater-dæg, Luke, xxiii. 54; also spelt Sat'ern-dæg, Exod. xvi. 23; Saternes dæg, rubric to Matt. xvi. 28, xx. 29. The name Sater or Saturn is borrowed from Lat. Saturnus, Saturn; cf. Lat. Saturni dies, Saturday; Du. zaturdag, Saturday. See Saturnine.

SATURNINE, gloomy of temperament. (F., — L.) 'Saturnine, of the nature of Saturn, i. e. sterner, sad, melancholy;' Minsheu. — O. F. Saturnin, a form noticed by Minsheu, and Littre has saturnin as a medical term, with the sense of 'relating to lead;' lead being a symbol of Saturn. The more usual form is F. Saturnien, 'sad, sower, lumpish, melancholy;' Cot. Both adjectives are from Lat. Saturnus, the god Saturn, also the planet Saturn. β. The peculiar sense is due to the supposed evil influence of the planet Saturn in astrology; see Chaucer, C. T. 2455-2471. γ. Saturnus meant 'the sower;' from satum, supine of serere, to sow; see Season.

Der. (from Saturnus) Saturn-alia, s. pl., the festival of Saturn, a time of license and unrestrained enjoyment; Saturn-ian, pertaining to the golden age of Saturn, Pope, Dunciad, i. 28, iii. 320, iv. 16. Also Satur-day, q. v.

SATYR, a sylvan god. (F., — L., — Gk.) In Shak. Hamlet, i. 2. 140. — F. satyre, 'a satyr, a monster, halfe man halfe goat;' Cot. —

Lat. satyrus. — Gk. σάτυρος, a Satyr, sylvan god, companion of Bacchus. Der. satyr-ic.

SAUCE, a liquid seasoning for food. (F., — L.) M. E. sauce, Chaucer, C. T. 353; P. Plowman, B. xiii. 43. — F. sauce, 'a sauce, condiment'; Cot. — Lat. salsa, a salted thing; fem. of salsus, salted, salt, pp. of salire, to salt. — Lat. sal, salt; see SALT. Der. sauce-pan; sauce-er, a shallow vessel orig. intended to hold sauce, L. L. L. iv. 3. 98; we find Low Lat. salsarium, glossed by M. E. sauser, in Alex. Neckam, in Wright's Vocab. i. 98, l. 5; sauce, verb, to give a relish to, often used ironically, as in As You Like It, iii. 5. 69; sauce-y, i. e. full of salt, pungent, Twelfth Nt. iii. 4. 159; sauce-i-ly, K. Lear, i. 1. 22, ii. 4. 41; sauce-i-ness, Com. Errors, ii. 2. 28. Also sauce-age, q. v.

SAUNTER, to lounge. (Unknown.) 'By sauntering still on some adventure;' Hudibras, pt. iii. c. i. l. 1343 (ed. Bell, ii. 111). Not in early use. We find however, in the Romance of Partenay, ed. Skeat, l. 4653, that Geoffrey 'santred and doubted,' i. e. hesitated and doubted as to whether he was of the lineage of Presine. Unfortunately this is not a very sure instance, as the MS. might be read as santred, or even as jaunted. Still it deserves to be noted. In the dialect of Cumberland the word is santer. 'Santer, saunter; [also], an oald wife santer—an unauthenticated tradition;' Dickinson's Cumberland Glossary.

β. No satisfactory account of this word has ever been given. Mr. Wedgwood thinks an i has been lost; cf. Icel. slentr, idle lounging, slent, sloth; Dan. slentre, to saunter, lounge about, slente, to idle; Swed. slentra, to saunter, loiter; slunt, a lubber, slunta, to loiter, idle.

γ. But a much more likely solution is that proposed in Mr. Blackley's Wordgossip, 1869, p. 227, and by Dr. Morris, in the Academy, April 14, 1883, p. 259. This is, to connect it with M. E. aunter, an adventure; cf. the quotation from Hudibras above. But I repudiate Mr. Blackley's suggestion that the prefixed s is 'intensive,' which explains nothing. The verb aunter was commonly reflexive; see P. Plowman, C. xxi. 232, xxiii. 175. Hence saunter may be explained from F. s'aventurer, to adventure oneself, to go forth on an adventure; since M. E. aunter = F. aventure. Otherwise, the s = O. F. es = Lat. ex; so that s-aunter = venture forth. There is no difficulty in the change of sense; as Dr. Morris remarks, 'it is by no means a solitary example of degraded meaning; . . . the exploits or gests [of the old knights] have become our *jest*s.'

¶ In any case, we may safely reject such wild guesses as a derivation from F. sainte terre (because men saunter if they visit the Holy Land!), or from F. sans terre (because people saunter who are not possessed of landed property!); yet these puerilities will long continue to be accepted by the inexperienced. Der. saunter-er.

SAURIAN, one of the lizard tribe. (Gk.) A modern geological term; formed from Gk. σαῦρα or σαῦρα-ος, a lizard; with suffix -ian (= Lat. -ianus).

SAUSAGE, an intestine of an animal, stuffed with meat salted and seasoned. (F., — L.) Spelt salsage, Gascoigne, Art of Venerie; Works, ed. Hazlitt, ii. 308, l. 3 from bottom. — F. sauccisse (also sauccisse in Cotgrave), 'a saucidge'; Cot. — Low Lat. salcitia, a sausage; Ducange. Cf. 'Salcice, Gallice sauccisses;' Wright's Vocab. i. 128, l. 1. For Lat. salsicium, a sausage. — Lat. salsi, for salso, crude form of salsus, salted; with suffix -ci-um. See SAUCE.

SAUTERNE, a kind of wine. (F.) From Sauterne, a place in France, in the department of Gironde.

SAVAGE, wild, fierce, cruel. (F., — L.) Lit. it merely means 'living in the woods,' rustic; hence, wild, fierce; spelt salvage, Spenser, F. Q. iv. 4. 39; &c. M. E. savage (with u = v), King Alisaunder, l. 869; spelt salvage, Gower, ii. 77, l. 20. — O. F. salvage, savage, mod. F. sauvage, 'savage, wild'; Cot. And see Burguy. — Lat. silvaticus, belonging to a wood, wild. — Lat. silua, a wood. See SILVAN. Der. savage-ly-ness.

SAVANNA, SAVANNAH, a meadow-plain of America. (Span., — L., — Gk.) 'Savannahs are clear pieces of land without woods;' Dampier, Voyages, an. 1683 (R.) — Span. sabana (with b sounded as v), a sheet for a bed, an altar-cloth, a large plain (from the appearance of a plain covered with snow). — Lat. sabanum, a linen cloth, towel. — Gk. σάβανον, a linen cloth, towel.

SAVE, to rescue, make safe. (F., — L.) M. E. sauven (= sauven), Ancren Riwle, p. 98, l. 10; sauen (= saven), Chaucer, C. T. 3534. — F. sauver, 'to save'; Cot. — Lat. saluare, to secure, make safe. — Lat. salvus, safe; see SAFE. Der. saver-er, save-all, save-ing, sb., save-ing-bank, a bank for money saved; save-i-our, M. E. saveoure (= saveour), P. Plowman, B. v. 486, from O. F. saveour, salveur (Burguy), from Lat. acc. saluatorem, a saviour. Also save, prep., M. E. saue (= save), P. Plowman, B. xvii. 100, from F. sauf, in such phrases as sauf mon droit, my right being reserved; see Cotgrave. Also save-ing, prep., K. John, i. 201.

SAVELOY, CERVELAS, a kind of sausage. (F., — Ital., — L.)

Now corruptly spelt saveloy, but formerly cervelas or cervelat. The spelling cervelas is in Phillips, Kersey, and Ashe; Bailey, ed. 1735, has: 'Cervelas, Cervelat, a large kind of Bolonia sausage, eaten cold in slices.' — F. cervelat (now cervelas), 'an excellent kind of drier saucidge,' &c.; Cot. — Ital. cervellatta, cervelata, a thick short sausage. Doubtless so called because it orig. contained brains. — Ital. cervello, brain. — Lat. cerebellum, dimin. of cerebrum, brain; see CEREBRAL.

SAVIN, SAVINE, SABINE, an ever-green shrub. (L.) M. E. savine, Gower, C. A. iii. 130, l. 19. — A. S. safina, savine, savine; A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, i. 34. — Lat. sabina, or Sabina herba, savin; lit. Sabine herb. Fem. of Sabinus, Sabine. The Sabines were a people of central Italy.

SAVOUR, odour, scent, taste. (F., — L.) M. E. savour (savour), Chaucer, C. T. 15697, 15711. — O. F. savour (Burguy); savour, 'savour'; Cot. — Lat. saporem, acc. of sapor, taste. — Lat. sapere, to taste; see SAPID. Der. savour, vb., M. E. saueren, Wyclif, Rom. xii. 3; savour-y, M. E. sauery, Mark, ix. 49; savour-i-ness; savour-less.

SAVOY, a kind of cabbage. (F.) 'Savoys, a sort of fine cabbage, first brought from the territories of the dukedom of Savoy;' Phillips, ed. 1706.

SAW (1), an instrument for cutting, with a toothed edge. (E.) M. E. sawe, P. Plowman, Crede, l. 753; Wright's Vocab. i. 181, l. 3. — A. S. saga; 'Serra, saga;' Wright's Vocab. i. 39, col. 2. + Du. zaag. + Icel. sög. + Dan. sav. + Swed. såg. + G. säge.

β. All from Teut. type SAGA, lit. 'a cutter;' from Teut. base SAG, to cut. — ✓ SAK, to cut; cf. Lat. secare, to cut; see SECANT. Der. saw, verb, M. E. sawen, sawyn, Prompt. Parv.; saw-dust, saw-fish, saw-mill, saw-pit; also saw-yer (formed like bow-yer from bow, the y being due to an M. E. verb saw-i-en = saw-en), spelt sawer, Wright's Vocab. i. 212, col. 2. Also see-saw, q. v. [†]

SAW (2), a saying, maxim. (E.) In As You Like It, ii. 7. 156. M. E. sawe, Chaucer, C. T. 1165. — A. S. sagu, a saying; Grein, ii. 387. Allied to A. S. seegan, to say, + Icel. saga, a saga, tale; Dan. and Swed. saga. + G. sage. See SAY. Doublet, saga.

SAXIFRAGE, a genus of plants. (F., — L.) In Cotgrave and Minshew. — F. saxifrage, 'the herb saxifrage, or stone-break'; Cot. — Lat. saxifraga, spleen-wort (White). The adiantum or 'maiden-hair' was also called saxifragus, lit. stone-breaking, because it was supposed to break stones in the bladder. 'They have a wonderful faculty . . . to break the stone, and to expel it out of the body; for which cause, rather than for growing on stones and rocks, I believe verily it was . . . called in Lat. saxifragus;' Pliny, b. xxii. c. 21 (Holland's translation). — Lat. saxi = saxo, crude form of saxum, a stone, rock; and frag, base of frangere, to break, cognate with E. break. β. Saxum prob. means fragment, or piece 'cut off;' from ✓ SAK, to cut; Lat. secare, to cut. Doublet, sassafras. [†]

SAY (1), to speak, tell. (E.) M. E. seggen, P. Plowman, B. iii. 166; also siggen; and often seien, sein, seyn, sain, Chaucer, C. T. 1153; saye, seie, id. 781. — A. S. seegan, secgean, to say (pt. t. sægde, sædde, pp. gesægd, sædd), Grein, ii. 421. + Icel. segja. + Dan. sig. + Swed. säga. + G. sagen; O. H. G. sekan, sejan. β. All these are weak verbs, from a Teut. base SAG = ✓ SAK, to say. Cf. Lithuan. sakyti, to say, sakau, I say. And see SIGN. Der. say-ing, L. L. L. i. 2. 21; sooth-say-er; and see saga, saw (2).

SAY (2), a kind of serge. (F., — L., — Gk.) 'Say, a delicate serge or woollen cloth;' Halliwell. 'Saye clothe, serge;' Palsgrave. M. E. saie; in Wyclif, Exod. xxvi. 9, the later version has saie where the earlier has sarge, i. e. serge. — O. F. saie; Cotgrave has saye, 'a long-skirted jacket, coat, or cassock'; also sayete, 'the stuffe sey.' Florio has Ital. saio, 'a long side coate,' and saietta, 'a kind of fine serge or cloth for coates; it is also called rash.' Neuman has Span. saya, sayo, a tunic; sayete, a thin light stuff. β. The stuff say was so called because used for making a kind of coat or tunic called in Lat. saga, sagum, or sagus; cf. Low Lat. sagum (1), a mantle, (2) a kind of cloth (Ducange). — Gk. σάγος, a coarse cloak, a soldier's mantle; cf. σάγη or σάγην, harness, armour, σάγμα, a pack-saddle, also a covering, a large cloak. These Gk. words are not of Celtic origin, as has been said, but allied to Skt. sañj, sajj, to adhere, be attached, hang from; see Benfey, p. 996.

SAY (3), to try, assay. (F., — L., — Gk.) In Pericles, i. 1. 59; as a sb., in K. Lear, v. 3. 143. Merely an abbreviation of ASSAY or ESSAY; see ESSAY.

SCAB, a crust over a sore. (E.) M. E. scab, Chaucer, C. T. 12292. — A. S. scæb, scēb, A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, i. 150, l. 5; i. 316, l. 22; i. 322, l. 17. + Dan. and Swed. skab. + G. schabe, a wood-louse, moth; also scab, itch, shaving tool, grater. β. The lit. sense is 'itch'; something that is scratched; cf. Lat. scabies, scab, itch, from scabere, to scratch. From the Teut. base SKAB, to scratch, whence mod. E. shave; see SHAVE. Der. scabb-ed, scabb-y, scabb-i-ness. Also skabby, q. v.

SCABBARD, a sword-sheath. (F., — Teut.) Spelt scabberd in Baret (1580). Scabbard is a corruption of M. E. scaubert, Rob. of Glouc. p. 273, l. 17; and scaubert stands for scauber, by the not uncommon change from k to t, as in O. Fries. matia = A. S. macian, to make. In Prompt. Parv. p. 443, we find all three forms, scauber, scaubert, scauberd. The form scauber also appears as scaberke (Trevisa, v. 373, Stratmann); and is weakened to scaberge, Romance of Partenay, 2790.

β. Scauber is obviously, like hauberk, a French word of Teutonic origin; but it does not appear in O. French texts; except that Wedgwood cites vagina, glossed by O. F. escanbers, from Johannes de Garlandia. We may easily see, however, that the termination -berk is from the Teutonic word appearing in G. bergen, O. H. G. bergan, to protect, hide. This is made doubly certain by noticing that the O. F. halberc or hauberc, a hauberk, is also spelt haubert, just as scauber is also scaubert; and corresponding to the form scaberge we have habergeron.

γ. It remains to discuss the former syllable; we should expect to find an O. F. *scalbero or *escalbero. The prefix appears to answer to O. F. escala, mod. F. échelle, écaïlle, a shell, scale, husk, derived from O. H. G. scala, G. schale.

δ. Now G. schale means a shell, peel, husk, rind, scale, outside, skull, cover of a book, haft (of a knife), bowl, vase. In composition schal means cover or outside; as in schalbreit, outside plank (of a tree), schalholz, outside of a tree cut into planks, schalwerk, a lining of planks. Cf. schalen, to plank, inlay; messer schalen, to haft knives.

ε. The prob. sense is 'shell-protection,' or 'cover-cover'; it is one of those numerous reduplicated words in which the latter half repeats the sense of the former. The notion of putting a knife into a haft is much the same as that of putting a sword into a sheath.

ζ. Similarly, the Icel. skálpr, O. Swed. skalp, a scabbard, appears to be from Icel. skál, a scale, bowl. See Scalp. And I conclude that scabbard = scale-berk, with the reduplicated sense of 'cover-cover.' See Scale and Hauberk.

SCAFFOLD, a temporary platform. (F., -L., and Teut.) M. E. scaffold, scafold, Chaucer, C. T. 2533, 3384. - O. F. *escalfalt, only found as escalfant, mod. F. échafaud. A still older form must have been escalfalt (Burguy), corresponding to Span. catalfaleo, a funeral canopy over a bier, Ital. catalfaleo, a funeral canopy, stage, scaffold (whence mod. F. catalfale).

β. The word is a hybrid one; the orig. sense is 'a stage for seeing,' or 'a stage on which a thing is displayed to view,' lit. a 'view-balk.' The former part of the word appears in O. Span. catar, to observe, see, behold, look (Minshew), from Lat. captare, to strive after, watch, observe; and the latter part is put for balko, as in Ital. balko, a scaffold, stage, theatre (whence E. balkony), which is of Teut. origin. See Catch and Balkony, Balk.

γ. See further in Diez; catar appears also in Ital. catalletto, a bier, lit. 'view-bed'; cf. Parmese and Venetian catar, to find; Span. cata, look! see! Der. scaffold, verb; scaffold-ing.

SCALD (1), to burn with a hot liquid, to burn. (F., -L.) M. E. scalden, pp. yscalded, Chaucer, C. T. Six-text, A. 2020; Tyrwhitt (1. 2022) reads yskalded, but the 6 best MSS. have yscalded. 'Schaldinde water, scalding water;' Ancren Riwe, p. 246, l. 3. - O. F. *escalder, later form eschauder, 'to scald'; Cot. Mod. F. eschauder. - Lat. excaldare, to wash in hot water. - Lat. ex, out, very; and caldus, hot, contracted form of calidus, hot, from caldere, to be hot. See Ex- and Caldron. Der. scald, sb.

SCALD (2), scabby. (Scand.) In Shak. Hen. V, v. 1. 5. Contracted form of scalled, i.e. afflicted with the scall; see Scall. M. E. scalled, Chaucer, C. T. 629. Cf. Dan. skaldet, bald.

SCALD (3), a Scandinavian poet. (Scand.) M. E. scald, Ormulum, 2192. - Icel. skáld, a poet. The orig. sense seems to be 'loud talker'; see Sköld.

SCALE (1), a shell, small thin plate or flake on a fish, flake. (E.) M. E. scale; 'fishes scales,' Gower, C. A. i. 275, l. 22, ii. 265, l. 18; scale (or shale), the shell of a nut, P. Plowman, C. xiii. 145, and footnote. - A. S. scale, scale, pl. scalan, a shell or husk, in a gloss (Leo); whence beán-scale, a husk of a bean (id.). + Dan. and Swed. skal, a shell, pod, husk. + G. schale, O. H. G. scala, a shell, husk. Cf. Goth. skalyja, a tile. β. The E. word may have been mixed up with O. F. escala (mod. F. échelle); but this is the same word, borrowed from O. H. G. scala.

γ. All from Teut. base SKALA, Fick, iii. 334, lit. 'a flake,' that which can be peeled off; from Teut. base SKAL, to separate, peel off, whence also E. skill; see Skill. Der. scale, verb; scal-ed, scal-y, scal-i-ness. Allied to Scale (2), Shell, Scall, Scull, Skill. And see scall-op, scal-p. Doublet, shale. [+]

SCALE (2), a bowl or dish of a balance. (E.) M. E. scale, schale (also scoale), a bowl, Ancren Riwe, p. 214, note i; scale, Layamon, 5368. - A. S. scale, a scale of a balance; 'Lanx, scale; Balances, twa scále (two scales); Wright's Vocab. i. 38, col. 2. The pl. scéala, bowls, is in Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, ed. Thorpe, p. 429, l. 30. β. The A. S. word scéala (with long a) ought rather to have given an E. form scale (cf. M. E. scoale above); but it was readily confused with the word above, which is from the same root, and a mere variant. And in fact, the word scale, though rare, occurs: 'Lanx, the scale of a balance,' Nomenclator, 1585 (Nares, ed. Wright and Halliwell). 'Then Jove his golden scales weighed up;' Chapman, tr. of Homer, b. xxii. l. 180. γ. The long a is supported by Icel. skál, a bowl, scale of a balance; Dan. skaal, Swed. skål, a bowl, cup; Du. schaal, a scale, bowl. Cf. G. schale, a cup, dish, bowl. All from Teut. base SKALA, Fick, iii. 334; allied to Scale (1).

SCALE (3), a ladder, series of steps, graduated measure, gradation. (L.) M. E. scale, spelt skale, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 12. Borrowed immediately from Lat. scala, usually in pl. scalæ, a flight of steps, ladder. (Hence also F. échelle.) β. Perhaps Lat. scā-la = scad-la or scand-la, that by which one ascends or descends; cf. Lat. scandere, to climb; see Scan. Der. scale, verb, to climb by a ladder; Surrey translates 'Herent parietibus scalæ, postesque sub ipsos Nituntur gradibus' (Æneid, ii. 442) by 'And rered up ladders against the walles, Under the windowes scaling by their stepes;' clearly borrowed from Ital. scalare, to scale. See Escalade.

SCALENE, having three unequal sides, said of a triangle. (L., -Gk.) Phillips, ed. 1706, has: 'Scalenum, or Scalenous Triangle.' - Lat. scalenus, adj. - Gk. σκαληνός, scalene, uneven. Allied to σκολιός, crooked, σκολιός, crook-legged, σκιός, a leg. The orig. sense is 'jumping,' hence, halting, uneven. - ✓ SKAR, to jump; whence σκαίρειν, to skip. See Shallow.

SCALL, a scab, scabbiness, eruption on the skin. (Scand.) In Levit. xiii. 30. 'Maist thou haue the scalle;' Chaucer, Lines to Adam Scrivener. Gen. used with ref. to the head. 'On his heued he has the scalle;' Cursor Mundi, 11819. - Icel. skalli, a bare head. The lit. sense is 'having a peeled head;' cf. Swed. skallig, bald, skala, to peel, so that the word is nearly related to Dan. and Swed. skal, a husk; see Scale. Der. scald (2), q. v.

SCALLOP, SCOLLOP, a bi-valvular shell-fish, with the edge of its shell in a waved form. (F., -Teut.) Holland's Pliny, b. ix. c. 33, treats 'Of Scallops.' M. E. skalop (with one l), Prompt. Parv., p. 442. - O. F. escalope, a shell; a word used by Rutebief; see quotation in Littré, under escalope, a term in cookery.

β. Of Teut. origin; cf. O. Du. schelpe (Du. schelp), a shell; Hexham. Hexham has also; 'S. Jacobs schelpe, S. James his shell;' and the shell worn by pilgrims who had been to St. James's shrine was of the kind which we call 'a scallop-shell;' Chambers, Book of Days, ii. 121. Thus Palsgrave has: 'scalloppe-shell, coquille de saint Jacques.' Cf. G. schelfe, a husk. γ. The forms schel-pe, schel-fe are extensions from the word which appears in E. as scale or shell; see Scale (1), Shell. Der. scallop, verb, to cut an edge into waves or scallop-like curves. And see Scalp.

SCALP, the skin of the head on which the hair grows. (O. Low G.) 'Her scalpe, taken out of the charnel-house;' Sir T. More, p. 57a. M. E. scalp. 'And his wiknes in his scalp doune falle;' Early Eng. Psalter, ed. Stevenson, vii. 17; where scalp means the top of the head, Lat. vertex. Evidently an O. Low G. word, due to the very form whence we also have O. Du. schelpe, a shell, and O. F. escalope, a shell; see Scallop.

β. Thus scalp and scallop are doublets; the inserted o is a F. peculiarity, due to the difficulty which the French would find in pronouncing the word; just as they prefixed e, on account of their difficulty in sounding initial sc. We may further compare O. Swed. skalp, a sheath, Icel. skálpr, a sheath. γ. The orig. sense is shell or scull (head-shell); and the word is a mere extension of that which appears in E. as scale; see Scale (1). Florio has O. Ital. scalpo della testa, 'the scalp of ones head;' but this is merely borrowed from Teutonic. Der. scalp, verb; which may have been confused with Lat. scalpere (see Scalpel).

SCALPEL, a small surgeon's knife for dissecting. (L.) Phillips, ed. 1706, has scalper or scalping-iron; Todd's Johnson has scalpel. Scalpel is from Lat. scalpellum, a scalpel; dimin. of scalprum or scalper, a knife. - Lat. scalpere, to cut, carve, scratch, engrave; (whence E. scalping-iron). - ✓ SKARP, to cut (Fick, iii. 811); whence also E. Sharp, q. v.

SCAMBLE; see Scamper.

SCAMMONY, a cathartic gum-resin. (F., -L., -Gk.) Spelt scamony in Arnold's Chron. (1502), ed. 1811, p. 164, l. 16. - O. F. scammonie, scammonée, 'scammony, purging bind-weed;' Cot. - Lat. scammonia, scammonaea. - Gk. σκαμμόνια, or rather σκαμμόνια, scammony, a kind of bind-weed. It grows in Mysia, Colophon, and Priene, in Asia Minor; Pliny, b. xxvi. c. 8.

SCAMP; see Scamper.

SCAMPER, to run with speed, flee away. (F., -Ital., -L.) 'We were forc'd to . . . scamper away as well as we could;' Dampier's Voyages, an. 1685 (R.) The suffix -er is, as usual, frequentative, so that the orig. form is scamp; but this is only found as a sb. in the sense of 'worthless fellow,' or 'cheat,' though the orig. meaning is merely 'fugitive' or 'vagabond,' one given to frequent shifts or decampings. — O. F. escamper, or rather s'escamper, 'to scape, flee'; Cot. — Ital. scampare, 'to escape, to shift away'; Florio. — Lat. ex, out; and campus, a field, esp. a field of battle. A parallel formation to decamp, q. v. See Ex- and Camp. Der. scamper, sb. A similar form is scamble, to struggle, K. John, iv. 3. 146, put for scamp-le, a parallel frequentative form from the same base. Cf. Du. schampelen, to stumble, trip (Hexham), from schampen, to escape (id.), a word of Romance origin. See Shamble.

SCAN, to count the measures in a poem, to scrutinise. (F., — L.; or L.) In Shak. Oth. iii. 3. 245; Skelton, Bowge of Court, 245. In common use in the pp., which was frequently spelt scand, as in Spenser, F. Q. vii. 6. 8, where it is used in the sense of 'climbed.' The verb should rather have been scand, but the pp. was formed as scand (for scanded), and then the final d was taken to be the pp. termination, and was accordingly dropped. — O. F. escander, to climb (Roquefort); whence the use of the verb as in Spenser. [Or, in the grammatical sense particularly, derived directly from Latin.] — Lat. scandere, to climb; also, to scan a verse. — SKAND, SKAD, to spring upwards; Skt. skand, to spring, ascend. Der. scans-ion, formed (by analogy) from Lat. scansio, a scanning, from the pp. scansus. Also scans-or-i-al, formed for climbing, from scansorius, belonging to climbing. From the same root, a-scend, a-scent, de-scend, de-scent, con-de-scend, tran-scend; perhaps scale (3), e-sca-lade.

SCANDAL, opprobrious censure, disgrace, offence. (F., — L.; — Gk.) M. E. scandal; spelt scandle, Ancren Riwle, p. 12, l. 12. — F. scandale, 'a scandal, offence'; Cot. We also find O. F. escandle (Burguy); whence M. E. scandle. — Lat. scandalum. — Gk. σκανδαλον, a snare; also scandal, offence, stumbling-block. The orig. sense seems to be that of σκανδαλον also, viz. the spring of a trap, the stick on a trap on which the bait was placed, which sprang up and shut the trap. Prob. from SKAND, to spring up; see Scan. Der. scandal-ise, from F. scandaliser, formerly scandalizer, 'to scandalize,' Cot. Also scandal-ous, from F. scandaleux, 'scandalous, offensive,' Cot.; scandal-ous-ly, -ness. Doublet, slander.

SCANSION, SCANSORIAL; see Scan.

SCANT, insufficient, sparing, very little. (Scand.) M. E. scant, Prompt. Parv. Chaucer speaks of 'the inordinate scantnesse' of clothing; Pers. Tale, De Superbia (Six-text, l. 414). — Icel. skamt, neut. of skammr, short, brief; whence skamta, to dole out, apportion meals (and so, to scant or stint). Cf. also Icel. skamtr, sb., a dole, share, portion (hence, short or scant measure). In Norwegian, the mt changes to nt, so that we find skantat, pp. measured or doled out, skanta, to measure narrowly, reckon closely; skant, a portion, dole, piece measured off (Aasen). The m is preserved in the phrase 'to scamp work,' i. e. to do it insufficiently, and in the prov. E. skimping, scanty (Halliwell).

β. Fick (iii. 332) cites a cognate O. H. G. scam, short. Der. scant, adv., Romeo, i. 2. 104; scant, verb, Merch. Ven. ii. 1. 17; scant-ly, Antony, iii. 4. 6; scant-y, scant-i-ly, scant-i-ness.

SCANTLING, a piece of timber cut of a small size, sample, pattern. (F., — Tent; with L. prefix.) The word has doubtless been confused with scant and scanty; but the old sense is 'pattern,' or 'sample,' or a small piece; with reference to the old word cantle. As used in Shak. (Troil. i. 3. 341) and in Cotgrave, it is certainly a derivative of O. F. eschanteler, and answers to O. F. eschantillon, 'a small cantle or corner-piece, also a scantling, sample, pattern, proof of any sort of merchandise'; Cot. — O. F. *eschanteler, older form of eschanteler, 'to break into cantles,' to cut up into small pieces; Cotgrave, Burguy. — O. F. es-, prefix, from Lat. ex, out; and O. F. cantel (Burguy), a cantle, corner, piece, later chantel, chanteau, 'a corner-piece, or piece broken off from the corner'; Cot. Hence E. cantle, scantle, 1 Hen. IV, iii. 1. 100. β. F. cantel is a dimin. of a form *cant; cf. G. kanle, a corner; see Cant (2). ¶ Cf. M. E. scantilon, a measure, Cursor Mundi, 2231.

SCAPEGOAT, a goat allowed to escape into the wilderness. (F., — L.; and E.) Levit. xvi. 8. From scape and goat; scape being a mutilated form of escape, in common use; see Temp. ii. 2. 117, &c. See Escape and Goat. So also scape-grace, one who has escaped grace or is out of favour, a graceless fellow.

SCAPULAR, belonging to the shoulder-blades. (L.) In Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. [He also gives it as a sb., equivalent to the word generally spelt scapulary; see below.] — Low Lat. scapularis, adj. formed from Lat. pl. scapulae, the shoulder-blades, from a sing. scapula, not in use. β. Prob. allied to Lat. scapus, a shaft, stem, shank, stalk; and to Sceptre. Der. scapular-y, spelt scapularis in Minshew, a kind of scarf worn by friars and others, so called from passing over the shoulders; M. E. scaplorye, scapulary, Prompt. Parv., chapolory, P. Plowman's Crede, l. 550; from F. scapulaire, Low Lat. scapulare.

SCAR (1), the mark of a wound, blemish. (F., — L., — Gk.) 'Scarre of a wounde, cousture'; Palsgrave. Spelt skarre, Gascoigne, Frutes of Warre, st. 40, and st. 90; M. E. scar, Wyclif, Lev. xxii. 22. — O. F. escare, 'a skar or scab'; Cot. Cf. Span. and Ital. escara, scar, scurf, crust. — Lat. eschara, a scar, esp. one produced by a burn. — Gk. ἐσχάρα, a hearth, fire-place, grate for a fire, brazier, scar of a burn. Root uncertain. Der. scar, verb, Rich. III, v. 5. 23.

SCAR (2), SCAUB, a rock. (Scand.) M. E. scarre, Wyclif, 1 Kings, xiv. 5; skerre (Halliwell); Lowland Sc. scar, scaur (Jamieson); Orkney skerry, a rock in the sea (id.) = Icel. sker, a skerry, isolated rock in the sea; Dan. skier, Swed. skär. Cf. Icel. skor, a rift in a rock. So called because 'cut off' from the main land; allied to E. Share, q. v. Doublet, share; and cf. score.

SCARAMOUCHE, a buffoon. (F., — Ital., — Teut.) 'Scaramouch and Harlequin at Paris'; Dryden, Kind Keeper, A. i. sc. 1. 'Th' Italian merry-andrews took their place . . . Stout Scaramoucha with rush lance rode in'; Dryden, Epilogue to Silent Woman, spoken by Mr. Hart, ll. 11–15. 'Scaramouche, a famous Italian zani, or mountebank, who acted here in England 1673'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Blount, writing at the time, is certainly right. The name was taken from a famous Italian buffoon, mentioned again in the Spectator, no. 283. He died at Paris in 1694; Chambers, Book of Days, ii. 671. His name was (rightly) Scaramuccia, altered by Dryden to Scaramoucha, and in French to Scaramouche (Littre). — F. scaramouche. — Ital. Scaramuccia, proper name; lit. 'a skirmish,' a word derived from Teutonic; see Skirmish.

SCARCE, rare, not plentiful. (F., — L.) M. E. scars, Rob. of Glouc. p. 334, l. 9. Chaucer has the adv. scarsly, C. T. 585. — O. F. escars (Burguy), later eschars, 'scarce, needy, scanty, saving, niggard'; Cot. Cf. Ital. scarso, scarce; mod. F. échars (Littre).

β. Derived by Diez from Low Lat. scarpus, shorter form of escarpus, used A. D. 805 as a substitute for Lat. excerptus, pp. of excerpere, (prob. also excarpere in Low Latin), to pick out, select, extract. The lit. sense is selected, extracted, or picked out, hence 'select,' and so scarce; and Diez remarks that participles with -sus for -tus are common in Low Latin. — Lat. ex, out; and carpere, to pluck, allied to E. harvest. See Excerpt; also Ex- and Harvest. Der. scarce-ly, M. E. scarseliche, K. Alisaunder, 3552; scarce-ness, Deut. viii. 9, M. E. scarsnesse, Gower, C. A. ii. 284; scarce-ity, M. E. scarseté, K. Alisaunder, 5495, from O. F. escarsete (escharsete in Burguy). [†]

SCARE, to frighten away. (Scand.) M. E. skerren, skeren, Prompt. Parv. p. 457; Destruction of Troy, 13404. Cf. 'the skerre hors' = the scared horse, Ancren Riwle, p. 242, note d. The M. E. verb appears to be formed from the adj. skerre, scared, timid. — Icel. skjarr, shy, timid; skjarrt hross, a shy horse, just like M. E. skerre hors, and Sc. scar, skair, timorous (Jamieson). Cf. Icel. skirra, to bar, prevent; reflexive, skirrask, to shun, shrink from; skirrast við, to shrink from. Allied to Du. scheren, to withdraw, go away; G. sich scheren, to withdraw, depart, schere dich weg, get you gone, like E. sheer off! β. The Du. and G. scheren also means 'to shear'; the orig. sense of skjarr seems to have been 'separate,' keeping to one's self. And I think we may connect it with Share and Shear; and see Sheer (2). Der. scarre-crow, something to scare crows away, Meas. for Meas. ii. 1.

SCARF (1), a light piece of dress worn on the shoulders or about the neck. (E.) Spenser has scarfe, F. Q. v. 2. 3. Though it does not appear in M. E., it is an E. word, and the orig. sense is simply a 'shred' or 'scrap,' or piece of stuff. — A. S. scarfe, a fragment, piece, in a gloss (Bosworth); hence the verb scarfian, to shred or scrape; A. S. Leechdoms, i. 70, l. 14. + Du. scherf, a shred. + G. scherbe, a shard, pot-sherd; cf. scharben, to cut small.

β. All from a base SCARF, answering to Aryan SKARF, an extension of SKAR, to cut, as seen in Lat. scalpere, to cut. γ. The particular sense is clearly borrowed from that of O. F. escharpe, 'a scarf, baudrick'; Cot. This is really the same word; it also meant a scrip for a pilgrim, and is derived from O. Du. scharpe, schaerpe, scerpe, a scrip, pilgrim's wallet (Oudemans); Low G. schrap, a scrip (Bremen Wörterbuch). Cf. A. S. scorpe, a robe, Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, iv. 4. 3. G. scherbe, a shred; and see Scrip, Scrap. ¶ The G. schärpe, a scarf, sash, Swed. skärp, Dan. skjerf, skjerf, are not true Teut. words, but borrowed from French. Der. scarf, verb, Hamlet, v. 2. 13; scarf-skin, the epidermis or outer skin (Phillips). Doublets, scrip, scrap. [†]

SCARF (2), to join pieces of timber together. (Scand.) 'In the joining of the stem, where it was scarfed'; Anson's Voyage, b. ii. c. 7 (R.) And in Phillips, ed. 1706. The word is Swedish. — Swed. skarfuva, to join together, piece out. — Swed. skarv, a scarf, seam, joint; cf. skarfyxa, a chip-axe. An extended form of Dan. skar, appearing in skar-öxe, an adze, whence skarre, to scarf, join; allied to Icel. skör, a rim, edge, scarf, joint in a ship's planking, and Icel. skara, to jut out, to clinch the planks of a boat so that each plank overlaps the plank below it.

β. From Icel. skera (pt. t. skar), to shear, cut, shape; from the cutting of the edge. So also Bavarian scharben, to cut a notch in timber, Schmeller, ii. 463; G. scharben, to cut small, from the same root: see Shear.

SCARIFY, to cut the skin slightly. (F., -L., -Gk.) 'Of Scary, fyn, called boxyng or cuppyng; Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 7. -F. scarifier, 'to scarifie;' Cot. -Lat. scarificare, to scarify, scratch open; longer form of scarifare, which also occurs (White). β. Probably not merely cognate with, but absolutely borrowed from Gk. σκαρῖσθαι, I scratch or scrape up. -Gk. σκαρῖφος, a style for drawing outlines (a sharp-pointed instrument). From the base SKARBH, extended from ✓SKAR, to cut; see Shear. Der. scarificat-ion, from F. scarification (Cot.)

SCARLET, a bright-red colour. (F., -Pers.) M. E. scarlat, O. Eng. Miscellany, p. 92, l. 69; skarlet, p. 168, l. 10; scarlet, P. Plowman, B. ii. 15. -O. F. escarlante, 'scarlet;' Cot. Mod. F. écarlate; Span. escarlata; Ital. scarlatto. -Pers. sagallāt, sigallāt, or suqlāt, scarlet cloth. Cf. Pers. sagallātūn, sagallātūn, scarlet cloth, sagallāt, cloth; Rich. Dict. p. 837. β. The Pers. sagallātūn is clearly the origin of M. E. ciclatoun, Chaucer, C. T. Group B, l. 1924, on which see my note, and Col. Yule's note to his edition of Marco Polo, i. 249. He remarks that suqlāt is applied, in the Punjab trade returns, to broad-cloth; it was used for banners, ladies' robes, quilts, leggings, housings, and pavilions. We find also Arab. sagallāt, a warm woollen cloth; Rich. Dict. p. 836; also Arab. sigllāt, a fine painted or figured cloth, a canopy over a litter. It seems to have been the name of a stuff, which was frequently of a scarlet colour; and hence to have become the name of the colour. So also Telugu sakalāti, sakalātu, woollen or broad-cloth; Wilson, Gloss. of Indian Terms, p. 455. This can hardly be from English, as Wilson suggests, but corresponds to the Pers. and Ital. forms. ¶ The Turkish iskerlat, scarlet, is merely a loan-word from Italian; Zenker, p. 49. Der. scarlet-runner, a climbing plant with scarlet flowers; scarlat-ina, a disease named from the scarlet rash which accompanies it.

SCARP, part of a fortification. (F., -Ital., -Teut.) Formerly written scarf, as in Cotgrave, but this is an E. adaptation, by confusion with scarf, which is allied to O. F. escharpe; see Scarf. 'Scarp, the inward slope of the moat or ditch of a place;' Phillips, ed. 1706. -F. escharpe, 'a scarf, or little wall without the main rampire of a fort;' Cot. -Ital. scarpa, 'a counter-scarpe or curtain of a wall;' Florio. β. So called because cut sharp or steep; cf. O. F. escarper, 'to cut smooth and steep;' Cot. -O. H. G. scharf, scharpf, sharp; Low G. scharp, sharp; cognate with E. Sharp, q. v. Der. counter-scarp, escarpment.

SCATHE, to harm, injure. (E.) In Romeo, i. 5. 86. M. E. scapen, Prompt. Parv. [The sb. scathe, harm, is in Chaucer, C. T. 448; Havelok, 2006.] -A. S. sceaðan, strong verb, pp. scōd, pp. sceaðen, to harm, injure; Grein, ii. 402. + Icel. skada. + Swed. skada. + Dan. skade. + G. and Goth. gaskathjan, st. vb., pt. t. gaskoth, pp. gaskathans. β. All from Teut. base SKATH, to harm; Fick, iii. 330; probably formed as a denominative verb from an Aryan pp. SKATA, wounded; so that the sense is 'to make to be wounded,' to inflict wounds upon. γ. This Aryan pp. appears in Skt. kshata, wounded, hurt, pp. of kshan, to wound, Benfey, pp. 233. Cf. Skt. kshati, hurting, kshataya, caused by wounding. Thus the root is ✓SKA, to cut; Fick, i. 802. Der. scathe, harm, injury, also spelt scath, Rich. III. i. 3. 317, from A. S. sceaða (Grein); scath-fil, Tw. Nt. v. 59, Chaucer, C. T. 4519; scathe-less, or scath-less, M. E. scatheless, Rom. of the Rose, 1550.

SCATTER, to disperse, sprinkle. (E.) M. E. scatteren (an 10e), Chaucer, C. T. 1632. -A. S. scateran, A. S. Chron. an. 1137. Though rather a late word, it is certainly E., and the suffix -er is frequentative; the base is SKAT, answering to the Gk. base SKAD, appearing in σκαδάννυμι, I sprinkle, scatter, σκάδασις, a scattering, Lat. scandula, a shingle for a roof, Skt. shhad, to cut. β. This base is lengthened from ✓SKA, to cut, sever, whence also E. Shed, q. v. Der. scatter-ling, a vagrant, one of a scattered race, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 10. 63. Doublet, shatter, q. v.

SCAVENGER, one who cleans the streets. (E.; with F. suffix.) Spelt scavengere, Bp. Hall, Satires, b. iv. sat. 7. l. 48. The word appears in the Act of 14 Ch. II, cap. 2 (Blount). As in the case of messenger (for messager) and passenger (for passager), the n before g is intrusive, and scavenger stands for scavager. β. The scavager was an officer who had formerly very different duties; see Liber Albus, ed. Riley, p. 34, where is mention of 'the scavagers, ale-conners, bedel, and other officials.' Riley says: 'scavagers, officers whose duty it was originally to take custom upon the seavage, i.e. inspection of the opening out, of imported goods. At a later date, part of their duty was to see that the streets were kept clean; and hence the modern word scavenger, whose office corresponds with that of the rakyer (raker) of former times.' As a fact, the old word for scavenger is always rakyer; see P. Plowman, v. 322, and note. That the scavagers had to see to the cleansing of the streets, is shewn in the Liber Albus, p. 272. Wedgwood cites the orig. French, which has the spelling scavageour. γ. Scavage is a barbarous Law-French corruption of E. shew-age, formed by adding the F. suffix -age to the E. verb to shew; see Blount's Nomolexicon, where the various spellings seavage, schevage, schevage, and scheaving (shewing) are cited; he says: 'In a charter of Hen. II it is written seewinga and (in Mon. Ang. 2 par. fol. 890 b.) seewaving, and elsewhere I find it in Latin tributum ostensorium.' Hence the derivation is certainly from A. S. seodwian, to shew; see Show. See further in Riley, p. 196, 'Of seavage;' again, 'Seavage is the shewe,' &c., Arnold's Chron. (1502), ed. 1811, p. 99, l. 1; and see Seawing in the Glossary to Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, ed. Thorpe. ¶ Blount is quite wrong in deriving scavenger from Du. schaven, to shave; nor is there the slightest evidence for connecting it with the A. S. scafan, to shave, scrape.

SCENE, stage of a theatre, view, spectacle, place of action. (L., -Gk.) Common in the dramatists. 'A scene, or theater;' Minshew. The old plays, as, e.g. that of Roister Doister, have the acts and scenes marked in Latin, by Actus and Scena or Stena; and we certainly Anglicised the Latin word, instead of borrowing the F. one, which Cotgrave actually omits. -Lat. scena. -Gk. σκηνη, a sheltered place, tent, stage, scene. -✓SKA, to cover; cf. Skt. chhāya (for shaya), shadowing, shade. See Shade. Der. scen-ic, Gk. σκηναῖος; scen-er-y, written scenary by Dryden (R.), from Lat. scenarius, belonging to a play.

SCENT, to discern by the smell. (F., -L.) The spelling is false; it ought to be sent, as when first introduced. A similar false spelling occurs in scythe; so also we find scite for site, scituation for situation, in the 17th century. 'To sent, to smell;' Minshew, ed. 1627. 'I sent the mornings ayre;' Hamlet, i. 5. 58 (ed. 1623). -F. sentir, 'to feel, also to sent, smell;' Cot. -Lat. sentire, to feel, perceive. β. The base appears to be SAN-T; cf. G. sinnen, to meditate, sinn, sense, feeling. See Sense. Der. scent, sb., spelt sent, i. e. discernment, Spenser, F. Q. i. 1. 43, last line.

SCEPTIC, doubting, hesitating; often as sb. (F., -L., -Gk.) 'The Philosophers, called Scepticks;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, s. v. Sceptical. -F. sceptique, 'one that is ever seeking, and never finds, the fortune, or humour of a Pyrrhonian philosopher;' Cot. -Lat. scepticus. -Gk. σκηπτικός, thoughtful, inquiring; σκηπτικός, pl., the Sceptics, followers of Pyrrho (died abt. B.C. 285). -Gk. root SKEP, as in σκέπτομαι, I consider; Aryan ✓SPAK, to spy; see Spy. Der. sceptic-al (Blount); sceptic-ism.

SCEPTRE, a staff, as a mark of royal authority. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. sceptre, Chaucer, C. T. 14379. -F. sceptre, 'a royall scepter;' Cot. -Lat. sceptrum. -Gk. σκήπτρον, a staff to lean on; also, a sceptre. -Gk. σκήπτειν, to prop; also, to lean on. Cf. σκηπτός, a gust or squall of wind; σκήπτειν is also used in the sense to hurl, throw, shoot, dart. -✓SKAP, to throw; cf. Skt. kshap, to throw. Der. sceptre-ed, Rich. II, ii. 1. 40.

SCHEDULE, an inventory, list. (F., -L.; or F., -L., -Gk.) In Shak. L. L. L. i. 1. 18; spelt sedule in the first folio. -O. F. schedule, or cedule, 'a schedule, scroll, note, bill;' Cot. -Lat. schedula, a small leaf of paper; dimin. of scheda, also scida (Cicero, Att. i. 20 fin.), a strip of papyrus-bark. β. The Gk. σχῆδον, a tablet, leaf, may have been borrowed from Lat. scheda (or sceda ?), see Liddell; but we find also Gk. σχῆδον, a cleft piece of wood, a splint, which looks like the original of Lat. scida. The difficulty is to know whether the Lat. word is original (from scid-, base of scindere), or borrowed (from Gk. σχίζειν, to cleave). Either way, it is from ✓SKID, to cleave; cf. Skt. chhid, to cut. [†]

SCHEME, a plan, purpose, plot. (L., -Gk.) 'Schema (schema), the outward fashion or habit of anything, the adorning a speech with rhetorical figures;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Borrowed directly, as a term in rhetoric, from Lat. schema. -Gk. σχῆμα, form, appearance; also, a term in rhetoric. -Gk. σχῆμα, base of σχῆμα-ω, future of ἔχειν, to hold, have. The base is σῆκ-, whence (by transposition) σχε-. -✓SAGH, to hold; whence also Skt. sah, to bear, endure. Der. scheme, vb.; schem-er, schem-ing. And see sail.

SCHISM, a division, due to opinion. (F., -L., -Gk.) Tyndall has 'schismes that were among our clergy;' Works, p. 176, col. 1. M. E. scisme, Gower, C. A. i. 15. -F. schisme, scisme, 'a scisme, a division in, or from, the church;' Cot. -Lat. schisma. -Gk. σχίσμα, a rent, split, schism. -Gk. σχίζω (fut. σχίσσω, base σχιδ-), to cleave. -✓SKID, to cleave, cut; Skt. chhid, Lat. scindere, to cut. Der. schism-at-ic, from F. scismatique, 'scismatically,' Cot., Lat. schismaticus, Gk. σχισματικός, from σχίσμα, stem of σχίσμα; hence schism-at-ic-al, -ly. And see schist, squill, schedule, ab-scind, re-scind.

SCHIST, rock easily cleft, slate-rock. (Gk.) In geology. -Gk. σχιστός, easily cleft. -Gk. σχίζειν, to cleave. See Schism.

SCHOOL, a place for instruction. (L., -Gk.) M. E. scole, Chaucer, C. T. 125; Layamon, 9897. A. S. scōlu, a school; 'se mon, þe on minre scōle wære áféded and gelæred' = the man, who wast fostered and taught in my school; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. 1 (cap. iii. § 1). The lengthening of the o seems due to stress. -

Lat. schola, a school. — Gk. σχολή, rest, leisure, spare time, employment of leisure, disputation, philosophy, a place where lectures are given, a school. The orig. sense is a resting or pausing; from the base σχ- = σχε- or σχη-, seen in σχίσσω, fut. of έχειν, to have, hold, restrain, check, stop. — ✓ SAGH, to hold; see Scheme. Der. school, verb, As You Like It, i. 1. 173; schol-ar, M. E. scolere, Chaucer, C. T. 4000. A. S. scólere, Canons under King Edgar, § 10, in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, ii. 246, afterwards altered to scholar to agree with Lat. adj. scholaris; scholar-ly, scholar-ship; schol-ast-ic, from Lat. scholasticus = Gk. σχολαστικός; schol-i-um, a Latinised form of Gk. σχόλιον, an interpretation, comment, from σχολή in the sense of 'discussion'; scholi-ast, from Gk. σχολιαστής, a commentator; scholi-ast-ic. Also school-man, school-master, school-mistress. Doublet, shool (1), q. v.

SCHOONER, SCONNER, a two-masted vessel. (E.) The spelling schooner is a false one; it should be scooner. The mistake is due to a supposed derivation from the Du. schooner, a schooner, but, on the contrary, the Du. word (like G. schooner) is borrowed from E. There is no mention of Du. schooner in Sewel's Du. Dict., ed. 1754. The E. schooner occurs in Ash's Dict., ed. 1775; and earlier in the following: 'Went to see Captain Robinson's lady . . . This gentleman was the first contriver of schooners, and built the first of that sort about 8 years since;' extract from a letter written in 1721, in Babson's Hist. of Gloucester, Massachusetts; cited in Webster's Dict., whence all the information here given is copied. 'The first schooner . . . is said to have been built in Gloucester, Mass., about the year 1713, by a Captain Andrew Robinson, and to have received its name from the following trivial circumstance: When the vessel went off the stocks into the water, a bystander cried out, "O how she scoons!" [i. e. glides, skims along]. Robinson instantly replied, "A scooner let her be;" and from that time, vessels thus masted and rigged have gone by this name. The word scoon is popularly used in some parts of New England to denote the act of making stones skip along the surface of water. . . . According to the New England records, the word appears to have been originally written scooner;' Webster. The New England scoon was imported from Clydesdale, Scotland; being the same as Lowland Sc. scōm, 'to make flat stones skip along the surface of water; also, to skip in the above manner, applied to flat bodies; Clydesdale'; Jamieson. So also scun, to throw a stone; North of England; E. D. S. Glos. B. 1 (A. D. 1781). — A. S. scūnian, to shun, flee away; hence, to skip or speed along. See Shun. Allied words are Norweg. skunna, Icel. skunda, skynda, Dan. skynde, Swed. skynda sig, Swed. dial. skynna sig, to hasten, hurry, speed. Apparently from a base SKU, to speed, whence also E. scud, E. shoo-t, shu-nt. — ✓ As a rule, derivations which require a story to be told turn out to be false; in the present case, there seems to be no doubt that the story is true.

SCIATIC, pertaining to the hip-joint. (F., — L., — Gk.) 'Sciatic vein;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. [The sb. sciatica is earlier, in Minshew, ed. 1627.] — F. sciatique, 'of the sciatica; veine sciatique, the sciatica vein, seated above the outward ankle;' Cot. — Low Lat. sciaticus, corruption of Lat. ischadicus, subject to gout in the hip (White). — Gk. ισχιαδικός, subject to pains in the loins. — Gk. ισχιαδ-, stem of ισχύν, pain in the loins. — Gk. ισχίον, the socket in which the thigh-bone turns. Der. sciatica, fem. of Lat. sciaticus.

SCIENCE, knowledge. (F., — L.) M. E. science, Chaucer, C. T. 11434; P. Plowman, B. x. 214. — F. science, 'science;' Cot. — Lat. scientia, science, knowledge. — Lat. scient-, stem of pres. part. of scire, to know, orig. to discern. From a base SKI, to discern, whence also E. skill; see Skill. Der. scienti-fic, from F. scientifique, 'scientifically,' Cot., from Lat. scientificus, made by science, where the suffix -ficus is from facere, to make; scientific-al, -ly. Also a-sci-it-i-ous, sci-o-l-ist.

SCIMITAR, CIMETER, a curved sword. (F. or Ital., — Pers.?) Spelt scimitar, used of a pointed sword; Titus Andron. iv. 2. 91. — F. cimeterre, 'a scymitar, or smyter, a kind of short and crooked sword, much in use among the Turks;' Cot. This accounts for the spelling cimeter. Also Ital. scimitarra, scimitara, 'a turkish or persian crooked sword, a simitar;' Florio. This accounts for the spelling scimitar. β. It was fully believed to be of Eastern origin. If so, it can hardly be other than a corruption of Pers. shimshir, shamshir, 'a cimeter, a sabre, a sword, a blade;' Rich. Dict. p. 909. Lit. 'lion's claw.' — Pers. sham, a nail; and shér, a lion; id. pp. 907, 921; Vullers, ii. 464. γ. The Span. is cimitarra, explained by Larramendi from Basque cimea, a fine point, and tarra, belonging to; prob. a mere invention, like his Basque etymology of cigar.

SCINTILLATION, a throwing out of sparks. (F., — L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. [The verb scintillate is much later.] — F. scintillation, 'a sparkling;' Cot. — Lat. scintillationem, acc. of scintillatio. — Lat. scintillatus, pp. of scintillare, to throw out sparks. — Lat. scintilla, a spark; a dimin. form, as if from *scinta. Cf. Gk. σπινθήρ, a spark. Perhaps allied to A. S. scin-an, to shine; see Shine.

SCIOLIST, one whose knowledge is superficial. (L.) 'Though they be but smatterers and meer sciolists;' Howell, Famil. Letters, b. iii. let. 8 (about A. D. 1646). Formed with suffix -ist (Lat. -ista, Gk. -ιστής) from Lat. sciolus, a smatterer. Here the suffix (in scio-lus) has a dimin. force, so that the sense is 'knowing little.' — Lat. scire, to know; see Science.

SCION, a cutting or twig for grafting; a young shoot, young member of a family. (F., — L.) Spelt scion, Minshew, ed. 1627. Also spelt sion, syon, cion, 'Syon, a yong sette,' i. e. slip or graft; Palsgrave. 'Cynn of a tre, Surculus, vitulamen;' Prompt. Parv. Spelt sioun, Poems and Lives of Saints, ed. Furnivall, xxxv. 74 (Stratmann). — F. scion, 'a scion, a shoot, sprig, or twig;' Cot. Spelt cion in the 13th cent. (Littre). Diez connects it with F. scier (spelt sier in Cot.), to cut, to saw, which is from Lat. secare, to cut. Thus sci-on means 'a cutting,' just as a slip or graft is called in E. a cutting, and in G. schnittling, from schnitt, a cut. See Section. [†]

SCIRRHUS, pertaining to a hard swelling. (L., — Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Englished as if from a Lat. *scirrhosus, adj. formed from scirrhus, a late Lat. medical term given in Blount and Phillips, used in place of Lat. scirrhomia, a hard swelling. — Gk. σκιρπος, better σκιρος, a hardened swelling, a 'scirrhus;' also called σκιρρωμα, or σκιρρωμα; from the adj. σκιρός, hard.

SCISSORS, a cutting instrument with two blades fastened at the middle. (F., — L.) Spelt cissers in Levins. 'Cysoure, forpex;' Prompt. Parv. M. E. sisoures (riming to houres), Chaucer, House of Fame, ii. 182. — O. F. cisoires, shears, scissors (Roquefort). The more usual F. form is ciseaux, 'sizzars or little sheers;' Cot. The latter is the pl. of ciseau, older form cisel, a chisel, cutting instrument. The true base of these words is probably secare, to cut, as shewn s. v. Chisel. β. But it certainly would seem that the derivative of secare was confused with forms due to cædere and scindere. And it is quite clear that the mod. E. spelling of scissors is due to a supposed etymology (historically false) from Lat. scissor, a cutter, which is from scissus, pp. of scindere, to cleave. It is remarkable, however, that the Lat. scissor meant 'a person who cuts,' a carver, a kind of gladiator (White); whilst the Low Lat. scissor meant a carver, a butcher, and scisor meant a coin-engraver, a tailor. γ. There is absolutely not the slightest evidence for the use of scissor for a cutting instrument, and still less for the use of a plural scissores, which could only mean a couple of carvers, or butchers, or tailors. But popular etymology has triumphed, and the spelling scissors is the result. ¶ With Lat. scindere we may connect ab-scind, ab-scissa, re-scind; and see schism. With Lat. cædere we may connect circum-cise, con-cise, de-cide, de-cis-ion, ex-cision, fratri-cide, homi-cide, in-cise, infanti-cide, matri-cide, parri-cide, pre-cise, regi-cide, sui-cide; cæs-ura. For the derivatives of secare, see Section.

SCOFF, an expression of scorn, a taunt. (O. Low G.) M. E. scof, skof, Ayenbite of Inwytt, p. 128, l. 3 from bottom; 'nom a skof' = took it in scorn, K. Alisaunder, 6986. Not found in A. S.; except that A. S. scyfe is a gloss upon præcipitationis in Ps. li. 4 (Bosworth). — O. Fries. schof, a scoff, taunt (Richtofen). + Icel. skaup, later skop, mockery, ridicule. Cf. also O. Du. schobben, schoppen, to scoff, mock (Hexham); Icel. skępa, skopa, to scoff, mock, skopan, railing; and perhaps Dan. skuffe, to deceive. β. The orig. sense was probably 'a shove' or 'a rub'; cf. Low G. schubben, to rub, sik schubben, to rub oneself when one itches (Bremen Wörterbuch); M. H. G. schupfen, to push, from the root of E. shove. See Shove. Der. scoff, verb, Rich. II, iii. 2. 163; scoff-er, As You Like It, iii. 5. 62.

SCOLD, to chide, rail at. (O. Low G.) M. E. scolden, P. Plowman, B. ii. 81. Not in A. S. Formed from Du. schold, pt. t. of the strong verb scheldan, to scold. + G. schalt, pt. t. of the strong verb schelten, to scold. β. The orig. sense was prob. simply to make a loud noise; since we may consider these verbs as closely connected with Icel. skjalla (pt. t. skal, pp. skollinn), to clash, clatter, slam, make a noise; G. schallen, in comp. erschallen (pt. t. erscholl), to resound; Swed. skalla, to resound. — ✓ SKAL, to resound, clash; Fick, iii. 334. Cf. Lithuan. skaliti, to bark, give tongue; said of a hound. Der. scold, sb., Tam. Shrew, i. 2. 188, and in Palsgrave; scold-er. And see scald (3).

SCOLLOP, the same as Scallop, q. v.

SCONCE (1), a small fort, bulwark. (Du., — F., — L.?) In Shak. Hen. V, iii. 6. 76; also applied to a helmet, Com. Errors, ii. 2. 37; and to the head itself, Com. Errors, i. 2. 79. — O. Du. schantse (Du. schans), 'a fortress, or a sconce;' Hexham. We find also Swed. skans, fort, sconce, steerage; Dan. skandse, fort, quarter-deck; G. schanze, a sconce, fort, redoubt, bulwark; but none of these words seem to be original, nor to have any Teut. root. β. They are probably all derived from O. F. esconser, 'to hide, conceal, cover,' also absconser, 'to hide, keep secret;' Cot. We also find O. F. escons (Burguy) and absconse (Cotgrave) used as past participles. — Lat. abscensus, used (as well as abscanditus) as pp. of abscondere, to hide; see Abseond. The Span. esconder, Ital. ascondere, to hide, are directly from the infin. abscondere; with the reflexive sense, we find Span. esconderse, to hide oneself; and the E. to ensconce oneself simply means to lie hid in a corner, or to get into a secure nook. γ. Diez derives the Ital. scanzia, a book-case, from Bavarian schanz = G. schanze, which is doubtless right; but the G. schanze may be none the less a borrowed word. It is singular that we also find G. schanze in the sense of 'chance;' and there can be no doubt as to its being borrowed from F. when used in that sense; for it is then from O. F. chaunce, chance. And see Sconce (2). Der. ensconce, coined by prefixing en-; see En-.

SCONCE (2), a candle-stick. (F., -L.) Palsgrave has: 'Scons, to sette a candell in, lanterne a mayn.' M. E. sconce. 'Sconce, Sconsa, vel absconsa, lanternula;' Prompt. Parv. p. 450. 'Hec absconsa, a sconcs;' Wright's Vocab. i. 231, col. i. This clearly shews that the word was used to mean a concealed or closely covered light; as also we find from Roquefort. - O. F. esconce, a dark lantern, Lat. absconsa; Roquefort. Put for absconce. - Lat. absconsus, pp. of abscondere; see Abseond. And see Sconce (1).

SCOOP, a hollow vessel for lading out water, a large ladle. (Scand.) M. E. scope. 'Scope, instrument, Vatile, Alveolus;' Prompt. Parv. The pl. scopes, and the verb scopen, to ladle out water, occur in Manning's Hist. of England, ed. Furnivall, 8164, 8168 (Stratmann). - Swed. skopa, a scoop; O. Swed. skopa, with sense of Lat. hausstrum (Ihre). + O. Du. schoepe, schuppe, a scoop, shovel; Hexham. + Dan. skuffe, a shovel. + G. schüppe, a shovel. β. Perhaps connected with Shovel, q. v.; though this is not quite clear. But cf. Gk. σκόφος, a cup, allied to σκόφος, a hollow vessel, from σκάπτειν, to dig. - ✓SKAP, to dig. See Shave. Der. scoop, vb., M. E. scopen, as above; coal-scoop.

SCOPE, view, space surveyed, space for action, intention. (Ital. -Gk.; or L., -Gk.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 4. 52. 'Wherein . . . we have given ouer large a scope;' Gascoigne's Works, ed. Hazlitt, i. 460. Florio has Ital. scopo, 'a marke or but to shoote at, a scope, purpose, intent.' We seem to have taken it from Ital., as it is not a F. word, and has a more limited sense in Gk. Otherwise, it is from a late Lat. scopus, of which I can find no good account. - Gk. σκοπός, a watcher, spy; also a mark to shoot at. - Gk. root ΣΚΕΠ-, as in σκέπτομαι, I consider, see, spy. - ✓SPAK, to spy; see Spy.

SCORBUTIC, pertaining to, or afflicted with scurvy. (Low L., -Low G.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, we find: 'Scorbute (scorbute), the disease called the scurvy; scorbutil, pertaining, or subject to that disease.' Formed with suffix -ic from Low Lat. scorbutus, which is merely a Latinised form of Low G. schorbock, scurvy, also spelt schärbock, scharbock, scorbut; see Bremen Wörterbuch, s. v. schürbock. Cf. O. Du. scheur-buyck, 'the scurvie in the gums,' Hexham; Du. scheurbock. Also G. scharbock, scurvy, tartar on the teeth. β. The etymology seems to have caused difficulty; but it is really obvious. The forms with k must be older than those with t, and the senses of Low G. schärbock and of O. Du. schour-buyck are identical. They can only mean 'rupture of the belly,' and must have been applied to denote rupture in the first instance, and afterwards to signify scurvy. That the two diseases are different, is no objection to the etymology; it merely proves that confusion between them at one time existed. γ. The Low G. schärbock is from scheren, to separate, part aside, tear, rupture, and bock, the belly; so also Du. scheur-boik, from scheuren, to tear, rend, crack, and boik, the belly. The verbs are allied to E. Shear. The Low G. boik, Du. boik, G. bauch, are the same as Icel. búkr, the trunk of the body, for which see Bulk (2). And see Scurvy. Der. scorbutilic.

SCORCH, to burn slightly, burn the surface of a thing. (F., -L.) M. E. scorchen, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, bk. ii. met. 6, l. 1477; Romans of Partenay, 3678. - O. F. escorcher, escorcer, 'to lay or pluck off the skin;' Cot. Cf. Span. escorchar, Ital. scorticare, to flay. β. These are probably due to Low Lat. excorticare, to take off the skin; Ducange. - Lat. ex, off; and cortice, stem of cortex, bark, rind, husk. The verb took up the sense of Lat. excoriare, to skin, from ex, and corium, skin; though it is not possible to derive scorch from excoriare, as Diez justly remarks. β. We might, however, refer scorch to ex and scortum, with the sense of 'skin' or 'hide,' instead of to ex and cortex. However, it makes no very great difference, for the senses of scortum and cortex are not far removed, both being from the same ✓SKAR, to separate, to shear, to which we may also refer the word corium. γ. Thus the orig. sense of scorch was to take off the scale or shell, hence, to take off the skin, to burn the surface of any thing; both scale and shell being from the same ✓SKAR. See Shear. [†]

SCORE, a notch or line cut; a reckoning; twenty. (E.) M. E. score; 'ten score tymes;' P. Plowman, B. x. 180. It is supposed that, in counting numbers by notches on a stick, every twentieth number was denoted by a longer and deeper cut or score. At Lowestoft, narrow passages cut in the side of the slope towards the sea are called scores. - A. S. scor, twenty; which occurs, according to Bosworth, in the A. S. version of the Rule of St. Bennet, near the end. - A. S. scor, stem of the pt. t. pl. and pp. of sceran, to shear, cut. See Shear. Cf. Icel. skor, skora, a score, notch, incision; Swed. skära, Dan. skaar, the same. Der. score, to cut, Spenser, F. Q. i. i. 2; also to count by scoring, Chaucer, C. T. 13344. [†]

SCORIA, dross, slag from burnt metal. (L., -Gk.) In Holland, tr. of Plinie, b. xxxiii. c. 4. - Lat. scoria. - Gk. σκωπία, filthy refuse, dross, scum. - Gk. σκῶπ, dung, ordure. + A. S. searn, dung. + Skt. gaktit, dung. + Lat. stercus. β. All from ✓SKAR, to separate; see Curtius, i. 205. See Scorn.

SCORN, disdain, contempt. (F., -O. H. G.) M. E. scorn (dat. scorne), O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 169, l. 1; schorn, scharn, Ancræn Riwle, p. 126, l. 24; skarn, Ormulum, 4402; scarn, scorn, Layamon, 17307. - O. F. escarn, scorn, derision; Burguy. We find O. F. pp. pl. escharnys, glossed by E. scornid, in Wright's Vocab. i. 144, l. 6. Cf. Ital. scherno, derision. - O. H. G. skern, mockery, scurrility. β. Some connect this word with Icel. skarn, dung, dirt; A. S. searn, the same; the throwing of dirt being the readiest way of expressing scorn; see Scoria. But Fick (iii. 338) connects it with Gk. σκαίπειν, to skip, dance. Der. scorn, verb, M. E. scornen, P. Plowman, B. ii. 81, skarnen, Ormulum, 7397, from O. F. escarnir, escharnir, which from O. H. G. skernón, to mock, due to the sb. skern; also scorn-ful, K. Lear, ii. 4. 168; scorn-ful-ly; scorn-er, P. Plowman, B. xix. 279.

SCORPION, a stinging insect, a sign of the zodiac. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. scorpion, K. Alisaunder, 5263. - F. scorpion, 'a scorpion;' Cot. - Lat. scorpionem, acc. of scorpio, another form of scorpius, a scorpion. - Gk. σκορπίος, a scorpion, a prickly sea-fish, a prickly plant; the lit. sense being 'sharp' or stinging. - ✓SKARP, to cut, pierce; see Sharp.

SCOTCH, to cut with narrow incisions. (Scand.) In Shak. Cor. iv. 5. 198; Macb. iii. 2. 13; cf. scotch, sb., a slight cut, Antony, iv. 7. 10. The notion is taken from the slight cut inflicted by a scutcher or riding-whip; Cotgrave explains F. verge by 'a rod, wand, switch, or scutcher to ride with.' This connects scotch with prov. E. scutch, to strike or beat slightly, to cleanse flax; Halliwell. The variation of the vowel appears in Norw. skoka, skoko, or skuku, a swingle for beating flax (Aasen), which is prob. further allied to Swed. skückta, skückta, to swingle. 'Skückta lin eller hampa, to swingle or scutch flax or hemp;' Widegren. β. Perhaps further allied to Du. schokken, to jolt, shake, and to E. Shock and Shake.

SCOT-FREE, free from payment. (E.) Scot means 'payment;' we frequently find scot and lot, as in Shak. i Hen. IV, v. 4. 115; Ben Jonson, Every Man, ed. Wheatley, iii. 7. 11; see a paper by D. P. Fry on scot and lot, Phil. Soc. Trans. 1867, p. 167. The phrase occurs in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 491, in the Laws of Will. I. § v; 'omnis Francigena, qui tempore Eadwardi propinqui nostri fuit in Anglia particeps consuetudinum Anglorum, quod ipsi dicunt an hote et an scote, persolvat secundum legem Anglorum.' Here an = on, in, by. See also Liber Albus, ed. Riley, pp. 114, 235. - A. S. scot, seot; as in ledht-gescot, ledht-seot, money paid to supply light, Bosworth; Róme-scott, money paid to Rome, A. S. Chron. an. 1127, spelt Róm-gescot, id. an. 1095. The lit. sense is 'contribution,' that which is 'shot' into the general fund. - A. S. scot, stem of pp. of scéotan, to shoot; see Shoot, Shot. + O. Fries. shot, a shot, also a payment or scot. + Du. schot. + Icel. skot, a shot, contribution, tax. + G. schoss, a shot, a scot. β. The Low G. forms originated O. F. escot, a shot, whence escotter, 'every one to pay his shot, or to contribute somewhat towards it,' Cot.; disner à escot, 'a dinner at an ordinary, or whereat every guest pays his part,' id.; so that scot = a tavern-score, is certainly the same word; cf. 'Simbolium, escot de tavernne,' Wright's Voc. i. 134. ¶ The phrase scot and lot, as a whole, presents some difficulty, and has been variously interpreted; the lit. sense is 'contribution and share;' I suppose that originally, scot meant a contribution towards some object to which others contributed equally, and that lot meant the privilege and liability thereby incurred; mod. E. subscription and membership. See Mr. Fry's paper, which is full of information. Doublet, shot.

SCOUNDREL, a rascal, worthless fellow. (E.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 3. 36; and in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Not common in old authors; used by Cotgrave to translate F. maraud. Formed, with agential suffix -el, from prov. E. and Scottish skunner or scunner, to loathe, shun; the d being excrescent, as usual after n. This word scunner was also used as a sb., with much the same sense as scoundrel. β. Thus Brockett gives: 'Scunner, to nauseate, feel disgust, to loathe, to shy, as a horse in harness. It is also applied, figuratively, to a man whose courage is not at the sticking place, one who shrinks through fear.' So also Jamieson has: 'Scunner, Scourner, to loathe, shudder, hesitate, shrink back through fear; Scunner, Skonner, sb., loathing, a surfeit; also, any person or thing which excites disgust.' Also: 'Scunner, vb. trans., to disgust, cause loathing.' To which must be added, that, as the verb had the form scunner or scourner, it was obviously convenient to add the suffix -el of the agent, to turn it into a sb., for the sake of greater distinctness. This would give scourner-el, a fellow causing disgust, a loathsome rascal; and, with the usual insertion of d (which could not but be brought in by the emphasis) the form scoundrel would naturally result. Of course, the suffix -el (answering to -ol in A.S. wac-ol, -el in M.E. newefang-el) was preferable to the equivalent form -er in this case, to distinguish the agential suffix from the frequentative one. γ. The verb scunner is the frequentative form from A.S. scunian, to shun; the sc sound being preserved (as usual) in the North of England. Hence scound-r-el = scun-er-el, one whom one constantly shuns, or merely 'a shunner,' a coward. The word is E., not Scand., because shun is not a Scand. word; see Shun. In Barbour's Bruce, xvii. 651, we have: 'And skunnryrit tharfor na kyn thing'—and did not shrink through fear one bit on that account; where the Edinb. MS. has scounryt; shewing that skunnry = scourner. And again, in the same, v. 211, where one MS. has schonand (shunning), the other has skounrand (scunnering), both words meaning 'dreading'; shewing that skounner is the frequentative of schon.

¶ I have no doubt that this solution, here first proposed, is the right one. Wedgwood connects it with scumber or summer, to dirty; which would only give scumbrel. E. Müller refers us to Ital. scondaruolo, but scondaruole (not scondaruolo) merely means blindman's buff (see Florio), and the vowel o would not pass into ou, not to mention that Florio probably put u for v, and meant Ital. scondaruole, as Blount understood it. Mahn refers us to G. schandier! (which he seems to have invented), the true G. word being schandube; and the passage of G. into E. ou is simply impossible. Besides, we need not go to G. or Ital. when the word can be fairly explained as English.

SCOUR, to cleanse by hard rubbing, to pass quickly over. (F., — L.) M. E. scouren; 'scouryn away ruste'; Prompt. Parv. 'As any bason scoured newe'; Rom. of the Rose, 540. — O. F. escurer, 'to scowre'; Cot. Cf. Span. escurare; O. Ital. scurare, 'to skoure dishes, to rub or cleanse harnesses,' Florio. [Hence also Swed. skura, Dan. skure, to scour; the word not occurring in Icelandic.] — Lat. escurare, to take great care of, of which the pp. escuratus occurs in Plautus; see Diez. — Lat. ex, here used as an intensive prefix; and curare, to take care, from cura, care. See Ex and Cure. Der. scour-er.

SCOURGE, a whip, instrument of punishment. (F., — L.) M. E. scourge, Wyclif, John, ii. 15; schurge, O. E. Homilies, i. 283, l. 11; Ancien Riwe, p. 418. — O. F. escorgie (see Littré), mod. F. escourgée, écourgée, a scourge. Cot. has escourgée, 'a thong, latchet, scourge, or whip.' Cf. Ital. scuriata, scuriada, a scourging; O. Ital. scoria, 'a whip, scourge,' scoriare, 'to whip,' scoriata, scoriada, 'a whipping; also, the same as scoria, i. e. a whip; Florio. β. The Ital. scoriata answers to Lat. excoriata, lit. flayed off, hence a strip of skin or shroud of leather for a whip; pp. of excoriare, to strip of skin. — Lat. ex, off; and corium, skin; see Ex and Cuirass. γ. We might explain the O. Ital. verb scoriare directly from Lat. excoriare, to excoriate, to flay by scourging. Der. scourge, M. E. scourgen, Rob. of Glouc. p. 263, l. 13.

SCOUT (1), a spy. (F., — L.) M. E. scoute (spelt scout, but rhiming with oute), Seven Sages, ed. Wright, l. 2218. — O. F. escoute, 'a spie, eave-dropper, also, a scout, scout-watch'; Cot. Verbal sb. from escouter, 'to hearken'; id. — Lat. auscultare, to hearken; see Auscultation. β. The transfer in sense, from listening to spying, causes no difficulty; the O. F. escoute means both listener and spy.

SCOUT (2), to ridicule, reject an idea. (Scand.) In Todd's Johnson; noted as a vulgar word. Cf. Lowland Scotch scout, 'to pour forth any liquid forcibly'; Jamieson. The latter sense is closely related to shoot. — Icel. skúta, skúti, a taunt; cf. skúta, to jut out, allied to skota, skotra, to shove, skot-yrði, scoffs, taunts, and to the strong verb skjóta (pt. t. skaut, pl. skutu, pp. skotinn), to shoot. Cf. Swed. skjuta, (1) to shoot, (2) to shove, push; skjuta skulden på, to thrust the blame on; Dan. skyde, (1) to shoot, (2) to shove; skyde skylden på, to thrust the blame on; skyde vand, to repel water. Thus the sense is to shoot, push away, reject. See Shoot.

SCOUT (3), a projecting rock. (Scand.) In place-names, as Raven-Scout. 'The steep ridges of rocks on Beetham-fell (Westmoreland) are called scouts;' A Bran New Wark (E. D. S.), l. 193, footnote. — Icel. skúta, to jut out; see Scout (2).

SCOWL, to look angry, to lower or look gloomy. (Scand.) M. E. scoulen; spelt scowle, Prompt. Parv. The devils who gather round a dying man are said to 'skoul and stare'; Pricke of Conscience, 2225. — Dan. skule, to scowl, cast down the eyes. Cf. Icel. skolla, to skulk, keep aloof, skolli, a skulker, a fox, the devil; Du. schuilen, to skulk, lurk, lie hid. β. That these are connected words is shewn by Low G. schulen, to hide oneself, not to let oneself be seen, and the prov. G. (Ditmarsch) schulen, to hide the eyes, to look sily as if peeping out of a hiding-place, look out, a word noticed by Fick, i. 337. γ. Fick connects these with Dan. skuhl, shelter (whence Dan. skiele, to hide), Icel. skjól, a shelter, cover, which he refers to a Teut. base SKEULA, a hiding-place; from ✓ SKU, to cover. γ. Cf. also Icel. skjól-eygr, goggle-eyed, squinting (skjól in other compounds having reference to skjól, a shelter); A. S. scēol-edge, squint-eyed (Bosworth), spelt scyl-edge in Wright's Vocab. i. 45, col. 2. Thus the sense is 'to peep out of a hiding-place,' or to look from under the covert of lowering brows. Der. scowl, sb.; also scul-k, q. v.

SCRABBLE, to scrawl. (E.) In 1 Sam. xxi. 13; where the marginal note has 'made marks.' Put for scrapp-le, frequentative of Scrape, q. v. Cf. prov. E. scrabble, to scratch, frequentative of scrap, to scratch, i. e. to scrape (Halliwell). See Scramble.

SCRAGGY, lean, rough. (Scand.) Cotgrave translates F. eschardé by 'a little, lean, or skraggie girle, that looks as if she were starved.' It is the same word as M. E. scroggy, covered with underwood, or straggling bushes. 'The way toward the Cite was strong, thorny, and scroggy;' Gesta Romanorum, ed. Herbage, p. 19, l. 19. Cf. Prov. E. scrag, a crooked, forked branch, also, a lean thin person (Halliwell); shrags, the ends of sticks. Also prov. E. scrog, a stunted bush, scroggy, abounding in underwood, serogs, blackthorn, seroggy, twisted, stunted, serog-legs, bandy-legs. (id.) — Swed. dial. skraka, a great dry tree, also (sarcastically) a long lean man; whence gobb-skakran, a weak old man (Rietz). Allied to Swed. dial. skrok, anything wrinkled or deformed, skrukka, to shrink together, skruge, crooked, skrukug, wrinkled (Rietz). Also to Norweg. skrokken, wrinkled, uneven, pp. of the strong verb skrekka (pt. t. skrak), to shrink (Aasen).

β. Evidently scraggy is for scrakky, formed from skrakk, pt. t. of skrekka, to shrink, which is cognate with E. Shrink, q. v. Mr. Wedgwood also notes: 'a lean scrag, which is nothing but skin and bones; Bailey. Frisian skrog is used in the same sense, whilst Dan. skrog signifies carcase, the hull of a ship. Scrag of mutton, the bony part of the neck; scraggy, lean and bony.' He also notes Gael. sgreag, to shrivel (also cognate with shrink), whence sgreagach, dry, rocky, sgreagag, an old shrivelled woman, sgreagan, anything dry, shrunk, or shrivelled. Cf. Irish sgreag, a rock. Der. scraggi-ness.

SCRAMBLE, to catch at or strive for rudely, struggle after, struggle. (E.) 'And then she'll scramble too;' Beaumont and Fletcher, Mons. Thomas, i. 3. 'I'll scramble yet amongst them;' id. Captain, ii. 1 (Jacom). 'The cowardly wretch fell down, crying for succour, and scrambling through the legs of them that were about him;' Sidney, Arcadia, b. ii. (R.) Not found in M. E. A frequentative form of prov. E. scramb, to pull, or rake together with the hands (Forks.), seramp, to catch at, to snatch (North; in Halliwell). It may also be regarded as a nasalised form of prov. E. scrabble, to scramble (Somerset.), allied to scraffle, to scramble (Halliwell), and scrapple, to grub about (Oxon.), which is the frequentative of prov. E. scrap, to scratch (East.) Halliwell cites 'to scrappe as a henne dose' from a MS. Dict. of A. D. 1540; which is merely E. scrape. Thus scramble is the frequentative of a nasalised form of Scrape, q. v. And see Scrabble. Der. scramble, sb.; scrambl-er. [†]

SCRAP, a small piece, shred. (Scand.) M. E. scrappede. 'And also gif I myȝt gadre any scrappede of the releef of the twelf cupes,' i. e. any bits of the leavings of the twelve baskets (in the miracle of the loaves); Trevisa, tr. of Higden, i. 15. (Rather Scand. than E.) — Icel. skrap, scraps, trifles, from skrapa, to scrape, scratch; Dan. skrab, scrapings, trash, from skrabe, to scrape; Swed. afskrap, scrapings, refuse, dregs, from skrapa, to scrape. See Scrape.

SCRAPE, to remove a surface with a sharp instrument, shave, scratch, save up. (Scand.) M. E. scrapien, scrapen, also skrapien, skrapen (Stratmann). 'But ho so scraper my mawe'—unless one were to scrape my maw; P. Plowman, B. v. 124. Spelt shreapien, Ancien Riwe, p. 116, l. 15. (Rather Scand. than E.) — Icel. skrapa, to scrape; Swed. skrapa; Dan. skrabe. + Du. schrapen, to scrape. + A. S. searpien, to scarify; A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 76, l. 13. β. The A. S. form searpien is clearly allied to A. S. searþ, sharp; thus to scrape is 'to use a sharp instrument'; see Sharp. Der. scrap-ing, scrap-er; also scrap, q. v., scrabb-le, q. v., scramb-le, q. v.

SCRATCH, to scrape with a pointed instrument or with the nails. (Scand.) The word to scratch has resulted from the confusion of M. E. scratten, to scratch, with M. E. cracchen, with the same sense. 1. M. E. scratten, to scratch. Prompt. Parv.; Pricke of Conscience, 7378; Ancien Riwe, p. 186, note b. This form scratten is for *scarten, from a base SKART, lengthened form of ✓ SKAR, to shear, cut. A closely allied base SKARD appears in E. shard and shred. We may explain to scrat by to shear slightly, scrape, grate. The word scrape runs parallel with it, from the base SKARP; and the difference in sense and form between scrape and scrat is very slight. Lastly, the form scrat is rather Scand. than E.; cf. Dan. skrade, to creak; Norweg. and Swed. skratta, to laugh loudly or harshly, Norweg. skralla, to rattle (Aasen), Swed. dial. skrata, to frighten away animals; words significant of sharp, grating sounds. 2. M. E. crachen, P. Plowman, B. prol. 154, 186. Apparently put for cratsen.

—Swed. kratsa, to scrape, krats, a scraper, formed with suffix -sa from kratta, to rake, scrape, scratch, cf. kratta, sb., a rake; Dan. kradse, to scratch. So also Du. krassen (for kratsen?), to scratch; G. kratzen, to scratch; all from a base KART, to scratch, from ✓KAR, to cut, which is merely ✓SKAR, to cut, with loss of initial s, and appears in Gk. κείπειν, to shear, Skt. kṛi, to injure, gri, to wound. ¶ Hence scratten and crachen are from the same root and mean much the same thing, so that confusion between them was easy enough. Der. scratch, sb., scratch-er. Doublet, grate (2).

SCRAWL, to write hastily or irregularly. (E.) A late word, used by Swift and Pope (Rich., and Todd). The aw (= au) denotes a long vowel or diphthong; better spelt scrawl, with a as in all. 'To scrawl, or scrawl, to scribble, to write after a sorry careless manner'; Phillips, ed. 1706. It appears to be nothing but a careless form of Scrabble, q. v. Cf. also E. scribble, and prov. E. scribble-scribble, scribbling (North).

β. The peculiar form seems due to confusion with prov. E. scrawl, to crawl (West) in Halliwell; he cites 'To scrawl, stir, motio' from Coles, Lat. Dict. To which add: 'The ryuer shall scraule [swarm] with frogges', Exod. viii. 3; in Coverdale's version. This word is merely E. crawl, with prefixed s, added in some cases with the idea of giving greater emphasis; see Crawl. Der. scrawl, sb., scrawl-er.

SCREAM, to cry out shrilly. (Scand.) M. E. scremen, Polit. Songs, p. 158, l. 9; screamen, Hali Meidenhad, p. 37; last line but one. — Icel. skræma, to scare, terrify; Swed. skræma, Dan. skræmme, to scare. β. Hence it appears that the E. word has preserved what was doubtless the oldest sense of these Scand. words, viz. 'to cry aloud,' as the means of imposing or of expressing terror; we still commonly use scream with especial reference to the effects of sudden fright. Cf. Swed. skrän, a scream, skräna, to whimper, which is merely a parallel form. γ. In precisely the same way, the Dan. skrække, to scare, is related to E. shriek. The forms screa-m, screa-ck, and Lowland Sc. skir-l, to cry shrilly, are all various extensions from the Teut. base SKRI, to cry aloud, occurring in G. schreien, Swed. skria, Du. schreijen, to cry aloud or shriek. — ✓SKAR, to make a noise; Fick, i. 242. Cf. G. schallen, to resound. See Screech, Shriek. Der. scream, sb.

SCREECH, to shriek, cry aloud. (Scand.) 'Whilst the screech-owl, screeching loud;' Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 383; where the first folio has scritch-owls, scritchng. Also spelt scrike, Spenser, F. Q. vi. 5. 18. Baret (1580) has scrick. M. E. scriken, skryken, schrichen, schriken, Chaucer, C. T. 15406 (Six-text, B. 4590); spelt shriken, O. E. Homilies, ii. 181, l. 2. — Icel. skrækja, to shriek; cf. skrikja, to titter (said of suppressed laughter); Swed. skrika, to shriek; Dan. skrige, to shriek; skrige af Skrak, to shriek with terror. + Irish sgreach-aim, I shriek; Gael. sgreach, sgreachu, to screech, scream; W. ysgrechio, to scream. β. All from ✓SKARK or SKARG, to make a noise; whence Icel. skark, a noise, tumult, Skt. kharj, to creak, Russ. skrejetate, to gnash the teeth; extended from ✓SKAR, to make a noise. See Scream. Der. screech, sb., answering to Swed. skrik, Dan. skrig, Irish sgreach, Gael. sgreach, W. ysgrêch; also screech-owl. And see shrike. Doublet, shriek, which is merely a variant, due to the alteration of sc to sh at the beginning and the preservation of k at the end.

SCREEN, that which shelters from observation, a partition; also, a coarse riddle or sieve. (F., — Teut.?) 1. M. E. sceren; spelt scene, Prompt. Parv., p. 450; Wright's Vocab. i. 197, col. 2. — O. F. escran, 'a screen to set between one and the fire, a tester for a bed;' Cot. Mod. F. écran.

β. Of doubtful origin; Diez refers it to G. schragen, a trestle, stack (of wood); we may also note G. schranne, a railing (answering to the E. sense of partition made of open work); and G. schranke, a barrier, schranken, the lists (at a tournament); cf. schranken-fenster, a lattice or grate-window. γ. Fick (i. 813) connects G. schragen and schranke with each other and with Lat. scrinium (whence E. Shrine). We cannot derive screen from Lat. scrinium, as we know that the latter word became escrin or escrain in O. F., and shrine in E. 2. In the sense of coarse riddle, it is spelt skrine in Tusser's Husbandry, sect. 17, st. 16 (E. D. S.), and is the same word as the above. 'A screen for gravel or corn is a grating which wards off the coarser particles and prevents them from coming through;' Wedgwood. Der. screen, verb, Hamlet, iii. 4. 3.

SCREW (1), a cylinder with a spiral groove or ridge on its surface, used as a fastening or as a mechanical power. (F., — L.? or Teut.?) Better spelt scrue, as in Cotgrave; the spelling screw is due to confusion with screw (2) below. Spelt screw in Minsheu, ed. 1627. — O. F. escroue, 'a scrue, the hole or hollow thing wherein the vice of a presse, &c. doth turn;' Cot. Mod. F. écrou.

β. Of uncertain origin. Diez derives it from Lat. scrobem, acc. of scrobs, a ditch, trench, also a hole. This word appears to be from a base SKARBH, closely allied to SKARP, to cut, as in Lat. scalpere, sculpere; see Scrofula, Sculpture. γ. Diez thinks the F. word can hardly be derived from the Teutonic; we find G. schraube, a screw, Du. schroef, Icel. skrifja, Swed. skruf, a screw, peg, Dan. skru; words of which the root does not seem to be known; though they may be from the Teut. base SKRU, to cut; Fick, iii. 339. ¶ The E. word is certainly from the F., as Scheler rightly remarks. Der. screw, verb, Macb. i. 7. 60; screw-driv-er, screw-propell-er, screw-steamer. [†]

SCREW (2), a vicious horse. (E.) A well-known term in modern E., not noticed in Johnson or Halliwell. The same word as shrew, a vicious or scolding woman, spelt screw in Political Songs, ed. Wright, p. 153, l. 13. See Shrew. Doublet, shrew.

SCRIBBLE, to write carelessly. (L.; with E. suffix.) 'Scribbled forth in hast at adventure;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 50 e. Formed with the frequentative suffix -le from scribe, sb.; the suffix giving it a verbal force. Similarly, we find G. schreibler, a scribbler, from schreiben, to write. See Scribe. Der. scribble, sb., scribble-er.

SCRIBE, a writer, a clerk, an expounder of the Jewish law. (L.) First in use as a scriptural term, and taken directly from Latin; Littre does not trace the F. scribe beyond the 16th century. M. E. scribe, Wyclif, Matt. viii. 19. — Lat. scriba, a writer, Matt. viii. 19 (Vulgate). — Lat. scribere, to write (pp. scriptus), orig. to scratch marks on a soft surface, to cut slightly; allied to scrobs, a ditch, and scalpere, to cut. — ✓SKARBH, extended form of ✓SKAR, to cut, whence also Gk. γράφειν, and A. S. grafan; see Grave (1). Der. scribble-le, q. v.; and see scrip (2), script, script-ure, scriv-en-er. Also (from Lat. scribere), a-scribe, circum-scribe, de-scribe, in-scribe, pre-scribe, pro-scribe, sub-scribe, trans-scribe (for trans-scribe); also (from pp. scriptus) a-script-ion, circum-script-ion, con-script, de-script-ion, in-script-ion, manu-script, non-de-script, pre-script-ion, pre-script-ive, pro-script-ion, post-script, re-script, sub-script-ion, super-script-ion, trans-script, trans-script-ion, &c. Also skrive, skrift, Shrove-tide.

SCRIMMAGE, the same as Skirmish, q. v.

SCRIP (1), a small bag or wallet. (Scand.) M. E. scrippe, King Horn, ed. Lumby, 1061; Chaucer, C. T. 7319. — Icel. skreppa, a scrip, bag; Norweg. skreppa, a knapsack (Aasen); Swed. dial. skrappa, a bag (Rietz), Swed. skrappa, a scrip; O. Swed. skreppa (Ihre). + O. Du. scharpe, schaerpe, scerpe, a scrip, pilgrim's wallet (Oudemans); Low G. schrap, a scrip. (Brem. Wört.) Allied to G. scherbe, a shred. The orig. sense is 'scrap,' because made of a scrap or shred of skin or other material. See Scrap, Scarf (1).

SCRIP (2), a piece of writing, a schedule. (F., — L.) In Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. i. 2. 3. The same word as script, the t dropping off in common talk; see Script.

SCRIPT, a piece of writing. (F., — L.) 'Euery script and bond;' Chaucer, C. T. 9571. — O. F. escript, 'a writing;' Cot. — Lat. scriptum, a thing written, neut. of scriptus, pp. of scribere, to write; see Scribe. Der. manu-script, re-script, trans-script.

SCRIPTURE, writing, the Bible. (F., — L.) Scripture, in the sense of 'bible,' is short for holy scripture, or rather, The Holy Scriptures. M. E. scripture; the pl. scripturis is in Wyclif, Luke, xxiv. 27. O. F. escripture, 'writ, scripture, writing;' Cot. — Lat. scriptura, a writing; cf. Lat. scripturus, fut. part. of scribere, to write; see Scribe. Der. scriptur-al.

SCRIVENER, a scribe, copyist, notary. (F., — L.) Properly a scrivener, the suffix -er (of the agent) is an E. addition. M. E. skriuenere, Lydgate, Complaint of Black Knight, st. 28; formed with suffix -ere from M. E. scriuain, Avenbite of Inwyt, p. 44, l. 30. — O. F. escriuain, 'a scrivener;' Cot. Cf. mod. F. écrivain, Span. escribano, Ital. scrivano. — Low Lat. scribanum, acc. of scribanus, a notary; extended from scriba, a scribe; see Scribe.

SCROFULA, a disease characterised by chronic swellings of the glands. (L.) Called 'the king's evil,' because it was supposed the touch of a king could cure it; see Phillips, Dict., &c. In Phillips, ed. 1706; Blount (1674) has the adj. scrofulous. — Lat. scrofula; usually in pl. scrofulæ, scrofulous swellings. The lit. signification of scrofula is a little pig; dimin. of scrofa, a breeding sow. The reason for the name is not certainly known, but perhaps it is from the swollen appearance of the glands. It is remarkable that the Gk. name (χοιπάδες) for swollen or scrofulous glands appears to be similarly connected with χοίπος, a pig.

β. The Lat. scrofa means 'a digger,' from the habit of swine, who are fond of 'rooting' or turning up the earth; allied to scrobs, a ditch. The parallel Gk. word is γρομφάς, allied to γράφειν, to scratch; and both γράφειν and scrofa are from the same ✓SKARBH, extension of ✓SKAR, to cut. See Grave (1). Der. scroful-ous; and see screw (1).

SCROLL, a roll of paper or parchment, a schedule. (F., = Teut.) Scroll, formerly also scrowl, is a contraction of scrow-el, a dimin. form (with suffix -el) of scrowe or scroue, the earlier form of the word. The dimin. form does not appear to be earlier than about A.D. 1500, but the M. E. scroue, scroue, is much older. Palsgrave (A.D. 1530) gives both scrowle and scroue, and equates both to F. rolle. Fabyan also has both forms: 'He [Rich. II.] therefore redde the scrowle of resignacyon hymselfe,' an. 1398 (ed. Ellis, p. 547); 'wherefore, knowynge that the sayd Baylyl vsed to bere scrowys and prophecie aboute hym,' an. 1449 (id. p. 624). M. E. scroue, scroue; spelt scrow, Prompt. Parv.; pl. scrowis, Wyclif, Matt. xxiii. 5 (earlier version only); scroue, Ancien Riwle, p. 282, last line. = O. F. escroue, 'a scrowle'; Cot. Spelt escroes in the 14th cent. (Littre); mod. F. écrou; the Low Lat. escroa occurs A.D. 1386 (Ducange). To which must be added that the dimin. form escroele actually occurs, in the sense of strip, as cited by Littre, s.v. écrou; thus proving the origin of E. scroll beyond all doubt. β. Of Teut. origin. = O. Du. schroode, a strip, shred, slip of paper (Oudemans); allied to schroden, to cut off (id.). Cf. Icel. skrá, a scroll; allied to Norweg. skraa, to cleave (shred), and Dan. skraae, to hull corn, in which the d has disappeared. Thus the orig. sense is a 'shred,' i.e. strip or slip of parchment. See Shred, Shard. [†]

SCRUB, to rub hard. (E.) M. E. scrobben, to rub down a horse; King Alisaunder, 4310. Not found in A. S., but prob. an E. word, see below. + Du. scrubben, to scrub, wash, rub, chide. + Dan. skrubbe, to scrub, rub; cf. skrubbet, adj., rough, rugged, scabrous. + Swed. skrubba, to rub, scrub. β. The Norweg. skrub means a scrubbing-brush (Aasen), and skrubba is a name for the dwarf cornel-tree, answering to E. skrub, A. S. scrobb, a shrub. The likeness between A. S. scrobb, a shrub, and M. E. scrobben, to scrub, can hardly be accidental; and, from the analogy of broom, we may conclude that the original scrubbing-brush was a branch of a shrub, and that the vb. is from the sb. In fact, we still use scrubby as an epithet of a plant, with the sense of shrubby, i.e. mean, small, or rough (cf. Dan. skrubbet, rough, cited above); and we even extend the same epithet to meanness of conduct, and the like. Cf. also Du. schrobber, 'a swabber, scrub, hog, scoundrel, fool, scrape-penny'; O. Du. schrobber, 'a rubber, a scraper, a scurvy fellow'; Hexham. And note Lowland Sc. scrubber, 'a handful of heath tied tightly together for cleaning culinary utensils, Teviotdale'; Jamieson. See Shrub. Der. scrub, sb., 'a mean fellow, a worn-out brush, low underwood,' Webster; scrubb-ed, mean, Merch. Ven. v. 162; scrubb-y, adj., mean; scrubb-er.

SCRUPLE, a small weight, a doubt, perplexity, reluctance to act. (F., = L.) 'It is no conscience, but a foolish scruple,' Sir T. More, Works, p. 1435 c. 'Would not haue bene too scrupulous'; Frith, Works, p. 143, col. 2. = F. scrupule, 'a little sharp stone falling into a mans shooe, and hindering him in his gait [gait]; also, a scruple, doubt, fear, difficulty, care, trouble of conscience; also, a scruple, a weight amounting unto the third part of a dram'; Cot. = Lat. scrupulum, acc. of scrupulus, a small sharp stone; hence, a small stone used as a weight, a small weight; also, a stone in one's shoe, an uneasiness, difficulty, small trouble, doubt. Dimin. of scrupus, a sharp stone. Formed from a base SKRU = √ SKUR, to cut, appearing in Skt. kshur, to cut, scratch, furrow, khuur, to cut, chkar, to cut, Gk. κνίπων, chippings of stone, κνίβω, a razor. Cf. √ SKAR, to cut; see Shear. Der. scrupul-ous, from F. scrupuleux, 'scrupulous,' Cot., from Lat. scrupulosus; scrupul-ous-ly, ness.

SCRUTINY, a strict examination, careful enquiry. (L.) Spelt scruteny, Skelton, Garl. of Laurel, 782; cf. F. scrutiny, 'a scrutiny'; Cot. Englished from L. scrutinium, a careful enquiry. = Lat. scrutari, to search into carefully, lit. to search among broken pieces. = Lat. scruta, broken pieces, old trash; prob. from the base SKRU, to cut up, for which see Scruple. Der. scrutin-ise, scrutin-er. And see in-scrut-able.

SCUD, to run quickly, run before the wind in a gale. (Scand.) In Shak. Venus, 301. We also have prov. E. scud, a slight rapid or flying shower of rain (Shropshire, and elsewhere); Lowland Sc. scud-din-stanes, thin stones made to skim the surface of water, as an amusement, answering exactly to Dan. skud-steen, a stone quoit. The frequentative of scud is prov. E. scuttle, to walk fast, to hurry along, often used with precisely the same force as scud; the weakened form scuddle, to run away quickly, is given in Bailey, vol. i. ed. 1735. Hence scud is a weakened form of scut or scoot; cf. prov. E. 'to go like scooter, i.e. very quick, East' (Halliwell); and scoot is only another form of shoot. Precisely the same weakening of t to d occurs in Danish, and the nautical term to scud is of Danish origin. = Dan. skyde, to shoot, to push, to shove; skyde i frø, to run to seed; skyde vand, to repel water; skyde over steen (lit. to shoot over the stem), to shoot ahead, i.e. scud along, as a nautical term; Dan. skud-, a shooting, used in compounds, as in skud-aar, leap-year, skud-steen, a 'scudding-stane'; Swed. skutta, to leap, Swed. dial. skuta, a sledge (Rietz), allied to Swed. skjuta, to shoot, and to Icel. skjóta, to shoot, also to slip or scud away, abscond. See Shoot. ¶ I unhesitatingly reject Grein's interpretation of A. S. scúdan by 'scud'; it only occurs in one passage, where it may better mean to 'shudder' or 'shiver.' We never find M. E. scudden, so that there is no connecting link between A. S. scúdan and Shakespeare's scud. The W. ysguith, a scud, whisk, in Spurrell, is of no value here. Der. scutt-le (3), q. v.

SCUFFLE, to struggle, fight confusedly. (Scand.) In Beaum. and Fletcher, Philaster, v. 1. The frequentative form of scuff, preserved in prov. E. scuff, to shuffle in walking, West; Halliwell. = Swed. skuffa, to push, shove, jog; allied to E. shove. + O. Du. schuffelen, to drive on, also, to run away, i.e. to shuffle off; allied to Du. schuiven, to shove. Thus to scuffle is 'to keep shoving about.' See Shuffle, Shove. Der. scuffle, sb., Antony, i. 1. 7.

SKULK, SKULK, to hide oneself, lurk. (Scand.) M. E. sculken, skulken, Pricke of Conscience, 1788; Gower, C. A. ii. 93, l. 4; whence the sb. scolkyng, Rob. of Glouc. p. 256, l. 11. = Dan. skulke, to skulk, slink, sneak; Swed. skolka, to play the truant. Allied to Icel. skolla, to skulk, keep aloof. β. The base is SKULK, extended from SKUL; just as lur-k is from lower. The shorter base occurs in Du. schuilen, Low G. schulen, to skulk, to lurk in a hiding-place; from Dan. skiul, Icel. skjól, a place of shelter; see further under Scowl, which exhibits the shorter form.

SCULL (1), the cranium; see Skull.

SCULL (2), a small, light oar. (Scand.) 'Scull, a little oar, to row with; Sculler, a boat rowed with sculls, or the waterman that manages it'; Phillips, ed. 1706. Also in the phrase 'rowing scull,' Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3, l. 351. We also find 'the old sculler,' i.e. Charon; Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, i. 1 (Cupid's 7th speech). Dryden oddly uses sculler with the sense of 'boat,' tr. of Virgil, Georg. b. iv. l. 735. 'Scull to rowe with, auiron; Scullar, batellier;' Palsgrave.

β. To be connected with Lowland Sc. skul, skull, skoll, a goblet or large bowl, which is a Scand. word, viz. Swed. skål, a base, bowl, one of the scales of a balance (Widegren); Icel. skál, a bowl, a hollow, dish of a balance; Dan. skaal, a bowl, cup. (The change of vowel is remarkable, but occurs again in Skull, q. v.) γ. Richardson, without authority, defines a scull as 'a boat,' and so connects 'boat' with the idea of 'shell,' or hollow vessel; this can hardly be right. Every rowing man knows the essential difference between sculls and oars to consist in this, that the blade of the scull is hollowed out, as it were, and slightly curved, whilst the oar-blade is much flatter; oars for sea-boats are quite flat. We may at once explain scull from Icel. skál, a hollow; Swed. skellig, 'concave, hollow,' Widegren. Thus a scull is an oar with a slightly concave blade, like the dish of a balance. See Scale (2). Der. scull, verb; scull-er, as above.

SCULL (3), a shoal of fish. (E.) In Shak. Troilus, v. 5. 22. M. E. sculle, Prompt. Parv. A variant of Shoal, q. v.

SCULLERY, a room for washing dishes, and the like. (E.) The word is really E., though the suffix -y is French; this suffix is added by analogy with pantry, butter-y (really bottler-y), so as to denote the place or room where the washing of dishes went on. Sculler is a remarkable alteration of swiller, i.e. a washer, from the verb swill, to wash, A. S. swilian; see Swill. This is proved by the history of the word, in which two changes took place: (1) from swiller to squiller; and (2) from squillery to scullery. 1. We find occasional change of orig. initial sw to sq, due perhaps to an Eastern dialect. Levins writes squaine for swain. Another clear instance is in the M. E. swelter (allied to mod. E. sultry), spelt squaltryn in the Prompt. Parv., p. 471; and on the very same page we have: 'squyllare, dysche-wescheare, Lixa;' i.e. squiller for swiller. 2. Again, in the same, p. 450, we find: 'Scorel, or squerel, beast;' i.e. scorel for squirrel; and by the same change, squillery would become scollery or scullery (for the change from seo to scu observe 'scome, or scum' on p. 449 of the same). β. For further examples, note: 'How the squyler of the kechyn;' Rob. of Brunne, Handlyng Synne, l. 5913 (in Spec. of Eng. ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 61). 'The pourvayours of the buttlarye [buttery] and pourvayours of the squyllery;' Ordinances and Regulations of the Royal Household, 4to, 1790, p. 77; 'Sergeant-squylloure,' ibid. p. 81; cited in Halliwell. 'All suche other as shall long [belong] unto the squyllare;' Rutland Papers, p. 100; also in Halliwell. Moreover, Rob. of Brunne tells us that the squyler above mentioned 'meked hymself ouer skyle [exceedingly] Pottes and dysshes for to swele,' i.e. swyle, swill, as required by the time; l. 5828. There is, in fact, no doubt as to the matter. γ. The change from swiller to squiller or sculler in the dialect of the East of England was obviously caused by the influence of Dan. skylle, Swed. skölja, to wash, rinse, Icel. skola, skyla, to wash. If (as seems most likely) these words are cognate with A. S. swilian, the form of the base must be SKWAL or SKWIL, as in Swed. squala, to gush, Norw. skval, dish-water. δ. We may further suppose that the change from swillery or scullery to scullery was helped out by some confusion with O. F. escuelle (from Lat. scutella), a dish; so that a scullery was looked on as a place for dishes rather than as being merely the place for washing them. [†] ¶ Scullion is of different origin; see below.

SCULLION, a kitchen menial. (F., -L.) In Shak. Hamlet. ii. 2. 616. 'Their smooked scolions faces, handes, and feete;' Barnes, Works, p. 341, col. 2. 'Scullion of the kechyn, souillon;' Palsgrave. This word has undoubtedly been long understood as if it were connected with scullery, and the connection between the two words in the popular mind may have influenced its form and use. But it is impossible to connect them etymologically; and Wedgwood well says that 'it has a totally different origin,' which he points out. - F. escouillon, 'a wispe, or dishcloth, a malkin or drag, to cleanse or sweep an oven;' Cot. 'In the same way malkin, mawkin, is used both for a kitchen-wench and for the clout which she plies;' Wedgwood.

β. The F. escouillon is the same as escouvillon, Cot. The latter form answers to Span. escobillon, a sponge for a cannon; formed with suffix -on (Lat. -ionem) from escobilla, a small brush, dimin. of escoba, a brush, broom, which is cognate with Ital. scopa, a broom, a birch-tree. - Lat. scopa, used in pl. scopæ, thin twigs, a broom of twigs. γ. The lit. sense of scopæ may be 'cuttings,' from √ SKAP, to cut, hew; see CAPOIN. ¶ The word scullery is of different origin; see above.

SCULPTURE, the art of carving figures. (F., -L.) M. E. sculpture, Gower, C. A. ii. 83, l. 2. - F. sculpture, for which Littré cites nothing earlier than the 16th century; but it must have been in earlier use. - Lat. sculptura, sculpture; cf. Lat. sculpturus, fut. part. of sculper, to cut out, carve in stone; allied to scalper, to scratch, grave, carve, cut. - √ SKARP, extended from √ SKAR, to cut. Sculper is cognate with Gk. γάφειν, to engrave, hollow out; so that γάφειν :: sculper :: sculper :: sculper. Der. sculpture, verb; sculpt-or, from Lat. sculptor; sculptur-al. And see SCURF.

SCUM, froth, refuse on the surface of liquids. (Scand.) 'Scome or scum of fletynge [floating], Spuma;' Prompt. Parv. 'Scummyn lycrys, Despumo;' id. Dat. seome, Ayeenbite of Inwyt, p. 44, l. 23. - Dan. skum, scum, froth, foam; Icel. skúm, foam (in Egillson's Dict.); Swed. skum. + O. H. G. scúm, G. schaum (whence F. écume). + Irish sgum (if it be a Celtic word). β. Lit. 'a covering.' - √ SKU, to cover; Fick, iii. 336. ¶ The Lat. spuma is related to E. spew, not to scum. Der. scum, verb; scumm-er.

SCUPPER, a hole in the side of a ship to carry off water from the deck. (F.) 'Scuppers, the holes through which the water runs off the deck;' Coles, ed. 1684. So named because the water appears to be spit out from them. - O. F. escopir, escupir, to spit out; now obsolete, but once widely spread; see Burguy. It appears also in the Span. and Prov. escupir; Walloon scupia; Wallachian scupire (Burguy).

β. The root is not known; as it can hardly be corrupted from Lat. exspuere, Burguy suggests a Celtic root, as seen in Gael. cop, Irish cuipe, froth, foam; to which the Lat. ex, out, must, in that case, have been prefixed. ¶ We might rather connect it with Du. schoppen, to scoop away, met een schup weg schoppen, from schup, a scoop, shovel, or spade (Sewel), but for two objections: (1) that the action of shoveling away is not what is meant; and (2) that the Dutch word for scupper is spiegat (G. speigat, Swed. spygatt). Now the Swed. spygatt is 'spit-hole,' from spy, to spit; and G. speigat is the same, from speien, to spit; names which seem to be mere translations from the O. F. name now lost (except in E.) Cf. G. speiröhre, the spout of a gutter, lit. 'spit-pipe.' [†]

SCURF, small flakes of skin; flaky matter on the skin. (E.) M. E. scurf. 'Scurf of scabbys, Squama;' Prompt. Parv.; Cursor Mundi, 11823. - A. S. scurf, scurf; A. S. Leechdoms, i. 116, last line but one. Also scoorfa; 'scoorfa on his heafde hæfde' - he had scurf on his head; Ælfred, tr. of Bede, b. v. c. 2. Lit. 'that which is scraped off.' - A. S. scoorfan (pt. t. scearf, pl. scoorfen), to scrape, to gnaw; Orosius, i. 7. + Du. skurf, scurf; orig. an adj. signifying 'scurfy,' the t answering to Aryan -ta, the pp. suffix. + Icel. skurfur, fem. pl., scurf on the head. + Swed. skorf. + Dan. skurv. + G. schorf. β. We may further compare with A. S. scoorfan the G. verb schürfen, to scratch, and the Lat. sculper, scalper; see SCULPTURE. Der. scurf-y, scurf-i-ness. Also scurv-y, q. v.

SCURRILE, buffoon-like. (L.) In Shak. Troil. i. 3. 148. - Lat. scurrilis, buffoon-like. - Lat. scurra, a buffoon. Der. scurril-ity, L. L. L. iv. 2. 55, from Lat. acc. scurrilitatem; scurril-ous, Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 215; scurril-ous-ly.

SCURVY, afflicted with scurf, mean. (E.) 'All scurvy with scabbies;' Skelton, Elinour Rummung, 142. The same word as scurfy, with change from f to v, as in Swed. skorvig, scurf, from skorf, scurf. See SCURF. Hence, as a term of contempt, vile, mean, Temp. ii. 2. 46, and very common in Shak. Der. scurvy, Phillips, ed. 1706, the name of a disease, from the pitiful condition of those afflicted with it; an E. adaptation, probably, of the Low Lat. medical term scorbutus; see SCORBUTIC. Also scurvi-ly, -ness.

SCUTCH, to dress flax; see SCOTCH.

SCUTCHEON, a painted shield. (F., -L.) M. E. scotchynne, scocchone, Prompt. Parv. The same as ESCUTCHEON, q. v.

SCUTIFORM, shield-shaped. (F., -L.) In Blount, ed. 1674. 'Scutiforme os, the whirl-bone of the knee;' Phillips, ed. 1706. - O. F. scutiforme, 'fashioned like a scutcheon, shield-fashion;' Cot. - Lat. scuti-, for scuto-, crude form of scutum, a shield; and form-a, form, shape; see ESCUTCHEON and FORM.

SCUTTLE (1), a shallow basket, a vessel for holding coal. (L.) M. E. scutille. 'Hec scutella, a scutylle;' Wright's Vocab. i. 257, col. 1. - A. S. scutel, a dish, bowl. 'Catinus, scutel;' Wright's Voc. i. 290, col. 1. - Lat. scutella, a salver or waiter; dimin. of scutra, a tray, dish, or platter, also spelt scuta. Prob. allied to scutum, a shield. Der. coal-scuttle. Doublet, skillet.

SCUTTLE (2), an opening in the hatchway of a ship. (F., -Span., -Teut.) 'Scuttles, square holes, capable for the body of a man to pass thorough at any hatch-way, or part of the deck, into any room below; also, those little windows and long holes which are cut out in cabbins to let in light;' Phillips, ed. 1706. And in Cotgrave. - O. F. escoutilles, pl., 'the scuttles, or hatches of a ship; trouverures or trap-doors, whereat things are let down into the hold;' Cot. Mod. F. écoutille; Span. escotilla, escotillon, 'a hole in the hatch of a ship, also the hatch itself,' Minshew. β. The word appears to be Spanish; and we find another form in escotadura, the large trap-door of a theatre or stage (Neuman). Another sense of escotadura is the sloping of a jacket or pair of stays; and the form of the word is such as to be due to the verb escotar, to cut out a thing so as to make it fit, to slope, to hollow out a garment about the neck (a different word from Span. escotar, to pay one's reckoning, for which see SCOT-FREE). The orig. sense is 'to cut a hole in a garment to admit the neck,' from the sb. escote, the sloping of a jacket, a tucker such as women wear above the bosom. This sb. is derived, as Diez points out, from the Teutonic; cf. Goth. skauts, the hem of a garment, Du. schoot, the lap, the bosom, G. schooss, the same; so that the orig. sense of Span. escote is 'a slope to fit the bosom,' a hole for the neck.

γ. Similarly the A. S. scēdā (cognate with Goth. skauts) answers to the 'sheet' of a sail, exactly corresponding to Span. escota, the sheet of a sail. See SHEET. Der. scuttle, verb, to sink a ship by cutting scuttles or holes in it.

SCUTTLE (3), to hurry along, scud away. (Scand.) The same as scuddle (Bailey), and the frequentative of SCUD, q. v. [†]

SCYTHER, a cutting instrument for mowing grass. (E.) The intrusion of the letter c is due to false spelling; it should be sythe or sithe. Spelt sythe in L. L. L. i. 1. 6 (first folio, ed. 1623). M. E. sithe, P. Plowman, C. iv. 464; sybe, Havelok, 2553. - A. S. siðe, sipe, a scythe; 'Falcastrum, sipe;' Wright's Vocab. i. 85, l. 3. The A. S. siðe is put for sigðe (a form actually found in the Epinal gloss), and the long i is due to loss of g; it means 'the cutting instrument,' from the Teut. base SAG, to cut = √ SAK, to cut. See SAW (1), SECTION. Fick, iii. 314. + Du. zeis. + Icel. sigðr, sigð, a sickle. + Low G. seged, segd, also seed, seid, a kind of sickle; Brem. Wörterbuch. From the same root we have O. H. G. segisna, segensa, M. H. G. segense, G. sense, a scythe; O. H. G. seh, M. H. G. sech, a ploughshare; as well as E. saw, sickle. Der. scythe, verb, Shak. Complaint, l. 12; scythe-tusked, Two Noble Kinsmen, i. 1. 79.

SE-, away, apart, prefix. (L.) From Lat. se-, short for sed, without, which is prob. retained as a prefix in sed-ition. Sed is mentioned by Festus as having been used with the sense 'without.' It perhaps meant 'by oneself, being put for swad, abl.; cf. Skt. sva, one's own self, Lat. se; and Lat. suus, one's own. Der. se-cede, se-clude, se-cret, se-cure, sed-ition, se-duce, se-gregate, se-lect, se-parate; and see SEVER.

SEA, a large lake, ocean. (E.) M. E. see, Chaucer, C. T. 3033. - A. S. sēa, sēa, lake. + Du. zee. + Icel. sar. + Dan. sø. + Swed. sjö. + G. see. + Goth. saiws.

β. All from a Teut. base SAIWA, sa; Fick, iii. 313. Perhaps connected with Gk. θα, it rains; Skt. su, to press out Soma juice, soma, an acid juice, nectar, water, sava, juice, water; but this is uncertain; Curtius, i. 492. Der. sea-board, from F. bord, the shore = Du. boord, edge, brim (see BORDER); sea-coast, sea-faring, sea-girt, -green, -horse, -kale, -king, -level, -man, -man-ship, -mark, -room, -serpent, -shore, -sick, -side, -unicorn, -urchin, -ward, -weed, -worthy; &c.

SEAL (1), a stamp for impressing wax, impressed wax, that which authenticates. (F., -L.) M. E. seel (better than sele), Chaucer, C. T. 10445. 'Seled with his seale,' Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, i. 29, l. 12. - O. F. seel, 'a seal, or signet;' Cot. Mod. F. seau; Span. sello, sigilo; Ital. sigillo. - Lat. sigillum, a seal, mark; lit. 'a little sign;' allied to signum, a sign, mark; see SIGN. ¶ The A. S. sigle, an ornament, is directly from Lat. sigillum; so also G. siegel, Goth. sigljo, &c. Der. seal, verb, M. E. selen, as above; seal-engraving, seal-ing-wax.

SEAL (2), a sea-calf, marine animal. (E.) M. E. sele, Havelok, 755. — A. S. seolk, a seal; Grein, ii. 438. + Icel. selr. + Dan. sæl; also sealhund (seal-hound). + Swed. själ, själhund. + O. H. G. selah, cited by Grein. β. From a Teut. type SELHA, Fick, iii. 328. Cf. Gk. σέλαχος, the name of a fish. The orig. sense is perhaps simply 'marine'; from SAL, salt water, as found in Lat. sal, Gk. ἅλς; see Salt.

SEAM (1), a suture, a line formed by joining together two pieces, a line of union. (E.) M. E. seem, Wyclif, John, xix. 23. — A. S. seām, Ælfric's Hom. i. 20, l. 4 from bottom. + Du. zoom. + Icel. saumr. + Dan. and Swed. söm. + G. saum. β. All from a base SAUMA, a sewing, suture (Fick, iii. 325); formed with suffix -MA from ✓SU, to sew, whence Lat. su-ere, to sew, A. S. siwian, to sew; see Sew.

Der. seam-less, seam-y; also seam-str-ess, q. v.

SEAM (2), a horse-load; see Sumpter. [†]

SEAMSTRESS, SEMPSTRESS, a woman who sews seams. (E.; with F. suffix.) 'Seamster, and Seamstress, a man or woman that sows, makes up, or deals in linnen-clothes'; Phillips, ed. 1706. Only seamster is given in Minshew, ed. 1627. The suffix -ess is a F. fem. suffix, F. -esse (from Lat. -issa, Gk. -ισσα), as in princ-ess, mar-chion-ess. M. E. semster, Destruction of Troy, ed. Panton and Donaldson, l. 1585. — A. S. seādmestre. We find: 'Sartor, seāmere,' and 'Sartrix, seāmestre'; Wright's Vocab. i. 74. [Whence *seādmestre*s, Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, ed. Thorpe, p. 568, l. 10.] Formed from A. S. seām, a seam, by the addition of the A. S. suffix -estre, explained under Spinster. See Seam.

SEAR, SERE, withered. (E.) Spelt serre, Spenser, Shep. Kal. Jan. 37. M. E. seer; spelt seere, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 18, l. 25; seer, Rom. Rose, 4749. — A. S. seār, seere; only preserved in the derived verb; see below. + O. Du. sore, dry (Oudemans); zoor, 'dry, withered, or seare'; Hexham. + Low G. soor, dry; Brem. Wört. β. The A. S. ed is for Teut. au, and r prob. stands for s, as is so often the case; this brings us to a base SAUS, from the ✓SUS, to dry, preserved in Skt. śush, to become dry, to be withered, whence śushka, dried up, withered; see Benfey, who remarks that śush 'is for śush, and that for orig. sus, ś being put for s, by the assimilating influence of śh.' From the same root is Gk. αἰών, to parch, αὐρόπρος, dry, rough, whence E. austere. The Zend hush, to dry, proves that sus is the root; Curtius, i. 490. ¶ It is quite a mistake to connect E. sear (from root SUS) with Gk. ἐγρός (from root SKA); the resemblance, such as it is, is quite accidental. Der. sear, verb, to dry up, cauterise, render callous, Rich. III, iv. 1. 61, M. E. seeren, Prompt. Parv., A. S. seárian, to dry up, to wither or pine away, Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, iv. 6. 14. See Austere; and Sorrel (2).

SEARCH, to seek, examine, explore. (F., -L.) M. E. serchen, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 268, last line but one; better spelt cerchen, for which Strattmann refers to Lydgate, Minor Poems, 159, Mandeville's Travels, p. 315. — O. F. cercher (Burguy); mod. F. chercher, to seek. Cf. Ital. cercare, search, orig. to search; Prov. cercar, cerquar, sercar, to search (Bartsch); Span. cercar, to encircle, surround. — Lat. circare, to go round; hence, to go about, explore. — Lat. circus, a circle, ring; circum, round about. See Circum-, Circus, Ring. Der. search, sb., Temp. iii. 3. 10; search-ing, search-er, search-warrant. [†]

SEASON, proper time, fit opportunity. (F., -L.) M. E. seson, Chaucer, C. T. 1045; P. Plowman, B. i. 1; seysoun, King Alisaunder, 5251. — O. F. seson, seison, saizon; mod. F. saizon, 'season, due time'; Cot. Cf. Span. sazon, Port. sazão, seção; O. Prov. sadons, sasos, sazos (Bartsch). — Low Lat. sationem, acc. of satio, a season, time of year, occurring A. D. 1028 (Ducange). The same as Lat. satio, a sowing, planting, Verg. Georg. i. 215, ii. 319 (hence, the time of sowing or spring-time, which seems to have been regarded as the season, par excellence). — Lat. satus, pp. of serere, to sow. β. Serere appears to be a reduplicated form, put for sesere or si-se-re; from ✓SA, to sow, weakened form SI; see Sow (1). ¶ Besides the word season, we also find Span. estacion, used in the sense of 'season' or time as well as 'station'; and Ital. stagione, 'a season or time of the yeere,' Florio. These are, of course, from Lat. stationem, acc. of statio, a station, hence applied, we must suppose, to the four stations, stages, or seasons of the year; see Station. And it is extremely probable that the use of this word affected and extended the senses of season. Scheler would derive season also from Lat. stationem, but Diez and Littré argue to the contrary, and we ought to keep the Span. words estacion and sazon quite distinct. I have been informed that the prov. E. season is still occasionally used in Kent in the sense of 'sowing-time,' which is really a strong argument in favour of the derivation from stationem. And see Ducange. Der. season, verb, Merch. Ven. v. 107, Ascham, Toxophilus, b. ii., ed. Arber, p. 124; ♂ season-able, season-abl-y, season-able-ness; also season-ing, that which 'seasons,' or makes food more suitable and palatable. [†]

SEAT, a chair, bench, &c., to sit on. (Scand.) M. E. sete; spelt seete, Wyclif, Rev. ii. 13. — Icel. seti, a seat; Swed. säte; Dan. sæde. [The A. S. word is not säte (as in the dict.), but set, as in the A. S. Chron. an. 894; see Gloss. to Sweet's A. S. Reader, and Thorpe's edition. The more usual A. S. word is setl, for which see Settle.] + O. Du. saet, sate. + M. H. G. säze. β. The Teut. type is SAITI, from the verb which appears in E. as sit; see Sit. Der. seat, verb, Macb. i. 3. 136; dis-seat, Macb. v. 3. 21; un-seat.

SECANT, a line that cuts another, or that cuts a circle. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. secant-, stem of pres. part. of secare, to cut; see Section.

SECEDE, to withdraw oneself from others, go apart. (L.) A late word; in Todd's Johnson. — Lat. secedere, pp. secessus, to go away, withdraw. — Lat. se-, apart; and cedere, to go, go away. See Se- and Cede. Der. seced-er; also secession-, in Minshew, ed. 1627, from Lat. acc. secessionem, nom. secessio, formed from pp. secessus.

SECLUDE, to keep apart. (L.) 'Secluded from the Scriptures'; Frith's Works, p. 3, col. 2. — Lat. secludere, to shut off. — Lat. se-, apart; and claudere, to shut; see Se- and Clause, Close (1). Der. seclus-ion, formed from seclusus, pp. of secludere.

SECOND, next after the first, the ordinal number corresponding to two. (F., -L.) M. E. second; spelt secoude, Wyclif, John, iv. 54; secunde, Rob. of Glouc. p. 282, l. 15. Not a very common word, as other was usually employed instead, in early times, second being the only ordinal number of F. origin. (See Other.) — F. second, masc., seconde, fem., 'second'; Cot. — Lat. secundus, following, second; so called because it follows the first. Formed from sec-, base of sequi, to follow, with gerundive suffix -undus, which has the sense of a pres. part. See Sequence. Der. second, sb., used with reference to minutes, or first small subdivisions of an hour, &c., from F. seconde, 'the 24 part of a prime, a very small weight used by goldsmiths and jewellers,' Cot. Also second, verb, Merry Wives, i. 3. 114; second-er; second-ar-y, second-ar-i-ly, Tyndall, Works, p. 120, col. 1; second-ly; second-hand, i. e. at second hand; second-sight.

SECRET, hidden, concealed, unknown. (F., -L.) Spelt secrete in Palsgrave. The M. E. form is almost invariably secrece, Chaucer, C. T. 12077; spelt secre, P. Plowman, A. iii. 141; but we find secret in P. Plowman, B. iii. 145, C. iv. 183. — O. F. secreit (fem. secreie, Burguy), 'secret'; Cot. — Lat. secretus, secret; orig. pp. of secernere, to separate, set apart. — Lat. se-, apart; and cernere, to separate, sift; see Se- and Concern. The root is ✓SKAR; see Skill. Der. secret, sb., M. E. secrece, Chaucer, C. T. 16915, from Lat. secretum, sb., orig. neuter of secretus; secret-ly, secret-ness; secrec-y, Hamlet, i. 2. 207, a coined word, by analogy with constancy, &c.; secrete, verb, formed from Lat. secretus, considered as pp. of secernere; secret-ion, from O. F. secretion, 'a separating, also a thing separated or set apart'; Cot.; secret-ive, secret-ive-ly, secret-ive-ness, secret-or-y; also secret-ar-y, q. v.

SECRETARY, orig. a private amanuensis, confidant. (F., -L.) The sense of the word is now much extended; it is frequently used where little privacy is intended. In Shak. Hen. VIII, ii. 2. 116, iv. 1. 102. Palsgrave has: 'Secretarye, secretaire'; secretarye also occurs in a 15th-century poem called The Assemblie of Ladies, st. 49, pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 259, col. 1. — F. secretaire, 'a secretary, clerk'; Cot. — Low Lat. secretarium, acc. of secretarius, a confidential officer; cf. Lat. secretarium, a secret place, consistory, conclave. — Lat. secret-us, secret; with suffix -arius; see Secret. Der. secretary-ship; secretari-al.

SECT, a party who follow a particular teacher, or hold particular principles, a faction. (F., -L.) It is tolerably certain that the sense of the word has been obscured by a false popular etymology which has connected the word with Lat. secare, to cut; and it is not uncommon for authors to declare, with theological intolerance and in contempt of history, that a sect is so called from its being 'cut off' from the church. But the etymology from secare is baseless, and undeserving of serious mention. M. E. secte, used convertibly with sute (= suite) in P. Plowman, C. viii. 130, B. v. 495; see my note on the line. Both secte and sute are here used in the sense of 'suit of clothes.' — F. secte, 'a sect or faction; a rout or troupe; a company of one (most commonly bad) opinion'; Cot. — Low Lat. secta, a set of people, a following, suite; also, a quality of cloth, a suit of clothes; also, a suit or action at law; Lat. secta, a party, faction, sect, lit. 'a follower.' — Lat. sec- (as in sec-undus), base of sequi, to follow, with Aryan suffix -ia. Cf. Gk. ἐπίτης, a follower, attendant, from ἐπομαι, I follow. See Sequence. Der. sect-ar-y, Hen. VIII, v. 3. 70, from F. sectaire, 'a sectary, the ringleader, professor, or follower of a sect,' Cot.; sect-ar-i-an, sect-ar-i-an-ism. Doublet, sept.

SECTION, a cutting, division, parting, portion. (F., -L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627, and Cotgrave. — F. section, 'a section, cutting.' — Lat. sectionem, acc. of sectio, a cutting. — Lat. sectus, pp. of secare, to cut. — ✓SAK, to cut; whence also Russ. sieche, to hew, Lithuan. sykis, a stroke, cut, and E. saw, sickle, scythe. Der. section-al, section-al-ly; also sect-or, from Lat. sector, a cutter, used in late Lat. to mean a sector (part) of a circle; seg-ment, q.v. From the same root are sec-ant, co-sec-ant; bi-sect, dis-sect, inter-sect, tri-sect; in-sect; also scion, saw, sickle, sedge, scythe, risk.

SECULAR, pertaining to the present world, not bound by monastic rules. (F., — L.) In Levins. M. E. secular, secular, seculere; Chaucer, C. T. 9127, 15456. — O. F. seculier, 'secular, lay, temporall'; Cot. — Lat. secularis, secular, worldly, belonging to the age. — Lat. seculum, a generation, age. β. Prob. orig. 'a seed, race'; from ✓SA, to sow (Curtius); see Sow. Der. secular-ly, -ise, -is-at-ion, -ism. [†]

SECURE, free from care or anxiety, safe, sure. (L.) In Levins; accented seure in Hamlet, i. 5. 61. — Lat. securus, free from care. — Lat. se-, free from; and cura, care; see Se- and Cure. Der. secure-ly, -ness; secur-able; secur-ity, from F. securité, 'security', Cot., from Lat. acc. securitatem.

SEDAN, SEDAN-CHAIR, a portable vehicle, carried by two men. (F.) In Dryden, tr. of Juvenal, sat. i. 186. Named from Sedan, a town in France, N. E. of Paris; first seen in England, A. D. 1581; regularly used in London, A. D. 1634 (Haydn). Evelyn speaks of 'sedans, from hence [Naples] brought first into England by Sir Sanders Duncomb;' Diary, Feb. 8, 1645. Cf. F. sedan, cloth made at Sedan (Littre).

SEDATE, quiet, serious. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706; Blount (ed. 1674) has sedateness and sedation, of which the latter is obsolete. — Lat. sedatus, composed, calm; pp. of sedare, to settle, causal of sedere, to sit, cognate with E. sit; see Sit. Der. sedate-ly, -ness. Also sedat-ive, i. e. composing, from F. sedatif, 'quieting, assuaging'; Cot. And see sedentary, sediment, see (2).

SEDENTARY, sitting much, inactive. (F., — L.) Spelt sedentarie, Minshew, ed. 1627; and occurring in Cotgrave. — F. sedentaire, 'sedentary, ever-sitting'; Cot. — Lat. sedentarius, sedentary. — Lat. sedent-, pres. part. of sedere, to sit, cognate with E. sit; with suffix -arius; see Sit. Der. sedentari-ly, -ness.

SEDGE, a kind of flag or coarse grass in swamps. (E.) M. E. segge, Prompt. Parv.; Wright's Vocab. i. 191, col. 2. The pl. segges occurs as late as in Baret (1580). — A. S. segg, sedge; Gloss. to A. S. Leechdoms, vol. iii. — Low G. segge, sedge; in the dialect of Oldenburg; Bremen Wörterbuch. And cf. Irish seasg, seisg, sedge; W. hesg. β. The A. S. eg = gg; the lit. sense is 'cutter', i. e. sword-grass, from the sharp edge or sword-like appearance; cf. Lat. gladiolus, a small sword, sword-lily, flag. From the Teut. base SAG, to cut = ✓SAK, to cut; see Saw (1), Section. Der. sedg-ed, Temp. iv. 129; sedg-y.

SEDIMENT, dregs, that which settles at the bottom of a liquid. (F., — L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. — O. F. sediment, 'a sitting or settling of dregs'; Cot. — Lat. sedimentum, a settling, subsidence. — Lat. sedere, to sit, settle; with suffix -mentum. See Sit. Der. sediment-ar-y.

SEDITION, insurrection, rebellious conduct against the state. (F., — L.) M. E. sedicioun, Wyclif, Mark, xv. 7, in some MSS.; others have sedicioun. — O. F. sedition, 'a sedition, mutiny'; Cot. — Lat. seditionem, acc. of seditio, dissension, civil discord, sedition. β. Lit. 'a going apart', hence dissension; just as amb-ition is 'a going about'. — Lat. sed-, apart; and it-um, supine of ire, to go, from ✓I, to go. See Se- and Ambition. Der. sediti-ous, Com. Errors, i. 1. 12, from O. F. sediteux, 'seditions'; Cot.; sediti-ous-ly.

SEDUCE, to lead astray, entice, corrupt. (L.) In Levins, ed. 1570; Fryth's Works, p. 95, l. 16; Surrey, Ps. 73, l. 5 from end. — Lat. seducere, to lead apart or astray; pp. seductus. — Lat. se-, apart; and ducere, to lead; see Se- and Duct. Der. seduc-er; seduce-ment, a coined word; seduct-ion, from O. F. seduction, 'seduction', Cot., from Lat. acc. seductionem, which is from the pp. seductus. Also seduct-ive, a coined word, from the pp. seductus; seduct-ive-ly.

SEDULOUS, diligent, constantly attentive. (L.) Used by Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. ser. 4 (R.) [The sb. sedulity is in Minshew and Cotgrave.] Englished from Lat. sedulus, diligent, by change of -us into -ous, as in arduous, &c. β. Usually connected with sedere, to sit, with which the sense ill accords. Curtius refers it to ✓SAD, to go, as seen in Skt. asādyā, to approach, reach, attack, Gk. δδός, a way, δδέναι, to travel, Russ. khodite, to go, march. 'It does not mean, as Corssen (i. 2. 458) says, "sitting away for ever," assidurus, but agilis, active, properly always going, running hither and thither;' Curtius, i. 298. Der. sedulous-ly, -ness; also sedul-i-ty, from F. sedulité, 'sedulity', Cot., from Lat. acc. sedulitatem.

SEE (1), to perceive by the eye. (E.) M. E. seēn, sen, se; pt. sei, sey, say, seigh, seigh, seigh, saugh, sauh, saw; pp. sein, sezen, sen, seien, seie; Chaucer, C. T. 193, &c. — A. S. seōn, siōn; pt. t. seah, pl. sāwon, sēgon, pp. gesegen, gesewen; Grein. + Du. zien, pt. t. zag, pp. gezien; + Icel. sja, pt. t. sá, pp. sénn. + Dan. see. + Swed. se. + O. H. G. sehan; G. sehen. + Goth. saihwān, pt. t. sahw, pl. sehwum, pp. saihwans. β. All from a Teut. type SEHWAN (pt. t. sahw); Fick, iii. 315. Root unknown. Der. se-er, lit. one who sees, hence, a prophet, 1 Sam. ix. 9, spelt sear in the edit. of 1551; see-ing. And see sight.

SEE (2), the seat of a bishop. (F., — L.) Used by Spenser in the sense of 'seat' or throne; F. Q. iv. 10. 30. M. E. se, Chron. of England, 363, in Ritson, Met. Rom. vol. ii.; Trevisa, tr. of Higden, ii. 119; P. Pl. Crede, 558. — O. F. sed, se, a seat, see (Burguy). — Lat. sedem, acc. of sedes, a seat. — Lat. sedere, to sit; cognate with E. sit, q.v.

SEED, a thing sown, germ, first original or principle, descendants. (E.) M. E. seed, Chaucer, C. T. 598. — A. S. sed, seed; Grein, ii. 394. + Du. zaad. + Icel. seði, sði. + Dan. sad. + Swed. såd. + G. saat.

β. All from Teut. base SADI, seed; Fick, iii. 312; from ✓SA, to sow. See Sow. Der. seed-bud, -ling, -lobe, -s-man, -time; also seed-y, looking as if run to seed, hence shabby.

SEEK, to go in search of, look for, try to find. (E.) M. E. seken, Chaucer, C. T. 17. — A. S. secan, secean, to seek, pt. t. sōhte, pp. gesōht; Grein, ii. 418. + Du. zoeken. + Icel. sækja, written for soekja. + Dan. søge. + Swed. söka. + O. H. G. suohhan, M. H. G. suochen, G. suchen.

β. All from the base SÖKYAN, to seek; Fick, iii. 314. The A. S. secan is for soecan, i. e. the e is (as usual) a mutation of ó, and is due to sóc = sók, pt. t. of Goth. sakan, to strive, which is also the source of E. sake; see Sake. Seek is a weak causal verb. Der. seek-er, be-seech.

SEEL, to close up the eyes. (F., — L.) 'Come, seeling night;' Mach. iii. 2. 46. Spelt cele in Palsgrave. Orig. a term in falconry, to close up the eyelids of a hawk (or other bird) by sewing up the eyelids; see Sealed-dove in Halliwell, and seel in Nares. — O. F. siller, siller les yeux, 'to seel, or sow up, the eye-lids, thence also, to hoodwink, blind'; Cot. Also spelt ciller, 'to seel or sow up the eye-lids'; id. The latter is the better spelling. — O. F. cil, 'the brim of an eye-lid, or the single ranke of haire that growes on the brim'; id. — Lat. cilium, an eye-lid, an eye-lash; lit. 'a covering'. — ✓KAL, to hide, as in Lat. celare; cf. domi-cilium. See Domicile and Cell.

SEEM, to be fitting or suitable; to appear, look. (E.) The old sense 'to be fitting' is preserved in the derivative seemly. M. E. semen, Chaucer, C. T. 10283. — A. S. seman, geséman, to satisfy, conciliate; Grein. Hence the idea of 'suit,' whence that of 'appear suitable,' or simply 'appear.' These senses are probably borrowed from the related adj. seemly, which is rather Scand. than E.; see Seemly. + Icel. sama, put for soema, to honour, bear with, conform to; closely related to sæmr, adj., becoming, fit, and to sóma, to besee, become, befit. β. Here e is (as usual) the mutation of ó, and the word is connected with Icel. sóma, to besee, and Icel. sama, to besee; see further under Seemly. Der. seem-ing; also seem-ly, q. v.; be-seem, q. v.

SEEMLY, becoming, fit. (Scand.) M. E. seemlich, Ancren Riwle, p. 94, note i; semitli, seemly, Chaucer, C. T. 753. — Icel. sæmliigr, seemly, becoming; a longer form of sæmr, becoming, fit, with suffix -li-gr answering to A. S. -lic, like, and E. -ly. — Icel. sama, to besee, befit, become; cognate with Goth. samjan, to please. The lit. sense is 'to be the same,' hence to be like, to fit, suit, be congruent with. — Icel. samr, the same, cognate with E. Same, q. v. ¶ Thus seemly = same-like, agreeing with, fit; and seem is to agree with, appear like, or simply, to appear; the A. S. seman, to conciliate, is the same, with the act. sense 'to make like,' make to agree. Der. seemly, adv. (put for seem-li-ly); seemli-ness, Prompt. Parv.

SEER, a prophet, lit. 'one who sees.' (E.) See See.

SEESAW, motion to and fro, or up and down. (E.) In Pope, Prolog. to Satires, 323. A reduplicated form of saw; from the action of two men sawing wood (where the motion is up and down), or sawing stone (where the motion is to and fro). See Saw. It is used as adj., verb, and sb.; the orig. use was perhaps adjectival, as in Pope.

SEETHE, to boil. (E.) The pt. t. sod occurs in Gen. xxv. 29; the pp. sodden in Exod. xii. 9. M. E. sethen, Chaucer, C. T. 385; pt. t. sing. seeth, id. 8103, pl. sothen, soden, P. Plowman, B. xv. 288, C. xviii. 20; pp. soden, sothen, id. B. xv. 425. — A. S. sedðan, pt. t. sedð, pp. soden; Grein, ii. 437. + Du. zieden. + Icel. sjóða, pt. t. sauð, pl. suðu, pp. sodinn. + Dan. syde. + Swed. sjuda. + O. H. G. siodan. + G. sieden. The orig. sense was prob. 'to burn'; which explains the connection with Goth. sauths, sauts, a burnt-offering, sacrifice, Mark, xii. 33.

β. From the Teut. base SUTH, to boil, orig. to burn; Fick, iii. 326; allied to the Teut. base SWATH, to burn, singe, whence Icel. svida (pt. t. sveid), to burn, singe, svida, a burning, a roasting, G. schwadem, steam. See Fick, iii. 361. Der. sod, suds.

SEGMENT, a portion, part cut off. (L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. —Lat. segmentum, a piece cut off; put for sec-mentum. —Lat. sec-are, to cut; with suffix -mentum; see Section.

SEGREGATE, to separate from others. (L.) Not common. In Sir T. More, Works, p. 428 d; where it occurs as a pp., meaning 'separated'. —Lat. segregatus, pp. of segregare, to set apart, lit. 'to set apart from a flock'. —Lat. se-, apart; and greg-, stem of grex, a flock; see Se- and Gregarious. Der. segregat-ion, from O. F. segregation, 'a segregation,' Cot., from Lat. acc. segregationem.

SEIGNIOR, a title of honour. (F.,—L.) M. E. seignour, King Alisaunder, 1458; the derived word seignory is much commoner, as in Rob. of Brunne, p. 24, l. 18, Rob. of Glouc. p. 186, l. 18. —O. F. seigneur, 'a lord, sir, seignior;' Cot. —Lat. seniores, acc. of senior, elder, hence, an elder, a lord; see Senior. Der. seignior-y, as above, from O. F. seigneurie, 'seignior,' Cot.

SEIZE, to lay hold of, grasp, comprehend. (F.,—O. H. G.) M. E. saysen, seysen, orig. a law term, to give seisin or livery of land, to put one in possession of, also to take possession of; hence, to grasp; see Havelok, 251, 2513, 2518, 2931. —O. F. saisir, seisir, to put one in possession of, take possession of (Burguy). The same as Low Lat. sacire, to take possession of another's property. —O. H. G. sazzan, sezzan (put for sazjan), to set, put, place, hence, to put in possession of; mod. G. setzen, cognate with E. Set, q. v. Der. seiz-er, seiz-able, a coined word; seiz-ure, Troil. i. 1. 57, a coined word, answering to the F. infin. saisir just as pleasure does to plaisir. Also seis-in, seisin, possession of an estate, a law term, M. E. seisine, spelt seysyne in Rob. of Glouc. p. 382, l. 16, from O. F. seisine, the same as saisine, 'seisin, possession,' Cot.; where the suffix -ine answers to Lat. -ina; cf. Ital. sagina, seisin, possession. [†]

SELAH, a pause. (Heb.) In Ps. iii. 2; and elsewhere in the psalms. The meaning of the word is unknown, and cannot be certainly explained. Gesenius takes it to indicate a pause, and connects it with Heb. saldh, to rest. See Smith, Dict. of the Bible.

SELDOM, rarely, not often. (E.) M. E. seldom, P. Plowman, A. viii. 124; selden, B. vii. 137; selde, Chaucer, C. T. 1541. —A. S. seldan, seldom, seldum, seldom; Grein, ii. 426. β. The A. S. seldum is formed with an adverbial suffix -um which was orig. the inflectional ending of the dat. plural; just as in hwil-um, mod. E. whil-om, lit. 'at whiles' or at times, wundr-um, wondrously, lytl-um, little, miel-um, much, and the like; see March, A. S. Gram. § 251. This form easily passed into seldon or seldan, just as A. S. onsundr-on, asunder, stands for an earlier form on sundrum. Or we may regard the by-form seld-an as due to a different case-ending, such as the ordinary oblique case-ending of weak adjectives, perhaps a dat. sing., as in tô-eac-an, moreover. In this view, seldom is for seld-um, dat. pl., while seld-an is a dat. sing.

γ. This takes us back to an adj. seld, rare, only found as an adverb. 'Pat folc wundraþ þæs þe hit seldost gesehð' = the people wonder at that which it most seldom sees; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, cap. xxxix. § 3; where seldost is the superl. form of the adverb. We also find such compounds as seld-cūð, rare, seld-sine, seldom seen; Sweet, A. S. Reader. + Du. zelden, adv. + Icel. sjaldan, adv., seldom. + Dan. sielden, adv. + Swed. sällan (for säldan), adv. + G. selten; O. H. G. seldan.

δ. All these are adverbial forms from a Teut. adj. SELDA, rare, strange, appearing in A. S. seld (as above); Dan. adj. pl. sielten, rare; Swed. säll- in the comp. säll-sam, rare; Goth. silda- in comp. silda-leiks, wonderful; G. sel- in sel-sam, strange. Fick, iii. 328; where it is pointed out that the base SIL appears in Goth. ana-sil-an, to become silent, Mark, iv. 39, and in Lat. sil-ere, to be silent; the idea of 'silence' being closely connected with those of astonishment, wonder, and rarity. See Silent.

SELECT, choice. (L.) In Shak. Hamlet i. 3. 74. —Lat. selectus, select, chosen; pp. of selegere, to choose. —Lat. se-, apart; and legere, to choose. See Se- and Legend. Der. select-ness; also select, verb, Cor. i. 6. 81; select-ion, sb., from Lat. acc. selectionem.

SELF, one's own person. (E.) M. E. self, sometimes used in the sense of 'same' or 'very'; dat. selus; 'right in the selus place' = just in the very place, Chaucer, C. T. 11706. —A. S. self, also seolf, silf, siolf, sylf, self; Grein, ii. 427, where numerous examples are given. + Du. zelf. + Icel. sjálf; old form sjælf. + Dan. selv. + Swed. sjelf. + Goth. silba. + G. selbe, selb-st.

β. All from a Teut. base SELBA, self; Fick, iii. 329. The origin is unknown; but perhaps SELBA is for SEL-BA, where se is the same as Lat. se, Skt. sva, one's own self, and lib- is the same as in the base of Goth. laiba, a remnant, bi-laib-jan, to be left. If this be right, the orig. sense is 'left to oneself.' Der. self-denial, self-evident, self-existent, self-possession, self-righteous, self-same, self-sufficient, self-willed. Also self-ish, not an old word; self-ish-ness, Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2. l. 1052. Also my-self, A. S. mín self, where mín is the possessive pron. of the 1st person: thy-self, A. S. þín self, where þín is the possessive pron. of the second person; him-self, where the A. S. phrase is he self, nom., his selves, gen., him selfum, dat., hine selfne, acc. (see Grein); her-self, due to A. S. hyre selfre, dat. fem.; &c. For the use of these forms in M. E. and A. S., see examples in Stratmann and Grein. Also selu-age, q. v.

SELL (1), to hand over or deliver in exchange for money or some other valuable. (E.) M. E. sellen, Wyclif, Luke, xii. 33; sillen, Matt. xix. 21. —A. S. sellan, sillan, syllan, to give, hand over, deliver; Grein, ii. 429. + Icel. selja, to hand over to another. + Dan. selge. + Swed. sälja. + M. H. G. sellen; O. H. G. saljan. + Goth. saljan, to bring an offering, to offer a sacrifice. β. All from a Teut. base SALVAN, to offer, deliver, hand over. This is a causal form, derived from the sb. which appears in E. as Sale, q. v. γ. The Teut. base of sale, sb., is SALA, a handing over, surrender, delivery; Fick, iii. 319. Allied to Lithuan. sulyti, to proffer, offer, pa-sula, sb., an offer. Root unknown. Der. sell-er.

SELL (2), a saddle. (F.,—L.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 2. 11, 3. 12. M. E. selle, a seat, Wyclif, 2 Macc. xiv. 21. —O. F. selle, 'a stool, a seat, also, a saddle;' Cot. —Lat. sella, a seat. Put for sed-la, from sedere, to sit; see Settle (1), and Sit.

SELVAGE, SELVEDGE, a border of cloth, forming an edge that needs no hem. (Du.) In Exod. xxvi. 4, xxxvi. 11; spelt seluege in the edit. of 1551. It merely means self-edge, but it was borrowed from Dutch. 'The self-edge makes show of the cloth;' Ray's Proverbs, ed. 1737. —O. Du. selfegge, the selvage (Kilian, cited by Wedgwood); from self, self, and egge, edge. The more usual Du. word is zelfkant, for selfkant. 'Egge, an edge, or a selvage; kant, the edge, brinke, or seame of anything; de zelfkant, the selvage of cloth;' Hexham. See Self and Edge.

SEMAPHORE, a kind of telegraph. (Gk.) A late word, not in Todd's Johnson, and little used. It was once used for a telegraph worked with arms projecting from a post, the positions of the arms giving the signals. Coined from Gk. σημα, a sign; and φορεά, a carrying, from φέρειν, to bear, carry, cognate with E. Bear, vb.

SEMBLANCE, an appearance. (F.,—L.) M. E. semblaunce, Rom. of the Rose, 425. —O. F. semblance, 'a semblance, shew, seeming;' Cot. Formed with suffix -ance (= Lat. -antia) from sembl-er, 'to seem, or make shew of; also, to resemble;' Cot. —Lat. simulare, to assume the appearance of, simulate; see Simulate. Cf. re-semblance.

SEMI-, half. (L.) Lat. semi-, half; reduced to sem- before a vowel. + Gk. ἡμι-, half. + A. S. sám-, half; as in sám-wis, half wise, not very wise; Grein, ii. 388, 390. + Skt. sámi, half; which Benfey considers = sámyá, old instrumental case of sámya, equality, from sama, even, same, equal, like, cognate with E. Same. Thus semi- denotes 'in an equal manner,' referring to an exact halving or equitable division; and is a mere derivative of sama. Doublet, hemi-.

SEMI-BREVE, half a breve, a musical note. (Ital.,—L.) From Ital. semibreve, 'a semibreve in musike;' Florio, ed. 1598. —Ital. semi-, half; and breve, a short note. See Semi- and Breve. ¶ Similar formations are seen in semi-circle, semi-circumference, semi-color, semi-diameter, semi-fluid, semi-quaver, semi-tone, semi-transparent, semi-vocal, semi-vowel; all coined words, made by prefixing semi-, and presenting no difficulty.

SEMINAL, relating to seed. (F.,—L.) Sir T. Browne has seminality, sb., Vulg. Errors, b. vi. c. 1. § 2. —F. seminál, adj. 'of seed;' Cot. —Lat. seminális, relating to seed. —Lat. semin-, stem of semen, seed. —Lat. base se-, appearing in se-ui, pt. t. of serere, to sow; and suffix -men = Aryan suffix -man. Serere is cognate with E. Sow, q. v. Der. semin-ar-y, q. v. Also semin-at-ion (rare), from Lat. seminatio, a sowing, which from seminare, to sow, derived from semen.

SEMINARY, a place of education. (L.) The old sense was a seed-garden. 'As concerning seminaries and nourse-gardens;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xvii. c. 10. —Lat. seminarium, a seed-garden, nursery garden, seed-plot; neut. of seminarius, belonging to seed. —Lat. semin-, stem of semen, seed; and suffix -arius. See Seminal.

SEMPITERNAL, everlasting. (F.,—L.) In Minsheu and Cotgrave. Altered from F. sempiternel, 'sempiternal;' Cot. —Lat. sempitern-us, everlasting; with suffix -alis. —Lat. semp-, for semper, ever; with suffixes -ter- and -nus; cf. noct-tur-nus (for noct-tur-nus) from the stem noct-; these suffixes answer to Aryan -tar and -na. β. Lat. sem-per is for sama-per, where sama is 'same,' as in the prefix semi-; and per is 'through,' the same word as the prep. per; see Semi- and Per-. The sense of semper is, accordingly, 'the same through,' i. e. always the same, lasting in the same condition.

SEMPSTER, SEMPSTRESS, the same as Seamstress, q. v. SENARY, belonging to six. (L.) The senary scale (scale by sixes) is a mathematical term. —Lat. senarius, consisting of six each. —Lat. seni, six each; for sex-ni. —Lat. sex, six, cognate with E. six; see Six.

SENATE, a council of elders. (F.,—L.) M. E. senat; spelt senakt, Layamon, 25388. — F. senat, 'a senat'; Cot. — Lat. senatum, acc. of senatus, the council of elders. — Lat. sen-, base of sen-ex, old, sen-ium, old age; with pp. suffix -atus; so that sen-atus = grown old. β. From the base SANA, old; whence Vedic Skt. sana, old (Benfey). O. Gk. ἥως, old; Goth. sin-eigs, old, sin-ista, eldest; Irish and Gael. sean, W. hen, old. See Fick, i. 225, 793. See Senior. Der. senat-or, M. E. senat-our, Chaucer, C. T. 5430, 5464, from O. F. senatour (Littré), from Lat. acc. senatorem; altered to senator to make it like the Lat. nom. case. Hence senator-ship, senator-i-al, senator-i-al-ly.

SEND, to cause to go, despatch. (E.) M. E. senden, pt. t. sende, sente; pp. sent; Chaucer, C. T. 5511, 5528. — A. S. sendan, pt. t. sende, pp. sended, Grein, ii. 431. + Du. zenden. + Icel. senda. + Dan. sende. + Swed. sända. + Goth. sandjan. + M. H. G. senten, G. senden. β. The theoretical Teut. form is SANTHYAN, Fick, iii. 319; this is a weak causal verb, 'to make to go,' from the strong verb SINTHAN (pt. t. SANTH), to go, to travel, of which numerous traces remain, viz. in O. H. G. sinnan (for sindan), to go, go forth, mod. G. sinnen (pt. t. sann) only in the metaphorical sense 'to go over in the mind,' to reflect upon, think over, just as in the case of the related Lat. sentire, to feel, perceive; Icel. sinni (for sinthi), a walk, journey, also a time; Goth. sinth, a time; A. S. sith (for sinth), a journey, a time, whence sithian, to travel (Grein), M. H. G. sint, a way, time, W. hynt (for sint), a way, course, journey, expedition. Cf. also O. Lithuan. sintu, I send, mod. Lith. siunziau, infin. susti; Nesselmann, p. 470. And see Sense. γ. The Aryan form of the base is SANT, to go towards; whence SENTA, a way, answering to O. Irish sét = W. hynt, a way; Fick, i. 794. Der. send-er.

SENDAL, CENDAL, a kind of rich thin silken stuff. (F., — Low Lat., — Skt.) See Sendall and Cendal in Halliwell. M. E. sendal, P. Plowman, B. vi. 11; Chaucer, C. T. 442. — O. F. sendal (Roquefort), also cendal (Burguy). Cf. Port. cendal, fine linen or silk; Span. cendal, light thin stuff; Ital. zendalo, zendado, 'a kind of fine thin silken stuff, called taffeta, sarcenet, or sendall,' Florio. — Low Lat. cendalum; also spelt cendale, cendatum, sendatum, sendadum, cindadus, cindatus. Cf. also Gk. σινδών, fine linen. So called because brought from India. — Skt. sindhu, the river Indus, the country along the Indus, Scinde. — Skt. syand, to flow. See Indigo.

SENESCHAL, a steward. (F., — Teut.) In Spenser, F. Q. iv. 1. 12. M. E. seneschal, P. Plowman, C. i. 93. — O. F. seneschal, 'a seneschal, the president of a precinct;' Cot. Cf. Span. senescal, Ital. siniscalco, a seneschal, steward. The orig. signification must have been 'old (i.e. chief) servant,' as the etymology is undoubtedly from the Goth. sins, old (only recorded in the superl. sin-ista, eldest), and skalks, a servant. The Goth. sins is cognate with Lat. sen-ex, old. The word mar-shal is a similar compound. See Senior and Marshal.

SENILE, old. (L.) A late word; in Todd's Johnson. — Lat. senilis, old. — Lat. sen-, base of sen-ex, old, with suffix -ilis. See Senior. Der. senil-i-ty.

SENIOR, elder, older. (L.) In Shak. L. L. L. i. 2. 10; cf. senior-junior, L. L. L. iii. 182; spelt seniour, Tyndale, Mark, vii. 3 (1526). — Lat. senior, older; comparative from the base sen-, old, found in sen-ex, old, sen-ium, old age. From the Aryan base SANA, old; see Senate. Der. senior-i-ty. Doublets, signior, señior, seignior, sire, sir. [†]

SENNA, the dried leaflets of some kinds of cassia. (Ital., — Arab.) Spelt sena in Phillips, ed. 1706; the older name is seny or senie, which is a F. form, from O. F. senné (Cot.) Minshew's Span. Dict. has 'sen, seny;' ed. 1623. — Ital. sena (Florio). — Arab. saná, senna; Palmer's Pers. Dict., col. 361; Rich. Dict. p. 851.

SENNIGHT, a week. (E.) Spelt senyght in Palsgrave; a contraction of seven night; see Seven and Night.

SENSE, a faculty by which objects are perceived, perception, discernment. (F., — L.) It does not appear to be in early use; Palsgrave gives sensualness and sensualityte, but not sense. Levins has sensible and sensual, but also omits sense. Yet it is very common in Shakespeare. 'And shall sensitive things be so sencelesse as to resist sence?' Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, poem ix. l. 137; ed. Grosart, ii. 25. — F. sens, 'sence, wit,' Cot. — Lat. sensum, acc. of sensus, feeling, sense. — Lat. sensus, pp. of sentire, to feel, perceive. β. From the Aryan base SANT, to direct oneself towards, whence also not only G. sinnen, to think over, reflect upon, but also Aryan SENTA, a way, and E. send; see Send. See Fick, i. 793. Der. sens-ness, senseless-ly, senseless-ness; sens-ible, Gower, C. A. iii. 88, from F. sensible, 'sensible,' Cot., from Lat. sensibilis; sens-ibl-y, sensible-ness, sensibil-i-ty. Also sens-it-ive, from F. sensitif, 'sensitive,' Cot.; sens-it-ive-ly, sens-it-ive-ness; sens-at-ium, Phillips, from Lat. *sensatio, a coined word from Lat. sensatus, endued with sense; sens-at-ion-al, sens-at-ion-al-ism. Also sens-or-i-um, from late Lat. sensorium, the seat of the senses (White); sens-or-i-al. And see sens-u-al, sent-ence, sent-i-ment.

From the same source we also have as-sent, con-sent, dis-sent, re-sent; in-sens-ate, non-sense, pre-sent-i-ment, scent.

SENSUAL, affecting the senses, given to the pleasures of sense. (L.) In Levins; Palsgrave has sensualness and sensualityte (sensuality) in his list of sbs.; and sensual in his list of adjectives. From Late Lat. sensualis, endowed with feeling; whence sensualitas, sensibility (White). Formed (with suffix -alis), from sensu, crude form of sensus, sense; see Sense. Der. sensual-ly; sensual-i-ly, from F. sensualité, 'sensuality,' Cot.; sensual-ness, sensual-ise, sensual-ism, sensual-ist. Also sensu-ous, a coined word, used by Milton; see Rich. and Todd's Johnson.

SENTENCE, an opinion, maxim, decree, series of words containing a complete thought. (F., — L.) M. E. sentence, Ancren Riwle, p. 348, l. 14. — F. sentence, 'a sentence,' Cot. — Lat. sententia, a way of thinking, opinion, sentiment. Put for *sententia, from the stem of the pres. part. of sentire, to feel, think; see Sense. Der. sentence, vb., Meas. for Meas. ii. 2. 55; sententious, As You Like It, v. 4. 66, from F. sententieux, 'sententious,' Cot., from Lat. sententiosus; sententious-ly, -ness. Also sentient, feeling, from stem of pres. part. of sentire, to feel.

SENTIMENT, thought, judgment, feeling, opinion. (F., — L.) M. E. sentement, Chaucer, Prol. to Legend of Good Women, l. 69. [Afterwards conformed to a supposed Lat. form *sentimentum, not used.] — O. F. sentement, 'a feeling,' Cot. Formed as if from Lat. *sentimentum, a word made up of the suffix -mentum and the verb sentire, to feel. See Sense. Der. sentiment-al, sentiment-al-ly, sentiment-al-ism, -ist.

SENTINEL, one who keeps watch, a soldier on guard. (F., — Ital., — L.?) Spelt centonell, Spenser, F. Q. i. 9. 41; sentinel, Macb. ii. 1. 53. — F. sentinelle, 'a sentinell, or sentry,' Cot. — Ital. sentinella, 'a watch, a sentinell, a souldier which is set to watch at a station,' Florio. Cf. Span. centinela, a sentinel. β. The word is certainly of Ital. origin; and it does not seem possible to derive it from anything but Ital. sentina, 'a sinke, a priue, a companie or filthie packe of lewde rascals, also, the pumpe of a ship;' Florio. The most likely account is that it is equivalent to Lat. sentinator, one who pumps bilge-water out of a ship, from sentina, bilge-water, or the hold of a ship. It is, indeed, quite possible for the word to have arisen as a naval word, afterwards transferred to military affairs. The special sense may be due to the constant attention which a ship's pump requires; the man in charge of the pump, if the ship is leaky, must not quit his post. The origin of sentina is uncertain.

¶ Sometimes explained from Lat. sentire, to perceive; as if a sentinel meant a watcher, scout; but this cannot be right, as it does not account for the -in-. Derived by Wedgwood from O. F. sentine, a path (Roquefort), due to Lat. semita, a path; this does not help us; for the word is Italian, not French. See Sentry. [†]

SENTRY, a sentinel, soldier on guard. (F., — Ital., — L.?) Spelt sentrie, in Minshew, ed. 1627; senteries, pl., Milton, P. L. ii. 412; sentry in Cotgrave, s.v. sentinelle. There is no trace of such a form in F. or Ital.; it can only be an E. corruption of sentinel, which was probably understood (in E. popular etymology) as being due to F. sentier, a path; an idea taken from the sentinel's beat. [Sentier is an extension from O. F. sente, a path, which is from the Lat. semita, a path.] See Sentinel. ¶ Wedgwood refers us to O. F. sentierat, a path (Roquefort), and takes this to be the real etymology. There are difficulties every way, but the difficulties are least if we take sentinel as the orig. word, and sentry as a corruption. The Ital. sentinella, a sentinel, is quite separate from sentiero, a path. Der. sentry-box. [†]

SEPARATE, to part, divide, sever. (L.) We should have expected to find separate first used as a pp., in the sense 'set apart;' but I do not find that such was the case. Levins, Shakespeare, and Minshew recognise only the verb, which occurs as early as in Tyndale, Workes, p. 116, col. 2; see Richardson. — Lat. separatus, pp. of separare, to separate. — Lat. se-, apart; and parare, to provide, arrange. Cf. Lat. separ, adj., different, separate. See Se- and Parade, Parse. Der. separate, adj., from pp. separatus; separate-ly; separation, from F. separation, 'separation,' Cot.; separat-ism, separat-ist. Also separ-able, from Lat. separabilis; separabl-y. Doublet, sever.

SEPOY, one of the native troops in India. (Pers.) 'Sepoys (a corruption of sipāhī, Hindostanee for a soldier), the term applied to the native troops in India;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. The word is, however, a Persian one. — Pers. sipāhī, 'a horseman, one soldier;' properly an adj., 'military, belonging to an army;' Rich. Dict. p. 807. — Pers. sipāh, supāh, an army; sipāh, supāh, sapāh, an army; id. pp. 807, 808. ¶ The Pers. ā being sounded as E. au in maul, the spelling sepay gives the right sound very nearly.

SEPT, a clan. (F., — L.) It is chiefly used of the Irish clans. Spenser has 'the head of that sept;' and again, 'whole nations and septs of the Irish;' View of the State of Ireland, Globe ed., p. 611, col. 1. 'The Irish man . . . tearmeth anie one of the English sept;' &c.;

Holinshed, Descr. of Ireland, cap. 8. 'Five of the best persons of every sept' [of the Irish]; Fuller's Worthies; Kent (R.) 'All of the old Irish septs of Ulster'; Clarendon, Civil Wars, iii. 430 (R.) Wedgwood says: 'a clan or following, a corruption of the synonymous sect.' He cites from Notes and Queries (2nd Series, iii. 361, May 9, 1857), two quotations from the State Papers, one dated A. D. 1537, which speaks of 'M'Morgho and his kinsmen, O'Byrne and his septe,' and another dated A. D. 1536, which says 'there are another secte of the Berkes and divers of the Irishry towards Sligo.' Wedgwood adds: 'The same corruption is found in Prov. cepte. "Vist que lo dit visconte non era eretge ni de lor cepte" = seeing that the said viscount was not heretic nor of their sect; Sismondi, Litt. Provenç. 215.' This is doubtless the correct solution, esp. when we consider (1) that sect used to have the sense of 'a following;' and (2) that the change from k to p is not uncommon; cf. Gk. πέντε, Skt. pach, to cook, with Lat. coquere. See Sect. Doublet, chaucer.

SEPTEMBER, the ninth month. (L.) M. E. Septembre, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 10. l. 3. It seems to be meant for the Latin, not the French form; the other months being mostly named in Latin. — Lat. september, the name of the seventh month of the Roman year. — Lat. septem, seven, cognate with E. seven; and the suffix -ber, of uncertain origin. See Seven.

SEPTENARY, consisting of seven. (L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, iv. 12. 12. A mathematical term. — Lat. septenarius, consisting of seven. — Lat. septēni, pl., seven apiece, by sevens; put for septem-ni. — Lat. septem, seven; with Aryan suffix -na. See Seven.

SEPTENNIAL, happening every seven years, lasting seven years. (L.) Used by Burke; see Todd's Johnson. Formed, with suffix -al, from Lat. septenni-um, a period of seven years. — Lat. septenni-s, adj., of seven years. — Lat. sept-, for septem, seven; and annus, a year. See Seven and Annual. Der. septennial-ly.

SEPTUAGENARY, belonging to seventy years. (L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 9, § 4, last line. — Lat. septuagenarius, belonging to the number seventy. — Lat. septuagēni, seventy each; distributive form of septuaginta, seventy. — Lat. septua-, due to septem, seven; and -ginta = -cinta, short for decinta, tenth, from decem, ten. See Seven and Ten. Der. septuagenari-an. So also septuagesima, lit. seventieth, applied to the Third Sunday before Lent, about 70 days before Easter; from Lat. septuagesima (dies), fem. of septuagesimus, seventieth, ordinal of septuaginta, seventy. Also septua-gint, the Greek version of the Old Testament, said to have been made by 70 translators; used by Burnet (Johnson).

SEPULCHRE, a tomb. (F., — L.) M. E. sepulcre, in early use; O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 95, l. 11. — O. F. sepulcre, later sepulchre, 'a sepulchre, tomb'; Cot. — Lat. sepulcrum (also ill-spelt sepulchrum), a tomb. — Lat. sepul-, appearing in sepul-tus, pp. of sepelire, to bury; with suffix -crum (Aryan -ka-ra?). β. It is probable that the orig. sense of sepelire was 'to honour' or 'to shew respect to'; it answers to Vedic Skt. saparya, to worship, a denom. verb from a lost noun *sapas, honour. This sb. is from Skt. sap, to honour, worship. The reference is to the respectful rites accompanying burial. Der. sepulchr-al, from F. sepulchral, 'sepulchral'; Cot.; also sepul-ture, Rob. of Glouc. p. 166, l. 12, from F. sepulture, 'sepulture, a burying'; Cot., from Lat. sepultura, burial, due to pp. sepultus.

SEQUEL, consequence, result. (F., — L.) Spelt sequele in Levins, and by Surrey; see Tottell's Miscellany, ed. Arber, p. 218, l. 8. — O. F. sequele, 'a sequell'; Cot. — Lat. sequela, that which follows, a result. — Lat. sequi, to follow; see Sequence.

SEQUENCE, order of succession, succession. (F., — L.) In Shak. K. John, ii. 96; Gascoigne, Works, ed. Hazlitt, i. 422, l. 5. — F. sequence, 'a sequence at cards'; sequences, pl., 'answering verses'; Cot.; with which cf. the passage in Gascoigne. — Lat. sequentia, sb., a following. — Lat. sequens, the stem of pres. part. of sequi, to follow. — ✓ SAK, to follow; whence Skt. sach, to follow; Gk. ἐποῦαι, I follow. Der. sequit, following, from the pres. part. of sequi. Also (from sequi) con-sec-ut-ive, con-sequ-ence, ex-ec-ute (for ex-sec-ute), ex-equ-ies (for ex-sequ-ies), ob-sequ-ies, per-sec-ute, pro-sec-ute, sequ-el, sequ-ester, sub-sequ-ent. Also sect, sec-ond, sue, en-sue, pur-sue, pur-suit-ant; suit, suit-a-ble, suit-or, suite, pur-suit. See Sue.

SEQUESTER, to set aside or apart. (F., — L.) 'Him hath God the father specially sequestred and seuered and set aside'; Sir T. More, Works, p. 1046 f. And see sequestration in Blount's Nomolexicon. We find also: 'Hic sequesterarius, a sequesterer,' in the 15th century; Wright's Vocab. i. 210, col. 2; and see Wycliff, i. Macc. xi. 34. — F. sequestrier, 'to sequester (sic), or lay aside'; Cot. — Lat. sequestrare, to surrender, remove, lay aside. — Lat. sequester, a mediator, agent or go-between, also a depositary or trustee. β. Perhaps orig. a follower, one who attends; it seems to be formed as if = *sequenter, i. e. from the pres. part. of sequi, to follow, attend, pursue, with Aryan suffix -tar, of the agent. See Sequence. Der.

sequester-ed, set apart, retired; sequester, sb., seclusion, Oth. iii. 4. 40; also sequester-ate, sequester-at-or, sequester-at-ion.

SEQUIN, a gold coin of Italy. (F., — Ital., — Arab.) Also spelt chequin, Shak. Pericles, iv. 2. 28; also zechin, which is the Ital. form. — F. sequin, 'a small Italian coin'; Cot. — Ital. zecchino, 'a coin of gold current in Venice'; Florio. — Ital. zecca, 'a mint or place of coining'; id. — Arab. sikkat (pronounced sikkah), 'a die for coins'; Rich. Dict. p. 838.

SERAGLIO, a place of confinement, esp. for Turkish women. (Ital., — L.) α. The peculiar use of this word, in mod. E., is due to a mistake. The orig. sense is merely an enclosure, and it was sometimes so used. 'I went to the Ghetto [in Rome], where the Jewes dwell as in a suburbe by themselves. . . I passed by the Piazza Judea, where their seraglio begins; for, being environ'd with walls, they are lock'd up every night'; Evelyn, Diary, Jan. 15, 1645. We find it in the modern sense also: 'to pull the Ottoman Tyrant out of his seraglio, from between the very armes of his 1500 concubines'; Howell, Foreign Travel (1642), sect. ix; ed. Arber, p. 45. — Ital. seraglio, 'an inclosure, a close, a padock, a parke, a cloister or secluse'; Florio, ed. 1598. β. There was at that date no such restricted use of the Ital. word as our modern sense indicates. Cotgrave, indeed, translates O. F. serail by 'the palace wherein the great Turk mueth up his concubines'; yet he also gives serail d'un huis, the bolt of a door, which is the older sense. γ. The Ital. seraglio is formed with suffix -aglio (Lat. -aculum) from the verb serrare, 'to shut, lock, inclose'; Florio. Cf. Low Lat. seracula, a small bolt. — Low Lat. serare, to bar, bolt, shut in. — Lat. sera, a bar, bolt. — Lat. serere, to join or bind together; see Series. δ. It is certain that the modern use of seraglio was due to confusion with Pers. (and Turkish) sarây or serâs, 'a palace, a grand edifice, a king's court, a seraglio'; Rich. Dict. p. 821. It is equally certain that the Pers. word is not the real source of the Italian one, though frequently thought to be so by those who condemn the suffix -aglio as needing no explanation, and do not care to investigate the old use of the word in Italian. See Serried.

SERAPH, an angel of the highest rank. (Heb.) Spenser has seraphims, Hymn of Heavellie Beautie, l. 94. The A. V. has seraphim, Isa. vi. 2; this is the form of the Hebrew plural, out of which has been evolved the E. sing. seraph. — Heb. serâphim, seraphs, exalted ones. 'Gesenius connects it with an Arabic term meaning high or exalted; and this may be regarded as the generally received etymology'; Smith, Dict. of the Bible. Or else (see Addenda) from Heb. sâraph, to burn. Der. seraph-ic, seraph-ic-al, seraph-ic-al-ly.

SERE, withered; the same as Sear, q. v.

SERECLOTH, waxed cloth; see Cerecloth, Cere.

SERENE, calm. (L.) In Milton, P. L. iii. 25, v. 123, 734. — Lat. serenus, bright, clear, calm (of weather). Cf. Gk. σελήνη, the moon (the bright one); σελας, brightness. The form of the root is ✓ SWAR, to shine; cf. Skt. svar, splendour, heaven; and see Solar. See Curtius, ii. 171. Der. serene-ly, 'ness; seren-i-ty, from F. serenité, 'serenity'; Cot., from Lat. acc. serenitatem. Also seren-ade, in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, from F. serenade (Cot.), which from Ital. serenata, 'music given under gentlewomen's windows in a morning or evening'; Florio; properly pp. of Ital. serenare, 'to make cleere, faire, and lightsome, to looke cheerfullie and merrilie'; id. Milton uses the Ital. form serenate, P. L. iv. 769. Hence serenade, verb.

SERF, a slave attached to the soil. (F., — L.) A late word; in Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. — F. serf, 'a servant, thrall'; Cot. — Lat. servum, acc. of servus, a slave; see Serve. Der. serf-dom, a coined word, with E. suffix -dom.

SERGE, a cloth made of twilled worsted or silk. (F., — L., — Chinese?) Now used of stuff made of worsted; when of silk, it is called silk serge, though the etymology shews that the stuff was orig. of silk only. In Shak. 2 Hen. VI. iv. 7. 27. — F. serge, 'the stuff called serge'; Cot. — Lat. serica, fem. of sericus, silken; we also find serica, neut. pl., silken garments. — Lat. Sericus, of or belonging to the Seres, i. e. Chinese. See Silk.

SERGEANT, SERJEANT, a lawyer of the highest rank; a non-commissioned officer next above a corporal. (F., — L.) Orig. a law-term, in early use. M. E. sergantes, pl., officers, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 177, l. 2; sergeant, Chaucer, C. T. 311. — O. F. sergant, serjant (Burguy), later sergent, 'a sergeant, officer'; Cot. — Low Lat. servientem, acc. of serviens, a servant, vassal, soldier, apparitor; Ducange. The Low Lat. serviens ad legem = sergeant-at-law. — Lat. serviens, pres. part. of servire, to serve; see Serve. Der. sergeant-major, sergeant-y, sergeant-ship. Doublet, servant.

SERIES, a row, order, succession, sequence. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. series, a row, series. — Lat. serere, pp. sertus, to join together, bind. + Gk. εἶπευ, to fasten, bind; cf. αἶψα, a rope. And cf. Skt. sarit, thread. β. The form of the root is perhaps SWAR rather than SAR; see Curtius, i. 441. To this root 'the meanings swing, hang, bind attach themselves; Curtius. Der. seri-al, arranged in a series; modern, not in Todd's Johnson; hence seri-al-ly. Der. (from same root) ser-aglio, ser-i-ed. Also (from pp. sertus) as-ert, con-cert, de-ert (1), dis-ert-at-ion, exert (for ex-ert), in-ert.

SERIOUS, weighty, solemn, in earnest. (F., -L.) 'So serious and earnest remembrance;' Sir T. More, p. 480g. 'Seryouse, earnest, serieuze;' Palsgrave. - O. F. serieux (mod. F. sérieux), omitted by Cotgrave, but recorded by Palsgrave, and in use in the 14th cent. (Littré). - Low Lat. seriosus, serious; Ducange. - Lat. serius, grave, earnest.

β. Root uncertain; the long e in serius induces Fick to compare it with G. schwer (O. H. G. swāri), weighty, heavy; from a root SWAR; see Fick, i. 842. Der. serious-ly, -ness.

SERMON, a discourse on a Scripture text. (F., -L.) M. E. sermoun, sermun; in early use; see Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 186, title. The verb sermonen, to preach, occurs in O. E. Homilies, i. 81, l. 14. - F. sermon, 'a sermon;' Cot. - Lat. sermone, acc. of sermo, a speech, discourse. β. Root uncertain; but it seems reasonable to connect it with A. S. swerian, to speak; see Swear.

SERIOUS, adj.; see Serum.

SERPENT, a reptile without feet, snake. (F., -L.) M. E. serp-ent, Chaucer, C. T. 10826. - F. serpent, 'a serpent;' Cot. - Lat. serp-entem, acc. of serpens, a serpent, lit. a creeping thing; pres. part. of serpere, to creep. - ✓ SARP, to creep; whence Skt. śarp, to creep, Gk. ἐρπειν, to creep, Skt. śarpa, a snake; also Lat. reperere, to creep. And see Slip.

β. The root SARP is an extension of ✓ SAR, to glide, flow; see Salt. Der. serp-ent-ine, adj., Minshew, from F. serpentin, Lat. serpentinus; serp-ent-ine, a name for a kind of gun, Skelton, ed. Dyce, i. 124, l. 159.

SERRATED, notched like a saw. (L.) A botanical term; see examples in R. - Lat. serratus, notched like a saw. - Lat. serra, a saw.

β. Prob. for sec-ra, from secare, to cut; see Saw (1). Der. serrat-ion.

SERRIED, crowded, pressed together. (F., -L.) 'Their serried files;' Milton, P. L. vi. 599. Spelt serred in Blount. - F. serrier, 'to close, compact, presse near together, to lock;' Cot. - Low Lat. serare, to bolt. - Lat. sera, a bar, bolt. - Lat. serere, to join or bind together; see Series.

SERUM, whey, the thin fluid which separates from the blood when it coagulates. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. - Lat. serum, whey, serum. - Gk. ὀρός, whey. - ✓ SAR, to flow; see Salt. Der. ser-ous.

SERVE, to attend on another, wait upon obediently. (F., -L.) M. E. seruen, Havelok, 1230; seruiem, Ancren Riwle, p. 12, l. 4 from bottom. - F. servir, to serve. - Lat. servire, to serve. Cf. Lat. servus, a servant, perhaps orig. a client, a man under one's protection; servare, to keep, protect. - ✓ SAR, to protect; seen in Zend har, to protect, haurva, protecting; Fick, i. 797. Der. serv-ant, M. E. servaunt, servant, Chaucer, C. T. 11104, Ancren Riwle, p. 428, l. 9, from F. servant, serving, pres. part. of servir, to serve; serv-er; serv-ice, M. E. seuisse, Layamon, 8071, from O. F. seuisse, service, from Lat. servitium, service, servitude; service-able, Levins; dis-service. Also serv-ile, Levins, from Lat. servilis; serv-ile-ty, serv-il-or, prob. suggested by F. serviteur, 'a servant, servitor' (Cot.), rather than borrowed directly from Lat. servitor; serv-il-ude, Chaucer, C. T. 8674, from F. servitude, from Lat. acc. servitudinem. Also serf, sergeant; con-serve, de-serve, dis-serve, mis-serve, ob-serve, pre-serve, re-serve, sub-serve; de-ert (2), un-de-serv-ing, un-de-serv-ed, &c.

SESSION, the sitting or assembly of a court. (F., -L.) In Shak. Oth. i. 2. 86. - F. session, not noticed by Cotgrave, though in use in the 12th cent. (Littré). - Lat. sessionem, acc. of sessio, a sitting, session. - Lat. sessus, pp. of sedere, to sit, cognate with E. Sit, q. v.

SET, to place, fix, plant, assign. (E.) M. E. setten, pt. t. sette, pp. set. 'Thei setten Jhesu on hym;' Wyclif, Luke, xix. 35. - A. S. settan, to set; Grein, ii. 432. Causal of A. S. sittan, to sit; put for *sattian, from sat, oldest form of pt. t. of sittan. See Sit + Du. zetten. + Icel. setja. + Dan. satte. + Swed. sätte. + G. setzen. + Goth. satjan. Der. set, sb., Rich. II. iii. 3. 147; set-off, sb., sett-er, sb., sett-ing. Also sett-ee, a seat with a long back (Todd's Johnson), of which the origin is by no means clear; it seems to be an arbitrary variation of the prov. E. settle, used in the same sense, with a substitution of the suffix -ee for -le; this suffix (= F. -é, Lat. -atus) is freely used in English, as in refer-ee, trust-ee; but it makes no good sense here. See Settle (1).

SETON, an artificial irritation under the skin. (F., -L.) 'Seton, is when the skin of the neck, or other part, is taken up and run thro' with a kind of pack-needle, and the wound afterwards kept open with bristles, or a skean of thread, silk, or cotton,' &c.; Phillips, ed. 1706. - F. seton, in use in the 16th cent.; Littré cites 'une aiguille à seton enfilée d'un fort fil' = a needle with a seton, threaded with a strong thread; where seton is a thick thread. Formed from a Low Lat. *seto (acc. setonem), derived from Lat. seta, a bristle, thick stiff hair, which in Low Lat. also meant silk (Ducange). Cf. Satin.

SETTEE, a kind of seat; see under Set.

SETTLE (1), a long bench with a high back. (E.) Also used generally in the sense of 'seat' or 'bench'; see Ezek. xliii. 14, 17, 20, xlv. 19. 'Settle, a seat;' E. D. S. Gloss. B. 17. M. E. setel, setil. 'Upon the setil of his magesté' = upon the seat of His majesty, i. e. upon His royal seat; Pricke of Conscience, 6122. 'On þe setle of unhele' = in the seat of ill-health; O. Eng. Hom. ii. 59. - A. S. setl, a seat, Grein, ii. 432. + Goth. setils, a seat, throne. + O. H. G. sezal; G. sessel.

β. All from a Teut. type SET-LA, a seat, cognate with Lat. sel-la (put for sed-la), whence E. sell, a saddle; see Sell (2). From ✓ SAD, to sit; see Sit. Der. settle (2). Doublet, sell (2).

SETTLE (2), to fix, become fixed, adjust. (E.) Two distinct words have been confused; in the peculiar sense 'to compose or adjust a quarrel,' the source is different from that of the commoner verb, and more remote. A. M. E. sellen, trans. to cause to rest, intrans. to sink to rest, subside. 'Til þe semli sunne was settled to reste' = till the seemly sun had sunk to rest, Will. of Palerne, 2452. 'Him thoughte a goshawk . . . Setliht on his beryng' = it seemed to him that a goshawk settles down on his cognisance (?), King Alisaunder, 484; and see l. 488. - A. S. setlan, to fix. 'Setlaþ semearas' = the mariners fix (or anchor) their vessels (Grein). - A. S. setel, a seat. Cf. A. S. setl-gang, the going to rest of the sun, sunset, Grein, ii. 432. Thus the lit. sense of settle is 'to take a seat' or 'to set as in a fixed seat.' See Settle (1).

B. At the same time, the peculiar sense 'to settle a quarrel' appears to have been borrowed from M. E. saytlen, sayhten, sayhten, to reconcile, make peace, P. Plowman, B. iv. 2 (footnote). 'Now saghtel, now strife' = now we make peace, now we strive; Pricke of Conscience, 1470. Saytled = appeased, reconciled, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 230, 1139. - A. S. sahlilan, to reconcile; 'góde men . . . sahloden heom' = good men reconciled them; A. S. Chron. an. 1066; MS. Laud 636, ed. Thorpe, i. 337; see also p. 384, l. 19. - A. S. sahl, reconciliation; A. S. Chron. ed. Thorpe, i. 385, l. 2. - A. S. sacan, to contend, strive, dispute; from the particular application to disputes at law, the sb. sahl came to mean the adjustment of a dispute, the result of a suit. This verb also gave rise to E. Sake, q. v.

β. That these two verbs were actually confused, we have evidence in the fact that, conversely, the M. E. saytlen, to reconcile, was also used in the sense of subside or become calm. 'þe se saytled therwith' = the sea subsided; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. 232. We even find the intermediate form sattle; 'Muche sorþe þenne satted vpon segge Ionas' = much sorrow then settled on the man Jonah; id. C. 409. Der. settl-er; settle-ment, with F. suffix -ment.

SEVEN, a cardinal number, six and one. (E.) M. E. seuen, seuene; P. Plowman, B. iv. 86. The final -e is prob. the mark of a pl. form; both forms occur. - A. S. seofon, also seofone, seven; Grein, ii. 437; the final -e marks the plural, and is unoriginal. + Du. zeven. + Icel. sjö, sjav. + Dan. syv. + Swed. sju. + O. H. G. sibun, G. sieben. + Goth. sibun. + Lat. septem. + Gk. ἑπτὰ. + W. saith; Gael. seachd; Irish seacht. + Russ. seme. + Lithuan. septyni. + Skt. saptan. β. All from Aryan SAPTAN, seven; origin unknown. Der. seven-fold, A. S. seofon-feald; seven-teen, A. S. seofon-týne, from seofon, seven, and týn, ten; seven-teen-ih, A. S. seofon-teoða, but formed by analogy, by adding -ih to seventeen; seven-ty, A. S. hundseofontig (by dropping hund, for which see Hundred); seven-ty-eth. Also seven-ih, formed by adding -ih; A. S. seofoba.

SEVER, to separate, cut apart. (F., -L.) 'I sever, I departe thynges asonder, Ie separe;' Palsgrave. M. E. seueren, Gawain and the Grene Knight, 1797. - O. F. seurer (Burguy). Cf. Ital. severare, sevrare. - Lat. separare, to separate; see Separate. Der. sever-al, sever-al-ly, of which Sir T. More has seuerally, Works, p. 209 h; from O. F. several, Low Lat. separate, a thing separate or a thing that separates (Ducange); as if from a Lat. adj. *separalis. Also sever-ance; dis-sever; dis-sever-ance; cf. O. F. dessevrance (Burguy). Doublet, separate.

SEVERE, austere, serious, strict. (F., -L.) In Shak. Oth. ii. 3. 101. - O. F. severe, 'severe,' Cot.; mod. F. sévère. - Lat. severus, severe; orig. revered, respected (of persons), hence serious, grave (in demeanour). β. Supposed to stand for seu-erus, formed (like dec-ūrus from dec-us) from a base seu (sev), honour; see Curtius, ii. 218. Der. severe-ly; sever-i-ty, from F. severité, 'severity,' Cot.

SEW (1), to fasten together with thread. (E.) Pronounced so. M. E. sowen, P. Plowman, B. vi. 9; more commonly sewen, id. C. ix. 8; Wyclif, Mark, ii. 21. - A. S. siwian, Mark, ii. 21; Gen. iii. 7. + Icel. sýja. + Dan. sy. + Swed. sy. + O. H. G. siuwan, siwan. + Goth. siujan. + Lat. suere. + Lithuan. suti. + Russ. shite. + Skt. siv, to sew; whence sútra, thread. β. All from the ✓ SIW, SU, to sew; Fick, i. 229. Der. sew-er, sew-ing; also seam, q. v.

SEW (2), to follow; the same as Sue, q. v.

SEWER (1), an underground passage for water, large drain. (F., -L.) Frequently spelt shore, which represented a common pronunciation; still preserved in Shore-ditch = sewer-ditch. in London. Spelt sure, Troil. v. 1. 83, ed. 1623. Formed with suffix -er from the verb sew, to drain, to dry. 'Sew ponds' = drain ponds, Tusser's Husbandry, cap. 15. § 17 (E. D. S.); p. 33. Note also sew, sb., as in 'the towne-sinke, the common sew,' Nomenclator, ed. 1585, p. 391; cited in Halliwell, s.v. seugh. Short for esseye, the first syllable being dropped. — O. F. essuyer, esuer, to dry (Burguy); gen. used in the sense 'to wipe dry,' but the true etym. sense is to drain dry, deprive of moisture, as in English. Cot. has essuyer, 'to dry up.' — Lat. essuccare, essucare, to deprive of moisture, suck the juice from — Lat. ex, out, away; and sucus, juice, moisture, from the same root as Lat. sugere, to suck, and E. suck; see Suck. β. From the O. F. verb essuyer (mod. F. essuyer) was formed the O. F. sb. essuier, a duct for water (Burguy), the very same word as E. sewer, which may thus have been borrowed directly. The sense 'to wipe' (which is the commonest meaning of F. essuyer) plainly appears in M. E. sew, to wipe the beak of a hawk, used by Juliana Berners (Halliwell); and this proves clearly that the initial syllable of essuyer was dropped in English. We do, however, find prov. E. assue, drained of milk, said of a cow, which is rather the very F. essuyé than put for a-sew = a-dry. Der. sewer-age; also sew-age, formed directly from the verb sew. ¶ The F. suffix -age in these words is another indication of the F. origin of sew and sewer. The derivation sometimes suggested from W. syck, dry (cognate with Lat. siccus), will not explain the diphthong. Siccus and succus are exactly opposed in meaning, and are from different roots. [†]

SEWER (2), the officer who formerly set and removed dishes, tasted them, &c. (E.) In Halliwell. Baret (1580) has: 'The Sewer of the kitchen, Antambul ferularius; The Sewer which tasteth the meate, Escuyer de cuisine.' 'Seware, at mete, Depositor, dapifer, sepulchror.' Prompt. Parv., p. 454. On the same page we have: 'Sewyn, or sette mete, Ferulo, sepulo;' and: 'Sew, cepulatum.' A. It is therefore clear, that, in the 15th century, the word sew-er was regarded as being formed from the verb to sewe, which was again derived from the sb. sew, not uncommon in the sense of 'pottage;' see Halliwell. The orig. sense of sew is simply 'juice,' whence it came to mean sauce, boiled meat, juicy messes, and the like; Chaucer, C. T. 10381. — A. S. searu, juice; A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, i. 128, ll. 12 and 16. Cognate with Skt. sava, juice, from su, to express Soma juice, squeeze out. B. The above seems the true etymology; E. Müller suggests the O. F. sewer, of which the sole trace I can find is 'Sewer, écuyer' in Roquefort; and seeing that the word is common in English, it is remarkable that it should hardly appear in O. F., if it be a F. word. Perhaps Roquefort borrowed the notion from Cotgrave, who gives 'sewer' as one meaning of O. F. escuyer, an esquire; and I suspect that this alleged O. F. sewer is merely the English word, explained for the benefit of Frenchmen. If sewer were F., it could only be equivalent to su-er, i. e. a follower, from O. F. sevre, suire, Lat. sequi (see Sue); which would ill satisfy all the conditions.

SEX, the distinction between male and female, characteristics of such a distinction. (F., — L.) In Shak. Temp. iii. 1. 49. — F. sexe, 'a sex, or kind;' Cot. — Lat. sexum, acc. of sexus, sex. β. Perhaps orig. 'a division;' from secare, to cut. Der. sex-u-al, a late word, from Lat. sexu-alis, formed with suffix -alis from sexu, crude form of sexus; sex-u-al-ly, sex-u-al-ity.

SEXAGENARY, belonging to sixty. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. — Lat. sexagenarius, belonging to sixty. — Lat. sexageni, sixty each; distributive form from sexaginta, sixty. — Lat. sex, six; and -ginta, put for -cinta, short for decinta, tenth, from decem, ten. See Six and Ten. Der. sexagenari-an, Phillips.

SEXAGESIMA, the second Sunday before Lent. (L.) So called because about the sixtieth day before Easter. In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; and earlier, in Prayer-books. — Lat. sexagesima, lit. sixtieth; agreeing with dies, day, understood. Fem. of sexagesimus, sixtieth. Put for *sexagintimus; ordinal form from sexaginta, sixty. See Sexagenary. Der. sexagesim-al.

SEXENNIAL, happening every six years, lasting six years. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Formed, with suffix -al, from Lat. sexenni-um, a period of six years. — Lat. sex, six; and annus, a year (becoming enni- in composition). See Six and Annals. Der. sexennial-ly.

SEXTANT, the sixth part of a circle. (L.) Chiefly used to mean an optical instrument, furnished with an arc extending to a sixth part of a circle. But in earlier use in other senses. 'Sextant, a coin less than that called quadrant by the third part. . . the sixth part of any measure;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. sextant, stem of sextans, the sixth part of an as, a coin, weight. Formed with suffix -ans (like that of a pres. part. of a verb in -are) from sext-, stem of sextus, sixth, ordinal of sex, six. See Six. Der. from sext-us) sext-ile, Milton, P. L. x. 659; also sextu-ple, q. v.

SEXTON, a sacristan; see Sacristan. [†] SEXTUPLE, sixfold, having six parts. (L.) 'Whose length . . is sextuple unto his breadth;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 5. § 12. Coined from sextu-s, sixth, just as quadruple is from quadr- (used for quartus) with the sense of fourth. The suffix -ple answers to Lat. -plic-, stem of -plex, as in qu-plex, com-plex. See Quadruple and Sextant.

SHABBY, mean, paltry. (E.) Merely a doublet of scabby, by the usual change of A. S. sc to E. sh. The earliest quotation appears to be: 'They were very shabby fellows, pitifully mounted, and worse armed;' Lord Clarendon, Diary, Dec. 7, 1688. Cf. 'They mostly had short hair, and went in a shabbed condition;' A. Wood, Athen. Oxon. Fast. ii. 743 (Todd). We find shabbyd for scabbed in P. Plowman, C. x. 264. See Scab. Der. shabby-ly, shabby-ness.

SHACKLE, a fetter, chain to confine the limbs, clog. (E.) M. E. schakyl, schakle, Prompt. Parv.; pl. scheakeles, Ancrén Riwle, p. 94, l. 25. — A. S. seacul, a bond; Ælfric's Gloss., near beginning; Wright's Vocab. i. 16, col. 2. Put for an older form seacul. + Icel. skökull, the pole of a carriage. + Swed. skakel, the loose shaft of a carriage. + Dan. skagle, a trace (for a carriage). + O. Du. schakel, 'the links or rings [read link or ring] of a chaine;' schakelen van een net, 'the masches [meshes] of a net;' Hexham. β. The orig. sense is a loose band or bond, hence a trace, single link of a chain, loose-hanging fetter. Evidently named from its shaking about, as distinct from a firm bond. From A. S. seacan, seacan, to shake; with suffix -ul, from Aryan -ra. See Shake. So also Icel. skökull is from skaka; and Dan. skagle from skage, to shift, orig. to shake; cf. Swed. dial. skak, a chain, link (Rietz). Der. shackle, verb, M. E. schaklen, Prompt. Parv.

SHAD, a fish. (E.) 'Like bleeding shads;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Love's Cure, Act ii. sc. 2 (Clara). 'And there the eel and shad sometimes are caught;' John Denny, Secrets of Angling (before A. D. 1613); in Eng. Garner, ed. Arber, i. 171. 'A shadde, a fishe, acon;' Levins. — A. S. seadde, a kind of fish; Monasticon Anglicanum, i. 266, 45 and 46 (Bosworth). Bosworth explains it by skate, but it is clearly mod. E. shad. The shad and skate are very different, and it is not certain that the names are related. Cf. prov. G. schade, a shad (Flügel). We also find Irish and Gael. sgadan in the sense of 'herring;' W. ysgadan, pl. herrings. The Irish for skate is sgat. [†]

SHADE, SHADOW, obscurity, partial darkness. (E.) These are but two forms of one word. M. E. schade, Will. of Palerne, 22; schaduw, id. 754. — A. S. sead, shade, neut. (gen. seades, seades); seadu, shadow, fem. (gen. seade); Grein, ii. 398, 401. We find (from seadu), the acc. pl. seadwa; which compare with M. E. schadeuwe, Ancrén Riwle, p. 190, l. 24. + Du. schaduw, shadow. + G. schatten, shade; O. H. G. scato (gen. seatewes), shadow. + Goth. skadus. + Irish and Gael. sgath, shadow, shade, shelter. + Gk. σκότος, σκορία, darkness, gloom. β. All from ✓ SKA, to cover; whence also Skt. chhāyā, shade, Gk. σκία, shade, σκη-νῆς, a shelter, tent, and E. sky. See Fick, i. 805; Curtius, i. 206. And see Shade, Sky. Der. shade, verb, Court of Love, l. 1272; shad-er; shade-y, Spenser, F. Q. i. 1. 17; shad-i-ly, -ness; shadow, verb, M. E. schadowen, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 42, A. S. seadwian, seadwian, Ps. xc. 4 (ed. Spelman); over-shadow, A. S. oferseadwian, Mark, ix. 7; shadow-y, M. E. shadewy, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 4, l. 2012. Doublet, shed.

SHAFT, an arrow, smoothed pole, column, cylindrical entrance to a mine. (E.) The orig. sense is 'shaven' rod, a stick smoothed into the shape of a spear-pole or an arrow. M. E. shaft, schafft, an arrow, Chaucer, C. T. 1364; Parl. of Foules, 179. — A. S. seafft, a shaft of a spear, dart; Grein, ii. 403. Put for seafft, formed with suffix -t (Aryan -ta) from seaf, stem of pp. of seafan, to shave; see Shave. + Du. schacht (for schafft, like Du. lucht for luft, air); from shaven, to smooth, plane. + Icel. skapt, better skapt, a shaved stick, shaft, missile. + Dan. skift, a handle, haft. + Swed. skuft, a handle. + G. schaft. ¶ The M. E. schafft, in the sense of 'creature,' is from seapan, to shape, make; see Shape. Der. shaft-ed.

SHAG, rough hair, rough cloth. (E.) 'Of the same kind is the goat-hart, and differing only in the beard and long shag about the shoulders;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. viii. c. 33 (Of the shag-haired and bearded stagge like to a goat). 'With rugged beard, and hoarie shagged haire;' Spenser, F. Q. iv. 5. 35. Shak. has shag for shaggy, Venus, 295; also shag-haired, 2 Hen. VI. iii. 1. 367. I know of no instance in M. E. — A. S. seacaga; 'Coma, seacaga; Comosus, seacagede,' Wright's Vocab. ii. 22, col. 2; perhaps Scand. rather than E. + Icel. skegg, Swed. skägg, a beard; Dan. skjæg, a beard, barb, awn, wattle; from Icel. skaga, to jut out, project; whence also Icel. skagi, a low cape or head-land (Shetland skaw). The orig. sense is 'roughness.' Der. shagg-y, shagg-i-ness; also shagg-ed, as above. Shag tobacco is rough tobacco; cf. Shakespeare's 'fetlocks shag and long'; Venus, 295.

SHAGREEN, a rough-grained leather, shark's skin. (F., Turkish.) 'Shagreen, a sort of rough-grained leather'; Phillips, ed. 1706. He also spells it chagrin.—F. chagrin, shagreen. It was orig. made of the skin (of the back only) of the horse, wild ass, or mule; afterwards, from the skin of the shark. See the full account in Devic, Supp. to Littré.—Turk. sāghrī, sāghrī, the back of a horse; also, shagreen, Zenker, Turk. Dict. p. 561; and Devic. Cf. Pers. sāghrī, shagreen; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 354. See Chagrin.

SHAH, a king of Persia. (Pers.) Spelt shaw in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, and in Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665.—Pers. shāh, a king; Palmer, Pers. Dict. col. 374. Cf. Skt. kshī, to possess, rule, Vedic kshatra, dominion; see Fick, i. 233. Der. check, check-er, check-ers, check-nass, chess; also pa-sha or pa-cha. Doublet, check, sb.

SHAKE, to agitate, jolt, keep moving, make to tremble; also to shiver, tremble. (E.) M. E. schaken, shaken; pt. t. shook, shook, Chaucer, C. T. 2267; pp. shaken, shaken, shakē, id. 408.—A. S. seacan, seacan, pt. t. scōc, pp. seacen, seacen; Grein, ii. 401. + Icel. shaka, pt. t. skök, pp. skakinn. + Swed. shaka. + Dan. skage, to shift, veer. Cf. also Skt. khaj, to move to and fro, hence, to churn; from a ✓SKAG, to move to and fro, answering to Teut. base SKAK; Fick, iii. 329, i. 804. Der. shake, sb., a late word, Herbert, Church Porch, st. 37; shak-y, shak-i-ness; shake-le. Also Shake-speare. Also shock, q. v., shog, q. v., jog, q. v., shank, q. v.

SHAKO, a kind of military cap. (F., Hung.) Modern; F. shako or schako (Littré).—Hungarian esako (pron. shako), a cap, shako; see Littré and Mahn's Webster. Spelt tsakó, and explained as a Hungarian cap, in Dankovsky's Magyar Lexicon, ed. 1833, p. 900. He supposes it to be of Slavonic origin, not a real Magyar word.

SHALE, a rock of a slaty structure. (G.) A term of geology, borrowed (like gneiss, quartz, and other geological terms) from German.—G. schale, a shell, peel, husk, rind, scale; whence schalgebirge, a mountain formed of thin strata. Cognate with E. shale, a shell, Shak. Hen. V. iv. 2. 18, which is merely another spelling of scale; see Scale (1). Der. shaly. Doublet, scale (1).

SHALL, I am bound to, I must. (E.) M. E. shal, shal, often with the sense of 'is to'; Chaucer, C. T. 733; pt. t. sholde, scholde, shulde (mod. E. should), id. 964.—A. S. seal, an old past tense used as a present, and thus conjugated; ic seal, þu sealst, hē seal; pl. seulon, seulun, or seolum. Hence was formed a pt. t. scolde, or secolde, pl. secoldon. The form of the infin. is seulan, to owe, to be under an obligation to do a thing; Grein, ii. 413. Hence mod. E. I shall properly means 'I am to,' I must, as distinguished from I will, properly 'I am ready to,' I am willing to; but the orig. sense of compulsion is much weakened in the case of the first person, though its force is retained in thou shalt, he shall, they shall. The verb following it is put in the infin. mood; as, ic seal gán=I must go; hence the mod. use as an auxiliary verb. + Du. ik zal, I shall; ik zoude, I should; infin. zullen. + Icel. skal, pl. skulum; pt. t. skyldi, skyldu; infin. skulu. + Swed. skall; pt. t. skulle; infin. skola. + Dan. skal; pt. t. skulde; infin. skulle. + G. soll, pt. t. sollte; infin. sollen (the & being lost, as in Dutch). + Goth. skal, pl. skulum; pt. t. skulda; infin. skulan. β. All from Teut. base SKAL, to owe, be in debt, be liable; a sense which is clearly preserved in A. S. scyld, guilt, i. e. desert of punishment, G. schuld, guilt, fault, debt. We also find Lithuan. skelu, I am indebted, skilti, to owe, be liable. See Fick, iii. 334. γ. Probably further allied to Lat. scelus, guilt, and Skt. skhal, to stumble, err, fail.

SHALLOON, a light woollen stuff. (F.) 'Shalloon, a sort of woollen stuff, chiefly used for the linings of coats, and so call'd from Chalons, a city of France, where it was first made'; Phillips, ed. 1706. We find chalons, i. e. a coverlet made at Chalons, even in Chaucer, C. T. 4138.—F. Chalons, or Chalons-sur-Marne, a town in France, 100 miles E. of Paris. 'Sa seule robe . . était de ras de Chalons'; Scarron, Virg. iv. (Littré, s. v. ras, § 9). Chalons takes its name from the tribe of the Catalauni, who lived in that neighbourhood. [†]

SHALLOP, a light boat. (F., Span.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 7. 27.—F. chaloupe, 'a shallop, or small boat'; Cot.—Span. chalupa (also Port. chalupa), 'a small light vessel, a long boat,' Neuman, Minshew's Span. Dict., ed. 1623, has chalupa, 'a flat-bottomed boat.' β. It is usual to derive F. chaloupe, Span. chalupa, from Du. sloop, a sloop. It is obvious that the derivation must run the other way, and that Du. sloop is a contraction from chaloupe, and is no true Du. word. From what language chalupa is borrowed, has not yet been discovered; but we may easily guess that it was brought by the Span. and Port. navigators from some far distant region, either American or E. Indian, and denoted one of those light canoes seen in the Pacific ocean and in other distant seas. We find the longer form shaluppe even in German, meaning a jolly-boat or yawl as well as a sloop; and the occurrence of shallop in Spenser's F. Q. shews that it is rather an old word in our own language. The Ital. form is scialuppa. Doublet, sloop, q. v.

SHALLOT, SHALOT, a kind of onion. (F., L., Gk.) Added by Todd to Johnson; it is also spelt eschalot.—O. F. eschalote, eschalotte, 'a cive or chive,' i. e. a kind of onion; Cot. Mod. F. échalote. The form eschalote is a variant, or corruption, of O. F. escalogne, a shallot; Roquefort.—Lat. ascalonia, a shallot; fem. of Ascalonius, adj., belonging to Ascalon. 'Ascalonia, little onions or scallions, taking that name of Ascalon, a city in Jury'; Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xix. c. 6.—Gk. Ἀσκάλον, Ascalon, one of the chief cities of the Philistines, on the W. coast of Palestine; Smith, Class. Dict. See Joshua, xiii. 3; &c. [†]

SHALLOW, not deep. (Scand.) M. E. schalowe. 'Schold, or schalowe, not deep'; Prompt. Parv. p. 447; Trevisa, iii. 131, l. 7; schald, Barbour, Bruce, ix. 354. Not found in A. S., the nearest related word being A. S. sceolh, sceol, oblique, appearing in sceol-égede, squint-eyed, Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 36. The orig. sense is oblique, sloping, shelving, used with reference to a sea-shore; on approaching a sloping shore, the water becomes shallow, the bank shelves down, and often a shoal appears. 'The shore was shelvy and shallow'; Merry Wives, iii. 5. 15. The verb to shelve is a derivative from shallow; see Shelve. β. The words shoal and shallow are really the same, both being adaptations from Icel. skjálgr, oblique, wry, which was modified in two ways: (1) by shortening the vowel, and change of g to w, giving M. E. schalowe; and (2) by loss of g, giving schol, or (with excrement d) schold. Allied words are Swed. dial. skjalg, oblique, slant, wry, crooked; G. scheel, schel, oblique, squint-eyed, schielen, to be awry; also Gk. σκολιός, crooked, awry, σκαληρός, uneven, scalene, σκελλός, crook-legged. See Scalene. Der. shallow-ness. And see shoal (2), shelve.

SHALM, the same as Shawm, q. v.

SHAM, to trick, verb; a pretence, sb. (E.) 'Sham, pretended, false; also, a flam, cheat, or trick; To sham one, to put a cheat or trick on him'; Phillips, ed. 1706. 'A meer sham and disguise'; Stillingfleet, vol. iv. ser. 9 (R.) 'They . . found all this a sham'; Dampier's Voyages, an. 1688 (R.) We find also the slang expression 'to sham Abraham'=to pretend to be an Abraham-man, or a man from Bedlam hospital; see Abraham-men in Nares, and in Hotten's Slang Dictionary. To sham appears to be merely the Northern E. form of to shame, to put to shame, to disgrace, whence the sense 'to trick' may easily have arisen. Sham for shame is very common in the North, and appears in Brockett, and in the Whitby, Mid-Yorkshire, Swaledale, and Holderness Glossaries (E. D. S.) 'Wheea's sham is it'=whose fault is it? Whitby Gloss. Cf. Icel. skömm, a shame, outrage, disgrace. See Shame. [†]

SHAMBLE, to walk awkwardly. (Du., F., Ital., L.) A weakened form of scamble, to scramble; cf. prov. E. scrambling, sprawling, Hereford (Hall.). 'By that shambling in his walk, it should be my rich old banker, Gomez'; Dryden, Span. Friar, Act i. Scamble, to scramble, struggle, is in Shak. Much Ado, v. i. 94; K. John, iv. 3. 146; Hen. V. i. 1. 4. Not an E. word, but borrowed.—O. Du. schampelen, to stumble, to trip (Hexham); also to swerve aside, slip aside, decamp. Frequentative (with suffix -el-en) of O. Du. schampen, 'to escape or flee, to be gone'; Hexham.—O. F. escamper, s'escamper, 'to scape, flee'; Cot.—Ital. scampare, 'to escape'; Florio.—Lat. ex, out; and campus, a battle-field. See Scamper, of which scamble is just a doublet, the frequentative suffixes -er and -le being equivalent. Cf. skimble-skamble, wandering, wild, confused, 1 Hen. IV. iii. 1. 154. Doublet, scamper.

SHAMBLÉS, stalls on which butchers expose meat for sale; hence, a slaughter-house. (L.) 'As summer-flies are in the shambles'; Oth. iv. 2. 66. Shambles is the pl. of shamble, a butcher's bench or stall, lit. a bench; and shamble is formed, with excrement b, from M. E. schamel, a bench, orig. a stool; see Ancren Riwle, p. 166, note e.—A. S. scamel, a stool; fót-scamel, a foot-stool; Matt. v. 35.—Lat. scamellum, a little bench or stool (White); allied to scamnum, a step, bench, scabellum, a foot-stool. The orig. sense is 'prop.' Cf. Lat. scapus, a shaft, stem, stalk; Gk. σκήπτρον, to prop, also to throw.—✓SKAP, to throw; see Sceptre.

SHAME, consciousness of guilt, disgrace, dishonour. (E.) M. E. schame, shame, Wyclif, Luke, xiv. 9.—A. S. sceamu, scamu, shame; Grein, ii. 403. + Icel. skömm (stem skamm) a wound, shame. + Dan. skam. + Swed. skam. + G. scham. β. All from Teut. base SKAMA, shame; Fick, iii. 332. Allied to Goth. skanda, shame, and prob. to Skt. kshan, to wound; see Scathe. Der. shame, verb, A. S. sceamian, scamian, Grein; shame-ful, spelt scheomeful, Ancren Riwle, p. 302, l. 23; shame-ful-ly, shame-ful-ness; shame-less, A. S. sceam-leas, Ælfric, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, c. xxi (ed. Sweet, p. 204); shame-less-ly, shame-less-ness; also shame-faced, q. v. And see sham.

SHAMEFACED, modest. (E.) A corruption of shamefast, by a singular confusion with face, due to the fact that shame is commonly expressed by the appearance of the face; see Face. We find shamefastness in Spenser, F. Q. iv. 10. 50; shame-faced in Shak. Rich. III. i. 3. 142, where the quarto ed. has shamefast (Schmidt). M. E. shamefast, shamefast, Chaucer, C. T. 2057. — A. S. scamfast, Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, c. xxi. ed. Sweet, p. 204. — A. S. scamu, shame; and fast, fast, firm; see Shame and Fast. Der. shame-faced-ness.

SHAMMY, SHAMOY, a kind of leather. (F., — G.) So called because formerly made from the chamois. 'Chamois, or Chamois, a kind of wild goat, whose skin, being rightly dressed, makes our true Shamois leather;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'Shamoy, or Shamoy-leather, a sort of leather made of the skin of the Shamoy;' Phillips, ed. 1706. — F. chamois, 'a wilde goat, or shamoy; also the skin thereof dressed, and called ordinarily shamoy leather;' Cot. Cf. F. chamoiser, to prepare chamois leather; Littre. See Chamois. ¶ Taylor professes to correct this etymology, and, without a word of proof, derives it 'from Samland, a district on the Baltic,' with which it has but two letters, a and m, in common. There is no difficulty, when it is remembered that shamoy-leather could only have been prepared from the chamois at first; other skins were soon substituted, as being cheaper, when a larger demand set in. [†]

SHAMPOO, to squeeze and rub the body of another after a hot bath; to wash the head thoroughly with soap and water. (Hindustani.) A modern word; the operation takes its name from the squeezing or kneading of the body with the knuckles, which forms a part of it, as properly performed. — Hind. chāmpnā, '(1) to join, (2) to stuff, thrust in, press, to shampoo or champoo;' Shakespear, Hind. Dict. ed. 1849, p. 846. The initial letter is ch, as in church.

SHAMROCK, a species of clover. (C.) 'If they found a plotte of water-cresses or shamrockes;' Spenser, View of the State of Ireland, Globe ed., p. 654, col. 2. — Irish seamrog, trefoil, dimin. of seamar, trefoil; Gael. seamrag, shamrock, trefoil, clover.

SHANK, the lower part of the leg, a stem. (E.) M. E. shanke, shanke, Havelok, 1903. — A. S. seanca, scanca; John, xix. 31, 32. Esp. used of the bone of the leg. + Du. schonk, a bone. + Dan. shank, the shank. + Swed. shank, leg. Allied to G. schinken, the ham, schenkel, the shank, leg. β. A nasalised form from Teut. base SKAK, to shake; as shewn by Low G. schake, the leg, shank; Bremen Wörterbuch. The shanks are the 'runners' or 'stirrers.' The A. S. seacac meant not only to shake, but also to flee away, use one's legs, escape, Gen. xxxi. 27; 'þá seóðc he on niht' = then he ran away (lit. shook) by night; A. S. Chron. an. 992. We still say to stir one's stumps, i. e. to run; also, to shog off. See Shake. Der. skink-er, nun-cheon.

SHAPE, to form, fashion, adapt. (E.) Formerly a strong verb. M. E. shapen, schapen; pt. t. shoop, Chaucer, C. T. 16690; pp. shapen, shape, id. 1227. — A. S. scæpan, scapan, for which we commonly find scippan, scæppan, scyppan, which is really a weak form (= Goth. skapjan or ga-skapjan). But the verb is strong, with pt. t. scōp, scēop, and pp. scæpen, scæpen. + Icel. skapa, pt. t. skóp. + Swed. skapa. + Dan. skabe. + G. schaffen, to create; pt. t. schuf, pp. geschaffen. β. The strong and weak forms are intermixed; thus G. schaffen is also weak, like Goth. gaskapjan. All from Teut. base SKAP, to form, make, Fick, iii. 331; which is doubtless connected with the base SKAB, to shave, i. e. to make things in wood, bring into shape by cutting. See Shave. Der. shape, sb., A. S. gesceap, a creature, beauty, Grein; shap-able; shap-er; shape-ly, M. E. schapelich, Chaucer, C. T. 374; shape-li-ness; shape-less, shape-less-ness. And see ship. Hence also the suffix -ship, A. S. -scipe (as in friend-ship, i. e. friend-shape); and the suffix -scape in land-scape, q. v.

SHARD, a shred; see Sherd.

SHARE (1), a portion, part, division. (E.) Spelt schare in Palsgrave; very rare in M. E. in this sense; schar, i. e. the groin, Wyclif, 2 Kings, ii. 23, is the same word. — A. S. searu, a rare word; occurring in the comp. land-searu, a share of land; Grein. Put for searu. — A. S. scar-, base of sceran, to shear, cut. See Shear, Share (2). Der. share, verb, Spenser, F. Q. iv. 8. 5; shar-er, share-holder.

SHARE (2), a plough-share. (E.) M. E. schare, share; P. Plowman, B. iii. 306. — A. S. scar, a plough-share; Ælfric's Gloss., 1st word. Put for sear. — A. S. scar-, base of sceran, to shear. See Shear.

SHARK, a voracious fish, hound-fish. (L., ? — Gk. ?) The history of the word is not clear. It occurs in Shak. Macb. iv. 1. 24; but not in Levins or Palsgrave; nor is it old. The M. E. name is hound-fish, Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Skeat, l. 164. Holland, tr. of Pliny, speaks 'of hound-fishes and sea-dogs;' b. ix. c. 46. It is gen. supposed to be derived from Lat. carcharus, a kind of dog-fish; perhaps there was an intermediate O. F. form, now lost. — Gk. καρχαρίαι, a kind of shark; so called from its sharp teeth. — Gk. καρχαρίαι, jagged (of teeth); perhaps orig. hard; cf. καρχαρίαι, a crab. Apparently a reduplicated form from ✓KAR, to be hard. Cf. Skt. karkara, hard, karkata, a crab. Der. shark-ing, voracious, greedy, prowling; one of the Dramatis Personæ of Love's Cure (by Beaumont and Fletcher) is 'Alguazeir, a sharking panderly constable;' shark up = to snap up, Hamlet, i. 1. 98. And hence shark = a sharper, as a slang term. ¶ Some connect the last word with G. schurke, a rogue; but without any attempt to explain the difference of vowels. Sewell's Du. Dict. has: 'schurk, a shark, a rascal;' but this is merely a translation, not an identification.

SHARP, cutting, trenchant, keen, severe, biting, shrewd. (E.) M. E. sharp, scharp, Chaucer, C. T. 1653. — A. S. searp (for scarp); Grein, ii. 404. + Du. scherp. + Icel. skarp. + Swed. and Dan. skarp. + G. scharf. β. All from a base SKARP, to cut, unaltered form of ✓SKARP, to cut, lengthened form of ✓SKAR, to cut; see Shear. From ✓SKARP we also have Lat. scalpere, sculper, to cut, Gk. skaplos, a scorpion, stinging insect, Skt. kripāna, a sword. See Scorpion, Sculpture, Searf (1). Der. sharp-ly, sharp-ness; sharp-er, one who acts sharply, a cheat; sharp-set, -sighted, -witted; sharp-en, to make sharp, Antony, ii. 1. 25.

SHATTER, to break in pieces. (E.) A weakened form of scatter, with a subsequent difference of meaning. M. E. schateren, to scatter, to dash, said of a falling stream; Gawayn and Grene Knight, 2083. Milton uses shatter with the sense of scatter at least twice; P. L. x. 1066, Lycidas, 5. See Scatter. Doublet, scatter.

SHAVE, to pare, strip, cut off in slices, cut off hair. (E.) M. E. shaven, schaven, formerly a strong verb; pt. t. schoof (misspelt schoofe), Wyclif, 1 Chron. xix. 4, earlier text; the later text has shauye. The strong pp. shaven is still in use. — A. S. scæfan, scæfan; pt. t. scōf, pp. scæfen; the pt. t. scōf occurs in Ælfred, tr. of Bede, b. i. c. 1, near the end. + Du. schaven, to scrape, plane wood. + Icel. skafa. + Swed. skafva, to scrape. + Dan. skave, to scrape. + Goth. skaban, 1 Cor. xi. 6. + G. schaben. β. All from Teut. base SKAB, answering to ✓SKAP, to cut, dig, whence Lithuan. skapoti, to shave, cut, Russ. kopate, to dig, Lat. scabere, to scratch, scrape, Gk. skánereiv, to dig. This ✓SKAP is an extension of ✓SKA, to cut (cf. Skt. khan, to dig); whence also ✓SKAP, to form by cutting, to shape, and ✓SKAR, to shear; see Shape, Shear. Der. shav-er, shav-ing; also shave-l-ing, with double dimin. suffix, expressive of contempt, applied to a priest with shaven crown, in Bale, King John, ed. Collier, p. 17, l. 16. Also scab, shab-by, shaf-t.

SHAW, a thicket, small wood. (E.) M. E. schawe, shawe, Chaucer, C. T. 4365. — A. S. scaga, a shaw; Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonicæ, ed. Thorpe, p. 161, l. 5. + Icel. skógr, a shaw, wood; Swed. skog; Dan. skov. Prob. akin to Icel. skuggi, A. S. scúga, scúwa, a shade, shadow (Grein). — ✓SKU, to cover, as in Skt. sku, to cover; see Sky.

SHAWL, a covering for the shoulders. (Pers.) Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. — Pers. shál, 'a shawl or mantle, made of very fine wool of a species of goat common in Tibet;' Rich. Dict. p. 872. The Pers. á resembles E. aw, shewing that we borrowed the word immediately from Persian, not from F. châle.

SHAWM, SHALM, a musical instrument resembling the clarinet. (F., — L., — Gk.) It was a reed-instrument. In Prayer-Book version of Ps. xcvi. 7. 'With shalmes and trumpets, and with clarions sweet;' Spenser, F. Q. i. 12. 13. The pl. form shalmies occurs in Chaucer, House of Fame, iii. 128. Shalmie appears to have been abbreviated to shalm, shauwe. — O. F. chalemie, 'a little pipe made of a reed, or of a wheat or oaten straw;' Cot. Also chalemelle, chalumeau; Cot. All formed from F. chaume (for chalm), straw, a straw. — Lat. calamus, a reed; prob. borrowed from Gk., the true Lat. word being culmus. — Gk. κάλamos, a reed; καλαμή, a stalk or straw of corn. Cognate with E. haulm, q. v. ¶ The Gk. shalmie is also from French. Doublet, haulm. [†]

SHE, the fem. of the 3rd pers. pronoun. (E.) M. E. she, sche, sheo; Chaucer, C. T. 121; sho, Havelok, 125; scho, id. 126. [This does not answer to A. S. heð, she, fem. of hē, he, but to the fem. of the def. article.] — A. S. seð, fem. of se, used as def. article, but orig. a demonstrative pronoun, meaning 'that.' + Du. zij, she. + Icel. sú, sjá, fem. of sá, dem. pron. + G. sie, she. + Goth. so, fem. of sa, dem. pron. used as def. article. + Russ. sia, fem. of sei, this. + Gk. ἡ, fem. of ὁ, def. art. + Skt. sá, she; fem. of sas, he. [†] β. All from a pronominal stem SA, that; quite distinct from the stem KI, whence E. he.

SHEAF, a bundle of things collected together, esp. used of grain. (E.) M. E. sheef, shef (with long e), Chaucer, C. T. 104. — A. S. scēdf, Gen. xxxvii. 7; spelt scēab in the 8th cent., Wright's Voc. ii. 109, col. 2. + Du. schoof. + Icel. skauf. + G. schaub. β. The A. S. scēdf is derived from scēdf, pt. t. of scēdfan, to shove; the sense of 'sheaf' is a bundle of things 'shoved' together. — Teut. base SKUB, to shove; see Shove. ¶ The pl. sheaves answers to A. S. pl. scēdfas. Der. sheaf, verb, As You Like It, iii. 2. 113; sheaf-y.

SHEAL, a temporary summer hut. (Scand.) In Halliwell; Jamieson has also sheil, shielling, sheelin; spelt shielling in Campbell, O'Connor's Child, st. 3. Connected in the Icel. Dict. with Icel. skáli, Norweg. skale, a hut; but it seems better to derive it from Icel. skjól, a shelter, cover, Dan. skjul, a shelter, Swed. skjul, a shed, shelter; or from Icel. skýli, a shed, shelter, skýla, to screen, shelter, skýling, a screening. These words are from the $\sqrt{\text{SKU}}$, to cover; Fick, iii. 337. See Sky. ¶ I do not see how the vowel of sheeling can answer to Icel. d; on the other hand, we have Icel. skjóla, a pail or bucket, called in Scotland a skiel or sheel, which guides us to the right equivalent at once.

SHEAR, to cut, clip, shave off. (E.) M. E. scheren, sheren, pt. t. schar, shar, pp. schoren, now contracted to shorn; Chaucer, C. T. 13958. — A. S. sceran, sciran, pt. t. scær, pl. scæron, pp. scoren; Gen. xxxviii. 13; Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, ed. Thorpe, p. 145, l. 14.

+ Du. scheren. + Icel. skera. + Dan. skære. + G. scheren. + Gk. κείπειν (for κείπεω). — $\sqrt{\text{SKAR}}$, to cut; whence also Lat. curtus and E. short, &c. Der. shear-er; shears, M. E. sheres, P. Plowman, C. vii. 75, pl. of shear = A. S. scæra, used to translate Lat. forfex, Wright's Vocab. i. 86, col. 1; shear-ling, a sheep only once sheared, formed with double dimin. suffix -ling. Allied words are Soare, Scar (2), Scarf (1), Scarify, Scrip, Scrap, Scrape, Share, Sheer (2), Sherd, Shred, Sharp, Shore, Short, Score, and others; from the same root we have con-cern, se-cret, har-vest, s-car-ce, car-pet, scarp, and many others. And see Seale (1).

SHEATH, a case for a sword or other implement, case, scabbard. (E.) M. E. schethe, Wyclif, John, xviii. 11. — A. S. scæð, scæð, a sheath; Grein, ii. 399. + Du. sheede. + Icel. skedir, fem. pl. + Dan. skede. + Swed. skida. + G. scheide. β. All from a Teut. type SKAIDA, orig. 'that which separates,' applied to the husk of a bean or pea, as in Swed. skida, which also means 'a husk, pod, shell.' Since such a husk has two sides, we see why the Icel. skedir is only used in the plural; and these sides of a case must be separated before a knife or sword can be introduced, if the material of the scabbard is at all loose. γ. The form SKAIDA is regularly formed, by strengthening of I to AI, from $\sqrt{\text{SKID}}$, to separate; see Shed (1). Der. sheathe, verb, Macb. v. 7. 20, spelt shethe in Palgrave, and prob. the verb and sb. were once pronounced alike; sheath-ing.

SHEAVE, a wheel of a pulley. (Scand.) A technical term; see Webster. The same word as prov. E. shive, a slice (Halliwell); see further under Shift.

SHED (1), to part, scatter, cast abroad, pour, spill. (E.) The old sense 'to part' is nearly obsolete, except in water-shed, the ridge which parts river-systems. 'Shed, to distinguish,' Ray, Gloss. B. 15 (E. D. S.) Spelt shead in Baret (1580). M. E. scheden, Rob. of Glouc. p. 57, last line; P. Plowman, B. vi. 9; pt. t. shadde, shedde, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 28; pp. shad, Gen. and Exodus, ed. Morris, 148; also shed. [Stratmann makes a distinction between M. E. scheden, to pour, and schaden, to part (Ormulum, 1209), and compares the former with O. Frisic schedda, only used in the sense 'to shake a man violently.' The distinction may be doubted; all the senses go back to that of 'to part,' hence, to disperse, scatter; the sense of shaking is different.] — A. S. scæðan, scæðan, to part, separate, distinguish (hence, to scatter); pt. t. scæð, scæðd, pp. scæðen, scæðen; a strong verb; Grein, ii. 398. [The vowel of the mod. E. word has been shortened, as in red from A. S. reðd, bread from bredd, and head from heafod. The supposed traces of an A. S. scæddan are too slight to prove that such a word existed, as far as I can follow what is asserted.] + G. scheiden. + Goth. skaidan. β. From the Teut. base SKID, to part, separate. Cf. Lithuan. skėda, I part, separate. But it does not seem to be related to Lat. scindere; rather to cedere; see Fick, iii. 815. Der. shed-er. [†]

SHED (2), a slight shelter, hut. (E.) Merely another form of shade. It appears to be a Kentish form, like O. Kentish bend for band, mere for mare, ledder for ladder, &c.; see Introd. to Aenbite of Inwyt, ed. Morris, pp. v, vi. In the same work, p. 95, l. 28, we find ssed (= shade); also ssede, p. 97, l. 1; and ssed in the sense of 'shadow,' p. 137, l. 15. See Shade. Doublet, shade. [†]

SHEEN, fairness, splendour. (E.) 'The sheen of their spears,' Byron, Destruction of Sennacherib. And in Hamlet, iii. 2. 167. But properly an adj., signifying 'fair,' as in Spenser, F. Q. ii. 1. 10, ii. 2. 40. M. E. schene, adj., fair, beautiful, Chaucer, C. T. 974. A. S. scéne, scéne, scéne, scéne, fair; Grein, ii. 416. Lit. 'showy,' fair to sight, and allied to Show, q. v. (But doubtless frequently supposed to be allied to shine, which the vowel-sound shews to be impossible; observe the cognate forms.) + O. Sax. scōni, adj. + Du. schoon, adj. + G. schön, adj. + Goth. skawns, beautiful. See Fick, iii. 336.

SHEEP, a well-known animal. (E.) M. E. scheep, sheep, pl. $\sqrt{\text{sheep}}$, sheep; Chaucer, C. T. 498. — A. S. scēap, scēp, pl. scēap, scēp, a neuter sb., which is unchanged in the plural, like deer; Grein, ii. 404. + Du. schaap, a sheep, a simpleton. + G. schaf; O. H. G. scdf. Root unknown; perhaps from $\sqrt{\text{SKAP}}$, to castrate; see Capon. 'The name has been referred to Polish shop, Bohemian skopec, a wether or castrated sheep (whence Polish skopowina, mutton), from [Ch. Slav.] skopiti, to castrate. It should be observed that the common Ital. word for mutton is castrato, &c.;' Wedgwood. Der. sheep-cote, sheep-fold; sheep-ish, -ly, -ness; sheep-master, -shearer, -shearing, -walk. Also shep-herd.

SHEER (1), bright, clear, pure, simple, perpendicular. (Scand.) 'A sheer descent' is an unbroken one, orig. a clear one; the old meaning being 'bright.' And see Trench, Select Glossary. 'Sheer, immaculate, and silver fountain;' Rich. II, v. 3. 61. M. E. scheere, shere. 'The shere sonne;' Lydgate, Storie of Thebes, pt. i (How Edipus expounded the probleme). [Rather Scand. than E. The A. S. form would be scære, but it is not authorised.] — Icel. skær, bright, clear. + Dan. skær, sheer, bright, pure. Allied to Icel. skírr, clear, bright, pure (which is cognate with A. S. scír, bright (Grein), Goth. skiers, G. schier); derived from Icel. skí-na (= A. S. sci-nan), to shine; so that the orig. sense is 'shining.' See Shine. Der. sheer, adv.; also Sheer-Thursday, the old name of Maundy Thursday, lit. 'pure Thursday'; cf. Icel. skíra, to cleanse, baptize, skírdagr or skíriporsdagr, Sheer-day or Sheer-Thursdays, Dan. Skærtorsdag. See my note on P. Plowman, B. xvi. 140; p. 379 of 'Notes.'

SHEER (2), to deviate from one's course. (Du.) A nautical term. 'Among sea-men, a ship is said to sheer, or go sheering, when in her sailing she is not steadily steered, &c.;' Phillips, ed. 1706. — Du. scheren, to shear, cut, barter, jest; to withdraw, or go away; to warp, stretch. 'Scheerje van hier, away, get you gone;' Sewel. This answers to mod. E. sheer off! Thus sheer is only a particular use of Du. scheren, cognate with E. Shear. So also G. schere dich weg, get you gone; schier dich aus dem Wege, out of the way! (Flügel).

SHEET, a large piece of linen cloth; a large piece of paper; a sail; a rope fastened to a sail. (E.) M. E. schete, shete, Chaucer, C. T. 4138. — A. S. setle, seyte; 'Sindo, seyte,' Wright's Vocab. i. 284, col. 2, l. 84, col. 2. 'On setle' in my bosom (Lat. in sinu meo); Ps. lxxviii. 49, ed. Spelman. 'On clænre seýtan befold' = enfolded in a clean sheet; Gospel of Nicodemus, c. xiii, ed. Thwaites, p. 6. The sense of 'bosom' is due to the use of seyte to signify the fold of a garment. It is closely allied to A. S. scēat, a much commoner word, meaning (1) a projecting corner, an angle, a nook of ground, (2) fold of a garment; ii. 405. β. The orig. sense is 'projection,' or 'that which shoots out, then a corner, esp. of a garment or of a cloth; after which it was extended to mean a whole cloth or sheet. The nautical senses are found in the cognate Scand. words, and in A. S. scēat, explained 'pes veli,' Wright's Gloss. i. 63, col. 2; scēat-line, explained 'propes,' id. γ. The form seyte is from scēat, and scēat is from scēat, pt. t. of scētan, to shoot; see Shoot. Cognate with the form scēat are Icel. skaut, a sheet, corner of a square cloth, corner, sheet or rope attached to the corner of a sail, skirt or sleeve of a garment, a hood; Swed. skot, the sheet of a sail; Du. school, a shoot, sprig, sheet, bosom, lap; G. schoss, flap of a coat, lap, bosom; Goth. skauts, the hem of a garment; all from Teut. type SKAUTA, from SKUT, to shoot. Der. sheet, verb, Hamlet, i. 1. 115, Antony, i. 4. 65; sheet-ing; sheet-lightning, lightning which spreads out like a sheet. Also sheet-anchor, the same as shoot-anchor, an anchor to be shot out or lowered in case of great danger; 'This saying they make their shoot-anchor,' Abp. Crammer, Ans. to Bp. Gardiner, p. 117 (cited by Todd). [†]

SHEIK, a chief. (Arab.) In books of travel. — Arab. sheikh, an elder, a chief; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 394; shaykh, a venerable old man, a chief; Rich. Dict. p. 920. The orig. sense is 'old.'
